For those who have been living in poverty, and those who have been trying to fight it, the current air of surprise about this chronic disaster is both frustrating and amusing. For some it's also, perhaps, a glimmer of hope.

"I do wonder whether this is one of those moments where, as this country reflects on its values, there's an opportunity for change, for movement," said Olivia Golden, a senior fellow at the Urban Institute in Washington D.C.

"This country has options," said Omowale Satterwhite of the Oakland, Calif.-based National Community Development Institute.

One option, he said, is to put the storm and the shock behind us and move forward as if it didn't happen.

"The other possibility is that the soul of the country gets touched and the entire country is in a dialogue, trying to discover a common truth about who we are and who we want to be," he said.

Opening eyes

Many who live in poverty now welcome the chance to further expose what their lives are really like.

"I think the normal person would be shocked at what our daily existence is like," said Norman DePover, 50, who spends his days sleeping in the San Francisco church. "Just trying to find a bathroom, something to eat, to get a shower and stay warm, those are my problems."

A few pews away, Brian McDougal, 48, said it's much cheaper to buy secondhand clothes than to use a coin-operated laundry. He replaces his entire wardrobe — the clothes he is wearing — a few times a year.

Denita Jacox, a social worker at the Lessie Bates Neighborhood House in East St. Louis, Ill., said the general public has no idea what her clients are up against.

"East Saint Louis is poverty-stricken," she said. "This is a depressed community. Our families can't afford to shop at Wal-Mart. In the winter they can't pay their utility bills and they are very, very cold."

Nancy Cantor of Scottsdale, Ariz., who lives on about $12,000 a year, said rationing food is a way of life.

"Peanut butter and jelly is good. A can of soup. At the end of the month you cross your fingers and hold your breath," she said. "We hurried up and made room in the shelters for all of the people who were made homeless by Katrina, yet we have people in this country who have lived for years not knowing if they are going to survive the heat and cold."

No faith

At St. Boniface Church, J.R. pulled a knit blanket tight around his shoulders and considered his role in this country. Is he hidden? How did he get here? Why does he stay?

"This is a capitalist society," he said with all of the pedantic patience of a social scientist. "Capitalism means some people get richer and some people get poorer. In order for this system to work, for there to be really wealthy folks, you've got to have me at the bottom."

He pulled a knit blanket onto his lap and prepared to curl back up on his pew.

"This abandoning," he said, looking around the quiet church, "it was planned from the beginning."

While it didn't pack Hurricane Katrina's devastating wind strength, Hurricane Rita subjected New Orleans area residents to a similar dose of floodwaters as it blew across the Texas-Louisiana border early Saturday. Whether it was due to levees failing again or simple storm surges, the result was the same: flooded streets, cars and homes, and residents in need of rescuing.

Rita struck near the Texas-Louisiana border on Saturday with a powerful surge that swamped coastal communities. The Lake Charles area in southwestern Louisiana suffered a prolonged pounding as the storm's center passed nearby. Rita weakened as it passed and was later downgraded to a tropical storm, but not before leaving millions without power.

Frist got trust updates that he denied receiving

Shares of HCA sold near 52-week peak

By Jonathan M. Katz
AP writer

The updates included stock transactions involving HCA Inc., the hospital operating company founded by Frist's family.

Frist's sale of HCA stock is under scrutiny by the federal government. Nashville, Tenn.-based HCA said Friday that it had received a subpoena from prosecutors for the Southern District of New York, asking for documents the company believes are related to Frist's sale of company stock this past summer.

Prosecutors also have contacted the senator's office, Frist spokesman Bob Stevenson said Friday. He said neither the senator nor his office had received a subpoena.

Frist's office confirmed the Securities and Exchange Commission was looking into the sale.

"Senator Frist had no information about the company or its performance that was not available to the public when he directed the trustees to sell the HCA stock," Stevenson said in a statement.

Frist sold his HCA stock from several blind trusts this summer, at a time when insiders in the company also were selling off shares worth $112 million from January through June. Frist aides say he sold his stock to avoid any appearance of a conflict of interest.

Frist, asked in a television interview in January 2003 whether he should sell his HCA stock, responded: "Well, I think really for our viewers it should be understood that I put this into a blind trust. So as far as I know, I own no HCA stock."

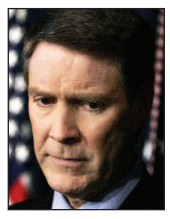
Frist, referring to his trust and those of his family, also said in the interview, "I have no control. It is illegal right now for me to know what the composition of those trusts are. So I have no idea."

Documents filed with the Senate showed that just two weeks before those comments, the trustee of the senator's trust, Kirk Scobey Jr., wrote to Frist that HCA stock was contributed to the trust. It was valued at $15,000 and $50,000.

The documents filed by the trustees of Frist's blind trusts were obtained by The Associated Press on Friday.

On Nov. 20, 2002, Scobey wrote Frist that 14,781 shares of HCA were sold, along with three other investments. The same day, Scobey wrote that four other investments were sold, none of them HCA stock.

On May 16, 2002, Scobey advised Frist that four investments were contributed to a Frist blind trust, including HCA stock valued at $500,000 to $1 million. A second letter the same day mentions the same four investments going into a different trust, but with different valuations, including HCA stock valued at $250,000 to $500,000.



On Jan. 14, 2002, a trustee for Frist's children notified the secretary of the Senate that two investments were added to the blind trusts of Frist's sons Jonathan and Bryan — including HCA stock valued at $5,000 to $10,000. It was not clear whether Frist received a copy of the letter.

Stevenson, the Frist spokesman, said he could not comment on the updates received by the senator. He added that Frist properly notified the Senate Ethics Committee this summer that he was initiating the sale of all remaining HCA shares, a requirement under Senate rules. All the stock was sold by July 1, including shares owned by his wife and children.

"As with the SEC, the majority leader will provide the U.S. attorney's office with any information that it needs with respect to this matter," Stevenson said.

The SEC also contacted HCA on Friday to informally request copies of the subpoenaed documents, said company spokesman Jeff Prescott. "We of course will comply with that request," he said.

Herb Haddad, a spokesman for the U.S. attorney's office in Manhattan, said the office had no comment on the matter. SEC spokesman John Nester declined to say whether the agency had contacted Frist's office.

Sen. Bill Frist
Majority leader holds investments in blind trusts

David Becker, who was general counsel at the SEC from 2000 to 2002, noted that both Frist and HCA were being put under scrutiny.

In insider trading cases, "you connect the dots not by simply going from one dot to another but by starting at both dots and working toward the middle," Becker said. "The facts that are public don't come close to demonstrating wrongdoing. It's way too premature to have any judgment."

HCA, the nation's largest for-profit hospital company, was founded by Frist's father, the late Thomas Frist Sr. His brother, Thomas Jr., was formerly its CEO and chairman and remains on the board of directors. Frist is a heart surgeon by training.

Frist asked a trustee to sell all his HCA stock in June, near a 52-week price peak of $58.40 a share. Reports to the SEC showed HCA insiders sold about 2.3 million shares.

Frist's sale came about two weeks before the company issued a disappointing earnings forecast that drove its stock price down almost 16 percent by mid-July and still have not recovered. HCA rose $1.70 Friday, closing at $47.60.

The value of Frist's stock at the time of the sale was not disclosed. Earlier this year, he reported blind trusts with all holdings valued at $7 million to $35 million.

Shiites urge constitution support

U.S. soldier, 5 Iraqis die in bombings

By Qassim Abdul-Zahra
Associated Press writer

BAGHDAD, IRAQ — The leader of Iraq's largest Shiite political organization joined the country's most revered and powerful Shiite cleric Saturday in a strong public push for voter support of a new constitution, three weeks ahead of a national referendum.

Meanwhile, suicide car bombers killed five Iraqis in or near the capital, and the U.S. military said a soldier died in a roadside bombing Friday night in southeast Baghdad. The death raised to 1,913 the number of U.S. service members who have died in Iraq since the war started in March 2003, according to an Associated Press count.

In Basra, the country's southern oil hub and headquarters for Britain's 8,500 troops, an Iraqi judge said he had renewed homicide arrest warrants for two undercover British soldiers who allegedly killed an Iraqi policeman trying to detain them.

The Britons were rescued from jail last week by British troops using armor to crash through prison walls. In a sign of continuing tensions and Iraqi fury over the British operation, Katyusha rockets were fired at U.S. and British facilities in the city Saturday, causing no casualties.

The major political development surrounded Abdel-Aziz al-Hakim, the head of the Shiite Supreme Council for the Islamic Revolution in Iraq. His appeal to voters added a key voice of support two days after Shiite Grand Ayatollah Ali al-Sistani also directed followers to endorse the charter.

"It is our religious duty to say 'yes' to the constitution and to go to the ballot boxes," al-Hakim told more than 2,000 supporters gathered in Baghdad to mark a 1991 Shiite uprising brutally crushed by then-President Saddam Hussein.

Al-Hakim said militants and former regime supporters were trying to undermine Iraqis' hopes for security — but that they would fail. His SCIRI organization has strong ties to Shiite Iran and controls a powerful bloc in parliament. Al-Hakim took refuge in Iran during Saddam's rule.

Al-Sistani, meeting with aides Thursday in the holy city of Najaf, was the first major Shiite religious figure to urge voters to back the new basic law, according to two top officials in his entourage. The reclusive cleric issues statements only through his office and makes no public appearances.

In January, millions of Shiites heeded al-Sistani's call to vote in Iraq's first democratic elections in nearly half a century. The ballot gave the Muslim sect a majority in the new parliament and government.

Shiite solidarity is essential if the constitution is to pass in the Oct. 15 vote. If two-thirds of voters in any three of Iraq's 18 provinces reject the document, a new government must be formed and the process of writing the constitution started over.

Minority Sunni Arabs are dominant in four provinces and could defeat the new charter if they vote "no" as a bloc in three of them. On Saturday, Sunni clerics and tribal leaders expressed optimism that they could do just that while gathered at a meeting organized to scuttle the charter.

The three-day meeting, held in Amman, Jordan, for security reasons, ended with a communique urging a 'no' vote "if the constitution's main points on Iraq's unity and Arab identity are not rectified, as well as articles related to political and racial segregation."

Meeting organizer and prominent cleric Sheik Abdul-Latif Himayem told The Associated Press he expected at least 51 percent of Iraq's electorate to vote "no" in the referendum.

Sunnis have sharply opposed the draft constitution, largely because it would give Shiites in the south the right to form a mini-state that Sunnis fear will deprive them of oil wealth and ultimately lead to Iraq's fragmentation.

Meanwhile, seething anger resurfaced in Basra, where rockets were fired at the U.S. and British consulates but fell harmlessly in a nearby field, police Capt. Mushtaq Khazim said.

Three more rockets were fired at the Shat al-Arab Hotel, headquarters of the British army, he said. One rocket hit the building without causing casualties. The two others hit nearby homes, wounding a resident, Khazim said.

Also, Judge Raghib al-Mudhafar, chief of the Basra Anti-Terrorism Court, said Saturday that he had reissued homicide arrest warrants for the two soldiers, rekindling hard feelings despite attempts by Iraqi and British officials to cool tempers.

The British government said the warrants had not been delivered and, regardless, were not legal.

"Iraqi law is very clear: British personnel are immune from the Iraqi legal process. They remain subject to British law. Even if such a warrant was issued, it would therefore be of no legal effect," Defense Secretary John Reid said.

Diary of papal conclave reveals surprise runner-up

Cardinal breaks vow of secrecy

By Nicole Winfield
Associated Press writer

VATICAN CITY – A cardinal has broken his vow of secrecy and released his diary describing the conclave that elected Pope Benedict XVI, revealing in an exceedingly rare account that a cardinal from Argentina was the main challenger and almost blocked Benedict's election.

Excerpts of the diary, published Friday, show Cardinal Joseph Ratzinger led in each of the four ballots cast in the Sistine Chapel during the mystery-shrouded April 18-19 conclave. But, in a surprise, Cardinal Jorge Mario Bergoglio, a Jesuit, was in second place the whole time.

Most accounts of the conclave have said retired Milan archbishop Cardinal Carlo Maria Martini was the main challenger to Ratzinger, who became Benedict XVI after his election, and that a Third World pope was never realistically in the running.

While Bergoglio never threatened Ratzinger's lead — and made clear he didn't want the job, according to the diary published in the respected Italian foreign affairs magazine Limes — his runner-up status could signal the next conclave might elect a pope from Latin America, home to half the world's 1 billion Roman Catholics.

The diary of the anonymous cardinal is also significant because it shows that Ratzinger didn't garner a huge margin: He had 84 of the 115 votes in the final ballot, seven more than the required two-thirds majority.

His two immediate predecessors, Pope John Paul II and Pope John Paul I, are believed to have garnered 99 and 98 votes respectively, and that was when there were only 111 voting cardinals.

"It does seem that somebody wants to indicate that the conclave was a more complex process than was being depicted and that Benedict's mandate was not a slam dunk," said David Gibson, a former Vatican Radio journalist who is writing a biography of Benedict.

Finally, the diary includes a few surprises, including a vote in the final ballot for Cardinal Bernard Law, forced to resign as Boston archbishop because of the church sex abuse scandal.

And it offers other colorful insights of what went on behind the scenes during the two days the 115 red-hatted princes of the church were sequestered in the Sistine Chapel and the Vatican's Santa Marta hotel to select the 265th leader of the Catholic Church.

Because the hotel prohibits smoking, Portuguese Cardinal Jose Policarpo da Crux would sneak outside for an after-dinner cigar, the diary says. And Cardinal Walter Kasper shunned the minibuses that shuttled cardinals to the Sistine Chapel, preferring to walk by the Vatican gardens instead.

"Sunday, April 17: In the afternoon I took over my room at the Casa Santa Marta. I put down my bags and tried to open the blinds because the room was dark. I wasn't able to. One of my fellow brothers asked a nun working there, thinking it was a technical problem. She explained they were sealed. Closure of the conclave..." the diary begins.

"It does seem that somebody wants to indicate that the conclave was a more complex process than was being depicted and that Benedict's mandate was not a slam dunk."
DAVID GIBSON

The published diary entries were interspersed with commentary from Vatican journalist Lucio Brunelli, who says he obtained the diary through a trusted source he had known for years. He told The Associated Press he spoke in Italian to his source — a hint the cardinal in question was Italian.

Brunelli says he couldn't identify the author because of the vow of secrecy each cardinal took before entering the conclave. Punishment for violating the vow is excommunication.

In Buenos Aires, a spokesman for the archdiocese, Enzo Paoletta, said Bergoglio had no comment on the report.

Nothing official is ever recorded from conclaves and the ballots are burned in the Sistine Chapel stove — ashes that signal to the world through white smoke or black whether a pope has been elected.

As a result, the diary's tallies are unusual, although previously tallies have leaked out piecemeal.

According to the diary, Ratzinger won 47 votes and Bergoglio 10 on the first round of balloting, while Martini got nine and some 30 others got a few votes.

In round two, Ratzinger edged up to 65 and Bergoglio 35.

By the third ballot, Ratzinger had 72 votes, just five shy of the two-thirds majority needed to win. But Bergoglio got 40, just over the threshold needed to stall the conclave if his supporters wanted to.

However, the diary says Bergoglio made it clear he might not have accepted the job. The cardinal recalls watching Bergoglio cast his ballot: "The suffering face, as if he were begging: 'God don't do this to me.' "

Iran one step from being referred to Security Council

Tehran may retaliate, official warns

By George Jahn
Associated Press writer

VIENNA, AUSTRIA — The U.N. atomic watchdog agency Saturday put Iran just one step away from referral to the Security Council unless Tehran eases suspicions about its nuclear activities in coming months — a move the United States has been pushing for years.

The chief U.S. delegate to the International Atomic Energy Agency hailed the decision, describing it as a wake-up call for Tehran "to come clean" or face the consequences.

But his Iranian counterpart blasted the approval of the resolution and warned of retaliation. Tehran maintains its nuclear program is for generating electricity.

The decision by the 35-nation board represented a victory for Washington, which says Iran has nuclear weapons ambitions. For more than two years, it has failed to enlist board support to haul Iran before the council for allegedly violating commitments under the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty.

"The international community is ... not satisfied with the level of confidence-building measures Iran has so far taken," IAEA chief Mohamed ElBaradei said.

Saturday's decision was far from unanimous, though. Only 22 of the 35 board nations voted for the U.S.-backed European Union motion.

Twelve nations abstained, including Russia and China, which are veto-wielding members of the Security Council, diplomats said. The others were developing nations.

Those supporting the resolution included the United States, European countries, Canada, Australia and Japan. They were joined by India, Peru, Singapore and Ecuador, reflecting support among developing nations.

Javier Solana, the chief EU foreign policy official, welcomed the board's "broad support" and said it left the door open to negotiations with Tehran.

Venezuela cast the only vote against. On Friday, Foreign Integration Minister Gustavo Marquez told the state-run Bolivarian News Agency that powerful countries with nuclear energy programs were unfairly keeping others from developing their own.

The resolution called on the board to consider reporting Iran at a future meeting. As grounds, it mentioned noncompliance with the nuclear arms control treaty and suspicions that Iran's nuclear activities could threaten international peace and security.

Diplomats from countries backing the resolution said it set Iran up for referral as soon as November, when the board next will meet in regular session, unless it dispels international concerns.

Outlining what Iran must do to avoid such action, the draft called on it to give IAEA experts access to nuclear-related documents and sites, suspend all enrichment-related and reprocessing activities and ratify an inspection agreement with the IAEA.

Iran last month resumed uranium conversion — a precursor of uranium enrichment, which can make material for either nuclear fuel or the fissile core of warheads.

The chief U.S. representative to the meeting, Gregory Schulte, said the approval reflected board concern over Iran's "long history of concealment and deception."

In opting for referral, the board is "concerned that Iran's activities pose an increasing threat to international peace and security," Schulte said. "The IAEA has called on Iran to ... come clean."

But Iran's delegation head, Javad Vaeidi, said the vote was evidence "there is no consensus on the way forward." He also said, "Threat invokes threat."

Tehran already warned Friday that if the resolution was approved, it could respond by starting uranium enrichment — a possible path to nuclear arms — and by reducing IAEA powers to inspect its activities under the additional agreement it signed but had not yet ratified.

Both threats were contained in unsigned letters and shown by a member of the Iranian delegation to ElBaradei, diplomats accredited to the agency said on condition of anonymity because their information was confidential.

The Security Council could impose sanctions if it determines that Iran violated the treaty, but the draft did not mention sanctions in recognition of Russian and Chinese opposition.

SHEILA STROUP

Rebuilding a region, one home at a time

When Kevin Buckel returned to Long Beach, Miss., after Katrina came calling, all that was left of his house was a slab.

"It looked like the house just exploded," he said. "The only thing I found was one of my trophies from East Jefferson High School."

But instead of focusing on his own problems, Kevin is thinking about children in Louisiana and Mississippi whose parents are starting over because of the hurricane.

"Kids don't understand why everything they had is gone," he said.

Kevin is determined to make the world a little brighter for those kids through his nonprofit Adopt-a-Family program, which matches families in need with those who can help them.

"Since Katrina, people have been finding my Web site and e-mailing me from all over the country, wanting to adopt a family," he said.

The personal side of giving

Kevin, 42, started Adopt-a-Family 14 years ago when he was living in Metairie and working in New Orleans.

He saw "a wall of charities" separating needy families from people who wanted to help them. His program breaks down that wall. It lets people see who they're helping. The back-to-school uniform program I write about every August is an offshoot of Kevin's people-helping-people project.

Those who donate money to buy uniforms for a student get a personal thank-you from the child they've helped. And when you get a note that says, "It feels like you are my guardian angel," you know your money was well spent.

Of course, this year Katrina canceled school for New Orleans public school students, and Kevin wants everyone who contributed to know their checks will be returned or destroyed.

"Little did we know what was just around the corner when we started up the 2005 uniform program," he said.

Reassembling a household

What was just around the corner turned countless families' lives upside-down, and that's where Adopt-a-Family can help.

It doesn't involve writing a check. Instead, your family or group will gather household items for the people you adopt: dishes, pots and pans, toys, clothing — whatever that particular family needs.

They can be secondhand items in good condition, and you can also buy such things as school supplies, towels and sheets.

"I think it means more when you put some thought and effort into giving," Kevin said.

He is looking for more groups who want to adopt families, and he needs families for them to adopt. He hopes churches, shelters and relief organizations can help with that.

Usually, families and those who adopt them get to meet each other, though that may not be possible if adopters live far away.

But if boxes have to be shipped, you can exchange letters and photos. You can include notes that say, "We care about you." You can make the world a little brighter for someone starting over.

Low-lying St. Tammany floods again

Power goes out in 8,000 homes

By Richard Boyd
St. Tammany bureau

Winds from Hurricane Rita caused widespread flooding across low-lying areas of St. Tammany Parish from Madisonville to Eden Isles.

The winds left about 8,000 homes without power, but officials said Saturday it appeared the structures that flooded were those that had taken on water during Hurricane Katrina on Aug. 29. Cleco workers were crisscrossing the parish trying to restore power, and Cleco spokeswoman Susan Broussard said no prolonged outages are anticipated.

Within Slidell, flowing was widespread, as anticipated, in the Palm Lake subdivision sandwiched between Bayou Liberty and Lake Pontchartrain. As they had during Katrina, floodwaters flowed across much of Eden Isles and Oak Harbor subdivisions south of Slidell.

"We have flooded homes in those areas but we have no reports of any homes getting water this time that were not already wiped out by Katrina," said parish spokeswoman Suzanne Parsons-Stymiest.

In Mandeville, clusters of residents who ignored a mandatory evacuation order for flood-prone areas gawked at rising floodwaters Saturday.

"The surge exceeded our expectations," said Mayor Eddie Price, out early Saturday walking every street of old Mandeville for a visual inspection.

Across the city's lakefront, water pushed up every north-south street for almost two

HURRICANE HEROES

A recent widower and two-year resident of Spring Hill in Slidell, Chris Daniel thought the 13-foot-high levee that surrounded his neighborhood would protect him from Hurricane Katrina.

The Chalmette native opted to stay put even though his mother, who had evacuated from Chalmette, begged him to leave.

"I was stubborn and I didn't do it," he said. "Yeah, I was stupid."

Daniel, 28, fell asleep as the hurricane's eye passed over. He woke to the sound of water splashing in through his front and back doors.

The floodwaters were several feet deep outside his house. "There was no way of getting in my truck and getting out," he said. But his 4-month-old chocolate Labrador, Sammy, was getting frantic. When the water reached his chest level,

Even though Hurricane Rita flooded parts of Arabi and Chalmette with as much as 7 feet of water, St. Bernard Parish officials said Saturday they plan to reopen most of the parish, which remained dry, possibly as soon as this week.

Meanwhile, in Plaquemines Parish officials made preparations to repeat repairs in parish levees completed after Hurricane Katrina less than a month ago. Those repairs gave way to Rita's surge this week, flooding about half of the parish below Myrtle Grove and other parts in the east bank.

The flooding affected areas that had remained unpopulated since Katrina practically wiped them out Aug. 29. But officials lamented that the new waters might force them to restart the cleanup process and possibly delay the return of residents.

Jefferson Parish officials predict the parish will become the staging area for the recovery of New Orleans and other areas battered by Hurricane Katrina, but at the moment, there's no room at office buildings for companies wanting to set up shop close to the city.

"Hit him with a pillow, kick him awake," his father, Melvin McKnight, quipped. "It's a full-time job."

In shelters all across the state and nation, many students displaced from their schools in the New Orleans area have finally started to settle back into morning routines that education officials say give children structure and stability at a time when those things are in such short supply.

"I'm making school kind of secondary," said teacher Randy Crump, who was dean of students at McDonogh 32 Elementary School in New Orleans until a few weeks ago, when he took a job instructing displaced students at Scotlandville Middle School in Baton Rouge. "I'm just trying to get them into a routine."

But as much as Red Cross volunteers try to make the thousands of New Orleans area residents staying in shelters feel comfortable, shelters are not homes and some key parts of a daily school routine, like homework, are not part of shelter life.

"It's hard to do homework here," said Jarvis' mother, noting the myriad distractions as 500 strangers bunk together in one room. Instead, the Red Cross shows children's videos in the evenings and has stacks of games available for students to play.

At the Baton Rouge River Center, which has become a shelter for about 1,100, parent Odetta Martin said she worries the lack of homework will slow progress for her six children, particularly those who will soon have to take the state's LEAP test.

"All they get now is coloring books," she said.

Back to school

Although piles of donated backpacks and school supplies have been pouring into many schools, teachers often lack the textbooks they need – 4th-grade reading books for his 5th-grade class are the best Crump could find – and are struggling to determine their students' reading and math levels.

"I don't think they're going to get every kid back to the level they were at, but you've got to keep them in that routine and, who knows? Hopefully they'll learn something," Melvin McKnight said.

Getting students back into a school-day schedule after evacuating — and after running around shelters unsupervised and sleeping in as late as they want — has proved an additional challenge.

"The first day when they had to be here at 7 o'clock, all the heads were down on the desk," said Eva Bourgeois, principal at Ascension Elementary, where Jarivs attends school. "We had to just tell them, 'No. That's not acceptable.' "

Meanwhile, students continue to register at schools wherever displaced students are being accepted. Last Tuesday alone, five new students walked into Crump's classroom at Scotlandville as he struggled to update his list of students, while busying them with writing an essay called "The Best Time I Ever Had."

Several students wrote about trips to Six Flags, the amusement park that suffered severe flooding, along with the rest of eastern New Orleans. Martin's 10-year-old son, Timothy, wrote about vomiting after he rode the Batman roller coaster, eating junk food, watching his mother vomit and then laughing with her and the rest of his family on the way home.

"Very nice work," Crump said as he added Martin's paper to a stack on his desk.

Enormous needs

Before Katrina hit, Scotlandville Middle School had been closed indefinitely until it could be renovated.

Two weeks ago, Clara Joseph, an assistant principal elsewhere in the district, was asked to act as principal to hundreds of displaced students from the New Orleans area.

By last week, she had 379 students and the district had received 7,700 new registrations, on top of the 46,000 they had before Katrina.

In Ascension Parish, more than 2,200 new students have registered on top of about 16,000 they had before.

Statewide, 186,000 students have been displaced by Katrina, officials said.

"They have emotional needs, physical needs, psychological needs," Joseph said of the displaced students. "Their needs are just enormous. They're numerous."

Since the school opened about two weeks ago, she and her staff have been struggling with children acting up after bring forced from their homes and cut off from their routines.

"We just came from New Orleans. We've been through enough," a mother yelled at her son outside Joseph's office Tuesday. "Listen to what the principal tells you to do."

At Ascension Elementary, Bourgeois told how a kindergartener who heard the grinding of a pencil sharpener and leapt from his seat crying, "It's a storm."

How long Joseph or Bourgeois' jobs will last is anyone's guess.

Learning to adapt

Melvin McKnight expects to move his family back to their home in Harvey – it took minimal wind damage, he said – within the week, depending on how the region fared after Hurricane Rita.

If all goes well, McKnight was hoping his four boys can get back in their schools in Jefferson Parish as well.

"My home is New Orleans," he said. "I'm not going to let Katrina, Rita or whoever change where I live. It's all I know."

Back at the River Center, Odetta Martin has no idea how the 9th Ward home she shared with her six children and 1-year-old grandson fared. She's looking for an apartment in Baton Rouge, unsure whether they'll ever return.

Still, just as she said her family was among "the blessed ones," referring to how they escaped New Orleans a day after the storm and arrived at the shelter before things went from bad to terrifying back home, she said she has faith they'll make the transition here.

By last Tuesday, Martin's children appeared to have fallen back in line, with 10-year-old Timothy leading the charge. He helped rouse his brothers and sisters, changed his 1-year-old nephew Ty'Drick's diaper, and fed the infant Frosted Flakes on the way to the school buses that pull up outside the shelter under the watchful eyes of armed military police.

Whatever his family does, Timothy said he's sure he can be happy anywhere.

"Kids here," he said, "they're just like my old friends."

blocks, pushing into at least three houses, Price said. But he said the houses in old Mandeville that took on water had already been ravaged by Katrina and were unoccupied.

For Roy and Susie Hardin, who live in an elevated house in the 200 block of Marigny Avenue just south of Jefferson Street, the scene Saturday gave him a feeling of deja vu.

"This is just like what we had with the floodwater in 2002 with back-to-back tropical storms Isidore and Lili," Roy Hardin said.

"Except there is a lot more debris floating around this time," Susie Hardin said.

Price said cleaning up from Katrina has been put on hold until the floodwaters go down.

Parsons-Stymiest said officials were waiting for the wind to shift to relieve the tidal flooding. "That wind is still pushing water up out of the Rigolets across the lake and onto the north shore. We are hopeful for a wind shift later today, so the water will start flowing southeast, back into the Rigolets and out in the Gulf of Mexico," she said.

She said there was heavy flooding in the low-lying areas south of Slidell near the Rigolets and water was pushed up Lake Road in Lacombe near the Tammany Trace, flooding scores of homes in those areas already destroyed by Katrina.

"We had no emergency evacuations during the night as Rita came ashore and we have had no reports of any deaths or injuries in the parish resulting from Rita," she said.

Other than Palm Lake, most of Slidell stayed relatively high and dry during Rita. Rainfall was light and intermittent, and wind gusts were about 20 to 30 mph.

Price said there was only one brief outage in Mandeville, in the Old Golden Shores subdivision after a tree fell and ripped down a power line. "But Cleco was out there fast, and they had it back on in about 45 minutes," he said.

Parson-Stymiest said the evacuation order for areas south of U.S. 190 and Louisiana 22 would remain in effect until winds shift and water recedes, hopefully later Saturday.

She said only a handful of residents went to any of the six shelters the parish opened.

Man uses boat to help rescue neighbors

he decided to get out. "That was the point when I was most fearful," he said.

Daniel forced his back door open and deposited Sammy in his 18-foot Bayliner boat, which was floating, still attached to its trailer. He rushed back into the house for dog food and a box of important papers, then fought to free the boat from its trailer winch, and fired up his four-cylinder engine.

Daniel knew one of his neighbors, Royce, had also stayed behind. He already was in his attic, and Daniel called him out. Royce climbed onto his garage door, which had blown in on top of his vehicle.

The two of them rode around the subdivision, searching for residents. Some people declined help; Daniel's and Royce's houses are one-story high, others were two. Daniel carried three couples to the levee, where the group remained until Tuesday morning.

One couple, Shane and Katrina, recently had moved from Ohio. The Tuesday after the storm, a truck driver took the rescued residents to area shelters. Daniel wound up at Slidell Memorial Hospital, then stood by the road with a sign that read, "West to Baton Rouge, please." A Samaritan took him to Opelousas. There, he got in touch with his mother, who was in Lafayette. He stayed with his family for about a week.

When he was able to return to his house, he found it was a muddy disaster. "I'm 6 feet tall, and the water level was about eye level," he said. Bedroom furniture was in the living room; living room items were in the office.

A friend, Peter "Mitch" Danos, drove in from Houma to help him retrieve his boat, which was aground and tied to the levee. Its anchor and ropes were missing. They wrestled it back onto the trailer; it was one of the few items Daniel salvaged.

Danos called Daniel an "unsung hero," praising his "courage and going on in spite of what he has been through," including the loss of his wife, who died in May from leukemia.

Daniel now is staying in Abita Springs with friends. He hopes to return to his job; he was an assistant parts manager at the Slidell Toyota dealership. And he doesn't plan to move.

"I'm definitely going to rebuild," he said. "That's where my wife lived. It's got sentimental value."

Corps defends levee repair methods

BERNARD, from B-1

Katrina, St. Bernard Parish crews began pumping out waters that began flowing in Friday after they topped a temporary levee repair along the Industrial Canal in New Orleans.

The water spread through Arabi north of St. Bernard Highway and reached as far east as Packenham Drive in Chalmette, submerging some of the same neighborhoods that had seen the most severe flooding during Katrina.

Parish officials lashed out at the Army Corps of Engineers for shoring up the 17th Street and London Avenue canals along the New Orleans lakefront with sheet piling ahead of Rita, but not placing the same protection along the Industrial Canal, which was repaired with giant sand bags, large rocks and gravel.

"The difference I see is that over there along the 17th Street Canal there are wealthy people, and over here is the mostly poor black people of the 9th Ward and the people of St. Bernard," Parish President Henry "Junior" Rodriguez said.

But Brig. Gen. Robert Crear, commander of the Corps' Mississippi Valley Division, said the Industrial Canal is too wide and deep to use sheet piling, and also is a navigational channel that cannot be closed. He said repairs on the Industrial Canal breach were actually higher than the same fixes along the other two canals, and that the barriers would have been even higher if Rita had come a week later.

"There is no consideration of race or class," Crear said. "It was trying to get the most effective protection within the time that we had."

St. Bernard on Saturday looked like a shipwreck that had been submerged again by a high tide. Water flowed over streets and into homes, mixing with the dried muck left over from Katrina's flood to create what Rodriguez sarcastically called "a nice gumbo."

But parish levees were holding Rita's surge from the east, with waters rising just 20 inches short of topping the levee along the 40-Arpent Canal before starting to retreat back into the Gulf of Mexico.

"It came close, but the levees are holding," said Bob Turner, executive director of the Lake Borgne Basin Levee District.

Meanwhile, Plaquemines Parish officials began assessing the damage of an estimated 8-foot surge that once again covered many communities in the southern portions of the parish.

Unlike Katrina, which flooded the entire lower Plaquemines area, Rita left some communities dry. On the west bank, floodwaters covered Myrtle Grove and all areas from Port Sulphur to Buras, said Parish President Benny Rousselle. But Diamond City and communities from Fort Jackson to Venice were dry. In the east bank, only Scottsdale and Braithwaite flooded.

Rousselle said the parish is staging crews and working with the Corps of Engineers to begin levee repairs as soon as Monday. Rousselle said the entire east bank and all areas south of the Alliance Refinery will remain closed, and it may be three weeks before they open to residents.

But in St. Bernard, officials said they want to reopen the dry areas of the parish as soon as possible. The parish last week had begun a staggered re-entry process that divided the parish and reopened it a section at a time. The plan was suspended Tuesday ahead of Rita.

But Rodriguez and Parish Council Chairman Joey DiFatta said they are considering reopening all dry areas at once when residents are once again allowed to return. Streets in areas that did not flood are clear, officials said, and Sheriff Jack Stephens said his office has the personnel and equipment to handle a fast influx of residents.

Residents, however, would still be encouraged to leave at the end of each day and to come prepared to deal with the muck and stink that permeates the place, DiFatta said. Officials said the new re-entry plan would be announced once they make a decision.

'Everybody's looking for a roofer'

JEFFERSON, from B-1

Development Corp., said the organization's efforts are focused on getting the parish's existing businesses up and running.

"We're working with them to see what they need, to get them housing for their employees, to help them get through the SBA (Small Business Administration) loan process," she said.

Office space in Jefferson is likely to be ready before office space in New Orleans, but many buildings suffered significant storm damage.

"Everybody's looking for a roofer," said longtime real estate investor Jack Stumpf, who said he's been spending much of his time finding space for the thousands of relief workers in the parish.

The Jefferson Economic Development Corp.'s east bank headquarters on Causeway Boulevard had its roof damaged by the Aug. 29 storm, and the agency's offices sustained water damage as well. It has been working out of temporary quarters in Baton Rouge.

The corporation's enterprise center at 5201 West Bank Expressway in Marrero had office space available last week, but the space is best suited to a one- or two-person operation, said Kim Perret, who manages the center.

The Galleria, a Metairie office complex at the intersection of Causeway Boulevard and Interstate 10, sustained significant damage, but John Panico, who is supervising the repairs, said he hopes to have some of the building's 466,000 square feet of leasable space ready for occupancy by mid-October.

"We've ordered the glass," said Panico, referring to the many damaged panels on the mirror-sheathed building. "We're going through an orderly process to make the repairs as quickly as possible."

The building's lobby and elevator were covered with plastic sheeting Saturday, and dehumidifiers were pulling moist air out of the windows through plastic tubing.

Still, Panico said he's optimistic.

"We're in much better shape than they are in New Orleans, where police are stopping people at the border."

The building was purchased in February by The Feil Organization of New York. The company also owns Lakeside Shopping Center, several strip shopping centers in the area and The Gatehouse Apartments.

The Lakeway Center, located about two miles south of the Galleria on Causeway, also was damaged by the storm. The building's blue facade is checked with tan plywood panels used to cover more than 200 broken windows, most on the lower levels of the three-building complex, which has more than 1 million square feet of office space.

The buildings' owner, Equity Office Properties Trust, hopes to reopen all three buildings by the end of November, company spokeswoman Terri Holt said.

Heritage Plaza on Veterans Memorial Boulevard also was damaged in the storm.

Kenner Mayor Phil Capitano has sent people asking about leasing property in the city to Tim Rada, a travel agency owner who is chairman of the Kenner Convention and Visitors Bureau.

"We've gotten a few calls, but most of them were from government agencies," Rada said. "As for everyone else, people are just trying to get back. Most of the people I know who are in business aren't in business right now. They're more concerned about getting their private lives together."

Rita wrecks small town of Vinton

75 percent buildings damaged

By The Associated Press

VINTON – This Calcasieu Parish town, population about 3,600, was a tangled mess of downed trees and power lines Saturday. Two light stanchions at the local football stadium lay across the field. Flames shot from a broken gas line at a house that burned to the ground overnight, leaving only the brick chimney and the front steps.

Police Chief Rick Fox said it was one of two serious overnight fires in the town.

"Rita got the best of us," Fox said. "We took quite a beating. It's going to take a while to come back from this."

Fox estimated 75 percent of the town's buildings were substantially damaged and no building was unscathed; the new City Hall, occupied only a week, had damage to its green metal roof.

The town was largely deserted and Fox said residents should stay away for a week to 10 days because the town is not safe.

One person who did remain in town was staying two doors down from the ruptured gas line. James Fee said he was awakened at around 3 a.m. by the orange glow in his window from the house fire.

His phone was out when he tried to call in the fire. He spent most of the night on his front porch, shielding himself from the wind and watching the fire.

"I just kept an eye on it. I knew there was a curfew, but I figured if the fire gets over here, I'm getting out," Fee said.

YOUR OPINIONS

This aerial shot of the Delacroix area of lower St. Bernard Parish shows the state of coastal Louisiana in the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina.

Erosion can no longer be ignored

Recently, due to poor judgment and shortsightedness, our federal government neglected to approve $2 billion requested by the Army Corps of Engineers to continue projects to protect our Gulf of Mexico lowlands. The $2 billion was needed for flood control and containment of delta wetlands. The funding could not have prevented damage from Hurricane Katrina but would have lessened its destruction.

The Mississippi River delta is disappearing at an alarming rate. Every year a land mass nearly as big as Manhattan crumbles and washes into the Gulf of Mexico. This erosion not only threatens one of the country's most abundant fisheries and a vital home for wildlife, but it imperils the nation's energy supply.

Hurricane Katrina hit New Orleans and the surrounding areas with huge loss of life and property. We are now forced to enter another war of sorts. This time, it is Mother Nature we must deal with. The crisis in the delta, with its far-reaching environmental, human and economic consequences, can no longer be ignored.

A new perspective on government

In every tragedy, even during our current hurricane agonies, there are moments of levity. One is reminded of Bill Mauldin's Stars and Stripes cartoon showing a sad World War II GI administering a coup de gras to his worn-out Jeep with his 45-caliber sidearm.

I've been surprised, gratified and more than a little amused by the leftward lurch of The Times-Picayune since the storm. I was humored by the irony of the excellent editorial, "An open letter to President Bush," addressed to a leader whom the paper normally is not quick to criticize.

I experienced side-splitting gales of laughter when I read of state Rep. Peppi Bruneau's socialist views on the "responsibility" of insurance companies to pay claims not covered by the policies they'd written. I welcome the march toward a liberal viewpoint on the chicanery of corporate America and our Republican-led national government.

Keep up the good work.

A role for solar power

As the United States holds its collective breath and watches Hurricane Rita bear down on the Texas-Louisiana coastline, we need to continue to think about ways to help prevent the impact of these storms and how to quicken the recovery once they've hit.

One idea came to my mind while watching New Orleans' tragedy after Katrina: we need more solar energy.

I don't mean as a replacement for oil (though we do need more clean alternative fuel sources). What we need are small, portable solar power panels that can be set up instantly in emergencies to provide power for devices that are critical in the wake of a catastrophic power failure: cell phone chargers, lights, fans and cooling systems, computers and many others.

The solar-panel power generators should be small and easy to carry. They ought to have battery capacity so energy can be stored, and they should be plentiful, so we can create a decentralized energy source independent of the power grid in the crucial hours following a major catastrophe.

As we review the energy sources we've devised over the past 150 years, here's an obvious application for an existing technology that can be developed now, is appropriate and is in high demand when it will be needed most. Let's just hope it's not anytime soon.

Welfare, big government to blame

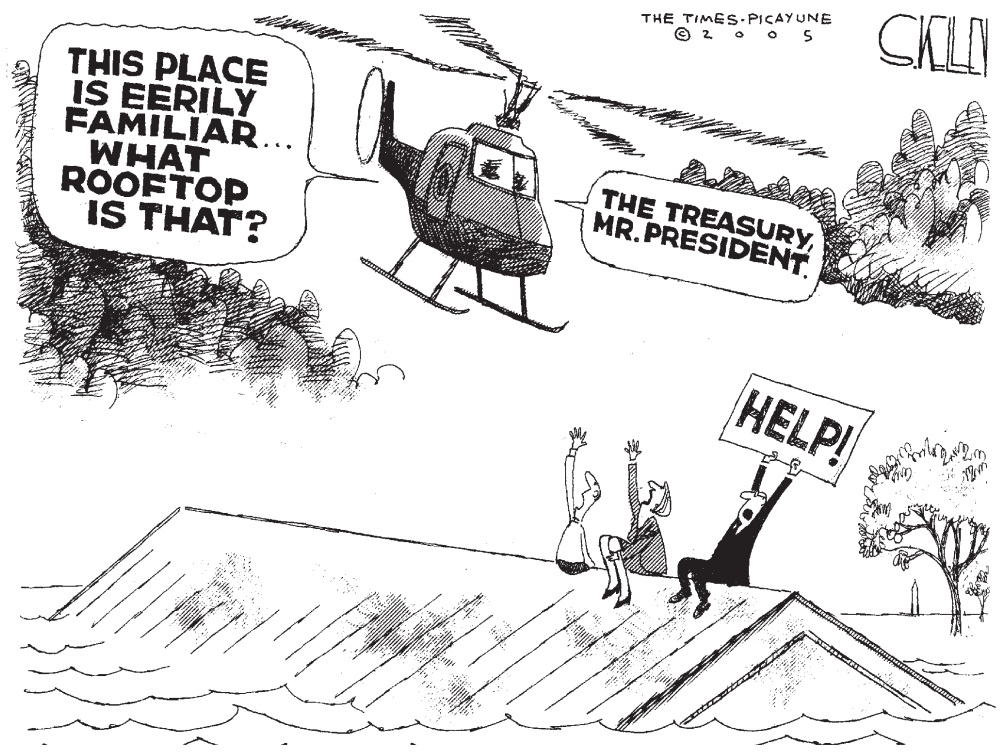
The shameful post-Katrina demagoguery persists: The Republican president is criminally liable for the misery brought by wind and water Aug. 29.

In her Sept. 20 letter to the editor, Vicki Lancaster, while assailing President Bush on Katrina, called for an "independent commission to investigate what went wrong." I.e., we need more bureaucracy to ferret out the mistakes and flaws peculiar to bureaucracy.

That's a nonsensical approach. There are relevant questions and painfully obvious answers that can be advanced, sans "independent commission," in response to Ms. Lancaster's indictment of everything Republican.



What ultimately has caused the plight of Katrina's black casualties? Poverty. What effected and what has perpetuated that poverty? The decimation of the black family and a pathetic public education system. What's behind these maladies? Respectively, the welfare state and those who run New Orleans public schools. Who caused the levee failures? Ms. Lancaster's friend, bureaucracy. From where does bureaucracy emanate? From big government.

Who is responsible for big government and the joint destruction of the black family and public education in the Big Easy? Those who are exploiting Katrina to foster a specious political agenda and to defame President Bush.

OUR OPINIONS

No mercy at the bridge

New Orleans residents who fled their city in the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina have found sanctuary in communities across the country. Just across the Mississippi River, though, the reception was far different. Under the pretense of protecting West Bank residents, some law-enforcement officials were more than willing to abandon desperate evacuees to their fate.

Gretna Police Chief Arthur Lawson ordered his officers to stop people from walking across the Crescent City Connection. Officers fired shots over the heads of pedestrians and used bullhorns to urge them to turn around.

The chief, in short, decided that suffering New Orleanians were worthy of suspicion rather than mercy, and he denied them passage over a public roadway that was one of the only ways out of New Orleans during the flood. His actions were appalling.

Sadly, Mr. Lawson wasn't alone in his lack of compassion. Westwego gave evacuees who arrived there the choice of leaving immediately or jamming into an overcrowded shelter, which no one was allowed to leave. Meanwhile, Plaquemines Parish sheriff's deputies raised their guns to stop a convoy of school buses that were supposed to bring evacuees to the Naval Air Station in Belle Chasse.

Sheriff Jiff Hingle later argued that "all they were going to do was end up destroying my community." Nonsense. How much destruction can anyone unleash from the confines of a federal military base?

Defenders of Mr. Lawson and Mr. Hingle have pointed to an Aug. 30 fire at the Oakwood Shopping Center as reason to bar the door to New Orleans evacuees. But how does an as-yet-unsolved arson case prove that all evacuees from New Orleans pose a danger to Gretna and other communities? The actions of these law-enforcement agencies make sense only if you think New Orleanians — and particularly the city's African-American majority — represent a vast, undifferentiated mass of evildoers.

Mr. Lawson maintains that he would have done what he did "if it had been any ethnic group." If he is telling the truth, he is heartless. But the reality was that most of the people fleeing New Orleans were black and that most of the officials making decisions were white. The suggestion that the race of the evacuees did not register for a moment with Gretna police is simply not plausible.

At best, the racial difference made it easier for white officials, in a tense situation, to treat evacuees as a malign alien presence rather than as suffering human beings.

The West Bank leaders responsible may not pay a political price for their actions. Signs praising Mr. Lawson's department and his supposed courage have gone up around the city. But a view can be both popular and deeply misguided, and playing to the public's worst fears during a cataclysm takes no courage at all.

Nevertheless, these officials insist that people who criticize their actions don't know what they're talking about. "If you wasn't there, shut your mouth," Westwego Police Chief Dwayne "Poncho" Munch said, "because you don't know."

Mr. Munch clearly wasn't there in New Orleans, where people were wading through floodwaters or barely clinging to life on their rooftops or dying out on the street. Or maybe he and other West Bank politicians knew full well that most evacuees had suffered greatly. But these officials simply didn't care.

No decent human being would dispute another human being's right to escape a burning building or a sinking ship. Forcing people back into a drowning city is just as inexcusable.

No room on the ark

Hurricane Katrina's fury laid bare many shortcomings in emergency preparedness and response, and the flaws that affected human safety and health must be the focus of storm post-mortems.

But criticism by the National Humane Society, which took state and federal government officials to task for not having an animal rescue plan, is not as off-point as it may sound. Wayne Pacelle, president of the organization, estimated that 50,000 animals were left behind by New Orleans area residents who evacuated. That's a lot of animals left to face perilous conditions. People are affected by their plight, from those who are worried about their pets to those who are taking risks to rescue them.

Animals left behind also pose a risk to people working on the recovery. Those that died present a health hazard, and those that survived are likely to be hungry and traumatized.

In many cases, survivors who managed to save the lives of their pets during the storm and flooding faced the prospect of saying goodbye as they were taken to safety. It's not necessary to be a pet owner or animal lover to recognize the pain caused by such separations.

It's impossible to know how many people chose to stay in harm's way because they couldn't make provisions for their pets during an evacuation, but there are numerous anecdotal accounts of those who did exactly that. Mr. Pacelle says that 65 percent of all American households have pets, and that means the issue is bound to arise in future disasters in the country.

Figuring out how to evacuate animals and how to rescue them may not top the list of things that need to change in this country's disaster planning, but it clearly needs to be on the list.

OTHER OPINIONS

With federal prosecutors investigating official wrongdoing at all levels with unprecedented vigor, you've got to at least hope that the politicians will be on their best behavior

DON'T GIVE CYNICS THE CHANCE TO CROW

With untold millions of dollars in relief and reconstruction aid heading Louisiana's way, there's considerable concern, out there in the rest of the country and also here at home, over how such a notoriously corrupt state will handle the influx of money.

It's hard to blame the handwringers, considering our scandal-ridden history.

Now-imprisoned former Gov. Edwin Edwards and ex-judge Ronald Bodenheimer are among the latest in a long, storied line of officials who've violated the public trust. In the weeks before Hurricane Katrina, news broke that U.S. Rep. William Jefferson is the focus of a yet another major federal corruption probe.

The irony is that, before Katrina, there were signs that we were starting to turn a corner.

STEPHANIE GRACE

Say what you will about Gov. Kathleen Blanco and New Orleans Mayor Ray Nagin's actions just before and after the hurricane struck, but remember this: Both chief executives will both play a major role in the area's reconstruction, and both have made a top priority of changing the way business is done around here. Neither Blanco nor Nagin has ever faced a major scandal. There's no evidence that either administration is being run by cronies, for cronies.

Whether Blanco and Nagin are equipped to handle the massive job is a question for another day, and there are plenty of other politicians we need to keep an eye on. With federal prosecutors investigating official wrongdoing at all levels with unprecedented vigor, you've got to at least hope that the politicians will be on their best behavior, even if it's not for the best of reasons.

And that brings us to Kenner.

With the nation's attention firmly fixed upon Louisiana, petty bickering between Mayor Phil Capitano's administration and Police Chief Nick Congemi's department reached an embarrassing crescendo. The two sides had already been warring over their apparently mutually exclusive hurricane plans. Then, Capitano's chief administrative officer, Cedric Floyd, got into an outright shouting match with Congemi over which one cared more for the city's minorities — all while CNN's cameras were rolling.

As if the sight of such needless chaos weren't bad enough, now we get word that Floyd had piles of donated relief supplies at his home. Based on a complaint from military officials working a distribution site, Kenner police raided Floyd's house Tuesday night and carted off several truckloads of clothes, tools, food and medicine.

One day later, Capitano suspended Floyd without pay. Two days later, police, with the backing of Attorney General Charles Foti, issued an arrest warrant, charging Floyd with malfeasance in office.

Floyd claims it's all a misunderstanding, that the merchandise was destined for needy people in the Susan Park area of the city. But no matter the case's outcome, the damage is done. Those inclined to think the worst of Louisiana will say, "I told you so."

And the timing couldn't have been worse. Louisiana had barely begun to change its well-earned reputation as a cauldron of corruption before Katrina thrust the state into the spotlight.

Unfortunately, the Floyd case sends a message that local leaders can't be trusted to take care of their constituents without lining their own pockets. And the harm done by that message extends way beyond the city's borders.

Jefferson went from a sure thing to a man without a base

If, as Mayor Ray Nagin predicts, New Orleans initially emerges at half its pre-Katrina size, it will also presumably undergo a demographic shift. That could be one more blow for Congressman Bill Jefferson.

Only a couple of months ago, Jefferson seemed to have a lifetime lock on his seat, the only one in Louisiana firmly in the grasp of the Democrats.

If only the most cock-eyed Republican optimist could dream of representing New Orleans in Congress, Jefferson, in his eighth term, was more or less immune to challenge from within his own party too.

JAMES GILL

Jefferson's African jaunts must have provided a prima facie justification for his nickname, Dollar Bill.

Indeed, he appeared to retain the affections of his constituents even after the FBI raided his car and his homes in Washington and New Orleans, reportedly confiscating a large amount of cash from a freezer.

The feds have kept officially mum about the focus of the investigation, meaning they have limited themselves to feeding unattributable snippets to the media. It seems Jefferson is under investigation for parlaying congressional clout into private pelf via telecommunications deals in Nigeria, where he is particularly fond of visiting.

The feds do not lightly go busting into a congressman's digs, and they need approval from way up high to do so. Securing the necessary warrants from a judge presumably also requires super probable cause, so Jefferson's African jaunts must have provided a prima facie justification for his nickname, Dollar Bill.

But his constituents, at least a largely black and elderly group of them who went to hear Jefferson speak at an Uptown union hall shortly after the raids, were more than happy to accord him the presumption of innocence. Indeed, some of them fiercely maintained he was being set up by The Man.

So many black politicians have been targeted by the feds lately that conspiracy theories abound, and Jefferson might well take an indictment in stride. The wheels of justice would have to grind at record pace for his case to be resolved before next year's election, and maybe only a plea bargain could keep him from running and, maybe, winning.

When Jefferson did turn up on national television to defend his honor, and deny misusing the power of his office, it had nothing to do with shady deals in Lagos. The rap this time came from National Guardsmen, who complained that they accompanied Jefferson on a post-Katrina tour of his district only to be kept waiting for an hour while he retrieved personal effects from his home.

Suggestions that Jefferson was seeking to hide incriminating evidence were a slander on the FBI, which had spent several hours going through his stuff. Even if the feds might have missed some juicy documents, Jefferson had access to his house for weeks after the raids, so it seems unlikely that he needed Katrina to cover his tracks.

The worst that can be alleged, and Jefferson denies it, is that, for the sake of his own convenience, he kept guardsmen cooling their heels while citizens who had neglected to get elected to high office stood on rooftops awaiting deliverance. The episode, at worst, was a minor embarrassment, and nobody will be greatly shocked at the idea that politicians are sometimes arrogant and self-serving.

Although Hurricane Rita has forced Nagin to suspend his plans to re-open the city in stages, no doubt he will remain keen to resume once the danger is past. He plans to begin with the driest ZIP codes, while what will happen to the devastated lower-lying areas, nobody will know for a while.

But it is a fair bet that the racial composition of the city will change, possibly for quite a while. Those evacuees who vow never to return are not the children of privilege.

They are, more than likely, supporters of Jefferson, however. Life has suddenly changed for lots of people, but Jefferson must be wondering what hit him.

If someone is sinking, offer a helping hand

My uncle tells a story about being at his grandmother's house in the late 1950s when some white people walked into the yard.

This was Mississippi. The arrival of white people could mean trouble. For many black people it had meant death. As it turns out, though, these particular people were hungry. They asked if my great-grandmother would give them food.

My uncle was still a boy. But in 1955 a boy slightly older than he had been lynched. His name was Emmett Till. For the alleged crime of whistling at a white woman, he'd been beaten and shot in the head. His attackers then fastened his body to a large metal weight and threw it into the Tallahatchie River.

Maybe it was simmering anger over what had happened to Emmett and the understanding that he was just as vulnerable that prompted my uncle to tell his grandmother that she ought not give those "crackers" any food. Martha Ellen McEwen saw her grandson's angry outburst as a teaching opportunity. When people are hungry, she told the young Roy DeBerry Jr., feed them. She didn't care if they looked like those terrorizing her people.

JARVIS DEBERRY

There are always excuses not to help. If you want to justify letting people starve, die of thirst or fall victim to certain violence, you can create a long list of reasons. The justifications become especially easy if those needing rescue belong to a group you despise or fear. Still, there ought to be some floor to our humanity below which we refuse to descend. We ought never let our fear or our xenophobia drag us down to such a point that we're unrecognizable as humans.

At this point, though, it's difficult to recognize the Gretna Police Department and the Plaquemines Parish Sheriff's Office as anything other than two cruelly racist and mean-spirited law enforcement agencies. After Hurricane Katrina, when New Orleans appeared destined to collapse into anarchy, officers from Gretna and Plaquemines turned away those overwhelmingly black crowds trying to flee to safety.

Gretna police fired shots over the heads of pedestrians who were walking away from New Orleans on the Crescent City Connection. Deputies from Plaquemines brandished shotguns and pistols to turn away school buses filled with people trying to flee a city that was simultaneously burning and flooding.

Apparently their consciences allow for that.

Gretna Police Chief Arthur Lawson and Plaquemines Parish Sheriff Jiff Hingle insist that they and their subordinates aren't heartless bigots. They were simply overwhelmed by the number of people seeking refuge. Lawson told a reporter that those leaving New Orleans the days after the storm "actually would have been better off where they were, because we didn't have anything for them."

In fact, they had plenty. They had an area that was safer than the city across the bridge. They had the opportunity to see the people on the bridge as victims, to embrace them as human beings. Yet they saw them only as potential plunderers of their town or as a drain on their meager resources. Hingle said he stopped the buses headed to the Naval Air Station for the same reason: "All they were going to end up doing was destroying my community."

The Federal Emergency Management Agency failed the entire region, so I don't doubt that the jurisdictions on the West Bank were struggling to maintain provisions for their own residents. But this isn't about limited resources. It's about racism. It's about a comment Lorrie Beth Slonsky told National Public Radio she heard from Gretna officers. "You are not crossing the bridge. We are not turning the West Bank into another Superdome," Slonsky reported.

She said she and her husband, Larry Bradshaw, both paramedics from San Francisco and both white, recognized the code language. Everyone else trying to cross the bridge with them was black.

Did Lawson, Hingle and their officers stop to consider that the people crossing the parish lines were fleeing the madness of the Superdome? No. They assumed the people were bringing the Superdome with them.

Now matter how much they defend their refusal to help as necessary to maintain law and order, the truth is they acted immorally. They saw people fleeing danger and sent them back into harm's way.

Tigers had brush with nature in 1964

His team has played only one game and already Les Miles owns a record that figures to stand the test of time.

In later years, the trivia question would go like this: What LSU coach had his home debut rescheduled three times?

Of course, you'd be giving it away if you mentioned the rescheduling was because of a couple of "female hurricanes."

So let's don't mention what we know.

That Katrina knocked a Sept. 3 Tiger Stadium date with North Texas into October.

That Katrina sent a Sept. 10 date with Arizona State from Baton Rouge to Tempe, Ariz.

That Rita bounced a Sept. 24 date with Tennessee from Saturday to Monday.

And that is only part of the Hurricane Rita story.

There were reports Tennessee was prepared to forfeit the game had LSU not agreed to a two-day delay.

There also were reports the SEC looked into the possibility of moving the game to the end of the season, a change tied into shifting the conference championship game from Dec. 3 to Dec. 10.

All of which recalls another "female" force of nature.

Remember Hurricane Hilda?

In LSU football, Hilda, Katrina and Rita are now part of an unholy trinity.

Hilda roared out of the Gulf in October of '64. She not only roared. The eye came closer to Tiger Stadium than any hurricane in history.

With Charley McClendon's Tigers preparing to take on Florida in a battle of unbeaten ballclubs, Hilda's approach forced an 11th-hour postponement, moving the game from Oct. 3 to Dec. 5, two weeks after the Tigers' traditional regular-season finale against Tulane.

By that time, the Tigers were 7-1-1, the lone loss a 17-9 defeat in Birmingham to an Alabama team that went on to win the national championship. By that time, the Tigers also had accepted an invitation to play Syracuse in the Sugar Bowl.

In '64, LSU rode the place-kicking foot of Doug Moreau,

DALLAS — The Tulane Green Wave wasn't very polite to host Southern Methodist on Saturday afternoon. In fact, the Wave was downright rude.

Tulane, which spent time as SMU's guest three weeks ago after being displaced by Hurricane Katrina, used a dominating defense and an opportunistic offense in getting its first win of the season, 31-10, over the Mustangs at Gerald J. Ford Stadium in its opening Conference USA game.

"I came here and felt like I was at home again," Tulane quarterback Lester Ricard said. "I got here (Friday) and enjoyed eating in the cafeteria."

On Saturday, Ricard and the Green Wave's offense feasted on SMU's defense. Ricard threw for 213 yards and a pair of touchdowns, completing 22 of 34 passes. The Wave's offense compiled 357 yards.

MINNEAPOLIS — Over the past four years, Saints coach Jim Haslett has been measured by his win-loss record.

His 32-32 mark has landed him on the coaching bubble, if not the chopping block in recent seasons. An unspoken, "Playoffs or bust" threat hanging over his head.

Jim Haslett
Has been the steadying force for the Saints this season

But 14 weeks before the playoffs begin this year, extraordinary circumstances have shed light on an extraordinary coaching effort by Haslett – holding his team together in the face of unprecedented distractions.

"I think you have to take your hat off to him," Saints offensive tackle Wayne Gandy said. "He's been under a lot of pressure. He's the one manning the ship, and the ship seems that it could float anywhere at this moment.

"When he came into the season, a lot of people probably had doubts about him. But he's showing great leadership right now, trying to handle 60 guys, a coaching staff, be concerned about his family, the millions of interviews, all that kind of stuff."

The Saints (1-1) play at Minnesota (0-2) today, their fourth consecutive week on the road, dating to the preseason.

In between, the players, staff and entire organization have relocated to San Antonio, while dealing with personal and family upheaval in the wake of Hurricane Katrina's destruction.

Through it all, Haslett has "handled this with as much class and poise as anybody you could imagine," said tight end Ernie Conwell.

"There's a tremendous amount of strain, pressure and demand on a head coach when the circumstances are perfect," Conwell said. "And now imagine the kind of things that he's dealing with. And then to have the kind of class that he's had toward

Rita delivers crushing blow to SW coast

Storms threaten state's wildlife seasons

By Bob Marshall
Outdoors editor

As they completed their initial surveys last week of the terrible toll Hurricane Katrina had taken on delicate coastal ecosystems, state and federal wildlife officials frequently repeated the one hope they had left: At least it can't get any worse.

Then along came Rita — and the state now faces a potential knockout punch to fish, wildlife and hunting seasons along the entire coast.

By Friday administrators knew Katrina had sent a sweeping blow across a half-million acres of publicly owned wetland and coastal forest ecosystems, a prized ring of some 20 state and federal refuges surrounding New Orleans. Those lands are not only critical habitat to a wide range of flora and fauna, but represent fully one-third of the public hunting grounds in the state.

Yet any comfort managers took from the fact Katrina's damage was limited to the southeastern corner of the state vanished Thursday when it became clear the monster known as Hurricane Rita was aiming much of its fury toward southwest

But not until last week's announcement that the Hurricane Katrina-displaced Hornets would play 35 of their 41 home games in Oklahoma City at the 19,675-seat Ford Center, had Cornett's big-league dreams taken a positive step.

Cornett said he met with NBA commissioner David Stern in April but didn't come away with any assurances.

AUTO RACING

NEWMAN AGAIN DOMINATES BUSCH: Now Ryan Newman will return his attention to trying to win the NASCAR Nextel Cup. He has the pole today at Dover International Speedway, where he tied a record Saturday by winning his fourth consecutive Busch series start. Before he set a track record by leading 193 of 200 laps in that race, Newman talked about his dream for the MBNA 400. I think every driver wants to lead 400 laps, said Newman, who moved within 40 points of leader Tony Stewart with a victory last Sunday at New Hampshire International Speedway. We d love to lead the first one to get those bonus points, and lead 399 more after that. Newman s pursuit of Jeff Gordon s four-year-old mark of 381 might not be so unbelievable considering his record of three victories in the past four races on The Monster Mile. You have to be careful, Newman said. You never know what the balance is going to be like. Hopefully, we can keep this car in one piece.

CASTRONEVES WINS POLE: Helio Castroneves won the pole for the inaugural Watkins Glen Indy Grand Prix on Saturday, posting the fastest lap in a 10-minute shootout among the top six cars. Castroneves covered the 3.37-mile, 11-turn Watkins Glen International road course at a record 133.806 mph, edging IRL newcomer Giorgio Pantano (133.774 mph) and knocking Scott Dixon (133.497 mph) from first to fourth. Patrick Carpentier qualified third (133.629 mph). The IRL established a unique qualifying format for the three street/road courses on this year s schedule. After all 20 drivers finished their single-lap qualifying runs, positions seven through 20 were locked in and the top six drivers ran an extra 10 minutes on new tires in an effort to improve their positions.

TENNIS

BRYAN BROTHERS PUT U.S. AHEAD: The Bryan twins brought the United States within one win of staying in the elite group of Davis Cup. Now it s up to Andy Roddick, or James Blake, to complete the job against Belgium. Bob and Mike Bryan won Saturday s doubles match 6-3, 6-7 (2), 6-1, 6-3 against Olivier Rochus and the outmatched Kristof Vliegen, giving the Americans a 2-1 lead in the best-of-five series entering reverse singles in Leuven, Belgium. Today, Roddick will face 31st-ranked Rochus as he goes for his second singles victory. Rochus will be playing his third match in three days. Andy is going to be very motivated to finish it off, U.S. captain Patrick McEnroe said. I feel good about our chances. If Roddick fails, the series will come down to Blake against Olivier s older brother, Christophe Rochus. The Americans will be relegated from the World Group for the first time in 17 years if they lose both matches.

MORE DAVIS CUP: Slovakia and Croatia took 2-1 leads in their Davis Cup semifinals with doubles victories, leaving each country one win from a first appearance in the final. Slovakia s Karol Beck and Michal Mertinak beat Argentina s David Nalbandian and Mariano Puerta 7-6 (5), 7-5, 7-6 (5) in Bratislava. We played well as a team, Beck said. Michal s serve was excellent and we deserved to win. Argentina is in its third semifinal in four years and trying to reach its first final since 1981. Slovakia reached the semis for the first time after beating Spain, last year s champion, and the Netherlands. . . . In Split, Croatia, the home country took the lead when Ivan Ljubicic and Mario Ancic defeated Russia s Igor Andreev and Dmitry Tursunov 6-2, 4-6, 7-6 (5), 3-6, 6-4. For the millionth time, we showed we are strong in the mind when it counts, said Ljubicic.

OTHER TENNIS: Karlina Sprem defeated second-seeded Elena Likhovtseva 4-6, 6-4, 6-1 in the semifinals of the Sunfeast Open in Calcutta. Sprem, seeded seventh, will play for the title against top-seeded Anastasia Myskina, who defeated Kaia Kanepi 6-3, 6-1. . . . Maria Sharapova quit because of a chest injury, sending Maria Kirilenko into the title match against Anna-Lena Groenefeld in the China Open at Beijing.

BASEBALL

SOSA RETURN DOUBTFUL : Sammy Sosa s unproductive season with the Baltimore Orioles is apparently over. Orioles vice president Jim Beattie said it s doubtful Sosa will return to the team from his Miami home, where the outfielder has been rehabilitating a toe injury since Sept. 7. Obviously the further along it gets, the harder it is to bring him back, Beattie said. We ve been calling and talking to him, and we just have to see where he is the next day or so. Sosa hit .221 with 14 homers and 45 RBIs this season, and hasn t played since Aug. 25.

AROUND THE MAJORS: Nationals outfielder Jose Guillen dropped his appeal of a one-game suspension for an equipment-throwing tantrum after an ejection and was to serve his penalty Saturday night.

NFL

AROUND THE LEAGUE: Steelers running back Duce Staley has been upgraded from questionable to probable after practicing all week, and is expected to play today against the New England Patriots. Staley has not played since the Steelers 41-27 loss to New England in the AFC championship game in January. He practiced only the first day of training camp before needing knee surgery Aug. 8, and practiced little until last week.

GOLF

BRITAIN AND IRELAND LEAD: Britain and Ireland pulled one point ahead of Continental Europe on the third day of the Seve Trophy at The Wynyard Club in Billingham, England. The home team won the greensomes 3-1 and the foursomes 2½ to 1½ for an overall lead of 9½ to 8½. Today s 10 singles matches will decide the Ryder Cup-style contest. From 4-1 down on opening day, we lead into the singles. That s a great effort from everyone on the team and a lot of credit goes to the young guns, said Britain and Ireland captain Colin Montgomerie. Of eight matches today, we lost only one. Three matches this afternoon went to the last hole. That shows how close it is.

HORSE RACING

BRIGHT ABUNDANCE WINS: Bright Abundance closed strongly to score a half-length victory over My Lordship in the Grade III $150,000 Noble Damsel Handicap for fillies and mares 3 and older at Belmont Park. Asti was third, another length back in the field of 12. The win was the third in seven races this year for the 4-year-old Quiet American filly, and her first graded stakes win in 18 career starts. Bright Abundance, ridden by Richard Migliore, covered 1 mile in 1:33:93 over the firm turf to earn $90,000 and return $15.60.

Mayor says city not trying to steal Hornets

along to get a tenant for our sports arena. It was built for an NBA or NHL team."

In the late 1990s, Oklahoma City failed in a bid to land an NHL expansion team. Currently, the NBA has no plans for expansion and when Cornett met with Stern he was told no franchises were considering relocating.

Although Oklahoma City residents will get to see all 29 NBA teams and stars like Shaquille O'Neal, Tracy McGrady and Tim Duncan, the league and owner George Shinn both insist the team eventually will return to New Orleans.

"It's the league's hope and expectation that we'll be in New Orleans next year," NBA attorney Joel Litvin said last week. "This is New Orleans' team."

Still, under the terms of their contract, the Hornets have the option to play at the Ford Center next season. At last week's news conference, Shinn said he had some concerns about his fan base in New Orleans because so many residents have been displaced.

"It's not just the arena (being) in playing condition, but will there be any fans there," Shinn said. "I don't know how many will come back, how quickly they'll come back. I'm convinced New Orleans will rebuild. With the dollars that the federal government is putting in, I can see it rebuilding and even being stronger. But how long is it going to take? This option (for a possible second year in Oklahoma City) was just a cushion just to make sure if it got to that point."

Cornett said he's not trying to steal the Hornets from New Orleans, despite his city's obvious desire to land an NBA team. The city has given the Hornets a sweetheart deal for this season - if the Hornets fall short of earning $40 million then the state, city and a group of local investors will make up the shortfall not to exceed $10 million.

The Hornets are also getting a relocation allowance that includes temporary housing for up to 100 employees. The city will furnish 25,000 square feet of office space for the Hornets within walking distance of the Ford Center.

"I've said all along, no way we would be in any competition with Louisiana," Cornett said. "If the games can be played there (New Orleans), that's where they should be played. But if they couldn't be played there, I was very interested in trying to be a temporary relocation center for the team. This team is absolutely going back to New Orleans."

Cornett said the city's primary attraction in having the Hornets is to show it can support a professional team, which could help it land an NBA or NHL franchise later on.

Cornett said for too long, the national image of his city of 528,042 residents has been that of a minor league city, not capable of supporting a major professional sports franchise. Oklahoma City has a Triple-A baseball team and a minor league hockey team.

For most of the past 10 years, the city has mostly been known for one of the worst tragedies in U.S. history when the Murrah Federal Building was bombed in 1995, killing 168 people.

"We're growing, we've prospered and all we needed was just a chance," Cornett said. "The old image of Oklahoma City being a minor-league city is outdated. We've always been a great place to live with low-cost housing, virtually no traffic congestion, fresh water and clear air. But we've never been perceived as a great place to vacation. All our positives started to mushroom up in the last 18 months."

In an effort to improve the quality of life in the city, a capital improvement project for upgraded sports, recreational, entertainment, cultural and convention facilities was approved by Oklahoma City residents in 1993.

Under the plan, a temporary one cent sales tax was approved to build facilities such as the Ford Center and SBC Bricktown Ballpark, which is the home of the city's Triple-A team. The Ford Center cost $87.7 million and was completed in June 2002.

"There are only 30 cities with NBA teams, so it's a little bit of an elite group," city manager Jim Couch said. "I know it's only for a short time for us, but now we can be considered among those other (NBA) cities for the first time."

Fans in Oklahoma City have shown interest in the Hornets, who announced last week that 5,000 season-ticket deposits had been collected after the first two days of sales.

"We are real optimistic that this is going to work," Litvin said. "Mr. Stern has committed to pour as many resources into this market as needed to assist the Hornets' staff. The way the contract is structured there are incentives I think for all parties to drive revenues as high as possible. The league has an incentive to make this work; we don't want to have games being played in half-empty buildings. We will do whatever it takes."

One-two punch could require years to repair

By Bob Marshall
Outdoors editor

I was nearing the end of a 30-minute radio interview about a week after Hurricane Katrina had savaged New Orleans when the host had one last question: "Do you think there will be a duck season this year?"

Part of my brain was repulsed and outraged by the question: How could anyone think about hunting at a time like this? My house still had four feet of water on the first floor, hundreds of people had died, hundreds of thousands were homeless, and this chucklehead wanted to know about hunting season?

But another part of my brain (OK, so maybe it's the largest part) understood the query. Homeless hunters were probably thinking about their favorite season for the same reason storm-tossed football fans couldn't wait for the Saints, LSU or Tulane to kick off.

And before I knew what was happening, these words came spilling out of my mouth: "You know, anytime a duck and a Cajun meet in the winter, there's going to be a duck season."

The host laughed, but it wasn't a joke. I was trying to explain the deep roots the tradition has in south Louisiana. It was another way of expressing the old adage: Where there's a will, there's a way - and the will of coastal Louisiana duck hunters is legendary, if not notorious.

But since then I've seen and learned things that make me wonder if that storied determination will really matter this year or in future seasons. That's because hurricanes Katrina and Rita may well have delivered a one-two punch to our coastal wetlands that could require years to repair.

By last week state and federal wildlife managers were beginning to realize Katrina had hammered wintering waterfowl habitat from the Pearl River to the eastern edges of the Atchafalaya Basin. Before Katrina the delta of the Mississippi River as well as the marshes in the Lake Pontchartrain and the Barataria basins were thick, green and brimming with the kind of aquatic vegetation that attracts and holds wintering waterfowl. And it looked like there would be plenty of waterfowl to hold, because duck production on the northern prairies had been termed excellent.

The potential was there for the first good season in years, biologists agreed, barring one event: A major tropical storm.

We've now had two. The first turned the green Mississippi delta brown and wiped away most of the submerged (floating) vegetation along the entire southeast coast. The DWF said early on-the-ground tests show submergents were gone from the Pearl Basin westward through Salvador and Pointe-au-Chien wildlife management areas.

My flight over those areas a week after the storm didn't show the tell-tale line of drying vegetation on the marsh grass that typically signals a loss of duck foods after a storm. But the DWF now says the line was missing because Katrina's storm surge was so high, the submergents were simply carried miles away.

Finally, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service reported its national wildlife refuges had lost an estimated 150,000 acres of coastal wetlands, much of that duck habitat.

Yet there were still a few windows of opportunity open for a decent season. The bulk of the migration wouldn't be arriving for another six to eight weeks, and some marshes would show new growth by then. Just as important, the central and western Louisiana coast had been largely untouched by Katrina. We could still head west for a hunt.

Rita slammed shut those windows over the weekend.

Our second hurricane sent the same kind of saltwater storm surges rolling across waterfowl habitat in the southwest and central coasts that turned the southeastern marshes brown. There's little doubt critical waterfowl food was destroyed in place or removed.

And Rita also sent a second wave of salty water and punishing waves over the southeastern coast. Any comebacks under way were certainly stopped. Ducks that find their traditional wintering areas devoid of food will be forced to look for groceries somewhere else.

There have been years in the past when a late storm rolled up wetlands in one area of our coast, but I can't remember when the entire Louisiana coast was hammered so severely, and almost simultaneously. These events don't just portend a poor season this year, they could have serious impacts on a significant portion of the continent's migratory waterfowl, which winter in coastal Louisiana and Texas.

If that habitat can't provide the sustenance required to build energy reserves for the long flight home in the spring, what kind of shape will the birds be in for nesting season? How will that affect next summer's production? And how will that impact future seasons?

As I told the radio host, I don't doubt some south Louisianans will take a break from rebuilding to make a hunt. Like football, this tradition is too deeply ingrained into the culture of the region.

In fact, I was proven correct the next weekend when the DWF reported seven hunters showed up at Manchac WMA for the teal opener and averaged two birds each.

But that was before Rita added a punctuation mark to Katrina's devastation. Now I'm not sure just how much can be left

Rita makes it hard to assess Katrina damage

OUTDOORS, from C-1

Louisiana — imperiling another 1 million acres of public fish and wildlife habitat on 23 additional refuges.

Famous coastal areas such as Lacassine National Wildlife Refuge and the state-owned Rockefeller Refuge as well as upland areas such as Clear Creek and Peason Ridge wildlife management areas all were expected to feel the impacts of a hurricane carrying winds up to 145 mph and a storm surge of more than 20 feet. A worst-case scenario could find more than half of the state's public wildlife areas damaged and closed to use.

The state Department of Wildlife and Fisheries last week estimated the damage to wildlife habitat in the affected area at $50 million, while fisheries losses were placed at almost $2 billion. The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, meanwhile, said the damage to its infrastructure on federal refuges in Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama was $94 million.

Those agencies realized Friday their bills would be much higher by the end of this week.

"We really were just starting to get a handle on what Katrina had done, finally beginning to get a little sleep, and now it's starting all over again," said Dwight Landreneau, DWF secretary. "We were saying we couldn't afford another hit like Katrina, but here it comes."

The job of assessing impacts of Katrina on fish and wildlife resources had been delayed for more than a week as DWF and USFWS personnel continued to help with research and rescue operations in the affected parishes. But the effort gained steam last week as those rescue operations ended and high tides left by the storm finally began receding. With few exceptions the news was not good.

Almost every wetland habitat on the southeast coast suffered a severe loss of submerged aquatic vegetation, important for attracting and sustaining millions of wintering waterfowl, said Parke Moore, DWF assistant secretary Office of Wildlife. Other major impacts included heavy losses of timber on state areas, damage to roads serving management areas, and losses to fresh, brackish and saltwater marshes.

"We lost $20 million in hardwood timber on Pearl River (WMA) alone, and we suffered $12 million in damage to our infrastructure — roads, buildings and equipment," Moore said.

The loss of submerged vegetation, which floated in the water column, initially was not thought to be severe, but on-the-ground inspections last week showed another picture. While most areas still have plenty of emergent vegetation — plants that have roots in the soil — the submerged vegetation had largely been washed away, Moore said.

"We really were just starting to get a handle on what Katrina had done, finally beginning to get a little sleep, and now it's starting all over again We were saying we couldn't afford another hit like Katrina, but here it comes."

DWIGHT LANDRENEAU
DWF secretary

"We had a very high storm surge, and it apparently just carried submerged aquatics away when it ran out," Moore said. "This is a major food component for domestic wildlife, but also for migratory waterfowl.

"Our initial checks on the ground in places like Salvador (WMA), Pass a Loutre (state refuge) and Biloxi (WMA) indicate that most of those plants are gone."

The greatest post-storm concern was a large-scale loss of coastal marshes to the hammering of Katrina's winds and tides. The fragile deltas on which the marshes grow are the platform for the state's rich commercial and recreational fisheries, the winter home for as many as 5 million migratory birds, and the major storm buffer for communities like New Orleans. Because levees on the Mississippi River prevent spring floods from delivering the silt that rebuilds the deltas, marshes lost to storms cannot be replaced.

The USFWS said its refuges had lost approximately 150,000 acres of coastal bottomland wetland habitat mainly in Louisiana. State officials said their final analysis on land loss will take weeks and months, initial inspections indicate marsh losses were not as great as feared, said Moore and John Roussel, DWF assistant secretary office of fisheries.

"It looks like because those marshes were covered by such a deep volume of water from the storm surge, they didn't get chewed up by the pounding of waves," Moore said. "So, right now, we're not seeing a lot of obvious losses."

But there were impacts. Many of those marshes float on a layer of plant detritus and soil and were moved around by the storm surge. St. Bernard, Plaquemines and St. Tammany parish wetlands all showed signs of re-engineering courtesy of Katrina. Lagoons that once were clear of marsh are dotted with lumps of grass moved by the storm surge. Some canals and bayous that were open waterways before the storm now are clogged with grasses.

The West Pearl River just south of U.S. 90 is completely choked with marsh moved into the riverbed by the storm surge.

"That spot where Upper Black Bayou meets the West Pearl is just jammed with grass, it's impassable," said David Moreland, wildlife administrator for the DWF.

"The storm rearranged the landscape in a lot of ways. It moved marsh, dropped timber that blocks trails and roads. Veteran hunters probably won't recognize huge areas of the Pearl River Basin."

Fisheries also were suffering. While initial concerns about pollution to lakes caused by storm runoff from surrounding communities is easing, Roussel said impacts from the storm surge are now beginning to show up in fresh and brackish habitat across southeast Louisiana. Plants and other organic matter washed into rivers and swamps by the storm have begun to decompose, robbing the water of oxygen needed to support fish and plant life.

"We know the first tests being done in Lake Pontchartrain show the water quality isn't too bad away from the south shoreline and that's real good news," he said. "But we're finding some problems with oxygen levels in the rivers off the lakes (Pontchartrain and Maurepas).

"We're trying to keep an eye on that with our sampling crews, but there's really nothing we can do. This is the same type of thing that happened to the Atchafalaya Basin after Hurricane Andrew. There's just so much organic matter in the water column, and there are such warm temperatures, it's almost a certainty."

There have been no large fish kills detected yet, but Roussel said that does not mean fish have not died.

"We're not doing any shocking yet to look for fish, because fish naturally leave these areas of low oxygen," he said. "And we may have had some large fish kills early on, but because we were so heavily involved in search and rescue, we may have missed them. Those dead fish may already have sunk or been washed out."

Roussel said the extent of the impact on fisheries would not be know until comprehensive shocking and samplings efforts could be completed, an effort that could take weeks or months.

Tennessee quarterback Rick Clausen began his collegiate career at LSU before transferring. Clausen completed five passes for 35 yards with one interception with the Tigers.

WAITING IN WINGS

Vols QB Clausen returns to LSU 4 years later in same role

By William Kalec
Staff writer

BATON ROUGE — Welcome back, Rick Clausen.

Remember this guy?

He's the fuzzy-haired distant backup who left the conscience of Tigerland citizens three years ago, when his only claim to fame was being Casey's younger brother. Without his mother, Cathy, whose dual-sided LSU/Tennessee jersey TV producers milked incessantly for cutaway shots during the 2001 SEC title game, Rick wouldn't have received any air time throughout his forgettable stay in Baton Rouge.

During a blink-and-you-miss-it LSU career, Clausen threw 12 passes, completed six (five to Tigers receivers, one to a defender for an interception) for 35 yards.

So, without fanfare, he transferred to Tennessee.

On Monday night, the departed senior returns to Tiger Stadium — a game he was eager to play back in July when he was one of Tennessee's representatives for SEC Media Days — and will resume a familiar role, just on the opposite sideline.

In less than a week, Clausen went from the King of Rocky Top — in charge of a top five team, headed into the Swamp against SEC rival Florida for a made-for-national-TV matchup — to indefinite backup to Erik Ainge in the sequence of five attempts. Now, cruelly, his claim to fame is being the older brother of prep phenom, Jimmy, as the opportunity to shine underneath Louisiana's most glorified row of lights ticks away beginning at 6:30 p.m. Monday.

"All I am asking for is an opportunity," Clausen said.

Tennessee coach Phillip Fulmer gave Clausen a chance, albeit brief.

After bailing out the Vols in 2004 when Ainge separated his shoulder midway through a loss to Notre Dame (Clausen directed Tennessee to the SEC title game and a Cotton Bowl blowout), Fulmer opened the starting job for competition in the spring and fall.

"I talked to Ainge down at the Manning (Passing Academy) camp, and just looking at his physical ability, I thought it was going to be tough for Rick," said Tulane quarterback Lester Ricard, who like Clausen opted out of the cluttered situation in Baton Rouge in 2003. "But I think Rick is one of the smartest quarterbacks I've seen. That's the reason why he started at Tennessee. ... And, he's a fighter. It doesn't matter how weak his arm is or how inaccurate he is at times — his knowledge, and how hard he fights, is amazing."

Ainge eventually filled the vacancy ... for one week. Clausen donned the rescuer's cape again and replaced Ainge (5 of 14, 57 yards and two interceptions) in Tennessee's 17-10 non-conference squeaker over UAB. With an extra week to think, Fulmer gave Clausen the nod.

Then, following two unimpressive series, Fulmer yanked Clausen. He was given the chance to direct a first-half-ending, two-minute drill and then spent the rest of the soupy evening watching Ainge command the Vols' offense to just seven points. Apparently, that was enough to convince Fulmer to stop the revolving door.

Despite his noticeable progression, Clausen isn't expected to dirty his uniform unless Ainge is injured.

"Knowledge and size," Jimbo Fisher answered when asked the differences between then and now. "The knowledge of playing more and Rick grew. When Rick came here he was 160 pounds, now he's 200, 205 or whatever. He was a young guy when he came. I think his body just caught up. He's gotten bigger and stronger and it's allowed him to play and have success ... We're guilty as coaches. Sometimes, you got to have patience."

Game doesn't seem as significant as it once did

who doubled as a wide receiver. Three Moreau field goals defeated Texas A&M 9-6 in the opener. One decided a 3-0 victory over Rice. One tied Tennessee 3-3. In the loss to Alabama, Moreau was responsible for all of LSU's points.

When Florida showed up at Tiger Stadium, it was the same story. Moreau kicked two field goals, but they were not near enough to tilt the scales in a 20-6 Gators' victory featuring the passing of quarterback Steve Spurrier.

In the Sugar Bowl, the Tigers made amends with a 13-10 win over Syracuse. This time it was Moreau catching a 57-yard touchdown pass and later kicking his 14th field goal of the season to break a 10-10 tie.

That's how Hurricane Hilda played into the season of '64.

We'll learn Monday about the effects of Rita and Katrina on a football game that seemed a lot more significant about a month ago.

This weekend you'd have Tigers fans talking about that 38-31 overtime victory over the Vols in 2000, the time Rohan Davey threw a touchdown pass to Robert Royal in OT to give the Tigers the lead, and Damien James coming up with a fourth-down deflection to foil Tennessee's bid to play on.

You'd have Tigers fans going back to the SEC championship game of 2001, the time second-ranked Tennessee was poised to play for the BCS championship. They'd be talking about LSU ending the dream with a 30-21 upset in Atlanta, when Matt Mauck made his first impression, coming off the bench to replace an injured Davey in the second half and stirring things up.

On Monday, with a crowd of 90,000 expected at LSU's football home, they'll be talking of other topics, more about life-and-death topics than football.

About Katrina turning Tigertown into a city of 700,000.

About rooftop rescues.

About helicopters using Bernie Moore Track Stadium as a landing pad.

More about real-life heroism than touchdowns.

As for Les Miles, who has watched and waited, he'll finally discover how it feels coaching the Tigers at Tiger Stadium.

Tulane defense sacks it to 'em

Green Wave drops SMU QBs nine times

By Benjamin Hochman
Staff writer

DALLAS — Often on Saturday, they waltzed past offensive linemen like celebs would past a dance club bouncer. One by one, they slipped into a defensive player's equivalent to the VIP room — the quarterback pocket.

Sacks were on the house.

Tulane defensive players tallied nine sacks against Southern Methodist in the Green Wave's 31-10 win Saturday.

Four of thesacks came onthird down, and another two on fourth as Tulane physically and psychologically dominated SMU's offensive linemen, and it rattled the quarterbacks.

"Offensively, we were inept," SMU coach Phil Bennett said. "It's a tribute to Tulane when you can rush four and get pressure on the quarterback. Ô We were a step slow in everything we tried to do."

Before the game, Green Wave coach Chris Scelfo said he was worried about SMU quarterback Jerad Romo, saying hewas elusive and has shown hecan throw on the run. Tulane wasn't able to blitz with its linebackers too often, because coverage was essential. And the Wave defensive line didn't have any seniors ormarquee players; Tulane rotates two lines of players, a combination of four of juniors and four sophomores.

But Tulane's front four was more than efficient. They were overwhelming.

"We put a lot of pressure on Romo — he's such a competitor and we had to do that," said Scelfo, whose teamlimited Romo to 4-of-11 passing and11 yards rushing. "When you can put pressure on a quarterback with four guys, you're going to have a tough day at the office."

Scelfo also pointed out the toughness of his secondary, which kept SMU's receivers from breaking open. But the day belonged to the boys in the trenches.

"I haven't seen the D-line play like that since my freshman year," said senior linebacker Anthony Cannon, who was a freshman on the Hawaii Bowl team in 2002. "We have a great defensive coordinator (Eric Schumann), and we're finally coming around, being experienced after playing together for a while. It's starting to show."

Tulane had 16 tackles for losses of 60 yards. Defensive end Craig Morris, who also had a sack, made consecutive tackles behind the line of scrimmage in the first quarter, forcing a third-and-16. Romo threw incomplete, SMU punted and Tulane scored its first touchdown on the following drive.

In the second quarter, Morris prowled into the backfield onsecond down for his sack. On the following play — third-and-10 from SMU's 35 — Cannon stormed around the side of the line and pulled down Romo for a sack. SMU punted, and five plays later Tulane doubled the score.

On SMU's next possession, down 14-0, Cannon and tackle Antonio Harris teamedfor a third down sack of Romo. On Tulane's 37, SMU went for it on fourth down. This time, Harris flew solo, sacking Romo.

Tulane tallied four of its sacks in the fourth quarter, including two by tackle Alvin Johnson.

A week after Tulane did not get one sack, Tulane recorded its most since an 11-sack onslaught of Florida A&M a year ago.

"We've been through so much," Wave tackle Avery Williams said. "And that is our payoff."

Tulane gets defensive in 31-10 rout

TULANE, from C-1

The defense, meanwhile, was dominating, holding the Mustangs (1-3, 0-1 in C-USA) to 127 total yards. It is the second straight stellar performance for the defense. Last week, Tulane held Mississippi State to 225 yards.

"We really appreciate their hospitality and everything they did for us, but when we stepped out on the field, I don't think (SMU) would have wanted us to do anything else but play to win," linebacker Anthony Cannon said.

Green Wave coach Chris Scelfo said the play of the defensive front and the linebackers was the key to the game.

"I can't say enough about our defense," said Scelfo, who with 32 victories is the fourth-winningest coach in Tulane history. "We've been taking a lot of pride (over the years) in our offense. But if we play like this defensively all year, it's going to keep us in games."

Southern Methodist quarterback Jerad Romo spent more time getting off the turf as he did completing passes. He was 4-of-10 for 25 yards and was sacked seven times. Altogether, the Green Wave (1-1, 1-0) had nine sacks, the second-highest number by Tulane in more than 16 seasons.

The pressure from Tulane's line proved to be the difference. SMU coach Phil Bennett said there was no hiding that fact.

"Physically, up front, we got whipped," Bennett said. "They won the line of scrimmage, and everybody at the game could see that. I thought Tulane's defense played well. (Tulane defensive coordinator) Eric (Schumann) did a good job."

Schumann, SMU's defensive coordinator when Tulane beat the Mustangs on their home field in 2000, was satisfied with the way the defense played. Coming back to Dallas and leaving with a victory was especially pleasing.

"I thought we played well today," said Schumann, who was unable to suppress a smile.

SMU cornerback Rolando Humphrey tries to knock down a pass intended for Tulane wide receiver Damarcus Davis. Davis had five catches for 58 yards and a touchdown.

On the Mustangs' first series, the Green Wave was caught off guard by an end-around by Reynaldo Pellerin that gained 34 yards.

SMU was able to break a couple of other big running plays, but not enough to offset the pass rush. After Pellerin's run, the Mustangs netted one yard the rest of the half.

Last week, the Wave linebackers led the team in tackles. Against SMU the defensive line, led by end Craig Morris, made a contribution. Morris had five tackles, 4 for lost yardage.

The Wave's offense got off to a slow start, but running back Matt Forte's second 12-yard touchdown run just before halftime gave Tulane a 14-0 lead. It was a huge boost because the Wave had blown two earlier scoring chances. Place-kicker Jacob Hartgroves' 26-yard field goal attempt on Tulane's third possession hit the left upright.

Late in the second quarter, after Tulane reached SMU's 10, Ricard's pass into the end zone was intercepted.

SMU's Chris McMurtray's 24-yard field goal late in the third quarter cut into Tulane's lead, but the Wave countered with a 24-yard field goal by Hartgroves, and capitalized on a fumble by SMU on the ensuing kickoff. On the next play, Ricard hit Damarcus Davis with a 16-yard touchdown pass.

SMU's only touchdown came on an 88-yard kickoff return by Jessie Henderson early in the fourth quarter.

"Obviously I had some emotions before the game," Scelfo said. "You don't forget people when they reach out to you in need. I feel bad for the way the game turned out for everybody associated with SMU, but for three hours we knew it was going to be a slugfest."

Tulane's Lucas leaves game with injury

By Benjamin Hochman
Staff writer

DALLAS — Tulane safety and punt returner Sean Lucas bruised his left quadriceps in the third quarter Saturday, which forced the senior out of the lineup for most of the second half.

"I don't want to speculate, but hopefully I'll be ready for next Saturday," said Lucas, who was on crutches after the Green Wave's 31-10 victory at Southern Methodist.

Before the injury with 12:08 left in the third, Lucas was a keyondefense, tallying two tackles and a pass breakup. And he returned three punts for a 24.6-yard average.

Onhis firstreturn, Lucas caught a wind-aided punt while running backward, then eluded a defender to turn a probable no gain into a 16-yard return.

On a second-quarter return, Lucas sped down the left sideline and, just as it seemedhe could only go out of bounds, two Tulane players made simultaneous blocks to open up a lane. Lucas darted for 47 yardsbefore Johnnie Fitzgerald pulled him down at the SMU 24.

"It all happened so fast," Lucas said of the longest punt return of his career. "I actually should have been in the end zone."

STILL NO SITE: Tulane athletic director Rick Dickson said "it's not necessarily the case" that Tulane will play its Oct. 14 game against UTEP in Mobile, Ala.

"We've had discussions - that's all there's been," Dickson said. "We haven't ruled out anything."

The city of Mobile has offered Ladd-Peebles Stadium to the Green Wave for any ofits home games this season. Earlier in the month, Dickson said Tulane would play one of its six home games in Mobile. But Dickson won't decide until early next week where thegame against UTEP will be. Dickson was hoping to have a decision this past week, but logistical issues because of Hurricane Rita put planning on hold.

Dickson said he would still consider Shreveport's Independence Stadium, where Tulane played its opener against Mississippi State. Tulane will play its Oct. 1 game against Southeastern Louisiana in Baton Rouge and the Oct. 8 game against Houston in Lafayette.

TIME ON TULANE'S SIDE: For the second straight Saturday, Tulane had possession of the football for a significant amount of time. Against SMU, Tulane had the ball for 40:36 to SMU's 19:24. And in last week's lost to Mississippi State, the Wave had the ball for 36:06 to the Bulldogs' 23:54.

WORTH A CHEER: The Lake Highlands High varsity cheerleaders were Tulane's cheerleaders Saturday, wearing green T-shirts and white skirts. The group, which volunteered to cheer for the game, had raised about $10,000 to attend an out-of-state competition, but decided to donate the money to the Red Cross instead.

EXTRA POINTS: Tulane had 24 first downs - SMU had 10, includingthree in the first half. ... Tulane was 2-for-2 on fourth downs against the Mustangs. The Wave is5-for-5 this season; twice in the Mississippi State game the Wave faked a punt. ... Tulane safety Tra Boger led the team with seven tackles. ... For the second straight week, Tulane shut out its opponent in the first half. ... Tulane kicker Jacob Hartgroves missed his first field-goal attempt of the season, hitting the left upright on a 26-yarder. The freshman made his second attempt, a 24-yarder in the fourth quarter. ... Tulane left guard Chris McGee started after resting his left ankle during the week. McGee rolled the ankle on the first play against SMU ñ and was helped off the field - but returned during the same series and played the rest of the game.

INSIDE THE GAME

SAINTS at VIKINGS

Kickoff: Noon at the Hubert H. Humphrey Metrodome, Minneapolis.
Coaches: Saints Jim Haslett (43-39 sixth season, all with Saints); Vikings coach Mike Tice (23-27, fourth season, all with Vikings)
TV: Fox
Radio: 870-AM, 101.9-FM

KEEP AN EYE ON DAUNTE CULPEPPER: There might not be a more compelling player in the league right now than the Vikings' dynamic quarterback. A three-time Pro Bowler and one of the league's true superstars, Culpepper is off to a miserable start with no touchdown passes, eight interceptions and two lost fumbles. The 28-year-old is obviously struggling to adjust this year without his former superstar receiver Randy Moss (traded to Oakland), without former offensive coordinator Scott Linehan (took a job with the Dolphins) and without Pro Bowl center Matt Birk (season-ending hip surgery). But the Saints had better not underestimate Culpepper, who threw 39 touchdown passes last year. And they probably won't — he threw for five of those touchdown passes and 425 yards against the Saints in the Superdome last year.

JOE HORN: Rarely is the Saints' magnetic receiver lacking for attention. But with so much swirling around the team this year, his outstanding efforts both on and off the field probably have not received their due recognition. Horn has 14 receptions for 209 yards and a touchdown in two games, and he has been setting the emotional tone on offense, clearly driven and inspired by the plight of Hurricane Katrina's victims. If there was any doubt that the 33-year-old Horn was still a difference-maker worthy of the six-year contract extension he signed in May, he is quickly putting them to rest.

GAMEPLAN

Get used to reading this here every week: The Saints will try to establish the run. It's one of the basic tenets of football, but it has become this particular team's mantra. After middling results in the first two weeks, the Saints and tailback Deuce McAllister are overdue for a breakout rushing performance. And there's no time better than this week, against a struggling Vikings team that ranks last in the NFL against the run. The Saints might be without offensive guard Jermane Mayberry, who injured his shoulder in practice, but they have experienced backup guards who can fill in (Montrae Holland and Jamar Nesbit). Expect the Saints to stubbornly stick to their rushing attack, even if Minnesota commits to stopping it. And expect quarterback Aaron Brooks to punish the Vikings on occasion with the play-action pass. The key will be to avoid getting down early in the game, like the Saints did last week against New York, in which they turned over the ball six times and trailed by 14 points for most of the night.

KEY MATCHUP

VIKINGS RECEIVERS vs. SAINTS CORNERS: Each unit is down a man — the Vikings without injured starter Nate Burleson and the Saints without injured starter Fakhir Brown. Brown's replacement, Jason Craft, has been inconsistent and gave too much of a cushion to Giants receiver Plaxico Burress last week. He needs to be better against a quarterback like Culpepper, who isn't afraid to take shots down the field. The Saints' other corner, Mike McKenzie, has been solid so far this year and is very familiar with Culpepper and the Vikings, having spent 5 1/2 seasons with division-rival Green Bay. The Saints should be able to keep the Vikings' spotty running game in check. They need to put the clamps on receivers Travis Taylor and Marcus Robinson, as well.

BY THE NUMBERS: This will be the fifth meeting between the Saints and Vikings in the last six years. Minnesota has a 3-1 edge during that stretch, including a 34-16 playoff victory in January 2001. ... The Vikings gained 605 yards of total offense against the Saints last year, the most ever allowed by the Saints in a single game. ... The Vikings have turned over the ball 12 times in 24 offensive possessions this year. ... Under Coach Jim Haslett, the Saints are still 25-16 on the road in the past five seasons. Last week's loss to the New York Giants officially counted against their home record. ... Horn needs two more touchdown receptions to match Eric Martin with the team record of 48.

FROM THE COACH'S MOUTH: "(The team's focus) is good. You always worry about it because of everything going around you, but for the most part they've been good. They were good in practice again (this week) just like last week. We got to take it to the field better on Sunday than we did last week." — Haslett.

Cone of uncertainty in NFL stretches leaguewide

Brian Allee-Walsh
NFL columnist

The recent month of closely monitoring the development, path and widespread devastation of hurricanes Katrina and Rita has increased my meteorological knowledge exponentially.

For instance, I have come to appreciate the significance of upper level highs, lows, stationary fronts, ridges and computer models.

I have a better respect for the wet and destructive northeast side of a hurricane, storm surge, tidal waves, breached levees, Cat 3 and 4 storms, mandatory evacuations and shelters of last resort.

The words homeless and displaced have spawned new working relationships with former strangers from FEMA and the Red Cross.

However, after spending 18 grueling hours in a car Thursday, evacuating from Houston to Lafayette to supposedly escape Rita, a drive that typically takes 3 hours, I still don't understand the meaning of contra flow. Probably because I've never seen it successfully implemented in New Orleans or Houston.

But my favorite new piece of knowledge is the cone of uncertainty, that area of landfall where a hurricane potentially will strike. Meteorologists can even determine the percentages of probability where it will strike within the cone.

Fascinating.

So how does the cone of uncertainty apply to the 2005 NFL season?

After two weeks, the cone appears to stretch leaguewide, meaning 12 to 15 teams conceivably could reach Super Bowl XL in Detroit.

Three unlikely suspects - Tampa Bay, the New York Giants and Washington — are the only undefeated teams in the NFC. Don't look for any of them to emerge as champion, although the Buccaneers have played well.

The AFC appears to be going according to form, with Indianapolis, Kansas City, Cincinnati and Pittsburgh all at 2-0. The two-time defending Super Bowl champion New England Patriots are lurking at 1-1.

The cone of uncertainty applies elsewhere around the NFL. Consider:

▶ The upside-down NFC North is up for grabs, based on the early uninspired play of preseason favorites Green Bay (0-2) and Minnesota (0-2). Brett Favre seems to have lost his edge and the Vikings are downright awful. Yet Detroit (1-1) and Chicago (1-1) don't appear to have the staying power needed to win the division, suggesting a 7-9 team might win it all.

▶ The biggest loss for quarterback Daunte Culpepper may not be wide receiver Randy Moss (traded to Oakland) but offensive coordinator/quarterbacks coach Scott Linehan (now with the Miami Dolphins).

▶ Suddenly, the Baltimore Ravens (0-2) are lacking the swagger without a healthy and productive quarterback. The Bengals appear to be the real deal although Pittsburgh remains the team to beat in the AFC North, and the San Diego Chargers join Minnesota, Baltimore and Green Bay as the league's biggest early-season busts.

BRIAN ALLEE-WALSH'S NFL PICKS

WEEK THREE

(home team in caps)

VIKINGS (0-2) over Saints (1-1): The Saints always seem to bring out the best in quarterback Daunte Culpepper.

Carolina (1-1) over MIAMI (1-1): Fresh off a victory against New England and with one eye on Hurricane Rita in Cajun country, Panthers quarterback Jake Delhomme leads his team into a potential ambush against the Fish.

Atlanta (1-1) over BUFFALO (1-1): Falcons can ill-afford to lose their second consecutive road game.

Cincinnati (2-0) over CHICAGO (1-1): Marvin Lewis' team keeps pace with Pittsburgh in the AFC North.

INDIANAPOLIS (2-0) over Cleveland (1-1): Back to reality for rookie coach Romeo Crennel, who picked up his first NFL victory last week at Green Bay.

ST. LOUIS (1-1) over Tennessee (1-1): Which Titans' team will show up this week?

NEW YORK JETS (1-1) over Jacksonville (1-1): Both teams need this game; give home edge to J-E-T-S.

Tampa Bay (2-0) over GREEN BAY (0-2): Undefeated Buccaneers keep winless Packers at bay.

PHILADELPHIA (1-1) over Oakland (0-2): After their season-opening hiccup against Atlanta, the Eagles win second straight as Terrell Owens upstages Randy Moss.

SEATTLE (1-1) over Arizona (0-2): I might take the Cardinals at home against the erratic Seahawks but not in the Pacific Northwest.

Dallas (1-1) over SAN FRANCISCO (1-1): Dallas coach Bill Parcells said Monday night's 14-13 loss to Washington, a game in which the Cowboys blew a 13-0 lead in the fourth quarter, could have a lingering effect. Time will tell.

PITTSBURGH (2-0) over New England (1-1): After losing at Carolina, the Patriots suddenly find themselves in a must-win situation in Week 3. The Patriots at 1-2? Who'd have thunk it?

SAN DIEGO (0-2) over New York Giants (2-0): Chargers finally get into the win column and drop the over-achieving Giants into the loss column.

Kansas City (2-0) over DENVER (1-1) (Monday night): It's hard to pick against the Broncos at home in prime time but I will.

Byes: Baltimore, Detroit, Houston, Washington.

Last week, straight up: 8-8. Season, 19-13.

Haslett's job made tougher by Katrina

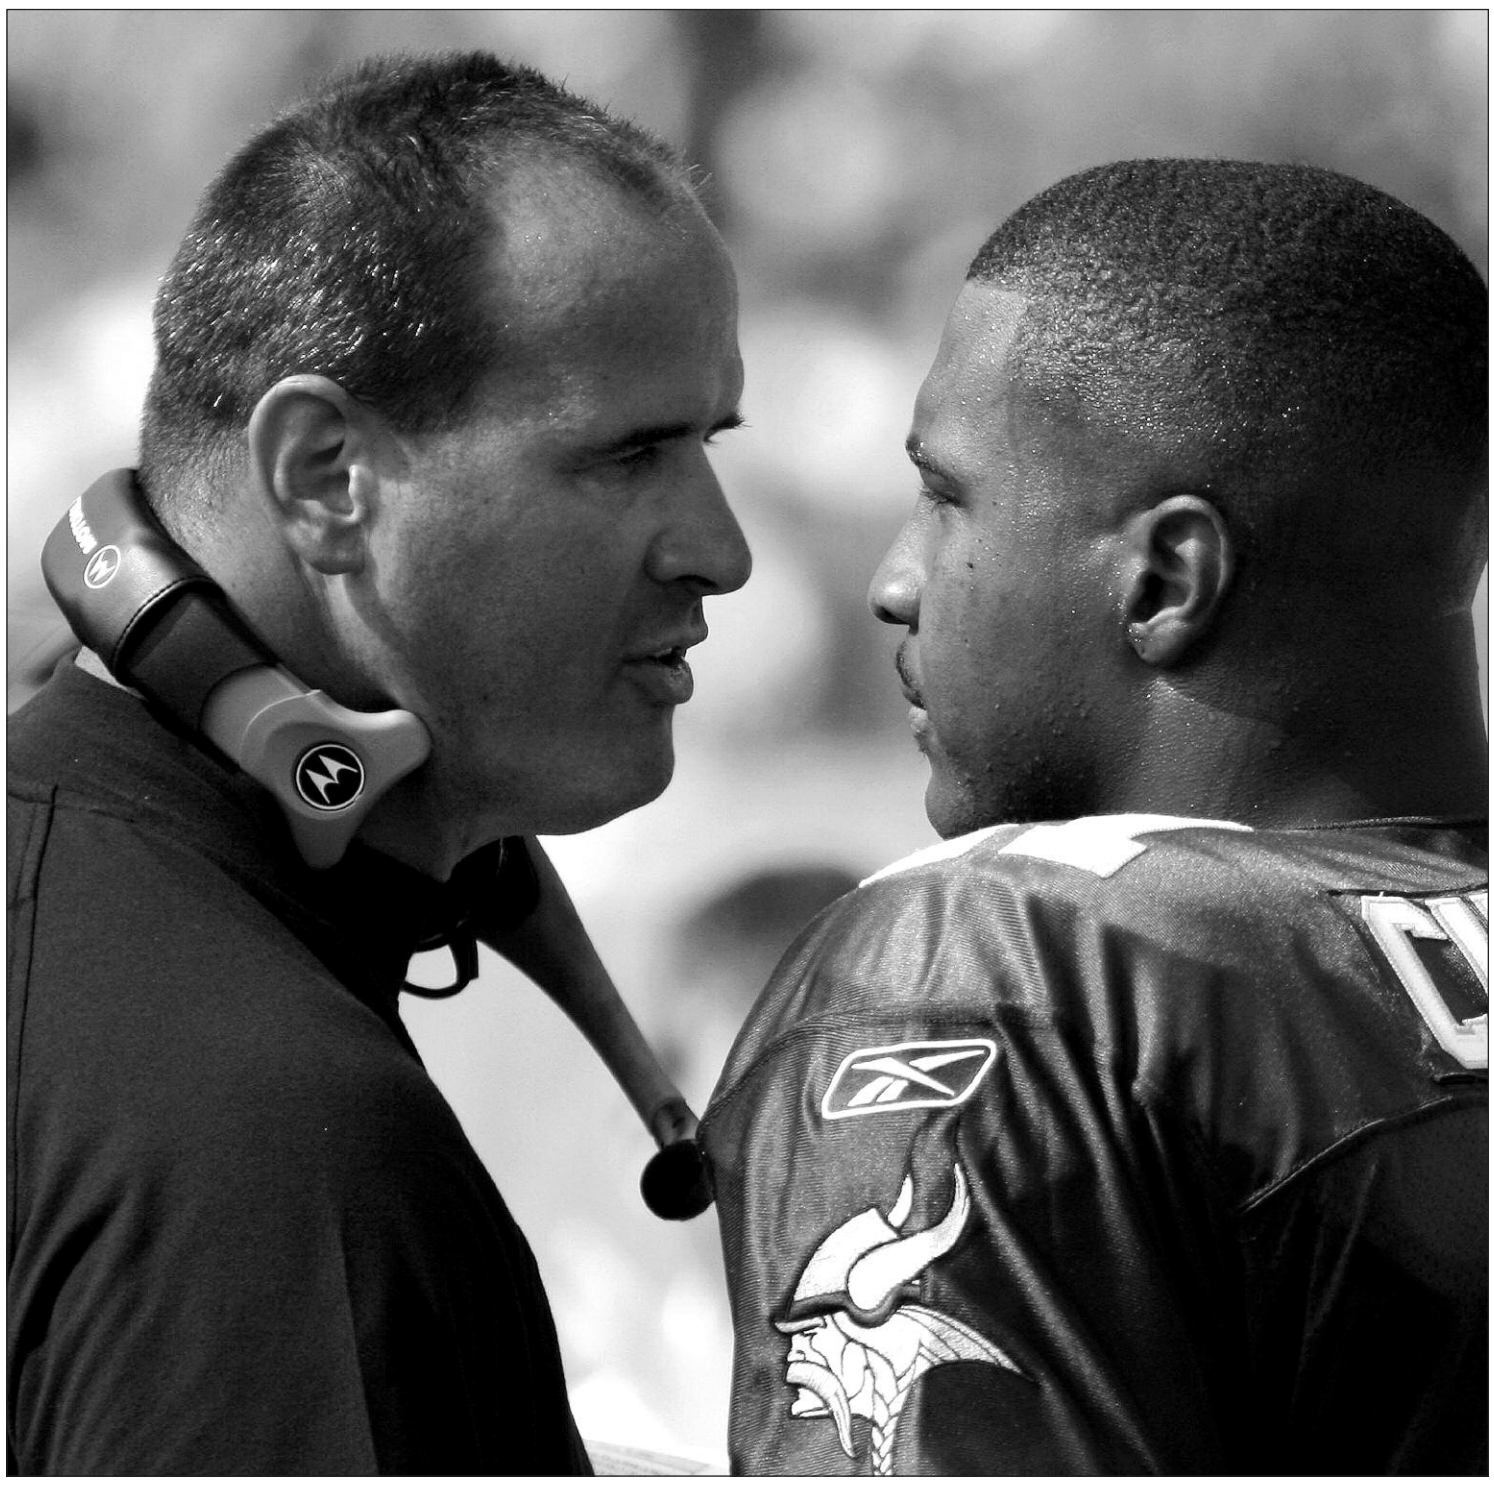
the guys. After the (loss to the New York Giants), he was obviously upset. But I guarantee he's going to be positive all week. He's going to keep this group of men together and believing in one another.

"I think all it does when you see a coach who's handled all of the situations as well as he has, it just endears you to him more as a player."

At times during this tumultuous month, Haslett has worn his emotions on his sleeve.

He became choked up on the eve of the Saints' opener while reading a heartfelt letter from New Orleans mayor Ray Nagin. He became a little salty while griping about the league's decision to play the team's first home game in New York.

But players said those type of reactions make them relate to their coach even more — that he's not like some other distant, "stoic" coaches.



Haslett played in the NFL for nine years, a fiery linebacker who spent most of his career with the Buffalo Bills. Many players said they think that makes a difference, that he knows what they are going through.

"There's a difference between sympathy and empathy," Conwell said. "He can empathize with the guys. And I think he understands what guys are going through. But sometimes I wonder if we know. We can't empathize with him. I don't think sometimes that we understand all that he has to do and go through."

Players said Haslett has shown a good sense for when to push them and when to back off. They never practiced in full pads this week, trying to recover between the Monday night game in New York and a game at Minnesota six days later.

They were especially proud of the way Haslett stuck up for them when they campaigned to play as many games as possible in San Antonio this season, so they could stay closer to their families and temporary homes or apartments.

"He supported us and we stuck together," safety Steve Gleason said. "That's what we're going to need this season. We have some obstacles in store for us, and you need a guy who's going to do that for you."

AP PHOTO

Minnesota coach Mike Tice, left, is on the hot seat with the Vikings off to an 0-2 start. That start is partly because quarterback Daunte Culpepper hasn't thrown a touchdown pass, and has eight interceptions.

Even before Hurricane Katrina blew the Saints into this predicament, the 49-year-old Haslett tried to create an aura of "we're all in this together" with his players.

"I think that's the way you have to be in this league, based on the way the NFL is structured now," Haslett said. "If the coaches and the players aren't close and they don't have a good relationship, I think you have problems. In this group, I think we have a good relationship."

That bond has become stronger now that they're all spending so much more time together on and off the field.

Dozens of players are living in the same apartment complexes, car-pooling together, hanging out together at night. Many of them are away from their families, curious about their homes.

Gleason said players come to Haslett every day with non-football questions, like: "Hey, when are we going to get our cars back?" or "Hey, can I stay in the hotel for an extra week?" or "Hey, do we have to leave early because of Hurricane Rita?"

"Other people are around," Gleason said, "but there's just so much chaos, so he's the one we go to."

The team bounced around at several makeshift facilities in San Antonio before finally getting everything set up inside the Alamodome this past week.

Haslett has had his own personal distractions, too, finding a condo to rent in San Antonio. His family joined him at first, and his three children planned to enroll in local schools. But now they will return to Destrehan in October.

"I've got to leave a little earlier, I drive a little further," Haslett said. "I'm doing a lot of things different other than football, but it's OK. Sometimes you have to adapt, coaches also."

Haslett said he doesn't have any superstitions, like some coaches do. And he said he has been able to adapt without some of the computer equipment and facilities he had back in Metairie. Coaches are doing a lot more work by hand.

But deep down, it must be driving him nuts. There's nothing NFL coaches enjoy more than structure and routine. They covet stability.

Nevertheless, Haslett just keeps on manning this ship.

It's especially impressive, Conwell said, for a coach like Haslett who is so "hands on."

"He's involved. He's not just a figurehead," Conwell said. "He's involved in every phase of this team - offense, defense, special teams, our strength and conditioning, our weigh-ins. He's involved in everything. You see him around everything, he's talking about everything.

"I don't know how the guy sleeps, if he does sleep."

SHELTER SHIP

New Orleans cops and rescue workers take refuge on a Carnival cruise liner

By Maria Montoya
Staff Writer

STAFF PHOTOS BY JENNIFER ZDON

More than 600 New Orleans police officers, rescue workers and their families have moved aboard the Carnival cruise line's Ecstasy, docked at the port of New Orleans. Herman Cade, a New Orleans policeman, folds his clothes in the laundry aboard the cruise ship Ecstasy, TOP, while his stepdaughter Jannine Coxen, right, waits for the rest of the laundry to dry.

The passengers wear camouflage pants, carry rifles and glower at security guards upon entering the belly of Carnival's Ecstasy. There are no zealous photographers or smiling cruise ship directors awaiting their entry.

These cruisers have no itinerary.

Many of the guests head for the buffets, bunks and baths that await them. There are no excursions in the works, or cute drink umbrellas to collect. The ship never leaves. But for the more than 600 police officers, rescue workers and their families on board, the Ecstasy isn't a voyage to nowhere. For now, it's home.

"I never thought I'd be sailing like this," said Det. Herman Cade, a 28-year veteran of the New Orleans Police Department's third district. "I was planning to go on a cruise in December, but not now."

Cade and his wife, Virgie Coxen, his stepdaughter, Jeannine Coxen and mother-in-law, Josephine Glass, crowd into their dorm-size digs. The four adults and all of their belongings are comfortably squeezed into every inch of space the guest room offers them.

The small room suits the family just fine.

Two weeks ago, the three women were in a Houston hotel room contemplating their uncertain futures. The family's Laurel Street home Uptown suffered only roof damage, but Cade, who was still in New Orleans sleeping in a commandeered car, had warned the women the city was unsafe and otherwise unlivable.

"This ship is our home away from home," Cade said. "A place where we know we have a next meal and safe place to sleep each night."

The owners of the "fun ships" don't mind providing shelter, at least temporarily. Miami-based Carnival Corp. worked out an unprecedented $192 million deal with the Federal Emergency Management Agency to house Katrina relief workers and evacuees aboard three of their ships (Ecstasy, Sensation and Holiday) for the next six months in New Orleans and Mobile, Ala.

FEMA officials initially planned to place just evacuees on the three ships. For several days, upon returning from their last trip to Cozumel, Calica and Yucatan, the staff of the Ecstasy waited to greet some of those who escaped to Houston.

Not one evacuee boarded.

In Houston, those who were offered housing included evacuees 60 years or older, single parents and couples with children younger than 12. According to James McIntyre, a spokesman for FEMA, the evacuees expressed concerns about the ship's location in Galveston and being separated from the other families. Some were even frightened by the idea of being housed on water.

"Under these circumstances, many of the victims didn't feel comfortable with the idea of leaving the security of the Astrodome to come onto a ship they had questions about," McIntyre said. "We weren't going to force them to do anything they didn't want to do. The rescue workers, on the other hand, were open to such an idea and we knew without a doubt they and their families could fill up the ships."

On Sept. 11, when the Ecstasy arrived in New Orleans, word of the ship's arrival had officers excited and awaiting the drop of the gangplank. The Carnival staff was slightly overwhelmed with the greeting that awaited them at the Julia Street cruise terminal.

"You could tell they were all tired, they had serious looks on their faces and uniforms that looked tattered and in some cases destroyed," said Miles Willis, hotel director for the Ec-

MY STORM STORY

Hurricane Katrina: In their own words

"We're with the NOPD Special Operations Division, so on Sunday we staged out of the downtown Hampton Inn. We had rooms there, and weathered the storm there. The windows blew, and we could feel the whole building swaying.

"On Monday about 1 p.m. we heard the 9th Ward was flooding. We thought the rest of the city was OK. We had two Zodiacs and two flatboats, so we headed out right after the storm. We staged from the St. Claude bridge, and just started rescuing people. We went till 1 a.m. and only quit then because we ran out of fuel. We probably saved 600 people that day. A picture of another officer and me in wet suits rescuing an old man from his doorway ran on the front page the day after the storm.

"At dawn on Tuesday we refueled and went right back out. There was this one woman who weighed maybe 200 pounds and was paralyzed from the waist down. She had floated on her air mattress into the attic. We used a chain saw and cut a hole in the roof, but still couldn't get her out, so we went across the street and found an ironing board and put her on that.

"By Wednesday other people had started helping, and Thursday was the first day that was totally lawless. So we went from rescue work to security mode. You know, there are 5 percent sociopaths and predators in any society, and when the social structure is gone, that 5 percent runs amok. That's what we were dealing with.

"Our biggest problem was lack of fuel. The first few days we were pretty much on our own. Once the radio batteries died, we had no communication. The Hampton Inn had about 18 inches of water in it, so we went across the river, which we heard hadn't flooded. We found Habans Elementary School, and that became our center of operations. It still is. Now we have a makeshift shower with a hose and a washing machine outdoors, where we have a schedule for who can wash clothes when.

"By the third day, the downtown casino had become the unofficial 'official' NOPD headquarters, so we'd go there every morning to get orders. The main problem was lack of fuel to keep our cars and boats going. We siphoned what we could. We made a list of what we wished for the most, and it was fuel, then water, then food, then communication. We valued fuel over food and water at that point.

"We're still out here patrolling, and Habans is still home to us."

Going Green to beat the blues

Even in defeat, Tulane football provides a tonic for displaced alums

ANGUS LIND

SHREVEPORT — It was another historic moment in a storied football program that dates back to 1893.

But this Tulane University milestone was not about having a perfect 13-0 season. Or upsetting heavily-favored LSU in Baton Rouge. Or going to the Rose Bowl or the Sugar Bowl. Or saving the athletic program. Or watching the heroics of any Green Wave gridiron star, from Bullet Joe Bullard, Bobby Duhon and Rick Kingrea to Rodney Holman, Shaun King and J.P. Losman.

When Tulane beat LSU 14-0 in 1973 to end a string of 24 years without a victory over the Tigers, a Tulane law student named Jim Minge wrote a song about it called "The Ballad of the Green Wave." It began: "It happened on December first, 1-9-7-3, the dreaded Bayou Bengals headed down to New Or-leenz. The Tigers they were hungry, and as big as they were mean, but what they hadn't counted on was mighty men in green!"

This historic moment here at Independence Stadium happened on Saturday, Sept. 17, 2-0-0-5, and was not about big and mean Tigers or mighty men in green.

THE STATE OF THE ARTS

Dennis Assaf, executive and artistic director of the Jefferson Performing Arts Society, stands inside the Westwego Performing Arts Theatre, which suffered heavy damage from Hurricane Katrina. Assaf is confident, however, that he can stage a scaled-down version of JPAS' ambitious season.

THE SHOW WILL GO ON

Area theaters face an uncertain future in the short run, but nearly all say they'll be back to stay

THEATER

By David Cuthbert
Theater writer

New Orleans' theatrical and cultural community is scattered like confetti across America, but many plan to return as soon as possible, brightly colored bits of talent coalescing into paper lanterns to light up the city's stages.

"As soon as we have electricity and an audience, we'll be back in business," said Sonny Borey, the artistic/executive director of Le Petit Theatre du Vieux Carre. "We suffered some roof damage, but everything else seems OK."

Derek Franklin, the theater's managing director, said, "Le Petit is the oldest continuously operating community theater in the United States and we are committed to having at least a partial season, which will be our 90th."

Borey, who was in Galveston, Texas, on Tuesday and preparing to evacuate again as Hurricane Rita took aim, still hopes to open with "Cabaret," which was in rehearsal when Katrina struck.

On the banks of the Mississippi River, Southern Rep, that adventurous theater in Canal Place, is raising money to secure its future.

Southern Rep is on the third floor of Canal Place, where a fire broke out on Sept. 3, damaging the first floor of Saks 5th Avenue.

"The flames didn't reach us," said artistic director Ryan Rilette, "but we really don't know yet what damage we suffered from smoke or looters."

Rilette said numerous theater companies around the country have started fund-raisers, among them the Guthrie Theatre in Minneapolis, one of the nation's major regional stages, as well as the New Theater in Coral Gables and two theaters in Atlanta: the Actors' Express and the Push-Push Theater.

Some are doing readings of "Callie's Tally," the play by Betsy Howie based on her best-selling book on the (literal) price of motherhood that was going to be Southern Rep's first show of the season.

Rilette is in New York "trying to raise money in as many ways possible for the theater. That's my job right now," he said. "We've already hosted a fund-raiser at a club here called Opaline."

The Jefferson Performing Arts Society season will go on, but will have to be scaled down, said Dennis Assaf, executive and artistic director.

JPAS had announced an ambitious season of more than a dozen productions to be held at East Jefferson High School's auditorium and at the 1-year-old Westwego Performing Arts Theatre and the adjacent Teatro Wego!

The Westwego theater suffered major damage. Interim repairs have already been made at the East Bank auditorium, however, and Assaf hopes it may be useable this season.

"We can't do anything in Westwego," he said, "as the north and east walls were skinned to the point where you can see the white insulation and metal studs. There are also two large holes over the fly loft. Trash and debris are prevalent as well.

Assaf, who suffered serious flooding in his home due to the hurricane, said that the plan for now is to produce shows at the Treato Wego!, which is next to the Westwego theater and suffered little damage.

"In this space we had originally planned two productions," Assaf said in an e-mail to supporters. "I believe there may be a way to move some of the six other productions originally scheduled in the Westwego theater to Teatro Wego!,"

He said he hopes to have that space up and running in a few months and to stage "Cabaret," "Amadeus," "Urinetown" and other musicals there.

"Obviously all can't be done, but some can," he said. "It will depend on which cast members and crew are available."

It is too early to make a call on other bigger productions that were planned, such as "Fiddler on the Roof" or "Cats," he said. "Depending on Westwego issues, the level of interest, support and availability of cast and crews, we'll decide on which shows if any to do this season in EJ."

"My greatest fear is that our $20 million in funding for our new arts center will be pulled and spent elsewhere," he said.

But, Assaf said, he knows the theater community – as a whole –will be revived.

"We need the awesome resources of the arts now more than ever … to create havens for hope and renewal," he said. "We as artists should find a way to put something on the stage or on exhibit that give us release from our pain and inspiration to continue."

THE SHOW MUST GO ON ... EVENTUALLY A post-Katrina status report on local theaters

LE PETIT THEATRE
The French Quarter theater had some roof damage, but will reopen later this year or early next, in time to salvage at least a partial season.

SOUTHERN REP
Theater space affected by fire and looting at Canal Place, but the extent of the damage is unknown.

LE CHAT NOIR
The St. Charles Avenue theater received no major damage from the storm, owner-proprietor Barbara Motley said. "I have released all contracts with acts that were scheduled to play Le Chat through the end of the year," Motley said. "I want Le Chat open, but uncommitted, so local groups could use us as a stage for fund-raisers."

JPAS
Jefferson Performing Arts Society's theater in Westwego sustained serious damage, but repairs are under way at the East Bank theater in Metairie. A scaled-down season is being planned at the Treato Wego!, next to the Westwego theater. Executive director Dennis Assaf is seeking donations and volunteers. Donations can be sent to 177 A Sala Ave., Westwego, LA 70094. To volunteer, e-mail dennisassaf@jpas.org.

RIVERTOWN REPERTORY THEATRE
Kenner building sustained minimal water damage, said producer Charlie Ward. The tentative plan for the season is to open in December with "Disney's Cinderella," a family musical, followed by "Nunsense II" in January, "Disney's Jungle Book," and finish the season with Rodgers & Hammerstein's "South Pacific," which was to be the season-opener.

RUNNING WITH SCISSORS
The madcap theater company has gone off in all directions, said co-founder Richard Read, adding "but I'm going back to New Orleans the second they let us in."

DRAMA!
"Our future is uncertain," said Charlie Hayes, co-founder with Blake Balu of the gay and lesbian theater group that built the Marigny Theater space in the back of the Cowpoke's Bar. The space was used by many theater organizations, both straight and gay. "We have heard that Cowpoke's was looted," Hayes said. "And we had leaks in the roof before the storm. There are also rumors that the complex is going to be sold. But we are all committed to returning to the work we started." Two projects are tentatively lined up: Richard Greenberg's "The Violet Hour" in December and Tennessee Williams' 'A Lovely Sunday for Creve Coeur" in March.

A MATTER OF TIME

Robert Lyall, artistic director of the New Orleans Opera, holds out hope that the season can be saved

OPERA

By Doug MacCash
Art writer

It's becoming a New Orleans rite of passage, the post-Katrina return to the places we love. So it was last weekend for Robert Lyall, artistic director for the New Orleans Opera Association, as he entered the Mahalia Jackson Theater of Performing Arts in Armstrong Park.

At first the homecoming seemed comparatively bright, but like so many tragic plots played out on that well-worn stage, things took a darker turn before the final curtain.

As the Manhattan-born Lyall, 55, stepped from the Entergy SUV that had brought him through the highway checkpoints to New Orleans and past the paratroopers guarding the gates to Armstrong Park, his crisp, white, long-sleeved shirt was immediately plastered to his skin by the September heat and humidity. The patches of his face not covered with a carefully shaped silver beard and moustache were beaded with sweat.

He was pleased to discover that the glass doors to the building were unlocked. Once a flashlight was found, he eagerly began inspecting the interior. The upholstered seats in the hall were a bit moldy in spots.

"But they fight that every summer anyway," said Lyall, who has been general and artistic director for seven years.

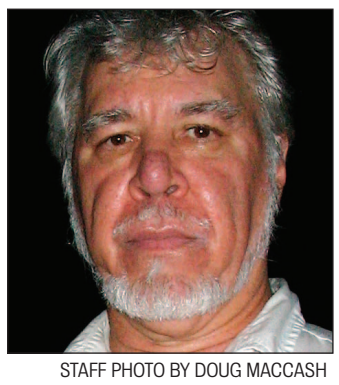
And there were the shallowest puddles of water on the stage: rain that had found its way through the skylights high above, he concluded.

"This is wonderful, this is fantastic," he said. "There are a few damp spots here and there, but it's largely complete. Somebody actually said they thought we'd be on stage by November. That was optimistic, but there doesn't seem to be any structural damage. The stage, seats and the loft appear undamaged.

"This hall is unique, since it was one of the first to be hydraulically powered in the country, back in the 1970s. I'm sure that machinery is going to require maintenance, but the loading area is intact. ... The tricky area is downstairs. It's the orchestra pit that would have collected water."

In the hall leading to the basement steps, Lyall tugged on the doorknob to an unmarked room, joking that as long as his dressing room was still locked, everything would be all right.

His mood plunged as the flashlight beam ping-ponged around the cement stairs leading down to the pit. There on the first landing was the water he'd feared, filling the basement.



"It's got to be 10 feet, maybe 12," he said. "That's the orchestra pit, the hydraulics for the pit, some stage machinery ... God, I hope they didn't have the piano and the percussion instruments in there."

Lyall, who has a reputation for unflagging optimism, seemed to bounce back from the watery revelation as soon as he reached the sunlight outside of the building.

"I was feeling elated until I saw the basement, but the fact that the theater has not been ripped apart by wind and water is the important thing.

"In not too long, art will be the most important expression of recovery. At the right time, a wonderful event like a symphony or an opera can be the most powerful statement that we've moved beyond the need for food and shelter. If it's too early we won't be in the right frame of mind to appreciate art — and we never want to lose that."

Anticipating the right time to reintroduce New Orleans, which has hosted opera performances since 1796, is one of Lyall's principal challenges, as is the selection of the remaining repertoire.

Robert Lyall, artistic director of the New Orleans Opera Association, recently surveyed the damage at the Mahalia Jackson Theater of the Performing Arts.

The NOOA canceled Verdi's "Otello," which was to be the first performance of the 2005-2006 season.

"And oh, what irony, 'Otello' begins with a hurricane," Lyall said.

The comedic nature of the second offering, Mozart's "The Marriage of Figaro," in November might have been a good tonic for storm-torn New Orleans, but it too has been canceled.

The NOOA expects to have its offices open by mid-October, and will then notify subscribers and single-ticket holders of their options for the remainder of the season.

Lyall muses that the opera association's grand gala, planned for Feb. 3 and 4, may be the perfect time to reintroduce opera to the culturally starved post-Katrina city, with the customary blow-out blend of full orchestra, chorus and string of soloists.

"It likely will be one of the first major fine arts events," he said.

After that, on March 23 and 25, Lyall had planned to present the powerful yet dour opera 'Jenufa' by Czech composer Leos Janacek, but a plot detail made performing the piece impossible.

"That is one in which an infant drowns ... which is singularly inappropriate. So I've substituted 'The Barber of Seville.' "

The season is expected to end with "Madame Butterfly," Puccini's classic tragedy, which Lyall says he may modify. "Who knows, maybe I'll give it a happy ending," he said.

Besides the condition of the theater, Lyall was concerned with the fate of the opera's scenic studio near Airline Drive in Metairie, where backdrops, props and costumes are created and stored. The scenic studio was of particular importance, since the rental of props to other opera companies provides the New Orleans Opera Association with $200,000 in yearly income.

"Thankfully, there was no major flooding, just 6 inches of water on the floor. The productions were largely undamaged. They'll require some touch-up work, but that's all.... We'll be able to continue there as soon as the city allows trucks through."

Lyall made one other stop in New Orleans, at his Uptown home, where he retrieved his tuxedo, baton and the scores for the production of Puccini's "Turnadot" on Oct. 21 and 22, which he will conduct at the cooler, drier Opera Grand Rapids in Michigan, where he is also director.

He also has been meeting with opera companies in Jackson, Miss., and other cities to explore the possibilities of putting on productions there.

"They say an army travels on its stomach. I'm not sure what an opera company travels on," Lyall said.

Rebuilding the New Orleans Opera's lost season will be one daunting challenge among many in the rebuilding of New Orleans, but Lyall views it as a duty.

"It's not heroism in the classic sense," he said, "but it's a chance to make a bold statement of our resilience."

Kent Jensen, a cellist, and Babs Mollere, managing director of the Louisiana Philharmonic Orchestra, are among the displaced who have found a temporary home with the Baton Rouge Symphony Orchestra offices at The Shaw Center for the Arts in Baton Rouge. The LPO will play a benefit concert on Oct. 4 in Nashville.

STAYING TUNED

The LPO will play its first benefit concert since the hurricane in Nashville, but New Orleanians — wherever they are — can listen in on the radio

By David Cuthbert, Doug MacCash and Judy Walker
Staff writers

Members of the Louisiana Philharmonic Orchestra will gather in Nashville in October to perform a concert for the first time since the musicians and staff evacuated to cities around the country.

"Thank God for the Internet and telephone conferencing," said Sharon Litwin, senior vice president of the LPO, who is staying in Chicago. "We've set up a temporary office in Baton Rouge, where Babs Mollere, our managing director, and Hugh Long, the president of our board of trustees, who's in Sarasota, Fla., have managed to remain in constant touch."

The LPO will play Oct. 4 with the Nashville Symphony. The concert will be broadcast live on National Public Radio and streamed on the NPR.org Web site.

Net proceeds from the concert will go directly to the LPO.

The event, presented and organized by the Nashville Symphony, will be in the Tennessee Performing Arts Center's Andrew Jackson Hall. LPO principal guest conductor Klauspeter Seibel and music director designate Carlos Miguel Prieto will lead the majority of the 68-member LPO in a program that includes violinist Mark O'Connor.

"Nothing heals the soul more than seeing our colleagues, our friends, and playing music with them again," said Seibel, who recently retired after nine years as music director and will remain principal guest conductor.

Prieto, 39, an accomplished violinist and member of a renowned Mexican family of classical musicians, was named music director in June. He was scheduled to begin his tenure in the fall of 2006.

Prieto is music director of Mexico's oldest orchestra, the Xalapa Symphony Orchestra, associate conductor of the Houston Symphony, and music director of the Huntsville Symphony (Alabama).

The LPO was set to open its concert season on Sept. 15 in New Orleans at the Orpheum Theater, one block off of Canal Street. It remains unclear when the LPO will be able to perform again in New Orleans.

LPO

"I heard this morning there were sump pumps working at the Orpheum," Mollere said Monday. "As of last week, we heard from the manager that the basement was flooded and the entire bottom floor was flooded over the seats up to the edge of the stage."

LPO's goal is to be back in Louisiana by the spring in time to stage much of its 2006 season, including the Branford Marsalis Gala Concert, which was scheduled for March 11 at the Mahalia Jackson Theater for the Performing Arts.

"We are very committed to returning to Louisiana and are 100 percent committed to the 2006-2007 season, where we will introduce our new music director (Prieto)," she said.

The LPO is planning to get in touch with subscribers in the next few weeks when the offices on Baronne Street reopen, and the LPO has had time to determine whether some of the concerts schedule this year can be rescheduled in 2006, Mollere said.

Along with its own concerts, the LPO provides music for the New Orleans Opera Association.

"We have a truly symbiotic relationship with the LPO," said Robert Lyall, artistic director for the NOOA. "We cannot be a great opera company without a great orchestra.

"Needless to say, anything the opera company can do to play a role in revitalizing the philharmonic, we will do," he said. "Their well being is our well being."

Live classical music has been a part of the New Orleans cultural scene since the city's first orchestra made its debut in December 1805. For now, Mollere said, the orchestra is raising money to keep that 200-year tradition alive.

The LPO is the only musician-owned, collaboratively managed orchestra in the United States. The orchestra, which was born 15 years ago out the bankruptcy of the New Orleans Symphony, is raising money for its members through a hurricane relief fund based in Baton Rouge.

"The first donations were from other musicians," Mollere said, from her base at the Baton Rouge Symphony offices in The Shaw Center for the Arts. "There has just been this outpouring of concern, everything from housing to opportunities for playing gigs. They're desperate to think of ways to help us and we're desperate for help."

Cops and rescue workers take refuge on a cruise liner

stasy. "As we went through the registration process, handed them their room keys and ship IDs, you could just see their moods lift."

Some of the men and women, like Cade, had spent days living on the streets. His only "showers" were provided by water bottles poured over himself. His "meals" came from vending machines or shared cans of packaged meat. Upon boarding the ship, many families were reunited with their loved ones for the first time in weeks.

"I don't really know who approached who on making this happen," Willis said. "It's a different sort of operation for us and it's been a good challenge. We, the staff and myself, are incredibly proud of being a part of providing these officers some relief."

• • • • • • • •

On Monday, as Cade and his family sifted through their laundry in the ship's wash facilities, they joked that they have never been so happy to wash their own clothes.

"The ship staff will wash your clothes for you if you place them in a bag and leave them on the door," Virgie said. "But I don't know, I just want to do things, normal every day chores. I don't need someone to wash my clothes for me when they are already doing so much for us."

Cade doesn't like to dwell on the details of what took place in those days following Hurricane Katrina's wake. For 2-1/2 days, he and more than 100 officers and EMS workers sat trapped in their offices just off Bayou St. John. Then, when they finally escaped via boats, Cade and his unit worked night shifts patrolling the Morial Convention Center.

"This ship to these police officers is providing a type of stability that they haven't experienced in weeks," said Don Higgins, a chaplain from Tracy, Calif., who is on the Ecstasy to provide counseling.

Another chaplain, Darrin McGrew of Charlotte, N.C., said finding jambalaya or fresh seafood on the buffet bar provide an important sense of normalcy to the workers.

"What we're hearing from most of them is there was a personal low point that they went through out there, but it never had anything to do with their commitment to their jobs," McGrew said. "In almost every case, they feel helpless in what was happening in their own personal situations. They had spouses and children they'd left, homes they lost and there just wasn't anything they could do to attend to those matters while they were working their jobs."

Such was the case for Dave Hunter, a 26-year veteran of NOPD's Mounted Force, who evacuated to Franklinton Arena in Gonzales with all of the police department's horses. As the storm passed through Louisiana, Hunter worked to calm the animals. Once they were stable, Hunter reported back to the city to perform search and rescue operations.

All the while he worried about his wife, Lori, who is due to have another child in the next week. He knew their Lakeview home was under water and had doubts he would be able to leave the city for the birth of his fourth child.

"I am not going anywhere anytime soon," said Hunter, who used his personal fishing boat to rescue people trapped on rooftops all around the city. "I am here to help."

Ecstasy purser Shae Dillion doesn't get many cash tips these days. She said her reward is hearing stories such as Cade's and Hunter's.

Her duties now include manning the 24-hour information desk where guests can call in with questions, report facilities problems or get help finding a fellow guest. Dillion is one of at least 1,200 Carnival employees working the Ecstasy. The tales they'd heard about the rescue workers inspired the staff to organize a clothing and toiletry drive before they pulled into port.

"I am from Australia where we don't have hurricanes, so this is all new to me," Dillion said. "You hear these men and women talk about what happened and you can't help but want to help them."

Guests aboard the ship are offered three meals and one cleaning service a day. There's no live entertainment, but many families have been coming together in the ship's library and entertainment lounges for informational meetings and church services.

"Over here in the Blue Sapphire we normally hold large, lavish Las Vegas style shows," Willis said. "Now we're working on having movies shown for the families' and on Sundays the devotional hour is held in here. It's different, but we're trying to accommodate to the needs of our new guests."

Though these customers may not tip or know when their voyage may end, Dillion and Willis say they are still treated as guests.

"It may be a voyage to nowhere, but it's actually been a really lovely change of pace for us," Dillion said. "Everyone aboard this ship is just so happy to be here. It's just turned into one big hugfest."

Back in their rooms, laundry folded and put away, Herman, Virgie, Jeannine and Glass rated the amenities on their "cruise."

"Now, the food here is just delicious, can't tell you one thing I don't like about it," Herman said. "I'd love to get me a paper to read about the Saints, but other than that I am just perfect."

"Every morning I wake up and I say to myself, 'Ooh, I am on a cruise I should go lay by the pool, get a massage or get my hair done and have one of those cute mint juleps with an umbrella,' " Virgie said. "Not this trip, though. This here is a place for food, shelter and safety."

Herman shook his head in agreement.

"That's what we need right now," Herman said. "We are so blessed to have this much."

The women eyed one another. What they'd really like is a place to get their hair done. They haven't had the chance since Katrina hit on Aug. 29.

"Blessed we are, yes," Virgie said. "But Shae, it would be nice to have some beauty in here, too."

Headed toward her post, Dillion turned to the family and said, "I'll get right on that."

Greenies cure his blues

LIND, from C-7

This one was all about a reunion — and not the Class of '66 or '74 or '98 reunion. This was the reunion of the Class of Displaced Diehards 2005 — loyal Wave fans traveling from points east, west, north and yes, even south of New Orleans, heading to Captain Shreve's town. They came from everywhere, as much, probably more, to see the friendly faces of friends and pals they tailgate and sit with than to check out Coach Chris Scelfo's 2005 version of the Green Wave.

In the tailgating area, there were hugs and kisses . . . and tears. Which eventually gave way to smiles and laughter. Friends who see each other regularly hadn't viewed the faces so much a part of their lives since Aug. 29 so the emotions were understandable and expected. The conversations were more about the condition of houses and the state of the beloved city and surrounding area they left behind and where folks relocated than anything to do with football.

But the game was a tonic for the soul, a diversion from death and destruction, an exciting elixir that for, at least one evening, provided an escape from reality. Losing to Mississippi State's Bulldogs was a disappointment but hardly ruined the outing. Perspective prevailed over points on the scoreboard. And there were plenty enough big plays to excite Wave fans and no one had forgotten how to do "Hullaballoos!"

Quite possibly one of the loudest cheers of the night occurred before the game. As it came time to enter the stadium, a large group of TU fans who had been tailgating intensely, employed some devious tactics to sneak adult beverages into the stadium. As they turned toward the north end, one spotted an enormous Budweiser banner inside the stadium, pointed to it and let out a whoop. You would have thought someone had just scored.

Well, they did.

A fan walking behind and wearing a Louisiana Tech T-shirt said, "This is north Louisiana, y'all, but it's 21st century north Louisiana."

It was great to look out on the impeccably-groomed emerald green field and see the Tulane and C-USA logos and listen to the Parkview High band play the Tulane fight song. No, the number of fans was far from staggering but considering the other more serious distractions ...

"It's a great turnout. It's a wonderful thing, a great showing for displaced people," said Sam Traina¸ father of Tulane starting center Joe Traina and starting offensive guard Matt Traina. Indeed, the Tulane crowd outnumbered the Bulldog faithful, but many of those Mississippians were also impacted by Katrina.

The Traina twins, both fifth-year academic All-Americans in the A.B. Freeman School of Business, told their dad and mom Lorraine (who both traveled from Coral Gables, Fla.) that they and the team were doing OK despite the circumstances and the nomadic travel that took them from New Orleans to Jackson, La., to Dallas and SMU and to Ruston and the campus of Louisiana Tech, where they are enrolled in school under an agreement with the NCAA. They were to be back in Dallas for a September 24 engagement with SMU.

"They were worried because there were teammates who hadn't heard from all their families," said Traina, the chief financial officer of a Miami law firm. Now they have.

But the Traina twins and offensive tackle Chris McGee, he said, have "all been there five years. They don't seem to get too high or too low. In fact, I think they're upbeat, making the best of a bad situation. Then again, they might be telling me what they want me to hear."

Traina said that those three are all "kindhearted, honorable kids."

At which point his wife interrupted him. "Quit telling people how sweet they are — offensive linemen are not supposed to be sweet."

No, they're not.

His sons had just gotten an apartment on Sycamore Street near Claiborne and Carrollton avenues and had not been able to assess the damage, he said. They left their car in a parking garage on Tulane's campus and weren't aware how high the water might have gotten there. "It's a 15-year-old car with 150,000 miles on it," said Traina, "so . . ."

After the game, the Trainas and other parents who came to Shreveport were going to see their sons for the first time since the second week in July. Lorraine Traina made them home-made chocolate chip cookies and brought them some new flip-flops to wear. The Trainas had spent a good deal of time making travel arrangements to all the games. Since six were scheduled to be at home in New Orleans, all those arrangements will now be revamped.

"We'll make all the games," he said. "I'm just glad to see that people are excited about going back."

Prudential Gardner Realtors, the # 1 Real Estate Company in Metro New Orleans & Southern Mississippi Is Here and Ready to Help You With All Your Real Estate Needs.

Thousands of residents of the New Orleans suburbs and the Mississippi Gulf Coast are coming home to a massive cleanup. Many will be coming home to devastated homes and few conveniences -- like electricity or working sewers. But in some neighborhoods, the rebuilding has begun and some businesses have already opened their doors.

Prudential Gardner Realtors has opened 18 of it's 27 offices and should be able to open another four very soon. Many Prudential Gardner sales associates are already hard at work helping some of those who lost their homes find new ones. Many of these dedicated sales associates lost their own homes but need an income to survive so the act of rebuilding becomes secondary to earning a living. Southeast Louisiana and Southern Mississippi have a long road to recovery but already there is a feeling, by many, that we can and will come back stronger and better than before the disaster of Hurricane Katrina!

DiMarco, Woods, Furyk comebacks get U.S. back in Presidents Cup

By DOUG FERGUSON
AP Golf Writer

GAINESVILLE, VA. — Two years later and halfway across the world, the Presidents Cup is as close as ever.

Chris DiMarco came up aces, Tiger Woods and Jim Furyk came through with clutch comebacks and Retief Goosen and Adam Scott proved as formidable as ever Saturday, all of them turning in solid performances that left the matches tied going into a final round of 12 singles matches.

Each team had 11 points, the first time the Presidents Cup has been tied going into Sunday since it began in 1994

"I think tomorrow is a toss-up," Phil Mickelson said. "The International team is very strong, 12 of the best players in the game. They are extremely tough and are playing some extremely good golf. I feel the American team is playing exceptional golf, as well. I have faith in my team. But we have a lot of work ahead of us."

The Americans had a chance to take the outright lead in the final better-ball match of the afternoon.

Fred Couples, who has provided some of the most dramatic images from Robert Trent Jones Golf Club, hit a wedge into 8 feet on the 18th hole and was poised to score a 1-up victory. But his putt stayed above the cup as he and Davis Love III had to settle for a halve with Michael Campbell and Angel Cabrera.

AP PHOTO

Phil Mickelson, right, and Chris DiMarco of the United States, celebrate on the 13th green after beating Peter Lonard and Nick O'Hern of Australia, 6 and 5 in their afternoon better-ball match of the Presidents Cup Saturday.

No one had to work harder than Woods and Furyk, who birdied the last two holes in alternate shot Saturday morning to earn a halve against Vijay Singh and Stuart Appleby, then went the distance against them in the afternoon. It was just as tight, just as tense as Furyk carried the load and kept the Americans in the match.

Woods finally delivered, making an 18-foot birdie on the 16th hole that barely caught the left edge of the cup for a 1-up lead. Appleby hit a wedge into 10 feet on the last hole, but missed the putt.

"I didn't really do much except for read puts and have the pompoms out," Woods said. "Finally, I was able to help him out on 16 and I made a putt there."

The star was DiMarco, who has only three PGA Tour victories in his 10-year career, but plays like a major champion in these team events. He made only the second hole-in-one in the Presidents Cup in the morning, holed just about every putt that mattered and joined Mickelson in two victories the Americans needed.

DiMarco and Mickelson were so dominant that neither of their matches Saturday reached the 16th hole.

The International side got more strong play from Scott and Goosen, who battled Scott Verplank and Justin Leonard to a draw in the morning, and buried them in a better-ball match with 10 birdies in 14 holes.

As close as these matches have been, the Americans might have history on their side. They have never lost at RTJ, and they have never lost a singles session in five previous Presidents Cup matches.

Astros' home park spared by storm

Red Sox tie Yanks for lead in AL East

From staff, wire reports

The Houston Astros will have their home field for the playoff run, after all.

The Astros, who at 51-26 have the best home record in the National League, will be able to finish the regular season at Minute Maid Park as scheduled, general manager Tim Purpura said Saturday. Houston was largely spared by Hurricane Rita, and Purpura said the ballpark wasn't damaged in the storm.

"It really came through well," Purpura said before the Astros played the Chicago Cubs. "We never even lost power and all of our systems are working. So we really came through better than we could have expected."

The Astros lead the Philadelphia Phillies in the National League wild-card race by 1½ games after beating the Chicago Cubs 8-3 Saturday. They travel to St. Louis for games Tuesday and Wednesday, and are scheduled to host the Cubs for a four-game series to end the regular season.

They also expect to have ace starter Roger Clemens back this week. Clemens did not pitch Saturday because of a hamstring injury.

The Phillies finish the weekend at Cincinnati, play Monday through Wednesday at home against the New York Mets, and finish with a three-game series at the Washington Nationals.

The Florida Marlins, 4½ games behind the Astros, finish the weekend at Atlanta, play host to the Nationals on Monday through Wednesday and host the NL-East leading Braves next weekend.

In other races:

NL EAST: The Braves lead the Phillies by four games, and play the next five at home — this weekend against Florida, and Monday through Wednesday against the Colorado Rockies — before finishing with three at Florida. Atlanta is 50-26 at home this season.

Los Angeles' Bartolo Colon is the league's only 20-game winner, and has the league's fourth-best ERA at 3.34. The Angels lead the Oakland Athletics by 3½ games in the American League West.

NL CENTRAL: At 96-59, the Cardinals have clinched the best record in the National League and home-field advantage throughout the National League playoffs.

NL WEST: The San Diego Padres lead the San Francisco Giants by five games, but are only one game better than .500. The teams meet in a four-game series in San Diego beginning Monday. The Giants are 7-1 since Barry Bonds returned to the lineup; Bonds has 707 career home runs, seven shy of Babe Ruth for second all-time.

AL EAST: With a 4-3 victory Saturday at Baltimore, the Boston Red Sox pulled into a tie with the New York Yankees for the division lead. But New York, which lost 7-4 to Toronto on Saturday, has won 12 of the past 15. The Yankees and Red Sox meet each other at Fenway Park in the final three games of the season. The Yankees play four games at Baltimore next week, and Boston plays a four-game series at home vs. Toronto. And the Red Sox may be shorthanded; closer Keith Foulke was sent to a specialist in Arizona on Friday for further examination of his injured knees. Though manager Terry Francona would not declare Foulke out for the year, he did say "signs are pointing to that he may not pitch again."

AL CENTRAL: The Chicago White Sox, who once held a 15-game lead, now lead the Cleveland Indians by a game, but the Indians have won 16 of the past 18. The Indians may have the schedule advantage; they host Tampa Bay on Tuesday through Thursday, and host the White Sox for the final three games. The White Sox play four games at Detroit next week.

AL WEST: The Los Angeles Angels have won seven consecutive games and lead the Oakland Athletics by 3½ games. The A's defeated the Texas Rangers 7-6 Saturday. The Angels and A's square off in a four-game series Monday through Thursday in Oakland.

AL WILD CARD: The Indians lead the Red Sox and Yankees by 1½ games in the wild-card race.

Boston designated hitter David Ortiz, right, leads the major leagues with 140 RBIs, and leads the American League with 46 home runs. He is 17th in the league in batting average at .298, and has two walk-off homers this season.

Who's the AL MVP? Debate heating up

Red Sox's Ortiz, Yankees' A-Rod having big years; Pujols, Jones battling in NL

From staff, wire reports

Baseball's postseason awards are always cause for debate, and this season is no different.

At issue this season: Can a designated hitter be picked as a league MVP? What about a batting champ with 44 homers, but no impact in the playoff race?

Can a starting pitcher who finishes third on his team in wins be awarded a Cy Young? What about a reliever?

The American League MVP award has the added dimension of the Yankees-Red Sox rivalry. Boston designated hitter David Ortiz leads the major leagues with 140 RBIs, and leads the American League with 46 home runs. He is 17th in the league in batting average at .298, and has a flair for the dramatic walk-off homer (two this season).

But New York third baseman Alex Rodriguez also has a strong argument for the award. On Saturday he tied Ortiz in homers, has 124 RBIs, is fourth in the league in batting at .317 ñ and he also plays in the field.

The fact that Ortiz doesn't play defense should not be a deterrent, said Boston teammate David Wells.

"David (Ortiz) right now is in a league all by himself," Wells told the Boston Herald on Thursday. "There's no (expletive) question what he means to this team. (The MVP) is David Ortiz. The guy's as humble as (expletive). . . . if we're going to talk about defense, let's talk about (clubhouse contributions), too. He's not going to say that he's working out before everyone else wakes up in the morning. If they're going to do that and personality comes into play, he's got it unanimously."

The AL Cy Young Award may be easier to pick. Anaheim's Bartolo Colon is the league's only 20-game winner, and has the league's fourth-best ERA at 3.34. Yankees closer Mariano Rivera has a 1.32 ERA and 41 saves in 45 opportunities. But since 1974, only nine relievers have won Cy Young Awards.

Their top competition may be Minnesota's Johan Santana, second in ERA at 2.98 but six wins behind Colon, or Chicago's Mark Buehrle, who has 15 wins and a slightly better ERA than Colon at 3.24. But the Angels are close to clinching the AL West title, and the White Sox are locked in a battle with the Indians in the Central and may not make the playoffs. The Twins have not been a factor.

AP PHOTO

St. Louis first baseman Albert Pujols is batting .335, trailing only the Chicago Cubs' Derrek Lee (.341) in the batting race. He has hit 39 homers and 109 RBIs this season.

Angels manager Mike Scioscia is speaking up for his ace. "He's a special pitcher," Scioscia said of Colon. "If you look at what he's accomplished from the middle of last year 'til now, I don't think there's a pitcher who can match what he's done."

The NL MVP award is a toss-up. Atlanta Braves center fielder Andruw Jones leads in homers with 50 and leads the league with 126 RBIs. He's won seven consecutive gold gloves in center field ñ but he's hitting .267.

St. Louis first baseman Albert Pujols may be a more complete choice. At .335, he trails only Chicago's Derrek Lee (.341) in the batting race. His power numbers don't match Jones, but they are impressive ñ 39 homers and 109 RBIs. And the Cardinals haven't been challenged; they clinched the division title with two weeks to play, and have the NL's best record with more than a week remaining.

Chicago's Lee leads the NL in hitting and has 44 homers, but the Cubs have not threatened this season, making Jones and Pujols more likely choices.

Cardinals shortstop David Eckstein spoke up for Pujols this week with the St. Louis Post-Dispatch. "When you have a guy like (Pujols) who every single night comes out and . . . has the average he has, the homers he has, the RBIs he has . . . and plays defense the way he plays defense, that's (the MVP)," Eckstein said. "It's not even a question."

Houston's Roger Clemens, who won his record seventh Cy Young Award last season, would seem like a logical choice for his eighth this season. He leads the majors with a 1.89 ERA, the best mark since Pedro Martinez's 1.74 mark in 2000. But he has only 12 victories; teammate Roy Oswalt has 18, and Andy Pettitte has 17.

If Clemens doesn't win the award, Florida's Dontrelle Willis would be a popular choice. The 2003 NL Rookie of the Year is second in the majors with a 2.44 ERA, and leads the majors with 22 wins.

St. Louis' Chris Carpenter has also had an outstanding season, with 21 wins and a 2.71 ERA. But after a 21-4 start, Carpenter is 0-1 with a 9.77 ERA in his past three starts. "I don't care about the award, if I come to the end of the season and I win it, I win it," Carpenter told SI.com. "I just have to get myself ready for the playoffs and accomplish the ultimate goal of a championship."

Willis isn't campaigning for the honor. "If I did have a vote, I wouldn't vote for myself," Willis told SI.com this week. "I never thought I'd be mentioned in the same sentence. Chris Carpenter, Roger Clemens . . . Dontrelle Willis? It kind of sounds like a bad joke.

"Clemens is bar none the best pitcher in the history of baseball. He's definitely changed the game and is a face of our game. But I'd have to vote for Carpenter. He hasn't given up a homer in like a year and a half. No offense, Roger, I love you, but you can give up one."

Minnesota upsets No. 11 Boilermakers

Minnesota tight end Matt Spaeth celebrates his eight-yard touchdown reception in the fourth quarter that tied the Golden Gophersí game against Purdue, sending the game to overtime. Minnesota then won 42-35, in the second overtime.

Gary Russell scored three touchdowns, the last a three-yard run in the second overtime to lift host Minnesota to a 42-35 victory over No. 11 Purdue.

Laurence Maroney rushed for a career-high 217 yards on 46 carries for the Gophers (4-0, 1-0 Big Ten), who held on in another thrilling back-and-forth game between these rivals.

Purdue had a chance to tie the game in the second overtime, but Jerod Void was stuffed on third-and-one from the Minnesota 17, and Brandon Kirsch's fourth-down pass glanced off Charles Davis' hands. The Gophers to charged the field in celebration of Glen Mason's first victory over Purdue in seven tries as Minnesota coach.

Kory Sheets rushed for 101 yards for Purdue (2-1, 0-1), and his five-yard touchdown gave the Boilermakers a 35-28 lead in the first overtime.

But the Gophers came right back and tied the game on an eight-yard touchdown pass from Bryan Cupito to Logan Payne.

The Gophers took the ball to start the second overtime, and Cupito hit Payne on a 15-yard pass to set up Russell's game-winning score two plays later.

It was vindication for Mason and the Gophers, who have been criticized in the past for scheduling weak opponents in non-conference play, then folding against superior competition in the Big Ten.

They nearly let this one slip away, too, during a wild fourth quarter.

Russell also had a 1-yard scoring run in the first and a five-yard touchdown reception in the third to help the Gophers stake a 17-7 lead, but it was all Maroney for the first three quarters.

Purdue came into the game with the No. 1 ranked rushing defense in the nation after yielding 16 yards a game to Akron and Arizona.

The Boilermakers found out quickly that they were facing a much more difficult task against Minnesota's top-ranked rushing offense.

The Gophers dominated the opening quarter, outgaining Purdue 204-29 and holding the ball for 12:11 of the first 15 minutes. Maroney ran for 96 yards in the first alone and 147 yards in the first half as Minnesota's superb offensive line opened huge holes and manhandled Purdue's experienced defensive front.

Russell's scoring reception in the third seemed to put the Gophers in control, but the Purdue defense stiffened and Maroney began to wear down as Purdue clawed its way back.

Kirsch was shaky early, but rebounded to throw for 246 yards and two touchdowns, including an 8-yard strike to Andre Chattams with 6:39 to go in the fourth that gave the Boilermakers their first lead of the game, 21-20.

Purdue snatched the momentum on the Gophers' next possession, when linebacker Dan Bick picked off Cupito and returned it 29 yards for a touchdown that gave Purdue a 28-20 lead.

The Gophers came right back after Ben Jones kicked the ball out of bounds. They drove 65 yards in 12 plays, culminating with an 8-yard scoring pass from Cupito to Matt Spaeth. Cupito then kept the ball on an option play to the right and plunged in for the two-point conversion to tie the score with 1:34 to play.

No. 8 OHIO STATE 31 vs. No. 21 IOWA 6: A.J. Hawk and the Ohio State defense stuffed Iowaís running game, and kept Hawkeyes quarterback Drew Tate on the run all day.

Troy Smith threw two touchdown passes to Anthony Gonzalez and ran for two scores to support a dominant defensive performance by the eighth-ranked Buckeyes.

"The key was when they started out trying to run the ball and we were able to stop them," Ohio State defensive coordinator Jim Heacock said. "Once that happened, that gave us some flexibility to turn those guys loose.

"We put our ears back. We've got some guys who can go."

Iowa (2-2, 0-1 Big Ten) finished with 18 rushes for minus-nine yards as Hawk and Mike Kudla each were credited with 1 1/2 sacks for 15 yards in losses. The Buckeyes constantly harassed Tate, sacking him five times for minus 43 yards.

"I couldn't get outside," Tate said. "I couldn't do anything."

The Hawkeyes, averaging 428 yards per game, mustered 70 through the first three quarters and ended up with 137. They were forced to punt on their first seven possessions, running one play in Ohio State territory - and by that time the Buckeyes were in control 24-0.

"It was pretty much a one-sided football game both ways," Iowa coach Kirk Ferentz said.

Antonio Pittman rushed for 171 yards on 28 carries for the Buckeyes (3-1, 1-0), with Smith adding 127 yards on 18 carries and touchdowns of 16 and four yards. They became the first Ohio State quarterback-tailback tandem to top 100 yards in the same game since 1976 when Jeff Logan had 112 yards rushing and quarterback Rod Gerald added 104 in a 49-21 over Michigan State.

Smith also completed 13-of-19 passes for 191 yards without an interception, although he fumbled three times and had another erased by a penalty.

No. 12 MIAMI 23 vs. COLORADO 3: Kyle Wright was drilled on Miami's first play and lost a toenail on his lone touchdown pass.

Other than that, he came away unscathed and victorious in his first Orange Bowl start.

Wright threw for 264 yards, plus ran for another touchdown, as Miami's defense frustrated Colorado.

"Once you get a couple positive plays, the offense really gets in a rhythm," Wright said. "Today, with the University of Colorado down here, we wanted to get them huffin' and puffin' and runnin' in that nice hot, humid weather we had out there. Our guys felt great, and you could see they were subbing in and out."

Wright completed 20-of-39 passes for Miami (2-1), wasn't sacked once - he was dropped 14 times in the first two games - and ran a two-yard bootleg into the end zone for the game's final score.

Only Mason Crosby's 58-yard field goal - the second longest of his career - with 11:57 left kept the Buffaloes (2-1) from being shut out for the first time in nearly two decades. Colorado got 120 of its 331 yards in the fourth quarter with the game decided, plus was penalized 16 times for 104 yards.

"We shot ourselves in the foot too many times," said Colorado coach Gary Barnett, who was on the Orange Bowl sidelines for the first time since the Buffs beat Notre Dame for the 1990 national title. "Miami's a good physical team and they have great speed, but I thought we matched up decently. They just didn't make the mistakes."

Sinorice Moss had 111 yards receiving, including a 53-yard score for Miami. Jon Peattie kicked three field goals, and Quadtrine Hill and Tyrone Moss combined for 99 yards rushing for Miami.

Safety Brandon Meriweather made 12 tackles and had an interception for the Hurricanes, and Marcus Maxey intercepted a pass.

No. 16 NOTRE DAME 36 at WASHINGTON 17: New coaches, same result. Charlie Weis led Notre Dame to the same kind of lopsided romp over Washington that Tyrone Willingham did a year ago when he was coaching Fighting Irish.

The 16th-ranked Irish, clicking in the air and on the ground after a sluggish start, beat the Huskies in a game that had little to do with coaches matching wits and everything to do with slick execution by Notre Dame (3-1) and huge blunders by Washington (1-3).

A year after Notre Dame won 38-3 in South Bend, Ind., against Washington, they took their show on the road to do virtually the same thing against their former coach on a brilliant fall afternoon before 71,473 fans in Husky Stadium.

Quarterback Brady Quinn, who threw four touchdown passes last year, threw only one this time but compiled 327 yards passing in a more balanced attack that saw sophomore halfback Darius Walker rush for a career-high 128 yards on 21 carries. Walker became the first running back in Notre Dame history to rush for more than 100 yards in each of his first four games.

Quinn, who also ran for 29 yards, spread the wealth of passes around to his targets, with wide receiver Jeff Samardzija leading them all and gaining a career-high 164 yards.

Notre Dame's dominating offense controlled the game, and the Irish never punted until 11 seconds were left. They held possession of the ball for 36:56, breaking open the game with 24 points in the second half. Rashon Powers-Neal had a two-yard touchdown run, Samardzija scored on a 52-yard pass and Travis Thomas scored on an 11-yard run.

Washington, down 29-3 in the fourth quarter, scored on two late touchdowns, the first on a 1-yard run by Mark Palaita, and the second with 2:26 left on a 41-yard pass from reserve quarterback Johnny Durocher.

No. 17 MICHIGAN STATE 61 at ILLINOIS 14: Michigan Stateís record book needs updating.

Drew Stanton set a school record with five touchdown passes and the 17th-ranked Spartans set marks with 705 yards of offense and seven touchdowns in a romp over Illinois in the Big Ten opener for both.

Stanton tied the record by halftime, doing whatever he pleased during a 28-point second quarter that turned a 10-7 game into a rout. Illinois (2-2) gave up 318 yards in the first half.

"It was a pretty good outing. He had a good day," Michigan State coach John L. Smith said.

The Spartans (4-0) entered the game with the fourth-ranked offense in the nation and likely will move up after increasing their average to 594 yards per game.

Michigan State last opened a season with four wins in 1999.

"I apologize to all the Illini fans," Illinois coach Ron Zook said. "We didn't coach very well and we didn't play very well."

Stanton's second pass of the day was a 75-yard touchdown strike to Kyle Brown, and he hit Dwayne Holmes, Jerramy Scott and Matt Trannon in the second quarter to tie the record held by seven others, most recently by Jeff Smoker in a 41-10 win over Penn State on Nov. 22, 2003.

Stanton broke the record with a two-yard toss to Kellen Davis on the Spartans' first possession of the second half.

"It's a nice thing to have," he said, "but it's a tribute to our wide receivers getting open. It kind of looked easy out there at times. Those guys worked getting open."

Stanton left the game early in the third quarter, finishing 20-of-26 for 259 yards. He was 11-of-14 for 107 yards in the deciding second quarter.

Javon Ringer led the Spartans' rushing attack with 194 yards on 13 carries. He also had two tackles on kick coverage.

No. 23 VIRGINIA 38 vs. DUKE 7: Marques Hagans threw for four touchdowns and Virginia's defense forced four turnovers to lift the Cavaliers.

Hagans' first three touchdown passes came on third and long, including a 46-yarder to tight end Tom Santi on third-and-24 that gave Virginia (3-0, 1-0 Atlantic Coast Conference) a 17-0 third quarter lead.

Deyon Williams caught two touchdowns, and backup tight end J.M. Phillips scored on a 12-yard pass, carrying two Duke defenders on his back the final 3 yards.

Hagans finished 13 for 21 with 174 yards and no interceptions, a fine day despite numerous dropped passes in the first half.

The Cavaliers' offense struggled early, with tailback Wali Lundy finding little running room and receivers dropping balls.

Their first touchdown came on an early second-half drive, with eight straight runs by backup tailback Michael Johnson to move the ball from midfield inside the 10. Hagans capped the drive with a 10-yard TD pass to Williams to make it 10-0.

In the second half, though, Virginia scored touchdowns on its first four possessions to put the game out of reach.

Duke did not score until the fourth quarter, and managed only 11 first downs and 215 yards from scrimmage, much of which came after the game was out of reach. The Blue Devils (1-3, 0-2) sent three different quarterbacks out in the first quarter alone, none of whom could move the offense.

Alabama running back Tim Castille had just 18 yards rushing, but he scored on a dive at the goalline in the Crimson Tideís 24-13 win against Arkansas.

Crimson Tide rolls to 4-0

From wire reports

It was supposed to be a draw play, but then Alabamaís Brodie Croyle saw receiver D.J. Hall standing by himself at the line and changed his mind.

Hall slipped into the end zone with no Arkansas defender anywhere near him and caught a five-yard touchdown pass from Croyle in the final minutes of the Crimson Tideís 24-13 victory Saturday in Tuscaloosa, Ala.

"I tried not to get too excited and give it away," said Hall, who also had a 43-yard touchdown catch. "I looked at Brodie and gave him a little signal. He looked at me and just nodded his head.

All I was thinking was, 'Don't drop it.'" He didn't drop it and No. 20 Alabama (4-0, 2-0) didn't fumble away its first 4-0 start since 1996. The Razorbacks (1-3, 0-2), who came into the game as 15 1/2-point underdogs, hardly resembled the team manhandled for 70 points and 736 yards by No. 1 Southern California a week earlier.

It was their third straight loss.

"We didn't get the win, so we can't be too satisfied," Arkansas defensive tackle Keith Jackson said. "But we showed people we're better than what we were (last week) and we showed teams they'd better get ready for us."

Juwan Simpson's interception at the Arkansas 40 set up the late scoring drive capped by Hall's touchdown catch on third-and-goal.

"We had a draw play called," Alabama coach Mike Shula said, "which probably wouldn't have worked."

The Razorbacks had battled back from a 17-3 deficit in the fourth quarter on two big plays after Tim Castille's one-yard touchdown run with 14:15 left gave Alabama the two-touchdown lead.

AUBURN 37 vs. WESTERN KENTUCKY 14: Blake Field did not find out he would be making his first career start as Auburn's quarterback until less than an hour before the Tigers took the field against Western Kentucky.

He said offensive coordinator Al Borges told him that starter Brandon Cox had come down with a stomach virus and would be unable to play.

Field showed few jitters in his first start. He completed 13-of-20 passes for 200 yards and three touchdowns to lead Auburn to a 37-14 victory over I-AA Western Kentucky. The freshman completed passes to 10 receivers and had no interceptions.

Field would only rate his performance as a 5 on a 10-point scale.

"I'm a big perfectionist. I always believe that I'm never perfect," Field said.

Auburn Coach Tommy Tuberville had nothing but praise for Field's performance.

"We are proud of Blake Field," Tuberville said. "He became our starter with an hour's notice. He did a great job handling the football."

Cox is expected to be back in the lineup when Auburn plays South Carolina next week.

Auburn (3-1) took control of the game early, jumping out to a 24-0 halftime lead and holding the Hilltoppers to 98 yards total offense in the first half.

West Virginia Brandon Myles had six catches for 81 yards and scored a touchdown on a 76-yard kickoff return as the Mountaineers held off East Carolina 20-15.

But Western Kentucky (2-1), the top ranked team in I-AA, fought back with two fourth quarter touchdowns.

C-USA

WEST VIRGINIA 20 vs. EAST CAROLINA 15: Adam Bednarik and Pat White each threw a touchdown pass and Antonio Lewis returned a punt 76 yards for a score to carry West Virginia.

The Mountaineers (4-0) scored all their points in the first half, and then held off the Pirates, who were inside the West Virginia 20 four times in the first three quarters but unable to score a touchdown.

West Virginia, which plays No. 4 Virginia Tech next week, managed to total 102 yards after halftime.

West Virginia had the nation's seventh-best rushing attack and had averaged 458 yards on the ground against the Pirates over the past three seasons, but was limited to 127 this time.

The Mountaineers failed to score in the second half for the first time since Oct. 25, 2001.

West Virginia's quarterback tandem had its worst outing, combining for three interceptions and a fumble. West Virginia freshman Pat McAfee missed two field goals and an extra point.

Except for Robert Lee's three field goals, East Carolina (1-2) was equally inept in the first three quarters.

The Pirates made it interesting in the final minutes.

A poor punt gave East Carolina the ball at the West Virginia 48 and the Pirates needed just 44 seconds to score on James Pinkney's 11-yard touchdown pass to Aundrae Allison with five minutes left. A two-point conversion pass attempt failed.

East Carolina got the ball back two more times, including at its 38-yard line with 19 seconds left. Pinkney hit Chris Johnson with a 10-yard pass but was sacked by Keilen Dykes on the next play to end the game.

On the game's first series, Pinkney fumbled as Marc Magro hit him. Jeff Noechel recovered for the Mountaineers at the ECU 44. Six plays later, Bednarik hit Darius Reynaud with a 15-yard touchdown pass.

But Bednarik was intercepted and fumbled the ball away on the next two series. Bednarik strained his knee on the fumble and did not return until the third quarter.

Skies cleared Sunday, search-and-rescue helicopters rose overhead and relief workers poured into coastal lowlands hard-hit by Hurricane Rita 24 hours earlier. From Port Arthur, Texas, eastward into the empty marshes of southwest Louisiana, they found heavy structural damage and the inevitable post-hurricane flooding – but no deaths.

Gov. Kathleen Blanco flew over the area and asked thousands of evacuees — mostly from small, low-lying towns in the region – not to return to their homes until storm officials give the all-clear.

She said she has asked President Bush for two federal aid packages totaling almost $32 billion for Louisiana, now reeling from the effects of two major hurricanes in a month.

New Orleans struggled to regain its footing in the wake of Hurricane Rita on Sunday as Corps of Engineers workers repaired a breach in an Industrial Canal levee, street flooding receded in neighborhoods near the lakefront, and Entergy workers restored power to the French Quarter.

As business owners and residents await word from Mayor Ray Nagin on when and how they can return to a city that has faced two hurricanes in the past month, law enforcement officials said there should be enough of a security presence when people return. But there were conflicting reports on the size of the military presence Sunday.

Nagin on Sunday didn't elaborate on his earlier plan to begin opening up Algiers and parts of Uptown to residents this week. A spokeswoman said Nagin is assessing conditions and should give a briefing today.

Paramedic Chris Keller puffed on a cigarette as he followed his nose to the twisted pile of trees and debris.

"Do you smell that?" he said. "I keep getting a hit here."

Certain he had detected a rotting corpse or refrigerator full of spoiled meat, Keller pulled back some branches and leaned in. But the debris was too thick. If a body were there, it would have to wait for the bulldozers, he said.

After five days managing near-riots, medical horrors and unspeakable living conditions inside the Superdome, Louisiana National Guard Col. Thomas Beron prepared to hand over the dead to representatives of the Federal Emergency Management Agency.

Following days of internationally reported killings, rapes and gang violence inside the Dome, the doctor from FEMA – Beron doesn't remember his name – came prepared for a grisly scene: He brought a refrigerated 18-wheeler and three doctors to process bodies.

"I've got a report of 200 bodies in the Dome," Beron recalls the doctor saying.

The real total was six, Beron said.

Of those, four died of natural causes, one overdosed and another jumped to his death in an apparent suicide, said Beron, who personally oversaw the turning over of bodies from a Dome freezer, where they lay atop melting bags of ice. State health department officials in charge of body recovery put the official death count at the Dome at 10, but

Orleans judge holds court in Gonzales

Prosecutors work in borrowed space

By Susan Finch
Staff writer

GONZALES — The charges ranged from the routine to the exceptional. One fellow was arrested for possessing a crack cocaine pipe and resisting arrest by trying to hide the contraband from the cops. Another man, who declared that he'd rescued hundreds of Hurricane Katrina victims in Chalmette, was hauled in after allegedly brandishing a gun at people he feared might be about to loot his house.

Those were just two of more than 20 cases that landed on Orleans Parish Criminal District Court Judge Raymond Bigelow's plate last week at Hunt Correctional Center, where he's been setting bail every Wednesday for people arrested in New Orleans since Katrina knocked his court's headquarters out of service.

The courts in areas affected by the hurricane will remain closed until Oct. 3. At that time, individual courts will make a determination on whether to reopen and could stay closed depending on when they can get their systems operational again, said Val Solino, a supervisor in Orleans Parish District Attorney Eddie Jordan's office.

The court and district attorney's office will then review all cases in which the court dates were set and start to set dates for future proceedings, Solino said.

Katrina's floodwaters invaded most of the first floor of Jordan's office building, and some employees lost everything. The damage has not been assessed, but Jordan estimates restoration costs may rise into the hundred-thousands.

Although there were reports of flooding in some of the evidence rooms, prosecutors have not been in those areas to make an assessment, Solino said. As soon as they can gain access to the area again, they will begin reviewing evidence and files on a case-by-case basis.

Not every case will become unprosecutable because evidence was damaged, he said.

In the meantime, the district attorney's office is operating out of borrowed space at the Louisiana attorney general's office in Baton Rouge. Effective Sept. 23, 54 percent of nonessential, nonlegal staff members were laid off. The layoffs so far do not include assistant district attorneys.

"We have been advised by city officials that the city of New Orleans is facing a financial hardship, and although they are seeking financial assistance, they must downsize and advised that we do the same," Jordan said. "As of this date, we have not received our quarterly appropriation from the city of New Orleans. Further layoffs may be required without additional funding."

Meanwhile, New York County District Attorney Robert Morgenthau and his staff raised more than $12,000 through employee contributions and subsidized funds to help Jordan and his staff rebuild their lives.

The money was deposited into a special fund established by the New Orleans Police Foundation to assist employees with living expenses including, among other things, food, clothing and shelter.

For the judges of Criminal Distinct Court, the last Monday in August was to have been the start of a two-day retreat in Baton Rouge to talk about a wide range of items, including this one: improving their hulking headquarters at Tulane Avenue and South Broad Street to make it a better hurricane evacuation shelter, Chief Judge Calvin Johnson said Sunday.

Hurricane Katrina not only scotched that meeting but, worse, left 100 or so people trapped inside the building until they were finally helicoptered to safety the Friday after the storm, Johnson said.

Before Katrina, the fortress-like court building — capable of withstanding winds of 125 mph or better — served well as a storm refuge, Johnson said. "But no one ever anticipated the idea that the 17th Street Canal would break," he said, referring to the event that left much of the city flooded.

Yet the wheels of justice still turn.

The crop of arrestees who paraded into Bigelow's makeshift courtroom recently included two city employees.

Veteran Sewerage & Water Board employee Preston Johnson, 53, landed there after, police claim, he pulled a gun on another man during an argument over the man's girlfriend at a West Bank house where both men were living.

The Sept. 19 scuffle unfolded after Johnson returned from San Antonio, where he had been living in a shelter.

Bigelow set Johnson's bail at $10,000, then allowed him to go free without posting any of the money – but with orders to steer clear of guns and the man he argued with.

Lucien Barbarin Jr., the other city employee, was booked on theft and looting charges by cops who say they caught him with property belonging to Radio Shack and Footlocker. He's a city firefighter, but Bigelow didn't learn so until moments after he set bail totaling $40,000.

"If I'd known that, I'd have set a higher bond," Bigelow said.

Teacher takes on a new job finding homes for colleagues

'It's really more who you know'

By John-John Williams IV
River Parishes bureau

Diane Brown, director of special education for the St. John the Baptist Parish school district, might have missed her true calling in life.

For the past three weeks, Brown has worked almost around the clock to find displaced teachers and new hires in her district a place to live.

St. John has experienced an unprecedented enrollment surge since Hurricane Katrina hit. Located thirty minutes from New Orleans, the parish has attracted many displaced residents from the metropolitan area. More than 1,400 displaced students enrolled in the district and 35 teachers were hired.

Brown has found housing for more than half of them.

"I didn't want anyone to think that they didn't have a job because they didn't have a place to live," Brown said. "I wanted our teachers to know that they had a job to come back to."

Initially Brown started finding housing for newly hired special education teachers and those from the Teach for America program. After repeated success she became the go-to house-hunter for the district. As the news of her success spread, principals and other displaced teachers began to call.

"I used her as the reference for anyone who called me that wanted a job and had no place to live," said Ann LaBorde, executive director of personnel and legal services in the district. LaBorde said Brown was instrumental in securing housing for a displaced teacher living in Memphis.

Brown, who has been with the district for 23 years and director of special education for 17 years, said she's worked 14-hour days since Katrina hit, balancing her duties with special education and finding housing for displaced staff.

"It's been really crazy," said Brown. "I know things are tough but people are really excited about having a house."

Brown said the key to finding housing for the displaced teachers and new hires has been using long-time contacts within the parish.

"Most of it (housing) isn't listed," said Brown, who has used a real estate expert at times and other contacts within the parish. "It's people in the community. It's really more who you know."

Brown also struck gold when she sent out a mass e-mail to district employees asking for assistance.

Board member Russ Wise offered a space in his home after the e-mail went out.

Brown got in touch with school board member Clarence Triche and matched him with three teachers who are currently living in one of his homes.

Brown has also opened her home to East St. John High School earth science teacher John Ellis, his wife, Judy, and their dog, a red, white and black Pembroke Welsh Corgi named Maggie. The Ellis family home in Metairie sustained heavy damage from 2 feet of water and is uninhabitable.

DIANE BROWN
Director of special education for the St. John the Baptist Parish school district

"John cooks, that is the arrangement," Brown said about the tradeoff. "John's a wonderful cook."

John Ellis, a 19-year-veteran at East St. John High School who is known for his interactive experiments and good rapport with his students, cannot say enough good things about Brown.

"Diane has done a great job," he said. "I buy the groceries and do the cooking. It's kind of like living in a fraternity house. I'm blessed living here with the Browns."

Brown's husband of 18 years, Robert, isn't surprised by the work his wife has done.

"She's a very hard worker," he said. "Once she's given an assignment to do she puts her all in it. She also feels for them. We can't afford to lose any teachers."

What keeps Brown going?

"Chocolate," she said with a laugh. "Lots of chocolate and John's good cooking."

Does Brown have a future in real estate?

"I don't know," she said, laughing. "My husband talks about it. I guess I could."

Rita leaves Arkansas wet and powerless

'It could have been a lot worse'

By The Associated Press

LITTLE ROCK — Flash flood warnings continued Sunday in east Arkansas as remnants of Hurricane Rita spun away, and the sun began to shine in west and central parts of the state.

Tornadoes generated by the storm did damage Saturday in Conway, Lonoke and White Counties, and trees and utility lines were felled elsewhere as heavy rain and some stiff winds did their work.

A storm assessment team from the National Weather Service in Little Rock was in the Searcy area Sunday to scope out damage from an apparent tornado that damaged a home and a church.

"That was the storm of the day," weather service forecaster Joe Goudsward said Sunday.

No serious injuries were reported in the heavy weather, although trailer homes were destroyed in Lonoke and Conway counties.

Despite rain of 5 to 6 inches that was widespread, rivers did not rise to dangerous levels. Goudsward said the ground was parched from the absence of rain for weeks before Rita, so the soil was able to absorb much of the rain that fell and thus reduce flooding chances.

"It could have been a lot worse," Goudsward said.

Entergy Arkansas had a peak of 60,000 outages on Saturday, but that number was down to 30,000 by 2 p.m. Sunday, Entergy spokesman David Lewis said.

"The outages were all over Arkansas but they were concentrated mostly in the southern half of the state," Lewis said.

Communities with 1,000 or more customers without power included El Dorado, Hot Springs, Jacksonville, Lake Village, Little Rock, Magnolia, Monticello and Pine Bluff, Lewis said.

Extra linemen went on duty on Saturday to help restore power, the utility said.

In its territory in Arkansas, Louisiana, Mississippi and Texas, Entergy had 620,000 outages on Sunday, not including about 150,000 customers removed from the list because power cannot be provided.

The weather service said temperatures will drop to near normal in the days ahead as a cold front is forecast to arrive in Arkansas on Thursday. Highs in the low 80s will stand in contrast to highs more than 10 degrees higher that were the case before Rita.

Downtown hotels an island of commerce

Most have power, plenty of guests

By Bruce Hamilton
Staff writer

As the feeder bands and storm surge of Hurricane Rita drenched buildings and flooded streets Friday night in the darkness outside, guests at the Sheraton New Orleans Hotel carried on virtually undisturbed.

The film "Anchor Man" played in the lobby, projected on a large screen for bar patrons' viewing pleasure, followed by "Caddyshack." Dinner again was served buffet-style, and members of the international press corps sipped drinks at the second-floor "press club." The satellite signal on the TV cut out frequently, but the wireless Internet connection was unbroken.

While the Sheraton at 500 Canal St., with nearly all of its 1,100 rooms in use, is the biggest downtown hotel to remain in service following Hurricane Katrina, it has been joined by several others in the area, all are catering mostly to government, media and emergency workers.

The W New Orleans in the business district closed for only a day and has filled 150 of its 423 rooms, while the W French Quarter never fully closed and is using all of its 98 rooms, said Bruce Hicks, spokesman for Starwood Hotels and Resorts, owner of the Sheraton and the two W hotels, on Sunday.

The Ambassador Hotel in the Warehouse District reopened Sept. 16 and is using all but 12 of its 165 rooms, a desk worker said. Among other hotels that have managed to open and serve emergency officials are Le Cirque Hotel at Lee Circle and the Royal Sonesta and Omni Royal Orleans hotels in the Quarter.

"I have the mayor's office and I have homeland security and I have a TV station," said Magda Chappetta, manager of the Le Cirque, which on Sunday was using 105 of its 138 rooms.

The Sheraton is eager to see other hotels open to breathe life into the downtown area, Hicks said.

"We're really in a unique situation where we're cheering on our competitors. We need all the big hotels in this town up and running," he said.

Starwood hired one of the world's largest emergency response contractors, BMS Catastrophe, which responded immediately and brought in a small army of workers. The firm has been hired to remediate several downtown hotels.

"We hired them before the hurricane hit, and by Wednesday morning (Aug. 31), they had the place locked down," said Dan King, general manager. "They acted so fast, before the mold could start growing," Clayton said.

BMS Catastrophe has 13 global response centers, and the company boasts a range of services including remediation of damage from hurricane, earthquake, mudslide, fire, water and bombing. It can remove debris, retrieve data and restore industrial equipment. It was one of the companies that responded to the Oklahoma City bombing.

The Sheraton had about 500 customers and 500 employees at the hotel when Katrina struck, and the majority of those drove away or were taken out by bus Aug. 31, according to King. A few key staff members were brought in, as was an insurance adjuster, to secure the generators and information technology systems.

The hotel brought in shipments of food and 5,000-gallon water tankers from LaPlace and Algiers, using as much as 200,000 gallons daily to supplement the city water. A fleet of ten trucks has been making multiple trips daily. The hotel set up a sanitation station to inject extra chlorine in the water but guests have been advised to drink bottled water.

After a brief period on its backup 350-kilowatt generator, the Sheraton brought in two truck-size, 2.5-megawatt generators, then switched to city power when it was restored weeks ago. Contractors set up dehumidifiers and filtration devices. Once the building was sealed, workers began to dry it with low-humidity air through ventilators.

By Sept. 3, the hotel was taking in guests, including a police force from the 5th District, federal marshals and officers from Immigrations and Customs as well as the Louisiana Office of Alcohol and Tobacco Control and the Salvation Army. Doctors helped at a medical clinic set up in the gift shop. The police presence helped safeguard the building, and King said the presence of so much city personnel helped to secure incoming deliveries, although at least one shipment was commandeered.

Groups of reporters and photographers, including a team from The Times-Picayune, camera operators and producers from media outlets such as the BBC, have set up shop. The Sheraton became a kind of nerve center, encircled by chain-link fence with restricted access guarded by security firm Blackwater USA.

King said the hotel's Louis Armstrong Ballroom received the most damage from Katrina; its retractable skylight and glass wall were shattered. He said a corner suite window also was broken, and corner stairwells had wind damage but only three rooms of 1,100 were unusable.

BMS planned to turn over 886 of those 1,100 rooms by Sunday and have the rest ready by mid-October. Plans changed when a Carnival Cruise Line ship housing about 1,400 police officers, firefighters, emergency medical personnel and other rescue workers left Thursday, and those workers came to the Sheraton ahead of schedule.

"We had to scramble," King said

Pope offers prayer for Hurricane Rita victims

Blessing includes rescue workers

By The Associated Press

CASTEL GANDOLFO, Italy — Pope Benedict XVI called Sunday for special prayers for the victims of Hurricane Rita and the rescue workers trying to help them.

"Our thoughts go especially to those who are affected by the natural disasters in the United States and other parts of the world," Benedict said during his Sunday blessing from his balcony at the papal retreat in Castel Gandolfo south of Rome.

"I invite you to join me in prayer to the Lord for all who suffer, for the victims and their loved ones, and for the rescue workers."

Rita slammed into the southern United States on Saturday, just weeks after Hurricane Katrina flooded parts of Louisiana and Mississippi. Rita downed trees, sparked fires and swamped Louisiana towns with a 15-foot storm surge.

It was Benedict's final Sunday blessing from the hillside town before returning to the Vatican after about two months of vacation. He has a busy few weeks ahead, including a major meeting of the world's bishops starting next Sunday.

"On this last Sunday that I spend at Castel Gandolfo, I want to cordially greet the entire community, renewing my thanks for the welcome that you gave me," Benedict told the crowd.

On Saturday evening, Benedict met privately with the families of the people who work at the papal palace, saying he would return to Rome with "great memories" of his vacation.

"Certainly, this place will be a 'Vatican II' also for me," he said.

Economist says impact from storms to be mild

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The president's top economist said Sunday that Hurricanes Katrina and Rita will have a modest impact on the U.S. economy.

Ben Bernanke, chairman of the White House Council of Economic Advisers, gave his assessment in a speech to the Institute of International Finance.

He expressed optimism the economy would weather the double blow and that the fallout would be temporary.

That hope is consistent with the message of Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan and his central bank colleagues. Last week they said damage from Hurricane Katrina did not pose a "persistent threat" to the nation's economic health. Given that, the Fed went ahead and raised short-term interest rates to keep inflation in check.

"I remain pretty optimistic about the economy," Bernanke said.

Bernanke and private economists expect jobs to take a hit in the short term. Job losses for September could be heavy and the unemployment rate, now at a four-year low of 4.9 percent, would rise.

The employment report for September is released by the government in October.

Those who stay endanger their own lives and others

Rescues made from Abbeville rooftops

By Ann M. Simmons and Scott Gold
Los Angeles Times

ABBEVILLE, LA. — This is a land awash in water.

From the marshy lowlands of Cajun country to the flat country south of the industrial city of Lake Charles, water covered the roads and stranded people atop their homes and killed cattle by the hundreds.

So intense was the rescue effort Saturday that even Vermilion Parish Sheriff Michael Couvillon had been unable to check on his property on Cow Island and said he feared he might have lost his 90 head of cattle and four horses.

He said Saturday that he was both angry and frustrated people had ignored warnings to leave the lowlands and seek higher ground. This for a hurricane that produced widespread flooding and rains that the National Hurricane Center had said could measure as much as 25 inches over the area.

"The people chose not to leave after we advised them three times," he said. "Now they are putting other people's lives in danger."

He also said throughout the day, boats were unable to navigate the waters because of floating debris that hit propellers.

"If you go fast, you can hit a log or a fence," he said. "You can't direct your boat. If you go slow, the current will take you."

Jimmy Domingues, a retired parish registrar of voters, and his son were among several community members who showed up with boats to look for those stranded by the flood. He said the number of dead animals was staggering.

"Carcasses are scattered all over," he said.

By nightfall, at least 400 people had been rescued by boats from attics and rooftops near Abbeville, a town of 11,600.

But the sheriff said by Saturday evening, at least 25 residents in the immediate area remained to be rescued. Most of them were on their roofs, where they would have to spend the night, he said. As the day wore on, those who were rescued from homes were brought to the Knights of Columbus Hall in Abbeville, south of Lafayette. Each had stories to tell about what had happened to them as Hurricane Rita blew ashore in the early-morning hours.

Karen Pommier and her family failed to obey the mandatory evacuation order in the tiny town of Henry, south of Abbeville. Pommier said the water started rising and was a foot deep in their house before a rescue boat arrived. They managed to grab food, medicine and clothes, all of which they stuffed into black garbage bags.

"We're on high ground. We could have stayed. But we didn't want to take the chance," Pommier said.

"We never panicked. That's why people get killed — by panicking," said Pommier's father, Jesse Labit.

Diana Toucket, 52, a mother of three, also was picked up by a boat at a trailer park.

Toucket said she and her husband were staying in her daughter's trailer when water started rising in the early-morning hours. Though the trailer was elevated 4 feet above the ground, they were waist-deep in water when the rescue boat arrived, Toucket said.

Like so many others, the couple had only a few minutes to grab some clothes, a cell phone and food.

Mark Simon, 50, a farmer whose family has been raising rice and crawfish for generations in the area, said he expected to lose almost everything.

"We'll lose it, most definitely," Simon said of his rice crop. "It likes water, but it can't take 3 feet of it."

Simon's eyes welled up in tears as he explained that he had no flood insurance. And he said his crawfish would die because the floodwaters would bring fish into the crawfish ponds, and the fish would use up all the oxygen.

Rumors of deaths at Superdome,

Beron said the other four bodies were found in the street near the Dome, not inside it. Both sources said no one had been killed inside.

At the Ernest N. Morial Convention Center, just four bodies were recovered, despites reports of corpses piled inside the building. Only one of the dead appeared to have been slain, said health and law enforcement officials.

That the nation's front-line emergency management believed the body count would resemble that of a bloody battle in a war is but one of scores of examples of myths about the Dome and the Convention Center treated as fact by evacuees, the media and even some of New Orleans' top officials, including the mayor and police superintendent. As the fog of war-like conditions in Hurricane Katrina's aftermath has cleared, the vast majority of reported atrocities committed by evacuees have turned out to be false, or at least unsupported by any evidence, according to key military, law enforcement, medical and civilian officials in positions to know.

"I think 99 percent of it is bulls—-," said Sgt. 1st Class Jason Lachney, who played a key role in security and humanitarian work inside the Dome. "Don't get me wrong, bad things happened, but I didn't see any killing and raping and cutting of throats or anything. … Ninety-nine percent of the people in the Dome were very well-behaved."

Dr. Louis Cataldie, the state Health and Human Services Department administrator overseeing the body recovery operation, said his teams were inundated with false reports about the Dome and Convention Center.

"We swept both buildings several times, because we kept getting reports of more bodies there," Cataldie said. "But it just wasn't the case."

Orleans Parish District Attorney Eddie Jordan said authorities had confirmed only four murders in New Orleans in the aftermath of Katrina – making it a typical week in a city that anticipated more than 200 homicides this year. Jordan expressed outrage at reports from many national media outlets that suffering flood victims had turned into mobs of unchecked savages.

"I had the impression that at least 40 or 50 murders had occurred at the two sites," he said. "It's unfortunate we saw these kinds of stories saying crime had taken place on a massive scale when that wasn't the case. And they (national media outlets) have done nothing to follow up on any of these cases, they just accepted what people (on the street) told them. … It's not consistent with the highest standards of journalism."

As floodwaters forced tens of thousands of evacuees into the Dome and Convention Center, news of unspeakable acts poured out of the nation's media: evacuees firing at helicopters trying to save them; women, children and even babies raped with abandon; people killed for food and water; a 7-year-old raped and killed at the Convention Center. Police, according to their chief, Eddie Compass, found themselves in multiple shootouts inside both shelters, and were forced to race toward muzzle flashes through the dark to disarm the criminals; snipers supposedly fired at doctors and soldiers from downtown high-rises.

In interviews with Oprah Winfrey, Compass reported rapes of "babies," and Mayor Ray Nagin spoke of "hundreds of armed gang members" killing and raping people inside the Dome. Unidentified evacuees told of children stepping over so many bodies, "we couldn't count."

The picture that emerged was one of the impoverished, masses of flood victims resorting to utter depravity, randomly attacking each other, as well as the police trying to protect them and the rescue workers trying to save them. Nagin told Winfrey the crowd has descended to an "almost animalistic state."

Four weeks after the storm, few of the widely reported atrocities have been backed with evidence. The piles of bodies never materialized, and soldiers, police officers and rescue personnel on the front lines say that although anarchy reigned at times and people suffered unimaginable indignities, most of the worst crimes reported at the time never happened.

Military, law enforcement and medical workers agree that the flood of evacuees – about 30,000 at the Dome and an estimated 10,000 to 20,000 at the Convention Center — overwhelmed their security personnel. The 400 to 500 soldiers in the Dome could have been easily overrun by increasingly agitated crowds, but that never happened, said Col. James Knotts, a midlevel commander there. Security was nonexistent at the Convention Center, which was never designated as a shelter. Authorities provided no food, water or medical care until troops secured the building the Friday after the storm.

While the Convention Center saw plenty of mischief, including massive looting and isolated gunfire, and many inside cowered in fear, the hordes of evacuees for the most part did not resort to violence, as legend has it.

"Everything was embellished, everything was exaggerated," said Deputy Police Superintendent Warren Riley. "If one guy said he saw six bodies, then another guy the same six, and another guy saw them – then that became 18."

Soldier shot — by himself

Inside the Dome, where National Guardsmen performed rigorous security checks before allowing anyone inside, only one shooting has been verified. Even that incident, in which Louisiana Guardsman Chris Watt of the 527th Engineer Battalion was injured, has been widely misreported, said Maj. David Baldwin, who led the team of soldiers who arrested a suspect.

Watt was attacked inside one of the Dome's locker rooms, which he entered with another soldier. In the darkness, as he walked through about six inches of water, Watt was attacked with a metal rod, a piece of a cot. But the bullet that penetrated Watt's leg came from his own gun – he accidentally shot himself in the commotion. The attacker never took his gun from him, Baldwin said. New Orleans police investigated the matter fully and sent the suspect to jail in Breaux Bridge, Baldwin said.

As for other shootings, Baldwin said, "We actively patrolled 24 hours a day, and nobody heard another shot."

Doug Thornton, regional vice president of SMG, which manages the Dome, walked the complex from before the storm until the final evacuation and kept a meticulous journal. In a Sept. 9 interview, he said he heard reports of rapes and killings, but they were unconfirmed and came from evacuees and security officials.

"We walked through the facility every day, and we didn't see all this that was being reported," said Thornton, one of about 35 Dome employees who rode out Katrina in the building and lived there in the days after the storm hit. "We never felt threatened. It's hard to determine what's real and what's not real."

No victims

Inside the Convention Center, the rumors of widespread violence have proved hard to substantiate, as well, though the masses of evacuees endured terrifying and inhumane conditions.

Jimmie Fore, vice president of the state authority that runs the Convention Center, stayed in the building with a core group of 35 employees until Sept. 1, the Thursday after Katrina. He was appalled by what he saw. Thugs hotwired 75 forklifts and electric carts and looted food and booze from every room in the building, but he said he never saw any violent crimes committed, and neither did any of his employees. Some, however, did report seeing armed men roaming the building, and Fore said he heard gunshots in the distance on at about six occasions.

NOPD Capt. Jeff Winn's 20-member SWAT team responded on about 10 occasions to calls from the Convention Center, usually after reports of shots being fired. The group found people huddled in the fetal position, lying flat on the ground to avoid bullets or running for the exits. They also heard stories of gang rapes, armed robberies and other violent crimes, but no victims ever came forward while his officers were in the building, he said.

"What's true and what's not, we don't really know," he said.

Rumors of rampant violence at the Convention Center prompted Louisiana National Guard Lt. Col. Jacques Thibodeaux put together a 1,000-man force of soldiers and police in full battle gear to secure the center Sept. 2 at about noon.

It took only 20 minutes to take control, and soldiers met no resistance, Thibodeaux said. What the soldiers found – elderly people and infants near death without food, water and medicine; crowds living in filth – shocked them more than anything they'd seen in combat zones overseas. But they found no evidence, witnesses or victims of any killings, rapes or beatings, Thibodeaux said.

Another commander at the scene, Lt. Col. John Edwards of the Arkansas National Guard, said the crowd welcomed the soldiers. "It reminded me of the liberation of France in World War II. There were people cheering; one boy even saluted," he said. "We never – never once – encountered any hostility."

One widely circulated tale, told to The Times-Picayune by a slew of evacuees and two Arkansas National Guardsmen, held that "30 or 40 bodies" were stored in a Convention Center freezer. But a formal Arkansas Guard review of the matter later found that no soldier had actually seen the corpses, and that the information came from rumors in the food line for military, police and rescue workers in front of Harrah's New Orleans Casino, said Edwards, who conducted the review.

It's possible more than four people died at the Convention Center. Fore, the center's vice president, said he saw another body outside the building early in the first week after the storm, covered in a shroud on the pavement along Julia Street, near the back of the Convention Center. It's unclear whether that body ended up in the nearby food service entrance, where the four confirmed bodies were found later.

Also, several news organizations reported the body of 91-year-old Booker T. Harris, which sat covered in a chair on Convention Center Boulevard for several days after he died on the back of a truck while being evacuated.

Just one of the dead appeared to be the victim of foul play, said Winn, one of few law enforcement officers who spent any time patrolling the Convention Center before it was secured. Winn, who did the final sweep of the building, said one body appeared to have stab wounds, but he could not be sure. Baldwin also said only one of the dead appeared to have been slain, apparently referring to the same body as Winn described. Bob Johannessen, spokesman for the Department of Health and Hospitals, also confirmed just one suspected homicide at the Convention Center, though he said the victim had been shot, not stabbed.

Convention Center exaggerated

A Washington Post report quoted another soldier who concluded that three of the four people appeared to have been beaten to death, including an older woman in a wheelchair.

But Spc. Mikel Brooks, an Arkansas Guardsman who said he wheeled the woman's dead body into the food service entrance, said she appeared to have died of natural causes. Brooks went on to say that the woman had expired sitting next to her husband, who shocked him by asking him to bring the wheelchair back.

The Post also cited evacuee Tony Cash and three other unnamed sources saying a young boy died of an asthma attack, but multiple officials could not confirm that death.

One attack thwarted

Reports of dozens of rapes at both facilities – many allegedly involving small children – may forever remain a question mark. Rape is a notoriously underreported crime under ideal circumstances, and tracking down evidence at this point, with evacuees spread all over the country, would be nearly impossible. The same goes for reports of armed robberies at both sites.

Numerous people told The Times-Picayune that they had witnessed rapes, in particular attacks on two young girls in the Superdome ladies room and the killing of one of them, but police and military officials said they know nothing of such an incident.

Soldiers and police did confirm at least one attempted rape of a child. Riley said a man tried to sexually assault a young girl, but was "beaten up" by civilians and apprehended by police. It was unclear if that incident was the one that gained wide currency among evacuees.

Baldwin, the National Guard commander of a special reaction team patrolling the Dome, also said he knew of only one attempted sexual assault of a child – but the details of his story, while similar, differed somewhat from that of Riley. It was unclear last week whether the two men spoke about the same incident.

Soldiers apprehended the assailant after a "commotion" in the bathroom exposed him, Baldwin said, but he knew nothing about the man being beaten. Furthermore, in a detail that raises questions about whether officials have full knowledge of any sex crimes, Baldwin said his men turned over one alleged child molester to New Orleans police – only to find him again inside the Dome two days later, reportedly attempting to molest other children.

"We ran into the same guy a couple days later," he said. "The crowd came to us and said, 'You better do something with this guy or we're going to do something with him.' … That kind of re-confirmed (the first allegation), when the crowd came to us saying he was putting his hands on kids."

But other accusations that have gained wide currency are more demonstrably false. For instance, no one found the body of a girl – whose age was estimated at anywhere from 7 to 13 – who, according to multiple reports, was raped and killed with a knife to the throat at the Convention Center.

Many evacuees at the Convention Center the morning of Sept. 3 treated the story as gospel, and ticked off further atrocities: a baby trampled to death, multiple child rapes.

Salvatore Hall, standing on the corner of Julia Street and Convention Center Boulevard that day, just before the evacuation, said, "They raped and killed a 10-year-old in the bathroom."

Neither he nor the many people around him who corroborated the killing had seen it themselves.

Talk of rape and killing inside the Dome was so pervasive that it prompted a steady stream of evacuees to begin leaving Aug. 31, braving thigh-high foul waters on Poydras Street. Many said they were headed back to homes in flooded neighborhoods.

"There's people getting raped and killed in there," said Lisa Washington of Algiers, who had come to the Dome with about 25 relatives and friends. "People are getting diseases. It's like we're in Afghanistan. We're fighting for our lives right now."

One of her relatives nodded. "They've had about 14 rapes in there," he said.

The official word

In many cases, authorities gave credibility to portraits of violence broadcast around the world.

Compass told Winfrey on Sept. 6 that "some of the little babies (are) getting raped" in the Dome. Nagin backed it with his own tale of horrors: "They have people standing out there, have been in that frickin' Superdome for five days watching dead bodies, watching hooligans killing people, raping people."

But both men have since pulled back to a degree.

"The information I had at the time, I thought it was credible," Compass said, conceding his earlier statements were false. Asked for the source of the information, Compass said he didn't remember.

Nagin frankly acknowledged that he doesn't know the extent of the mayhem that occurred inside the Dome and the Convention Center – and may never.

"I'm having a hard time getting a good body count," he said.

Compass said rumors had often crippled authorities' response to reported lawlessness, sending badly needed resources to respond to situations that turned out not to exist. He offered his own intensely personal example: The day after the storm, he heard "some civilians" talking about how a band of armed thugs had invaded the Ritz-Carlton hotel and started raping women – including his 24-year-old daughter, who stayed there through the storm. He rushed to the scene only to find that although a group of men had tried to enter the hotel, they weren't armed and were easily turned back by police.

Compass, however, promulgated some of the unfounded rumors himself, in interviews in which he characterized himself and his officers as outgunned warriors taking out armed bands of thugs at every turn.

"People would be shooting at us, and we couldn't shoot back because of the families," Compass told a reporter from the (Bridgeport) Connecticut Post who interviewed him at the Saints' Monday Night Football game in New York, where he was the guest of NFL Commissioner Paul Tagliabue. "All we could do is rush toward the flash."

Compass added that he and his officers succeeded in wrestling 30 weapons from criminals using the follow-the-muzzle-flash technique, the story said.

"We got 30 that way," Compass was quoted as saying.

Asked about the muzzle-flash story last week, Compass said, "That really happened" to Winn's SWAT team at the Convention Center.

But Winn, when asked about alleged shootouts in a separate interview, said his unit saw muzzle flashes and heard gunshots only one time. Despite aggressively frisking a number of suspects, the team recovered no weapons. His unit never found anyone who had been shot.

Many soldiers and humanitarian workers now agree that although a number of bad actors committed violent or criminal acts, the evacuees responded well considering the hell they endured.

"These people – our people – did nothing wrong," said Sherry Watters of the state Department of Social Services, who was working with the medical unit at the Dome and noted the crowd's mounting frustration. "No human should have to live like that for even a minute."

Crowds pitch in

As the authorities finally mobilized buses to evacuate the Dome on Sept. 2, many evacuees were nearing the breaking point. Baldwin said soldiers could not have controlled the crowd much longer. They ejected a handful of people attempting to start a riot, screaming at soldiers and pushing crowds to revolt.

"We're not prisoners of war – y'all are treating us like evacuees and detainees!" he recalled one of them shouting.

But many others sought to quiet such voices. On the deck outside the Dome on Sept. 1, the day before buses arrived, preachers took it upon themselves to lead the agitated crowd in prayer and song.

"Everybody needs to help the soldiers," Baldwin recalled one of them saying. "We're all family here."

About 15 others joined the medical operation, as people collapsed from heat and exhaustion every few minutes, Baldwin said.

"Some of these guys look like thugs, with pants hanging down around their asses," he said. "But they were working their asses off, grabbing litters and running with people to the (New Orleans) Arena" next door, which housed the medical operation.

As the Dome cleared out Sept. 3, Beron, the National Guard commander, fashioned a plan to deal with the dead. He knew of the six bodies in the freezer, but expected far more. He and an Ohio National Guard commander sent 450 Ohio troops to search every nook of the Dome, top to bottom. They told them to mark locations of bodies on a map of the Dome, to rope off suspected crime scenes, and leave a chemical light sticks next to each one so they could be retrieved later.

"I fully expected to find more bodies, both homicides and natural causes," he said.

They found nothing.

Waiver allowed operation of bus that burned in Texas

Governor wanted evacuation vehicles

By Rick Lyman
New York Times

AP PHOTO

Investigators with the National Transportation Safety Board expect to spend 12 to 18 months finding out why this bus caught fire on the side of Interstate 45 near Wilmer, Texas, early Friday, killing 24 of its 38 elderly passengers.

HOUSTON — Federal investigators on Saturday were poring over the skeletal frame of the charred bus in which 24 residents of a living center for the elderly had died while trying to escape from Hurricane Rita. As they looked into the fire, fresh details were emerging about the vehicle and the company that operated it.

The bus, run by Global Limo of McAllen, Texas, burst into flames and exploded on the side of Interstate 45 early Friday. It was carrying 38 frail residents of the Brighton Gardens home in Bellaire, Texas, away from the expected path of Hurricane Rita to a facility in Dallas.

Mark Cross, a spokesman for the Texas Department of Transportation, said Saturday morning that the bus's registration expired in July and that the vehicle had been taken out of service. But it was allowed back on the road because of a waiver signed last week by Gov. Rick Perry of Texas intended to get as many vehicles as possible involved in the hurricane evacuation and relief effort.

"I direct that all requirements concerning motor carrier registration, single-state registration, and international registration plan, and international fuel tax agreement be suspended for motor carriers traveling within or into Texas to assist with relief efforts," the governor wrote in a letter to Richard Williamson, chairman of the Texas Transportation Commission.

The waiver — for all commercial vehicles, not just buses — also temporarily suspended limits on the number of hours those vehicles could be operated. The bus that exploded had been on the road for more than 14 hours, traveling from Bellaire, a few miles southwest of downtown Houston, to within 15 miles of its destination when the accident occurred at 6:30 a.m. near Wilmer, Texas.

"I ask all Texas law enforcement and other federal and state officials to honor this letter as a blanket permit," Perry wrote.

There were no indications of safety problems with the bus, only that its registration had expired, Cross said.

On Sunday morning, in an interview on NBC's "Meet the Press," Perry said the waiver of registration that he ordered for buses was not a waiver of safety standards. "That type of registration didn't have anything to do with the safety standards that are required," he said. "So if we had to all do it again, probably do the same thing because it's important to get people out of harm's way."

The Federal Motor Carrier Safety Administration said that drivers for Global had been ordered to stop driving five times in the past 33 months, mostly for infractions regarding bus logs. In its most recent federal inspection, in 2004, the company was rated as "satisfactory," with no evidence of major safety problems in recent years.

Global filed for bankruptcy in February, although a lawyer for an owner said Friday that this had not affected the safety of the vehicles.

Global's offices are in a white, flat-topped structure with green trim, with a mobile home parked to one side, on a commercial strip separating McAllen from the southern suburb of Pharr. On Saturday afternoon, a man identifying himself as Mark Cooper, a San Antonio lawyer for Global and its president, James Maples, emerged from the business and declined to answer questions.

"We're not going to comment on the bus or anything else at this moment, until this investigation is further along," Cooper said.

Then, he offered a written statement, the second the company has released, in which Global expressed sorrow for the loss of life and promised to cooperate with investigators.

Johnny Partain, a former oil industry engineer who now runs a company that installs generators in McAllen, has been embroiled for years in a lawsuit with Maples over a 1997 investment he made in Global. Partain said he warned a judge more than a year ago that Global's buses were dangerous and ill-maintained.

"I told them this was going to happen," Partain said. "I've personally driven those buses. I know what condition they're in."

Keith Holloway, a spokesman for the National Transportation Safety Board, said a dozen investigators arrived in Dallas on Friday and were beginning to sift through the wreckage on Saturday morning. It was just the beginning of what is expected to be a 12- to 18-month effort to discover the cause of the accident.

The explosion stopped traffic on I-45 during the evacuation of Houston and the Gulf Coast, creating a 20-mile traffic jam that worsened what had already been a chaotic endeavor.

The authorities have not yet released the names of either the dead or the bus driver, who was released from the hospital Friday.

"We're still interviewing survivors," said Don Pertiz, a sheriff's spokesman. "We want to be as precise and painstaking as possible. It's going to take a while."

Brighton Gardens had dispatched two buses to the Dallas area on Thursday. The other one got through without incident. Ten of those who survived the crash were taken to Parkland Memorial Hospital. By Saturday, seven had been released. Two of the others were in stable condition, and the third in good condition. A spokeswoman for the Baylor University Medical Center said four survivors were treated and released to a nursing home on Friday afternoon.

Eyewitnesses and at least one surviving passenger said that smoke began pouring from a wheel well of the bus shortly after the driver changed a tire. The driver pulled the smoke-filled vehicle over to the roadside, and was struggling to evacuate the passengers when the explosions occurred, presumably from oxygen canisters some occupants used.

There are no specific federal regulations for buses or for training bus drivers on how to transport oxygen canisters. On Friday, the federal Transportation Department issued new guidelines restricting the number of canisters in passenger compartments to one per passenger, and only when medically necessary.

Katrina took homes, but the mail still comes

Carriers deliver along Miss. coast

By Vicki Smith
Associated Press writer

BILOXI, MISS. — To most folks, the mountains of rubble along U.S. 90 look the same. But Deborah Johnson knows what the splintered boards, ruined furniture and tumbled bricks once were.

"That was a pawn shop. That was a waffle shop," she says, pointing over the steering wheel, then pulling out of the parking lot of the Edgewater Inn. "And this is the only hotel left on the beach."

Johnson, 42, has delivered the mail in Biloxi for 12 years. Since Hurricane Katrina, though, some of her route is barely recognizable. The postal worker lost at least 200 of 1,100 customers.

Near the Edgewater sits a battered barge decked out like a pirate ship, the skeletal remains of Treasure Bay casino. A half-mile away, on the wrong side of the road, sits The President casino.

But it's the ancient oaks that really get to her.

"You look at the trees and you see everybody's clothes," Johnson says. "It just gives me chills."

Especially the purple clothes, a color favored by one of her elderly customers. Johnson does not know what became of her.

A month after Katrina, the Postal Service is still struggling to connect customers with their mail, storing as much as they deliver on some routes and hoping for more change-of-address cards. They've received more than 25,000 so far, but manager Jerry Wiecks says he is still running out of places to stash the backlog.

In some southern Mississippi neighborhoods, carriers were back on their beats two days after the storm, says Postal Service spokeswoman Beth Barnett.

In Biloxi, though, workers emptied mud-soaked mail from collection boxes, dried it on the floor over several days and put as much as possible back into circulation. A little more than two weeks later, they started delivering.

The first day, Johnson sat in her truck and cried.

"You know who's just built a new home," she says. "You know who's got a job and who doesn't."

She drives past a low-rent apartment complex whose tenants had little money and no transportation.

"A lot of them probably stayed," she says. "You just wonder, are they alive?"

She drops a bundle of mail at Beauvoir, the badly damaged Civil War-era home of Jefferson Davis, the only president of the Confederacy. She leaves a package on Brady Drive for Terrence Young, whose home is nothing more than beams and lattice.

"It's weird delivering where there's no structure," she says.

But the moment passes.

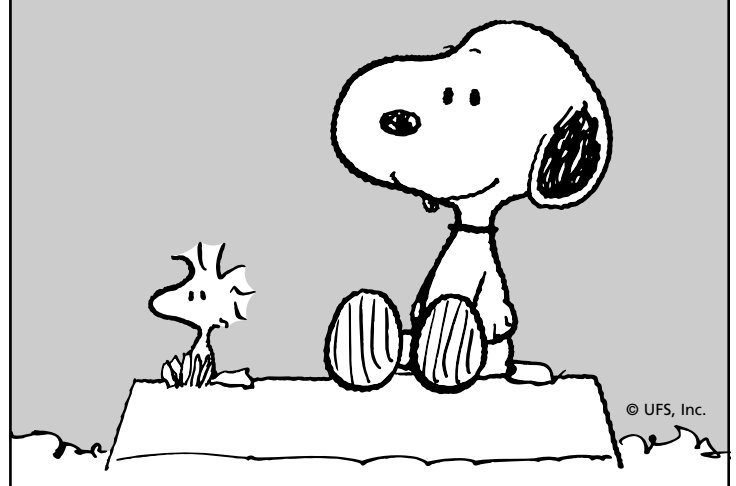
"Everybody's just so happy to be alive. We're all just so thankful," she says. "Who cares about structures?"

Across town, carrier Ronnie Kostmayer walks up Trafalgar Street, past boarded-up, tarp-covered homes and piles of debris that get smaller by the day. At 2374, he wades past ruined recliners and appliances to reach a mailbox leaning against a tree.

"If the house is gone and the box is there, we're going to deliver it," says Kostmayer, 54, who has carried the mail for 32 years. "We'll watch for a few days, and if they don't pick it up, we'll bring it back in, but we're going to give them service."

At the next house, 57-year-old Dan Shearin rushes out.

"I'm getting to really love and appreciate the postman," he says. "I grew up in the country, and the thing we looked forward to was the mailman showing up. He always had some apple pie and a cup of coffee, and he was our friend. He was our only way to communicate."



After Katrina, Shearin lost all high-tech ways of talking to people, including e-mail and his $150 cell phone.

"The mail is the most reliable communication system we ever had and ever will have," he says.

The first post-Katrina mail Shearin got was a letter from the Federal Emergency Management Agency telling him he wouldn't get any money. That, and a telephone bill.

Kostmayer laughs.

"Sometimes we bring bad news, too."

Rita shows flaws in evacuation process

Terrorist strike could be deadly

By Nedra Pickler
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — The 14-hour lines of traffic fleeing Houston, complete with cars that ran out of gas, show that four years after the Sept. 11 attacks, it is difficult to evacuate a major metropolitan area.

Experts say the consequences could be far more deadly in the event of a radiological or other terrorist strike.

"The nightmare that we all have is that, God forbid, there's a terrorist attack of some kind on a major American city that requires evacuation without warning," said Sen. Joe Lieberman, D-Conn.

"We need to be better prepared," said Lieberman, the top Democrat on the Senate Homeland Security Committee, on CNN's "Late Edition."

President Bush has ordered the Homeland Security Department to review disaster plans for every major metropolitan area. Experts say the slow pace of evacuations in Houston and New Orleans shows the need for changes to get people out of harm's way in a more urgent emergency.

"You have to accept the possibility that a major portion of the people will be left behind," said Roger Cressey, a former antiterrorism official in the Clinton and Bush administrations. "You may have to write some of them off in far larger numbers than people realize."

Cressey said the answer is not simply giving local governments more money to improve emergency operation plans.

Lawmakers said they plan to address the issue.

"You would think four years after 9/11, with billions of dollars spent to improve our emergency preparedness, that the response to Katrina would be far crisper, far better coordinated and not marred by failures at all levels of government," said Republican Sen. Susan Collins of Maine, who heads the Senate Homeland Security Committee.

Cressey said there must be plans in place to move the poor and disadvantaged. Thousands of them were left behind in New Orleans after Katrina.

There have been no reports yet of deaths directly caused by Rita. But in the evacuation, a bus carrying nursing home evacuees caught fire, killing two dozen.

Experts said authorities must be prepared to turn two-way streets and highways into one-way evacuation routes with maximum traffic flowing out of the city. Many people fleeing New Orleans and Houston were stuck in traffic jams while the side of the highways leading into the city went virtually unused until the end of the evacuation.

"I think we need to fine-tune the planning so that contra-lanes are open earlier so that all the outgoing traffic can go on both sides of a freeway earlier than was done in Rita," said Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison, R-Texas.

"I think that will be our added lesson for Rita from Katrina," she said on ABC's "This Week."

White House press secretary Scott McClellan on Saturday rejected the notion that there were problems with Houston's evacuation and said the president was told it had gone well. He also stressed that states are responsible for evacuations, although the federal government has a role to assist local officials.

"This was an unprecedented number of people who were being evacuated," McClellan said Sunday. "And they got a large number of people out of there.

"Obviously from situations like this you learn lessons and you look at ways to improve in the future. Everybody understands the importance of assessing how things worked and taking steps to improve in the future."

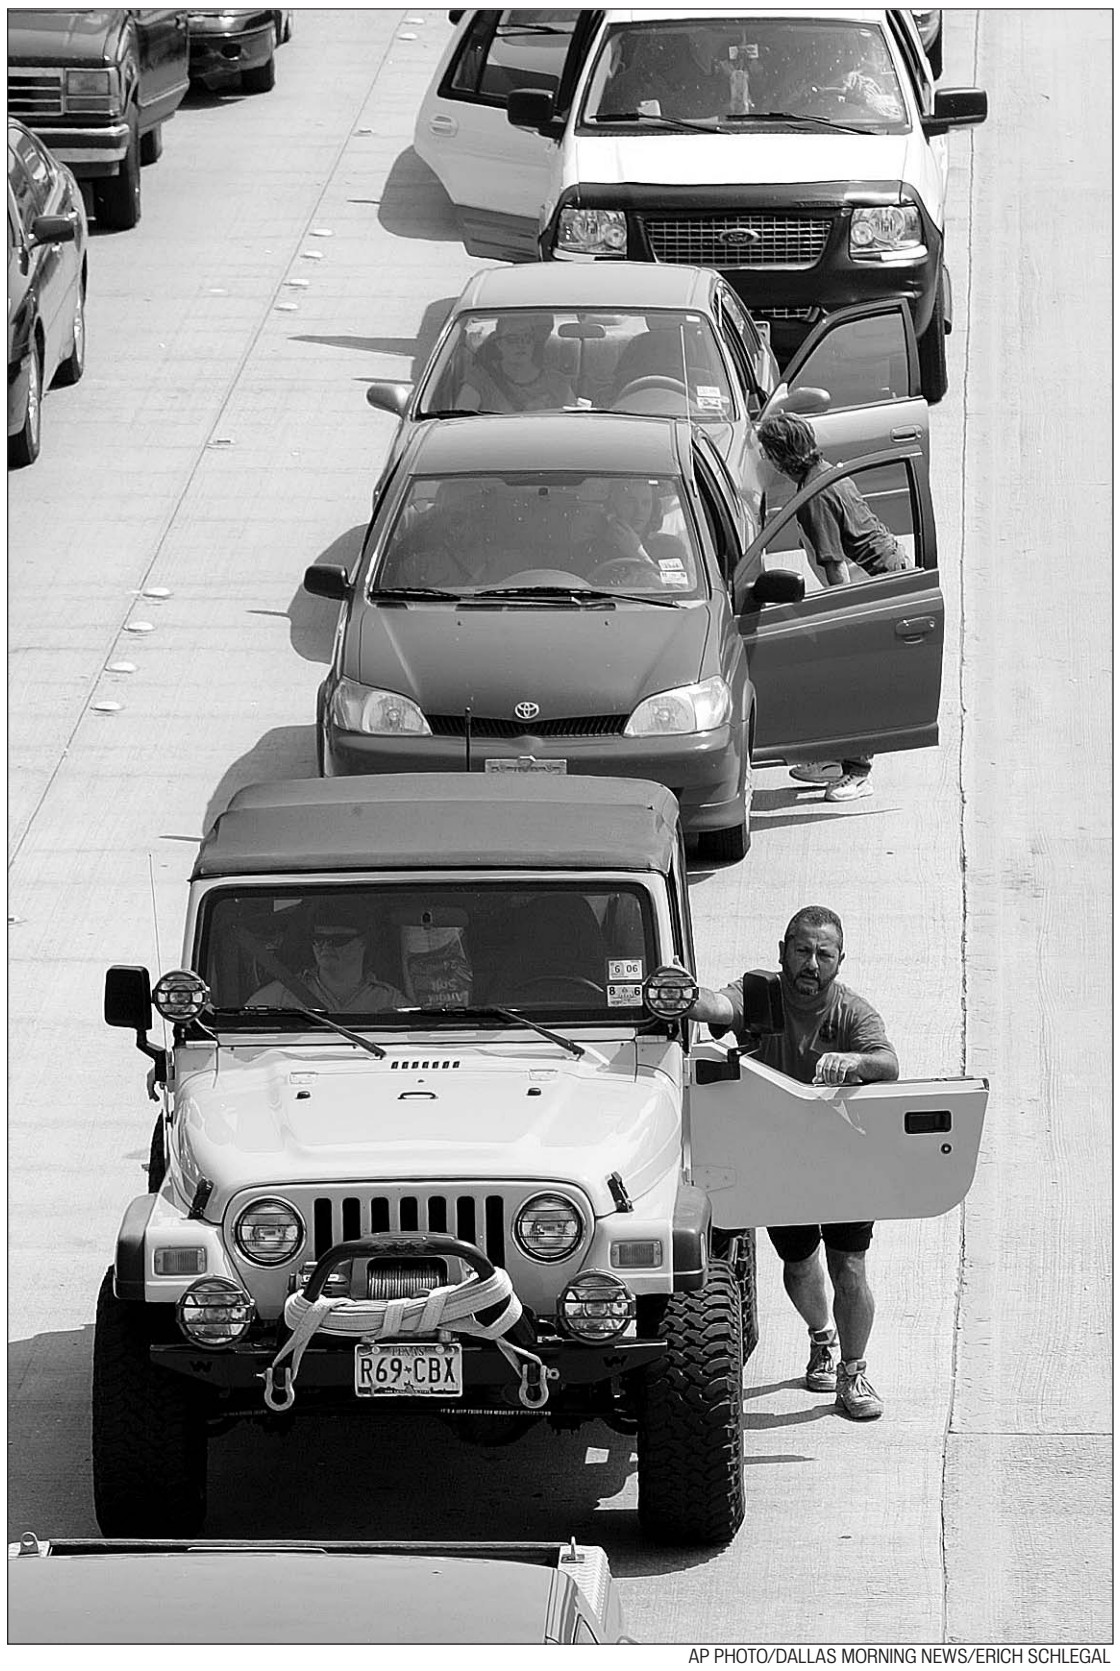
Local preparations vary and in some cases are nonexistent:

▶ New York City officials plan to rely heavily on mass transit to get people out of the city.

▶ Los Angeles officials concede they don't have proper plans for a mass evacuation or shelter for those who are left homeless by an earthquake or terrorist attack.

▶ Washington had a mass evacuation drill after this year's Independence Day fireworks on the National Mall, which revealed glitches that officials say they are working to fix.

▶ Kansas Gov. Kathleen Sebelius has ordered officials in her state to identify by name everyone likely to be bypassed in an evacuation.



▶ Milwaukee leaders realized they have misplaced their evacuation plan, devised during the Cold War.

"If this isn't a wake up call for real disaster planning, I don't know what will be," Cressey said.

The evacuation before Rita was much more successful than it was in Mississippi and Louisiana as Katrina approached — in large part because citizens seemed to take the danger more seriously after seeing so many people stranded in flooded New Orleans.

"The fact is, we've never had an evacuation this size before: 2.7 million people," said Sen. John Cornyn, R-Texas.

"Maybe that should have been handled on a different time basis, but the good news is that people ultimately did get out," he said. "And fortunately Rita did the rest by taking a right-hand turn and avoiding the major population centers in our state."

Houston reawakening after Rita

Flights resume; businesses reopening

By Kristen Hays
Associated Press writer

HOUSTON — Airlines resumed service and cars flowed easily over freeways as Houston flickered back to life Sunday, avoiding at least for now a repeat of the gridlock that plagued the evacuation before Hurricane Rita.

There were signs the eerie emptiness was lifting in the nation's fourth-largest city: More gas stations offered fuel, and supermarkets, drug stores and restaurants opened their doors.

At Pappas Seafood, a sign read, "Come on in, open at 11. Incredible!" The marquee at Kenneally's Irish Pub read: "Rita who?"

A supermarket near downtown was open, even though no produce was expected to arrive until Tuesday, and the packaged meat and dairy aisles were depleted. Still, the store was bustling within 15 minutes.

"I was without power yesterday for about five hours, but now that it's back on, I'm hungry and need some beef," said Yvette Gatling, a 34-year-old lawyer.

It was the first day of a staggered re-entry plan drawn up by authorities in hopes of avoiding a recurrence of the massive gridlock that stalled freeways and temporarily stranded some Houstonians as they fled days before Rita.

On Sunday, only the northwest quadrant of the city was encouraged to return, but cars were streaming back to other parts of the metropolis as well. Traffic appeared to be moving smoothly.

Meanwhile, the city's two main airports, Bush Intercontinental and the smaller Hobby, resumed service Sunday morning. They were shut down Friday as Rita bore down on the Gulf Coast.

Continental Airlines, based in Houston, was operating 249 flights out of the city, with plans to restore its smaller Continental Express and Continental Connection branches today.

More gas stations opened, with lines of motorists eager to fill up snaking around blocks.

Groundskeeper Frank Mendoza, 64, was mowing grass in front of a building next to a Citgo station where lines were getting longer as a tanker truck resupplied the pumps with fuel.

"We've got the gas. People just need to be patient," Mendoza said. "I'm thinking of filling up myself, but all I need to do is top off, because I planned ahead."

Fuel shortages posed perhaps the biggest challenge to the massive exodus ahead of the storm. Cars were marooned on the main freeways out of town, and buses had to deliver evacuees to shelters.

On Sunday, Houston Mayor Bill White urged essential employees to return to work in the city, including people who work at grocery stores and gas stations.

"There is some fuel available in tankers, but they can't deliver it if you're not there," he said.

CenterPoint Energy, the main power provider for greater Houston, reported 300,000 customers without electricity Sunday, down from 600,000 a day earlier.

Some residents who were still without power found cool sanctuary at a movie multiplex, where employees geared up to open the 24 screens at noon with popcorn popping, hot dogs heating and soda machines stocked with ice.

The upscale Galleria mall was open. Armani's doors were closed, but J. Crew and Kate Spade did brisk business. Fast-food establishments started opening, too — and some had drive-through lines that rivaled the gas stations.

The lawns of mansions in River Oaks, the city's glitziest neighborhood, by midmorning were dotted with groundskeepers picking up branches and blowing leaves.

A day after Rita spared Houston severe damage by veering east toward the Louisiana-Texas state line, skies were clear and temperatures soared to nearly 100 degrees.

"The city is half open right now. It's kind of unusual," said Ewing King, 46, making his way around a jogging path at Rice University.

Some businesses used Sunday to prepare to reopen later. Starbucks barista Andrew Soliz, 23, attracted attention as he carried small black tables out of a Starbucks — only to disappoint anyone craving a frappuccino.

"But the minute you open the doors, people start coming," he said.

Mississippi charities see donations dwindle

Hurricane relief is on front burner

By Valerie Bauman
Associated Press writer

JACKSON, Miss. — This past week Tina Dyess had to do something she hates: She turned away nine children seeking help.

She runs Hope Village for Children, a Meridian charity that provides foster children with shelter, food and psychological care. But she's frustrated that more children are in need since Hurricane Katrina devastated coastal towns 170 miles to the south, yet there's less money to meet those needs.

"You're not sure where else that child will go," Dyess said. "The feeling is that there's not another bed, and you try not to wonder what's happening to the kids. You just have to know you are doing all you can."

People across the nation are reaching deep into their pockets to help victims of Hurricane Katrina, but in the meantime, other Mississippi charities are forgotten. Donations that normally would go to nonprofits are being funneled into hurricane relief, even though the same charities are also trying to help victims.

Many nonprofits have temporarily halted their fundraising activities, both out of respect for hurricane victims, and because it's difficult to be heard among the many voices of need.

The Mississippi chapter of the National Multiple Sclerosis Society has delayed several fundraising events, including its annual bike tour.

"We have heard from several individuals that they are having trouble raising money," said Becky Traweek, the chapter's regional manager. "We are concerned for the MS Society and the clients we support."

The organization has worked to help coastal residents living with MS move to safe locations. While the charity supports the hurricane relief effort, people living with multiple sclerosis and other debilitating diseases continue with daily struggles that accompany chronic illness.

"These diseases are not going to go away," Traweek said.

The Make-A-Wish Foundation of Mississippi is also postponing several fundraising events because of the hurricane, said T.J. McSparrin, president and CEO of the foundation, which grants the wishes of children with life-threatening medical conditions.

That's money lost as Make-A-Wish has struggles of its own. It lost a Gulf Coast office to the storm and it's having a hard time contacting many of its volunteers and benefactors.

"It's a little overwhelming when you think about it," McSparrin said. "Not only has our staff been impacted, our volunteers have been impacted, our children have been displaced. Some of them have had to delay their wish."

Charities may have cause for hope. Although Mississippi is the poorest state in the nation, it's also the most generous, according to the Catalogue for Philanthropy.

Mississippians give more of their income to charities than any other state, ranking No. 1 on the generosity index generated by the catalogue.

Charities across the state know that, and are optimistic that Mississippians will remember them.

"We are working as fast and as furious as we can to make sure that the kids are taken care of," Dyess said. "And there's going to be a time when we come back and ask for help."

Evacuee kicked out of shelter

The Associated Press

BOURNE, MASS. – One of the Hurricane Katrina evacuees staying at a military base on Cape Cod was asked to leave because of "repeated disruptive behavior," an official said.

Allen "Tattoo" Gubser, 39, of New Orleans, was asked to leave Camp Edwards on the sprawling Massachusetts Military Reservation on Friday, said Katie Ford, a spokeswoman for the Office of Public Safety.

Ford said Gubser violated several rules at the reservation, which also houses Otis Air National Guard Base. She said he was frequently drunk, got into arguments and threatened others with his dog.

"While we want to be welcoming to the guests who are here, we also have to respect the fact that Otis is an active military base," Ford said.

Group calls 13 lawmakers 'most corrupt' in Congress

Jefferson on ethics violation list

By Chuck Neubauer
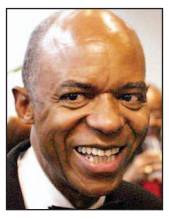
Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — A watchdog group, naming what it calls "the 13 most corrupt members of Congress," is calling for ethics investigations of some of the most prominent leaders on Capitol Hill in a report to be released today.

Citizens for Responsibility and Ethics in Washington says in its report that the 13 members, among them Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist (R-Tenn.) and House Majority Whip Roy Blunt (R-Mo.), might have violated a variety of congressional ethics rules.

The bipartisan list includes New Orleanian, Rep. William Jefferson.



Jefferson is one of two House members whose residences have been searched as part of separate federal criminal investigations. The other, Randy "Duke" Cunningham (R-Calif.), also is named on the watchdog group's list.

Three of those named on the list — Sen. Conrad Burns (R-Mont.) and Reps. Bob Ney (R-Ohio) and Tom Feeney (R-Fla.) — were cited for their dealings with onetime super-lobbyist Jack Abramoff, who is the subject of congressional and federal grand jury investigations. Abramoff was indicted last month on fraud charges relating to a Florida business deal. He has pleaded not guilty.

"They all violated ethics rules," Melanie Sloan, the watchdog group's executive director, said of the 13 members of Congress on its list. She criticized both political parties for what she said was a failure to police ethics.

James Pendleton, a spokesman for Burns, dismissed the group's report as "pure politics." Ney's press secretary, Brian Walsh, said: "We don't give Melanie Sloan and her liberal organization an ounce of credibility."

Its report, titled "Beyond DeLay: The 13 Most Corrupt Members of Congress," is based on news articles and other documents, the watchdog group said. It made the report available to the Los Angeles Times.

Rep. William Jefferson
Louisiana congressman scrutinized for his role in overseas business deal

Citizens for Responsibility and Ethics in Washington "was compelled to research and release a report on these corrupt members because the ethics committees in both the House and Senate are completely inert," Sloan said. "The report calls for the House and Senate to act to investigate and take appropriate action against them for these violations of the rules."

The 13 members of Congress recommended for investigation by the watchdog group are:

▶ Sen. Bill Frist: The report accuses him of violating federal campaign finance laws in how he disclosed a campaign loan. It also calls for an inquiry over his recent sale of stock in HCA Inc., his family's hospital corporation. The sale has raised questions about possible insider dealing.

▶ Rep. Roy Blunt: The report criticizes him for trying to insert provisions into bills that would have benefited, in one case, a client of his lobbyist son and in another case, the employer of his lobbyist girlfriend, now his wife.

▶ Sen. Conrad Burns: The report says that questions arose over $3 million in appropriations he earmarked for an Indian tribe in Michigan that was a client of lobbyist Abramoff. The senator received substantial campaign contributions from Abramoff and various clients.

▶ Rep. Bob Ney: The report says the chairman of the House Administration Committee went on a golf outing to Scotland in 2002, arranged by Abramoff, at a time when the congressman was trying to insert a provision into legislation to benefit one of Abramoff's tribal clients.

▶ Rep. Tom Feeney: The report says he incorrectly reported that a golf trip to Scotland with Abramoff in 2003 was paid for by the National Center for Public Policy Research, which denied it. A Feeney aide said the congressman had been misled.

▶ Rep. Richard Pombo, R.-Calif.: He paid his wife and brother $357,325 in campaign funds in the last four years, the report says.

▶ Rep. Maxine Waters, D.-Calif.: The report cites a December 2004 Los Angeles Times investigation disclosing how members of the congresswoman's family have made more than $1 million in the last eight years by doing business with companies, candidates and causes that Waters has helped.

▶ Sen. Rick Santorum, R.-Pa.: The report says he encountered controversy over disclosures that Pennsylvania taxpayers paid for his children's schooling while they lived in Virginia.

▶ Reps. Randy Cunningham, R.-Calif. and William Jefferson, D-New Orleans: Both congressional veterans are under federal investigation. Cunningham, who has announced that he will not run for reelection, faces questions over his dealings with a defense contractor who allegedly overpaid him when he purchased Cunningham's house. Jefferson is under scrutiny for his role in an overseas business deal.

▶ Rep. Charles Taylor, R-N.C.: The report says that questions have been raised about his private business interests.

▶ Rep. Marilyn N. Musgrave, R-Colo., and Rep. Rick Renzi, R-Ariz.): Both second-term House members encountered criticisms tied to campaign activities, the report says. Musgrave was accused of misusing her congressional office for campaign purposes. Renzi was accused of financing portions of his 2002 campaign with improper loans.

Crime rate for 2004 stays at 30-year low

Inundated prisons, more cops helping

By Mark Sherman
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON – The nation's crime rate was unchanged last year, holding at the lowest levels since the government began surveying crime victims in 1973, the Justice Department reported Sunday.

Since 1993, violent crime as measured by victim surveys has fallen by 57 percent and property crime by 50 percent. That includes a 9 percent drop in violent crime from 2001-2002 to 2003-2004.

The 2004 violent crime rate — assault, sexual assault and armed robbery — was 21.4 victims for every 1,000 people age 12 and older. That amounts to about one violent crime victim for every 47 U.S. residents.

By comparison, there were 22.6 violent crime victims per 1,000 people in 2003. The Bureau of Justice Statistics said the difference between the rates in 2003 and 2004 was statistically insignificant.

Murder is not counted because the bureau's study is based on statements by crime victims. In a separate report based on preliminary police data, the FBI found a 3.6 percent drop between 2003 and 2004 — from 16,500 to 15,910. Chicago was largely responsible for the decrease.

The survey put the rate for property crimes of burglary, theft and motor vehicle theft in 2004 at 161 for every 1,000 people, compared with 163 the year before.

Many explanations have been advanced for decline in violent crime, including the record prison population of more than 2 million people, the addition of 100,000 police officers since the mid-1990s and even a deterrent effect that terrorism might have had on street crime.

"Success has 1,000 fathers," said Mark Kleiman, an expert on crime control policy who teaches at UCLA.

Kleiman said the victim survey probably does not take sufficient account of a growing problem with gang violence that has been widely reported across the country. The leveling off of the crime rate also should be viewed as disappointing, he said.

"My sense is that complacency is not justified. This rate means we're down to about twice the level of crime when I was growing up in the 1950s," he said.

The Justice Policy Institute, which advocates alternatives to incarceration, said the report offered good news and further reason to "begin investing in community-based policing and local organizations that succeed in increasing public safety."

The National Crime Victimization Survey is based on annual interviews by Census Bureau personnel with about 150,000 people at least 12 years old. The FBI does a separate crime study based on reports it receives from thousands of law enforcement agencies nationwide.

Bush high court nominee must walk a narrow line

Supreme Court jurist to be under scrutiny

By David D. Kirkpatrick
New York Times

WASHINGTON — As President Bush moves to fill the second vacancy on the Supreme Court, he faces a new challenge in finding a jurist who can not only withstand Democratic scrutiny but hold together the support of Senate Republicans as well.

Polls have shown Bush's approval ratings near the lowest levels of his presidency. And Senate Republican strategists say that since his nomination of Judge John Roberts to the court, members of their conference have grown increasingly willing to disagree with the White House, notably on matters such as stem cell research, Bush's choice for ambassador to the United Nations and the war in Iraq.

Some, including Sen. Bill Frist of Tennessee, the majority leader, and Sen. Sam Brownback of Kansas, a member of the Judiciary Committee, are considering their own bids for the presidency.

Now, both socially conservative and more liberal Republican senators say they may vote against confirmation of the next nominee if the pick leans too far to the left or the right on prominent issues such as abortion rights.

Any Republican defection could provide cover for Democrats who want to oppose confirmation, protecting them politically in Republican-leaning states. Democrats have vowed to dig in for a tough fight over the nominee to succeed Justice Sandra Day O'Connor because she was a pivotal swing vote on the court.

"It is going to be different," said Sen. Lincoln Chafee, R.-R.I., who is socially liberal and has said he will vote to confirm Roberts.

Chafee said he would apply a more skeptical standard to the next nominee because of the balance of the court and might even oppose a jurist similar to Roberts. "I will be looking very carefully" at the next nominee's views on privacy rights, "separation of church and state," and the scope of federal power, he said.

Sen. Olympia Snowe, R-Maine, a Republican who supports abortion rights and has said she will vote to confirm Roberts, took a similar view. She previously voted to confirm some of Bush's appeals court nominees who met stiff liberal opposition, such as Judge Priscilla Owen and Judge Janice Rogers Brown, two people said to be on Bush's short list. But Snowe said she might not support either one for the Supreme Court.

"This is certainly a different level of evaluation," Snowe said, "especially because of the balance of power on the court."

On the conservative side of the party, Brownback and Sen. Tom Coburn of Oklahoma, another member of the Judiciary Committee, devoted much of their time for questioning Roberts to delivering messages to the White House about the importance of overturning precedents supporting abortion rights.

In an interview last week, Brownback said he would vote against a nominee who was not "solid and known" on cultural issues such as abortion, same-sex marriage and religion in public life.

"I think you are going to see a contentious battle regardless of who is nominated," he said, "even if it is Judge Roberts' twin brother."

Underscoring the fine line the nominee must walk, Coburn said he would vote against someone who spoke in agreement or disagreement with the major abortion rights precedents in the next confirmation hearings because that would constitute a prejudging of the issue. "I think if somebody is foolish enough to say that to me," Coburn said, "they are not going to be a good judge."

Blessed - "ADJECTIVE: highly favored or fortunate; characterized by happiness and good fortune."

Prior to Hurricane Katrina, "blessed" was an often used word. Today, as Ray Brandt Toyota and it's employees and families begin the long and arduous rebuilding process, we can now truly understand the meaning of the word "blessed". Our employees, like the residents of Southeast Louisiana have begun the task of rebuilding our homes and our business. We would ask for your support in "Jumpstarting Jefferson", as our Parts, Service, and Sales Departments are open and available to serve any of your needs.

Ray Brandt has authorized the New Car, Used Car, Parts, and Service Departments to provide the citizens of the affected areas with reduced pricing in all departments to help with the rebuilding process. Our new and used car departments sustained no water damage and the damage by the wind to a few of our units provide remarkable savings. Most of the slight damage is not even visible to the eye; rather than save the insurance money, Mr. Brandt would rather pass the savings on to the public as part of his contribution to the "Jumpstarting Jefferson" campaign. This is a very limited opportunity, and availability is restricted.

We have employment opportunities available in the Sales Department, including management availabilities.

Fishing communities 'just obliterated'

RITA, from A-1

Bush visited Texas and Baton Rouge on Sunday to monitor relief efforts but made no public appearances.

Blanco said she told him that Louisiana needs $11.5 billion to repair and rebuild bridges and highways shattered Aug. 29 by Hurricane Katrina, and now by Rita.

She also asked for $20.2 billion to upgrade levees and improve hurricane protection systems from Morgan City to Slidell, she said.

Energy officials are assessing Rita's damage to the concentration of gasoline refineries in the area. Early reports indicated that facilities in Houston fared well, but there were no clear damage reports yet for refineries in Port Arthur and Lake Charles.

Rita's powerful eastern side roared over relatively lightly populated marshes of southwestern Louisiana early Saturday. By Sunday, it was clear that while the storm had had few targets, it crushed and drowned the few small settlements scattered before it.

After a flyover, Blanco reported that fishing communities in lower Cameron Parish were swept away.

"Everything is just obliterated," Blanco told a roomful of workers at the emergency operations center in Lake Charles. Only whitecaps marked the place where Holly Beach, a fishing and resort spot, once stood.

"I could not tell where the Gulf started and ended," she said.

Cameron and Vermilion parishes were hit hardest.

To the east, an estimated 40 percent of Terrebonne Parish was underwater, said Kenneth Smith, president and chief executive officer of T.B. Smith Inc., an engineering and environmental firm familiar with the parish.

Smith estimated that 25,000 people were displaced in Terrebonne, with 10,000 homes and businesses flooded.

"It's kind of scary, because it's a Category 3 that hit 300 miles to the west of us," he said.

Nearly 4,000 National Guard members followed the storm into southwest Louisiana early Saturday equipped with helicopters, boats, high-water vehicles and chainsaws for search-and-rescue efforts, damage assessments, debris removal and road clearing, a spokesman for the Office of Emergency Preparedness said Sunday.

National Guard Lt. Col. Bill Doran said the Guard also was busy setting up several sites to distribute water, ice and military rations.

In Lake Charles, Interstate 10 was closed at the Calcasieu Bridge, officials said. The bridge was struck by two barges during Rita.

In more heavily populated Texas cities to the west of Rita's landfall, officials reported widespread property damage, roofless homes and businesses, and flooded streets.

But there were no deaths reported from weather effects in Louisiana or Texas.

Only one death was attributed directly to weather from Rita: A man was killed when a tornado destroyed his mobile home in Mississippi. On Thursday, 24 elderly evacuees were killed in a bus fire near Dallas.

"Even though people right here in Beaumont and Port Arthur and this part of Orange County really got whacked, the rest of the state missed a bullet," Texas Gov. Rick Perry told the Associated Press before a flyover of the Beaumont area.

Though Harris County Tax Collector-Assessor Paul Bettencourt said Rita caused "tens of millions of dollars" in structural damage in the Houston area, officials still were spared the task of managing a seriously storm-ravaged city. But they were left with another daunting challenge: managing the return of more than 2 million evacuees whose flights from the city Thursday created a history-making traffic jam.

Perry and Houston Mayor Bill White pleaded with residents to heed their instructions to return in phases, which might minimize the crush. The city closed its public schools until Wednesday.

But it was not clear if this would help.

"I'm not going to wait for our good neighbors to the north to get home and take a nap before I ask our good people to come home," said John Willy, the top elected official in Brazoria County, southwest of Houston. "Our people are tired of the state's plan. They have a plan too, and it's real simple: They plan to come home when they want."

The Federal Emergency Management Agency, in charge of helping storm-tossed Louisiana residents get their lives back in order, had processed 910,383 applications for financial help as of Sunday morning, FEMA spokeswoman Rosemarie Hunter said.

Most of the $1.504 billion paid out to individuals and households has gone to victims of Hurricane Katrina, Hunter said. $9.6 million of it went to pay for things such as medical and funeral expenses, she said.

Payments are going out to hurricane victims four times a day in the form of checks or electronic funds transfers into their bank accounts. Post office boxes are being set up to receive checks for people living in shelters, and banks will establish accounts for individual storm victims to get their FEMA money electronically, she said.

On another front, Hunter said 100,000 housing units are en route to the state for Louisianans whose homes were destroyed by Katrina or Rita.

A pent-up desire to return was evident in the flurry of moving vans seen in the business district and in a few residents who managed to slip past military checkpoints en route to their homes.

At dawn Sunday, registered nurse Jessica Rodney, a California resident who bought a house recently in eastern New Orleans — an area mostly overrun by floodwaters after Hurricane Katrina — was halted at a checkpoint where Veterans Memorial Boulevard crosses the 17th Street Canal.

She said police wouldn't let her drive into New Orleans, so she parked and, when officers weren't looking, started walking. Taping plastic garbage bags over her feet at times when she walked through wet stretches, Rodney was last seen on Robert E. Lee Boulevard near Franklin Avenue in Gentilly.

"I have to check on my house," she said.

Rainwater that had collected in depths of one to two feet through much of Lakeview, a new dash of flooding officials attributed to the shutdown of pumps on the 17th Street Canal after a major floodwall breach there, was steadily receding Sunday. Waters that reached nearly from Robert E. Lee to Harrison Avenue now covered only a portion of the area's streets.

Corps of Engineers spokesman Brigadier Gen. William Grizoli announced during a Baton Rouge briefing that the storm surge that sent waters streaming across the Lower 9th Ward for a second time Friday had dropped sharply and that the latest levee breach had been sealed. Two to six feet of water remained in the residential area west of the Industrial Canal, he said.

From the Upper 9th Ward side of the Claiborne Avenue bridge over the canal, a twin-rotor Chinook helicopter could be seen dropping giant sandbags at the site of the levee breach early Sunday afternoon.

The Chinook wavered slightly in sporadic winds that whipped beneath its blades. Receding canal waters in the near-decimated area exposed bellied-up cars and window frames and sopping wood siding.

Moments after the Chinook's drop, a smaller, orange Sikorsky helicopter hovered close to the sealed breech and dropped a smaller load of sandbags.

A French Quarter that remained eerily dark Saturday night was powered up by Entergy workers at midday Sunday.

"Lights are on in the Quarter," one obviously pleased crew member, Tony Laborde, said as he stood at a corner on Bourbon Street. "Just turned them on. First time in a month."

The resumption of one facet of normalcy in the historic district faced a setback, however, when Entergy was notified of a fire on Burgundy Street and the utility shut down power again. Officials said there would be new efforts today to fully restore power to the district.

Some Quarter businesses were making do without power.

Diners chose from smoked-sausage sandwiches and hamburgers at Stella's restaurant at 1000 Decatur St. on Sunday afternoon. Air conditioning provided by a diesel generator, flowers on the tables, live music and $4 Bloody Marys added to a tenuous sense of regular business in the restaurant.

"People say, 'Thank you, thank you,'" said co-owner Pat Boswell. Asked where the restaurant acquired supplies, Boswell said, "anywhere we can." The restaurant is open from 11 a.m. until a fluid evening closing time that "gets later every night," according to Boswell.

At the Royal Sonesta Hotel in the Quarter, General Manager Hans Wandfluh said that the hotel has stayed open almost continuously since Hurricane Katrina, mostly serving emergency workers, and that he was growing agitated at the reluctance of many business owners he knows to get back into New Orleans and open their doors again. He

WHEN THE LEVEE BREAKS AGAIN

Following Hurricane Katrina's multiple levee breaches, the Army Corps of Engineers scrambled to create temporary breach closures. Four of the seven New Orleans breaches, along the Industrial Canal, were overwhelmed when Hurricane Rita's 8-foot storm surge entered the canal on Friday and Saturday. A look at what happened:

said many people seem "television-drunk" from watching scary hurricane reports and are "so overloaded with information that they have lost focus."

Wandfluh said it is critical that people get back to work quickly, so that the business infrastructure of the city doesn't break down.

"We need clear, concise information for businesses, residents … what to do, what to expect," he said.

Many displaced New Orleanians are nervous about the possibility of looting and other crimes in a city that, thanks to floodwaters and evacuation orders, has become a virtual ghost town.

Law enforcement officials concede that the size of the National Guard presence has been reduced sharply in recent days as federal officials shifted resources toward the Louisiana-Texas border in preparation for Hurricane Rita, but they said the protective force remains strong.

A changing of the guard is obvious in the streets of Orleans Parish as white and blue New Orleans police patrol cars largely replace camouflaged Humvees. Only 1,966 National Guardsmen remained in the city on Sunday, according to Task Force Pelican public affairs officer Maj. Pat Simon. Some troops have followed the path of Hurricane Rita west, performing search and rescue missions. Others have rotated out, replaced by civilian police. Capt. Marlon DeFillo, the New Orleans Police Department spokesman, said 1,450 officers are on duty, working 12-hour shifts.

There were conflicting reports about whether thousands of soldiers from the 82nd Airborne Division of the Army were staying in New Orleans or shipping out.

Capt. Kevin Anderson, commander of the police department's 8th District, based in the Quarter, said he isn't concerned about police staffing in coming days, noting that, in addition to soldiers, as many as 1,000 offices from outside agencies are supplementing the city force. But he conceded that police work is about to get more complicated.

"As more people start coming in, it's obviously going to strain our calls for service," Anderson said on St. Louis Street, near a boarded-up corner shop with a spray-painted sign: "Welcome to the thin blue line."

Cameron Parish deluged by waters from the Gulf

Homes, businesses get a historic pounding

By Jan Moller and Leslie Williams
Staff writers

CAMERON — From several hundred feet above the devastation in Cameron Parish, the rubble from homes and businesses looks like Canal Street at the end of a long and rainy Carnival.

Bits and pieces of homes peek above the murky floodwaters, parts of walls roost in trees.

Hundreds of homes and businesses deconstructed by storm surge and brutal winds mark a trail of misery near the part of the parish not far from the Gulf of Mexio. Homes have been shoved off their foundations, others crushed with only slabs remaining in a brown soup of floodwaters just north of a now relatively calm Gulf.

Such scenes were repeated throughout southwestern Louisiana, where wind damage wasn't as bad as expected but floodwaters from the Gulf rushed into bays and towns.

The storm surge brought saltwater from the Gulf of Mexico north through Vermilion Bay and into the Delcambre Canal. From there, it had nowhere to go but into the homes and businesses of this town of 2,168 residents that straddles the Iberia-Vermilion parish border.

Iberia Parish Sheriff Sid Hebert estimated that one-third of the parish was deluged by storm surge, affecting about 3,000 homes that sit south of U.S. 90 That made it the worst flood that anyone around here could remember. "I've never seen a third of this parish flooded under any conditions," Hebert said.

From the air, it looked as if Erath had been picked up and placed in a shallow lake. Only the goalpost and the highest tier of bleachers of a football stadium could be seen above the water line. In Vermilion Parish, much of the parish remained flooded Sunday. Flooding also plagued Calcasieu Parish, including Lake Charles.

"But we only had moderate damage, mainly confined to roofs and tree loss," said Richard "Dick" Gremillion, director of the Office of Emergency Preparedness for Calcasieu Parish.

The best news: "Nobody was hurt," said Gremillion, who estimated about 15 to 20 percent of Calcasieu Parish was flooded by Rita.

As of late Sunday afternoon, it appeared as though everyone emerged physically unscathed. Hebert said there were no deaths and only a few minor injuries - mostly to rescue workers - associated with the hurricane. By that time, more than 90 percent of the homes in the area had been checked by sheriff's deputies and Marines.

Hebert estimated that 65 percent of the parish population, which was ordered to evacuate, followed those instructions. But in Delcambre, which took the worst flood damage, only 35 percent of residents left before the storm, Hebert said.

Coast Guard officials at the Naval Air Station estimate that they have rescued about 70 people from southwestern Louisiana in the Hurricane Rita rescue efforts.

Hebert said about 700 parish residents displaced by the storm were in local shelters Saturday night. But by Sunday afternoon, more than half of them had left, either to return home or to stay with friends or relatives.

In Delcambre, nearly every building received some flood damage as the water began rising at a rate of one foot every half-hour starting in Saturday's early morning hours. When it crested some 12 hours later, some homes were left with minor damage while others were almost completely submerged. A person's luck depended largely on the proximity to the canal.

Johnny Segura, 44, an offshore dispatcher, lives only a few short blocks from the canal but decided not to heed the mandatory evacuation order for areas south of U.S. 90. He quickly changed his mind about 7:30 a.m. Saturday, when the water in his house got knee-deep. He escaped to his father-in-law's house, which sits on higher ground a few blocks away, but quickly left when the water began rising in that driveway.

On Sunday morning, he was among dozens of local residents who launched boats off Jefferson Island Road at the edge of the floodwaters to check on his home. What he saw confirmed his worst fears. "We lost everything. Everything's floating around. Nothing could be saved," he said, choking back tears.

from Hurricane Rita slammed through, and first responders like Keller were making their initial rounds down Bellaire Drive, now a dead zone that backs up directly to the 17th Street Canal on the Orleans Parish side. Standing on top of the remains of homes that were wiped completely off their slabs when a floodwall collapsed, Keller surveyed what he described as the worst damage he has seen: cars slammed up against trees, walls torn away, houses twisted until they collapsed.

"I can't believe the devastation," he said. "I knew it would be bad, but I didn't know it would be this bad."

Just a block away, on the Jefferson Parish side of the 17th Street Canal, Ronnie Blanchard, 71, chatted with the mailman in front of his modest blue cottage. His dog barked in the yard. His light blue Buick was parked in front of his neatly manicured lawn. An American flag flapped on the flagpole.

Inside Blanchard's bone-dry house, the electricity was back on, clean water was flowing from the tap and the toilets flushed just fine. The day before, he bought groceries at the Winn-Dixie just a short drive from his house. That night, he cooked noodles and red gravy for supper. He and his wife are now home for good.

"I guess God had something to do with it," said Blanchard. "We were spared."

Once symbiotic communities that shared an economy and culture, Orleans and Jefferson parishes are now worlds apart, with residents and businesses returning to the heavily populated suburb, while officials in the city struggle to restore basic services to a ghost town. Hurricane Rita only complicated matters.

The bizarre contrast is the constant topic of conversation among the small cadre of emergency workers, public officials, contractors and journalists who are allowed to move freely between the two hurricane-ravaged areas.

"It's like life as usual over there," said Keller, who has been searching for survivors since the storm hit. "They've got Burger Kings open over there, grocery stores. It's just weird."

Tale of two parishes

Weird, it is.

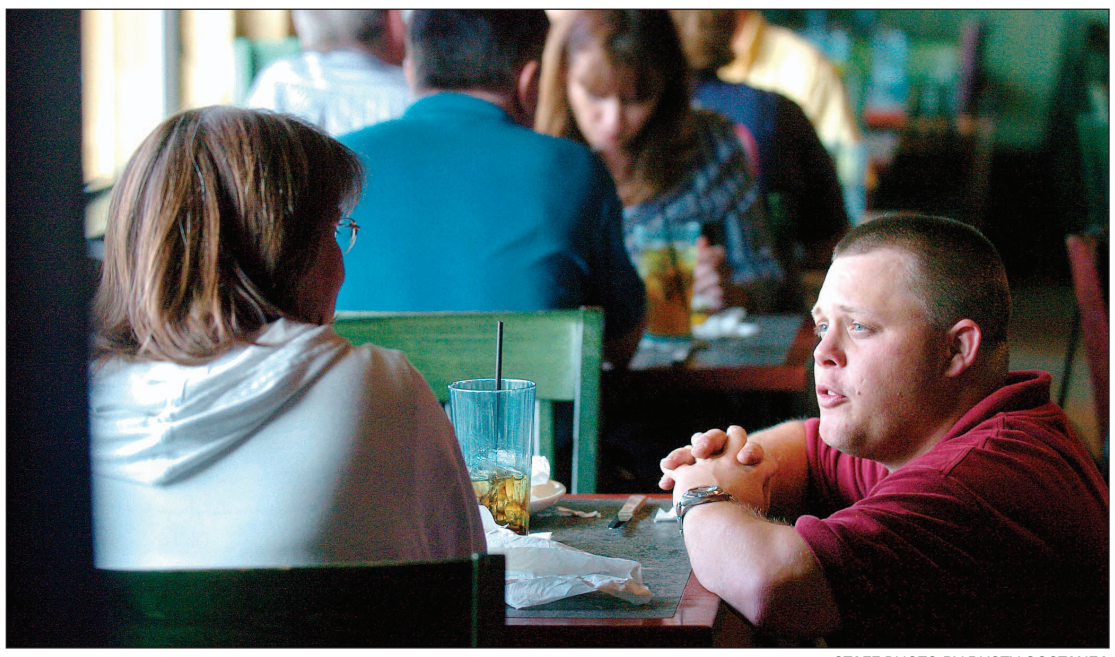
In Jefferson Parish, which lies just west of the city, water and sewer services have been fully restored on both sides of the river. More than 94 percent of residents now have power, and stores and restaurants are reopening, spray-painting the news that they're back in business on sheets of plywood that once boarded windows and now are propped up at the curb.

At night, residents, who were allowed to return en masse after the first storm, can be seen drinking beer and playing video poker at Laketown Grill on Williams Boulevard. In the mornings, they stand in line to buy lattes at the PJ's at Clearview Mall.

But in New Orleans, most people haven't been allowed back to see their homes, let alone live in them, because of polluted floodwaters that engulfed many neighborhoods.

The tap water on the east bank remains untreated, and Sewerage & Water Board officials say it could take up to two more months before the pipes and mains are fully repaired. The West Bank system had far less damage, and residents have been assured the water there is potable.

Although toilets flush, the city's only sewer treatment plant on the east bank was decimated by 20-foot floodwaters, and S&WB officials say it could take at least nine months to rebuild. Until then, raw sewage will have to be dumped directly into the Mississippi River, and perhaps Lake Pontchartrain.



Electric power remains iffy, with only about 18 percent of customers back online.

As for business owners, many have been issued permits to re-enter the city to inspect their offices and begin cleaning up. But that effort, as well as Mayor Ray Nagin's plans to bring people back to Algiers and unflooded Uptown neighborhoods and, eventually, the French Quarter, was stalled last week when Hurricane Rita entered the Gulf.

On Tuesday, the mayor called for an evacuation of the already desolate city, fearing that heavy rainfall or even a slight storm surge could trigger widespread flooding.

By Thursday, one of the only remaining centers of activity was the Sheraton Hotel on Canal Street, which served as an outpost for government officials, law enforcement and news organizations intending to stay through whatever Rita might bring.

But in Jefferson, Parish President Aaron Broussard issued no evacuation orders except for several coastal communities, including Grand Isle and Lafitte. So residents, determined to piece back together their homes and businesses, went about the messy process of ripping out soggy Sheetrock and carpeting and hauling moldy furniture to the curb.

Darryl Morrissey, service manager at Chevy's Fresh Mex, waits tables Wednesday at the Metairie restaurant. Life in Jefferson Parish is slowly getting back to normal, while neighboring New Orleans struggles to restore basic services.

Cleanups worlds apart

Despite the smelly pile of debris piled on their lawn, Linda and Danny Deichmann are living fairly comfortably in their house on North Turnbull Drive in Metairie. The fence is still in shambles and the pool is filled with tainted water, but they've scrubbed down the refrigerator, mopped the floors, pulled out carpet and treated the mold. The air conditioning repairman is due any day.

They even have roast beef po-boys in the refrigerator from the Come Back Inn in Kenner.

"Now all I need is to get my dog back," Linda Deichmann said.

Stories like theirs abound in Jefferson Parish, where floodwaters devastated thousands of homes, but where the cleanup is in full swing, thanks to quick restoration of water, sewer and electrical services.

Provisions are still scarce, but more stores are opening every day. Insurance adjusters are beginning to make their rounds, and scores of public and private schools are preparing to open Oct 3.

Debris remains a problem, but the place is coming back, no question about it.

"Jefferson seems almost normal," said Steven Taylor, who reopened his Domino's pizza outlet in Bucktown on Tuesday. "I finally understand the meaning of the word surreal."

But walk across the Hammond Highway Bridge from Taylor's store, and it feels like a war zone. Search and rescue teams are still climbing through windows, searching for bodies.

Helicopters buzz overhead, while private contractors try to move downed trees so they can fix key water mains. Occasionally, a resident, like Beth LeBlanc, will maneuver around a military checkpoint for the agonizing pilgrimage to a destroyed home. Digging through crusted muck at the corner of Bellaire and 40th Street to retrieve a vial of toothpicks and ceramic frog, LeBlanc blamed everyone from the Red Cross to the Federal Emergency Management Agency for failing to help her and her teenage daughter recover from the devastation.

"Where do you go from here?" she said.

While Nagin continues to assert the city is making good progress and that he hopes to begin repopulating the least affected neighborhoods soon, many who have been working in the trenches say much of New Orleans is far from habitable.

Aside from the water problems, there are virtually no working hospitals, police and fire services are depleted, and a new 911 system is just coming online.

That means that the chasm between life in the city and its oldest suburb could be a reality for weeks, if not months to come.

"I wouldn't send my wife in here to live," said New Orleans resident Jack Huerkamp, S&WB operations chief. "Not right now."

Gun battle, two bombings slam Baghdad

At least 8 killed in Sadr City fight

By Tarek El-Tablawy
Associated Press writer

BAGHDAD, Iraq - Gunmen loyal to radical Shiite cleric Muqtada al-Sadr ambushed an Iraqi patrol in an eastern Baghdad slum Sunday, and U.S. forces joined the 90-minute battle, killing as many as eight attackers in the first significant violence in the neighborhood in nearly a year.

Elsewhere in Baghdad, armed men pulled off a daring armored car robbery, killing two guards and escaping with $850,000, and a suicide car bomber slammed into a convoy carrying Interior Ministry commandos, killing seven of them and two civilians. South of the capital, two separate bicycle bombings in town markets killed at least seven people and wounded dozens. The ominous resurgence of violence in the poor Sadr City region began about 1:30 a.m. when an Iraqi patrol searching for three insurgents came under attack. U.S. forces in the neighborhood joined the battle and reported killing between five and eight of the attackers. Iraqi police said eight were killed. "I am concerned about the events early this morning, but I do not believe this action reflects a pattern of change leading to more violence," said Col. Joseph DiSalvo, commander of U.S. forces in east Baghdad.

Al-Sadr's militia, the al-Mahdi Army, was a repeated problem for American forces until a truce was negotiated about a year ago that allowed some U.S. troops to pull out of Sadr City to join the November assault on the insurgent stronghold of Fallujah, west of the capital. Before the truce, al-Sadr's forces had led unsuccessful but bloody uprisings against coalition forces in Kut and the holy cities of Najaf and Karbala, all south of Baghdad. With a referendum on Iraq's new constitution less than three weeks away, violence in the poor Shiite district could deepen opposition among al-Sadr's supporters who are bucking mainstream Shiite support for the constitution. Shiite unity has been seen as critical for passage of the basic law, which minority Sunni Muslims by and large oppose.

A statement read to reporters by an official with al-Sadr's office accused U.S. forces of trying to draw them into a battle "aimed at destroying Iraqi towns, particularly those in pro-Sadr areas and ... to prevent al-Sadr followers from voting" in the referendum. The two bicycle bombs hit marketplaces in Hillah, about 60 miles south of Baghdad, where one person was killed and 48 wounded. The second, more deadly, bomb went off in Musayyib, about 40 miles south of Baghdad. It killed at least six and wounded 17, including the city police chief, according to police Capt. Muthanna Khalid Ali. Police also reported finding at least seven bodies in four separate locations in Baghdad: six men who had been bound and shot, including one identified as a policeman, and a woman in her 20s who appeared to have been strangled and tortured. Authorities said assailants kidnapped a Baghdad school principal on his way to work, and a mortar shell targeting a western Baghdad Iraqi army checkpoint wounded four Iraqi soldiers. In Samarra, 60 miles north of Baghdad, three mortar shells landed in a residential district. One shell hit a house, killing seven members of one family, including children, according to police Capt. Laith Muhammed. A U.S. soldier also died Sunday and two others were injured when their vehicle rolled over while on patrol near the Jordanian border, the military reported. The death raised to 1,914 the number of U.S. service members who have died since the beginning of the Iraq war in March 2003, according to an Associated Press count. In Britain, Prime Minister Tony Blair gave no ground in the continuing dispute with Iraqi officials in the southern oil hub of Basra, saying Sunday an arrest warrant against two British soldiers had no legal standing.

"We will do whatever is necessary to protect our troops in any situation," Blair told the BBC. Basra authorities issued the warrants after the two soldiers, working undercover, were arrested Sept. 19, prompting rioting when British armored vehicles surrounded the prison where the soldiers were detained. That night the armored vehicles crashed through the prison wall and freed the men. British authorities said they were in the hands of militiamen loyal to al-Sadr, not the police.

Emergency workers carry the body of a civilian killed in a car explosion Sunday in Baghdad. A suicide bomber struck an Interior Ministry convoy.

In the meantime, the Basra governor has demanded Britain apologize for the incident, in which five Iraqis reportedly died. Gov. Mohammed al-Waili also said Britain must pay compensation to victims, and he ordered government officials to end cooperation with the British. Blair, in rejecting the warrants, said he had been surprised by the strength of the insurgency that has been tearing at Iraq since the late summer of 2003.

"No, I didn't expect quite the same sort of ferocity from every single element in the Middle East that came in and is doing their best to disrupt the political process. But I have absolutely no doubt as to what we should do. We should stick with it," he said.

The Basra mayhem and subsequent bad blood between the British and residents in the predominantly Shiite region appeared to have its origins earlier this month when British forces arrested local al-Mahdi Army boss Sheikh Ahmed Fartosi. The al-Mahdi Army and another Shiite militia, the Badr Brigade, are believed to have heavily infiltrated the police force in the south, taking orders from religious leaders rather than government officials. The Badr Brigade is the armed wing of the Supreme Council for the Islamic Revolution of Iraq, whose powerful leader has just issued a call for Shiites to support the constitution. The split between the followers of al-Sadr and SCIRI leader Abdel-Aziz al-Hakim could produce a division under which the more radical al-Sadr followers join Iraq's Sunni majority in a voting bloc to reject the new charter.

Adoption of the new constitution is viewed in Washington as a vital step in transforming Iraq into a democratic bastion in the Middle East. Rejection of the charter would be a major setback for the U.S. strategy in Iraq.

Supporters of Iraq war take their turn on national stage

They praise troops, criticize protesters at rally on Mall

By Elisabeth Goodridge
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — Support for U.S. troops fighting abroad mixed with anger toward anti-war demonstrators at home as hundreds of people, far fewer than organizers had expected, rallied Sunday on the National Mall just a day after tens of thousands protested against the war in Iraq.

"No matter what your ideals are, our sons and daughters are fighting for our freedom," said Marilyn Faatz, who drove from New Jersey to attend the rally. "We are making a mockery out of this. And we need to stand united, but we are not."

About 400 people gathered near a stage on an eastern segment of the mall, a large patchwork American flag serving as a backdrop. Amid banners and signs proclaiming support for U.S. troops, several speakers hailed the effort to bring democracy to Iraq and Afghanistan and denounced people who protest it.

Many demonstrators focused their ire at Cindy Sheehan, the California woman whose protest near President Bush's Texas home last summer galvanized the anti-war movement. Sheehan was among the speakers at Saturday's rally near the Washington Monument on the western part of the mall, an event that attracted an estimated 100,000 people.

"The group who spoke here the other day did not represent the American ideals of freedom, liberty and spreading that around the world," Sen. Jeff Sessions, an Alabama Republican, told the crowd. "I frankly don't know what they represent, other than to blame America first."

One sign on the mall read "Cindy Sheehan doesn't speak for me" and another "Arrest the traitors"; it listed Sheehan's name first among several people who have spoken against the war.

Melody Vigna, 44, of Linden, Calif., said she wants nothing to do with Sheehan and others at nearby Camp Casey, an anti-war site set up to honor her son, Casey, who was killed in Iraq.

"I know how much my husband does and how hard he works, and I feel like they don't even recognize that and give him the respect he deserves. I want him to know and I want his unit to know that America is behind them, Cindy doesn't speak for us, and that we believe in what they are doing."

SHERRI FRANCESCON, wife of Marine serving in Iraq

"Our troops are over there fighting for our rights, and if she was in one of those countries she would not be able to do that," Vigna said.

The husband of Sherri Francescon, 24, of Camp Lejeune, N.C., serves in the Marine Corps in Iraq. One of the many military wives who spoke during the rally, Francescon said the anti-war demonstration has left her frustrated.

"I know how much my husband does and how hard he works, and I feel like they don't even recognize that and give him the respect he deserves," Francescon said. "I want him to know and I want his unit to know that America is behind them, Cindy doesn't speak for us, and that we believe in what they are doing."

Organizers of Sunday's demonstration acknowledged that their rally would be much smaller than the anti-war protest but had hoped that as many as 20,000 people would turn out.

On Saturday, demonstrators opposed to the war in Iraq surged past the White House in the largest anti-war protest in the nation's capital since the U.S. invasion. The rally stretched through the night, a marathon of music, speechmaking and dissent on the mall.

National polls have found steadily declining support for the war in Iraq, with a majority of Americans now believing the war was a mistake.

In an AP-Ipsos poll this month, only 37 percent approved or leaned toward approval of how Bush has handled the situation in Iraq; strong disapproval outweighed strong approval by 2-1, 46 percent to 22 percent.

IRA says farewell to arms

Destruction of weapons reported

By Shawn Pogatchnik
Associated Press writer

BELFAST, NORTHERN IRELAND – International weapons inspectors have supervised the full disarmament of the outlawed Irish Republican Army, a long-sought goal of Northern Ireland's peace process, an aide to the process' monitor said Sunday.

The IRA permitted two independent witnesses, including a Methodist minister and a Roman Catholic priest close to Sinn Fein leader Gerry Adams, to view the secret disarmament work conducted by officials from Canada, Finland and the United States, the aide to retired Canadian Gen. John de Chastelain said on condition of anonymity.

The office of de Chastelain, who in recent weeks has been in secret locations overseeing the weapons destruction, scheduled a news conference for today in Belfast.

The aide said the Independent International Commission on Decommissioning news conference would detail the scrapping of many tons of IRA weaponry this month at a confidential location in the Republic of Ireland. The aide spoke on condition of anonymity because of the sensitivity of the situation.

Both witnesses — the Rev. Harold Good, a former president of the Methodist Church in Ireland, and the Rev. Alex Reid, a Catholic priest — also will state what they saw.

The breakthrough should smash the biggest stumbling block in Northern Ireland's peace process since Britain opened negotiations with Sinn Fein, the IRA-linked party, in December 1994.

On Saturday, Adams told thousands of supporters in Dublin that IRA disarmament would have "a huge impact" on peace efforts.

Adams, a veteran IRA commander, also said Sinn Fein stood ready to make major electoral and diplomatic gains once the IRA disarmed.

Unfortunately, most politicians and analysts agree, the IRA move is coming years too late to kick-start the revival of a Roman Catholic-Protestant administration, the central dream of Northern Ireland's 1998 peace accord. That complex, landmark agreement required the IRA to disarm by May 2000.

Years of denial and delay have sharpened Protestant distrust of Sinn Fein. Moderates willing to take risks were trounced in elections by hard-liners.

The Rev. Ian Paisley, whose uncompromising Democratic Unionist Party represents most Protestants today, has dismissed the coming IRA moves as inadequate. Paisley insists on photographs, a detailed record and a Paisley-approved Protestant clergyman to serve as an independent witness.

A senior Democratic Unionist, Jeffrey Donaldson, said the IRA's apparent refusal to provide any photos and its refusal to use a Protestant minister nominated by his party as a witness meant that many Protestants would not fully believe the IRA moves.

"I don't think we're going to get that level of transparency tomorrow, and I think that's most unfortunate," Donaldson said. "People want to see what has happened.

"The witnesses have been appointed by the IRA," he said. "It does diminish the credibility of whatever is going to happen tomorrow."

The IRA said in July that its 35-year campaign to overthrow British rule of Northern Ireland by force, which claimed nearly 1,800 lives before its 1997 suspension, was officially over.

The IRA said it had commanded members to "dump arms," but it was vague about whether this meant every single one. This left wiggle room to retain firearms for crime, intimidation and self-protection.

Britain first demanded IRA arms decommissioning, a deliberately vague term designed to give the IRA maximum flexibility to decide how weapons should be discarded, in December 1993.

The IRA's stockpile, particularly tons of Semtex plastic explosive, gave it the ability to bomb London for decades if desired. Only if the IRA gave up the weapons, Britain insisted, would Sinn Fein gain a place in negotiations on Northern Ireland's future.

The IRA did not budge and abandoned a 1994 cease-fire with a 2-ton truck bomb in London's financial district in February 1996. When Prime Minister Tony Blair assumed power in 1997, he allowed Sinn Fein into talks with a renewed cease-fire but no disarmament.

Ever since, it's proved a never-ending battle to keep Protestant politicians on the road to compromise with Sinn Fein.

U.S. copter crashes, killing 5

By Carlotta Gall
New York Times

KABUL, AFGHANISTAN — A U.S. military Chinook helicopter crashed Sunday in the mountains of southern Afghanistan, killing all five crew members on board, the U.S. military said in a statement. There were no indications of enemy fire involved in the crash, the statement said.

A Taliban spokesman, Abdul Latif Hakimi, in comments to news agencies, claimed that Taliban fighters had shot the helicopter down, using "modern weapons." But the chief spokesman for American-led forces in Afghanistan, Col. James Yonts, said there had been no reports from the scene of hostile fire.

Yonts said troops had reached the crash site and an investigation would begin. The crash follows several other helicopter crashes this year, some from bad weather or technical problems.

Rebuilding effort should be localized

It's early yet, but the clean up of New Orleans has begun, and the rebuilding is being openly discussed.

And we are already moving quickly and boldly in the wrong direction.

That's what Russell Kelly told Mayor Ray Nagin and various state and local officials during the mayor's briefing session in Baton Rouge last week.

Kelly, a real estate developer specializing in affordable housing, said he has driven the city streets in the weeks since Hurricane Katrina's rampage. And what he found was a clean up effort manned by people who certainly weren't from New Orleans and may not have been from the United States.

"They are foreign. They are Latin," he said. "It's disheartening to see people come from other countries and make the money that they they're making. We are in the FEMA assistance lines and they are in employment lines."

Work for locals

It is entirely possible that these workers are full-fledged American citizens. But even if they are, it is unlikely they are from Louisiana. Kelly said he looked at the company names on the workers' matching t-shirts.

"I didn't recognize a single company. That's why I don't remember the names. None of them were local companies," Kelly said.

If these men were engaged in some highly specialized work, perhaps it could be argued that finding New Orleanians to do such work would be difficult. But that seems not to be the case in many instances.

"It appears that they are just laborers, nonskilled laborers," Kelly said.

Blair Boutte, a New Orleans bail bondsman who evacuated to Baton Rouge, echoed Kelly's concern.

Boutte, who is black, said he would have welcomed the sight of white workers from other parts of the metro area. But he was upset that people from out of state and possibly out of the country were being hired to do work New Orleanians could be hired to do.

Former ceiling crumbling

It will be impossible to get every New Orleanian to move back to the city. Some are making better lives for themselves elsewhere and can hardly be faulted for staying where they are.

But there are plenty of residents who are longing to get home and have yet to make lives for themselves in other cities. These are the people who should be at the top of the list of prospective workers in the rebuilding effort.

Of course, you can hardly entice them back if you're only willing to pay poverty level wages.

But in the wake of the disaster, President Bush suspended the Davis-Bacon Act that required employers to pay locally prevailing wages to construction workers on federally financed projects. The declaration applies to parts of Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama and Florida.

At the same time, many contracts being given to corporations are not subjected to competitive bidding.

In essence, there's no ceiling preventing sky-high profits for these corporations and not much of a floor to ensure that wages to workers are not abysmally low.

There is an intelligent way to rebuild our city.

This, however, isn't it.

Strong south winds pushed more water into Jean Lafitte and neighboring communities along Bayou Barataria on Sunday, but by day's end, the wind and water began to subside.

Hit hardest were unincorporated Barataria and Lafitte, which are closer to Barataria Bay than the town of Jean Lafitte. But Jean Lafitte's mayor, Tim Kerner, who called it the worst flooding since Hurricane Juan in 1985, said residents on the back streets of his town of 2,200 had water just as deep.

"We got wind damage from Katrina, then we got water from a storm that made landfall 190 miles away," he said. "The people here have gone through a lot."

Rita's southerly winds also drove water from the Gulf of Mexico into the Harvey Canal, raising water levels above the level of the Mississippi River and threatening to flood West Jefferson, Jefferson Parish President Aaron Broussard said Sunday. Crews quickly worked

While the double whammy of monster hurricanes will slow the federal probe of corruption in former Mayor Marc Morial's administration and other government agencies, the multi-layered investigation is alive and well, according to U.S. Attorney Jim Letten.

U.S. Attorney Jim Letten Also will watch the billions of dollars flowing into N.O.

"A lot of New Orleans' present woes are due, to a significant degree, to corruption over generations," Letten said during a recent interview. "Therefore, we recognize that at this time, pursuing corruption cases is more important than ever."

Not surprisingly, the Hurricane Katrina evacuation wreaked havoc on the prosecutor's operation, scattering staffers across parts of Texas and the southeastern United States.

But by the first week of September, Letten said he had accounted for each of his 112 employees and established a beachhead in Baton Rouge.

With the assistance of David Dugas, the U.S. attorney for the Middle District of Louisiana, Letten said he has found office space for about half of his 59 assistant U.S. attorneys. Those aides who haven't been able to find temporary housing in Baton Rouge are in regular contact, working from federal offices in Lafayette, Houma and other cities throughout the region.

To ensure that no pending cases grind to a halt, Letten said retrieved computer records, evidence and files from the Hale Boggs federal building in New Orleans, Letten said he thinks any losses will be minimal.

HURRICANE HEROES

Ex-Marine's mission was to save cut-off hospital

By Doug MacCash

Paramedic Thomas Jordan didn't intend to wade miles from Mid-City to the Central Business District and back bare-footed; it just worked out that way.

On the Monday morning after Hurricane Katrina blew through New Orleans, Jordan and two fellow paramedics awaited assignment at the Emergency Medical Services headquarters at 1700 Moss St., beside Bayou St. John. As the floodwaters began rising, Jordan and the others hauled a generator, fans and television set to the second floor of their quarters, intending to wait out the water in relative comfort.

But as the hours passed, without word from his superiors, Jordan, 42, an ex-Marine, became restless. So he began wading along the bank of the bayou, heading toward Lindy Boggs Medical Center, a quarter-mile away, to check out conditions there. He decided to wade barefooted.

"I knew the water was horrendous," he said, "and I only had one pair of boots. I guess I was in denial, like the water was a temporary thing, like the water was going to go down right away."

Little did he know he was embarking on a four-day odyssey.

The hospital was without power. Cell phones were useless. The staff attended patients as rising water forced people from the surrounding neighborhood to the entrances. The question was: Did anyone know their situation? Jordan assured doctors he would get the word out.

He began a three-hour trek through the tree littered, thigh-deep floodwater up Canal Street to Loyola Avenue and the New Orleans Health Department at City Hall, where he delivered the news of the cut-off hospital. He found his superiors to be as helpless as the hospital he hoped to save.

Jordan was told to go to the Superdome and wait, but he couldn't face more waiting. He wrapped his feet in sheets to protect them from the broken glass littering the streets and waded to Tulane University Hospital, where he spent the night.

On Tuesday, Jordan helped transport hospitalized babies to the roof for evacuation. He felt compelled to return to Lindy Boggs. So he slogged his way back to the Mid-City hospital. He had no good news to report.

"I told them, City Hall wasn't coming," he said. "Everybody's in a bind. You're on your own."

But after delivering the grim message, he asked whether there was any way he could help. The hospital needed a generator. Jordon, of course, knew where to get one. All he needed was a boat.

Bill Lavender, 53, a poet and teacher from a nearby neighborhood, had borrowed a rowboat earlier in the day. Jordan spotted him as he delivered a stranded neighbor to the crowded hospital.

"He gave me the hard-sell to row him down Moss Street to get this 500-watt generator," Lavender said by phone from Pennsylvania. "He was barefoot. I was telling him I already knew somebody who'd stepped on a rusty nail. This guy was truly a hero. He was working so hard to do something for this hospital."

It took some convincing to get his paramedic colleagues to give up the generator, but eventually Jordan and the others were towing the 120-pound machine down the bayou toward the hospital on a plastic raft.

"I told them, 'You'll be heroes. People will write songs about you.'"

In addition to the generator, Jordan had retrieved his boots.

His adventures continued for two more days. He borrowed a canoe and ferried people to a drop-off point at Delgado Community College, then took a frightening after-sundown trip through the flooded streets to a police station where he hoped, but failed to find his wife Jean, a New Orleans police officer. He returned to Tulane hospital, then rowed back to Mid-City again to pick up a stranded ambulance driver. He paddled doctors from hospital to hospital and before he bicycled – on an abandoned bicycle – to the dry safety of an Algiers fire station Thursday, he even found time to rescue a woman's wedding ring from a flooded car.

Jordan struggled to sum up his experience.

"I don't know how to describe it," he said. "It was a major disaster. I've never been to a war, so I can't say it was like a war zone."

N.O. bus depot becomes city's hottest set of bars

But this is definitely no place to hang out

By Gwen Filosa
Staff writer

The passenger terminal off Loyola Avenue has long been closed to Greyhound buses and Amtrak trains, but the station's newest business – locking up arrestees in the wake of two deadly hurricanes – rolls.

Louisiana prison officials happily turned the place into a temporary jail after the demise of the region's parish prisons and other holding tanks, dubbing it Camp Greyhound. And with aluminum fencing, razor wire, some out-of-town volunteers and computers, they built a temporary door for the criminal justice system.

Rodney C. Lewis Sr., stuck it out in the New Orleans region for Hurricane Rita, only to find himself booked with a domestic violence charge and waiting in an open-air chain link and razor wire holding cell for his transfer to a state prison in Baton Rouge.

Lewis, 43, was hauled into Camp Greyhound in the wee hours of Sunday morning. Before noon, he was en route to prison, where showers and a bed awaited him, along with the possibility of formal charges. He was one of two suspects locked up early Sunday morning, but there were more where he came from.

As Lewis and his cellmate waited for a lift to prison, Jefferson Parish deputies dropped off a small vanload of new arrestees, including three women, a barefoot man with a fresh black eye and a young man with a huge black T-shirt falling off one shoulder and dirty socks.

The small group reflected desperation, poverty and loneliness, just as it did for the people that were locked up there almost a month ago. An officer asked one woman if she had a chance to evacuate. "Yes, I did but I stayed," she replied. "In Kenner."

The woman's hands were bound by the plastic handcuff-type bindings used in such harried times. She posed for her mug shot in front of a white wall with handwritten measurements scrawled in black marker.

They joined an odd club: People busted during the havoc of back-to-back hurricanes in a region largely ruined by wind, floodwaters and fires.

Looting remains the No. 1 crime of the post-Katrina and Rita ravages. The temporary jail's logbook included a few recent arrestees booked with looting in St. Bernard Parish.

The temporary holding center, as of Sunday morning, has booked almost 400 people on various allegations since it opened a week after Hurricane Katrina.

Jefferson Parish Sheriff's deputies continued to lead in arrests, taking in 219 people – more than twice the number of the New Orleans Police Department, the second leading arrest agency, which had 85. Kenner Police brought in 56 arrests since the storm, while the rest of the region's law enforcement units, from the National Guard and State Police to the St. Bernard Sheriff's Department, contributed in single-digit numbers of the newly arrested. Sixty of those arrested to date have been women.

"It's for whoever is in need of a jail," Poret said.

With Criminal District Court and Central Lockup rendered uninhabitable by floodwaters, Camp Greyhound has become a slow-paced, yet efficient picture of law enforcement. State prison inmates dressed in their drab green uniforms, locked up long before the storms, swept and mopped Sunday. A handmade sign hanging on one entrance announced, "We're taking New Orleans back."

Inside, police officers, federal agents, prosecutors and soldiers strode about. District Attorney Eddie Jordan's office was established in the gift shop, next to souvenir shot glasses. A cot was there for one of Jordan's assistants, who worked a 24-hour shift.

The population at Camp Greyhound, now being called Camp Amtrak and formerly "Angola South," according to paperwork, changes rapidly, since most inmates are shuttled up to the Hunt Correctional Center near Baton Rouge within 24 hours.

"We don't house them that long," said Troy Poret, a major with the Louisiana State Penitentiary at Angola, who has worked at the makeshift jail from the beginning. "I try my best to get rid of them."

Illicit drugs racked up some 50 arrests, along with 21 cases of public intoxication. One person was booked with self-mutilation. While violent cases were few and far between – one second-degree murder, two rapes, nine attempted murder charges and 16 aggravated assaults on police officers – they included grim acts of terror.

"We had the guy in here who the little girl at the airport identified as raping her," Poret said.

Many of the suspects were booked with multiple counts of various violations. Curfew violations littered the arrest logbook, along with 33 people for resisting arrest.

What passes for a crime trend in New Orleans these days reflects the city's slow but sure return to a fragile normalcy.

"It got busy one night, the night they opened up a bar," Poret said, referring to a strip club that resumed operations within the past week and the few bars in the French Quarter that never seemed to close. "They was coming in drunk."

Letten warns those thinking of fleeing

LETTEN, from B-1

On the Wednesday after Katrina made landfall, Letten said U.S. District Court Judge Ginger Berrigan signed paperwork that continues for 90 days all matters before the court.

"We had no choice," he said. "We recognized that due to the unavailability of personnel and facilities, there had to be an interruption of the process.

"Without question, our ability to run down leads and do interviews will be impacted. But none of the work we have done is destroyed or permanently degraded. We have every confidence that in the long run, our ability to investigate will remain intact."

Among the high-profile cases in the works before Katrina effectively shut down the city are:

▶The grand jury indictment in June of three Morial allies — restaurateur Stan "Pampy" Barre, former city property management director Kerry DeCay and businessman Reginald Walker — for allegedly skimming hundreds of thousands of dollars from an $81 million energy-management contract with Johnson Controls of Milwaukee. A fourth major player, Johnson Controls project manager Terry Songy, also has been charged but is cooperating with the government. Six subcontractors also face charges in the scheme.

▶The indictment in August of Morial's uncle, Glenn Haydel, on charges of theft, wire fraud and money laundering. Haydel, who enjoyed a lucrative contract to manage the Regional Transit Authority during his nephew's years at City Hall, is accused of orchestrating a scheme to fleece the RTA of more than a half-million dollars. Barre, DeCay, Walker and Haydel all have pleaded innocent, pledging to defend themselves vigorously.

Others who have been touched by the far-ranging probe include Morial's former sanitation director Lynn Wiltz and several Morial insiders, including the former mayor's brother, Jacques Morial; lawyer Roy Rodney; longtime political consultant Bill Schultz; Sam Kogos, a fixture on many of the city's and School Board's lucrative insurance committees; and Ray Valdes, a financier who handled several large-scale lease deals for the Morial administration.

Letten declined to speculate on how soon after the 90-day continuance pre-trial conferences on the indictments or grand jury proceedings on any of the other cases may begin.

But privately, lawyers familiar with the situation say major developments in the corruption probe are unlikely before next year.

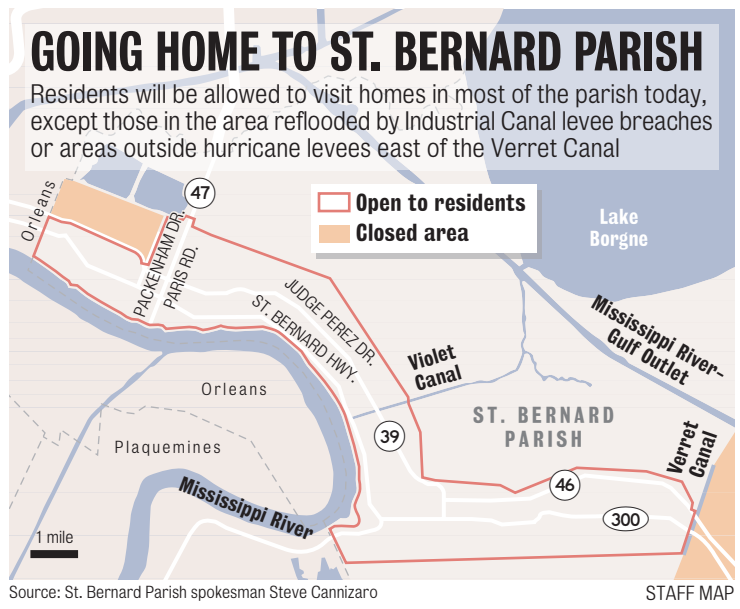
"How soon we get cranked up depends on a number of factors," Letten said. Those include judges' schedules, courtroom availability and the ability of grand jurors, defense attorneys and their clients to return to New Orleans.

"I don't want to paint myself into a corner," he said. "The accused are equally as displaced as we are. Each case is distinct. But it's in the interest of justice to move forward as soon as it is practical."

Asked whether he is concerned that any targets might flee the state or the country to escape prosecution, Letten acknowledged that possibility exists.

"Anyone who is free on bond possesses the physical ability to abscond," he said. "But we rely on the knowledge of these individuals that we have the resources, the energy and the time to locate them. And I hope and believe that all of them will think twice before they decide to go anywhere.

"I know this much for certain. The courts will take a very dim view of anyone who takes advantage of this situation."



As for the ability of his office to break new ground on cases still under investigation, Letten said that may be difficult in the short term.

"But if that's true, it won't be for long." he said. "If there are leads out there, we have the resources to follow them."

And Letten said his staff will keep a close eye on the billions of federal dollars that will be flowing into New Orleans and surrounding communities as the massive, post-Katrina restoration effort begins in earnest.

"Whether it's FEMA fraud or predator fraud, we know there are some who will seek to exploit and take advantage of the money flowing in for rebuilding contracts, loans, grants or whatever," he said.

"We are going to be keenly focused on any and all activities related to funding. And we will relentlessly pursue anyone who tries to enrich themselves at the expense of taxpayers or victims of this tragedy."

Rita won't delay Jeff schools opening

From staff reports

Despite Hurricane Rita, Jefferson Parish Public Schools are pressing forward with their plan to open most schools in the district on Oct. 3, officials said.

School spokesman Jeff Nowakowski maintained that parish schools were not "any more damaged than they were by Katrina" and that registration for all new students will still begin, as scheduled, on Tuesday.

"There are no changes," he said. "We are set to go."

As of last week, seven schools still had severe enough damage to probably put off an Oct. 3 opening, school officials reported. Those are A.C. Alexander Elementary, Lincoln Elementary, Terrytown Elementary, Woodmere Elementary, the independently operated Jefferson Community School and the John Martyn and Thomas Jefferson schools.

Officials had deemed 52 schools to be in ready condition, while 28 were listed as having some damages, but in most cases not enough to prevent an Oct. 3 reopening.

Nowakowski said that those Jefferson Parish school students who were forced to move to a different part of the parish post-Katrina must re-register with the school system.

However, those students who can return to their homes in their original school boundary areas are not required to register, he said.

Registration begins Tuesday and continues through Saturday, Oct. 1.

the section north of Judge Perez Drive between the Orleans Parish line and Packenham Drive and areas east of the Verret Canal, officials said.

Water in those areas is receding and officials expect the entire parish will be relatively dry by mid-week.

Hundreds of St. Bernard residents began streaming into the parish on Sept. 17, part of a two-week plan to let people access the damage caused by Hurricane Katrina, which devastated the parish. But the plan was halted last week when Rita turned into the Gulf of Mexico and an evacuation order was issued for the entire parish.

With area levees damaged by the first storm, Rita sent water rushing through a wide breach along the Industrial Canal and into the lower 9th Ward, Arabi and sections of Chalmette.

Now, instead of the phased-in plan that was aborted last week, parish officials decided to allow residents in all areas not flooded during Rita to return to their homes.

Cannizaro said residents planning to enter their homes should bring boots, gloves and masks and should be mindful of dangers such as nails, slippery walkways and debris. He said at least 10 people who entered the parish during the first phase suffered cuts and other injuries.

Rita seems reluctant to leave St. Tammany

Water slow to drain in Madisonville

By Christine Harvey
St. Tammany bureau

Jonathan and Monica Sherman consider themselves lucky that Hurricane Rita didn't cause water to rise higher than the first step leading to the second-floor entrance of their Madisonville home.

A few weeks earlier, the water was waist-deep on Bordeaux Court and a foot high inside their home. Theirs was only part of the damage Hurricane Katrina inflicted on roughly 40 percent of the town's homes.

Up to 6 feet of water flooded the Madisonville area when Katrina blew into town, only to be followed shortly thereafter by Rita, which caused flooding as high as 5 feet in some parts of town, said Mayor Peter Gitz.

The older homes south of Louisiana 22, as well as the neighborhoods near Louisiana 1077 and Johnson Street, received the worst of the water on both occasions, Gitz said.

However, unlike the flooding associated with Katrina, which Gitz said came in fast and left just as quickly, the water brought by Rita is receding at a much slower pace.

Water remained along Main and Pine streets south of Jahncke Street on Sunday afternoon, although a few pickup trucks managed to cross the pools without much trouble. The Joseph S. Koepp Complex on Pine Street resembled a lagoon, but the blocks approaching Louisiana 22 were dry.

Debra Baker and her husband, Pat Fanning, have been staying at the Pine Street home of a friend for the past couple of weeks. Katrina destroyed their house in the Lakeview section of New Orleans, as well as most of their possessions.

Baker said she considered evacuating again this weekend when Rita's waters appeared on the verge of flooding her new home. Luckily, the water fell short of entering, coming to the top step of the raised home's front porch.

"It was really frightening," she said, noting that alligators appeared in both the front and back yards following the storm. "You kept seeing it gradually increasing. You just wake up every 20 minutes to make sure you won't be carried off floating."

Standing water continued to cause problems Sunday afternoon in the low-lying areas of St. Tammany Parish. In Mandeville, waves continued to wash across Lakeshore Drive, leaving about a foot and a half of standing water, said Rodney Hart, deputy director of the parish's office of homeland security and emergency preparedness.

Water as deep as 4 feet remained in Lacombe at the southernmost end of Lake Drive, Hart said. In Slidell, the Palm Lake subdivision remained under water Sunday, with Palm and Camellia drives and Canulette Road particularly hard-hit, said Rob Callahan, spokesman for the Slidell Police Department.

Hart attributed the slow draining of water to west and southwest winds holding water in Lake Pontchartrain. He said he expects the water to recede fully by mid-week, when a cold front is expected to bring northerly winds to the area and allow the water to move out faster.

to contain the threat, sandbagging weak spots on the canal's banks.

"Had we gotten 4 or 5 inches of rain along with this wind, we would have been in serious trouble," Broussard said. "Because there wasn't much rain, we were able to pump the drainage canals down to the mud to protect us."

'I'm staying'

The Harvey Canal and the flooding of the Lafitte, Crown Point and Barataria areas consumed parish officials Saturday, who were forced to rescue hundreds of residents who ignored a mandatory evacuation order issued Thursday.

Wearing shorts and sandals as he slogged through the little lake that surrounded Town Hall in Jean Lafitte, Kerner tried to talk a constituent into leaving Sunday.

The man, who would identify himself only as "Rock 'n Roll Rod," his girlfriend and several other friends had found high ground near the town's senior center and had spent the night there after their homes flooded.

"The mosquitoes just about ate us up," he said. Still, the man had no intention of leaving. "My mother and my kids are out of here, but I'm staying," he said.

"Well, I wish you could leave, but take care of yourself," Kerner replied.

Reserve police officer Ronald Dufrene helped people tack tarps onto roofs and has spent weeks handing out MREs and supplies to Katrina's victims. On Sunday, he was using a pirogue to pull supplies out of his now-flooded house.

"First it was wind, then it was water," he said.

Members of the Lafitte-Barataria-Crown Point Volunteer Fire Department pulled 15 people out of homes.

"I think everybody who wants to go has been evacuated," said Jefferson Parish Councilman-at-large John Young. Young was discussing the town's needs with Kerner: specifically, pumps and drinking water.

Community jells

Even in the chaos and confusion as water rushed through the Lafitte area, a sense of community came through, said Lt. j.g. Aaron Green of the Coast Guard.

Dale Dehart of Crown Point leaves her home Sunday for higher ground on Lafitte-Larose Highway to try to catch a ride to her job at West Jefferson Medical Center. Her neighbor, Cliff Faggard, uses a four-wheeler on the other side of the road to move his belongings.

The pilot, who has been stationed at the Naval Air Station-Joint Reserve Base in Belle Chasse for two years, and a rescue swimmer flew to the flooded area Saturday, responding to reports of three women and an infant trapped in their house.

Under Green's steady hand, the swimmer plucked the infant and its mother from the waterlogged mess and placed them in a metal basket that lifted them up to a helicopter. A second woman was also saved through the basket, and a third was pulled up while strapped to the swimmer.

The operation took less than 30 minutes, Green said. But he noticed a small army of rescue boats, including those operated by Lafitte residents, that was already in the trenches when the Coast Guard arrived.

"Everybody was down there trying to get people out of those houses," he said.

Green took the four people to Belle Chasse, where relatives picked them up.

Green described residents' efforts to save neighbors as well as groups of residents huddled at homes on higher ground.

"You could see the community coming together and seeking that higher ground," he said.

As floodwaters from Katrina subsided, Navy Seabees made a parking lot of flooded cars at the vacant Wal-Mart in Chalmette.

This letter is to focus on all those who lost their jobs or who have been separated from their family because of a job. My husband was a pharmacist in St. Bernard Parish. He has worked at the same pharmacy for 27 years. Not only were his employees his second family, but so were the generations of customers he served. During the holidays he would come home with homemade pies, candy and other gifts from his customers. He would be given home-grown vegetables and fruit. My husband's customers loved him. He was their family too.

In that first week after Hurricane Katrina when you could finally reach someone, and my husband was able to contact employees or they got through to him, they would cry together.

Then came the time to go see the store on East Judge Perez Drive. His boss had the opportunity to go. He called Frank and said that what the oil, water and mud didn't destroy, the looters did. Frank asked his boss about going back and retrieving personal belongings. His boss told Frank he wouldn't go back to the store, even with hip boots on. The thought of never going back there has my husband depressed.

I am writing this letter to comfort those who are in the same situation. We all have been through surreal times since Aug. 29. You are not alone in the way you feel, and as time goes on, healing will occur. Focus on what you're grateful for, not what you've lost. Take one day at a time, one moment, if you have to.

As a family, we have separated to accommodate my job. It used to take me five minutes to get to work in Kenner; now it takes 40 minutes. I am now at a different location. I dare not complain. I am so thankful to have a job.

To get us through these awful times, you need a thankful heart and to pray for others.

Restoring the Gulf South

In these weeks after Katrina, it seems like an impossible task to restore the health and infrastructure of the Gulf South without breaking the back of the U.S. economy. However, the solution really boils down to 4 simple steps:

1. Appoint three "reconstruction czars," one each for Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana. Do we really think that Colin Powell or Rudy Giuliani knows anything about the character of New Orleans? Shouldn't someone native to the area decide what is best for each state? For Louisiana, I would nominate U.S. Rep. Bobby Jindal, who after narrowly losing the governor's race, currently represents the New Orleans area and is known for logical ideas and planning.

2. Earmark federal offshore oil and gas revenue for coastal restoration. This idea was pushed by the Louisiana congressional delegation before Katrina hit. It is time to repair the damage done to the coastline from oil and gas exploration, the Mississippi River levee system and loss of the barrier islands. A comprehensive plan is in place; all that is left is to finance it.

3. Return FEMA to a Cabinet-level organization and staff it with the best disaster relief people available. The Department of Homeland Security is welcome to include FEMA as part of its response plan to terrorist attacks, but it is clear that another massive level of beauracracy only hinders FEMA's ability to work efficiently. As part of the reorganization, FEMA should be given access to the necessary military resources to provide the quickest response possible. Half of the existing National Guard units should be outfitted as disaster SWAT teams, able to mobilize quickly, and only half of those units should ever be called to foreign service at any given time.

4. Repeal the Medicare prescription drug benefit. This entitlement is reportedly going to cost $720 billion over 10 years. It is hard to find anyone, Republican or Democrat, who does not think that there are serious and potentially disastrous fiscal flaws with this legislation. The good news is that it hasn't taken effect yet; the bad news is that prescription drug costs are a serious matter, and we will have to find some way to get these drugs to those in need without ruining America's financial stability. However, repealing this legislation now would pay for the entire hurricane relief effort and re-establish fiscal responsibility in the federal government.

These steps don't amount to micromanagement or a one-size-fits-all solution. They simply would put the right people in the right place and provide long -term funding for the solutions, something that is foreign to many federal initiatives. With enough pressure from the voters, both sides of the aisle can tolerate and even embrace the compromises involved with these solutions.

Charity's workers waiting for answers

As an employee of LSU working in Charity Hospital, I patiently wait for information as to the status of our employment and the thousands of other workers of the Medical Center of Louisiana.

All we hear from the LSU side is that Charity is condemned. All we hear from the politicians is that Charity is a total loss. We also hear that the CEO and LSU officials are attempting to lobby for federal funds to build a new hospital in New Orleans. What about the employees?

I find it hard to believe that Charity is a total loss. I walked into the building and talked to faithful doctors trying to clean the emergency room and get it up and running. The building looked great. It looked like it does every other day, except a little disorganized. The first floor even had power. With effort and proactive thinking, I believe the hospital could be up and running again within months.

We read in the paper that the governor wants to keep as many people as possible in the state, that the mayor wants to repopulate the city soon and start building business again. I could not agree more. But not addressing Charity Hospital/MCLNO and leaving employees' employment status in limbo is not the way to do this.

Charity is the cornerstone of the medical district in New Orleans, like it or not. Medical schools, nursing schools, allied health schools and much of the population of greater New Orleans rely on Charity's services. Other hospitals in the city will not provide this to the population. Take away Charity, even for a short period of time, and you lose the most important part of the medical community.

I love my job at Charity, I love the patients and staff, and I love the city I work in. I want to stay. I hope the state and city will give employees answers about their status. Hopefully, it will be the right answer, and it will keep the people here.

Steak house move burns reader up

I am terribly angry about the decision that Ruth's Chris Corp. has made to move its headquarters to Florida. New Orleanians have been incredibly loyal to this restaurant since its beginning, and for the company to choose to desert its Metairie headquarters after the tragedy of Hurricane Katrina is beyond my conception of decency.

I have frequented Ruth's Chris as a private patron and hosted dinner programs there for my company. I can assure the company that I will never again enter its restaurant and will discourage everyone I know from doing so.

I am sure that if Miss Ruth were alive she would never leave the city she loved, the city that supported her in her quest to become a successful businesswoman.

I sincerely hope that other companies will realize that New Orleans needs their help and support at this time and that we, as New Orleanians, will support them in turn.

OUR OPINIONS

Don't stew about the lake

With all the talk of toxic stew, the possibility that Lake Pontchartrain could remain healthy after an influx of floodwater seems too good to be true, but initial tests by the state and federal government, as well as the Lake Pontchartrain Basin Foundation, point in that direction.

The lake doesn't have a clean bill of health yet. Agencies have yet to test rangia clams or other aquatic life for contamination. What's more, the Environmental Protection Agency and the state Department of Environmental Quality say that they'll have to continue to monitor for environmental problems, perhaps for as long as three to five years. That caution is appropriate.

But water tests taken so far show surprisingly little impact, considering that 4 percent of the lake's volume spent some time sloshing around New Orleans' streets and buildings after Hurricane Katrina.

While there were some areas of low oxygen in the lake, those were caused by decaying plant matter. Fecal coliform levels, which indicate sewage contamination, were not high in water samples taken at the Duncan, Suburban, 17th Street and Industrial canals and at Little Woods in eastern New Orleans.

While one plume of water pumped from the 17th Street Canal did show fecal coliform levels too high for swimming, it met the state's standards for boating and fishing. Counts were higher in Bayou Bonfouca and Bayou Liberty in the Slidell area, but they were fairly typical for this time of year.

With all the work that's gone into restoring the lake in recent decades, a major setback would be a blow and one more loss for an area that has suffered more than its share. If the lake has weathered the storm without major problems, it will be good news for fishers as well as those who use the lake for recreational purposes.

Rebuilding the state's $3 billion-per-year fishing industry is going to be a struggle no matter what. The area's 4,800 commercial fishers lost their own property as well as facilities that support fishing, from fuel docks to restaurants, in Hurricane Katrina. The condition of the fisheries themselves is an even larger issue.

Deep-water species such as tuna and red snapper were able to get away from Katrina's wrath, and shrimp and crabs can come back in a year's time. But oysters have taken a big hit, with 81,200 acres of reef affected. The state estimates that damage at $860 million.

The Food and Drug Administration was also talking about banning fishing in the lake, something that the seafood industry fears will shake consumer confidence in all Louisiana seafood. If the early signs of health from the lake are followed up by more good news, though, perhaps that won't be necessary.

It's a safe bet that for some, Hurricane Katrina will mean the end of a way of life that stretches back for generations. But Louisiana without fish, shrimp, crabs and oysters would be a much poorer place. The sooner fishers can start bringing in the catch of the day, the happier we'll be.

Be careful out there

The devastation wrought by Hurricane Katrina sparked an awe-inspiring outpouring of generosity for South Louisianians in the past month. Unfortunately, it also brought out the unscrupulous instincts in some people.

It is always this way. Good-hearted people inevitably respond when others are in need, and scam artists surface to try to take advantage. The good far outnumber the bad in such times, but it is wise to beware.

Most of us have been busy trying to regain our footing since Katrina swamped the metro area four weeks ago. But others are looking for ways to enrich themselves and cheat people who have suffered great losses.

In Kenner, for instance, Mayor Phil Capitano warned this weekend that someone is going door to door pretending to be a friend of the mayor and offering to help file insurance claims for a piece of the payoff.

As more residents return to the metro area, other such scams will no doubt surface. The simplest advice is to be wary. If someone shows up at your door asking for a fee to help you fill out insurance or federal relief paperwork, donít be fooled. Con artists are adept at pretending to be on official business.

There are scams on the other side of this disaster as well. Instant charities will pop up whose mission is to enrich a few people. Or con artists will pretend to be raising money for legitimate charities with no intention of passing donations along. For instance, three people were arrested this weekend in Georgia on charges of scamming residents by selling $1 raffle tickets under the guise of the American Red Cross.

The Better Business Bureau warns against making cash contributions. The bureau also advises people to beware of anyone who presses for an immediate contribution or who offers to send someone over to collect money.

Hurricane Katrina left more than a million people to find temporary shelter, replace lost possessions and rebuild their lives. No one should have to worry about being cheated at a time like this.

But the sad truth is that we do. Donít let that keep you from embracing all the genuine offers of help. Just be careful.

'George Bush doesn't care about black people.' — Kanye West

I think Kanye West is wrong.

George Bush ranks at 43 — and dropping fast — on my list of most-admired presidents. And yes, it can be fairly argued that some of his policies have been detrimental to black interests. But the same is true of virtually every president, and, in any case, that's not what West said. Rather, in his appearance on a hurricane relief telethon earlier this month, the young rapper, apparently frustrated by the laggard pace with which help was being sent to New Orleans, essentially accused the president of being a bigot.

It was a dumb accusation. Inaccurate too, I think. Say what you will about him or them, Bush's closeness to Condoleezza Rice and Colin Powell suggests an ease around blacks — OK, conservative blacks — greater than virtually every president from his father on back. If he's a racist, he's not very good at it.

Still, West's outburst has proven one of the signature moments of the month-long debate over why so many black people were left alone to fend against Hurricane Katrina.

Not that the propensity for saying dumb things on the subject was limited to black rappers. Some white conservatives have said New Orleans blacks were left behind because of a 'welfare state mentality.' This supposed mentality, argued Rush Limbaugh on his radio program earlier this month, eroded their self-reliance, inducing them to wait for government help instead of saving themselves.

Which is a callous libel even by Limbaugh's standards. I've seen white folks pleading for help a hundred times in the wake of earthquakes, mudslides, fires, floods and storms. I have yet to see that need cited as evidence of their lack of moral fiber.

Take the rapper and the right-winger as proof: Americans will never pass up a chance to falsely conflate race and class.

So it bears repeating: black people with means were able to escape New Orleans, just the same as their white counterparts. The people who were left behind were stranded not because they were black, but because they were poor.

You might call that a distinction without a difference, given that the poor are disproportionately black. I call it the basis for a fundamental realignment of American politics if ever the poor of all races and tribes finally realize they have more in common than they do in contention.

Not to give short shrift to the forces that have led black people to be overrepresented among the nation's have-nots. My only point is that at the end of the day, poor is poor, color notwithstanding. And the poor in this country are ignored because they are ignorable, forgotten because they are forgettable. Where is their advocate? Who raises their issues and concerns? Where is their voice?

Not since Lyndon Johnson 40 years ago has a U.S. president made alleviating poverty the centerpiece of his domestic agenda. Argue all you want about the effectiveness of his Great Society, give Johnson this much credit: He knew the poor were there. He saw them.

They have grown less visible since. Nowadays, people in Kanye West's field sell the lie that materialism is a virtue, while those in Rush Limbaugh's field sell the lie that poverty is a vice. And many of us simply forget that poverty is there, that American children hunger and American women need and American men lack and American people die for want of basic necessities. Were some of us not more aghast than we should have been at Katrina's reminder that poverty endures? Was there not a let-them-eat-cake cluelessness in Barbara Bush's suggestion that the poor are better off, homes destroyed, sleeping in a sports arena?

Better question: how long before we stop asking questions that pain conscience? How long before we move on and pretend we didn't see what we did?

Forgive my cynicism, but I suspect it won't be long at all before the forgettable are forgotten again.

Everyone pays for waterfront development

"Out of the rubbles of Trent Lott's house — he's lost his entire house — there's going to be a fantastic house. And I'm looking forward to sitting on the porch." — President Bush, Sept. 2

ANNE APPLEBAUM

Now that a suitable interval has passed, perhaps it's time to return to the question of Sen. Trent Lott's house. What interests me is not the now-tired question of whether the president ought to have promised to rebuild the Mississippi senator's family home on the Pascagoula beachfront before mentioning the lost homes of thousands of much poorer, less notorious people. What interests me is why his house was built on the beach in the first place.

At first glance, the answer appears simple. Although I haven't had the pleasure of visiting the senator's home, it's pretty safe to guess that he wanted to live by the water because it's psychologically soothing and aesthetically pleasing. It's quieter too, having seagulls instead of neighbors. It's nicer to sit on the porch.

But it's also true that many people build houses along the water because it makes economic sense to do so. Houses or apartments with ocean views command higher prices. Beachfront property owners can demand higher rents. Beachside businesses — casinos, hotels, restaurants — spin money. And, best of all, the risks of owning beachfront property — risks from floods, hurricanes and erosion — are covered by other people. Federally subsidized flood insurance programs and state-subsidized beach "re-nourishment" programs ensure that taxpayers — rich, poor, local, national — pay for damage to property built close to the water. To put it differently, Lott's house was on the beach because you and I paid for it.

Barring an unforeseen dose of political sanity, we're about to subsidize the reconstruction and even the expansion of more susceptible beachfront communities, too. Leave aside New Orleans for a moment, with its special history and its peculiar geography. Focus instead on the rest of the Gulf Coast, much of which was wiped out no less thoroughly. Just like other hurricane-prone, flood-prone, erosion-prone parts of the country — the Florida Keys, the Outer Banks, the Texas and California coasts — the Gulf Coast recently has experienced an extraordinary building boom. In 2003 approximately 153 million people lived in U.S. coastal counties, an increase of 33 million people since 1980. By 2008, 7 million more will probably have moved there, too.

As a result of this success, beach developers tend to be disproportionately wealthy and politically influential, and therefore unusually good at fighting zoning laws and grabbing subsidies. Even after Hurricane Andrew forced Florida to establish stricter building codes, the owners of hot Florida Panhandle real estate managed to get a raft of exemptions for their region. One North Carolina beach community, Emerald Isle, has collected millions of dollars in state and federal money to combat erosion — even though some 80 percent of Emerald Isle's new artificial beach is privately owned and inaccessible to the public, which paid for it. As The Washington Post's Michael Grunwald recently pointed out, Lott himself used his political clout to force an Army engineer out of his job after the man had the temerity to suggest that Mississippi stop building casinos along the flood-prone coast. Twenty of those casinos were destroyed by Hurricane Katrina, and the 16,000 people who worked in them have lost their jobs and probably their homes as well.

The pattern doesn't hold across the country, away from the ocean: Entire towns happily moved uphill after catastrophic flooding in the Midwest in the 1990s, when the government paid them to leave. But with a few exceptions, coastal victims of hurricanes and floods have not only refused to move inland, they've also used post-disaster government funding to build more and higher buildings, with fewer restrictions then ever before.

To reverse this trend, politicians would have to do a lot more than write checks and come up with neat new names for old housing programs. Instead, they would have to force coastal property owners to pay the real cost of the risk they incur by building in dangerous places. They would not only have to stop subsidizing flood insurance; they also would have to require developers to pay heavier taxes and higher insurance premiums. They would have to alter incentives to encourage building farther inland. They would have to enforce stricter building codes. In barrier islands and other truly unstable places, zoning laws should prevent any new construction at all.

Such proposals would, of course, be the kiss of death for almost any politician. After all, they go against two important American principles: property owners' right to build what they want, and the government's obligation to bail them out afterward. Those are the principles supported by the rugged inhabitants of Denver and Los Angeles, who build houses ever closer to forests that periodically burn, and those are the principles supported by the denizens of seaside Pascagoula. At least when President Bush finally gets around to drinking his alcohol-free mint julep on Lott's new porch, we can hope that he raises a glass to those of us who made it all possible.

To learn from disaster, look to London

RUTHERFORD H. PLATT

With a million people displaced, a major city drying out after weeks under water, and incalculable damage along the Gulf Coast, Hurricane Katrina is the nation's worst natural disaster ever. Expert predictions that it could occur were not taken seriously. Now that it has, we must quickly learn how to keep it from happening again.

As the wrenching process of counting the dead and helping the living continues, it is critical to conduct a prompt, rigorous, nonpolitical assessment of Katrina's effects — and on how the recovery process can make New Orleans and the region safer.

There are many precedents for post-disaster investigations. For example, President Clinton established a special Interagency Floodplain Management Review Committee to review the causes and impacts of the 1993 Midwest Floods. The committee's 1994 report helped to guide public policies on levees, wetlands restoration, and disaster assistance.

Perhaps the world's most successful exercise in "learning from disaster" came after the Great Fire of London of 1666.

Before the fire, London was a medieval wooden labyrinth housing some 400,000 souls. In the previous year, 56,000 Londoners had succumbed to the plague — grim testimony to the crowded and unsanitary conditions of the city. After a prolonged drought and fanned by high winds, the Great Fire began on Sept. 1, 1666. Over the next several days, most of the old city within the Roman walls burned, including St. Paul's Cathedral, more than 80 churches, many guildhalls, and warehouses, and countless dwellings. London's terrified population fled to open fields outside the city. Samuel Pepys recorded the pandemonium in his diary: "I saw a fire as one entire arch of fire above a mile long: it made me weep to see it. The churches and houses are all on fire and flaming at once, and a horrid noise the flames made . . ."

London was a disaster waiting to happen. Private structures clogged and overhung the narrow lanes, encroached on market spaces, and blocked access to the Thames River. With no regulation of building size, location or construction materials, the fire was inevitable. And without access to water, it could not be halted.

At the urging of architect Christopher Wren and other leading citizens, Charles II issued an astounding proclamation a week after the disaster calling for restraint and foresight in the rebuilding process, pending a full investigation of the causes of the disaster. Like a modern chief executive, the king then appointed a royal commission, including Wren, to study the causes of the disaster and to draft a Parliamentary law to codify rules for rebuilding.

The resulting "Act for Rebuilding London," adopted on Feb. 8, 1667, was London's first modern building code. It regulated street widths and building heights, banned overhanging upper floors, required stone or brick facades and opened up access to the Thames River and other water sources for firefighting. London's West End, built under that law and its successors, would survive World War II without a total conflagration (in contrast to the firestorms that engulfed Dresden and Tokyo).

London's Great Fire was the "Big One" of its day, an epic natural calamity compounded by human neglect. The 1667 act addressed that neglect and applied the best thinking of the time to creating a safer and healthier London.

We must do the same for the Gulf Coast. A nonpolitical expert panel, in collaboration with community representatives, must examine the levee failures, the bungled evacuation, the communication break-down, inadequate care for those stranded in the city, and, above all, how and where to rebuild more safely.

Vikings strike fast as turnovers, penalties again plague Saints

By Mike Triplett

MINNEAPOLIS — A turbulent ride of emotion and momentum that began this Saints season crashed with a sudden jolt this past week.

Two losses in the past seven days — ugly losses, rife with turnovers and mental errors — have erased any romantic notions about this team's plight.

The Saints clawed their way back in the third quarter of Sunday's 33-16 loss to the Minnesota Vikings to make things interesting for a while. And certainly, there is plenty of time to do the same with this season.

But with a combined 10 turnovers and 27 penalties in the past two games, the Saints (1-2) have looked like a team as completely out of sorts as their circumstances would suggest.

"We continued to do the same things we did last week," Saints coach Jim Haslett said, referring to last Monday night's 27-10 loss to the New York Giants. "We turned the ball over way too many times. Too many penalties. We got behind early.

"They outplayed us. They outcoached us, and we didn't do a very good job today. I don't know if we are a catch-up team. We haven't shown that we are."

This dreary performance was so reminiscent of that painful Monday night loss that Saints veteran Aaron Stecker fumbled away the game's opening kickoff — just as veteran Fred McAfee did against the Giants.

And it didn't take long for the Vikings to take advantage. Daunte Culpepper threw a 24-yard touchdown pass to receiver Travis Taylor on the next play and took a 7-0 lead in 13 seconds, the quickest score in Vikings' history.

So much for Culpepper's early season struggles. He threw for 300 yards and his first three touchdowns of the season in a dominant performance.

"They made a play," said Saints cornerback Mike McKenzie, who was beaten to the corner on that first touchdown.

DiMarco's Golden putt gives U.S. Presidents Cup win

He birdies 18th to send Nicklaus out as winning captain

From wire reports

GAINESVILLE, VA. — Fred Couples delivered another magical moment. Chris DiMarco provided the clinching point with a dramatic birdie. Best of all, the Americans sent captain Jack Nicklaus into retirement as a winner.

Right when it looked like the Presidents Cup might end in another tie, DiMarco holed a 15-foot putt on the 18th hole to outlast Stuart Appleby for a 1-up victory Sunday, giving the Americans an 18 1/2-15 1/2 victory at Robert Trent Jones Golf Club and keeping their record perfect on home soil.

DiMarco knew it was good in the final few feet, and he charged toward the cup and then into the arms of Nicklaus.

"All I thought about was to get him a win," DiMarco said.

Nicklaus, who already said farewell to the majors and might not play another PGA Tour event, was captain for the third time. His team got hammered in Australia in 1998, and the matches ended in a tie two years ago in South Africa.

This time, he went out a winner.

"It feels a lot better to have a win, there's no question about that," Nicklaus said. "As far as being something special, I may never captain another team, I may never play another round of golf, and if I end my career this way, it's a pretty good way to end it."

Under new rules this year, every match had to go extra holes until one team had enough points to claim the cup.

Someone apparently forgot to tell Phil Mickelson.

With the Americans already at 17 points, Mickelson thought he clinched the Presidents Cup when he stuffed a wedge into 4 feet and made the birdie on No. 18 to square his match with Angel Cabrera. Lefty pounded his fist, removed his cap to shake hands and was about to celebrate when European tour rules official Andy McFee broke the news.

The look on his face was utter shock, and he headed to the first tee.

Mickelson never had to finish the extra hole. A massive roar behind him told him all he needed to know.

And he shouldn't have been surprised that DiMarco delivered the decisive blow. Despite only three victories in his 10 years on the PGA Tour, DiMarco was the star of this U.S. team by going 4-0-1. He spent the back nine matching Appleby putt-for-putt, none of them easy, until they reached the 18th green all square.

The crowd shouted "USA," then "MVP" for DiMarco after the biggest moment of his career.

The only other match that reached the 18th hole produced the loudest cheer, from a usual source.

Couples already has made his own highlight reel from the Presidents Cups, having won the cup in 1996 with a 35-foot birdie putt to beat Vijay Singh for a one-point victory.

Couples got Singh again under different circumstances. He is an aging star at 45, while Singh is the No. 2 player in the world who has won more on tour than anyone in the last three years.

Tied coming to the 18th, Couples summoned one more piece of magic by rolling in a 20-foot putt. He turned as it fell, dropping his putter and raising his arms and screaming toward the gray skies in utter elation.

"I figure if I beat him, there might be a small, golden rainbow out there, and I did," Couples said. "I hope my point means something."

Davis Love III closed out an easy victory behind him, assuring the Americans at least a tie and turning the stage over to DiMarco and Mickelson, who never lost a match all week.

Tiger Woods lost for the first time in a Presidents Cup singles match, falling to Retief Goosen on the 17th hole. Goosen also went unbeaten for the week at 4-0-1. But the Americans got loads of help, from Jim Furyk (3-0-2) beating Adam Scott, and Kenny Perry and David Toms getting their first points of the week.

It was another tough loss for the Internationals, who battled the Americans to a tie in team matches the first three days and fought back from early deficits throughout the 12 singles matches.

Appleby, now 0-4 in singles, bogeyed the 17th hole to lose control of the match, and could only watch as DiMarco made his birdie on the 18th.

COLLEGE FOOTBALL

TULANE TICKETS IN BATON ROUGE: Tulane season-ticket holders can pick up their tickets at the Pete Maravich Assembly Center this week for Tulaneís next two games. The Green Wave will play Southeastern Louisiana on Saturday in Tiger Stadium, and will meet Houston on Oct. 8 in Lafayette. Tickets will be available at noon Tuesday at the Tulane ticket window in the southwest corner of the PMAC. The office will be open noon to 5 p.m. Tuesday and 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Wednesday through Friday. Tickets can also be purchased then.

IRISH PLAY CAME FROM BOY: Charlie Weis doesn't usually let anyone else call plays. He made an exception for 10-year-old Montana Mazurkiewicz. The Notre Dame coach met last week with Montana, who had been told by doctors weeks earlier that he has an inoperable brain tumor. ìHe was a big Notre Dame fan in general, but football especially,î said his mother, Cathy Mazurkiewicz. Weis showed up at the Mazurkiewicz home just east of South Bend, and talked with Montana about his tumor. Weis said the meeting was touching. ìHe told me about his love for Notre Dame football and how he just wanted to make it through this game this week,î Weis said. ìHe just wanted to be able to live through this game because he knew he wasn't going to live very much longer.î Weis agreed to let Montana call the first play against Washington on Saturday. He called "pass right." Montana never got to see the play. He died Friday at his home. Weis heard about the death and called Mazurkiewicz on Friday night to assure her he would still call Montana's play.

AP POLL: Michigan fell out of The Associated Press Top, ending its streak of 114 consecutive weeks in the rankings, which was the longest in the nation. The last poll that didn't include the Wolverines was Oct. 18, 1998. Southern Cal extended its streak of No. 1 rankings to 23 in the latest media poll. The Trojans picked up two first place-votes after wiping out an early 13-point deficit and blowing out Oregon 45-13 Saturday, a win that knocked the Ducks out of the rankings.

MAJOR LEAGUE BASEBALL

YANKEES, RED SOX STAY TIED: Robinson Cano hit a go-ahead, two-run homer in the seventh inning, Gary Sheffield added a three-run shot in the eighth and the New York Yankees beat the Toronto Blue Jays 8-4 Sunday, keeping the Yankees tied with the Boston Red Sox for first place in the American League East. The Red Sox completed a three-game sweep of Baltimore with a 9-3 victory, behind home runs from Manny Ramirez and Johnny Damon. The Red Sox finish the season with seven home games, the last three against the Yankees.

ASTROS LEAD DOWN TO ONE: Jeromy Burnitz hit a go-ahead, two-run homer in the seventh inning, leading the Chicago Cubs to a 3-2 victory against Houston. The Philadelphia Phillies defeated the Cincinnati Reds 6-3, cutting the Astrosí lead in the NL Wild Card race to one game.

INDIANS DROP ONE: Cleveland Indians center fielder Grady Sizemore lost Paul Phillipsí popup in the sunlight in the ninth inning, allowing the Kansas City Royals a 5-4 victory. The loss cut the Indiansí lead in the AL wild card over Boston and New York to a half-game. The Indians, who lost for only the third time in 20 games, trail the Chicago White Sox in the AL Central by two games.

AROUND THE MAJORS: Phillies shortstop Jimmy Rollins led off Sundayís game in Cincinnati with a home run, extending his hitting streak to 30 games. . . . With their playoff hopes fading, the San Francisco Giants put Barry Bonds in the lineup for Sunday afternoon's game against the Rockies, veering from their routine of using him only for pinch-hitting on day games after night games. Bonds went hitless in three at-bats, but the Giants won 6-2. . . . Florida Marlins pitcher A.J. Burnett, a free agent after this season, indicated his start this week would be his last with the team.

Harris follows others, puts Trojans at No. 1

Texas is No. 2; LSU placed fifth in initial rankings

By Ted Lewis
Staff writer

The first Harris Interactive College Football Poll was released Sunday, and it doesn't look much different from the other rankings.

As in the USA Today coaches' poll, which remains in the BCS formula, and The Associated Press rankings, which were withdrawn from the BCS this year, Southern California is the overwhelming choice†as the No. 1 team.

The Trojans received 110 of 113 first-place votes in the Harris Poll, 60 of 62 in the coaches' poll and 57 of 65 in the AP.

Texas was No. 2 in all three.

But there were variations after that. Most notably LSU came in fourth in the coaches' and AP polls and fifth in the Harris.

The Tigers, whose game against Tennessee was delayed until today because of Hurricane Rita, were third in the coaches and AP polls last week. But this week voters dropped them behind Virginia Tech in the coaches' and AP polls and both the Hokies and Florida in the Harris.

Otherwise, there was only one difference in the teams in the top 10: Michigan State is No. 10 in the Harris Poll and No. 12 in the coaches' poll. And Tennessee is No. 9 in the coaches' ranking and No. 12 in the Harris.

Only one of the 114 panelists in the Harris poll didn't vote, and that was because he was† displaced by Hurricane Rita.

"We felt it went well," said BCS spokesman Bob Burda. "We didn't expect the Harris poll to be much different than the others because people tend to use them as resources.

"You certainly don't see anything in our poll that's out of line."

That's not quite true.

Winless Idaho received five points from one voter.

"I guess we've got an Idaho fan out there somewhere," Burda said. "We'll have to look into it."

The first release of the BCS standings, which also include six computer rankings, will be made following the games of Oct. 22.

Lewis' vote: Ted Lewis is a voter on the Harris Interactive poll. Here is his ballot for this week: 1. Southern California; 2. Texas; 3. Virginia Tech; 4. Florida; 5. LSU; 6. Ohio State; 7. Michigan State; 8. Georgia; 9. Tennessee; 10. Notre Dame; 11. Florida State; 12. Miami; 13. Alabama; 14. Minnesota; 15. Arizona State; 16. Wisconsin; 17. UCLA; 18. Purdue; 19. Iowa State; 20. California; 21. Texas Tech; 22. Michigan; 23. West Virginia; 24. Louisville; 25. UTEP

TENNESSEE (2-1, 0-1) vs. LSU (1-0, 0-0)

THE VITALS
Kickoff: 6:45 p.m. at Tiger Stadium.
Coaches: LSU's Les Miles (29-21, 1-0, sixth season, first at LSU); Tennessee's Phillip Fulmer (124-32, 15th year, all at Tennessee).
TV/Radio: ESPN2/101.9-FM

KEEP AN EYE ON

LSU CORNERBACKS: Torched two weeks ago by Arizona State's Sam Keller, Chevis Jackson and Ronnie Prude might be viewed as inviting targets for Tennessee quarterback Erik Ainge. Sun Devil receivers appeared to have plenty of room to make catches as LSU allowed 461 passing yards. Miles hinted the Tigers might play more man-to-man defense than two weeks ago to keep a few more players in the box to combat the Vols' hard-running Gerald Riggs. Tennessee likes to attack man coverage by getting vertical with the passing game. Any LSU cornerback is probably in for a busy night.
TENNESSEE QUARTERBACK ERIK AINGE: The Vols coaching staff may have given Ainge the boost of confidence he needs by naming him the starter early in the week, ahead of former LSU quarterback Rick Clausen. Ainge had one good drive against Florida last week but was unable to hit enough passes to give Tennessee any offensive momentum. Expect a rededicated Tennessee offensive attack, which may have been hampered by WR Robert Meachem's bad ankle last week. Ainge may also try to exploit the height advantage of his receivers Meachem (6-3) Chris Hannon (6-4) and C.J. Fayton (6-2) over Prude and Jackson, who are both 6 feet.

GAMEPLAN

Unlike Arizona State, Tennessee is a run-first kind of team. LSU will first have to stop Riggs, who rushed for 196 yards on 40 carries and had 1,107 last year. Any problems there and it will be a long night for the Tigers. "He's big, strong and physical," said LSU coach Les Miles. "You have to tackle him with your whole body. He's going to run through some arm tackles."
On the other hand, Tennessee longest play from scrimmage this season is 19 yards. Against the pass, LSU will have to continue to mix it up and disguise its defense and get the right personnel matchups. The LSU offensive line must keep the Vols front line out of the backfield and give the running backs room to run and JaMarcus Russell time to pass. Russell looked good last week but is certain to get more heat. He can't afford to have his receivers drop six passes as they did last week. The wild card in the gameplan is the weather. Rain coming off Hurricane Rita could play a big part in play-calling and decision making.

KEY MATCHUP: TENNESSEE DEFENSIVE LINE VS. LSU OFFENSIVE LINE

Jesse Mahelona and his line mates blew right through Florida's offensive line last week for five sacks and disrupted Urban Meyer's highly touted spread option attack. The LSU offensive line gave a good account of itself in its opener as the LSU offense showed a good run-pass yardage balance, but Arizona State did sack Russell four times. Brett Helms and Will Arnold will continue to alternate at the left guard spot and will have their hands full, as will center Rudy Niswanger and right guard Nate Livings. Expect some draw plays, screen passes and bubble screens to take the charge out of the Vols.
BY THE NUMBERS: LSU has won two of the past three meetings with SEC East powers Tennessee, Florida and Georgia. ... Tennessee has won seven of 12 games vs. LSU in Baton Rouge. ... Vols coach Phillip Fulmer is the winningest active coach with at least 10 years in Division I-A (124-32, .795). ... LSU carries a 10-game home wining streak dating back to a 19-7 loss to Florida in 2003. ... LSU has a streak of 38 games with at least one sack.

ODDS AND ENDS

The game will mark the first since the renovation of the upper deck, which includes a 3,200-seat club section and a new press box. The new capacity is 92,400. ... After allowing 461 yards passing to Arizona State, LSU is ranked last among the 117 Division I-A schools in pass defense.... LSU's Chris Jackson is ranked first in the nation in punting, averaging 55 yards, and teammate Patrick Fisher is No. 2, averaging 49 yards. Each has punted twice. ... It will be LSU's first meeting with a top 10 team at Tiger Stadium since 2003 when No. 10 LSU beat No. 7 Georgia, 17-10. ... It's the latest home opener for LSU since the 1977 Tigers beat Rice, 77-0 on Sept. 24. ... This is the first time since 1999 the SEC has had four teams ranked in the AP top 10.

NOTE

Tennessee's visit marks the return of quarterback Rick Clausen, though he will play a backup role to Erik Ainge after starting against Florida last week. Clausen, a former Tiger, owns a ring from LSU's 2001 SEC Championship Game victory against the Vols, then quarterbacked by his brother Casey. Rick was redshirted that year but came back to start the Ole Miss game in 2002 for LSU before transferring to Tennessee. Clausen has added 30-40 pounds since his playing days and was the Vols starting quarterback the last four games of last year, including a Cotton Bowl victory against Texas A&M in which he was named MVP. Few LSU players have kept in touch with Clausen, who roomed with defensive tackle Kyle Williams for a time. "I haven't spoken to him in a couple of year," said Williams. "I think David Jones might speak to him a little bit, but I don't think any body does. When he turned evil, he went all the way I guess."

FROM THE COACH'S MOUTH

"The idea our team gets to play at home, I don't think it can ever be anticlimactic (because of the hurricane). We're excited we can look forward to the new stadium, being at home in front of our friends and family. I can't imagine that will ever be just a game." LSU coach Les Miles.

scheduled for this past Saturday but was moved to today because of Hurricane Rita.

Judging by the somewhat bizarre steam-releaser witnessed on the original Tennessee Eve, energy and emotion should be in surplus.

"The kids are practicing. They're ready to play, again," LSU offensive coordinator Jimbo Fisher said. "I mean, it's just like we're practicing, practicing, doing good, ready to roll and then you hold off a week and we're ready to go, again. Now that I think about it, to tell kids, 'Hey keep (practicing) hard. We're going to play.' Then to only play one game, it's hard on them."

Check your now worthless schedule magnets or posters. It's Sept. 26. LSU should be three games deep into Miles' inaugural campaign, every one of them a predictable icky and muggy contest played under the lights of Tiger Stadium.

By now, Tigerland should know what Miles thinks of the much-hyped atmosphere, his take on SEC-style football and whether or not his drive-thru headset can withstand 92,000 fans determined to abuse their vocal cords.

Instead, the home video tapes of the LSU-Arizona State opener are beginning to fray because of constant rewinding. It's all they've got, all they've seen.

"Certainly, I looked forward to playing this Saturday night," Miles said. "But if I can't control my emotions and I can't pull myself back then I'd be a poor example for anyone else."

Miles was then asked if he'd be able to maintain that level of calmness if he still had eligibility left from his playing days.

"There'd be some anxious moments in a number of areas," he admitted, slightly laughing.

While LSU's infant season is still waiting to bloom, the Vols' campaign is on the brink of disaster prior to October. A closer-than-needed victory over perennial free-win UAB was followed with a bye week, then a sluggish 16-7 loss to Florida in which starter Rick Clausen was replaced by sophomore Erik Ainge. In danger of dropping two games behind SEC East foes Florida, Vanderbilt and Georgia in the loss column, Coach Phillip Fulmer labeled Ainge the starter for the game in Death Valley, perhaps hoping the more permanent tag would spark confidence and stability in a lackluster offense.

Ainge has thrown for a modest 204 yards in abbreviated duty in two games, completing fewer than 50 percent of his passes.

"We've got to get on the same page from a timing standpoint, with nobody looking over their shoulder all the time," Fulmer said. "I've addressed the team about it; I've addressed the seniors and the leadership. And we're looking forward to going on about our business and being a better team."

Rain or no rain, look for Tennessee to be generous in the amount of carries given to senior Gerald Riggs Jr. The multiple postseason award candidate is averaging close to five yards a carry and 100 yards per game.

"Tennessee is a much more physical team than Arizona State," Miles said. "Tennessee has a dominant front rush. But our offensive line matches up pretty well with them. Arizona State was physical but it's not the same style as Tennessee.

"Gerald Riggs is a big, strong physical back. You have to tackle him with your whole body. There can be no arm tackles."

With the forecast calling for wet conditions, LSU might finally miss injured tailback Alley Broussard whose north-south style befits a sloppy field. Miles said he was interested to see which back - Joseph Addai, Justin Vincent or Shyrone Carey - would be his token "mudder" tonight.

That is, of course, if plans don't change, again.

"Shoot, they may postpone it a couple more days. Who knows?" Miles said facetiously before reiterating, "we'll be ready."

Wave's maturing defense a dominant unit

TULANE, from C-1

But just as important was the way the Wave won. It dominated the Mustangs, who, two weeks earlier had upset TCU, which knocked off Oklahoma in its season opener.

Tulane not only showed more sharpness on offense and special teams than last week's loss to Mississippi State, but when the Green Wave made a mistake, it came right back and made up for it. The Wave remained in control despite its mistakes.

Tulane, which won't have a true home-field advantage this season, cut its penalties from 10 in its previous game to five Saturday. If that continues, it should help this week against Southeastern Louisiana and in "home games" the following two weeks against tough West Division opponents Houston and Texas-El Paso.

OFFENSE – A

This could have been a 41-10 victory had the offense capitalized on opportunities in the red zone. Quarterback Lester Ricard missed a coupled of reads and tried to force passes into tight coverage, but he seemed a lot sharper on his short throws, and his receivers only dropped a couple of passes.

When Tulane really needed to make something happen, it responded with scoring drives. For the second consecutive week, the Wave offense outplayed the opposing defense. In its first two games, Tulane has a 43-20 advantage in first downs and has controlled the clock, holding the ball for more than 76 of the 120 minutes played.

The running game still isn't where the coaches would like it to be, Matt Forte (20 carries for 87 yards) and Jovon Jackson (16 for 52 yards) were impressive in wearing down SMU's defense. When Forte's slashing running style wasn't effective, Jackson's bullish, more powerful running was.

In controlling the game, Tulane ran 81 plays to SMU's 49 and had five drives of at least seven plays. Two of those series were 15- and 16-play drives.

DEFENSE – A+

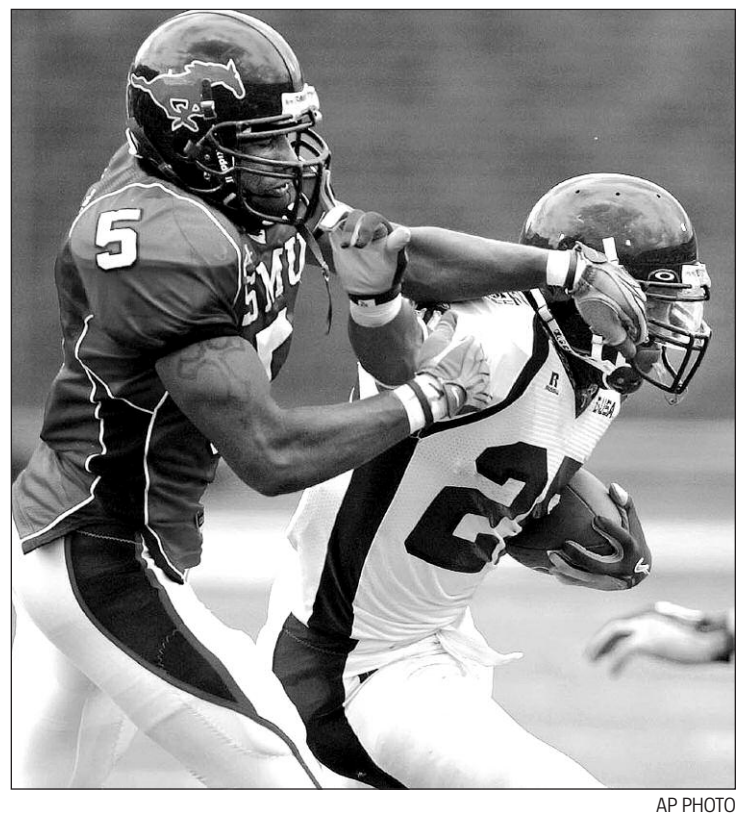
The defense has gotten the job done in consecutive weeks. This time, it allowed three points and forced SMU to settle for a field goal after having a first-and-goal at the 3.

What has been evident the first two games is that Tulane's defense is showing signs of maturity. The scary part is the defense is still fine-tuning. If it stays healthy, it definitely will be the best defense Scelfo has fielded and the best Tulane has had in a long time.



In the first two weeks, opponents have found little running room, gaining 150 yards rushing. Tulane's defense is the No. 1 defense in the country, surrendering 176 yards of offense a game.

SPECIAL TEAMS – B+

Its only major blunder was allowing an 88-yard kickoff return for a touchdown. If you remove that return and Wave kicker Jacob Hartgroves' field-goal attempt that hit the left upright, there wasn't much more to ask of this group.

It allowed 190 yards on five kickoffs, but its coverage was solid on punts (22 yards on three returns), and it made big plays. A 47-yard punt return by safety Sean Lucas set up the Wave's second touchdown. The kickoff-coverage team helped put the game out of reach when it recovered a fumble at SMU's 16, setting up a quick touchdown pass from Ricard to Damarcus Davis that pushed Tulane's lead to 24-3.

Punter Chris Beckman bounced back with an outstanding performance. He averaged 41.2 yards on five punts while often kicking into a strong wind. Now that Tulane will play every game outdoors, Beckman, first-team all-conference last season, will face a new obstacle. He's averaging 39.9 yards a kick.

Vikings hit stride at worst time for N.O.

PETER FINNEY

AP PHOTO

Before the Saints played Minnesota, Coach Jim Haslett knew that Vikings quarterback Daunte Culpepper was ready to have a breakout game.

Let's paint the scene Sunday in the Metrodome.

After a feel-good upset of the Panthers on the road, the vagabond Saints were coming off a six-turnover, 13-penalty loss to the Giants in the Giants' back yard, and you had the feeling the visiting team was catching the Vikings at the worst possible time. Why?

Because the sky was falling in Minneapolis.

Because the Vikings went into the season surrounded by Super Bowl hype, and suddenly, everything seemed to be coming apart.

The 0-2 Vikes couldn't be as bad as they looked, could they?

Fans were calling for the head of Coach Mike Tice. Here's a guy, in the option year of his contract, who was fined $100,000 by the league for scalping Super Bowl tickets. Tice is working for a new owner who last week gave his coach a vote of confidence. In the NFL, that can be a death knell.

Then you had the quarterback.

Seldom had a Pro Bowler gotten off to the kind of start experienced by Daunte Culpepper, who threw three interceptions and lost two fumbles in an opening loss to Tampa Bay. And followed that by throwing five picks in an embarrassing loss to Cincinnati.

You don't expect someone who threw 39 touchdown passes a year ago to throw for zero TDs and lead the league with 10 turnovers in your first two games.

That's what had Jim Haslett worried sick.

Better than anyone, the Saints coach realized Culpepper was a time bomb waiting to explode; only hoping it would not be Sunday.

Haslett had seen Culpepper at work in his first season as Saints coach, the 2000 season, the week after his team won the first playoff game in franchise history. He watched Culpepper take over the game, throwing for three touchdowns and running for crucial yardage in a 34-16 victory.

Two years later, he watched Culpepper beat the Saints 32-31 with a gambling two-point charge up the gut on the final play of the game, a defeat that triggered an 0-3 finish for a team that started 9-4 and seemed to be headed for the playoffs.

Last year he watched the 260-pound quarterback throw for 425 yards and five TDs in a 38-31 win in the Superdome.

"I know all about that guy," Haslett said before the game. "He's not going to stay in a slump for long."

As for Tice, Haslett said, "I know he's going to turn things around. The question is when."

Earlier in the week, Tice was suggesting the real challenge for a head coach arrives "when your team is in rough waters," not when the sun is out and the coach is "drinking a pina colada and smoking a Cuban cigar."

Well, on Sunday, at the end of the first quarter, Tice could have been sipping, and puffing on a victory cigar.

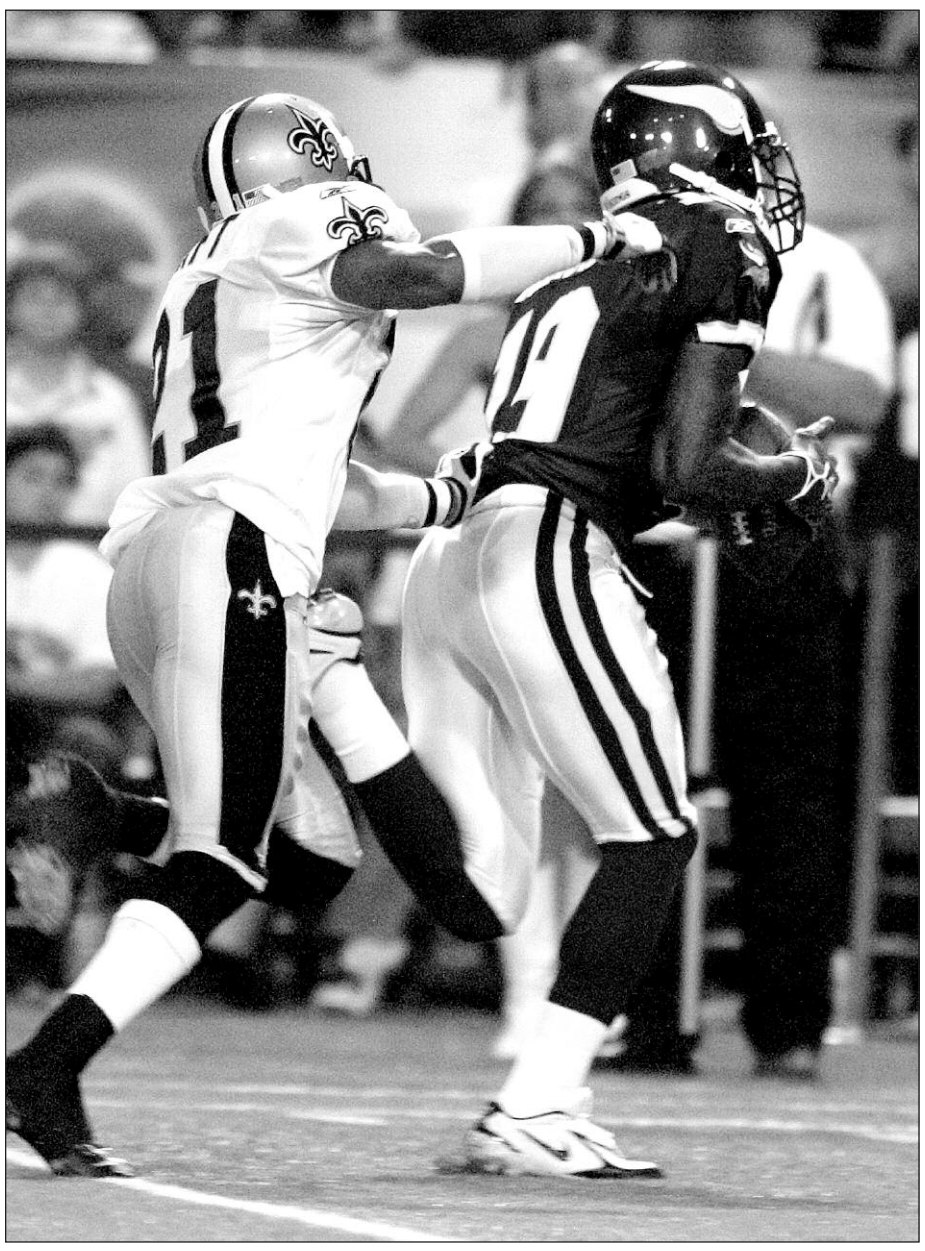
By that time, it was 17-0 Vikings, with the home team holding a 196-15 edge in yardage.

By that time, Culpepper, who threw his first touchdown pass of the season on the first play of the game, was on the way to a three-touchdown afternoon, and ex-Tulane Greenie Mewelde Moore was on his way to 101 rushing yards.

The crazy thing is, even after falling behind 24-0, the Saints were not out of a game they would wind up losing 33-16.

In the third quarter, they made it 24-9 (it would have been 24-10 had Haslett not foolishly gone for two points after a second-quarter touchdown). And after Donte' Stallworth's 67-yard punt return that would have made it 24-16 was rubbed out by a flag, the Saints still came back to make it an eight-point game early in the final period.

But that was it.



This one wasn't a case of the Vikings playing sensational football. It was more a matter of the Saints not being able to overcome Aaron Brooks' 12-for-32 (two interceptions) passing day, 14 penalties, and a defense that allowed Culpepper and company to control the ball for 38 minutes.

The bright side: It was a coming-out party for Devery Henderson, who came close to 100 yards catching passes, this on a day when Joe Horn had one grab. Horn would have grabbed more than one had more balls been catchable.

But that's how it goes.

The New Orleans Saints will play on this season as America's Team, a team without a home, a team that will play its first game closest to home Sunday when it welcomes the Buffalo Bills to San Antonio.

By now, the Saints realize, once they kick it off, the home team gets no favors.

Miscues again Saints downfall

SAINTS, from C-1

"I was looking for the post, and he bent it off to the corner. He made a good play, Daunte made a great play. Touchdown. They made a play early on, and it gave them an opportunity to build the momentum for the game."

But it didn't stop there.

The Saints' next six offensive possessions ended in five punts and an interception thrown by quarterback Aaron Brooks.

Culpepper completed a 68-yard pass to Marcus Robinson between cornerback Jason Craft and safety Dwight Smith, a 13-yard touchdown pass to Taylor against linebacker Courtney Watson and a 53-yard touchdown pass to Troy Williamson against Craft.

The Vikings led 24-0 in the second quarter. At one point, Culpepper had a quarterback rating of 151.4, while Brooks' rating was 4.9.

"This is one team you don't want to get behind because they have too much offense, and we just couldn't catch up," Haslett said.

It didn't help that Brooks had one of the worst performances of his career.

After starting the game 1-of-12, Brooks finished with 199 yards, one touchdown pass and two interceptions for a final rating of 43.6 ñ his lowest since 2002.

Playing from deep in the hole and having to abandon the running game made matters worse.

"We were forced to go to a hurry-up offense in the second quarter," Brooks said. "That is almost unheard of in this league."

And the Vikings — a desperate team after starting the season 0-2 ñ tried something new on defense, bringing their safeties and cornerbacks on blitzes all afternoon, throwing the Saints' offense out of whack.

"On film, we ain't seen them blitz at all," Saints guard Kendyl Jacox said. "They sure damn brought a lot of them today."

A disappointed Jacox insisted that if the Saints could have stuck to their game plan all day and "continued to pound them, the Vikings wouldn't have held up."

But for the second week in a row, that game plan was tossed out the window early.

The Saints fought back and came within eight points with a late first-half touchdown and a solid third-quarter performance.

But after they crept to 24-16 on a 13-yard touchdown pass from Brooks to Ernie Conwell and a one-yard touchdown run by Deuce McAllister, Culpepper quickly marched the Vikings to another field goal.

"We were just about at that point when we got to that 16 mark, then they took the ball, went down and scored and put us back in the two-minute mode," Jacox said. "We were just getting back there, just getting ready to get back in our game plan."

The Saints crashed back down to earth. And afterward it was a flight back to San Antonio.

Maybe this week will be different, with a full week to recover between games and the first real home date of the year against Buffalo at the Alamodome next Sunday.

Haslett and several players said the practices have been great over the past two weeks, but it simply has not translated into victories.

Tight end Ernie Conwell said he believes the Saints' unusual circumstances have had an effect on the team, but not because of mental or physical fatigue. But he suggested that the team is trying to make things happen, trying to force the issue rather than playing free and having fun ñ like they did in the final four weeks of last season and in Week 1 at Carolina this year.

Receiver Joe Horn ñ who caught one pass for 11 yards, his lowest ouput in more than 30 games ñ said he hopes his team will avoid falling into excuse mode.

"Don't hang our heads. ëWoe is us.' (Forget) that," Horn said. "I haven't heard anybody say that. I haven't seen that. But that's what we have to avoid."

Brooks warned against signing off on the Saints early, like the media has done in the past, his voice rising as he referred to last year's 4-0 finish.

"If you've been keeping up with this team, you know we're a very resilient football team. We've had worse situations than we're in right now," Brooks said. "So we don't need to get down in the dumps. We're not going to get down in the dumps.

"We're going to go out here and fight, practice and play our butts off and look forward to next week's game."

Just add STUDENTS

BY A VOTE of the kids, they dubbed their new school Sugar Cane Academy.

The single classroom, located in the heart of New Iberia, is cold and drab, but as students begin putting paint to paper, the space is slowly becoming a school.

Just ask Lusher Elementary School parent Kiki Huston, who along with first-grade teacher Paul Reynaud, has worked feverishly to set up a learning environment for Lusher students now living with their families in Cajun country.

For now, cardboard boxes are being used as desks and chairs as parents shop yard sales to pick up whatever else they can find to use. They also got their hands on two outdated, but working, computers.

"We are home-school status right now," said Huston, whose two children Olivia and Walker are among the school's seven students. "With everything being so topsy-turvy right now, we're trying to keep some of our community intact. We were hoping for up to 25 kids, but some people got cold feet."

Call it "Instant School," an effort by parents and teachers displaced by Hurricane Katrina to salvage as much of the school year as possible while providing children with some sense of normalcy when their lives are anything but normal.

Hurricane Katrina: In their own words

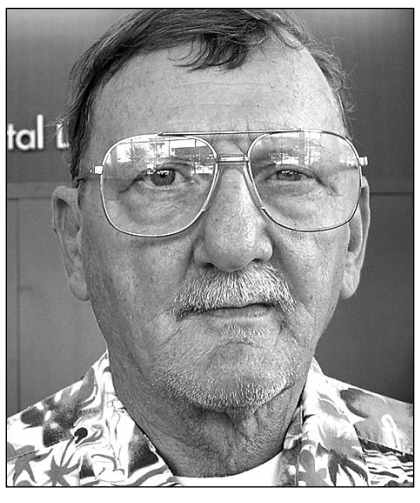
"I walked (to Baton Rouge) from Metairie. From Transcontinental to LaPlace to Hondo to here. It's what, about 70 miles?

"It took about two and a half days. I walked to where Denny's is, on the up ramp, and got on I-10.



"I had a stroke operation about two months ago. I was living in a house there, by myself, and I was working nights at the Morning Call, a 130-year-old business. I went to work the night before the hurricane. I had just enough money to buy my medication and pay rent until this happened.

"I didn't get much water until the day after the hurricane. I only got a few inches, but it still was bad enough that I didn't want to stay there. A big tree came down in the back yard, and toppled on a power line. I had to walk around that.

"I walked only at night because I had enough money to be able to stop and eat at restaurants. I slept out during the day, and I got the ant bites to prove it.

"The day before the hurricane, they said they had just opened a relief shelter in Hondo. When I got there, it was all filled up, less than a day after the hurricane. So I had no other choice than to come here.

"I got a ride at the last exit from Baton Rouge to here. Some guy saw me walking and yelled at me to pick me up. It was the last three or four miles. I came in here and they were full. I explained how I got here, and they said go see the Red Cross, and they put me here in the shelter.

"I want to go back and see if the Morning Call is still working. They don't need electricity for their old-fashioned cash register."

Public broadcasting facing daunting challenges and counting on the public for support

Hurricane Katrina hit New Orleans' public broadcasters as hard as it hit the city's commercial radio and TV stations.

Perhaps harder, given the comparatively meager money the television and radio stations have to rebuild.

Studios and offices for WYES-Channel 12 were swamped by floodwaters.

WLAE-Channel 32's new transmitter appears to be ruined.

DAVE WALKER
On the Air

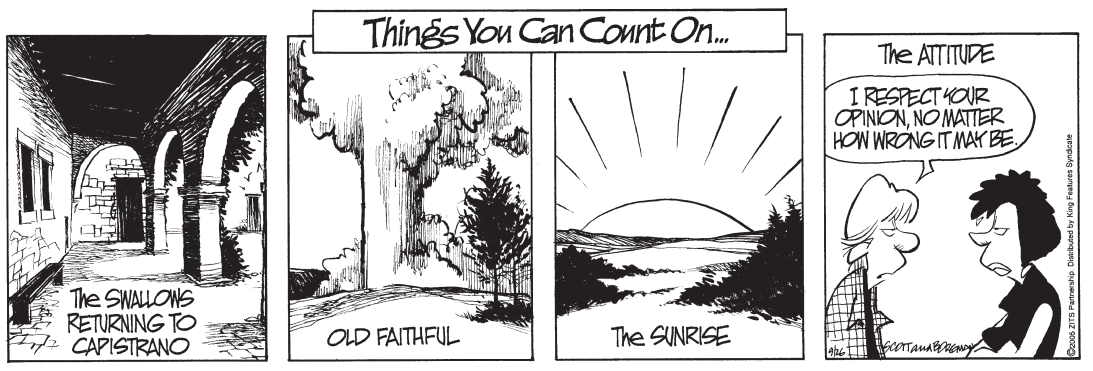
Local National Public Radio affiliate WWNO 89.9 FM got a low-power signal back on the air last week (a feed delivered by satellite from Georgia, actually), and jazz-and-heritage WWOZ 90.7 FM is doing a "WWOZ in Exile" Web cast, but both stations face daunting rebuilding challenges.

Tulane University's student-run WTUL 91.5 FM is off the air, but reportedly suffered little significant damage.



The building that housed the transmitter for WRBH 88.3 FM, New Orleans' volunteer-staffed outlet for the blind and print-handicapped, was knocked off its foundation, silencing the station for an impossible-to-determine period of time.

Getting WRBH back on the air will be "an overwhelming task," said Natalia Gonzalez, the station's executive

THIS MOLD HOUSE More tips for mending your broken home

Don't pitch granny's sideboard just yet

Furniture damaged by floodwater can be restored, but, first, ask yourself: Is it worth it?

The first step in restoring flood-soaked furniture is deciding whether the pieces are worth the effort and expense of salvaging, disaster experts at the LSU AgCenter advise. Decisions should be made on each piece based on the extent of damage, the cost of the article, the sentimental value and the cost of restoration.

The bottom line: Solid hardwood furniture sometimes can be salvaged by slow drying and careful repair. Unless it's extremely valuable, wooden furniture with veneer finishes is usually not worth the cost. Grandmother's 1940s waterfall style cedar chest might not be salvageable, but great-grandmother's solid oak or mahogany dining table may be.

Antiques are often worth the time, effort and expense of restoration. Unless damage is severe, the pieces can be cleaned and refinished at home.

Upholstered furnishings, however, soak up contaminants from floodwaters and should be thrown away unless they are antiques or especially expensive or well-made. In any case, they should be cleaned by a professional. Get an estimate to see if the furniture is worth saving.

If your upholstered recliner or dining room chairs have wooden legs and only a bottom few inches of the legs were in floodwater, they may be salvageable.

Wet furniture should be moved outside for initial cleaning. Hose off or wipe away dirt and mud. Don't let furniture dry in the sun because it will warp. Store the piece where it will dry completely in a shady, well-ventilated place, until you have time to repair it.

If possible, open cabinet doors and drawers, but do not force them open. You may be able to open stuck drawers after they dry. Remove as many parts as possible. Gently pry off the back of the piece, if possible, with a screwdriver or chisel.

Once dry, furniture may be reglued using clamps, sanded and refinished. Contact an experienced carpenter or consult books on furniture repair.

Even if furniture has not been submerged in water, white spots or a cloudy film may develop on damp furniture. Wear rubber gloves to try these solutions:

• If the entire surface is affected, rub with a damp cloth dipped in either turpentine or camphorated oil, or a solution of 1/2 cup household ammonia and 1/2 cup water. Wipe dry at once and polish with wax or furniture polish.

• If color is not restored, dip 3/0 steel wool in oil (olive, mineral, lemon or boiled linseed) and rub lightly in the direction of the wood grain. Wipe with a soft cloth and re-wax. For deep spots, try a drop or two of ammonia on a damp cloth, then rub at once with a dry cloth and polish.

• Rubbing cigarette ashes, a piece of walnut or powdered pumice on white spots may help remove them. If spots remain, the piece should be sanded and refinished.

Strake Jesuit in Houston. In Baton Rouge and LaPlace, Catholic students from New Orleans are attending new satellite night schools at St. Michael the Archangel and St. Charles Catholic high schools. Though not all from the same school in New Orleans, evacuees who until Hurricane Rita's threat were sheltered at the Astrodome, Reliant Center and the George Brown Convention Center in Houston are being schooled together at buildings that were closed at the end of the 2004-2005 school year.

"This room (the library) was empty a couple of days ago," said Sue Ann Payne, a former Houston principal who agreed to come out of retirement to head up Frederick Douglass Elementary School in downtown Houston. "The whole school was empty."

But within a couple of days, books were back on the library shelves, desks and chairs back in the classrooms and colorful cut-outs and slogans back on the bulletin boards. A job fair was held to lure retired teachers back to the classroom and help displaced teachers from New Orleans maintain employment.

Danyell Schulze of Harvey, a social-worker-turned-teacher at Alice Harte Elementary School in Algiers, said she never felt more welcomed in a job than when she stepped foot at Douglass.

"I knew the children needed me," said Schulze, who is teaching a fourth grade class of mostly boys. "They needed stability. They've been through such devastation – things that most adults will never experience. They all have stories to tell, and I listen. We want them to know that they can come here and feel safe."

At the same time, she doesn't let the kids stray from their real purpose of being at Douglass – catching up and keeping up with academics. "I've tried to stroke their intelligence. I emphasize the importance of their education, which gives them another outlet to focus on."

Kirstin Dornan and Anna Giorlando, both 17 and students at Dominican High School in New Orleans, share a laugh with Raymond Yakelis, 18, a student from Brother Martin in New Orleans at Catholic High School in Baton Rouge, where boys and girls are sharing the campus for the first time.

For Schulze and her pupils, a typical day begins with story time followed by a question-and-answer session. Then it's on to math, where kids are learning basic geometry. In English, kids are mastering sentence structure. And through hands-on science experiments, they are learning about predictions and measurements.

Across town, more than 400 students from Jesuit High School have resumed their education at Strake Jesuit, with more than 30 of their teachers from New Orleans among the faculty. Students attend school from 3:30 to 9 p.m. Sundays through Thursdays, which allows them to attend football games and other school functions on Fridays.

"Initially, the idea was to work the kids into our own class schedules," said the Rev. Daniel K. Lahard, president of Strake Jesuit. "We could accommodate 200 extra people, but as the numbers grew, we realized that the only feasible way to do it was after the regular school day."

The Rev. Anthony McGinn, Lahard's counterpart in New Orleans, said that through www.nola.com, he was able to get word out to parents via The Times-Picayune affiliated Web site, nola.com, about Strake Jesuit's involvement, prompting many families to leave where they had initially settled and relocate to Houston.

McGinn said he is grateful for the hospitality shown to Jesuit families and students by the Strake Jesuit community as well as Jesuit schools throughout the country.

That doesn't mean students have accepted their new learning environment with ease.

"They're disappointed that they are not in their usual routines," McGinn said. "But they also realize that so many people are working together to salvage their school year."

As he headed to class, Brian Adorno, 16, couldn't help but think about what he would be doing if he were back in New Orleans. "I'd be at football practice right now," he said. "And I don't have that to look forward to anymore. It's also hard because most of my close friends are scattered around the country."

Other students are trying to look at the bright side of being displaced. "The down side is that we can't play sports right now," said John Love, 15. "But the up side is that we can sleep late. And we don't have to go to school on Fridays."

In Baton Rouge, students at the Brother Martin night school echoed the same points as they waited for their classes to start at at 3:45 p.m. The 550 enrollees include about one-third of the 2005-2006 student body, plus evacuees from just about every other New Orleans area Catholic school, including Jesuit, St. Augustine, Holy Cross, De La Salle and Redeemer-Seton.

As of last Thursday, due to demand, the school went co-ed for the first time in its history, enrolling girls from Mt. Carmel Academy, St. Mary's Dominican, and Ursuline Academy, said Gabrielle Macaluso, assistant principal of admissions at Brother Martin. Many students are the sisters of boys who were already attending.

"At first, it was like the worst thing that could happen," said Alex Juneau of his disrupted senior year at Brother Martin in New Orleans. "I have friends on the football team who say they love Brother Martin so much they would come back next year to repeat (their senior year). They weren't going to miss out because of the hurricane."

But, now, Juneau said he likes the night school, noting that a teacher explained that teenagers learn better later in the day.

Because of its home-school status, the Lusher families who formed Sugar Cane Academy are able to maintain a more flexible learning environment. Students have already taken a field trip to Bayou Teche, are working on science projects that involve the planting of seeds and writing in journals about their hurricane experience. They plan on making regular visits to the library, which is only two blocks away, and arrangements are in the works for Cajun musicians to perform for kids.

"The kids are doing great," Huston said. "They love their teacher and they love each other. But they also know that they will eventually be going home. Their only fear is alligators being in their back yard when they get there."

Public stations hit hard

WALKER, from C-7

director. "I don't know if six months is optimistic or pessimistic. I just don't know."

Randy Feldman, WYES' general manager, said the station's studios near City Park held about 5 feet of water at the peak of flooding.

Losses include the station's video library, artwork collected for the fall fund-raising auction, one mobile unit and office equipment.

WYES' transmitter and tower survived the storm and flood, and Feldman said his first goal is to get a satellite-delivered PBS network feed on the air as soon as possible.

The Corporation for Public Broadcasting has sent grant money to help the station meet its near-term payroll, Feldman said.

There's no way of predicting when local programming will air again, but PBS programming will be a sign "that the region is regenerating and will rebuild," Feldman said. "We will be a symbol of that.

"The broadcast service is something that can, especially the children's shows, bring tremendous comfort to people. Kids and families (need) some delight in their lives. Some meaningful delight, as I would call it."

Roof failure at WLAE's Causeway Boulevard headquarters in Metairie caused some interior water damage, said Mark Coudrain, the station's general manager, but the facility may be usable within a few weeks.

But the station's newly installed transmitter equipment, including the building that housed it, is a total loss.

"It's really just a disaster," said Coudrain, adding that plans are under way for WYES to share some of its transmitter time with WLAE.

The only possible bright side of this disaster scenario is that Katrina may accelerate a new, state-of-the-art facility for WYES, WLAE and WWNO to share.

"We were supposed to get a major chunk of construction money from the state," said Feldman. "I don't think the state is going to be doing a lot of that."

Federal relief money may be available to replace the expected state money, Feldman added, though that route could reopen the Teleplex's site-selection process. The structure has long been projected for the University of New Orleans campus.

"That was one of the options" for the Teleplex, said Feldman. "But that was pretty well hit (by Katrina) as well, from what I understand.

"It's a new ballgame. We're going to do whatever seems to be the best avenue for our community."

Pre-Katrina, WWNO had operated from an upper floor of UNO's library.

Working from the offices of Georgia Public Broadcasting – where he was employed until being hired earlier this summer as WWNO's general manager – Chuck Miller oversaw the return of WWNO's signal last week.

Currently airing there is a mix of NPR network programming and classical and jazz shows assembled by WWNO staffers.

Meanwhile, the WWNO Web site (www.WWNO.org) features a link to another site offering relief help for displaced Louisiana Philharmonic musicians.

Similarly, the WWOZ Web site (www.WWOZ.org) has been tracking the whereabouts and welfare of New Orleans roots-music performers.

Also archived there — the site has been guest-hosted by New Jersey freeform radio station WFMU-FM — are compelling Web log postings by David Freedman, WWOZ's general manager.

In addition to reporting on the condition of WWOZ's studios and transmitter, the blog contains provocative thinking-out-loud posts from Freedman about Katrina's impact on New Orleans culture.

"What's going to happen to the city when it's rebuilt?" asked Freedman during an interview. "Who's going to live here?

"I was realizing how much was lost, and how much more could be lost."

WWOZ has technical challenges to meet to get back on the air. Both its studios and transmitter are salvageable, though, and a signal could be up as soon as this week, Freedman said.

Meanwhile, continuous stream of New Orleans music, including archived shows and new shows produced by the station's volunteer hosts scattered across the country, is available on the station's Web site.

Contacted by e-mail late last week, Rob Rioux, music director at Tulane's student-run WTUL, said the station is hoping to get a Web site stream of archived shows activated shortly.

"We'll find out in the next day or so about the condition of the studio," wrote Rioux. "But early indications are that the damage was minimal.

"So I take it to mean our (record and CD) collection is intact."

WRBH's Gonzalez said the estimated repair cost for her station's transmitter – $300,000 – exceeds the station's annual budget.

Last week, Gonzalez didn't know the condition of her station's Magazine Street studios, but was more concerned for the welfare of the 100-plus volunteers who provide programming for the station by reading aloud from newspapers, magazines and books.

"I'd like to know how our volunteers are, and how our listeners are," she said. "Without them, we're just another talk-radio station."

Accordingly, Gonzalez said she'd like the station's volunteer readers to contact her via e mail – at npgonz@aol.com – in anticipation of a comeback.

"I'd like to get the word out that we're here, and that we're determined to come back," she said. "We want all of our volunteers to be safe and come back and help us."

City tries again to bring life to shattered area

Algiers residents back, but most of N.O. unlivable

While drinking water, sewerage and power have been restored to Algiers, most of the city's east bank remains without electricity and clean water, which officials now say could be restored in two to three weeks.

With many parts of New Orleans largely unscathed by Hurricane Rita, Mayor Ray Nagin began allowing some residents and business owners to re-enter the city Monday, a move that he hopes will jump-start a stalled effort to rebuild.

Starting at 10 a.m., Algiers residents began moving back into their homes, while business owners in the CBD, the French Quarter and parts of Uptown poured in to begin the arduous task of cleaning up.

Yet despite the eagerness of residents to return and city officials to rebuild, serious questions remain about whether New Orleans' shattered infrastructure is ready to handle a substantial influx, even in the sections least damaged.

While drinking water, sewerage and power have been restored to Algiers, most of the city's east bank remains without electricity and clean water, which officials now say could be restored in two to three weeks.

Nagin also warned of potentially serious public health risks, including illness from bacteria-laden tap water, limited police and fire services, and only a single military hospital to provide emergency services.

Food, medicine and gas also are in short supply, with only a handful of businesses open.

While the toilets are flushing, only one of the city's 65 sewer lift stations on the east bank was operating as of late last week. Sewerage and Water board officials did not provide an update on the sewerage system Monday.

The city's east bank wastewater treatment plant also was decimated. As a result, raw sewage probably will have to be pumped into the Mississippi River and possibly Lake Pontchartrain for at least nine months while it is rebuilt, water board officials have said.

The New Orleans Police Department has identified 249 officers who left their posts without permission during Hurricane Katrina and the storm's chaotic aftermath, and is now trying to distinguish out-and-out deserters from those who had compelling reasons to be AWOL.

The announcement puts a number to a phenomenon that was of uncertain magnitude when first revealed by angry police brass as looters swept through New Orleans in Katrina's wake.

Reconstructing exactly how and why a structure failed is one of the most formidable engineering challenges. Investigators do it after plane crashes. BATON ROUGE — With the help of satellites spotting storm-damaged areas in New Orleans, the federal government has determined that 253,000 applicants for federal aid in Louisiana are eligible for a newly announced $2,358 cash advance toward three months rent to assist people displaced by Hurricane Katrina.

Ron Sherman, the housing coordinator for the Federal Emergency Management Agency in Louisiana, said Monday the agency is expecting to shell out $600 million of rental assistance in the next two weeks to people across the nation who left the New Orleans area because they Eleven days after Hurricane Katrina pounded the New Orleans area, Walter Maestri erupted in frustration that Jefferson Parish was without basic supplies such as food and generators. In conference calls before the storm, state leaders had assured him that the parish could get provisions fast by requesting them through a computer system. But after an initial influx, the supplies had disappeared into bureaucratic limbo.

"In the beginning, food and water were pouring in. Now it's trickling," Maestri, the parish's emergency management director, bellowed in a Sept. 9 conference call with state and parish officials. "We have no supermarkets

La. agency gives back much of FEMA money

Health department. used only about $10 million

By Laura Maggi
Capital bureau

BATON ROUGE – The Department of Health and Hospitals has declined the bulk of $352 million in disaster assistance handed to the state by the Federal Emergency Management Agency late last week, with agency officials saying that they spent only about $10 million during the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina.

The $352 million showed up in a list of projects approved by FEMA totaling $457 million, which was deposited by the federal government last week in the state of Louisiana's bank account. But the state health department has taken only the roughly $10 million that it is entitled to so far, said Bob Johannessen, the spokesman for the agency.

"We are obligated under federal law to return that money. That is what we did," said Johannessen, who noted that the agency is supposed to take only what it has actually spent.

He said that the health department eventually expects to spend about $60 million in dealing with Katrina, including such costs as the shelters and triage centers set up to evaluate people evacuated from the flooded New Orleans area. Agency officials expect to request that FEMA eventually pick up the whole tab for such items, Johannessen said.

The mixup over the money delineates the confusion over the precise nature of FEMA's public assistance program, which is set up to reimburse state and local agencies for the extra costs they incur because of a major disaster. This can range from debris removal to overtime pay for police and firefighters to the setting up of emergency shelters.

Legislative Auditor Steve Theriot said his staff is encouraging FEMA and the state Office of Homeland Security and Emergency Preparedness — the agency that all of the disaster money will flow through — to coordinate their requests for federal dollars with each agency's fiscal director. This way when FEMA staff start to figure out how much a local or state agency needs to recoup their expenses, they will have the best possible figures.

In the case of the DHH money, when the money arrived nobody at the agency knew anything about a request for that much cash, Theriot said. His understanding is that a FEMA staffer spoke with somebody at the agency and made a guess about how much they would need.

"It was a guesstimate and not even a best guesstimate," he said.

One of the concerns that Theriot said he has is that while FEMA will advance a local government or state agency money after a disaster, the federal government eventually will require extensive documentation to justify the payments. So if a city gets more federal dollars than it spends, it could get in trouble down the line, Theriot said.

The state has received a total of $674.7 million in public assistance money from FEMA in recent weeks, according to documentation provided by state Treasurer John Kennedy's office.

A good deal of that money has been earmarked for local governments, including $102.8 million sent to the city of New Orleans. But of the most recent batch of local money —about $165.5 million received last week — only about half has been disbursed, said Mark Smith, a spokesman for the state emergency preparedness office.

Local governments got approval for a number of expenditures, including reimbursement for rescue work and shelter costs. The city of Kenner, for example, has requested that the federal government cover the cost of purchasing 50 trailers to house city employees whose homes were destroyed by the storm.

On the state level, the state Department of Agriculture and Forestry has received approval for $3 million the agency said was spent on providing state and local agencies with emergency fuel during the crisis after Hurricane Katrina. Meanwhile, the LSU Health Sciences Center will get $61.6 million to pay for the relocation of the medical school to Baton Rouge.

The medical school has relocated to the Pennington Biomedical Research Center, but needed help housing students in the Baton Rouge area. The federal money will pay for a cruise ship that will be docked in the Mississippi River and up to 400 mobile homes that will be located in the city, according to the FEMA worksheet for the project.

While the federal dollars are beginning to pour in, some agencies are still waiting for help. Officials with the Louisiana State University Health Services Division, which runs the Charity Hospital System, expect that they will eventually be asking the federal government to pick up about $625 million of their interim costs as they try to rebuild the public hospital system in New Orleans after the storm.

CEO Don Smithburg said that the hospital system is not yet sure what exactly FEMA will cover, saying that they are asking for temporary buildings for hospitals around the state that have been inundated with patients because of New Orleans evacuees. They also need mobile medical equipment that can be used at these busy hospitals and eventually moved to New Orleans, where much of their equipment was damaged during the storm.

Lawmakers worry incentives might keep evacuees away

Law rewards firms that hire them

By Bill Walsh
Washington bureau

WASHINGTON — Even as New Orleans Mayor Ray Nagin encourages people to return to his hurricane-battered city, Congress passed a tax-relief bill last week that could provide a strong incentive for some evacuees to stay away, some lawmakers say.

Racing to deliver assistance to those displaced by Hurricane Katrina, Congress passed and President Bush last week signed a new law giving an estimated $82 million in incentives to companies that hire evacuees outside the states hardest hit by the Aug. 29 storm: Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama.

The effect, according to Louisiana lawmakers, may be to encourage people who fled to Houston; Memphis, Tenn.; Atlanta; or other locales to stay where they are — making it more difficult for Nagin and other state and local officials to entice them back to the region's work force.

"It could have that effect," said Sen. David Vitter, R-La., who along with Sen. Mary Landrieu, D-La., last week proposed a broad array of bills designed to boost the state's decimated economy. "Our (legislation) would provide an incentive for people to come back."

The difference is that the hiring bonus is law while Vitter's and Landrieu's proposed package of bills is only now being discussed in Congress.

The "work opportunity tax credit" is worth as much as $2,400 to companies hiring people displaced by Katrina. Those pushing hardest to get it enacted were restaurant owners.

"We weighed in early on in the process," said Rob Green, vice president of federal affairs for the National Restaurant Association. "It is an important provision for the restaurant industry."

Restaurateurs are familiar with government-subsidized hiring incentives. They long have been able to take advantage of tax credits when hiring people moving off welfare. Green said that those most likely to use the Katrina-related credit are chain restaurants already familiar with the paperwork-filing requirements.

Green said the National Restaurant Association is interested in rebuilding New Orleans' famed restaurants. But in the meantime, he said, restaurant owners nationwide should be able to take advantage of the financial benefits associated with hiring new workers.

In its version of the tax-relief bill, the House of Representatives limited the tax incentives to companies in Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama. But the Senate extended it to employers nationwide and made it good for a full year.

The provision was retained but watered down in House-Senate negotiations. The compromise that Bush signed last week gives companies throughout the country until Dec. 31 to take advantage of the tax credit.

"My hope is that it isn't powerful enough to do the damage it could do if it were open-ended," said Rep. William Jefferson, D-New Orleans.

Landrieu said she supported the three-month out-of-state hiring incentive because it will help people displaced by the storm. She said that another provision – a tax credit lasting two years aimed solely at businesses in Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama – will encourage them to come back.

Democrats fight repeal of prevailing-wage law

Recovery contractors can reduce salaries

By Bruce Alpert
Washington bureau

WASHINGTON – President Bush's decision to exempt companies engaged in Hurricane Katrina recovery work from a law that requires federal contractors to pay workers the local "prevailing wages" is producing a heated debate about whether the move will help or hurt storm victims.

The Bush administration says that waiving the 74-year-old law for the recovery effort will enable companies to hire more displaced workers, reduce costs to taxpayers and ensure that more critical work is completed quickly.

But Democrats and labor unions say that companies winning federal contracts, often without competitive bidding, will simply pay workers less, increasing their profits but doing little to help displaced Gulf Coast residents rebuild their lives.

"The rebuilding of the Gulf Coast should create economic opportunities for its residents, not an opportunity to take advantage of people desperate to rebuild their lives," said Rep. Carolyn McCarthy, D-N.Y.

But Claude Allen, assistant to the president for domestic policy, said that suspending the wage law, known as the Davis-Bacon Act, would produce opportunities for small businesses that often can't afford to pay the prevailing wage.

The prevailing wage law for government contracts can make a big difference in what construction workers are paid. While the prevailing wages in Louisiana and Mississippi are often less than half of what they are in high-pay markets such as New York and Chicago, they are still significantly higher than the $5.15-an-hour minimum wage.

For example, the prevailing wage established by the U.S. Labor Department in metropolitan New Orleans is $18.05 an hour for an ironworker, $12.28 for a concrete finisher and $9.32 for a common laborer.

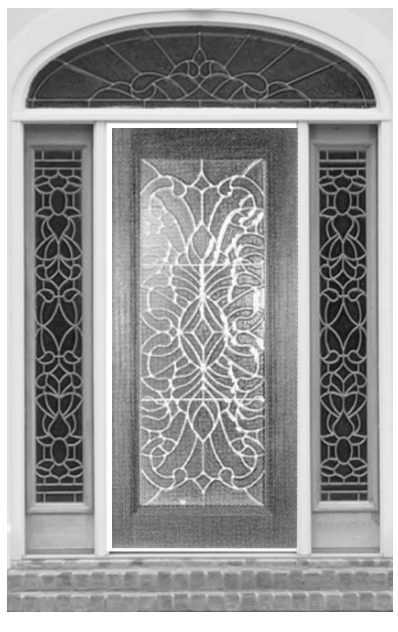
The Labor Department last week issued a directive reminding federal contractors that they still must pay the minimum wage and provide overtime pay of 1½ times the normal hourly salary for employees who work more than 40 hours in a week. But it said that for the time being, at least, they don't have to pay the prevailing wage for Hurricane Katrina recovery contracts.

As with so many contentious issues, the Bush administration and congressional Democrats, along with their supporters, can't agree on what would happen if the other side prevails.

Timothy Kane, a labor specialist at the conservative Heritage Foundation, sides with the Bush administration, arguing that any government attempt to mandate minimum salaries generally hurts the employment prospects of low-wage workers.

But Bill Samuel, legislative director of the AFL-CIO, said if contractors are allowed to pay as "low a wage as they can get away with, it only means that they will be making bigger profits." There is no requirement, he said, that they pass along labor savings to the federal taxpayers.

The impact of "low wages for this redevelopment work" on workers and their hometown communities in Louisiana and Mississippi can be devastating, he said. "If the wages are too low, workers won't be able to support their families and rebuild their lives," Samuel said.



The issue is likely to be debated on Capitol Hill in the next several weeks. Sen. Mary Landrieu, D-La., and Rep. William Jefferson, D-New Orleans, have signed on to Democratic legislation that would force a reversal of President Bush's moratorium on enforcement of Davis-Bacon for hurricane relief work. Even a short-term lapse in enforcement, Jefferson said, will mean that New Orleans area workers will be forced to compete for low-wage employment, making it harder for them to rebuild their homes and lives.

But the Democratic legislation is meeting strong opposition in the GOP-led Senate, where many Republicans have been trying for years to repeal the Davis-Bacon law.

Mississippi coastal variety in jeopardy

Big developers hatch big ideas

By Emily Wagster Pettus
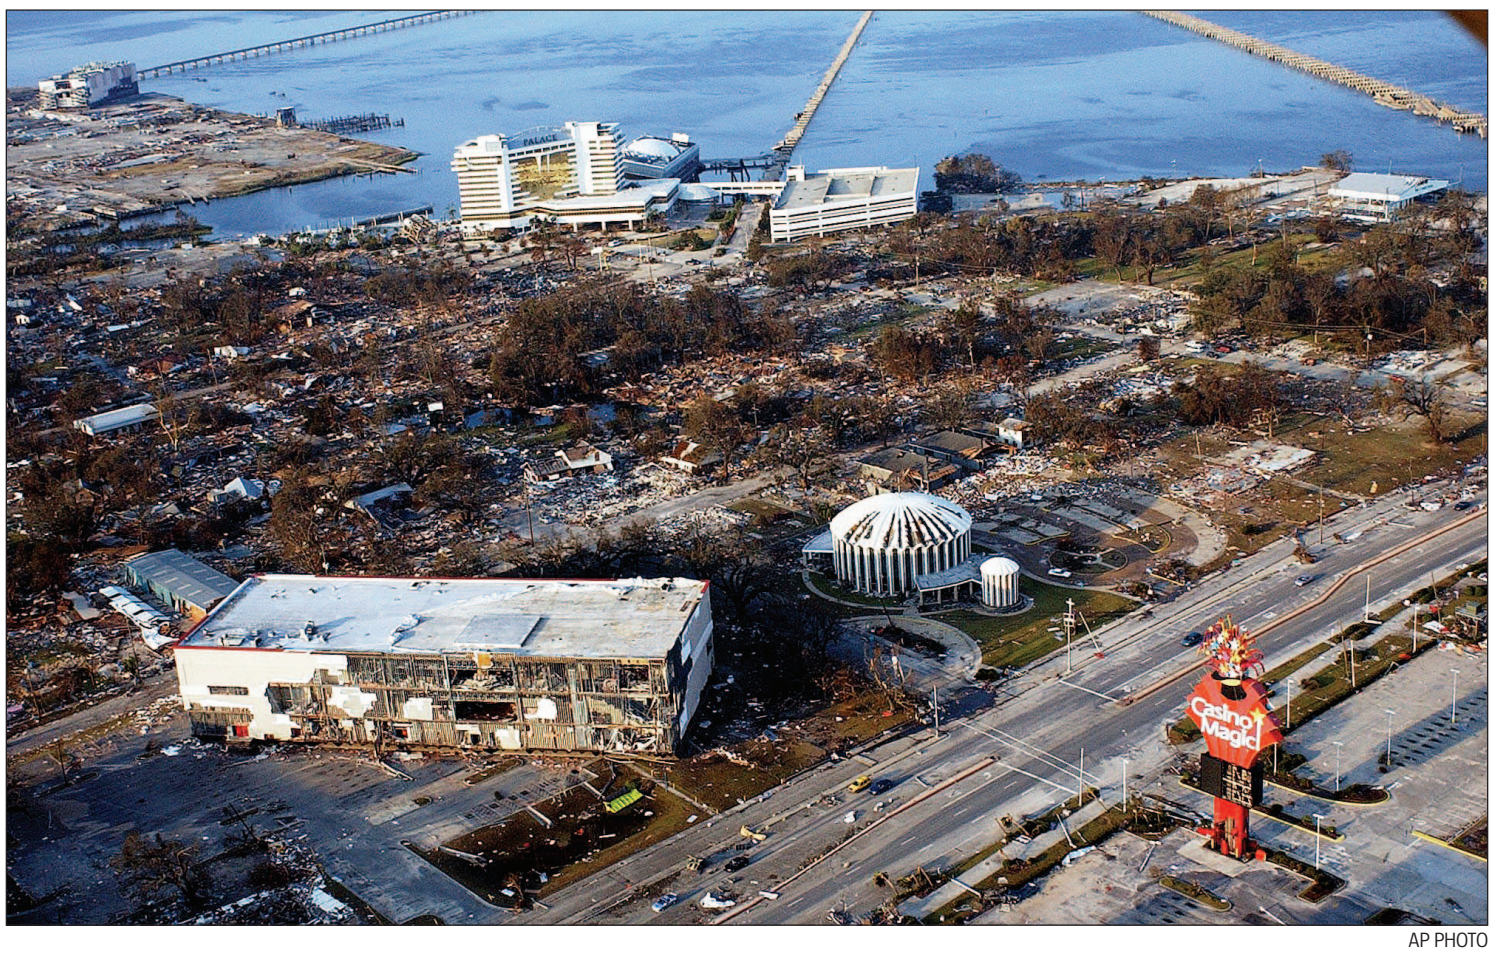
Associated Press writer



JACKSON, MISS. — A month after Hurricane Katrina smashed fishing shacks, casinos and historic mansions alike, civic leaders in Mississippi are turning their attention to rebuilding, and are wondering this: Will the coast be restored in all its variety? Or will it give way to strip malls and walls of high-rise condos?

The disaster represents an opportunity for big developers. For one thing, many homeowners and small-business owners may decide to sell out rather than rebuild. Also, Katrina flattened entire neighborhoods instead of, say, a house here and a house there, meaning big developers could have a blank canvas on which to work.

Even before Katrina, proposed condo developments prompted heated debate among locals who worried concrete towers would block beach views and rob the coast of its charm and variety.

"I hope we can preserve the historical ambiance that the beach in Mississippi has possessed over the years and not let it look like every other coastline in America," said former Gov. William Winter, longtime president of the state's archives and history board.

Gov. Haley Barbour has appointed a commission, headed by former Netscape chief executive Jim Barksdale of Jackson, to shape the coast redevelopment discussion.

The Casino Magic Biloxi barge rests on the north side of U.S. 90 in Biloxi, Miss., on the day after Hurricane Katrina roared through. State legislators are considering changing the law that allows casinos to be built only over navigable waters of the Mississippi River or the Gulf of Mexico.

David Stockman, director of real estate for Florida-based Davis Co., said Biloxi was a prime spot for development before the storm and is even more so now. His company is building four 22-story condo towers that were in the works before Katrina.

"Now that the storm has passed and rebuilding will restart, the future is even brighter for Biloxi," Stockman said. "Any of us that are in the marketplace now are looking for more opportunities."

While many people oppose the high-rises, he sees them as bringing money into the community. In any case, he said, local planners will probably try to achieve a mix of projects, including badly needed affordable housing for the relatively low-paid public employees and hotel and casino workers, and may even try to re-create the classic Southern architecture lost to Katrina.

Katrina smashed businesses large and small Aug. 29. Early estimates show that the hurricane also destroyed or severely damaged two out of three homes along the Mississippi coast: trailers, middle-class brick houses, tin-roofed fishing cottages, concrete condominiums, vacation bungalows and century-old mansions.

"Whatever it will be, it won't be what it was," said Charles Sullivan, who has written histories of the Mississippi Gulf Coast and of hurricanes.

It is clear most of the casinos will rebuild. They are crucial to the state's economy, employing 14,000 and generating $73 million this past year for state coffers.

There is still a question, though, of whether they will be allowed to build on land. State law allows casinos to be built only over navigable waters of the Mississippi River or the Gulf of Mexico. Legislators are considering changing the law.

"If they decide to allow the casinos on land, which from a public safety standpoint would make more sense, then instead of having beautiful mansions looking out at floating casinos, you'll just have casinos," said Robert Deyle, a professor of urban and regional planning at Florida State University.

Government officials also want large employers back on their feet soon to prevent the workforce from scattering. South Mississippi is home to a sprawling NASA center that tests space-shuttle engines and the state's largest private employer, Northrop Grumman Ship Systems, where about 12,000 welders, pipefitters and electricians make Navy ships.

While big industry has the wherewithal to go on — the shipyard this week is restoring full operations — some smaller businesses are not so sure.

Gerald Fayard had hoped to sell his business and retire soon, until Katrina changed his plans. The storm flattened his Gulfport mill, which manufactures woodwork and trim.

Fayard, 58, wants to rebuild, if he can find the money, and then work a few more years. He had no insurance and is counting on a Small Business Administration loan.

"You've got to run or rebuild," he said as friends helped him clear debris. "You can't just sit on the porch."

Fading Rita triggers a tornado at Mississippi State, hurting 4

Classes canceled; homes damaged

By The Associated Press

STARKVILLE, MISS. — A tornado spawned by the remnants of Hurricane Rita ripped through Mississippi State University's campus, injuring four people and forcing cancellation of Monday's classes.

The tornado was one of at least 14 twisters that touched down Sunday in Mississippi, meteorologists said. More than 100 homes were damaged, the Mississippi Emergency Management Agency said. At least three tornadoes struck in Arkansas on Saturday.

By dawn Monday, the fading remnants of Rita were centered 80 miles north-northwest of Indianapolis and moving to the north-northeast at 30 mph.

The university cafeteria and some tennis courts were damaged as the tornado plucked trees, telephone and power lines from the ground.

"We have many trees and power lines affected," university President Charles Lee said. "And to allow campus crews to work safely, we are asking students and nonessential personnel to remain at home Monday morning."

The four people injured were treated and released, the Oktibbeha County Sheriff's Office said. No details were available.

At the nearby University Hills trailer park, at least five mobile homes were severely damaged, an RV was rolled on its side, and some minor injuries were reported.

"They sounded the sirens, but it was pretty much too late," said Glenn Palmer, the park's weekend manager. "I looked outside and saw the funnel cloud coming and knew we were in trouble."

In central Arkansas, a tornado with 155 mph winds stayed on the ground for nearly 10 miles, damaging homes and a church. The church's steeple was sheared off and blown across a highway, meteorologist John Robinson said.

Tornadoes were among the deadliest elements of Hurricane Rita, which made landfall Saturday on the Texas-Louisiana line. Two deaths have been directly attributed to the storm: one person died Saturday in north-central Mississippi when a tornado overturned a mobile home, and an east Texas man was struck by a fallen tree.

Cattle feared dead in coastal parishes

Rescue continues in flooded areas

By Stacey Plaisance
Associated Press writer

BATON ROUGE – The Army used Blackhawk helicopters to search for stranded cattle in flooded sections of southern Louisiana on Monday, amid reports that more than 4,000 may have been killed in the aftermath of Hurricane Rita. Thousands more may be at risk.

"Take all the coastal parishes, they all had cattle," said Bob Felknor, spokesman for the Louisiana Cattlemen's Association. "My guess is we could be looking at least 15,000. It could be more than 30,000 in trouble."

Many dead cattle will not be seen because they were "washed out" by the floodwaters, emptying into the Gulf of Mexico, said Ashley Rodrigue, spokeswoman for the state Department of Agriculture and Forestry.

The storm flattened towns and swamped fields in Cameron and Vermilion parishes, just east of the Texas line. Reporters saw scores of cattle swimming in the murky brown floodwaters and others perched on virtual islands.

"The big thing now is the focus on keeping the cattle alive," said Army Lt. Gen. Russel Honore, commander of the military task force handling hurricane fallout. He said there are reports that 4,000 cattle died in Cameron Parish alone, where ranchers on horseback were herding the animals into mobile corrals attached to pickup trucks.

The military may use satellite positioning systems to help spot surviving animals, Honore said.

Authorities were trying to clear roads to tiny Pecan Island to rescue roughly 5,000 head of cattle there, said Robert LeBlanc, director of the Vermilion Parish Office of Emergency Preparedness. He said helicopters may be called in to help.

Louisiana had some 860,000 head of cattle as of Jan. 1. With most of coastal Louisiana's residents out of harm's way, officials turned some of their attention to trying to save thousands of cattle.

Any high ground — levees, highways, even parking lots — was being used to hold the thousands of rescued cattle, Felknor said. Roughly a third of the state's cattle are raised in coastal areas now under water.

A herd of about 600 cattle was being driven along a highway out of Vermilion Parish to higher ground. But getting them to dry land is only half the battle.

"We have to feed them," Felknor said. Hay was being brought down from central and northern parts of the state, as well as from Oklahoma, Kansas and Nebraska.

"The problem we're having is transportation," Felknor said. "We have to get more trucks."

Blessed - "ADJECTIVE: highly favored or fortunate; characterized by happiness and good fortune."

Prior to Hurricane Katrina, "blessed" was an often used word. Today, as Ray Brandt Toyota and it's employees and families begin the long and arduous rebuilding process, we can now truly understand the meaning of the word "blessed". Our employees, like the residents of Southeast Louisiana have begun the task of rebuilding our homes and our business. We would ask for your support in "Jumpstarting Jefferson", as our Parts, Service, and Sales Departments are open and available to serve any of your needs.

Ray Brandt has authorized the New Car, Used Car, Parts, and Service Departments to provide the citizens of the affected areas with reduced pricing in all departments to help with the rebuilding process. Our new and used car departments sustained no water damage and the damage by the wind to a few of our units provide remarkable savings. Most of the slight damage is not even visible to the eye; rather than save the insurance money, Mr. Brandt would rather pass the savings on to the public as part of his contribution to the "Jumpstarting Jefferson" campaign. This is a very limited opportunity, and availability is restricted.

We have employment opportunities available in the Sales Department, including management availabilities.

Louisiana picks up pieces after Rita

Five bodies found in Texas apartment

By April Castro
Associated Press writer

BEAUMONT, TEXAS — Rescuers used skiffs to take flooded-out residents to safety Monday as Hurricane Rita's waters began to recede along the Texas-Louisiana coast. The death toll climbed to seven when the bodies of five people were discovered in an apartment in Beaumont, Texas.

The five — a man, a woman and three children — apparently were overcome by carbon monoxide from a generator they were using after the hurricane knocked out the electricity over the weekend, authorities said. The children's aunt discovered the bodies after going to check on the group.

Rita roared ashore Saturday morning, slamming the refinery towns of Beaumont and Port Arthur, Texas, as well as Lake Charles, La., after an epic evacuation that emptied out a large swath of coastline and saved countless lives. About 3 million people fled from Rita's path after seeing what Katrina did to New Orleans a month ago.

As of Sunday night, only two deaths had been blamed directly on Rita.

"As bad as it could have been, we came out of this in pretty good shape," said Texas Gov. Rick Perry, who called the absence of widespread fatalities "miraculous."

Hard-hit towns along the Texas-Louisiana coast began to pick up the pieces Monday. Rescuers pushed their way into once-inaccessible neighborhoods as the floodwaters dropped. Crews worked to clear roads of fallen trees and other debris so that utility workers could restore power to hundreds of thousands of people. And authorities struggled to reach 5,000 stranded cattle in Louisiana.

Authorities began tallying up the damage to sugar cane fields, shrimp boats and refineries.

In Lake Charles, National Guardsmen patrolled the town and handed out bottled water, ice and food to hundreds of people left without power. Scores of cars wrapped around the parking lot of the city civic center.

Mike Deroche, director of the Terrebonne Parish, La., Office of Emergency Preparedness, said that the floodwaters were going down in most areas and that the parish had nearly 9,900 homes that were severely damaged.

"We're just starting to get back into some areas that we haven't been able to get to," Deroche said.

Livelihoods lost

In Chauvin, steady streams of people were brought by small boats from the flooded sections of Terrebonne Parish. Some cried as they hauled plastic bags filled with their possessions out of the skiffs that carried them to dry land.

Others cursed.

"This is the worst thing I've ever been through," said Danny Hunter, 56. "I called FEMA this morning, and they said they couldn't help us because this hasn't been declared a disaster area."

"Texas is a disaster area!" Jenny Reading shouted. "I guess the president made sure of that, and everyone just forgot about us."

STAFF PHOTOS BY DAVID GRUNFELD

Tommy Higginbotham, right, helps Clarke Duplantis remove furniture from the Duplantises' home in the wake of Hurricane Rita.

Philip Romeo, owner of Bridgeside Seafood in Delcambre, drains his boots after assessing the damage to his business on Sunday. The family-run seafood business has been a mainstay in the area, and he plans to reopen.

Robert LeBlanc, director of the Vermilion Parish, La., Office of Emergency Preparedness, said just about everyone who needed to be rescued had been taken care of, and the focus instead turned to clearing the roads to Pecan Island and rescuing about 5,000 cattle there.

"These people's livelihood depends on this," he said.

LeBlanc said the parish has about 500 livestock farmers. He said that the storm also wiped out hunting camps that bring in tourists, and that shrimp boats in Delcambre had been thrown up onto the land.

Water receding

Authorities had trouble keeping people from southern Louisiana from traveling through floodwaters in their own boats to discover whether Rita wrecked their homes and livelihoods. Hundreds went home to save what they could and begin rebuilding.

"Knowing these people — most of them are hunters, trappers, farmers — they're not going to wait on FEMA or anyone else," LeBlanc said. "They're going to do what they need to do."

People checking their hurricane-hit homes and towns found floodwaters up to the rooftops, coffins and refrigerators bobbing in the water, and stilts where their houses once stood.

"I've been through quite a few of them, and we've never had water like this," said L.E. Nix, whose home on the edge of a bayou in Louisiana's Calcasieu Parish was swamped with 3 feet of water. "I had a little piece of paradise, and now I guess it's gone."

Yet it was clear that the misery wrought by Rita was not as bad as what Katrina inflicted.

Randy Roach, mayor of Lake Charles, told CBS's "The Early Show" his hard-hit seaport city of oil refineries and casinos would bounce back.

"The good news is that the water is going down, it's kind of back in the banks of the lake and our recovery process is well under way," he said. "The response has been tremendous. I really appreciate everything that the federal government has done to help us."

Take me back to Texas

The more than 110,000 people living in Beaumont were urged not to return home, though, because water, electricity and sewer services will not be restored for weeks. Police blocked exits off interstate highways leading to the city.

In Houston, which was spared the brunt of Rita, officials set up a voluntary, staggered plan for an "orderly migration," with different areas going home Sunday, Monday and today to avoid the monumental gridlock of the exodus last week.

By Sunday night, a seemingly endless stream of charter buses, cars and sport utility vehicles clogged the southbound lanes of Interstate 45 into Houston.

FEMA may ask for proof of rental

RENTAL, from A-1

no longer can live in their homes.

The money is supposed to be mailed or electronically transferred automatically to qualified evacuees who have registered with FEMA. However, agency letters being sent to applicants warn that they must complete and return an additional FEMA form within 14 days or they will not be eligible for additional benefits.

FEMA Form 90-69B, a document called a Declaration and Release that is supposed to be included with the agency letter, must be sent to FEMA or the applicant may be required to return the money already received, according to the agency. The form is a declaration that the person receiving the benefit is telling the truth.

FEMA relief programs can give an evacuee up to $26,200 for the emergency needs of food, shelter, clothing, personal items and medical conditions. Soon after Katrina, FEMA expedited evacuee checks of $2,000 as an initial emergency payment. Most of the people who received the $2,000 checks also will get the new rent payment, Sherman said.

The FEMA transitional rent program, announced Friday afternoon by Homeland Security Secretary Michael Chertoff, has caught the attention of evacuated citizens nationwide, some of whom already have received wire transfers to their bank accounts. The payment covers three months of rent, but people who need more can get additional increments of three months, up to 18 months total.

People who apply for rental assistance beyond the initial lump-sum payment must provide documentation that they are "making efforts toward a permanent housing solution." The letter does not say what type of information would demonstrate such a motive.

Using satellite-based imaging, FEMA has determined the areas in southeast Louisiana where homes were seriously damaged or where people are unable to return because of conditions, Sherman said. People in those areas are eligible for the rent payments.

To receive the lump-sum payment, evacuees from Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana must have registered through FEMA by calling (800) 621-FEMA or applying online at www.fema.gov. Applicants need to register only once, but should update their registration if their address has changed.

FEMA estimates that 8,000 people in Mississippi are eligible for the rent program. The agency used the rental payment system in 1994 after an earthquake struck Northridge, Calif.

The initial payment is calculated based on the national average fair-market rent rate for a two-bedroom and may be applied to temporary housing costs "for any location an evacuee determines," FEMA says. The submission of rental receipts and other documentation could be required later.

The FEMA letter says the money is for "transitional housing needs" to be used "to rent a different place to live."

The U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development has set up its own program to help Katrina victims who need temporary housing. Families who used Section 8 vouchers in New Orleans or other public housing would be able to continue getting federal housing assistance, said Donna White, a spokeswoman for the agency.

For example, the agency has started placing former residents of public housing in New Orleans in open facilities in other cities. For families who used Section 8 vouchers in New Orleans to rent private apartments, the difference is that for 18 months the agency will pick up the full rent – not just the portion of the rent that is typically paid by the federal government under the voucher program.

HUD also will pay the rent for 18 months for families who didn't participate in federal housing programs before, White said. But she said she didn't know who those families would be or how many, saying that the agency will have to wait to see how many people are not eligible for FEMA housing assistance and need to turn to HUD.

"We don't know how many families will need to be a part of this program," White said. This will not constitute an expansion of the Section 8 voucher program because after 18 months the assistance will end, she said.

FEMA RENT PAYMENTS

FEMA has launched a program for transitional housing payments to Hurricane Katrina evacuees. Here are some common questions and answers:

Q: How much is it, and what's it for?
A: The lump-sum payment is $2,358 and is supposed to be used toward three months worth of rent for people who cannot live in their damaged homes or inaccessible neighborhoods.

Q: What if I rent for more than three months?
A: You may be eligible for extensions in payments up to 18 months. FEMA will want to adjust the payment level according to your needs.

Q: What must I do to get it?
A: You must register with FEMA, by calling (800) 621-FEMA or visiting the Web site at fema.gov. People who previously registered do not have to register again, unless their address, bank account or some other important information has changed.

Q: How do I know if I qualify?
A: FEMA has determined the areas and addresses seriously damaged by the storm, so if you live in one of those areas and you have registered, you're supposed to get the money automatically mailed or wire transferred to your bank.

Q: I got the $2,000 payment that FEMA sent out under a separate program earlier this month, but I haven't gotten the $2,358 rental award yet. What gives?
A: Your rental payment might be on the way and just hasn't arrived yet, or FEMA might have determined that you are not actually eligible for the payment. You'll have to ask FEMA what happened.

Q: Do I have to keep rental records?
A: FEMA has two answers to this question. If you intend to get transitional rental assistance beyond the initial three-month period, then absolutely you will need documentation proving you're actually renting a place. FEMA is fuzzy in its answer about the payment for the first three months, saying that if you do not use the money for rent, you could use it for other needs that qualify for state and federal assistance programs.

Q: Can I take the FEMA rent payment and still use the money from my insurance company compensating me for accommodations while I'm out of my house?
A: No. FEMA does not allow duplication of benefits.

Q: I'm living with Aunt Betsy. Can I give her the rent money?
A: Maybe. Check with a FEMA representative to see if your situation would qualify for that kind of rent payment.

Q: What if I lie on my applications for disaster aid?
A: You'd be violating federal and state laws, which carry severe criminal and civil penalties, including a fine up to $250,000, imprisonment, or both.

Q: If I'm receiving federal housing assistance through HUD, will this new rent payment program help me?
A: Yes. Your HUD benefit is portable and can be used outside the New Orleans area, plus the new FEMA program can piggy-back on to that to cover all your rent payment, not just a portion of it covered by the usual HUD system. Check with the local housing authority of the city you are now living in.

Military role in disaster relief debated in wake of hurricanes

States' rights are a concern

By Lolita C. Baldor
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — Military units have been battling the ravages of hurricane winds and flooding for nearly four weeks along the Gulf Coast. Now their leaders must navigate a different turbulent path: Congress.

Political leaders led by President Bush are considering how and when the military should take greater control of relief efforts during national disasters. And one answer may be to ensure that the president has the authority to bring in the armed forces during extraordinary circumstances.

The White House said Monday that Congress should considering setting the circumstances — some level of significant natural disaster or terrorist attack — that would designate the military as the lead agency in the response.

"We're going to look back at Katrina as a turning point," Sen. Joe Lieberman, D-Conn., said Sunday. "We need the military, because of its extraordinary capabilities, to be ready to play a much more active role. I don't think it's going to be that difficult from a congressional point of view."

Lieberman said Congress must make it clear that the president is authorized to use the federal military in a crisis, although that may not require legislation.

House Majority Leader Tom DeLay, R-Texas, sounded a sharp dissent.

"I don't want the federal government to take over disaster response, believe me," DeLay said in a telephone interview from his home in suburban Houston.

DeLay said he could not support a system that did not allow local first responders to remain in charge during a catastrophe. Asked why, he said: "Bureaucracy. Bureaucracy. Bureaucracy."

Sen. Mary Landrieu, D-La., sounded a note of caution as well.

Landrieu told CNN that while the military has a strong role to play, "we do have a democracy and a citizenship that has elected mayors, county commissioners and governors, particularly. I'm not sure the governors association or all the mayors in America would be willing to sort of step aside."

But Landrieu's Louisiana colleague, Republican Sen. David Vitter, said the military was best equipped to respond to emergencies as massive as Katrina and Hurricane Rita.

Others, including Senate Armed Services Committee Chairman John Warner, R-Va., have said that Congress may review the Posse Comitatus Act, a post-Civil War law that prohibits the military from performing law enforcement duties.

Changing the law would require congressional action, which would trigger debate over how to do it without treading on states' rights.

He also urged residents to travel only within their zip codes.

The rest of the city remains under a mandatory evacuation order.

"With Hurricane Rita behind us, the task at hand is to bring New Orleans back," Nagin said. "We want people to return and help us rebuild the city. However, we want everyone to assess the risks and make an informed decision about re-entry plans."

To that end, the city on Monday set up an information hotline at (504) 658-2299.

Some good signs

While water and electrical service remain sketchy, a month after Katrina there are clear signs of progress. Monday's prediction that tap water will be potable on the east bank in two to three weeks was a distinct improvement on a warning several days ago that it could be two to three months before the service was fully restored. The problem has been the large number of breaks in the infrastructure of pipes and mains that now undercut pressure and leave water leaking into the ground.

"A lot depends on how fast we can get the major breaks contained," said S&WB spokesman Robert Jackson.

Electrical service in Algiers and the CBD was almost completely restored, with the exception of those customers whose homes and businesses were damaged and can't receive power, Entergy spokesman Chanel Lagarde said.

The French Quarter regained electrical service on Monday. And Uptown, most major circuits also had been restored. But individual customers still did not have power because of the extent of damage to some homes, Lagarde said. The company is currently discussing whether it will have to reconnect the area house by house to avoid potential electrical fires.

"Our primary concern is safety," Lagarde said.

Nonetheless, Lagarde said, Entergy was aiming by Friday to have service restored to the large Uptown area between St. Charles Avenue and the river, and from South Carrollton Avenue to Market Street.

Firefighters said they worry about people returning to homes without power and then using candles or generators that could touch off accidental fires. Another firefighter, who declined to give his name, said the fires might not be accidental. Residents without flood insurance could become desperate after seeing how much damage they have sustained. "You might have some people who start burning their houses," he said.

Norman Woodridge, spokesman for the New Orleans Fire Department, said arson is not a major concern, but that parts of the city don't have adequate water pressure. "Some areas of town, you just don't have water coming out of the hydrants," he said.

Natural gas service also has been interrupted because of broken and waterlogged lines, Lagarde said. While gas service in Algiers is fine, residents should expect that their water heaters and stoves in parts of Uptown, the CBD and the French Quarter may not be operable for a while.

City rules dictate that homeowners have their property inspected by a licensed electrician if they experienced flooding or had electrical damage. Before Hurricane Katrina, the city was required to issue a permit before power could be restored. Lagarde said he did not know whether that would remain the procedure.

Hospitals limited

Access to medical services is also a lingering concern.

Although Ochsner, East Jefferson and West Jefferson hospitals are within driving distance of New Orleans, only one emergency room is in service within the city limits.

The 14th Combat Support Hospital, known as CASH, is a cluster of green tents occupying an area as big as a city block within the Ernest N. Morial Convention Center. Equipped with everything from operating rooms to dental services, the hospital is a stopgap measure until New Orleans hospitals are reopened.

The portable hospital, normally based at Fort Benning, Ga., was in operation at Louis Armstrong New Orleans International Airport from Sept. 11 to 20 before moving downtown.

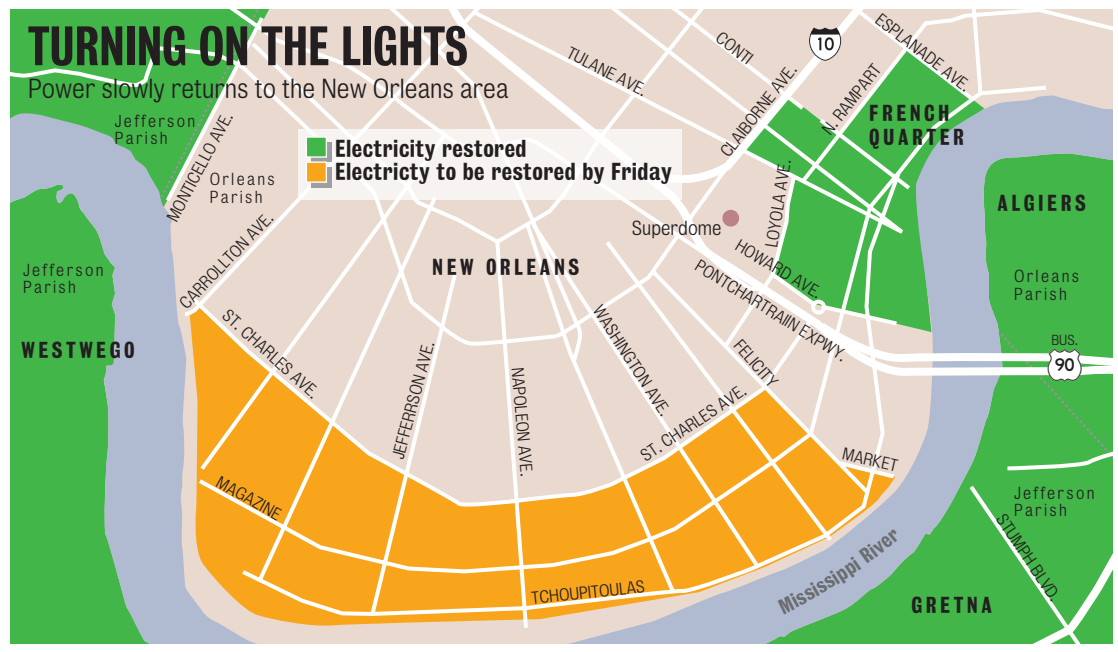
Although the 250 CASH staffers could treat up to 140 intensive-care patients, it's currently set up only to treat temporary patients, a dozen at a time, who are then evacuated from the area.

Ambulance teams also expressed misgivings about the return of large numbers of New Orleanians. "All of us are anticipating that when the people start cleaning up, that's when things will heat up," one paramedic said, envisioning falls from ladders and chainsaw accidents. The faulty traffic signals are sure to increase the number of collisions, another said.

Few retail establishments are open Uptown, but isolated signs of commercial life were evident Monday. In the Riverside Market on Tchoupitoulas Street, Walgreens is open from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. daily, offering free cell phone charging in the photo department and an ATM.

"Somebody's got to be open," said manager Warren Breaux, as he restocked dehydrated soups. "The problem we have right now is staffing."

The nearby Winn-Dixie had electricity, but manager Marla Hubble said the store would not be open until next week at the earliest. Kappa Horn, owner of Slim Goodies Diner on Magazine Street, has been serving customers for about a week.



On Monday, "We ran out of food," she said, but she planned to resume flipping burgers today.

"I'm ready for everybody to come back that can," she said. "Why stay away? Are we waiting for the president? Are we going to wait for Halliburton to clean up our streets?"

Cleaning up and drawing customers will not be the only challenges. The state Department of Health and Hospitals must greenlight businesses before their cash registers can ring again.

Any business that serves food or drinks must be checked to make sure they're up to snuff with the state sanitation code, DHH spokesman Kristen Meyer said.

Businesses ready for inspection should contact their parish health unit.

TROUBLED TIMES

As the storm raged, parish officials detail their problems via conference calls. But those calls stopped after the storm when communication was cut off, then started again Sept. 9. Walter Maestri, Jefferson Parish's emergency management director, recorded the calls.

AUG. 29, 7:30 A.M.

WALTER MAESTRI, EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT DIRECTOR, JEFFERSON PARISH:
"Jefferson is experiencing now pretty constant 70- to 80-mph winds, gusts over 100. We have unconfirmed reports of building collapses on the West Bank. We have unconfirmed reports of significant flooding on the East Bank around the hospital. The entire metro area is out of power right now. We have completely lost electric power, but that's basically to be expected. We're unable to confirm any of these reports because of the 70-mile-per-hour constant winds. We cannot get to the streets."

FROM ORLEANS PARISH:
"We've got major problems at Charity. There are five floors with the windows blown out and flooding on the bottom floors. We've knocked down that pedestrian bridge between the hospitals. University seems to be pretty good in the complex, but we're going to have some major problems, and we've already got them at Charity. We know we've got a number of people — 25 calls for service with people trying to survive in their roofs or who didn't evacuate. We're prioritizing those, and basically we'll deal with those when we can get out and about. We need to look at the medical assistance, especially for the force that came over from Houston. Charity is going to have major problems."

FROM ST. BERNARD PARISH:
"Our power is down. All communication is down. Our 911 center has been evacuated. There is structural damage on major buildings we're using as temporary shelters. There are 300 to 400 people in some shelters that we're moving from one hallway to another as the roofs come off. We can't rescue these people because winds are 80 to 90 mph."

FROM ST. CHARLES PARISH:
"We have widespread power outages. We think that we're going to have significant storm surge flooding on our east bank. We should have many homes that either go under from storm surge or rainfall. We do think we're going to be in a pretty bad fix on East Bank, Airline Highway. We're certainly going to be under water and impassible. We believe our water distribution system on the east bank is just about out of water. Everything's fine on the west bank."

SEPT. 9, 7:30 A.M.

Col. Jeff Smith, deputy director, state Office of Emergency Preparedness: The right hand is not always knowing what the left hand is doing. … Each day the FEMA rep liaison is calling into the joint field office and is giving a report on issues and how the parishes stand. Are you aware that started to happen?

St. Tammany Parish Chief Administrative Bill Oiler: We are aware of that ... we've got a coordination problem here. We thought we were going to have a meeting with Baton Rouge people, FEMA people, yesterday. They canceled that one, so I don't know where we are other than its creating downright chaos. We have a temporary housing issue.

Smith: FEMA is looking at using a regional team, rather than a Louisiana team, and they haven't even had reps here even for Louisiana yet. They're just not moving on this at all, so we're turning up the heat pretty high on that, Bill.

Oiler: They need to let us know. They made a commitment to the city of Slidell for 400 trailers.

Smith: All I regret is that we're not able to do more. We're up here doing the best we possibly can.

Maestri: We have that same problem with the right hand not knowing what the left hand is doing. I don't know how we share with these people what our plans are and how the parish plans meld with the state plans. … People are bypassing the system, and different resources and assets are being sent to places we know nothing about. ... We've got resources all over the place that aren't being used where they should be, and nobody knows about it. First and foremost, we have still not received since the storm any of our gasoline and diesel shipments. If it wasn't for a ship in port that's been helping us get diesel and gas, we would have nothing. I don't know where our gas and diesel shipments are going. I don't know who's getting them. But that's atrocious. The second issue: generators for our sewer system. As you recall on the last conference call before the storm hit, we requested the gen. packs. They are still not here. I'm about to have a medical catastrophe in this parish because of the lack of a sewer system. The lift stations are not working. The matter is going into the streets, and we're going to have a medical disaster. FEMA tells me and has told me since they arrived on the scene three days ago that they're coming. I don't know what's going on, but not one generator through that system has arrived here. The other problem: Next door, where FEMA is billeted, there are 50 or 60 firemen from Kansas. ... My Fire Department is screaming for help because we can't get all the firemen back into the parish, and these guys are available. Fire's a real hazard here ... as we start turning on the electricity.

Smith: So the (FEMA) liaison is aware of this, but nothing is happening?

Maestri: That's right. We've got some food issues as well, both quantities and distribution. In the beginning, food and water were pouring in. Now it's trickling. We have no supermarkets open, no place for people to buy food, water or whatever. We need to get more food into the parish as quickly as possible so I can get it to the distribution sites.

Smith: I assume you are talking about the emergency food, the water the MRES and the ice. Has that been requested and turned down, or are you just requesting it now?

Maestri: We requested it, have requested it, been requesting it, and nothing's come. According to the commodities guy, once they started it wouldn't stop. He told us it would never stop. ... But now it's stopped.

Oiler: I can certainly agree with Dr. Maestri, we set up a list of priorities. ... I'd like to know where the generators are.

Maestri: I tell you, Bill, somebody must be selling those things on the side of the road, because they keep telling me they coming. They've had three evaluation teams in here from the corps and other groups to evaluate the situation. … They said it's coming, it's coming, but nothing's arrived.... They are supposedly pre-positioned across the country and can be flown in at a moment's notice. They ballyhooed that to us in PAM and all these other exercises. Now when we are on our knees, nothing's available.

Smith: At this point, what we're trying to do is make things better from this point. There will be plenty of time for all this rhetoric later. We need to do what we can do to improve the situation day by day.

open, no place for people to buy food, water or whatever. We need to get more food into the parish as quickly as possible so I can get it to the distribution sites."

Three days before Hurricane Katrina, Maestri logged the government's preparation and response to the storm by recording the four daily conference calls of parish, state and federal leaders as they coordinated how they would evacuate residents, ensconce them in shelters and truck in supplies afterward. The calls, which the parish taped as a matter of policy, ended the morning of the storm and resumed on Sept. 9, after communications were restored.

While the calls presage some of the confusion that would arise after the hurricane hit, particularly in New Orleans, they give little inkling that Jefferson, St. Tammany and other parishes would find themselves making unrequited calls for generators and other supplies in the aftermath of the storm. The recordings also reveal that Federal Emergency Management Agency officials were nearly mute, offering little input other than that they were "monitoring the situation."

The discussions were calm and even plodding in tone, beginning with forecasts from the National Weather Service that were packed with esoteric details and ending with a roll call of questions from the parishes. Not until the night before the Aug. 29 storm did the parishes show a sense of urgency that some of their plans might come unraveled.

Even on the morning of the storm, as the National Weather Service warned that Katrina's wingspan was expanding, Maestri and others took confidence that relief agencies seemed ready to move in with supplies when the rough weather broke. Other sections of that same tape give an eerie first impression of the calamities that would unfold later in the day at the hospitals in New Orleans and in the shelters in St. Bernard.

"We've got major problems at Charity," a New Orleans representative who could not be identified reported Aug. 29 at 7:30 a.m. "We have five floors with the windows blown out and flooding on the bottom floors. We've knocked down the pedestrian bridge between the hospitals."

"We've responded to 25 calls for service from people trying to survive on their roofs or who didn't evacuate," the Orleans representative continued. "We're prioritizing those, and basically we'll deal with those when we can get out and about. We need to look at the medical assistance, especially for the force that came over from Houston. Charity is going to have major problems."

The conference calls began the afternoon of Aug. 26, when the National Weather Service cautioned Louisiana that Katrina had shifted west from the Florida Panhandle. The weather service was still unsure where it would land but warned that Plaquemines Parish could be vulnerable.

By the next evening, the hurricane was headed on an unmistakable westerly track. With people away from their televisions over the weekend, Gov. Kathleen Blanco was uneasy that many did not know the storm was barreling in their direction. She urged leaders to spread the word among pastors who could prod their congregations to leave Sunday morning.

"I'm asking all of you to do your very best to get as many people to safe ground as possible. It occurs to me that a lot of people went to bed last night thinking that hurricane was going to Florida," Blanco said Saturday night. "I got a report at 7 o'clock that there were about 700 people doing Little League ball in the New Orleans area."

That day, Louisiana State Police had reversed inbound lanes of traffic to ease congestion for motorists headed north or east to Baton Rouge. However, only a handful of parishes had given mandatory evacuation orders by then. The tapes show that Jefferson had mandatory evacuations in place only for Grand Isle, Jean Lafitte, Barataria and Crown Point, while the entirety of New Orleans was under a recommended evacuation. St. Bernard had "strongly" advised its residents to leave.

"I've just announced at a press conference that we're probably going to lose all services over night: sewage, drainage, water, etc.," President Aaron Broussard of Jefferson Parish said at noon the day before the storm. "I cannot issue a mandatory. I do not have the resources to enforce it. However, I've just made the strongest message possible, and we will have police vehicles and fire vehicles going throughout Jefferson Parish with broadcasting advising people to leave now."

That Sunday, the parishes shuttled stranded residents and even some of their own employees into shelters. New Orleans, which had told the state throughout the weekend that it was using an internal plan to help residents without cars, acknowledged for the first time that it anticipated foul conditions at the Superdome, its shelter of last resort. The city's representative, who is not identified on the tapes, asked for help tending 45 to 50 gravely ill patients.

"I can't wait to have oxygen," the New Orleans representative said in the call at 4:30 p.m. Sunday. "I have a definite need."

The official hoped the hospitals could take on a few more patients. "The heat and lack of air conditioning and the nightmare we're going to face in the Dome is not something that these 45 people will probably be willing to endure and make it through," he said.

While the parishes were beginning to enter requests for aid, the conference calls do not indicate that leaders were worried about shortages. The American Red Cross reported Sunday night that it had meals ready in Baton Rouge and a dozen kitchen units lined up through a Baptist church group. On the morning the hurricane struck, Maestri verified that he could get the materials his parish needed by placing a request through a computer system called the E-Team.

"Jefferson has a couple of issues. No. 1, we're going to need to make some requests for commodities and/or fuel," Maestri said. "We want to handle that through E-Team, Colonel?"

He continued, "Medical resources and requests of FEMA assistance from the FEMA stockpile again through E-Team?"

"Absolutely," said Col. Jeff Smith, deputy director of the Louisiana Office of Emergency Preparedness. "We've got FEMA shoulder to shoulder with us. We'll turn and we'll act on it just as soon as we get the request."

But that computer system failed for roughly six days after the storm. When it was finally operating again, Maestri said the requests sent through the system "went nowhere."

In the frantic conference call Sept. 9, almost two weeks after the storm, Maestri lamented the shortages in gas, diesel and generators that threatened to shut down the parish sewage system, sending waste into the streets that could create a "medical catastrophe."

He also blasted the federal government for bumbling the delivery of supplies after it had supposedly rehearsed for natural disasters.

"Whatever happened to the FEMA gen packs we talked about, these pallets of generators that are supposedly pre-positioned across the country and can be flown in at a moment's notice?" Maestri asked Smith. "Now when we are on our knees, nothing's available."

Missing officers were nearly 15% of force

of each officer unaccounted for during the first weeks after the storm and now seeking to return.

The 249 officers will be judged on a case-by-case basis. "We have a penalty schedule for each violation, and when that process takes place, individuals will have the right to appeal the decisions made by the bureau chiefs," Compass said, adding that "the final decision and recommendation will be by me as superintendent of police."

Mayor Ray Nagin said the city attorney's office will review Compass' plan to ensure that it falls within Civil Service regulations that cover all classified city employees.

Legal issues aside, the AWOL officers raise a host of challenges to the department. The NOPD already had difficulty recruiting and retaining officers before Katrina, and the 249 officers who left the job make up nearly 15 percent of the nearly 1,700-member force. Compass did not say how many of the 249 are asking to return.

Compass has said that nearly all of his top commanders rode out the storm and worked superhuman hours during the challenging days that followed. His implication was that the no-shows were younger patrol officers, most of whom are assigned to perennially understaffed front-line patrols.

Then there is the issue of appropriate penalties. Many officers who worked during the storm's most hellacious days already have been privately expressing misgivings about accepting back any colleagues who didn't stand with them when they were needed most.

Lt. David Benelli, president of the Police Association of New Orleans, said true deserters should be fired.

"For those who left because of cowardice, they don't need to be here," Benelli said. "If you're a deserter and you deserted your post for no other reason than you were scared, then you left the department and I don't see any need for you to come back."

However, Benelli said that once accounts of individual officers are heard, only a small fraction will be exposed as deserters. He didn't give examples of legitimate reasons for not being on the job, but several officers have talked about colleagues who were on leave or vacation when the storm hit and were unable to quickly return to the city.

Benelli said the "vast majority of officers stood at their posts despite having to brave the elements and work in very extreme conditions."

"We know there were people who flat-out deserted," he said. "But we also know there were officers who had to make critical decisions about what to do with their families. We are confident that Superintendent Compass is going to give everyone due process and look at the circumstances of each case individually. They shouldn't just throw a blanket over everyone."

President calls for fuel conservation

Refinery towns to get visit from Bush today

By Nedra Pickler
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — President Bush urged Americans on Monday to cut back on unnecessary travel to make up for fuel shortages caused by Hurricane Rita. He prepared to take his seventh trip to the Gulf Coast.

Bush said the government was ready to release fuel from its emergency oil stockpile to alleviate high prices. And he suggested he would name a federal official to oversee the reconstruction of the Gulf Coast — after local officials first produce a vision for their rebuilt communities.

The president spoke after he attended a meeting at the Energy Department in which officials told him they still were trying to assess the damage to oil production and refineries in Rita's path.

Bush said he would get a personal report from local officials today when he visits the area around the refinery towns of Beaumont and Port Arthur, Texas.

Meanwhile, he encouraged motorists to conserve energy and said he has directed federal agencies to do the same.

"If it makes sense for the citizen out there to curtail nonessential travel, it darn sure makes sense for federal employees," Bush said. "We can encourage employees to car pool or use mass transit, and we can shift peak electricity use to off-peak hours. There's ways for the federal government to lead when it comes to conservation."

The White House also will be looking at ways to conserve, press secretary Scott McClellan said, although that doesn't include curtailing the president's plans to return to the region this week.

LOOKING FOR ANSWERS: Engineers are studying broken concrete and twisted steel for clues as to why floodwalls at the 17th Street, London Avenue and Industrial canals were breached. Their construction may have been deficient, or they may have simply been overwhelmed by forces they weren't designed to handle.

Time is of the essence while evidence remains

steel for clues. The Army Corps of Engineers says it has begun to investigate the collapses. Scientists from Louisiana State University also are examining the damage, and the American Society of Civil Engineers will soon dispatch its own experts to the breach sites.

"There will be on-the-ground investigation where they will try to piece this thing together, as when they do an autopsy on a body. They will decide what muscles collapsed, what caused death. They will look for bullet holes," said William Marcuson, a former Corps geotechnical engineer and president-elect of the American Society of Civil Engineers.

"There is some sense of urgency here, because if you go in and cover it with sandbags, you will still have to get in there and to look at what happened," he said. "You need to get it dried out."

The floodwalls are relatively simple structures, but engineers say the challenge is still formidable. A vertical wall can fail in many different ways, whether overwhelmed by forces beyond its capabilities or done in by design or construction deficiencies.

In some places, it will be a relatively easy call. In the Industrial Canal, evidence shows that high water flowed over the tops of floodwalls and through sandbagged gaps, creating breaches and extensive flooding. In one spot on the east side of the canal, a barge appears to have struck the floodwall, contributing to a large breach and accelerating the flooding of the Lower 9th Ward. That breach was temporarily patched but reopened last weekend when Hurricane Rita's storm surge raised water levels again.

But it's not clear whether water topped some of floodwalls in the 17th Street and London Avenue canal systems. If it didn't, that means the stresses from high water may not have exceeded a given wall's designed capabilities — but it failed anyway, raising serious questions about long-term issues.

Ivor Van Heerden, deputy director of the LSU Hurricane Center, believes the walls at the 17th Street Canal, and possibly in the London Avenue Canal, failed without being topped. The Corps says it's too early to draw conclusions.

Van Heerden said he and his colleagues measured a maximum storm surge height of 10.2 feet near the opening to the 17th Street Canal, and about 11 feet adjacent to the London Avenue canal. The original design specifications call for walls high enough to stop a storm surge of 11.2 feet at the lakefront.

It's helpful to think of the levee floodwalls not as stiff, immovable objects, but as somewhat flexible structures embedded in another, still more flexible structure: the Mississippi delta's muck. The floodwalls consist of a length of corrugated steel sheet piling driven into the earth. A concrete wall is built on top of that, and low, compacted earthen berms are built around it.

Lake Pontchartrain rose as Katrina pumped in surge water from the Gulf of Mexico. As Katrina moved east of New Orleans, its winds shifted to the north and pushed the high water south, where it pushed levels to among the highest ever recorded in that area.

Water rising in the canals would have put tremendous pressure on the floodwalls on both sides. Water is heavy; it weighs about 62.4 pounds per cubic foot. Pile up 10 cubic feet of water and the pressure will be more than 600 pounds per square foot near the bottom of the concrete portion of the wall, even higher at points down near the bottom of the sheet piling base.

"That is a lot," said Tom Eager, an engineering professor at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology who analyzed the collapse of the World Trade Center. "You design industrial buildings for 300 pounds per square foot of pressure. It's enough to have forklifts driving around on the upper floors."

That water would have put pressure on all points in the structure. But one focus will likely be the soil. In wet soil, water is always moving slowly deep underneath such a structure, engineers say. But when pressure quickly rises on one side, that can push earth as well as water underneath a floodwall or similar structure.

"Almost anything leaks, and you can have water seeping through the bottom of the levee, though the material. As long as it's clean, it's no problem. But if it's dirty water, then it's exporting soil from one side to the other," Marcuson said.

If the pressure difference is extreme, he said, "it creates pressure which creates velocity, and the higher the velocity, the bigger the particles it will pick up."

Van Heerden said his survey of the levees showed that some broken walls had sheet pile bases extending only 2 or 3 feet down. Dan Hitchings, director of the Corps Mississippi Valley Division forward team working in New Orleans, said that the corps is examining the sheet piling depth as a possible issue in the failures.

Al Naomi, the Corps project manager who oversees the levee system, said he did not believe that water and soil were seeping from one side of levee walls to the other.

If that does happen, several engineers said, it can begin to destabilize an entire structure at its strongest point: the base where it is anchored to the soil.

"If you have a foundation that has given in to water pressure, not only are you allowing the structure to slide, you are changing the way it's carrying the load," said Guillermo Ramirez, an assistant engineering professor at the University of Texas at Arlington. "It changes its ability to take the force. All the force has to be transmitted sideways to the other points on the base where the structure is still working."

Whether destabilized from below or not, engineers say that other trouble spots are relatively weaker points higher up in the wall, such as the area where the sheet pile is embedded about two feet into the concrete, or the rubberized gaskets between the wall panels.

Water pressing against almost the entire height of the structure would be looking for an entry points — and it will inevitably find some. If the structure was moving even slightly, and being pummeled by waves and the weight of water, then tiny cracks may have formed. A gap may have been created between the panels.

"It was fast — it happened in a matter of hours. But it probably was a gradual degradation of your structural system," Ramirez said. "You started increasing the pressure. For a concrete all, it could be cracks growing, water finding its way through crack. That increases rate of growth of the cracks. Add that to your possible sheet piling failure. It just keeps progressing through the structure."

The steel reinforcing bars built into the concrete will be another target for investigators. Eagar said that in recent years a number of structural failures in buildings have been traced to faulty welding in such bars. In the floodwalls, the reinforcing rods appear to have been attached to the sheet piling, a photograph Van Heerden took shows, though it's not clear exactly how.

A big question underlying all of this is, if the walls were not topped by flood water, and engineers had built a significant safety factor in, how could the walls have failed? Van Heerden says his documents show the walls were designed to withstand 2.5 times the force that a Katrina-like hurricane could dish out.

Eagar said that even small design problems can compound one another, however. If five elements were off by 20 percent each, he said, statistically that would account for the 2.5 times safety factor.

WHY DID THE FLOODWALLS FAIL?

The Army Corps of Engineers is investigating why the 17th Street Canal and the London Avenue floodwalls failed. Some evidence shows that water did not top the walls, raising serious questions about how they became destabilized.

Sheet piling is supposed to extend 15 to 30 feet into the soil. Corps officials are investigating reports that piling depths may have been only a few feet.

EARTHEN VERSUS CONCRETE

Canal floodwalls feature a concrete wall extending above an earthen levee. This design uses a minimum of real estate, preserving homes and streets that otherwise would have to be destroyed to create sprawling, gently sloping earthen levees like those along the river and Lake Pontchartrain.

Levees to be restored to pre-Katrina strength

Corps task force sets June 1 deadline

By Mark Schleifstein
Staff writer

A special Army Corps of Engineers task force has been assembled to bring New Orleans area levees back to pre-storm conditions, but not protect the area from the strongest of hurricanes like Katrina.

The corps has created a new Task Force Guardian to assist in making interim repairs to New Orleans area levees and help in planning how to restore the levee system to its pre-Katrina level of protection, said Dan Hitchings, director of the corps' Mississippi Valley Division Forward operations, which is overseeing levee reconstruction.

The levees would be able to again protect the city from a slow-moving Category 3 hurricane.

Corps spokesman Mitch Frazier said there are no immediate plans to increase the levee protection to protect from a Category 4 or 5 storm, which has been proposed by engineers within the corps, state officials and members of the state's congressional delegation.

"Currently, the corps only has authority to restore the levees to pre-Katrina conditions," he said.

The new task force is made up of corps employees supplemented by contractors, Hitchings said.

"Their role is limited to the reconstruction of the existing protection to the original standards and the original level of protection," he said. The goal is to bring the levees back up to pre-Katrina strength by June 1, 2006, the beginning of the next hurricane season.

But the task force will be kept informed by a separate group of corps and independent engineers studying the causes of various levee failures, and will use that information in rebuilding the levees, Hitchings said.

"If they determine the cause of the failure was its design, they'll make sure our folks putting up the new sections are aware of it," he said.

The task force itself will be looking at the design of the levee walls to determine if a more stable design should be used. Critics of the existing levee walls contend they don't comply with a recommendation in the corps' own levee construction handbook that warns against using I-shaped walls in areas where inverted T-shaped walls might be more stable.

Hitchings said corps workers also were attempting to determine how sheet piling was used in the construction of the existing levee walls.

Hitchings said there are no plans at the moment to reinforce repairs at the Industrial Canal with sheet piling, but that the metal wall material may be used in some repairs of the 17th Street and London Avenue canals where access might be limited.

Corps officials ruled out blocking the entrance of the Industrial Canal at Lake Pontchartrain with sheet piling because the canal is 40 feet deep and 300 feet wide at that point.

"Even if you wanted to, you would have to build a mammoth reinforcing structure to give it the strength to resist the water pressure," he said.

He said there has also been no discussion about using sheet piling or other means to dam off the Mississippi River-Gulf Outlet below the Gulf Intracoastal Waterway as a way of reducing storm surge into the Industrial Canal.

Hitchings said the interim repair effort will include all levees in the New Orleans area, including the levee along the MR-GO in St. Bernard Parish that was eroded from 17 feet to about 4 feet, and levees in eastern New Orleans and Plaquemines Parish.

All will be raised to at least 10 feet, a process that had begun before Hurricane Rita struck this weekend.

"There were actually three phases," he said. "The first was to get the breaches blocked up. Some were at grade or below, where they eroded a notch or we had to come in and notch them to let the water back out.

"The first step was to close them so normal tides wouldn't come back in," he said. "We had just gotten that fixed and were within a few days of starting the process of raising the protection up to 10 feet.

"We were not quite able to

Repairs may keep high-rises closed

Poydras buildings lost many windows

By Greg Thomas
Real estate writer

It could take weeks, in some cases months, for some office buildings in New Orleans to reopen, building owners and landlords said Monday.

The time frame for opening most of the city's most modern office buildings will depend on the level of damage each sustained.

The Texaco Center and Poydras Center, both of which are owned by Hertz Investment Group, along with 1340 Poydras St., managed by Regis Management Group, are among the most severely damaged buildings along the city's Poydras Street high-rise corridor. Texaco Center lost all of the widows that created its signature sloped roof, while the roof of Poydras Center was ripped away by Katrina's winds. Well over a hundred windows blew out at 1340 Poydras St. during Hurricane Katrina, according to Regis Property Management head Jane Upshaw. Replacement windows are readily available, but the workers needed to install them are not.

"We have just two (window) sizes and they're readily available … the problem is getting people back into town to do the work," Upshaw said.

The Dominion Tower and the adjoining New Orleans Shopping Centre were also hard-hit and could take as long as five months to be fully repaired, said Gary Horwitz, chief operating officer for Hertz Investment, which owns the two buildings.

Dominion, 1340 Poydras, and the Hyatt Hotel New Orleans, which lost every window on the side facing Poydras, probably were hit by a tornado, said Hertz Investment Group head Judah Hertz. Initially, many thought that the flying foam debris ripped from the roof of the Superdome caused much of the damage, but Hertz, who walked through the area Thursday, said the damage was too severe to be caused by debris from the stadium.

Yet another New Orleans high-rise owned by Hertz, the LL&E building, received roof and air-conditioning chiller damage but will be the first of

Word of refinery damage pushes energy prices up

Gasoline prices may approach $3 a gallon

By Mary Judice
Business Writer

Energy prices closed higher Monday as reports on damage to oil refineries at the Texas-Louisiana border from Hurricane Rita trickled in.

In early trading Monday, crude oil futures and gasoline futures traded lower. But as the extent of refinery damage became clearer, prices increased by afternoon and closed higher, pointing to higher gasoline prices in the near future.

The biggest gains Monday were registered in heating oil, where prices rose almost 11 cents per gallon to close at $2.06. Gasoline futures were 4.4 cents higher at $2.13 per gallon, and crude oil prices were up $1.26 a barrel to $65.35 for West Texas crude.

Gasoline prices in the Baton Rouge area moved higher after Hurricane Rita made landfall at the Louisiana Texas border early Saturday.

On Monday, prices at the pump were nine cents a gallon higher for regular unleaded fuel, according to the AAA fuel gauge survey. The average price was $2.64 a gallon, which is just six cents below its all-time high for Baton Rouge, recorded a week after Hurricane Katrina ravaged the New Orleans area.

Gasoline prices may move up around $3 a gallon in some markets, said

Tom Kloza, an analyst with Oil Price Information Service in Wall, N.J.

Kloza said between now and October, motorists can expect to pay between $2.80 and $3.10 per gallon, depending on the market. Analysts said prices should decline later in the fall as the driving season winds down.

Energy industry assessing Rita damage

Eight refineries report some operating problems

By Jaquetta White
Business Writer

The energy industry began the task of assessing damage to refineries and offshore production platforms Monday, three days after Hurricane Rita — the second of two destructive storms in a month — tore through the Gulf of Mexico.

Much of the concern in advance of Hurricane Rita had been for oil refineries in the Houston-Galveston area, where about a quarter of the crude oil in the United States is refined and which for a time appeared to be directly in the path of the storm. Rita instead came ashore near the Louisiana-Texas border, but the storm still dealt a powerful blow to refineries.

A number of refineries lost power this weekend and a couple were damaged, said Andrew Lebow, a broker with Man Financial Inc., a Chicago futures brokerage firm. He said eight refineries have some operating troubles, but none seems to have long-lasting damage.

Lebow estimated that an additional 1.5 million barrels per day of refining capacity was taken down by Hurricane Rita and will be out for the next couple weeks. This is on top of the 900,000 barrels per day of refining that have been out of operation since Hurricane Katrina.

"I think everyone was underestimating the impact of Rita on refineries," said Tom Kloza, an analyst with Oil Price Information Service in Wall, New Jersey. "It wasn't a Howitzer blow, but we took a bunch of bullets."

Oil and gas producers were also assessing Rita's impact on offshore production platforms Monday.

All of the more than 1.5 billion barrels of oil produced daily in the Gulf of Mexico remained shut down Monday, according to the Minerals Management Service, the federal agency that regulates offshore oil and gas operations in the gulf. About 78 percent of the daily production of natural gas remained shut down. And about 93 percent of manned platforms and 75 percent of the rigs operating in the Gulf remained evacuated.

However, there were few early reports of platform and rig damage, and companies have begun returning workers to their offshore facilities.

"I know that there were a number of deepwater rigs that were directly in the path, and when they conducted flyovers they did not appear to have damage," said Sara Banaszak, senior economist for the American Petroleum Institute. Some mobile drilling rigs, however, were dislocated, Banaszak said.

Dominion Resources and other energy companies in the Gulf began transporting workers over the weekend, said David Auchter, a company spokesman. Dominion's

N.O. loses utility trucks to Rita cleanup

But Entergy says city has enough to finish work

By Keith Darcé
Business writer

Long lines of utility trucks departed New Orleans on Monday on their way to areas in southwestern Louisiana and southeastern Texas that were ravaged by Hurricane Rita during the weekend.

But managers from the local utility, Entergy New Orleans, said the exodus wouldn't leave the city short on workers to continue restoring power and natural gas service to areas hardest hit by Hurricane Katrina four weeks ago.

In fact, some utility tree-trimming trucks moved the opposite direction — toward New Orleans — Sunday night, Entergy New Orleans spokeswoman Amy Stallings said.

"I don't know who is moving where, but I do know that the resources we need to complete the restoration (in metropolitan New Orleans) will be there," Entergy New Orleans Chief Executive Officer Dan Packer said Monday.

Packer said he didn't know how many utility workers had moved out of the New Orleans area to work on Rita damage or how many remained behind.

However, Entergy's pool of in-house line workers and contracted workers who trim trees remains around 9,000, Packer said. That's as high as it's been since the storm. Normally, Entergy has about 1,100 line workers, and it employs others as needed.

Crews moving to regions damaged by Rita were facing the earliest phases of restoring power, such as repairing downed transmission lines, while their counterparts in New Orleans were performing later phases of restoration work, such as checking connections between homes and neighborhood electricity feeder lines for damage.

Stallings noted that the 766,000 outages in areas damaged by Rita were below the 1.1 million outages that hit the company's utilities in southeastern Louisiana and Mississippi after Katrina.

"People shouldn't be alarmed when they see crews moving around," she said.

Jeff Wilkerson, an attorney for the New Orleans City Council on utility matters, said the movements aren't raising any red flags. "We talked to (Entergy New Orleans) yesterday, and it wasn't an issue," he said.

Entergy gets boost from parent company

Now utility can pay suppliers and employees

By Keith Darcé
Business writer

Entergy New Orleans, which filed Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection Friday under the weight of Hurricane Katrina expenses, received a much-needed shot of cash Monday when a court in Baton Rouge approved $100 million in financing from the company's parent, Entergy Corp.

Senior utility executives said the emergency funding mechanism was critical to restoring utility services that are needed to repopulate the city and other heavily damaged areas, and to continue reviving the region's comatose economy.

The company, which continues to operate, sought the interim funding from its New Orleans-based parent because bank financing isn't available now that Moody's Investors Service has downgraded the company's debt to junk status, utility attorneys said.

The first $60 million tapped from the pool of cash will go to contracted utility crews who have been working to restore services, to the utility's two natural gas suppliers, and to the company's 394 employees to avoid an interruption in paychecks and benefits.

Utility executives and lawyers described a company entrenched in a financial and physical crisis, its cash and bank credit lines dry, its customers displaced, its revenue flow nearly depleted and its power grid in the city severely damaged or destroyed.

The cash infusion, known in bankruptcy parlance as debtor in possession financing, or DIP, was needed immediately.

The company began wiring payments to contractors within an hour of receiving court approval for the financial arrangement.

Underwater pipeline damage could be most troubling

GAS, from A-10

properties received "minimal surface damage," Auchter said.

But Dominion, like others, still has not started producing again. The company is conducting assessments.

Likewise, BP has said that it will not recommence production until it has done full assessment of its facilities as well as its infrastructure.

"Some of the company's onshore locations have been shut-in because plants and other infrastructure were impacted by the storm," the company said on its Web site.

It is infrastructure damage — specifically damage to underwater pipelines designed to carry oil and gas away from platforms — that could prove most troubling.

At least one company has said that it sustained pipeline damage. Marathon Oil's web site says the company is developing plans to address storm damage and begin starting up pipelines.

Last year, Hurricane Ivan significantly damaged some underwater pipelines, forcing companies that otherwise were able to produce to remain shut down because they had no means of transporting oil and gas.

That could be what's behind the high percentage of continued shutdowns in the gulf, Banaszak said. But it will be days before the extent of pipeline damage can be determined.

"The offshore pipelines are one of the last things we tend to get full assessments on because it requires some underwater assessment," Banaszak said.

Already companies have talked about temporarily bringing oil to shore by ship instead of pipeline if damage is severe, Banaszak said.

Blanco's chief of staff to head Katrina recovery effort

Andy Kopplin to keep title in reorganization

By Robert Travis Scott
Capital bureau

BATON ROUGE — Gov. Kathleen Blanco has named her chief of staff to lead the state's post-Katrina recovery effort as part of a reorganization of her administration to deal with the hurricane's aftermath and set a path for the future.

Andy Kopplin will keep his chief of staff title but will take on administrative duties dealing with the recovery, the governor said Monday.

"It is the most important job I have right now," Blanco said.

Jimmy Clarke, 54, a state Board of Regents official who helped lead Blanco's transition team after her 2003 election, will act as her chief of staff for non-Katrina matters, taking the reins of day-to-day operations.

"We're no longer a typical governor's office," Blanco said. "I need Andy to help me with this whole rebuilding, coordinating effort. This is a huge responsibility."

Andy Kopplin
Blanco's chief of staff to take on 'a huge responsibility'

Blanco said she considered naming someone from outside the administration for the Katrina position, but decided to place her confidence in Kopplin, 39, who already had been deeply involved with storm recovery matters. Kopplin was chief of staff for former Gov. Mike Foster before joining the Blanco administration at the beginning of her term.

Blanco, Kopplin and Clarke will operate as a three-person executive summit team for an undetermined period, the governor said. The details still are being worked out. Officials said Kopplin's office will remain next to Blanco's on the fourth floor of the State Capitol.

"We don't know if it's a permanent new structure or will have to last the rest of my administration," Blanco said.

Blanco's core team dealing with Katrina recovery will be Kopplin; her policy director, Kim Hunter Reed; and consultant James Lee Witt, Federal Emergency Management Agency director during the Clinton administration. Witt's main role is to act as a liaison between the state and FEMA.

Blanco has identified a small, core group of people outside the administration to advise her on recovery issues. The group was supposed to meet with Blanco for the first time Friday, but the arrival of Hurricane Rita postponed that session.

The state has a full-time lobbyist in Washington, but the administration also plans to use lobbying firms devoted to particular issues as the governor pursues her post-Katrina agenda in the nation's capital. Blanco has not announced the names of these firms.

Blanco has realigned duties in all branches of her administration so that each agency has staff and a new mission focused on Katrina recovery. Each agency also has components to maintain normal functions.

Executive branch staff members have not taken a full day off since the storm, and her ranks are feeling the stress, Blanco said, adding that she has been so pressed for time that she was unable to attend Sunday mass Sept. 18, and asked a priest to come in to offer services.

"And I need that, for my own being," she said.

The restructuring decision was reached Thursday night, as Hurricane Rita was moving toward Texas and southwest Louisiana.

Damage was minimal to many high-rises

BUILDINGS, from A-10

the group's major downtown office buildings to open for tenants, Horwitz said.

Canal Place, managed and leased by Corporate Realty, sustained roof damage, primarily to a chiller unit, but other chillers were providing heating and air conditioning to the building. In addition, Energy Centre, which is also leased by Corporate Realty, came through the storm reasonably well, Siegel said.

Meanwhile, Place St. Charles was virtually unscathed in the storm, had power for several days before losing it recently, and could be ready for tenants within a few weeks.

"I plan to be back in my office in two to three weeks," said Mike Siegel of Corporate Realty, the real estate company that manages and handles leasing for the high-rise and whose company is headquartered in the building.

The Entergy Corp. building on Loyola Avenue came through the storm relatively unscathed and 1250 Poydras, where Entergy Corp. leases more than 150,000 square feet, lost several windows to the storm. "At 1250 Poydras, we're making progress and when the city is ready we'll be ready," said Bill Moody, who handles leasing and management for the two properties.

He said 1250 Poydras did sustain some glass damage but the air conditioning was operating, containing moisture problems. "That's the good news," Moody said. "We're managing the moisture" problems that all landlords fear.

One Shell Square, the city's largest office building, reportedly sustained minimal damage in Hurricane Katrina, and the 1,000 employees of Shell Corp. are scattered at work sites in Houston, Baton Rouge and Robert, Shell spokeswoman Chris Bozman said.

"Shell intends to return to New Orleans. We believe certain teams should be located in New Orleans to support our ongoing operations in the Gulf of Mexico," Bozman said. "We will reoccupy One Shell Square only when it becomes habitable. We are working hard toward that goal, but right now there is no way we can predict when that might happen."

The building at 1010 Common St., meanwhile, "is in great shape as far as storm damage," said Sandra Corrigan, senior vice president of the Regis Realty Group, but the building was having electrical problems. Freight elevators were working but Entergy had asked Regis to hold off on running air conditioning at full capacity.

Entergy Corp. spokeswoman Amy Stallings said the power grid for most of the Central Business District was energized and that most power problems buildings might experience were on the building side of the equation. She said that when buildings were ready for power, Entergy was ready to supply it.

SAT seats available outside N.O. area

Location change fees are waived

From staff reports

Students unable to take the SAT in the New Orleans area can take the test in other areas of Louisiana, including Baton Rouge, Houma and Lafayette, according to The College Board, which administers the exam to college-bound high school seniors.

Any student scheduled to take the test Oct. 8 should call (609) 771-7600 to arrange to take it in another city. The College Board has added spots for additional test-takers at all of those locations but has not created any new testing sites.

"No one will be turned away," said College Board spokesperson Caren Scorapanos. No matter how many students show up at any given site, "they will absolutely, positively be able to take the test."

All testing sites in New Orleans and Metairie as well as Bay St. Louis and Hattiesburg in Mississippi have been closed in the wake of Hurricane Katrina. A site in Lake Charles was also closed following Hurricane Rita this past weekend. All sites in Texas are open.

All fees normally associated with such changes will be waived, Scoropanos said.

High school students not applying for early college admission can take the test for free in November and December if they were displaced by the storm. Students who want to delay their testing date beyond October can do so without any additional fees, she said.

All high school sophomores and juniors in storm-affected areas can also take the PSAT at no cost. Those students or their parents should call (609) 771-7070.

Entergy contractors to be paid

ENTERGY, from A-11

"Time is of the essence," Entergy New Orleans Chief Executive Officer Dan Packer told Judge Jerry Brown of the U.S. Bankruptcy Court, Eastern District of Louisiana. The court normally operates in downtown New Orleans but has moved temporarily to Baton Rouge.

"We need to move to get as much fixed as we can. To go out and look for new vendors would delay that," Packer said.

Jeff Wilkerson, an attorney representing the New Orleans City Council at Monday's court proceeding, said the company's municipal regulators approved of the lending conditions spelled out in the agreement. "We see this as the only way to keep the company going and to continue restoring the city," he said.

The first payments are going to 68 "critical" contractors, companies that supply the equipment and services needed to repair the utility's networks of electricity wires and gas pipelines that energize the city.

John H. Carter Co. Inc., a piping supplier, was in line to receive $478,632 for replacing underground gas lines that corroded after filling with floodwater.

New York electricity utility ConEdison Inc. was on the list for helping Entergy New Orleans repair flooded underground power lines and substations in the Central Business District and the French Quarter. ConEdison operates one of the largest underground power grids in the world in Manhattan.

Entergy New Orleans might seek $100 million more from the parent company before the interim financing agreement is made permanent by the court in November, said Patrick Vance, an attorney who represents Entergy New Orleans. Entergy Corp., however, is under no obligation to honor the requests. More cash could be needed by the utility beyond November if the federal government fails to act on requests for emergency grants for the company similar to those given to companies that were hobbled by the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks.

Entergy New Orleans also expects to receive compensation from insurance companies for some of its recovery costs, but that money won't arrive "for months," Entergy Treasurer Steve McNeal told the court.

Entergy Corp. is advancing the money to Entergy New Orleans at the same rates of interest that the parent company obtains for its own financing in lending markets.

Engineers leery of a quick fix

LEVEES, from A-9

get there before the next storm came," he said.

Meanwhile, concern remains that the temporary repairs could result in a repeat of the Rita flooding of the 9th Ward.

Guillermo Ramirez, assistant professor of civil and environmental engineering, University of Texas at Arlington, said of the corps use of limestone gravel and boulders to fill in levee breaches, "You go in there as fast as it can and try to get it fixed," he said. "As a patch, you always have the propensity of missing something, or not taking care of all the requirements."

He said the quick fix is limited in its effectiveness by its design.

"When you are piling things on top of each other, by nature you will have a pyramid shape," Ramirez said. "Your mass will be bigger at the bottom, smaller than what you have up higher. When you have wave action, if it is going close to the top, it will start working its way through the structure, which can erode it and create a failure."

Meanwhile, the corps pulled temporary sheet piling from the 17th Street and London Avenue canals on Monday afternoon, as the water level in Lake Pontchartrain dropped to near the same level as the canals, allowing the canals to be used to pump water out of the city.

The mouths of both canals were blocked on Wednesday in anticipation of storm surge pushed into the lake by Hurricane Rita.

At the 17th Street Canal, water rose to 6 feet as Rita moved west of the city. By Monday afternoon, the water had dropped to 2½ feet, no longer threatening the emergency repairs in breached flood walls made after Hurricane Katrina, said Col. Duane Gapinski, commander of the corps' Unwatering Task Force.

The six-hour removal leaves a 40-foot gap in the sheet piling at the mouth of each canal, small enough to allow it to be easily plugged in the event of a new storm, but large enough to allow the canals to assist in removing up to 6 inches of rain from thunderstorms.

Opening the 17th Street Canal will allow Metairie to resume using the canal to pump water from portions of Old Metairie during rainstorms.

Contractors also continued to make temporary repairs to the Industrial Canal levee on Monday, where surge water pushed up the Mississippi River-Gulf Outlet and Gulf Intracoastal Waterway on Friday washed out earlier repairs, reflooding a large portion of the Ninth Ward.

Water in that canal had dropped more than 5 feet from a high of 7.8 feet on Friday in advance of Rita.

The corps is barging in a set of small pumps that will be installed at Pump Station 5 on Florida Boulevard to assist in removing water from the 9th Ward.

"We are working around the clock to once again dry the area," Gapinski said.

Frazier said the reflooded area should be dry within seven days.

SHEILA STROUP

Even pets fear 'great darkness'

Some people say dogs have poor memories, but I don't believe it.

Friday afternoon, when the wind picked up, the Weather Channel flickered to nothing, and all the little whirrs and hums in our house suddenly stopped, Rosy and Harry came running.

"It's OK, It's OK," I said, while Rosy tried to climb into my lap and Harry, resting his head against my leg, began to shake.

They remembered when this had happened nearly four weeks ago — the time of the great darkness, when Stroup and I wandered around with flashlights and lived on cheese and crackers, when they lay on the floor panting for days, begging us with their eyes to make the cool air float down on them from the ceiling.

As I sat on the couch comforting them, I started to panic. What if the great darkness was beginning all over again?

"I'm going to Abita to buy some ice," I told Stroup.

Sky threatens to fall

Three hours later, still without electricity, we and our dogs sat on the porch that overlooks our pond, listening to the hot wind blow and watching our still-standing trees sway against a yellow sky.

Off to our left we could see the large tulip poplar that had draped itself across our chicken pens during Hurricane Katrina. Two of its branches poked down into the first pen, making me bump my head every time I went to gather the eggs.

While we were sitting there, we heard a creaking sound and then another one. The dogs jumped to attention, sensing something was wrong.

"What was that?" I asked.

"I think it was the tulip poplar," Stroup said.

The next creak was followed by a crack, and a 2 by 6 board that braced the top of the first pen broke in half from the weight of the tree.

At that, the chickens began a great chorus of squacking, making me think of Chicken Little when the acorn fell on his head. "The sky is falling! The sky is falling!" they seemed to say.

A bittersweet stroll

The sky did not fall Friday night. The tulip poplar droops even lower now, but our ancient pens still stand, and the chickens go about their work, scratching and clucking and presenting us with a few perfect eggs every day.

Our electricity came back on eventually, and I promised myself I would never again take for granted a hot shower, a cold beer, or my first mug of Community Coffee in the morning.

Rosy and Harry keep me going. At first, after Katrina, our walks made me feel dismal. The 2-mile stretch I loved was piled so high with tree trunks, light poles and debris that sometimes I'd look up and have no idea where I was.

But for the dogs, every morning is a new smell — each branch hauled out to the ditch, each bulldozed pile a cause for excitement.

"Get a whiff of this," they tell each other. "We have never peed on this limb before."

Yesterday, among the fragrant fallen pines, I saw a patch of black-eyed susans blooming, lifting their heads to the sun and new beginnings.

Monday was a study in contrasts across the West Bank, with Algiers reopening for residents to return home a month after Hurricane Katrina came ashore while lower Jefferson Parish was pumping out the flooding left during the weekend by an unprecedented tidal surge caused by Hurricane Rita.

And in between, in Gretna, Harvey and Marrero, heavy traffic on the roadways suggested that the West Bank is rising. Public schools in Jefferson are accepting registration today through Saturday in preparation for Monday's reopening. In Plaquemines Parish, public school registration begins Thursday.

It was just a week ago that parts of the West Bank were struggling to return to a routine when New Orleans City Councilwoman Jacquelyn Brechtel Clarkson hailed the reopening of Algiers, the first New Orleans neighborhood to do so after Katrina.

But by day's end Sept. 19, with Rita lurking in the Gulf of Mexico, Mayor Ray Nagin rescinded the move, and Algiers was locked down with police officers monitoring checkpoints at entryways.

On Monday morning, police waved motorists through checkpoints, emergency 911 service was restored and Clarkson laid out the welcome mat anew.

"This is the second time to open Algiers, and this time it's for good," she said. "Welcome home, Algiers. Let's lead the rebuilding of New Orleans."

Algiers resident Gary Ruiz navigates debris from his shed, where tools for Ruiz's drywall business as well as family belongings had been stored. His wife and children returned to the neighborhood Monday for the first time since Katrina.

But in the Lafitte, Crown Point and Barataria areas, hundreds of residents who did not heed Thursday's mandatory evacuation and were forced from their homes Saturday remained away. Few people expected the water to get as high as it did, residents and officials said.

It didn't take her mother's usual up-and-at-'em-or-else threats to get 7th-grader Megan Bright out of bed and ready for her first day of classes at John Curtis Christian School in River Ridge Monday.

That was fortunate, because Megan and her parents had to wake early for the commute from Baton Rouge to get the 12-year-old to school on time. Like so many New Orleanians, the Brights lost almost everything when floodwaters from Hurricane Katrina swept through their Palm Street home.

But the start of school meant an end to weeks of shuffling from place to place for Megan, who has been out of contact with her classmates.

"I get to see my friends," she said with a touch of timidity that quickly faded as familiar faces began to pop up in the hallway outside her homeroom.

Thousands of students like Megan got a desperately needed dose of normality Monday when a handful of Jefferson Parish Catholic and private schools opened their doors on the east bank. Administrators reported slight dips in enrollment balanced out by the arrival of displaced students from other schools.

Minimal damage allowed Ridgewood Preparatory School, St. Christopher's School and St. Edward the Confessor, all in Metairie, to reopen Monday along with John Curtis.

Jefferson Parish's public schools and the remainder of the parochial and private institutions are scheduled to open on or after Oct. 3.

The first school to ring its bell was actually St. Rita, in Harahan, which opened Sept. 21.

"We were very excited about that," Principal Melanie Verges said.

About 95 percent of the school's 553 students returned. And St. Rita has enrolled about 71 students from Orleans, St. Bernard, Plaquemines and Jefferson parishes.

U.S. 51 was raised, but still flooded

Still, evacuation not a concern for LaPlace

By Allen Powell II
River Parishes bureau

Despite a recent state project that raised U.S. 51 in LaPlace to more than four feet above sea level, the roadway flooded after both Hurricane Katrina and Hurricane Rita, which made returning to St. John the Baptist Parish along Interstate 55 difficult for many residents.

But while parish officials have expressed concern at the road's condition, they don't see the flooding as a major concern for evacuation or relief efforts for future storms.

U.S. 51 has been plagued with flooding since its construction, and after heavy rains, entrance and exit ramps to Interstate 55 – a major evacuation route - and parts of the roadway are often under water. The roadway, which is maintained by the state, can also receive excess water from either Lake Maurepas or Lake Pontchartrain, depending on which way the wind is blowing at high tide.

In 2002, the state began to increase the height of a mile of the roadway by about 12 to 15 inches and increase the height of entrance and exit ramps to Interstate 55. That project, which cost about $1.5 million, was completed in June 2004, said Cleo Allen, a spokeswoman for the state Department of Transportation and Develop-ever in my lifetime," Jean Lafitte Mayor Tim Kerner said.

"We could have sandbagged for six months and we wouldn't have been ready for it," he said.

While the surge crested Sunday and the level had dropped about 1 1/2 feet from its peak by Monday morning, much of the area remained flooded, including low spots on roads.

Lafitte resident Jeremy Smith sloshed through what used to be the lawn near his mobile home, which sits between Bayou Barataria and Jean Lafitte Boulevard. His mobile home got the double whammy from back-to-back storms.

"The hurricane (Katrina) came, tore the roof off and knocked it off its blocks," Smith said. "Then Rita came and flooded it out."

Officials are using pumps to remove the water. "We're getting pumps everywhere," said Chip Cahill, president of the West Jefferson Levee District. "We're working as hard as we can as long as we can so that people can get back in and get their lives in order again."

Fridges moving fast

In more populated areas of the West Bank, heavy traffic suggested that more people have returned. Consumers are flocking to businesses, packing the few open restaurants and buying items for their homes.

At Lowe's home improvement store in Harvey, sales manager Keith Yaeger said business "is definitely picking up," with customers buying roofing materials, drywall board and "lots of cleaning supplies."

"We're only open from 7 a.m. to 6 p.m., but we're doing almost twice the normal business," Yaeger said.

A-1 Appliance and Electronics, whose headquarters is in Harvey, also is seeing an increase in sales on the West Bank and elsewhere in the New Orleans area, particularly in refrigerators, which are selling at a rate of about 200 a day, marketing director Terry Toppino said.

"Literally, as we take the refrigerators off the truck, they're already sold," he said.

Businesses in Algiers are slowly reopening, and on Monday morning, the Sav-a-Center on Gen. de Gaulle Drive opened for the first time since Katrina – even with its front plate-glass windows boarded up from looters who drove a car inside to gain entry.

"They made a drive-through," an employee said.

The Winn-Dixie on Holiday Drive reopened last week, and the Wal-Mart Supercenter on Behrman Highway is expected to reopen Monday, Clarkson said.

The Algiers Economic Development District is trying to gauge the number of businesses that have reopened and get a handle on when others will follow suit, said Kathy Lynn Honaker, the group's executive director.

"I think it's going to be slow this week because people are coming in and taking care of their properties first," she said. "Next week it will pick up and go from there."

Back in the classroom

Honaker said she expects that more residents will return once Orleans Parish public schools in Algiers reopen, tentatively Nov. 1. Clarkson said, however, that residents can enroll their children in schools in neighboring parishes.

A passing truck sends ripples of water toward a flooded graveyard Monday on Privateer Boulevard in Barataria. Homes in the West Bank community saw as much as 8 feet of water from storm surge from Hurricane Rita.

Jefferson Parish public schools, which are slated to open Monday, will welcome all students, said spokesman Jeff Nowakowski. Registration is from 7:30 a.m. to 6 p.m. at nine sites. Parents will be required to provide only a name and address to register, he said.

Plaquemines hopes to follow Oct. 17, and officials are hoping to get back as many of their former students as they can, no matter where they live. After that, schools will accept displaced students who have moved to the parish as well as those from outside Plaquemines, Superintendent Jim Hoyle said, adding that with only three schools operational, enrollment might be limited.

"We'll do what we can for every student," he said. If a student is homeless, the district is required by law to admit them, he said. "If they have no school to attend …we'll do what we can," he said.

Registration for first-time students will be at Belle Chasse Primary School beginning Thursday from 9 a.m. until 2 p.m. Parents should bring as many school records as possible, school officials said.

For more information, parents can call (504) 392-4970 or (504) 393-1542.

Roads flooded, but still passable

ROAD, from B-1

ment. Allen said the road could not be raised much more because of overhead clearance levels underneath the interstate overpass.

However, in both recent storms the increased height did not prevent flooding, although St. John civil defense director Paul Oncale said that the road and ramps were still passable.

Oncale and several other officials said the flooding of the roadway is fairly inevitable, but called the situation "manageable" if not optimal.

"Some things you really can't do nothing about," Oncale said.

Parish Chief Administrative Officer Natalie Robottom echoed Oncale's sentiments and said that the parish administration does not have plans to ask the state to increase the height of the roadway again. Robottom noted that the road typically does not flood until after storms have passed, which means it does not present any problems for evacuations.

Although standing water along a major highway could hamper relief efforts to the parish, Robottom said there are several other routes in and out of the parish that can be used, such as Interstate 10 and Airline Highway.

"Clearly it's a concern to us but we have other areas that are a concern to us," Robottom said. "We need to take a step back and don't try to fix one little area at a time."

Councilman Sean Roussel, whose district includes U.S. 51, said he thinks it's unlikely that the state would agree to spend millions to raise U.S. 51 again, and noted that the problems could be solved in other ways.

Roussel said better drainage along the road could be installed, or a natural location for the water to be pumped out to could be included in plans for a hurricane protection levee the parish is discussing with the U.S. Army Corp of Engineers.

However, Roussel admitted that the flooding is almost a guarantee because of the roadway's precarious location.

"When the lake backs up like that … it's not much you can do about flooding," he said. "When that occurs people should have evacuated already."

Hospitals mostly escaped violence

unnerved by nearby sounds of gunfire.

On that Monday afternoon, no one knew what a wild ride lay ahead. Katrina had passed, doing minimal damage to Tulane Hospital. The streets of downtown New Orleans were dry. But by dawn Tuesday, water was rising rapidly. Doctors had already moved the emergency room and medical equipment to the second floor, and the hospital soon became an island. Later in the day, the generators ran out of gas.

Tulane's evacuation plan was put into motion, and the first helicopters landed on the hospital roof Tuesday afternoon to take out the sickest patients. The airlifts were called off before nightfall because security officials believed gunfire had been directed at the helicopters.

The next morning, doctors triaged patients, and the mass evacuation began. By the end of the day, all but about 20 patients and a few doctors had been flown to safety. The Tulane evacuation was sufficiently speedy that no patients were lost, Yu said.

Soon, an influx of patients from Charity began arriving at Tulane in trucks, taking the hospital staff by surprise.

"It was reasonably controversial, based on the fact that to my knowledge, there had been no agreement that Charity patients would be evacuated through Tulane," Yu said. An agreement was soon struck, and Charity began sending a few patients at a time to Tulane to be airlifted from that hospital's heliport.

Both University and Charity were in dire straits. At Charity, there were about 900 people, including 300 patients, plus staffers and families. University was worse off, with about 1,100 people trapped, including perhaps 400 patients. Yu and a few other doctors went by airboat to the two hospitals to see how they could help.

Medical work was a challenge, with minimal power supplied by a couple of garden-variety backyard generators to run essential equipment.

Doctors at Charity ran a few ventilators that use compressed gas. Improvisation became the rule.

"I saw doctors at Charity and University hooking two patients up to same respirator," Yu said. "It was cool to see some of the solutions. Charity ER residents were hanging out the windows to swing wires down to the generators. They were pulling wires out of walls."

Modern medical practice was impossible.

"There was very little medical work that went on after Tuesday night," Yu said. "We had no labs, no CAT scans. We took vital signs, blood pressure, listened to our stethoscopes and gave medicine. It was like practicing medicine 50 years ago. You do your best — look at their wounds, ask them how they're doing. You're very limited. Most doctors were reduced to organizers, problem solvers and manual laborers."

Evacuation was also a challenge. At University, the hospital ramps were flooded, making it hard or impossible to take people out with trucks. "We started taking a few very sick people from University and taking them in boats to Tulane," Yu said.

The threat of violence also lurked. During one trip, he said, a gunman fired at the military truck they were riding in; everyone on the truck lay flat to take cover.

Eventually, officials decided to evacuate University first, because it was deemed to be in worse shape than Charity. On Friday morning, the decision was made to begin landing helicopters on University's roof, though the roof had not been built for that use. Helicopters began to arrive in force, while boats took staffers to dry land near Loyola Avenue and Gravier Street, where buses waited. The effort went quickly: The entire hospital was emptied in seven hours, he said.

Next, Yu and his peers began the evacuation of Charity's patients through Tulane's heliport.

"We started taking patients on tabletops, cubicle walls, anything flat," Yu said. "We were putting patients two at a time on pickups, driving them to the roof and loading them onto military helicopters. We evacuated every stretcher patient that way."

Patients not needing stretchers were taken on boats to the bus staging area. The Charity evacuation, once under way in earnest, was likewise speedy.

"By 7 o'clock Friday evening, every patient, except the psychiatric patients, was out of Charity," Yu said. "By nightfall, Charity was empty too."

Soon, Yu was on a bus to Baton Rouge, where he was dropped at a shelter and then picked up by friends.

In hindsight, Yu said he believes things went remarkably well, considering what, in his view, appeared to be a failure of planning at Charity and University hospitals.

"I don't know if it was because it was a bad plan, or there wasn't enough communication to execute the plan. But at Charity and University, the water came up Tuesday night, and nothing happened to evacuate them until Friday morning."

Still, he said, "I'm very impressed with fact that so few people died at those three hospitals. People did die at both University and Charity. But they were all sick people. It would be hard to say whether anyone died because of the storm or not. The people who died were all really sick."

The hospitals mostly escaped violence and looting reported in the storm's aftermath.

"There no attempt to my knowledge to ever take the hospitals by force," he said. "None of the pharmacies were looted. The SWAT teams were called in a few teams because of reports of people with guns. They never found anybody, so I don't know if the reports were true."

Inside the hospitals, people banded together to make the best of the situation.

"I was unbelievably impressed with staff and the doctors, and even the patients and their families," Yu said. "Pretty much everyone was calm. They did what they were told. There weren't any riots. People were given a cup of green beans and it was called dinner."

Schools are seen as key to reviving communities

SCHOOLS, from B-1

Los Angeles. On Monday, about one-half of the usual 400-student enrollment arrived for classes. But Montgomery was positive.

"It's beyond what I expected," he said.

The school has received calls from students who intend to return next week and others who have made plans to re-enroll in January.

Reopening quickly wasn't an extraordinary act to Montgomery.

"It's our duty," he said.

But J.T. Curtis, a football coach at John Curtis School and son of its namesake, said reopening schools is a vital step in bringing residents back to not only Jefferson Parish, but also the New Orleans area.

"Could we have been more comfortable if we had waited two weeks until everything thing was taken care of? Sure. But if we could open now, we needed to," he said.

And that was beacon that signaled the Bright family back home. As Megan's mother, Dedra Bright, stood in line waiting to replace school shirts and PE uniforms, she said she never considered enrolling her daughter in any other school. Megan wanted to return to John Curtis, the school she had attended since first grade.

"We've been trying to get her back here," Dedra Bright said. "This is what she wanted."

St. Bernard residents return to mangled homes

Most are shocked by extent of damage

By Paul Rioux
St. Bernard/Plaquemines bureau

About 5,000 St. Bernard residents returned to their homes Monday as officials re-opened the parish after Hurricane Rita stalled efforts to bring life back to the storm-ravaged area.

Most residents were shocked by the condition of their homes. Virtually all of the parish's approximately 27,000 homes were flooded by Hurricane Katrina and will have to be torn down, officials said. Hurricane Rita brought floodwaters back to a smaller section of the parish, although officials said all water should be pumped out by midweek.

On Monday, parish streets were once again filled with traffic, the first signs of life in St. Bernard in a month. A gas station on Paris Road near Judge Perez Drive was being readied to open, possibly as early as this week.

Several restaurants and other businesses also prepared to open, hoping to provide much-needed services to the beleaguered property owners. The parish has imposed a dusk-to-dawn curfew, but officials are not forcing people to leave, even though most homes are uninhabitable and surrounded by a sea of muck.

"It's not incumbent upon us to push people out," Councilman Joey DiFatta said. "This is their home, no matter what condition it's in."

Meanwhile, the Parish Council met for the second time since Katrina hit, passing a resolution to seek more money for operating expenses from FEMA.

Parish President Henry "Junior" Rodriguez said the parish has enough money to meet payroll for 45 days, but will need federal help beyond that period.

"Our tax collections for the next 6 to 12 months are going to be about zero," he said. "If we don't get some money soon, we're going to be in big trouble."

The parish already has received $32 million from FEMA. After initially being critical of the slow federal response to Katrina, parish officials have warmed to the national emergency agency, affectionately calling the local representative "FEMA Phil."

"We tell him what we want and he finds a way to get it for us – legally," said Larry Ingargiola, the parish's emergency preparedness director. "Despite what you might be hearing, there's money out there for cleanup and rebuilding."

The council also announced it received a letter from Murphy Oil in Meraux pledging $2 million for the "relief and rebuilding" of the parish.

The council meeting, held at Chalmette Refining, attracted about 15 people, who were crammed into a tiny office. Council members huddled around a small conference table, a large bottle of hand sanitizer positioned in the middle of them. Fly strips dangled from the ceiling, swaying in the breeze of a portable fan humming at the back of the room.

Dr. Paul Verrette, who is in charge of the parish's medical response efforts, said initial results of EPA testing on soil samples are encouraging. They were traces of e-coli and mold, but no hepatitis or cholera.

"The EPA said there were no hazards from short-term exposure but they were pretty noncommittal about the effects of long-term exposure," Verrette said.

In talking with returning residents, council members received mixed reports on how many plan to return to the parish permanently.

Councilwoman Judy Hoffmeister said about 75 percent of the people on her block in Arabi don't plan to return.

"I hope it's just the initial shock of seeing their homes for the first time," she said.

But in the eastern part of the parish, which was the hardest-hit, the signs were more encouraging.

Councilman Ricky Melerine estimated that three-quarters of the people he spoke to from his eastern St. Bernard district said they plan to live in the parish again.

"They say, "'I'm gonna come back and be your neighbor … don't worry about it,'" Melerine said.

Despite warnings of massive destruction from parish officials, some residents still hoped to salvage items from their homes. Many left disappointed.

"I saw one man who came with a big trailer and left with a few odds and ends – an old clock that probably won't run and about about 50 feet of garden hose," Rodriguez said.

While many residents found little to reclaim, a few came away with pieces of their shattered lives.

Joe and Stacey Constance filled a small trailer with boxes of china, photo albums and several statuettes of children and angels from their parents' homes in Chalmette.

"You've got to get in the muck and run your fingers through it and see what you can find," Stacey Constance said.

Tulane law professor dies on Fla. beach

By Susan Finch
Staff writer

Longtime Tulane Law School professor David Gelfand died Sunday afternoon on Pensacola Beach in Florida according to the Escambia County Sheriff's Office. He was 56.

storm victims

Witnesses saw Gelfand walking toward the beach through shallow water, then turn and walk back toward the Gulf a moment before falling face-first into the water, according to the Pensacola News-Journal.

An autopsy was done Monday to determine whether Gelfand died from drowning or a medical condition. Results were not immediately available, Sheriff's Office spokesman Sgt. Ted Roy said.

Gelfand, a world-renowned scholar in constitutional law, and his wife, Mary, had gone to Pensacola to visit Gelfand's 91-year-old mother, said Bryan Mauldin, a longtime Gelfand friend, former student and fellow law professor.

Gelfand's death came the same day as a public announcement in New Orleans that he and other Tulane Law School faculty, alumni and friends had formed a nonprofit foundation called From the Lake to the River to marshal law students, law professors and law firms from across the nation to provide legal aid and disaster relief to Hurricane Katrina victims.

"We have lost an extraordinary legal mind," said Mauldin, who was working with Gelfand

Mauldin said that when she and Gelfand chatted on the phone Sunday afternoon about what they hoped the foundation could accomplish, he was "upbeat and energized. We were discussing the right of return of New Orleans evacuees and how to provide housing and jobs and reconstruction."

Gelfand, born in Buffalo, N.Y., was a magna cum laude graduate of Columbia University in political science who earned a master's degree in politics and jurisprudence at England's Oxford University and a law degree from Columbia Law School.

Except for a year teaching at the University of Miami, Gelfand spent his entire career on the Tulane Law School faculty, where he held the Ashton Phelps chair of constitutional law.

He taught at schools around the world, including those in Japan, Germany, Liberia, Kenya, Finland, and Holland.

Tulane Law School Dean Larry Ponoroff informed school students and faculty of Gelfand's death on Monday by e-mail.

Gelfand is survived by his wife; their 23-year-old daughter, Katie; and Gelfand's mother.

Funeral arrangements for Gelfand were pending Monday.

Luis Vellez sweeps up in front of his bed and breakfast in the Lower Garden District on Sept. 18.

Homesick and tired of waiting

After three weeks, the mayor announced on national television that people living in my ZIP code would be allowed to go back into the city. I returned to a friend's house in Metairie, poised to re-enter the city and take back my and my daughter's life. I spent four days going into the city by day to clean up my stinky refrigerator and just be there.

It felt good to be home, even though it was hot as you-know-what. Then I would return to the 'burbs to the comfort of my friends and air conditioning.

Then came Hurricane Rita. Now that it's behind us, I want to go home. I have lived Uptown near Audubon Park since I moved to New Orleans in the late 1970s. I've talked bad about our city at times: the politics, the crime, the schools. I've said numerous times that if I could, I would live elsewhere. I'm eating those words. I want to go home. Do you know what it means to miss New Orleans? Please turn the power on.

I work for Touro Infirmary, and I live right down the street. My daughter attends Louise S. McGehee School. Touro has asked when I can return to work, and I've told them as soon as the mayor will let me return to my home. McGehee has decided not to reopen until next year, so I have enrolled my daughter in St. Rita's in Harahan until it reopens. She asks me daily when we can go home.

I'm sorry there was a fire in the French Quarter when the power was restored this weekend, but I ask you: If we flip the switch today or a month from now, what will be any different? We have to try to go home.

I don't want anyone's property to burn. But we have to start trying to get home or people will establish themselves elsewhere. I have to work and I need to live in my home, since I have to pay for it anyway.

Please, let us go home. We've imposed on our friends and family long enough. Let's give it a try.

Lower 9 as spillway?

I am 50 years old and have lived in the 9th Ward for 47 of those years. I have witnessed much flooding, from regular rain storms to hurricanes. I now live in the historic Holy Cross area, one block from the Mississippi River. The flooding and re-flooding of the Lower 9th Ward should be investigated. A barge boat was found sitting on houses near the levee breach. I ask The Times-Picayune and its readers, what are the odds of a barge being found so close to a breach if it's not the reason for the breach? It does not take CSI to figure this out.

I would also like to give you some more food for thought. A little over a year ago, maybe two, the Army Corps of Engineers wanted to buy out the homes along Jourdan Avenue (the breach area) to build a larger lock for larger ships. Remember that story? The breach being fixed in a speedy manner the way it was, with gravel and riprap covering the area, was a recipe for disaster. Couldn't metal pilings have been installed?

Keep in mind I still respect the men and women involved in sealing the breach. They worked hard. It's just my opinion that it could have been done better.

Well, I guess the people who wanted to build that large lock might be able to buy out homeowners and former homeowners now. It almost makes you wonder, is all this by design? Is the Lower 9th Ward being used as a spillway?

Slidell is forgotten city

It has been one month since Hurricane Katrina roared ashore and changed everyone's lives. The news media seem to be reporting on New Orleans but have forgotten the surrounding cities, which have been devastated as well.

Slidell looks the same as it did a month ago. LIttle of the debris has been picked up, nor is there any sign of help being brought in to handle this monumental task. I was livid when I read an article in Saturday's Times-Picayune titled "Debris dumped at prestressed site." Mandeville and Covington were bringing their debris to Slidell to be disposed of.

I was also upset to see tombs and coffins in a ditch on Old Spanish Trail, carried from a cemetery 100 yards away. It's one month later, and they are still there.

Please help Slidell. We are the forgotten city.

Middle-class folks in limbo

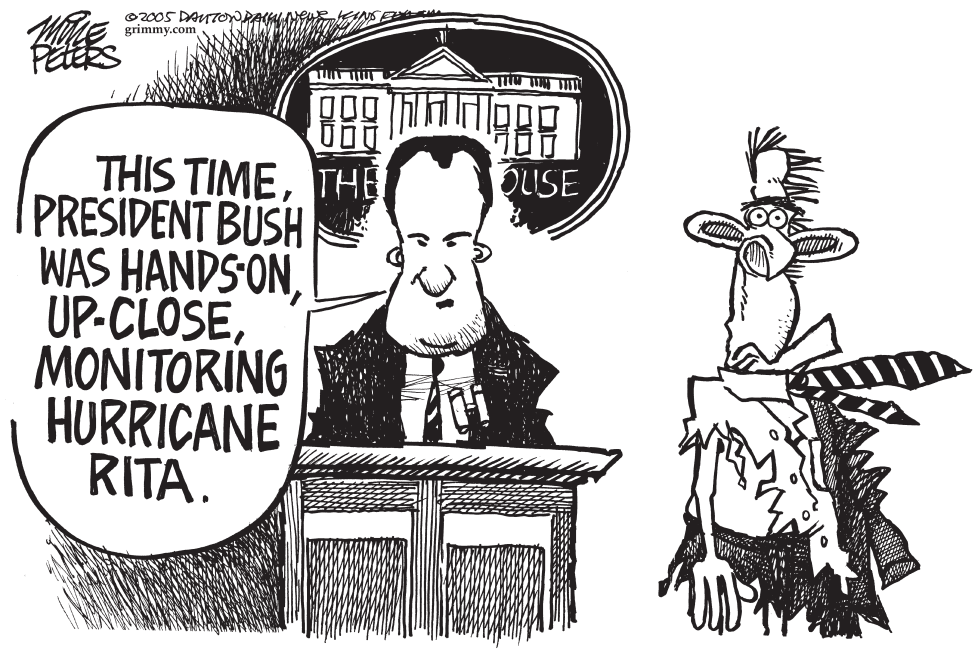
What happens to middle-class working people affected by Katrina? Well, let me enlighten you.

We have been in Florida for over three weeks, and the only help has been a $2,000 FEMA check for a family of four. This does not go far when one is, or should I say was, self-employed (St. Bernard Parish was my primary area of business). The business was occupational fitness and wellness, and there certainly is no need for this now with this area in such disarray.

It appalls me that there is no help for people in my predicament. I applied for food stamps, but I was turned down because I had a few thousand dollars in the bank, which is needed to pay†bills that are mounting, car notes and such.



Electricity is not free and neither is the telephone. Feeding a family of four — well, how far does $2,000 go? Not very. Luckily my family is not staying in a shelter, but that won't be out of the question when I am unable to find employment. The $200 weekly unemployment check, which hasn't begun arriving yet, doesn't touch my former income.

All these donations from celebrities and business — who receives the benefits? Only the destitute! I guess I will just have to wait until I am on the street because of foreclosure — my car repossessed and my electricity cut off.

Never in my life have I benefited from a government handout. Now I can't even get a food stamp. Go figure. My heart goes out to those who suffered loss, but where is the help for those in limbo?

Hurricane-force rumors

During Hurricane Betsy, then-Mayor Vic Schiro famously said, "Don't believe any false rumors unless you hear them from me." Unfortunately, during the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina, some of the most lurid rumors of violence in the Superdome and the New Orleans Convention Center came from those in charge: Mayor Ray Nagin and Police Superintendent Eddie Compass. And now it appears they were mostly false.

Nearly a month after the storm, officials have come up with no hard evidence to back up stories of murder, rape and other violence that supposedly happened among those who took shelter in those places. No matter how convincing the eye witness accounts, the bodies that back up their stories aren't there.

The toll, after careful inspection, is as follows: four dead in the Convention Center, one by violence: six dead in the Superdome, none by violence. While there were reports of 30 to 40 dead in the Convention Center and 10 to numerous in the Dome, the actual tally has to be given more credibility than unconfirmed reports by traumatized people. During the chaotic week that followed Hurricane Katrina, four confirmed murders took place in New Orleans, a number that's not at all surprising or even unusual for a city that expected to see as many as 200 homicides this year.

Debunking widespread reports of rape, including rapes of children, is more difficult since people have scattered across the country, making it a challenge to collect evidence or information. But police, military and rescue personnel who were on the scene say that most of what's been widely reported in the Dome and Convention Center simply didn't happen.

"Don't get me wrong, bad things happened, but I didn't see any killing and raping and cutting of throats or anything," said Sgt. 1st Class Jason Lachney, who played a key role in security and humanitarian efforts in the Superdome. According to Sgt. Lachney, 99 percent of the people sheltering in the Superdome — and there were 30,000 of them — were very well-behaved.

Bad things certainly happened. That many people jammed together with inadequate food, water, medicine and toilet facilities and a growing sense of abandonment and desperation suffered enormously. But they shouldn't also be maligned as lawless or even, to use Mayor Nagin's unfortunate word, animalistic.

Contrast Sgt. Lachney's comments with those of Superintendent Compass. During an interview with Oprah Winfrey, he said that babies were being raped. Mayor Nagin said that hundreds of armed gang members were killing and raping people inside the Dome.

Thank God it didn't happen. Everyone in south Louisiana — in the entire country — should feel a tremendous sense of relief that New Orleans didn't descend into some kind of post-apocolyptic orgy of violence following Katrina. But that doesn't mean damage wasn't done. Rumors, widely reported as fact, can live on even after they are debunked, and the tales from the Dome and the Convention Center are more compelling than most urban myths.

These frightening stories can continue to hurt us by discouraging people from returning to this region and by marring New Orleans' image with tourists. Rumors of violence may have hampered rescue efforts in some cases. We can't afford to allow them to hamper our recovery. It's bad enough that the Superdome will be associated with squalor and misery; far worse to have it associated with murder and mayhem.

It's understandable that in the tense and fractured days after Katrina frightened people reported rumor as fact and soldiers, police and even elected officials believed what they heard and passed it on. In the hell that descended after Katrina, almost anything, no matter how horrific, seemed possible.

But now that we know better, it's essential that people like Mayor Nagin and Superintendent Compass set the record straight, just as forcefully. That might mean saying, "I spoke too soon" or even, "I exaggerated." The latter certainly seems to be true of Superintendent Compass' claim that he and other officers wrestled 30 weapons away from criminals by using the follow-the-muzzle flash technique. Last week, the superintendent insisted that such an incident had happened to Capt. Jeff Winn's 20-member SWAT team, but in a separate interview Capt. Winn said that his unit saw flashes and heard gunshots only once and recovered no weapons.

Hurricane Katrina and its aftermath has more than enough human drama, from heroism to depravity, without embellishment. The people of Louisiana need solid information and credible leaders as we move toward recovery. Katrina inflicted a lot of damage on the truth, and that's just one more mess we need to clean up.

Strike two for Louisiana

Hurricane Rita could have been worse, no question about it. The storm could have been stronger. It could have hit another major metropolitan area. It could have crippled refineries on the Texas and Louisiana coasts. It could have dropped more rain.

But from Louisiana's perspective, the Category 3 storm was plenty bad enough. Rita delivered the second punch to a state that was already reeling, and while it's a lesser blow, Louisiana now has to deal with disasters in the southwest as well as the southeast parts of the state.

Cameron, Vermilion, Iberia, Terrebonne and Calcasieu parishes all experienced flooding because of Rita's storm surge. In Cameron Parish, entire fishing communities were wiped away. Iberia Parish Sheriff Sid Hebert estimates that one-third of that parish flooded, and one estimate put flooding in Terrebonne Parish at 40 percent.

Areas of the state that suffered through Katrina felt Rita, too. Orleans Parish's Lower 9th Ward and St. Bernard Parish were inundated again because of Rita's pressure on patched levees. Low-lying parts of St. Tammany Parish saw the waters rise again. In Jefferson Parish, Rita caused Bayou Barataria to spill over its banks, flooding Lafitte and forcing the rescue of hundreds who had stayed behind.

No direct weather casualties occurred in Louisiana or Texas, and that's a mercy. While rescuers had to pluck people from rooftops and pull them out of flooded homes, there are no throngs left to fend for themselves in dangerous circumstances. Widespread evacuation and a more nimble response clearly saved lives, and that's one saving grace from Hurricane Katrina.

But Louisiana's plight has been worsened by this second storm. The number of people left homeless, jobless and directionless has grown. The recovery has not only been slowed, it's also been expanded. That's a point that Louisiana's leaders will need to stress as we begin, once again, to dry out.

OTHER OPINIONS

TEXANS FIND OUT IT'S NOT SO EASY TO FLEE

AP PHOTO

Traffic inches north in all four lanes along U.S. 96 north of Jasper, Texas, early Friday morning as people flee the approaching Hurricane Rita.

Watching the miserable experience of Texans evacuating in advance of Hurricane Rita last weekend, I couldn't help but sympathize. But there also was a little voice inside my head whispering something else: Good, I thought. At least we're not the only ones capable of getting things so wrong.

There's been lots of talk about what New Orleans and Louisiana could have done differently to save lives before Hurricane Katrina struck, starting with help for those without resources to get out of harm's way.

That's true. But it's not the whole story.

STEPHANIE GRACE

New Orleans' evacuation offered two separate and distinct plotlines. The one that's gotten all the attention, and rightly so, concerns the tragic fate of those who didn't have the transportation to evacuate, and were left to drown, starve or endure terrifying conditions for days before being rescued.

The happier story, though, is that the people who did heed warnings had a decent time of it. The lesson, overlooked in the human heartbreak that followed Katrina, is that Louisiana's traffic flow plan, honed by a succession of irritatingly false starts, was a success.

Contraflow — the fancy name for pointing all major traffic lanes out of town — was enacted smoothly and at the right time. Alternate routes were publicized. To the credit of state officials who've spent years learning from previous mistakes, traffic was heavy but manageable right up until the day before the storm, when too many stragglers who should have gone earlier finally decided to get out of Dodge. The upshot, it's safe to presume, was that some who otherwise might have turned back in frustration stuck it out.

All this despite the fact that Katrina didn't paint a bullseye on New Orleans until the Friday before a Monday morning landfall.

Contrast that with Houston's partial evacuation last week in advance of Hurricane Rita. Early on, some Texas officials spoke with confidence of their ability to handle a grand-scale departure from the densely populated area, in unspoken contrast to Louisiana. But reality soon intervened.

The highways around the city, traffic-clogged on an average day, became hopelessly jammed. Backup gasoline supplies were nowhere to be found, and frustrated drivers found themselves pushing overheated cars or simply stalling out on the road, causing still more backups. People spent 15 or 20 hours on the road with little mileage to show for it. And most horrifyingly of all, some evacuees didn't survive the trip, including the nursing home residents whose bus blew up en route.

To deal with the problem, Texas officials who had never drawn up a contraflow plan were forced to invent one on the fly. It took 10 hours from inception to implementation, according to the Houston Chronicle — far too much time to ease the strain on the system.

While state and local officials across the border were clearly ill-prepared, there was at least one contributing factor that they couldn't control, and that was Katrina itself.

Beforehand, there might have been concern that too many residents of vulnerable areas would try to ride out the storm.

With New Orleans still fresh in everyone's minds — both the storm's deadliness and the impression that victims can't count on the cavalry, as Mayor Ray Nagin so memorably put it — Houston faced an unexpected complication: a surge in evacuees who weren't deemed at high risk, but who bolted nonetheless.

The point of drawing the comparison between the two metro areas' experiences isn't to gloat. It's to underline the fact that evacuation is a seriously difficult business.

And that goes not just for New Orleans and Houston but for cities across the country. Los Angeles has no large-scale disaster plan in place, despite its vulnerability to earthquakes, according to a sampling by The New York Times. Philadelphia, which like New Orleans must exit via bridges, hasn't updated a plan since early in the Cold War. And all three of these larger cities, like New Orleans, have their share of low-income people without cars.

No matter the failings and successes of local and state officials here or elsewhere, the truth is that nobody's in a position to feel smug, or worse, to use local failings as an excuse not to offer help now.

Instead, the legacy of Houston's brush with Rita should be a little less finger-pointing and a lot more attention to planning for catastrophes, wherever they may strike. That, in my book, would certainly qualify as a silver lining.

Katrina creates a waking nightmare

When I asked Gail Siles how the whole thing had affected her psychologically, she said, "Don't ask me now. It's too early." But in a later conversation, during which she seemed on the verge of tears, she said, "Listen, everybody's depressed and kind of still in shock. Everybody who's been through this thing. It's hard to believe it happened."

BOB HERBERT

Siles, a nurse, and her husband, Earl, a machinist, thought they had done a pretty good job preparing for the future. They expected, in a few years, to settle into the kind of comfortable, late-middle-age existence in which the heaviest lifting is picking up the grandkids.

That changed a few weeks ago when, as Siles put it, "All of a sudden water started coming through the living room."

Unannounced, the nightmarish flood that followed Hurricane Katrina arrived at the Siles' residence about 10 o'clock on a Monday morning.

The couple lived in a brick one-story home in Chalmette, a suburb of New Orleans. The water rushed into their home so fast they couldn't even open the front door to get out. Within minutes it was up to their waists. "We had to climb through a window," Siles said.

Chalmette is a community of about 32,000 in St. Bernard Parish and many of its residents, including the Sileses, have boats, which are used for fishing, crabbing and other recreational activities. After climbing through the window, the Sileses slogged through the onrushing floodwaters and a pouring rain to their 17-foot Sunbird, which was parked in the carport. Only then did they realize they had left the keys in the house. Earl Siles swam back for them.

While he was in the house getting the keys, the water kept rising. "The boat was just about touching the roof of the carport," Ms. Siles said. "I'm screaming for him to hurry up. Because if we got stuck under there, you know, we would have died.

"He got the keys and we got the boat going. By the time we got out of there the water was already even with the gutters on the roof. It was rainy and windy and we got about two blocks in the boat and got under the roof of the bank's drive-through. We were there about an hour and a half, then had to leave because the boat started touching the roof."

Eventually the rain eased and the Sileses began driving their motorboat through the submerged neighborhood. Street signs and gas stations were underwater. Cars and trucks were floating by. Utility poles attached to streaming electrical wires seemed to be everywhere.

"That's when we started hearing the people hollering and screaming," Siles said. "They were on their roofs, or leaning out their second-story windows, waving and screaming for help. So we just started rescuing people."

The Sileses would haul as many people into the boat as it could hold and take them to the local high school, which had been designated as a shelter for hurricane victims. After awhile they saw that other civilians, and some police officers and firefighters, were out in boats doing the same thing.

"We kept it up all day," Siles said. "There were massive amounts of people, and we couldn't just leave them there. So we'd load them up. The boat was filled to capacity on each trip."

For two days the Sileses carried people to safety in their little boat, perhaps as many as 150 people in all. Finally, exhausted and filthy, the Sileses themselves were evacuated to a shelter in Baton Rouge, where they stayed for two days. Eventually they made their way to Brooksville, Fla., where they are staying with relatives and trying, as the reality of their own dismal situation becomes clearer and clearer, to formulate the next chapter in their lives.

Their home is ruined. Their jobs are gone. Gail Siles' car and Earl Siles' truck have been destroyed.

"If we did not have family," said Gail Siles, "we'd be living under a bridge."

Still traumatized, and uncertain about the future, Siles is nevertheless sure of at least one thing: She will never settle again in an area that might be threatened by a hurricane or flood.

"I mean, I'm a nurse, and I deal with life and death every day," she said. "But once you go through something like that, you don't want to go through it again. It was like a bomb went off in your hometown."

Honor among thieves

Not the New Orleans Police Department. Not the United States Army. Not the U.S. Coast Guard or the Louisiana National Guard. Not the New Orleans Fire Department or the Louisiana Department of Wildlife & Fisheries. And certainly not the Federal Emergency Management Agency.

When Vivian Buckner, her mother, Jessie Richardson, and dozens of others huddled at the Lafon Nursing Home needed relief after Hurricane Katrina, the items they needed to sustain them arrived on a mail carrier's truck. But the occupants were not affiliated with the United States Postal Service.

They were thieves. They had stolen the postal truck and were using it not only to deliver needed supplies to people along Chef Menteur Highway, but also to offer rides to the Superdome for those who wanted to go.

I know Buckner and her 94-year-old mother. We all attend the same church. When I called Buckner in Houston Saturday I teased her for missing the service we had at 7:30 a.m. Aug. 28. By that Sunday morning, though, most people had either fled, were fleeing or had picked the spot where they'd ride out the storm. Buckner had already arrived at the nursing home. She expected to ride out of New Orleans on the same bus that would drive her mother and the other nursing home residents to safety.

Buckner had attended four meetings since April explaining what would be done during an evacuation, she told me. The nursing home had had a practice evacuation. Yet, the buses Buckner was waiting for never came. According to The Washington Post, they weren't requested.

Sister Augustine McDaniel, who runs the Sisters of the Holy Family facility, reportedly decided that it would be better to stay put than to try to leave. Because the state attorney general is investigating how McDaniel handled the crisis, the nun has been advised by an attorney not to talk. Because she witnessed what went on that week, investigators have told Buckner to expect a subpoena.

She told me she witnessed death and despair, a dedicated staff of employees and volunteers trying to save everyone they could and then a stolen mail truck pulling up outside Tuesday.

"First when they came we were really afraid of them," Buckner told me. "We knew the Post Office wasn't open."

But the people on the truck didn't menace them. Instead, "They said, 'Y'all need anything?' "

Buckner said she and the rest of the ad hoc staff could look through the open door and see what was on the truck: water, juice, potato chips, cookies, peanut butter and crackers. So that became the list of things they needed.

The thieves promised to return, and Wednesday they brought back baby wipes and adult diapers, nightgowns and Gatorade. They also brought back chicken and red beans and rice they'd taken from Popeyes. Buckner told me she didn't know how or when the food had been cooked, but the residents hadn't eaten since Monday, so they had no choice but to serve it. "Everybody ate it," she told me, "and nobody got sick."

The thieves were also good stewards of their loot. "They told us, 'Take whatever you need, but you gotta give us back the rest.'"

She had used the word "they" so often that I finally asked Buckner how many men were on the truck.

"They weren't men," she corrected me. "They were boys."

"Boys?!"

"I don't guess they were over 18," she said. "That's how we knew they didn't work for the postal service." She paused. "They didn't work for nobody."

I tried in vain Monday to reach a spokesperson with the U.S. Postal Inspection Service. I wanted to know whether the boys who had stolen the truck had been arrested. If so, I wanted to know if the agency was aware that they had used the truck to save lives. Buckner said she saw a car from the postal inspection service drive past on Chef Menteur Wednesday — after the boys had made their delivery. Like almost every other official vehicle she saw that week, that car zoomed by without stopping.

"Everybody passed," she said. "Even the Army trucks passed."

Everybody except two thieves who provided aid when the government did not.

St. Charles schools extend registration

New pupils will be in class by Friday

By John-John Williams IV
River Parishes bureau

Aside from the sporadic tree branch in the street, flicker of electricity throughout the night and tornado sirens blaring during the day, St. Charles Parish did not feel much from Hurricane Rita. But the storm certainly did a number on the school district's plan to absorb more than 1,600 displaced students into its classrooms in an organized fashion on Monday.

The bump in the road was evident Monday when the district officially registered 58 students at three different sites in the first hour, with more filing in. Before Rita, about 400 students who lived in St. Charles but attended school elsewhere had been enrolled and started classes last week. An additional 445 students who lived outside the parish had registered and were scheduled to start classes Monday.

The district cancelled school Friday due to the imminent threat of Rita. But in doing so it also cancelled the final day of registration for displaced students. The district extended registration to Monday.

"Last Friday set us back a day," said Rochelle Cancienne, director of public information for the district. "By (this) Friday, they will all be in school."

The district allowed students who registered last week to attend class Monday.

Adrien Young and Austin Moody settled right in at Luling Elementary School on Monday morning. By lunchtime both fourth-graders said they had made friends.

"They're nice," said Adrien, who attended the International School of Louisiana in New Orleans prior to Katrina. "I like it. My teachers are nice."

Adrien said he recognized some of his Luling classmates through religion classes and soccer league.

Austin, who attended Little Oak Middle School before Katrina, struck up conversations with his new classmates.

"I just made friends with them," he explained.

Tresa Webre, principal at Luling Elementary, said 28 new students started classes Monday.

"I'm seeing a lot of positive students," Webre said.

Adrien said he didn't want to go back to his old school.

"I didn't like it," Adrien explained. "Today I had fun doing science stuff."

Monday was the second time in less than two weeks that students began classes in St. Charles. Students who were enrolled in the district prior to Hurricane Katrina were allowed to start classes on Sept. 16. District officials said they needed a plan in place before displaced students could be allowed to enroll.

Students who lived in St. Charles prior to the storm but attended schools outside the parish were allowed to start classes on Sept. 20, Cancienne said.

"There were three phases," Cancienne explained. "Those students who attended school prior to Katrina, those students who lived within the parish and attended other schools, and those displaced students from Orleans and Jefferson parishes."

Marylen Burbank showed up to Harry Hurst Middle School in Destrehan on Monday morning to sign up her daughter, Frankie, for 12th grade at Destrehan High School. St. Charles designated three schools as registration sites for displaced students: Hurst, Albert Cammon Middle School in St. Rose, and Raymond K. Smith Middle School in Luling.

"She's not doing good mentally," Burbank said of her daughter, who attended John McDonogh Senior High School in New Orleans. "It's a big change … one minute going to school. Hopefully they (school) can help her with her work."

Burbank and her family spent five days on top of a roof with no food before being airlifted to safety and eventually wound up in San Antonio. Burbank and her family then trekked back to another daughter's Destrehan home on Friday.

"It's been hard," she said. "I thought I was going to have a nervous breakdown. It was too much; we left. I'd like to be close to my home."

BATON ROUGE — Truth is, he didn't want to be here.

Not like this, he told his famous older brother, Casey. Not on a different bench on the opposite side of Tiger Stadium, he said to his soon-to-be-famous younger brother, Jimmy.

The sullen pregame expression quarterback Rick Clausen wore beneath his backward baseball cap mirrored the tone of game-week phone conversations back home to California in which his disappointment over the prospect of spending Monday's game on the bench spilled into loving ears. His night as Tennessee captain was scheduled to end before the darkness fell - a short jaunt to midfield for the coin toss.

"The Lord works in mysterious ways, apparently," Clausen said, unexpectedly sweaty and dirty.

Four hours later, the evening concluded with the forgotten prodigal son handing off the ball to Gerald Riggs, who ran for a one-yard touchdown, capping an improbable 30-

Shoulder injury sidelines Saints safety Bellamy for rest of year

Rookie Bullocks expected to get his first start Sunday vs. Bills

By Mike Triplett
Staff writer

SAN ANTONIO — On top of everything else the Saints are dealing with, injuries are starting to pile up early in the season.

Starting strong safety Jay Bellamy will be out for the season after injuring his right rotator cuff in Sunday's 33-16 loss at Minnesota. He will have surgery on the shoulder this week and be placed on injured reserve.

That's two season-ending injuries in one week for the Saints, who lost veteran return specialist Michael Lewis last Monday night in New York.

"Obviously, he's our team captain, first of all, and he's kind of the leader of the back end, and we'll lose a lot of experience," Saints coach Jim Haslett said of Bellamy, a 12th-year veteran who had started 122 consecutive games during the past nine seasons with the Saints and his previous team, the Seattle Seahawks. "He's been in the league a long time. It's going to be hard to replace him."

Haslett said the Saints are going to try with a far-less experienced option, rookie second-round draft pick Josh Bullocks, who will make his first career start Sunday against the Buffalo Bills in the Saints' Alamodome debut.

"We're going to try to replace him with a rookie to start," Haslett said, "and see how he handles it."

The bigger short-term concern is overall depth in the secondary. Starting cornerback Fakhir Brown has missed the past two games with a knee injury and remains day to day.

Haslett says those two injuries put "a little stress" on the secondary, especially when it comes to all the different substitutions and packages.

The Saints still have four safeties on the roster, however, with veterans Mel Mitchell and Steve Gleason in backup roles.

Haslett said he does not yet know who'll be signed to replace Bellamy on the roster, but it won't necessarily be a defensive back. It will be the best available player, he said.

Bullocks, 22, will start at free safety, with veteran starter Dwight Smith sliding over from free

Two games in, Wave is defensive

Tulane has the top-ranked defense in the country

RUSTON — Tulane coach Chris Scelfo isn't a bit surprised the Green Wave's defense has played so well the first two games of the season. But he can't say he hasn't been taken aback by his defense being ranked No. 1 in the nation.

But in this case, Scelfo says, two games do not make a season.

"We're only two weeks into the season," Scelfo said. "We haven't played an offensive juggernaut, but I do know this, the way those guys are flying around, getting off their blocks and improving every week, we've got a chance of maintaining that consistency."

At this point, keeping the defense playing well is the most important item on Scelfo's agenda, not necessarily leading the NCAA.

In its first two games, the Green Wave has allowed just 352 yards, a 170 per game average. In the Wave's first three games last season, the defense allowed no fewer than 310 yards, and six of its 11 opponents finished with more than

East St. John, Hahnville win; PJP II drops season opener

From staff reports

EAST ST. JOHN 49, EAST ASCENSION 7: East St. John quarterback Johnnie Thiel passed for 224 yards and three touchdowns and ran for two touchdowns — all in the first half — to lead the Wildcats (1-1) to a 49-7 against the East Ascension (1-2) in Gonzales on Sunday.

Thiel, who transferred to East St. John from John Curtis last spring, completed nine of nine passes in the first half.

Thiel's performance was the difference, East St. John coach Larry Dauterive said.

"He's a guy that's not real fast, but he's shifty," Dauterive said. "He was well-coached in the two years (at Curtis) before I got him."

East St. John, which will host John Curtis on Friday, scored on its first series of the game. Thiel capped a 53-yard, five-play drive with a three-yard touchdown run.

Less than a minute later, the Wildcats scored on the first play of their next drive. Thiel threw a 44-yard touchdown pass to Louis Lee, who also caught scoring passes of nine and 56 yards.

Thiel rushed for 29 yards and accounted for all five East St. John touchdowns in the half. The Wildcats' defense allowed 14 yards rushing and 15 passing in the first half.

Ricky Dixon's 79-yard touchdown catch from Thiel gave the Wildcats a 35-7 halftime edge.

Dixon played most of the second half at quarterback, and accounted for the two East St. John second-half touchdowns. He scored on a one-yard run with 6:25 remaining in the third quarter and threw a 56-yard touchdown pass to Lee.

HAHNVILLE 35, LUTCHER 21: Hahnville converted a fourth-quarter fumble and interception into touchdowns to key the Tigers' victory against Lutcher (1-2) on Sunday at Lutcher.

After the Bulldogs took a 21-20 lead with 10:49 remaining, Hahnville (3-0) converted the turnovers into scores — all in the span of one minute, 41 seconds.

"I think we were very fortunate," said Hahnville coach Lou Valdin. "Lutcher is a good program with good players. And the (classifications) don't mean nothing when it's two River Parishes teams playing each other.

"Whether it's 3A or 5A, it don't matter. We got a win we probably didn't deserve."

Lutcher had the ball at its 46 and a 21-20 lead with less than 10 minutes to play. But the Bulldogs fumbled on a reverse and Hahnville's Shaine Boyle recovered at the Lutcher 38. Three plays later, Hahnville quarterback Early James connected with Ben Pierre on a 22-yard touchdown pass that put the Tigers ahead for good.

Then, with 5:58 remaining, Hahnville's Kemon Jacobs intercepted Lutcher quarterback Cade Fontenot's pass and returned the ball 35 yards for the final touchdown.

"They're Hahnville," Detillier said. "You can't give them anything. And we gave them a lot."

Hahnville running back Terrance Isaac scored on a one-yard run on the Tigers' first possession of the game and Robbie Broach, a transfer student from Rummel who lives in Luling, added 44- and 38-yard field goals to give Hahnville a 13-7 lead midway through the second quarter. Late in the half, Brian Singleton caught a 30-yard touchdown pass from James to put the Tigers ahead 20-7.

Lutcher trimmed the lead to 20-14 before halftime when Juan Johnson scored on a three-yard run. Less than two minutes into the fourth quarter, Lutcher took the lead when Jordan Gant stole a handoff and returned it 49 yards for a touchdown. Terrence Jeffrey's extra point gave the Bulldogs a 21-20 lead.

LIVE OAK 14, POPE JOHN PAUL II 9: Live Oak wide receiver Kardaryl Watson's 30-yard fourth-quarter touchdown reception from quarterback Michael Scarbrough gave the Eagles (2-1) the victory against Pope John Paul II (0-1) in Slidell on Sunday.

The play put Live Oak in front 14-9, but the Jaguars threatened to regain the lead.

Quarterback Richard Guillot took the Jags on a 12-play drive, converting two third-down situations and one on fourth down that carried Pope John Paul II past midfield. But four plays later, on fourth-and-six at the Live Oak 45, Guillot was brought down for a two-yard loss by Live Oak's Derek Gann.

"They ought to be commended," Eagles coach Donnie Bozeman said of the Jaguars. "Under the circumstances they played well, executed very well."

Live Oak accumulated 13 first downs to PJP's 12, and 212 yards of total offense — 147 on the ground — to the Jaguars' 193. Eagles fullback Darren LeBlanc had 86 yards, the same as Jaguars running back Chad Hindman, who ran the ball 23 times. Guillot was 9-of-24 passing for 110 yards and one interception.

The Eagles scored on their second possession of the game on a 15-yard Scarbrough-to Shawn Mullen pass after getting the ball at the PJP II 37.

From then on, the Jaguars dictated the tempo, though they were unable to punch the ball into the end zone. Andrew Birkoff kicked 26- and 21-yard field goals in the second quarter, then a 33-yarder in the third to put PJP in front 9-7.

Perhaps the deciding play came when Gann punted inside the PJP II five in the fourth quarter. Unable to move past their seven, the Jaguars punted back to the Live Oak 47. In three plays, including the 30-yarder to Watson, the Eagles were back in front for good.

"We're all dealing with adversity," PJP II coach Chris Lachney said, "Live Oak as well as us. But it's tough to call on an offense to drive 95 yards when they've been practicing so sporadically. We played well enough to win. But we kind of ran out of things in our trickbag. It's disappointing, I won't say it's not, but you know what, that's football."

The U.S. team celebrates after Chris DiMarco made a 15-foot putt on the 18th hole to clinch the Presidents Cup against the International team.

Americans' victory emotional for Nicklaus

Captain says winning putt crucial for DiMarco's career

From wire reports

GAINESVILLE, VA. — A dozen American players took turns telling stories about their captain, Jack Nicklaus, before the team meeting turned emotional as they looked ahead to the final round. More than anything, they wanted golf's greatest champion to go out a winner at the Presidents Cup.

When it was over, Nicklaus saw a greater victory.

"I don't know why in the world they want to care about winning one for an old man," the 65-year-old Nicklaus said. "They need to win one for themselves. American golf has not won in international competition for a few years. And they proved that they are pretty good."

Since they lasted hoisted a trophy that belonged only to them, at the Presidents Cup five years ago, the U.S. teams have featured 11 major champions and gaudy world rankings that did them little good.

They were narrowly beaten by the Europeans at The Belfry and pounded by them at Oakland Hills in the Ryder Cup. In between, they had to rally in South Africa to scratch out a tie against the Internationals in the last Presidents Cup.

This one looked as though it might not determine a winner, either.

Phil Mickelson trailed by one as he stood on the 18th tee. Chris DiMarco was one behind as he walked up the 17th fairway in the final match. If both lost their matches, the Presidents Cup would end in another tie.

But this team learned to finish strong, and Nicklaus could not have been more proud.

Mickelson's wedge spun back toward the cup and settled 4 feet away for a birdie that sent his match against Angel Cabrera to extra holes. DiMarco squared his match with Stuart Appleby on the 17th hole, but again was on the ropes with a tee shot that left him a difficult approach to the 18th - his feet in a bunker, the ball nestled in the rough above.

"The lie wasn't bad, it was the stance that was not real good," DiMarco said. "I tried to stay real still and hit a good, solid shot and get right of the hole and give me a putt at it, at least have a chance. And it came out perfect."

His 9-iron settled 15 feet to the right of the cup to set up one of the most dramatic putts in these competitions.

It was the first time in the Presidents Cup - or in the 77-year history of the Ryder Cup, for that matter - that a player from the last match in the lineup made a birdie putt on the 18th hole to win the cup.

"Jack's the best, the best of all time, and to make that putt for him is what it's all about," DiMarco said. "We wanted to get a win for him so much. Last night, we had a great, emotional dinner. Everybody got up and talked, and I think everybody said they wanted to go out and win this for Jack. And to do that is unbelievable."

For Nicklaus, it brought back memories of another captaincy.

He brought the Ryder Cup to his home course at Muirfield Village in 1987, only to see the Americans lose on home soil for the first time. Europe built a formidable lead in team matches, 10 1/2-5 1/2, by closing strong. Of the six matches that reached the 18th hole, Europe won five and halved the other.

"I had good guys, good players, but they never won the 18th hole," Nicklaus said. "The 18th hole this week won us the matches. You've got to be able to play the last hole and finish the event, and believe in yourself, and believe that when you get to the next level as an individual, that you can do it again.

"That's why I'm so happy about it," he said. "It really elevated every one of these guys so that the next time out, they will believe in what they can do."

The Americans were clutch on the 18th hole at Robert Trent Jones Golf Club - not just on Sunday, but all week. They never lost on the final hole, going 5-0-7 in the matches that went the distance.

But what mattered was the final day.

THE WORLD OF SPORTS

MAJOR LEAGUE BASEBALL

FBI INVESTIGATING HATE MAIL: Yankees star Derek Jeter has received a threatening letter reportedly warning him to stop dating white women or ìhe'll be shot or set on fire.î FBI special agent Scott Wilson in Cleveland confirmed the bureau's probe. The Daily News reported Monday that the hate mail to the Yankees' 31-year-old captain called him a ìtraitor to his raceî for dating white women. The Daily News reported that others received similar threats, including U.S. Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas, Miami Dolphins defensive lineman Jason Taylor, and the parents of tennis star James Blake. The NYPD's hate crimes unit recently completed a four-month investigation into the letter to Jeter, mailed to Yankee Stadium earlier this season, according to Detective Brian Sessa. The department has not made public the investigation's outcome.

UNION AGREES TO DOUBLE PENALTY: Baseball players would accept a stiffer penalty for first-time steroid offenders, 20 games instead of 10 days, and agree to amphetamine tests, but the union's offer fell short of what Commissioner Bud Selig wants. In an April 25 letter to the union, Selig called for a 50-game suspension for an initial positive test, a 100-game ban for second-time offenders and a lifetime ban for a third violation.

AROUND THE MAJORS: Cincinnati Reds outfielder Ken Griffey Jr. had surgery Monday to clean his knee and close a year-old incision that hasn't healed properly, procedures expected to set him back no more than four weeks. Griffey, 35, batted .301 with 35 homers and 92 RBIs in 128 games, his highest total since he joined his hometown team in a 2000 trade with Seattle.

NBA

WIZARDS DRAFTEE SHOT: Washington Wizards rookie forward Andray Blatche was shot during an attempted carjacking and remained hospitalized Monday. Blatche's mother, Angela Oliver, told The Post-Standard of Syracuse, N.Y., that her son was shot once in the chest while riding in a car near his home in Alexandria, Va., but that the bullet did not hit vital organs. He is being treated at Inova Fairfax Hospital in Fairfax, Va. Police said the shooting happened Sunday morning after two men in masks approached from a van that had been following the car in which Blatche was a passenger.

AROUND THE NBA: The Minnesota Timberwolves signed former Gonzaga guard Richie Frahm, who averaged 3.8 points in 43 games for Portland last season. . . . First-round draft pick Yaroslav Korolev signed a contract with the Los Angeles Clippers. Selected 12th overall, Korolev is the highest Russian draft pick in NBA history.

COLLEGE BASKETBALL

ARIZONA PLAYER DIES: Shawntinice Polk, a top women's basketball player at Arizona, collapsed at the McKale Center on Monday and died, university officials said. Polk wasn't working out or practicing when she collapsed about midmorning and was taken to University Medical Center, officials said. Athletic Director Jim Livengood said Polk wasn't feeling well when she arrived at the Center, but said the circumstances surrounding Polk's death were being reviewed. Polk was an All-Pac-10 player three years in a row.

AROUND THE NATION: New Mexico coach Ritchie McKay dismissed transfer forward Aaron Johnson from the program, citing an undisclosed violation of team policy. Johnson transferred from Penn State in May. He led the Big Ten last season with 9.9 rebounds per game.

MASTERS WINNER ARCHER DIES: George Archer, who won the 1969 Masters and 11 other titles on the PGA Tour, died Sunday at his home in Incline Village, Nev., after a yearlong battle with Burkitts Lymphoma. He was 65.
Archer won the Masters in 1969 by making key putts to close with a par 72 and hold off Billy Casper, Tom Weiskopf and George Knudson. Despite a lifetime exemption, Archer stopped playing the Masters in 1992 at age 52 because of numerous injuries. Archer had seven surgeries, but still managed a solid career with 12 PGA Tour victories and 19 on the Champions Tour, the last one coming in 2000 at the MasterCard Championship. He earned more than $10 million in his 40 years of pro golf, playing in 999 tournaments on the regular and senior tours.

MORE GOLF: A judge upheld his order for a shipbuilder to stop using Tiger Woods' name and a photograph of the golfer's luxury yacht ìPrivacyî for financial gain. U.S. District Judge William Zloch ruled that his preliminary injunction from November against Christensen Shipyards Ltd. should stand. He also denied the shipbuilder's request that Woods' lawsuit against the company be moved from Florida to its home state of Washington.

HORSE RACING: Keeneland's September Yearling Sale ended as the highest-grossing thoroughbred auction. During the 14-day auction, buyers spent $384,349,900, eclipsing the industry record of $324,904,300, set last year. The 3,545 horses sold was also an industry record, topping the 3,461 horses sold during Keeneland's 1999 November Breeding Stock Sale. The average price of $108,240 and the median price of $40,000 were records. Forty horses sold for $1 million or more, and the highest-priced horse in the sale was sired by Storm Cat, a Lexington-based stallion that commands a stud fee of $500,000, the world's highest. The colt, out of the broodmare Tranquility Lake, brought $9.7 million, the third-highest price paid for a horse at auction. John Ferguson purchased the colt on behalf of Sheik Mohammed bin Rashid al Maktoum, the crown prince of Dubai. . . . A federal judge has dismissed a lawsuit by a thoroughbred owner who sued to name one of his fillies after Sally Hemings, the slave who was reputed to be Thomas Jefferson's mistress. In a ruling dated Sept. 16, U.S. District Senior Judge Karl Forester sided with The Jockey Club and the Kentucky Horse Racing Authority, two groups that had asked that the suit be thrown out. Garrett Redmond, a Paris, Ky., farmer, sued the racing authority and The Jockey Club in May after a request to name the horse for Hemings was denied. The Jockey Club regulates the naming of thoroughbred racehorses.

TENNIS: Fifth-seeded Robin Soderling reached the second round of the Thailand Open, beating Robin Vik 4-6, 6-1, 6-2 on Monday night. Top-seeded and defending champion Roger Federer and second-seeded Lleyton Hewitt begin play Wednesday. Third-seeded Robby Ginepri faces Danai Udomchoke today. . . . Vera Douchevina and Marion Bartoli won in straight sets to reach the second round of the Korea Open. Douchevina, seeded sixth, defeated Abigail Spears 6-4, 6-2. Bartoli, seeded eighth, downed Tamarine Tanasugarn 6-0, 6-1. Meghann Shaughnessy had a tougher time but ousted Tatiana Panova 6-1, 7-6 (4).

Penalties, turnovers are again Saints' undoing

N.O. had 27 flags, 10 giveaways in past two games

By Mike Triplett
Staff writer

SAN ANTONIO — Penalties and turnovers are the ultimate sins in the NFL. And through three weeks this season, the Saints rank worst in the NFL in both categories.

They are tied with the Oakland Raiders with 36 penalties, and committed 27 in the past two weeks.

And they are tied with the Minnesota Vikings with 12 turnovers - 10 in the past two weeks.

Not surprisingly, the Saints lost those two games in convincing fashion.

"It's attention to detail. It's the focus," Saints coach Jim Haslett said in his Monday press conference, the day after a 33-16 loss at Minnesota. "Our attention to detail is not very good the last couple of games at every position. The first three plays of the game were a fumble, then we got beat for a touchdown because we didn't play with the right leverage from a corner, then we get a pre-snap penalty (on offense).

"That's the first three things that we tried to correct from the week before. And we started off doing it that way. So for us to be a successful football team, we've got to cut those things out."

Penalties are hardly a new concern for the Saints, who were the second-most penalized team last season with 129 - five fewer than the Raiders.

The Saints have committed more than 100 penalties in each of Haslett's five seasons - they ranked third with 124 in 2000 despite their 10-6 record. They were flagged 119 times in both 2001 and 2002 and 103 times in 2003.

A breakdown of the penalties this season shows no specific trend, aside from the overall mental focus. Fourteen penalties have come on offense, 13 on defense and nine on special teams.

Rookie offensive tackle Jammal Brown has been whistled for four false starts. Quarterback Aaron Brooks has been called for three delay-of-game penalties. And defensive end Charles Grant has been the most frequent culprit on defense with two offsides penalties and a roughing-the-passer penalty.

"Those guys have got to know if we're doing a hard count on three, we're not trying to draw ourselves offsides. We're trying to draw them offsides," Haslett said. "Last week, the first play, we had a dummy audible and it kind of changed. Jammal jumped on the set. So it's just something, he's a young kid. We need to focus in on what we're trying to get done."

AP PHOTO

Saints tight end Ernie Conwell heads for the end zone on a 13-yard touchdown reception during the first half of Sundayís 33-16 loss to the Minnesota Vikings.

Crowd noise in three road games, most notably in New York last Monday night, has been a small part of the problem. A more prevalent reason for struggles is that the Saints have been playing from behind the past couple of games, taking them out of their comfort zone and into a press mode.

But Haslett said he wouldn't blame the mental errors on the team's circumstances, being away from home and distracted. The coach and players have lauded the practices for being crisp and high-tempo the past two weeks.

"Let's not make excuses," Haslett said. "Us traveling the last few weeks really doesn't have anything to do with our play on the field."

TICKET UPDATE: There were still 15,590 tickets remaining as of Monday afternoon for Sunday's game against the Buffalo Bills, the first of three home dates the Saints will play in San Antonio's 65,000-seat Alamodome this season.

Saints officials said good seats are still available in many locations. They are available through Ticketmaster, the Alamodome box office and the team's web site, www.neworleanssaints.com.

The Saints have sold approximately 10,000 more tickets to their Oct. 16 game in the Alamodome against the more high-profile Atlanta Falcons.

HOME-FIELD ADVANTAGE? Haslett said he doesn't know what to expect from the Alamodome crowd Sunday.

"I'm hoping there's 65,000 people that are cheering the Saints on, and it's loud. I don't know. I don't know what to expect," Haslett said. "I would think, if they were coming to the game, they would root for us, but I'm not really sure. I know we sold more tickets to the Atlanta game because they want to see Michael Vick."

Haslett said the bigger "home-field" advantage will come from spending the entire week in one place without having to travel for the first time in more than a month.

ETC.: In addition to safety Jay Bellamy's season-ending shoulder injury, the Saints also lost tailback/kickoff returner Aaron Stecker for a few weeks with a high ankle sprain, and receiver Joe Horn is day to day with a hamstring injury. ... Saints safety Steve Gleason and several staff members made another visit to the KellyUSA evacuee shelter in San Antonio on Monday night, bringing an $8,000 check (in conjunction with the Burger Boat Company) for the Red Cross of San Antonio. The Saints have raised nearly $300,000 through the New Orleans Saints Hurricane Katrina Relief Fund.

Bullocks to start at free safety

safety into Bellamy's position.

The coaching staff was very high on Bullocks this summer after the 6-foot-1, 207-pounder from Nebraska made a terrific first impression with his speed, athleticism and instinct for finding the ball.

There were even whispers that he might push Bellamy for his starting job. But once training camp started, Bullocks' head was swimming a bit.

"He's still a young kid and everything's new to him," Haslett said. "But I think once he gets out there and once he gets all the reps, he'll be fine. It's going to be sort of a learning curve for him, but I think he's going to be OK."

Bellamy came to the Saints in 2001 and established himself as one of the most consistent and dependable players on a defense that has had a tremendous amount of turnover.

He led the team in tackles in each of the past two seasons, with a career-high 116 last year. Bellamy, 33, has 449 tackles, nine interceptions, six forced fumbles and five fumble recoveries in four-plus seasons with the team.

Titans' back suspended for substance abuse

Henry out four games for violating policy

From wire reports

Tennessee Titans running back Travis Henry was suspended for four games by the NFL on Monday for violating the league's substance abuse policy.

Henry's suspension begins immediately. He will miss Sunday's game against AFC South rival Indianapolis and won't be back until Oct. 24 before the game with Oakland.

CBS reported Sunday on its pregame show that Henry would be disciplined. That was news to the Titans, and Coach Jeff Fisher declined to comment after a 31-27 loss in St. Louis. Henry called it a league issue and said, "No comment."

Fisher said the league notified the Titans of the suspension Monday, but he didn't have any specifics about the violation or Henry's appeal.

"Travis is extremely regretful for his actions, for his choices, for his decisions. It has affected him personally, his family and obviously has hurt this football team," Fisher said.

Henry's agent, Hadley Engelhard, did not respond to phone messages left Sunday and Monday. The running back was not in the Titans' locker room Monday.

SPIKES OUT FOR SEASON: Buffalo linebacker Takeo Spikes, who has never missed a game because of an injury in his seven-plus NFL seasons, is out for the year with a torn right Achilles' tendon.

The injury happened in Buffalo's 24-16 loss to Atlanta on Sunday and leaves the Bills without their top defensive player and the unit's inspirational and physical leader.

"It's a big blow for our defense," linebacker London Fletcher said Monday. "However, we will still play football on Sunday. Injuries happen all the time. We've got some other guys that have to take up the slack."

The Bills (1-2) are preparing to play the Saints in San Antonio on Sunday.

Coach Mike Mularkey said Spikes will have surgery. He added team doctors informed him Spikes is expected to fully recover.

TWO VIKINGS ARRESTED: Two Minnesota linemen, Bryant McKinnie and rookie Marcus Johnson, were arrested in connection with a scuffle at a gas station early Monday.

McKinnie, an offensive tackle, was held on suspicion of disorderly conduct and obstructing the legal process, according to jail documents. He was freed on $50 bail.

Johnson, a guard, was arrested on the same charges. The Vikings drafted him from Mississippi with the 49th pick this year.

The team had no immediate comment. McKinnie's agent, Ben Dogra, did not immediately return a call.

The arrests came after officers were called to clear out a large gathering near downtown Minneapolis, police spokesman Ron Reier said.

The Vikings played at home Sunday and beat the Saints 33-16.

EAGLES' AKERS LIKELY OUT: Eagles place-kicker David Akers probably will miss Philadelphia's game at Kansas City this week because of a torn hamstring, while quarterback Donovan McNabb's status is uncertain.

AP PHOTO

Buffalo linebacker Takeo Spikes is helped off the field during Sunday's game against Atlanta with a torn right Achilles' tendon. Spikes will miss the rest of the season.

Akers, who collapsed in pain after the opening kickoff, fought through the injury to make a 23-yard field goal with nine seconds left to lead the Eagles to a 23-20 victory over Oakland on Sunday.

"He is going to most likely miss this week and we will see how it heals up," Eagles coach Andy Reid said Monday.

McNabb played with a sore chest, strained lower abdomen and a shin contusion. He finished with 365 yards passing and two touchdowns while throwing a career-high 52 passes.

JETS' QUARTERBACKS AILING: Brooks Bollinger is confident he can shoulder the task of being the New York Jets' starting quarterback.

The third-stringer will likely get the chance Sunday against a tough Baltimore defense because of shoulder injuries to starter Chad Pennington and backup Jay Fiedler. The two were injured in the Jets' 26-20 overtime loss to Jacksonville on Sunday, and both were scheduled for MRI exams Monday.

"I'll know more probably (Tuesday) on the status of both guys," Coach Herman Edwards said Monday. "At this point, I'm preparing Brooks Bollinger to be our starting quarterback."

CLOCK ERROR AIDS PATRIOTS: A clock error added 52 seconds to the fourth quarter of the Patriots-Steelers game Sunday. The extra time aided the Patriots during a winning drive that ended with Adam Vinatieri's 43-yard field goal with one second remaining.

The Patriots won 23-20, their fourth victory against the Steelers in five games since 2001, including AFC championship game victories during the 2001 and 2004 seasons.

The NFL acknowledged the mistake Monday, with director of officiating Mike Pereira issuing a statement: "The on-field officiating crew, which oversees the official game clock operated in the press box, failed to recognize that the clock was improperly reset."

The mistake occurred after the second play of the fourth quarter, a reverse by Steelers wide receiver Cedrick Wilson for no gain on second-and-10 from the Pittsburgh 30 with the Steelers ahead 13-10.

There were 14 minutes, 51 seconds remaining when the play started and, by the time a false start penalty was called on Steelers guard Kendall Simmons, the Heinz Field clock had run down to 13:59.

PACKERS' ROSSLEY HAS TESTS: Green Bay offensive coordinator Tom Rossley underwent heart tests Monday after spending the night at a hospital following a recurrence of warning signs that had sent him to the emergency room.

Rossley, 59, was hospitalized before kickoff Sunday, but he checked himself out of the hospital and returned to Lambeau Field in the second quarter of Green Bay's 17-16 loss to Tampa Bay.

Rossley, who underwent an emergency heart operation last year, still wasn't feeling well after the game, so the Packers sent him to back to Bellin Hospital in Green Bay for an overnight stay. He was cleared Monday to return to work.

Sunday's late game

CHARGERS 45 vs. GIANTS 23: LaDainian Tomlinson ran for 192 yards and three touchdowns, and threw for another score to lead San Diego. Drew Brees threw two touchdown passes for the Chargers (1-2).

Eli Manning threw for a career-high 352 yards and two touchdowns for the Giants (2-1).

Happy Ticket to face top fillies

TICKET, from C-1

The family drove across the state to his apartment in Bossier City, where Leggio lives while competing during the Louisiana Downs season.

Happy Ticket, who has won 10 of 11 races, also won the race with her trainer back to Bossier City.

"She got back the next morning," Leggio said. "I should have rode with her. She was in the stall at 2 o'clock."

Leggio and his wife, Joyce, didn't get back to Bossier City until 2 a.m. Aug. 30, the morning after the storm. An announced three-hour delay in Atlantic City turned into an eight-hour delay because of the hurricane, Leggio said. "I was whipped out after that."

Everyone arrived safe and sound. "We had a full house," Leggio said. "It was fun."

Thanks to Happy Ticket, Leggio, a 71-year-old New Orleanian, saddled a horse at Saratoga for the first time in his long training career. Soon, Leggio will be headed to another prestigious track, Belmont Park.

On Thursday, Happy Ticket was flown back to New York to run in the Beldame on Oct. 1 at Belmont, Leggio said. If she performs well — wins or isn't beaten by more than three or four lengths — she'll stay there and run in the Breeders' Cup Distaff on Oct. 29, he said.

The Ballerina was Happy Ticket's first Grade I race, and she passed the test easily. She ran seven furlongs on a muddy track in 1:24.53 to win by 5 1/2 lengths.

"She ran a heck of a race," Leggio said. "I though she could outrun those horses. I didn't know about the mud."

The Grade I Beldame is a mile-and-an-eighth race. Some of America's best fillies and mares, including Ashado, Society Selection, Shadow Cast, Island Sand and Sweet Symphony, are possibilities for the $750,000 race.

"We're going to take a shot at it," Leggio said. "I think she deserves it. She hasn't run with that caliber of horse. We're going to give her a chance to prove herself. ... She's won every distance I've run her."

Happy Ticket, a 4-year-old daughter of Anet and the mare Love and Happiness, is owned and was bred by Stewart Madison. He's a part-owner of Malaco Records, a gospel and blues record company in Jackson, Miss., that has scored big with New Orleans artists.

"Mr. Big Stuff," recorded by Gene Knight, and "Groove Me," recorded by King Floyd, sold a couple of million copies each, Madison said.

Now, Madison is cashing in on a Louisiana filly. Happy Ticket has earned $632,260, and with a Grade I victory, she'll be valuable as a broodmare some day.

But there's more racing to be done. In the Beldame, Happy Ticket will be racing farther than she ever has, but Madison and Leggio say they're not concerned about the distance.

"She's won three times at a mile-and-a-sixteenth, certainly not against this type of competition," Madison said. "But when she runs her race, it doesn't really matter who the competition is.

"She's rate-able. She'll do pretty much what the jock wants her to do."

Leggio points to Happy Ticket's victory last fall in the mile-and-a-sixteenth Champions Day Ladies at the Fair Grounds as evidence that the filly can handle a longer distance. Happy Ticket was blocked on the inside in that race before powering clear in the stretch to beat Destiny Calls — "a pretty nice filly," Leggio said — by four lengths.

"We'll see if she can do the job again," he said. "If she does this, she's a super horse.

"She won't make you ashamed. She'll run hard."

COLLEGE FOOTBALL

LSU football a friend to displaced fans

Friend."

Four weeks to the day after Hurricane Katrina rearranged the Tigers' football calendar, just as she destroyed the geographic landscape of the Gulf Coast and the lives of countless thousands, and just two days after Hurricane Rita washed ashore causing similar havoc in southwest Louisiana, the folks who came here had found a friend.

LSU football.

Minds that had been numbed by back-to-back natural catastrophes could, for a few hours at least, rest and recreate the atmosphere LSU football fans know best.

Generators that had been, in some cases, life-sustaining tools days before were being put to other uses: powering portable stoves cooking Louisiana comfort food or chilling refrigerators filled with mind-numbing nectars.

"This has been tough," said Metairie resident Mark Hocke, formerly a student at Tulane and an assistant football coach at Jesuit High School in New Orleans. Hocke - who relocated to Baton Rouge to stay with friends and enroll at LSU, which gave students the day off Monday so that the campus could be cleaned of debris left by Rita - was enjoying the free time leading up to the Tigers' game against Tennessee.

"This is nice to have a chance to go to the game. But, other than that, it's crazy. I guess we've just got to keep a smile on our faces," he said.

After Hurricane Katrina pushed the Sept. 3 season opener against North Texas into November and this past weekend's storm delayed the game against Tennessee to Monday, football-starved party-goers are more eager than ever to uncork their pent-up frustrations.

Recreational vehicles began arriving in surrounding parking lots Sunday, about 25 hours before Monday night's scheduled 6:30, nationally televised kickoff.

Tigers fans gathered hours before the start of the LSU-Tennessee game on Monday to enjoy good company, beverages and, perhaps most importantly, food. Baton Rouge resident Gary Glackletter, left, who played at LSU from 1973-77, and Darren Campbell took care of the food end on large barbecue pits that held a wide sampling of Louisiana delicacies.

Former Saints cornerback Vince Buck was walking through campus with a friend, Kernell Goudia, of Marrero. Buck was on his way to meet former Saints teammate and ex-Tennessee Volunteer J.J. McCleskey, who now owns a construction business in New Orleans called 44 Builders, after McCleskey's old professional jersey number.

Buck, who spent two weeks after Katrina living in powerless East Jefferson Hospital where his wife is an employment specialist, was arranging a business meeting with Goudia and McCleskey. Goudia lost the roof on his home.

"But this is nice to be able to relax," said Buck, whose Kenner home was unaffected, though his Veterans Boulevard transmission business was flooded. "This is my first time here, and it's wild already, and we haven't even gotten to the party yet. This will be great for a whole lot of people."

Even the few Tennessee fans who trekked here from Knoxville were sympathetic to the plight of Louisianians who had been doubly affected by the wicked hand of Mother Nature.

Sitting alone outside his RV in a parking lot across from the southeast corner of the stadium, Knoxville resident George Luallan sipped a cold beverage, shaking his head at what he witnessed on his 800-mile journey that took him through some of the hardest hit areas in Mississippi.

"I couldn't believe what I saw," he said, the orange-and-white Tennessee flag on his vehicle looking starkly out of place, swallowed by purple and gold. "I didn't want to see New Orleans.

"And you know, if they weren't playing Tennessee, I'd hope they'd win. But I didn't drive 800 miles to pull for the other team. But I wish these folks a lot of good luck. Whatever happens, they deserve it."

Southern Miss eager to begin C-USA play

Tulane senior is top special teams player

From wire reports

Two hurricanes forced two postponements and led to lots of idle time for Southern Miss. Now, the Golden Eagles are looking forward to getting back to football.

"There's not much you can do about it. You just adjust your plans and you keep a positive attitude," Southern Miss coach Jeff Bower said Monday. "We've prepared for two games that we didn't play, but you know that we'll eventually play those games. I think the players have handled it well, and we gave them some time off to keep them mentally fresh."

Southern Miss (1-1) is preparing for its twice-delayed Conference USA opener. Hurricane Katrina forced the postponement of the Golden Eagles' game Sept. 4 against Tulane, and last week's trip to Houston was rescheduled when Hurricane Rita approached the Louisiana-Texas Gulf Coast. Southern Miss plays East Carolina (1-2) this week.

TULANE'S LUCAS HONORED: Tulane senior Sean Lucas was selected Conference USA Special Teams Player of the Week after helping the Green Wave to a 31-10 victory over SMU in both team's C-USA opener.

In his first game as Tulane's primary punt-returner, Lucas gained 74 yards on three returns. His biggest play came with 3:52 remaining in the second quarter when he returned a punt 47 yards to the SMU 24. Five plays later, Matt Forte ran it home from 12 yards out for a 14-0 Green Wave advantage.

Lucas, however, suffered a bruised thigh and did not return. He is questionable for this weekend's game.

VANDY PLAYER SHOT: Vanderbilt wide receiver George Smith was shot in the arm and two teammates were injured last weekend at a party at a university apartment building, a school spokeswoman said.

Smith, a redshirt freshman, was shot in the arm early Sunday by someone who is not a university student, school spokeswoman Melanie Moran said. He was taken to Vanderbilt Hospital, was treated and released.

Nashville and university police are investigating the incident and no arrests have been made.

The shooting came hours after Vanderbilt beat Division I-AA Richmond 37-13 and improved to 4-0 for the first time since 1984.

Smith has seven catches for 48 yards and a touchdown this season.

Freshman defensive end Derrius Dowell and redshirt freshman safety Reshard Langford sustained minor cuts and were also treated and released from Vanderbilt Hospital, Moran said.

MCNEESE GAME POSTPONED: Southern Utah's game at McNeese State on Saturday in Lake Charles has been postponed indefinitely because of the aftermath of Hurricane Rita.

The schools were hoping to reschedule the Division I-AA game, Southern Utah sports information director Neil Gardner said.

Southern Utah and McNeese State both are scheduled to be off Oct. 8, so that is a possibility if the schools can agree on a place to play.

MEMPHIS QB HURT: Memphis quarterback Will Hudgens broke his right leg in last weekend's game at Tulsa, three weeks after the Tigers' original starter broke his leg in the opener.

Hudgens broke his fibula and damaged a ligament late in the fourth quarter in the 37-31 overtime loss Saturday night, a team official said. Hudgens became the starter after Patrick Byrne broke his right fibula and tibia in the Tigers' first series against Mississippi on Sept. 5.

Defense carrying Green Wave

TULANE, from C-1

350 yards. Tulane has gone from near-worst (93rd in the NCAA in total defense last season) to first. It is 21st in rushing defense (75 yards per game) and first in passing defense (86.0).

Scelfo said the defense, which entered the season with high expectations, now has more to play for.

"It's a level of expectation that the defensive team has accepted," Scelfo said. "That's the challenge every week. They put the bar out there in the first game and they went above the bar (against Southern Methodist) and they're going to have to continue their level of play."

With six seniors starting on defense, Scelfo said he won't have to say or do anything to motivate the players.

"I don't think there's any question they know what's at stake. There's some good leadership on defense and the linebackers have a lot of pride," Scelfo said. "They've seen some bad days (in past seasons), but overall, I think they're going to get the defensive line to raise their level of play.

"When you put a goal out there like that, I think it's going to challenge them every day in practice to become better game players."

While it has been some time since Tulane's defense has provided Scelfo with sterling back-to-back performances, the seventh-year Green Wave coach said it isn't the first time one of his teams has played so well. He said the 2002 team, which won the Hawaii Bowl in Honolulu, was the last one to turn in the kind of effort he has witnessed the past two weeks. That team was also filled with seniors.

The play of the defense definitely stuck out in Saturday's 31-10 victory over SMU, but Scelfo said it wasn't the only area that left him feeling good.

"The lack of penalties and mistakes we made in the first two games was very encouraging," he said. "I think we took care of the football on offense."

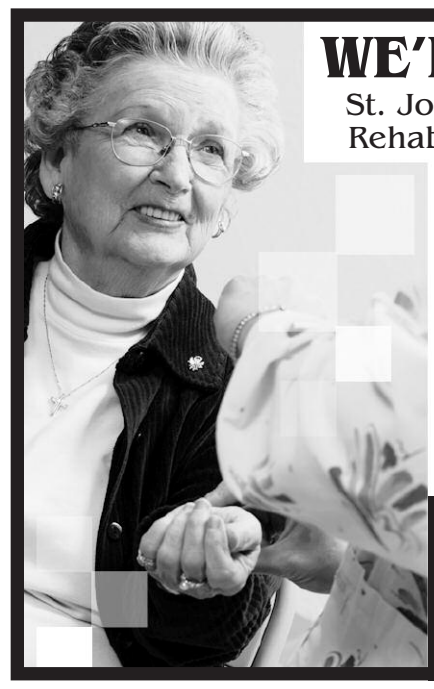
He dismissed the 20-minute edge in time of possession the Green Wave held over SMU, but said the 24-10 advantage in first downs was another matter.

"That's a stat that's very, very important," he said of the first downs. "Getting first downs, keeping the chains moving, that's what our offense is all about."

Scelfo said the offense is still a concern, but believes it is making progress.

"I think it's a little bit farther along in the passing game than I thought it would be, but we haven't been healthy on the offensive line," he said.

Left tackle Chris McGee and left guard Matt Traina have been banged up a little bit, limiting their effectiveness when they're in the game. McGee suffered an ankle sprain in the season opener against Mississippi State, and reinjured it on the first offensive play against SMU.



"McGee played at probably 60 percent Saturday," Scelfo said.

The Wave's running game, which netted 87 yards against Mississippi State, was a much more productive against SMU, finishing with 144 yards. As Tulane gets deeper into the season, Scelfo said, opponents will realize the Wave's passing game is capable of inflicting as much damage as its running game and will back off.

"We don't have the big-play capabilities right now, but I think we'll have it as the season progresses," Scelfo said. "(Mississippi State) knew we were young at receiver and hadn't had any breakout guys. Now, when people look at the tape and see Preston (Brown), Damarcus (Davis) and Bubba (Terranova) out there, they're not going to be able to do that. I think that's going to help the running game."

Rock 'n' Bowl's Johnny Blancher hunkers down in Lafayette, making plans for the future

By Keith Spera
Music writer

If you called up the Mid-City Lanes Rock 'n' Bowl Web site in Katrina's immediate aftermath, it was barren. No schedule, no online store, no accolades, no photos of pretty young bartenders in cropped pink, 1950s-style roller girl tops.

Just a simple, defiant declaration, an old slogan now more meaningful than ever: Rock 'n' Bowl will never die.

On Sept. 13, proprietor John Blancher paid his first post-Katrina visit to the bowling alley at the corner of Tulane and Carrollton, which opened in 1941 in an area that was a virtual ghost town until he transformed it into one of New Orleans' most beloved music venues.

A foot of water still stood in the parking lot; he spotted a minnow, and had seen dead mullets on the nearby interstate. The floodwaters had topped out at 8 feet, not enough to reach up the stairs to the second-floor bowling alley.

Humans, however, had wreaked more havoc than the storm.

"I was looted," Blancher said. "They busted the front door, then busted the jukebox, the video poker machines, all the video games. They busted the office door down."

He salvaged computer and payroll records from the office. When he left, he propped a life-size cut-out of the late zydeco giant Beau Jocque at the top of the stairs. Should looters return and peep in the door, the hulking silhouette may at least give them pause.

"I've got Beau Jocque watching over Rock 'n' Bowl," he said.

New Orleans family stars in 'The Amazing Race,' then comes home to Katrina

DAVE WALKER
On the Air

To the Schroeder family of New Orleans, the amazing experience of participating in "The Amazing Race," the Emmy Award-winning CBS reality series that launches its new season with a two-hour premiere at 8 tonight, seems like a long, long time ago.

After completing taping of the competitive globe-trot, which this season tweaks its formula by pitting 10 families in a race for a $1 million, the Schroeders returned to their lives in New Orleans to await their prime-time debut.

Dad Mark is an architect. Wife and stepmom Char is a hotel public relations director. Daughter Stassi, a senior at Mount Carmel Academy. Son Hunter, a freshman at Brother Martin.

Enter Katrina.

After loading a few things in their "Amazing Race" luggage, the Schroeders evacuated toward Shreveport, where they'd planned to ride out the storm with new friends - and "Amazing Race" foes - the Rogers family.

"We stuffed our bags with a couple of changes of clothes like everybody else and started heading

The Schroeder family of New Orleans, including Mark, his wife Char, and children Stassi and Hunter, thought that their first appearance on national TV would be tonight's 'The Amazing Race' season premiere. Instead, this morning, CBS' 'The Early Show' is set to broadcast a segment of them getting a first look at their damaged home.

Where nudity meets normalcy

The strippers are back on Bourbon, and we can all be thankful for that

Even at the End of Days, there will be lap-dancing.

Over the weekend, while a desolate, desperate city plunged into darkness and the waters rose again in the Rita Aftermath, and while a population spread across the nation watched new horrors with churning guts on TV, a strip club opened on Bourbon Street.

The symbolism of this event can hardly be overstated.

The Saints are gone. The Hornets are gone. Zephyr Field is a staging area for choppers to go find dead people.

No college hoops. No movie theaters, no Swamp Fest, no Voodoo Fest. No horses running at the Fairgrounds. No line for Friday lunch at Galatoire's.

But there are topless women hanging upside down from brass poles at a place called Deja Vu. Gaudiness, flesh, neon and bad recorded music have returned to one small outpost on the Boulevard of Broken Dreams, and if that's not one small step towards normalcy — at least as that term is defined in the Big Uneasy — then I don't know what is.

There were about 100 guys in there Saturday night, all of them with very, very short hair, which is basically what everyone around here who's not a journalist has these days.

Exactly how a posse of exotic dancers were smuggled into town during the most severe lockdown in this city since the hurricane crises began, well, I don't know.

Inexplicable things seem to be the norm around here these days.

When I walk down the street one day and some rumpled grifter tells me he knows where I got my shoes, then I guess I'll know we're fully on our way home. (Of course, I could be cynical and tasteless and tell the guy: I got them at Wal-Mart on Tchoupitoulas like everyone else, but that would be cynical and tasteless.)

And speaking of tasteless: This is not a topic I want to delve to deeply into, but someone has to call out the demagogic ministers who have used Katrina's destruction to preach the message that God was tired of this city's libertine ways and decided to clean house.

Let me roll at you some snippets of wisdom that have been widely distributed on the Internet from Rev. Bill Shanks, pastor of New Covenant Fellowship in Metairie: "New Orleans now is Mardi Gras free. New Orleans now is free of Southern Decadence and the sodomites, the witchcraft workers, false religion — it's free of all of those things now. God simply, I believe, in His mercy purged all of that stuff out of there — and now we're going to start over again."

Well, almost. It's an interesting interpretation, to be sure, and Shanks is not the only man of the cloth to make such claims. No doubt, it's a good message for the evangelical business.

KREWE OF KATRINA

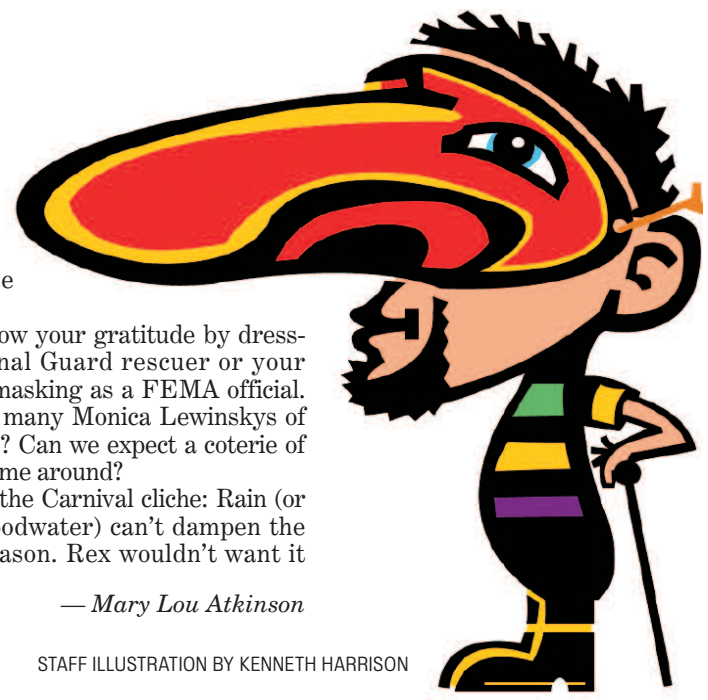
Someday we will have our lives back. Then what will we wear for our Mardi Gras costumes?

There's some therapeutic value in taking a break from day-to-day reality to think ahead to the normal times around the calendar corner, when we can get together again with friends at the drop of a phone call. When we can have birthday bashes and crawfish boils and tailgate parties.



But the biggest party of all is Mardi Gras — and everyone agrees There Must Be a Mardi Gras 2006. By then, these dirge days, as President Bush called them, will be behind us and we can show that we still have a sense of humor as well as pride in our ability to overcome — even thumb our noses at — adversity.

So take a few moments to mentally fast-forward a few months and consider how you would costume for Carnival as a family of water bottles and MREs. For an individual statement, you might don a helicopter headpiece and a purple, green and gold life vest and put a rhinestone-studded inner tube around your waist. Accessorize with the traditional white rubber boots.

You could show your gratitude by dressing as a National Guard rescuer or your frustration by masking as a FEMA official. Remember the many Monica Lewinskys of a few years ago? Can we expect a coterie of Katrinas next time around?

Don't forget the Carnival cliche: Rain (or in this case, floodwater) can't dampen the spirit of the season. Rex wouldn't want it any other way.

north," Char said.

But then the Schroeders accidentally bumped their vehicles together in Covington.

Both cars disabled, the family hunkered down in a nearby home till Katrina passed, then proceeded to Shreveport for 10 days (in a newly purchased cheapo van). They then headed back to Baton Rouge, where they've since struggled to settle school situations for Stassi and Hunter.

Char, meanwhile, has been working at a satellite office for her employer.

"Helping to find employees, guests, luggage, you name it," she said. "Working around the clock."

They'd seen all the terrible helicopter footage on TV in Shreveport, so they knew their house near Lake Pontchartrain was swamped by floodwater.

A crew from CBS's "The Early Show" recently followed them into the city for their first look at the wreckage, a segment that is scheduled to air this morning.

It should make for great TV, at least for everybody watching who can't relate too intimately to the Schroeders' situation.

"Hundreds of dead fish on our lawn," said Char. "Mud filled everything. It's a complete loss."

On the brighter side, Mark's downtown office was undamaged by Katrina and Char's expects the hotel industry to thrive during the city's recovery. The Schroeders already have an apartment lined up in Uptown.

"It's an awful thing to say, but this is really going to make New Orleans much better," Mark said. "It's going to make people really appreciate the city and really want to be part of the city.

Mark, Sassi, Char and Hunter Schroeder of New Orleans race toward a new clue in the family-themed season premiere of 'The Amazing Race' at 8 tonight on CBS and WWL-Channel 4.

"Six months from now, I think the people of New Orleans will be New Orleans' greatest generation."

Not long after the Schroeders arrived in Baton Rouge, a delivery driver arrived at Char's temporary office.

The Rogers family of Shreveport — Denny, Renee, Brittney and Brock — had called ahead to say that there had been a collection taken among the other "Amazing Race" families.

"So we walked outside and met the man," said Char. "It was a car full of gift baskets, cards, letters, clothes and checks from the other families. A carload, an absolute carload."

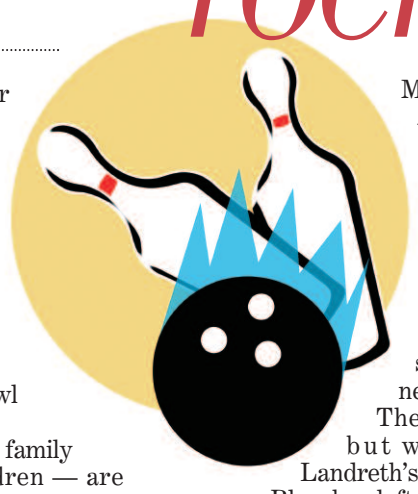
The family's fierce competition with the people who sent the relief gifts "seems like a long time ago," said Char, who added that the grueling experience of filming the TV show has prepared the family to rough it back in New Orleans, with no water, no electricity.

"What (the show) also created was an extended family," she said of her competitors on the reality TV show.

"I never thought (that) was even possible," Char said. "If they're not calling every day, they're e-mailing."

Char said she has held herself together during most of this Katrina-Rita ordeal, but lost it when the gift-mobile pulled up.

It's a feeling that's probably familiar to anybody who has experienced unexpected kindness from afar during the past few weeks.



"I just broke down in tears," she said. "That was one of the very few times I've felt extremely overwhelmed. Overwhelmed in a very wonderful sense."

Rock 'n' Bowl rocks on

BOWL, from C-1

To anyone who has ever observed Blancher drinking and dancing and stripping off his shirt to sing with the band, this much is clear: He enjoys his work more than most. Katrina accomplished what his wife never could: It forced him to take off an entire weekend for the first time since he opened Rock 'n' Bowl 17 years ago.

He and 11 members of his family — kids, in-laws, grandchildren — are staying with his wife's sister in Lafayette. In the past two weeks, he's scouted locations for a new Rock 'n' Bowl along the I-10 corridor. He envisions it as the anchor of a New Orleans-themed complex of iconic restaurants and nightclubs, a haven for expatriates and locals in whatever burg is fortunate enough to land it. A bit of Big Easy fun on the bayou, perhaps.

Not that Blancher has given up on New Orleans. He thinks he could reopen the original location next spring, especially if the New Orleans Jazz & Heritage Festival is staged. "If Jazzfest can pull it off in New Orleans, then Rock 'n' Bowl could open at that time, too," he said.

But Katrina and its aftermath revealed serious flaws in the city's infrastructure, deeper and more profound than he had imagined. New Orleans, he fervently believes, must be completely rebuilt, starting with "super-levees" and a revitalized port, airport and road system. Schools, too.

"God's given us the opportunity to do it better," he said.

On Sept. 10, he announced as much in front of 5,000 people gathered at Lafayette's Parc International for "Band Together," a benefit concert for the Red Cross. The best of Acadiana – Michael and David Doucet, Zachary Richard, Sonny Landreth, Roddie Romero – performed.

After Richard's set, Blancher – wearing a monogrammed, peach Rock 'n' Bowl bowling shirt – commandeered the microphone. With his son Johnny at his side, he preached about the need for new levees and schools. The audience applauded politely, but was clearly eager to hear Landreth's slide guitar.

Blancher left the stage. He swept up a Rock 'n' Bowl bartender, a Lafayette native, for a dance as Romero crooned Randy Newman's "Louisiana 1927." They're trying to wash us away, indeed.

When not working in exile, Blancher has better acquainted himself with southwest Louisiana, home to the zydeco bands he's long championed. He finally visited the Whiskey River dancehall on the Atchafalaya Basin. "I'm getting to see all these places I've always heard about," he said.

And he's running into New Orleans expatriates and Rock 'n' Bowl fans everywhere in Lafayette. Well, almost everywhere.

"I go to the bank, I go to a restaurant, I go to a supermarket, I go to a bar, and people know me," he said. "On Sunday, I went to church. It was packed – and I didn't know a soul. No one."

He laughs.

"I don't know what that says about my friends, or me."

Regardless, he is Rock 'n' Bowl wherever he goes. Now more than ever.

The naked truth

ROSE, from C-1

Of course, try telling some poor guy down in St. Bernard Parish who has never heard of Southern Decadence and who goes to Bible study every Wednesday night that he lost his house and his job and his grandmother died in a flooded nursing home because God was angry at a bunch of bearded guys in dresses over on Dumaine Street.

Collateral damage, I guess. The question that arises, of course, is that if Shanks' prophecy is true, how come Plaquemines, St. Bernard, the East and Lakeview are gone, but the French Quarter is still standing?

I'd suggest that there are those who have confused meteorology with mythology, global warming with just plain hot air, but that might be cynical and tasteless.

And I'll try to leave that stuff where it belongs — in the French Quarter, where the craziest patchwork of people ever gathered on this planet are cobbling back together a strange and mind-boggling Twilight Zone of what it once was.

File that one under: Only in New Orleans.

Clausen's second half much better than Pelini's

PETER FINNEY

The first half belonged to Bo Pelini.

The game belonged to Rick Clausen.

In the final 30 minutes, as Clausen, LSU's gift to the Tennessee Vols, began throwing strike after strike, you could almost see the blood drain from Les Miles, not to mention the 91,986 on hand to welcome the start of a new football era.

For anyone with no rooting interest, this was a great story.

A quarterback who started one game during his only season in purple and gold came out of the bullpen to turn Tiger Stadium into the quietest place in the U.S.

It was as if Clausen spotted his former team a 21-0 lead, then dinked the Tigers to a slow death on the way to a 30-27 overtime victory Monday night.

For the home team, it was torture.

For the winning quarterback, it was kismet.

This was really a story in two parts, two halves actually.

When Hurricane Katrina forced the Tigers to play Miles' opening game as LSU coach at Arizona State, and Miles' team responded with a dramatic 35-31 win, the thrill of victory was tempered by a defense that gave up 560 yards, the biggest chunk in the air.

Pelini, the defensive coordinator Miles brought in to handle the defense, was a man on the spot.

Could the Tigers defend more effectively against a Tennessee team in the hands of "super sophomore" Erik Ainge?

For 30 minutes, Pelini's defense was close to outstanding, pressuring Ainge, forcing him into bad decisions, eventually chasing him to the bench when he went brain dead and threw an interception to give LSU a three-touchdown lead.

It all began when cornerback Jesse Daniels ran down Ainge from behind and forced a fumble. After one play, a 19-yard run by Joseph Addai, it was 7-0.

It was 14-0 in the second quarter when the Tigers went 70 yards in four plays. And it was 21-0 when Ainge was pressured in the end zone and threw a wild interception into the hands of linebacker Kenneth Hollis.

27 Tennessee comeback in overtime.

The stunning win keeps the 2-1 Vols' SEC title aspirations alive into October, at least.

Finally, Clausen, the former LSU depth-chart casualty turned transfer, shined underneath Tiger Stadium's elusive lights, filling his fairy tale with 196 yards and a touchdown pass.

"I don't know if there has ever been a better story than Rick Clausen," Tennessee coach Phillip Fulmer said. "I really don't, in all of college football. He's a tough-minded guy. He obviously had to handle the disappointment at the beginning of the week, and he handled it with toughness and class.

"His teammates rallied around him, and obviously him coming in and getting done what he got done was just unbelievable."

Hoping to establish some sort of stability for his 10th-ranked Vols at the quarterback position, Fulmer gave Erik Ainge the nod of approval after his clean-up work in a 16-7 loss to Florida. He was the guy. No doubt about it.

But all it took was a couple of glances at a tilted, 21-0 scoreboard for Fulmer to change his tune. Enter Clausen.

Ainge's final completion landed in the welcoming hands of LSU linebacker Kenneth Hollis - an ill-advised, safety-avoiding heave that Hollis escorted across the goal line with 6:55 remaining until halftime. As the ball fluttered, Cameron Vaughn tossed Ainge wrestling-style into the upright padding. Though not injured, Ainge was replaced on the ensuing possession.

In hindsight, LSU wasted a critical opportunity to add to its huge lead as quarterback JaMarcus Russell failed to get out of bounds on a second-down scramble deep in Tennessee territory, allowing the first-half clock to expire.

"I was in the mode of playing," Russell said. "I really wasn't thinking about getting out of bounds."

Clausen chipped into LSU's comfortable advantage, connecting with Brent Smith on an eight-yard slant midway through the third quarter. Conversely, LSU's offense - occasionally explosive in the first half - hibernated for the remaining 30 minutes-plus, compiling a meager 56 yards, leaving the stage clear for Clausen's heroics.

"It was a freaking joke," defensive tackle Kyle Williams said after the fourth-ranked Tigers fell to 1-1. "It wasn't anything they did. Total breakdown. To have a 21-point lead on a team like that and to come out and be as complacent as we were in the beginning (of the second half). ... In the beginning we were fired up, ready to go. I don't know what happened. ...We played like a joke."

Clausen directed scoring drives of 13, two and nine plays in the fourth quarter to force overtime and another coin toss.

LSU's lone extra possession stalled after one first down. Colt David - the Tigers' extra-point specialist - kicked his first collegiate field goal (31 yards), providing a temporary 27-24 lead. Clausen completed his only overtime attempt, a 10-yard pass to Riggs good for a first down to the Tigers' 15.

From there, Fulmer stayed simple, handing off to Riggs (89 yards on 27 carries) three consecutive plays, moving to the one. After a failed quarterback sneak, Riggs overpowered Tigers defenders for the winning touchdown.

"(My family) said, 'You got to stay. You never know what might happen,' " Clausen recalled. "I'm so thankful to those guys and the 70 guys in the locker room. Those are the guys that kept me going and their faith in me. I will always be indebted to those guys."

Game takes horror-story turn

BATON ROUGE — Somewhere around the middle of the feel-good tale, the outcome drastically changed — like Stephen King yanked the pen from Dr. Seuss and took over the writing.

Right there on Easy Street, with the sun shining and birds harmonizing and nary a vehicle present to impede progress, LSU drove into a Hummer-sized pothole. Then the Tigers exited the vehicle, limping, and promptly slipped on a banana peel, wrenched their backs and ended up in traction.

JOHN DESHAZIER

At least, that must be what Monday night felt like for Les Miles.

LSU's first-year coach watched his team look helpless in his long-awaited, long-anticipated debut at Tiger Stadium, where magic routinely is conjured at night but couldn't be hocus-pocused when LSU needed it most against Tennessee.

From a 21-0 first-half lead to a 30-27 overtime loss, the Tigers unraveled in Miles' home opener.

"We needed to be on the field," Miles said when asked about coaching his first game at Death Valley. "We need games. We looked like we were playing our second game."

Tennessee, for the better part of three quarters, looked like it was playing its first game in about three years. LSU was headed for a romp and Miles was poised to have accolades heaped upon him so thoroughly, he'd have needed a U-Haul to carry them home.

And still, he does deserve some credit for managing to help put his team in such a position after the upheaval it has endured this month.

It's impossible to overstate how unsettling, distracting and discombobulated the season has been for the Tigers (1-1). Games have been rescheduled and postponed, played in venues and on nights they weren't supposed to be played, forcing the Tigers to become experts at revving and tempering their enthusiasm, often on the same day.

It's not the way anyone wants to operate a program, especially not in his first season, especially not when continuity is such a staple of coaching and the growth of a program.

But that said, these Tigers have exhibited warts, even in victory. Monday night they idled when they should have been on the move. Started, but didn't finish the job.

"We're all disappointed," Miles said. "We're all miserable. More than anything, I think it was a loss of poise."

And if that was the case - and there certainly appeared to be no reason to debate the coach's word on that - then there's no pretty way to spin it.

A 2-0 start, with both victories over ranked teams, fell to the ground and slithered away before LSU could grasp it. The No. 4 ranking goes with it. LSU must claw its way back up the poll, victory by victory.

"We played well to a point," Miles said. "We came out the second half and lost our push. We couldn't stop them and did not move the football on offense.

"When you're into your second game, you wish you would have played with the ability to finish. And we didn't. And that's why we lost that game."

Now they must deal with a short week. Saturday is another game, this one against Mississippi State on the road - and not like against Arizona State, where the Tigers were named the "home" team because they'd been displaced by Hurricane Katrina.

Mississippi State isn't a powerhouse team by any means. But then, Tennessee didn't appear to be, either.

"The thing that we have to do is not dwell on this game," Miles said.

He won't have to. LSU fans will do that for him.

And the way they're feeling today, after a 21-point lead became a three-point loss, is a lot more Stephen King than Dr. Seuss.

LSU buried under pile of mistakes

Tennessee takes advantage to rally in second half

By Jim Kleinpeter
Staff writer

BATON ROUGE — In a season without the stomach punch of twin hurricanes, maybe the multitude of mistakes LSU made Monday night are blown away in the early season wind.

But there they were, a pair of first-half fumbles that killed potential scoring drives, a mental error that cost LSU at least three points, some untimely penalties that kept Tennessee breathing and a killer interception that ignited the Vols to a stunning 30-27 victory in overtime.

While building a 21-0 lead, LSU looked so in control that it seemed the first half mistakes could be weathered.

The Tigers only added to them.

LSU coach Les Miles said the scattering of the first three games, all of which have been rescheduled in some manner, may have taken a toll.

"We needed to be on the field," Miles said in his postgame address. "We needed to play games. We looked like we were playing our second game. We're not playing very sharply."

Quarterback JaMarcus Russell, the hero of LSU's last-minute victory at Arizona State, made three crucial mistakes. His fumble at the Tennessee 28-yard line cost the Tigers a chance to add to an early lead and knock the Vols out early. Teammate Joseph Addai did the same thing in the second quarter, fumbling the ball away to Tennessee at the Vols' 35-yard line.

Just before the half, the clock ran out on LSU when Russell tried to scramble and was tackled at the Tennessee five-yard line. LSU had no timeouts left but would have had a shot at a short field-goal attempt had Russell run out of bounds or thrown an incompletion.

"I think he understood an incompletion there and we kick a three-pointer," Miles said. "A young quarterback, two-minute drill, it's unfortunate when these things happen."

Russell said he wasn't thinking about running out of bounds, just making a play.

"I was trying to make something happen," he said.

Russell's interception on third-and-eight from the LSU 22-yard line came with the Tigers clinging to a 24-14 lead. In search of Early Doucet on a corner route, Russell fired a pass right into the hands of Tennessee's Jonathan Hefney, who returned the ball 22 yards to the LSU two-yard line.

"He was down in my vision and he dropped back, jumped up and got it," Russell said. "I didn't see him."

It wasn't just the offense, which was ineffective throughout the second half. The defense allowed the Vols to stay alive with an excruciating performance on Tennessee's second touchdown drive. On two consecutive third-down plays, the Tigers handed the Vols a first down with a penalty. Chevis Jackson interfered with a Tennessee receiver on third-and-seven, and Claude Wroten lined up offsides on third-and-five. Later in the drive, Tennessee quarterback Rick Clausen converted a third-and-15. The Vols finally scored on fourth-and-goal from the one.

"I think it's still early," said offensive tackle Andrew Whitworth. "The second game is a tough game to say we shouldn't be making those mistakes, especially against a tough opponent. We've struggled even later than this.

"Against Western Illinois in the national championship season, it was 13-7 in the third quarter. It's going to happen. It's something a mature team with poise is going to take care of and I think if we're a game later in the season, maybe this doesn't happen. We've got to put it on ourselves."

LSU acknowledges four stricken states

Tigers-Vandy game set for ESPN2 slot

By Ted Lewis
Staff Writer

BATON ROUGE — Four LSU athletes representing four states affected by Hurricanes Katrina and Rita carried their state flags on the field Monday during pregame ceremonies.

Public address announcer Dan Borne then told the crowd, "For over a century LSU football has brought together every walk of life, from every corner of Louisiana and from across our great Gulf Coast.

"Tonight, in Tiger Stadium, is one of the most significant gatherings of Louisianians in the history of our state. This evening, we reflect on the loss of life and the devastation we have suffered.

"But we also look with pride to our future, for it is through our prayerful determination and our perseverance that we will rebuild and we will prosper again.

"Tonight, this historic stadium is lit in gold and stands as a beacon of promise for our state and for its people. Because this evening we vow to move forward under a common flag, because this is LSU football. And this is Tiger Stadium. And this is Louisiana!"

The athletes representing the states were Alexis Rather of Mississippi (women's golf), Matt Guy of Alabama (men's track), April Burkholder of Texas (gymnastics) and Khalilah Mitchell of Louisiana (women's basketball).

MISSED OPPORTUNITY: LSU quarterback JaMarcus Russell violated a basic axiom of: When you have the ball in field goal range and are out of time outs at the end of the half, don't tuck the ball and run.

The Tigers were at the Tennessee 14 with eight seconds left when Russell, forced to scramble, chose to keep the ball rather than throw it away. He was tackled at the Tennessee five, short of a first down and far from getting out of bounds, costing LSU a short field-goal attempt.

TV UPDATE: LSU's Oct. 8 game against Vanderbilt will air on ESPN2 with a 6 p.m. kickoff. CBS exercised its option to televise the Georgia-Tennessee game on that date.

LSU's game Saturday against Mississippi State will be shown only on TigerVision with a 1:30 p.m. kickoff.

Cox Sports will replay Monday's game at 7 p.m. Wednesday and noon Thursday.

ALL THINGS CONSIDERED: Playing the Tennessee game on Monday night after Hurricane Rita postponed the Saturday kickoff was the best course of action, according to LSU senior associate athletic director Dan Radakovich.

"We could have played on Sunday night, but nobody knew that on Thursday when the decision had to be made," he said. "So the extra day was the best thing to do."

The cleanup on campus was still ongoing Monday, but Radakovich said the efforts could have been concentrated around Tiger Stadium on Sunday.

The only alternative to playing Monday was Dec. 3, which would have pushed the SEC Championship game a week later.

But that would have created a conflict with a convention in Atlanta, which already has been moved from New Orleans. It also would have forced a week's delay in determining the BCS bowls.

DID YOU NOTICE? SEC commissioner Mike Slive, who made the call on playing the game on Monday, was in attendance. . . . Ali Highsmith started ahead of Jason Spadoni at linebacker. . . . Kicker Colt David had said he was going to change numbers after the Arizona State game instead of sharing No. 6 with linebacker Mario Stevenson. However, David was again wearing No. 6 Monday. . . . Tennessee quarterback Eric Ainge's first four passes were incomplete. . . . Russell's one-yard touchdown sneak in the second quarter was the second scoring run of his career. The first came a year and a day earlier against Mississippi State. . . . Chris Jackson's 42-yard field goal in the third quarter was his sixth consecutive successful kick, a personal best. . . . Skyler Green, the NCAA's punt return leader, returned five for a 22.6-yard average. Green averaged only 9.7 yards per return in 2004 after getting 18.5 per return in 2003. . . . For the second consecutive game, LSU was penalized 11 times. Three of the penalties came during Tennessee's second touchdown drive, two of which gave the Vols' first downs.

EXTRA POINTS: Monday's game was the latest LSU home opener since Sept. 30, 1961, when the Tigers defeated Texas A&M 16-7. LSU's latest home opener came in the national championship season of 1958, when LSU defeated Hardin-Simmons 20-6 on Oct. 4. . . . This was the first night game not on a Saturday at Tigers Stadium since Nov. 22, 1973, when LSU lost to Alabama, 21-7. LSU traditionally plays Arkansas on the Friday afternoon after Thanksgiving. . . . The game was the first between Top 10 teams in Tiger Stadium since No. 10 LSU played No. 7 Georgia in 2003. Prior to that, in 1987, No. 4 LSU met No. 7 Ohio State. . . . After playing next year in Knoxville, LSU and Tennessee will not meet again until 2010.

Tigers must weather collapse in second half

FINNEY, from C-9

For Tennessee, it was the turning point of the game.

In came Clausen and, eventually, out came your latest purple-and-gold crying towels.

Clausen, whose lone start at LSU was a brief one against Ole Miss in 2002, not only fueled life into a dormant offense, he lit a fire under a Tennessee defense that began pressuring JaMarcus Russell into errant throws and bad decisions.

In the second half, Clausen got an assist from a Tigers defense that kept breaking down with a series of mental errors. Had wide open receivers not dropped a pass here, a pass there, Tennessee could have won this one in regulation, not sudden death.

It was anything but a memorable evening for Russell, after his dramatic winning, fourth-down throw against Arizona State.

In the first half, Russell killed a drive with a fumble at the Vols' 30. In the fourth quarter, he threw an interception that quickly cut LSU's lead to three points, in this case, an obvious death knell.

Could blowing a 21-point lead be any kind of death knell for a devastated Miles?

Of course not.

Miles has blown leads before, every coach has, that is, if he's been around long enough.

Yes, Pelini's defense is still a problem.

And, yes, an offense in the hands of Miles and coordinator Jimbo Fisher needs some kind of confidence boost after second-half miseries.

Just as football is a 60-miniute game, the SEC is not a one-game season.

For the moment, though, Rick Clausen, who has been in and out of the starting lineup throughout his college career, had one game Monday night, it happened to be a 30-minute game, to last him a lifetime.

BATON ROUGE — There's a reason why Tennessee has been the SEC's most consistent winner the past 15 years.

And there's another reason why the Volunteers' always-lofty goals, which seemed shattered at halftime Monday night, are alive today.

They both start with a "T."

"That's what the 'T' stands for — tradition," senior cornerback Jason Allen said during Tennessee's celebration of its 30-27, come-from-behind overtime victory against LSU. "It's stands for teamwork.

"We showed everybody what we're about tonight — and that's teamwork."

Tennessee, which started the season ranked No. 3, lost 16-7 at Florida last week. Another defeat would all but end the Vols' hopes of winning the SEC's Eastern Division and certainly put them out of contention for the national championship.

"We didn't play as well at Florida as we should have," said Tennessee coach Phillip Fulmer. "We helped them a lot down there.

"This game puts us back to having a chance in the league. We took a step towards that tonight."

Down 21-0 at halftime, the Vols didn't panic. In fact, Gerald Riggs Jr., who scored the winning touchdown, said there was little emotion in the locker room.

"Nothing much was said," he said. "We've been down before, but this is an experienced team.

"We knew we just had to settle down, execute our plays and not get too caught up in what the score was."

That enabled Tennessee to score on four of its first five possessions of the second half while holding LSU to 45 yards and a single field goal over the final two quarters of regulation.

Then, after holding LSU to another field goal in the Tigers' overtime possession, the Vols punched the ball across the goal line in six plays — five of which featured Riggs catching or carrying the ball.

"We knew when we got the ball back we were going to score," Riggs said. "Somehow, some way, we were going to make a play.

"After we had come back like that, we weren't going to be denied."

As effective as the Tennessee offense was in the second half, it got a huge lift from the defense in the third quarter when Jonathan Hefney picked off a pass by JaMarcus Russell at the LSU 28, returning to the 2-yard line.

Riggs scored two plays later to make it 24-21 with 7:15 left.

"I saw the quarterback looking at his man, and I was just standing there with my mouth wide open," Hefney said. "I still couldn't believe he threw the ball.

"You talk about fighting and never giving up and all that, but sometimes you're just in the right place at the right time."

Getting into an offensive rhythm was vital in the second half, Fulmer said, along with a stronger defensive effort.

"They bowed their necks there several times," he said. "Our defense said on Monday they were going to put the team on their shoulders and carry us.

"And darned if they didn't."

Losing Monday would have put Tennessee at 1-2 for the first time since 1994. The Vols lost their next game that season as well but won seven of their final eight.

However, 8-4 is not considered a successful season by Volunteer standards any more. This is a program used to winning at least 10 games and playing in January bowls.

Both would have been difficult to attain had Monday's outcome been different.

Riggs acknowledged that the stakes were high, but he said the team would not suffer a mental letdown Saturday against Ole Miss.

"You're not going to win or lose the whole season in one night," he said. "You go out there, make your plays and just take them one game at a time.

"That's what makes us Tennessee."

Broncos overpower Chiefs' revamped defense 30-10

Kansas City can't get going on offense against Denver

By Eddie Pells
AP Sports Writer

DENVER — Rod Smith, Mike Anderson and the Denver Broncos made the newfangled Kansas City defense seem a lot like the old one. And the vaunted Chiefs offense looked pretty lame, too.

Anderson ran for a 44-yard touchdown, and Smith became the first undrafted player in NFL history to reach 10,000 yards receiving Monday night as the Broncos handled Kansas City from start to finish in a 30-10 victory.

Jake Plummer went 13-of-18 for 152 yards — including a 12-yard touchdown pass to Smith — and ran for a score on fourth-and-goal from the 1, an efficient performance that was more than enough to blow out Trent Green and the Chiefs.

Green finally threw his first touchdown pass of the season with two minutes left, a 21-yard pass to Samie Parker. But the touchdown just helped Dick Vermeil avoid his worst loss as an NFL coach and the Chiefs avoid matching their worst loss in the 46-year history of this AFC West series.

Green had 27 touchdown passes last year for the NFL's most productive offense. The Chiefs (2-1) were anything but productive Monday night.

Priest Holmes rushed for 61 yards, and backfield mate Larry Johnson had 13 yards on eight carries.

Harassed by Gerard Warren and Courtney Brown — two members of Denver's revamped defensive line — Green finished 23-of-44 for 221 yards.

When the Broncos (2-1) weren't making Kansas City look bad, the Chiefs were doing it themselves. They finished with 118 yards in penalties, including eight infractions in the first half while the Broncos were cruising to a 20-0 lead.

The perennially soft Kansas City defense added players this season — most notably defensive backs Patrick Surtain and Sammy Knight and linebacker Kendrell Bell — and when the Chiefs allowed a total of 24 points in the first two games, it looked as if the fixes were working.

They took a big step backward against the Broncos, who finally started clicking after two rugged games to start the season.

Anderson, who has struggled since hurting his ribs in the first half of the opener against Miami, went through a huge hole untouched in the first quarter for his long score and a 10-0 lead.

The Broncos used Anderson to work the clock in the second half, and he finished with 98 yards on 20 carries.

Three plays after Anderson's touchdown, Brown recovered his second fumble of the season, and the Broncos scored right away, as Plummer threw to Smith at the back of the end zone for the 12-yard score.

Smith caught seven passes for 80 yards. He hit his milestone with a 19-yard catch in the third quarter, making him the 24th player to reach 10,000 yards. Five plays later, Plummer bootlegged in from a yard to give the Broncos a 27-3 lead.

Early in the fourth quarter, Smith took a rough hit from Knight after catching an 11-yard pass, but he walked off the field. He was diagnosed with a concussion and did not return. The Broncos also lost cornerback Champ Bailey to a hamstring injury in the second quarter.

Eugene, Destrehan shine in prime time

Wildcats score 38 points in first half, top South Lafourche

By Mike Strom
Staff writer

Destrehan found Monday night football much to its liking.

The unbeaten Wildcats rode the running and passing of Jai Eugene to score all of their points in the first half of a 38-7 non-district victory against South Lafourche at Destrehan.

Destrehan (3-0) and South Lafourche (0-2) were playing a rare Monday night game because of Saturday's strike of Hurricane Rita.

South Lafouche had not practiced since Wednesday because of a Rita-imposed evacuation of Lafourche Parish, and it showed. Destrehan led 14-0 after six plays from scrimmage, and 21-0 after 12 plays.

Eugene passed for two touchdowns and ran for two, and accounted for 208 yards in six series. The senior completed nine of 11 passes for 114 yards, with touchdowns covering 14 and 17 yards to Edwin Reed and Joshua Martin. Eugene also ran for scores of three and 79 yards and finished with 94 rushing yards on three carries.

"We played a great game," Eugene said. "We came out and put them away early. My offensive line was tremendous; they just did a hell of a job.

The coaches called great plays and we jelled together.

"I'd like to thank South Lafourche for playing. I know they've been through a lot. The hurricanes have been messing everything up, but I'm trying to keep my teammates focused."

Destrehan's defense, too, was focused, smothering the Tarpons in the first half, when South Lafourche gained 21 yards and committed three turnovers. The Wildcats forced four fumbles, recovered two and intercepted a pass. Defensive back Jerico Nelson scooped up an errant pitch by quarterback Korte Cheramie and returned the ball 10 yards for Destrehan's second touchdown on the game's sixth play. Defensive back Brandon Brexton also returned a first-quarter interception of a tipped pass 45 yards to set up Eugene's short scoring run.

Destrehan's Travis Brignac made all five extra-point attempts and a 25-yard field goal as time expired in the first half that gave the Wildcats a 38-0 lead.

Cheramie scored South Lafourche's lone touchdown on a seven-yard run against Destrehan reserves in the third quarter.

"My hat's off to these kids," said Destrehan coach Steve Robicheaux, whose team did not practice Friday or Saturday before a Sunday walk-through session. "It's a coach's nightmare not being able to prepare for a game. On Sunday night we still didn't know if we were going to play football. So there have been a lot of distractions. Our kids have been great through all of this. We just want to play football. (South Lafourche) took a big hit this week, but they wanted to play football, too."

Rebels get rare win over Rams

Riverside's Caesar runs for 257 yards, scores four TDs

By Lori Lyons

For the first time in a long time, the annual meeting of River Parish rivals Riverside and West St. John was competitive.

And for the first time since 2001, the Rebels won, taking a 51-20 non-district victory Monday night in Edgard.

It was the first non-district contest between the teams since 1996. West St. John, the defending Class 2A state champion that is competing in Class 1A this year, had won the past four meetings by a combined score of 161-27. And Monday night's game, postponed from Friday because of Hurricane Rita, went head-to-head against LSU's home game against Tennessee. That might have accounted for the sparse crowd at what is normally a standing-room-only event in the River Parishes.

The Rebels (3-0) had 440 yards, nearly all of it on the ground. Sophomore Jarid Caesar ran for 257 yards and four touchdowns on 22 carries. He scored on runs of nine, 29, 43, and 10 yards, and he had another run that covered 58 yards. He had 172 yards on 14 carries in the first half.

Riverside quarterback A.J. Delaneuville completed five of seven passes for 80 yards and one touchdown, to Lee Haydel — all in the first half. Andrew Herring ran for 49 yards and two touchdowns. Jordan Poirrer added a 26-yard field goal and converted four extra-points.

West St. John was hampered by turnovers. The Rams (0-3) lost four fumbles — three recovered by Riverside's Colling Yeargin. Jordan Poirrier and Tad Brack intercepted pases for the Rebels.

Rams quarterbacks Olajuwon Hall and Blaine Gautier combined to pass for 214 yards — Hall had 107 in the first half, and Gautier had 107 in the second. But Hall threw the Rams' only passing touchdown, a 12-yard strike to Tiarus Jenkins on the Rams' first possession.

But after that, Riverside took over. The Rebels scored 15 consecutive points and, after a nine-yard scoring run by West St. John's Tyren Johnson, the Rebels scored another 15 consecutive points to take a 30-14 halftime lead.

Riverside added a pair of touchdowns in the third quarter — a 21-yard run by Herring and a 43-yard run by Caesar.

After Josh Johnson scored to start the fourth quarter, Caesar scored on his final run of the game from 10-yards out.

Delay doesn't slow Wildcats in rout of Varnado

By Pierce W. Huff

St. James had a rare Monday night football game on its home field because of Hurricane Rita, which passed through Louisiana this past weekend.

Even with the extra days off the Wildcats, the top-ranked team in Class 2A, gained 454 yards, including 363 rushing, in a 42-6 victory against Varnado.

The game was scheduled for Friday, but was postponed to Sunday and later moved to Monday because of Rita.

Four St. James running backs rushed for more than 40 yards. Tramaine Charles led the team with 99 yards and one touchdown on six carries.

"We did a lot of good things tonight," St. James coach Rick Gaille said. "I thought we ran the ball pretty good inside and outside, and we spread the ball enough to where they couldn't key on one person."

St. James led 7-0 after it drove 64 yards on 10 plays on its first possession. The key play came when Varnado senior William Bellamy was penalized for running into St. James punter Terry Isom on fourth-and-six. Running back Tramaine Dapremont kept the drive alive with a three-yard run on the fourth-and-one play after the penalty. Four plays later, Dapremont scored on a four-yard run.

St. James increased its lead to 14-0 with 8:57 left in the first half when running back Luther Ambrose took an option pitch from quarterback Antonio Phillips and scampered around right end for a four-yard run. The play capped an eight-play, 44-yard drive.

The Wildcats increased their lead to 21-0 with 2:42 remaining when running back Jason Zeno scored on an 11-yard run. St. James drove 65 yards on eight plays for the score.

St. James finished its first-half scoring when Dapremont muscled to a four-yard touchdown run, which made the score 28-0 with three seconds left in the half. Dapremont's run came one play after Phillips threw a 57-yard pass to Zeno, who zigzagged his way through the Varnado secondary to set up the score. The drive covered 78 yards on four plays.

"We practice hard every day, and it didn't matter when we played," right guard Quincy Allen said. "(Varnado was) getting tired after the first quarter."

Varnado (0-1) cut St. James' lead to 35-6 when running back Otha Foster scored on an eight-yard run in the third quarter.

St. James scored its last touchdown when backup quarterback Marcus Dumas threw a five-yard touchdown pass to receiver Chase Green to make the score 42-6 with 5:13 left in the game.

Abrupt departure comes as NOPD Katrina response is questioned

New Orleans Police Superintendent Eddie Compass, right, announces his retirement at a news conference with Mayor Ray Nagin at the Sheraton Hotel. New Orleans Police Superintendent Eddie Compass, whose emotional media appearances since Hurricane Katrina made him one of the city's most recognizable figures nationwide, abruptly announced his retirement Tuesday.

The stunning departure of the city's top cop roiled New Orleans leaders, and raised questions of whether Mayor Ray Nagin forced Compass from his job. Earlier this month, on Sept. 9, Compass said, "I want to be police chief here as long as I can and as long as Mayor Nagin will have me."

Compass made the announcement at an afternoon news conference. Neither Compass nor Nagin provided any background or explanation as to why the chief chose this moment, when New Orleans is enduring its greatest crisis, to depart. Nagin said, when asked, that he did not ask for Compass' resignation.

Although Compass' performance during Katrina has brought forth some criticism, his three-and-a-half year tenure as superintendent had its rocky moments before Katrina, most notably as the city witnessed a resurgence in its infamously high murder rate. Nagin picked him as chief, but he and Compass were not particularly close, according to people who know both men.

Compass appeared at the news conference at the Sheraton Hotel, flanked by Nagin, his three assistant superintendents and a handful of commanders and bodyguards, to announce his retirement. Deputy Superintendent Warren Riley has been announced as interim chief.

"Since I was a little boy, my whole life, I wanted to be the superintendent of police," Compass said Tuesday, appearing to fight back tears. "In the life of every leader the time comes to reflect on his life, and I'm

Hastily built dams remain in Jeff roads

Some officials want them kept in place for now

By Sheila Grissett
East Jefferson bureau

Soon after Hurricane Katrina ripped a hole in the 17th Street Canal's eastern wall and began flooding New Orleans, the water poured back west across the Jefferson Parish line into Old Metairie and Old Jefferson. Jefferson Parish officials and Louisiana National Guard crews rushed to erect rock dams at four locations, in hopes of stemming the tide before it inundated even more homes and streets on their side of the parish line.

Almost a month later, the dams remained largely intact, blocking most traffic on four roads, including a pair of six-lane thoroughfares: Airline Drive and Jefferson Highway.

But that's likely to change soon, perhaps by the weekend.

For the first time since Katrina, the streets of the French Quarter didn't go dark Monday as night fell.

Streetlamps and neon signs glowed, loud bars stayed open past midnight, and carousing patrons cheered the LSU Tigers on television. Local eccentrics were back in their element. And there were tourists, even if most of them were relief workers or law enforcement personnel.

What was strangest about the scene was that it was so strangely normal. But in the wake of two hurricanes, restoration of electricity in the city's oldest and most cherished neighborhood was like finding a pulse on a patient who was thought to have flat-lined.

"When the power came on, I said, 'Yea!'" said Bonnibel Byars, a part-time Ursulines Street resident who had just returned from her other home in Minnesota. She was impressed by the activity in the Quarter, the lodestone of New Orleans' tourism industry.

"I was skeptical," she said, having expected things to be "kind of desolate."

GET READY FOR LA. FOOTBALL WEATHER

Cool, dry weather coming Thursday

By Lynne Jensen
Staff writer

By the weekend, following a long, hot summer and two disastrous hurricanes in Louisiana, folks in the New Orleans area will be hunting for sweaters at night, according to the National Weather Service.

A front is set to arrive Thursday and is expected to last into Sunday, bringing "our first significant cold front" of the fall season, meteorologist Phil Grigsby said Tuesday.

Daytime temperatures will drop into the low 80s on the north shore and mid-80s on the south shore, Grigsby said. Nighttime temperatures will drop into the upper 50s and low 60s on the north shore and the mid-60s on the south shore, he said.

"Mother Nature, she does what she wants to do. We can't control it, yet."
PHIL GRIGSBY
meteorologist

Residents also will catch a break when it comes to humidity, Grigsby said.

"It will be dry as well," he said.

It is possible an increase in winds out of the east Monday and Tuesday "could make the tides go up," Grigsby said.

Winds of 15 to 20 mph could cause coastal flooding in areas that are not protected by levees, he said.

In Lake Pontchartrain, for example, high tides at this time of year generally are 1 to 2 feet above sea level, Grigsby said. If the easterly winds pick up, the tides could go a foot or two higher than normal, he said.

"It's a pretty typical pattern for this time of year and has no bearing on the tropical wave now in the Caribbean, he said.

Hurricane season ends Nov. 30.

Because the possibility of easterly winds and rising tides is five to seven days away, the forecast could change, he said.

"Mother Nature, she does what she wants to do," Grigsby said. "We can't control it, yet."

Schools in Algiers, Uptown may get to reopen this year

FEMA will replace badly damaged ones

By Leslie Williams
Staff writer

At least 15 New Orleans public schools could be operating in November or December based on a recent review of school buildings by engineers and architects, state Superintendent of Education Cecil Picard said Tuesday.

Whether to do so will be a local decision made by the School Board, Mayor Ray Nagin and others, Picard said.

New Orleans interim School Superintendent Ora Watson and officials with Alvarez & Marsal, the company working to right the school system's finances, plan to meet Thursday with Nagin to discuss both short- and long-term plans for the school district, including opening between eight and 16 schools in the next few months, said Bill Roberti of Alvarez & Marsal.

Picard said the schools that could be opened – eight in Algiers and at least seven Uptown – could serve about 12,000 students.

In regard to the other schools in the city, assessments are under way. William Quade, who is overseeing Federal Emergency Management Agency assistance to school systems in Louisiana, said Tuesday that it's already clear the cost of repairing some New Orleans public schools is greater than 50 percent of their value, so those schools will be replaced.

"A lot" of city schools fall in this category, Quade said, adding "FEMA's going to give you a brand new school when it's damaged beyond economical repair."

The new schools may be smaller or larger and configured in different ways, said Quade, who spoke at a Board of Elementary and Secondary Education meeting at which Picard provided an overview of 68 school systems in the state, at least 40 of which desperately need money.

Picard said that based on the latest educational research, the city could improve its odds of having successful schools by configuring new schools as follows: pre-kindergarten centers, kindergarten through eighth-grade schools, and high schools that include only grades nine through 12.

"That would be my recommendation," he said.

At the meeting, Picard announced changes that occurred this week at the headquarters of the state Department of Education in Baton Rouge that should, he said, expedite efforts to get federal money to local school systems, including the one in New Orleans, which had about 55,000 students the week before Katrina hit.

"We've got a FEMA office here now," Picard boasted. "We don't have to stand in line with the municipalities, parish governments and the quasi-government entities."

And the state education agency has assigned Grover Austin, a retired legislative auditor for the state, to work with FEMA and local school districts to coordinate requests.

Austin will function as a troubleshooter, making sure delays are minimal, Picard said.

The state superintendent said he has a verbal agreement with Art Jones, the disaster recovery chief for the Louisiana Office of Homeland Security and Emergency Preparedness, that money for all permanent work in local school systems – roads, utilities, recreational facilities, equipment and buildings – will be funneled and monitored through the State Department of Education.

FEMA will pay school systems directly for debris removal and emergency protective measures, according to the verbal plan.

Of the state's 701,000 public students, 185,000 became displaced after Katrina, he said. The hurricane forced 52,000 of the 140,000 nonpublic students out of the state.

In all, Louisiana students are scattered among 47 states, including Alaska, Picard said.

Texas, he said, has the largest number of Louisiana student evacuees, 48,000, mostly in Houston, Austin and Dallas.

Staff writer Steve Ritea contributed to this report.

New Orleans courts to open in Gonzales

But no jury trials planned for while

By Susan Finch
Staff writer

New Orleans civil courts and related offices, closed because of flooding after Hurricane Katrina, will reopen early next month in temporary quarters in Gonzales, chief Judge Ethel Sims Julien said Tuesday.

Civil District Court and First and Second City Courts, along with the offices of the civil sheriff and the First and Second City Courts' constables, will be back in business starting Oct. 3 at 1056 East Worthy St.

The facility, directly across the street from the Ascension Parish courthouse, will be open weekdays from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m., she said.

"The judges will be available to sign pleadings, conduct hearings and hold conferences on non-jury matters," Julien said. Jury trials, though, will have to wait. "I'm not sure we'd be able to do that at this time because we would not be able to give residents of New Orleans juries of their peers."

"The judges will be available to sign pleadings, conduct hearings and hold conferences on non-jury matters."
JUDGE ETHEL SIMS JULIEN

Aside from that, Julien said, the judges will be equipped to tackle some unique legal issues left in the storm's wake: "We have custody issues that arose as a result of the hurricane, relocation issues as it relates to custody," she said.

Meanwhile, Julien announced that real estate records formerly housed by the Register of Conveyances and Recorder of Mortgages' offices in the Civil Court basement at 421 Loyola Ave. will be available for inspection starting Oct. 10, after they are moved to a New Orleans office building.

"We are now looking at space in the Amoco building to relocate the records," Julien said.

Court spokesman Walt Pierce said that contrary to earlier reports, none of the mortgage and conveyance records were destroyed in the flooding, though some may have sustained damage. "They just haven't been accessible to people who need access because we haven't been able to operate," he said.

Gov. Kathleen Blanco has ordered court filing deadlines suspended until Oct .25 "so lawyers and others wouldn't be penalized by the fact that the courts haven't been ableto operate," Julien said.

New Orleans Criminal District Court is closed until further notice.

Anyone with questions about the operations of the court and related offices can call 1 (225) 342-1687.

Rita recovery hindered by storm of red tape

Survivors in Texas living 'like cavemen'

By Abe Levy
Associated Press writer

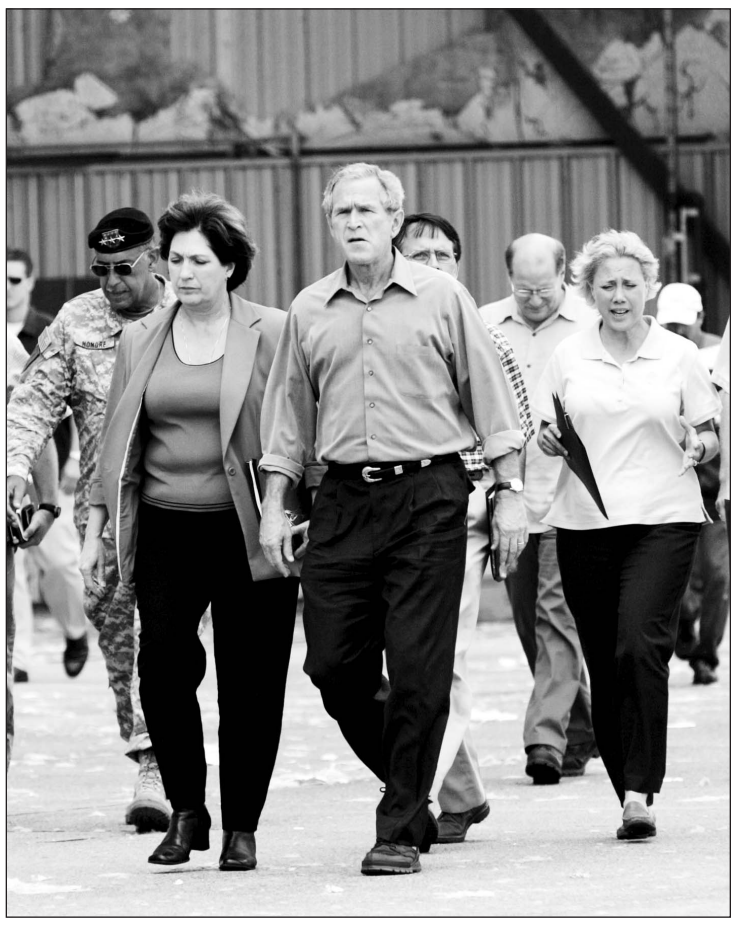
PORT ARTHUR, TEXAS — Nearly four days after Hurricane Rita hit, many of the storm's sweltering victims along the Gulf Coast of Texas were still waiting for electricity, gasoline, water and other relief Tuesday, prompting one top emergency official to complain that people are "living like cavemen."

In the hard-hit refinery towns of Port Arthur and Beaumont, crews struggled to cross debris-clogged streets to deliver generators and water to people stranded by Rita. They predicted it could be a month before power is restored, and said water and sewer systems can't function until more generators arrived.

Red tape was also blamed for the delays.

Port Arthur Mayor Oscar Ortiz, whose home was destroyed by fire after the hurricane, said "we've had 101 promises" for aid, "but it's all bureaucracy."

John Owens, emergency management coordinator and deputy police chief in the town of 57,000, said pleas for state and federal relief were met with requests for paperwork.



"We have been living like cavemen, sleeping in cars, doing bodily functions outside," he said.

Temperatures climbed into the upper 90s, and officials worried that swarms of mosquitoes might spread disease.

In Beaumont, officials briefed President Bush, Texas Gov. Rick Perry at his side, on relief efforts. Perry cautioned against criticism.

"There's always going to be those discombobulations, but the fact is, everyone is doing everything possible to restore power back to this area," Perry said.

About 476,000 people remained without electricity in Texas, in addition to about 285,000 in Louisiana. About 15,000 out-of-state utility workers were being brought to the region to help restore power.

President Bush, flanked by Gov. Kathleen Blanco, left, and U.S. Sen. Mary Landrieu, prepares to make a statement in front of a damaged hangar at Northrop Grumman in Lake Charles on Tuesday. Bush was in the region to get a first-hand look at the effect Hurricane Rita had on the nation's energy resources.

Residents of some hard-hit towns were allowed to check on their homes but were not allowed to stay because of a lack of generators and ice.

About 2,000 Port Arthur residents who stayed through the storm were advised to find other places to live until utilities are restored. Ortiz said it could be two weeks before people are allowed back into Port Arthur.

After seeing a swarm of ravenous mosquitoes around his storm-battered home in Vidor, Harry Smith and his family decided to leave. They hitchhiked 10 miles to an emergency staging area and got on a bus to San Antonio.

"It can't be any worse than here," said Smith, 49, a pipefitter. "This is the worst storm I've seen in the 46 years I've lived here."

In Louisiana, Calcasieu Parish Police Jury President Hal McMillin said residents who come back would be without air conditioning and that they risk insect bites and the mosquito-borne West Nile virus. A mandatory evacuation remained in effect for 10 southwestern Louisiana parishes.

"There's a good chance we could have an outbreak or something," McMillin said.

There were some signs of hope. In Orange, Texas, people converged in cars and trucks outside a shopping strip for water, food and ice supplied by the private disaster group the Compassion Alliance.

"I know it's going to take some time, but we really appreciate this," Dorothy Landry, 66, said after waiting in the line. "I can't thank them enough."

Legislature could meet twice before March session

Lawmakers may report as early as October

By Ed Anderson
Capital bureau

BATON ROUGE — The legal and financial aftermath of hurricanes Katrina and Rita might take two special legislative sessions to sort out, House Speaker Joe Salter, D-Florien, said Tuesday.

He said the latest start date he has heard bandied for the two-week meeting is Oct. 23, but he cautioned that "nothing is definite at this point."

Gov. Kathleen Blanco or lawmakers themselves can call a special session, but the latter has not been done in modern times.

Blanco spokesman Roderick Hawkins said a decision to call one or more session has not been made.

"It is too early to tell at this time" how many sessions will be needed, Hawkins said. "It is hard to say what tomorrow is going to bring. We don't want to limit ourselves" now as to the subject matters to be debated.

Senate President Don Hines, D-Bunkie, said he has heard "through the grapevine" that Blanco will call lawmakers into session for two weeks in late October.

Salter and Hines, Blanco's chief legislative floor leaders, said because of the complexity of the issues to be discussed, lawmakers could be called back into a special session in January.

Salter said the October session should be limited to legal issues, such as the deadline to file or dispose of lawsuits, which has been interrupted by the hurricanes.

Salter said he has asked Rep. Glenn Ansardi, D-Kenner, a lawyer who is chairman of the House Committee on Civil Law and Procedure, to start looking at legal issues that could be addressed in a special session.

The second session, he said, should deal with the financial impact of the hurricanes, such as lost tax revenue from the stricken area and what money is available to spend.

Salter said he didn't think the information needed to deal with a financial session could be put together until January.

Other lawmakers have said a special January session might be devoted to tax breaks for businesses and individuals looking to move back into the state.

The Legislature is scheduled to meet in a 60-day general session starting March 27 and through June 19. In a general session, most subjects, except taxes, can be taken up.

Wayne Mack of the Georgia Department of Labor provides introductory information to thousands of participants in a United Way job fair at the Georgia World Congress Center in Atlanta. More than 8,000 jobs were offered by 300 local employers.

Locals join evacuees at job fair in Atlanta

Overwhelming response brings promise of repeat

By Giovanna Dell'orto
Associated Press writer

ATLANTA — At one of the nation's largest job fairs set up for hurricane evacuees, thousands of people — some driven by stormy weather as far away as Galveston, Texas, others driven by unemployment just blocks away — competed Tuesday for more than 8,000 jobs.

The response was so overwhelming that organizers closed the doors within two hours and promised to set up another fair next month. The United Way, which set up the event, had estimated a turnout of 15,000 job applicants.

About 30 percent of applicants were hurricane evacuees from Louisiana and Texas, while the rest were local residents taking advantage of what the state Department of Labor called the largest job fair in Georgia and perhaps the biggest in the country.

The job seekers looped across and around downtown Atlanta's gigantic Georgia World Congress Center, carrying laptops and resumes in Kinko's sacks, wearing everything from black suits and stiletto heels to do-rags and sports jerseys. They thronged booths staffed by 300 local employers, offering jobs ranging from clerks at Home Depot to officers with the suburban Gwinnett County police.

A 19-year-old construction worker from Galveston who fled Hurricane Rita with his wife, 2-year-old son and 8-month-old daughter, and needed the help of a Spanish-language translator lined up next to a 60-year-old woman who spent 33 years teaching in Atlanta schools.

"We're not the special unemployed," said Deborah Watts, a 47-year-old Atlantan who was looking for a retail management position.

She and others complained about the long lines and the lack of on-site interviews. Most job applicants had to fill out online forms at computers lined up along an entire wall of the central hall.

But most of the displaced workers were simply grateful for the throbbing job market, free child care and Cokes and pizza offered by their new state.

"You've got to think somebody is always worse off than you," said Angela Lassere, a medical assistant who lost her New Orleans home to 10 feet of water.

Lassere and 20 of her family members fled the city just as the levees were breached following Hurricane Katrina nearly a month ago. It took them 20 hours to reach Atlanta, where they had relatives to stay with.

Audrey Morgan-Martin and 28 of her family members also left New Orleans in a caravan right before the flooding. On the job, Morgan-Martin used to handle a different kind of hurricane: She chopped fruit for the signature Hurricane drinks at Pat O'Brien's Bar in the heart of the French Quarter.

Even though she said she didn't know what, if anything, she would find when she returns, she was planning to go back and was looking for any job in Atlanta that would support her until then.

"I can sweep streets, I can pick leaves, I can wash dishes till I can go home," Morgan-Martin said. "I don't have a problem."

The people v. Hurricane Katrina

Storm-related lawsuits spring up in courts

By Mark Schleifstein
Staff writer

Class-action lawsuits stemming from Hurricane Katrina are beginning to pile up in U.S. District Court in New Orleans, as lawyers jockey to stake a claim in what could be a years-long series of legal battles over who to blame for damages stemming from the storm.

Plaintiff's attorney Daniel Becnel Jr. of Reserve has filed what amounts to a placeholder suit aimed at assigning blame for the failure of the 17th Street Canal levee wall, initially naming Boh Bros. Construction Co. of New Orleans and a small Florida construction company as defendants.

In a class action, lawyers file suit on behalf of a group of individuals who are representative of those injured by an action. Such suits ask the court to include all others who are similarly affected.

Becnel said there's a good chance Boh Bros. will be dropped from the canal levee lawsuit, as company officials have said it was hired only to dredge the bottom of the 17th Street Canal. The company that built the east levee wall along the canal will be added to the suit when it is identified, Becnel said.

Becnel's suit, filed on behalf of residents of Orleans and Jefferson parishes, names Gulf Coast Inc. as a defendant, but the company described in the lawsuit actually is Gulf Group Inc. of Panama City, Fla., which built a "hurricane-proof" bridge on Old Hammond Highway across the canal.

The lawsuit contends that during construction of the bridge, the company "placed construction vehicles and other heavy equipment on the levee, which eventually failed, while constructing the bridge. It is believed that the placement of these heavy vehicles and/or other heavy construction equipment on the 17th Street Canal levee caused and/or contributed (to) the above-mentioned breach in the levee and/or floodwall."

Becnel said the lawsuit may be expanded to include other levee wall collapses in the city that occurred during and after Katrina.

Becnel also has filed suit against Murphy Oil Co., asking for damages resulting from the leaking of oil from a storage tank on its Chalmette refinery site into neighboring homes. Appended to the lawsuit is a request that a federal Oil Pollution Act trust fund reimburse residents $1 billion for damages caused by the spill.

That trust fund, paid for with a tax on oil production, was set up after the huge Exxon Valdez oil spill in Alaska in 1989.

Murphy spokeswoman Mindy West said 85 percent of the oil released in the spill has been either removed or evaporated and that the company's cleanup efforts will continue.

"Class action lawsuits involving this are almost inappropriate, given the enormity of the storm that hit us and this area," she said.

West said the company has neither offered to buy the homes from those affected by the oil spill nor offered cash settlements to homeowners. She said rumors of both actions by the company have spread through St. Bernard Parish in recent days.

A group of lawyers led by Philip Bohrer of Baton Rouge also has filed a class action lawsuit against Shell Pipeline LLC and Shell Pipeline Co. LLC for damages associated with the rupture of a crude oil pipeline in lower Plaquemines Parish.

Shell Pipeline officials could not be reached for comment Tuesday.

Work resumes on twin spans

Repairs were halted as Rita neared

By Ed Anderson
Capital bureau

BATON ROUGE — After having to halt temporarily because of Hurricane Rita's high winds, crews resumed work late Monday rebuilding one of the Interstate 10 twin spans.

Gordon Nelson, assistant secretary of operations for the state Department of Transportation and Development, said Rita forced workers to abandon repairs and reconstruction of a 5.8-mile segment of the 8-mile span knocked out of service about a month ago by Hurricane Katrina.

Several sections of the span,linking Orleans and St. Tammany parishes, were either knocked out or skewed out of alignment by Katrina.

Nelson said Rita took out "another two or three sections" of the span that had been left "just hanging" as a result of Katrina.

Despite a four-day shutdown of work — from Thursday through Sunday – Nelson said the project is still on schedule.

Agency spokesman Mark Lambert said the eastbound span should be back in operation by about Halloween under the terms of the 45-day work agreement. He said the plans are to open one lane of the span eastbound and the other lane westbound.

The $30.9 million contract, awarded to Boh Bros. Construction Co., also calls for repairing the less-damaged westbound span as a one-lane bridge.

Lambert said that although crews are working on the parallel spans simultaneously, they are devoting more effort to getting the eastbound span back first and are using good sections of the westbound bridge to repair it.

The westbound span will be open as a one-lane bridge by mid-January, Lambert said.

Lambert said the contract calls for a $75,000-a-day penalty for each day the project runs over the 45-day limit to have the eastbound span open. Conversely, the contract also calls for a $75,000-a-day incentive – up to 15 days — for each day the work is completed ahead of schedule.

Lambert said the department will take bids on a $500 million to $600 million new, higher twin span in the first quarter of 2006.

Meanwhile, he said DOTD engineers have given a clean bill of health to the I-10 bridge over the Calcasieu River in Lake Charles that was hit by a pair of barges during Hurricane Rita.

On Tuesday, more than 150 roads along coastal Louisiana from Texas to Mississippi remained closed because of hurricane damage, downed trees or flooding, said State Police spokesman Johnnie Brown.

Computer chips track morgue cases

Coroner is trying to reduce errors

By David Dishneau
Associated Press writer

GULFPORT, MISS. - As body counts mounted and missing-person reports multiplied in the days after Hurricane Katrina, morgue workers began using a new technology to keep track of unidentified remains recovered in two Mississippi counties.

Radio frequency identification chips — slender red cylinders about half an inch long — were implanted under the corpses' skin or placed inside body bags. Each VeriChip, donated by a subsidiary of Applied Digital Solutions Inc., emits a specific radio signal, enabling morgue workers to quickly locate and catalog the remains.

With 48 of the 133 bodies recovered in Harrison and Hancock counties still unidentified as of Sunday, Harrison County Coroner Gary Hargrove said the chips have been a boon to the Disaster Mortuary Operational Recovery Team he oversees.

"It's better enabled me to do my job as the coroner, tracking and getting people's loved ones back to them quickly," he said.

Besides tagging the storm victims, which are kept in refrigerated trucks at Gulfport-Biloxi Regional Airport, the chips are helping Hargrove catalog other human remains that the floodwaters released from damaged caskets and burial vaults in cemeteries.

Product manufacturers and retailers such as Wal-Mart Stores Inc. use similar RFID technology to monitor the movement of goods. VeriChips, which were approved by the Food and Drug Administration for human implantation in 2004, have been used for tagging pets and identifying high-security workers, but not for managing morgue cases before, Applied Digital spokesman John Procter said.

While acknowledging that some may shudder at the idea, Procter said the chips can speed the morgue-management process and reduce errors.

Applied Digital, of Delray Beach, Fla., said it sent 360 VeriChips to Gulfport, along with five handheld scanners that read the radio signals and a 40-foot mobile clinic outfitted for chip injections. The company is talking with officials in Louisiana about using the technology at a DMORT site in St. Gabriel, La., that also is handling Katrina victims.

The RFID chips are being used only with remains from Harrison and Hancock counties. Their combined death toll represents more than half of the 220 people killed by Katrina in Mississippi. At least 1,079 deaths have been attributed to Katrina in five states.

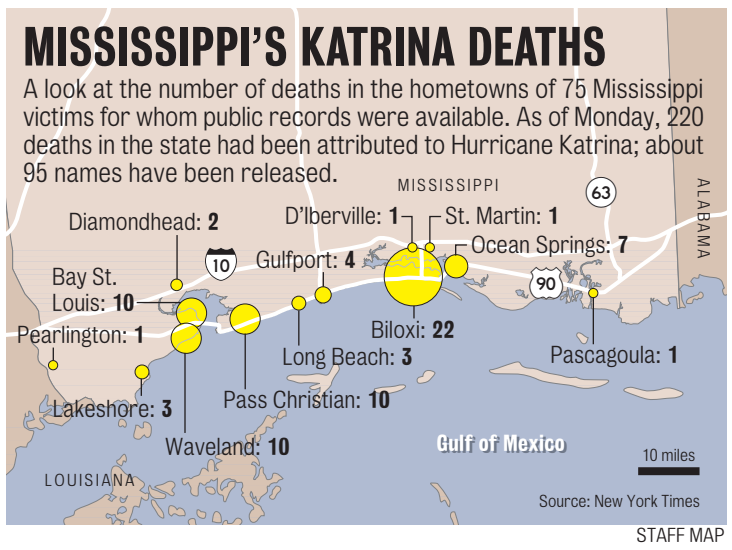
Each chip comes packaged in a white plastic injector that looks like a bulky pen attached to a thick hypodermic needle. Hargrove said the chips are implanted in the corpse's shoulder or placed inside the body bag, depending on the condition of the remains.

While officials in Mississippi are using the technology for free, Applied Digital recommends doctors charge a total of about $200 for the chip, the injector to place it under a person's skin and for performing the procedure.

The beige plastic scanners, which resemble TV remote controls, have screens that display a 16-digit number when passed within six inches of a chip. The same number is preprinted on bar-code stickers attached to each injector package. Hargrove said the stickers go on the outside of the bag, on the case file and on any DNA samples taken from the remains.

Conventional morgue case management involves ankle bracelets, which must be checked to ensure that the remains match their file numbers.

"The VeriChip allows the technicians to accurately and quickly identify the remains inside the body bag without having to open the body bag at each step along the process," Procter said. Some privacy advocates fear that implantable RFID chips could lead to unwanted tracking of humans.



But Chuck Kerr, a Murfreesboro, Tenn., businessman whose parents' bodies were at the DMORT site in Gulfport for nearly two weeks after the Aug. 29 storm, doesn't object to the technology's use in disaster recovery.

"If it helps the families find their loved ones, then I think it's a good thing," he said.

He said his parents, Charlie, 79, and Betty, 75, had moved from St. Louis to Pass Christian in 1994 to enjoy the warm Gulf Coast weather. As Katrina neared, they chose to stay in their house less than a mile from the beach because they didn't think Betty's recently replaced hip joint could tolerate hurricane-shelter conditions. The last time the Kerrs went to a shelter, they slept on the floor for four or five days, their son said.

"I think they would rather have been dead than sat in a shelter anywhere," he said.

A memorial service for the Kerrs was held Thursday in Orange Grove. Their son wasn't sure where their final resting place will be, since their prearranged funeral paperwork apparently was lost in the storm.

Schools reopening along Miss. coast

Students given time to discuss Katrina

By The Associated Press

BILOXI, MISS. — When elementary students in Biloxi and Ocean Springs returned to school Monday, they spent time sharing stories about their lives since Hurricane Katrina.

Principals and teachers are giving students the chance to talk about their feelings while gradually returning to a normal schedule.

Christa Hode, a third-grade teacher at Oak Park Elementary in Ocean Springs, said her students have adjusted well to being back in the classroom.

"They're so resilient," Hode said.

Eight-year-old Journee Hyde said she was relieved to be back at Oak Park after Katrina's powerful blow to her family.

"It makes me feel like home because I lost my home," she said.

Not every school district on the Mississippi coast was ready to reopen Monday. The projected start date for students in the Pascagoula School District is Oct. 6.

Because of the damage from Katrina, some classes have been transferred to other schools within the district.

Superintendent Wayne Rodolfich said new textbooks had to be ordered and other details, including clothing for students, need to be worked out before the schools reopen.

"We are pulling together uniforms for students who lost their uniforms in the storm," Rodolfich said.

The Moss Point School Board got an update Monday on the restoration and cleanup process and confirmed today as the target start date for schools.

At N.E. Taconi Elementary in Ocean Springs, students were back at school Monday and talking about their experiences. They completed questionnaires to help the faculty and administrators better understand how each student is progressing.

Principal Susan Dollar said school officials also met with the 30 faculty and staff members before classes started to help them as they deal with their own struggles.

In Biloxi, students at Beauvoir Elementary gathered in dark classrooms and tried to avoid slipping on floors slick from humidity. A power pole went down Monday, and the school had no electricity or phone service.

Beauvoir principal Susan Brand said teachers remained enthusiastic and made every attempt to "muster up excitement for the children."

Blessed - "ADJECTIVE: highly favored or fortunate; characterized by happiness and good fortune."

Prior to Hurricane Katrina, "blessed" was an often used word. Today, as Ray Brandt Toyota and it's employees and families begin the long and arduous rebuilding process, we can now truly understand the meaning of the word "blessed". Our employees, like the residents of Southeast Louisiana have begun the task of rebuilding our homes and our business. We would ask for your support in "Jumpstarting Jefferson", as our Parts, Service, and Sales Departments are open and available to serve any of your needs.

Ray Brandt has authorized the New Car, Used Car, Parts, and Service Departments to provide the citizens of the affected areas with reduced pricing in all departments to help with the rebuilding process. Our new and used car departments sustained no water damage and the damage by the wind to a few of our units provide remarkable savings. Most of the slight damage is not even visible to the eye; rather than save the insurance money, Mr. Brandt would rather pass the savings on to the public as part of his contribution to the "Jumpstarting Jefferson" campaign. This is a very limited opportunity, and availability is restricted.

We have employment opportunities available in the Sales Department, including management availabilities.

Sales Hours: Monday - Saturday 9am - 5pm
Service Hours: Mon - Fri 7:30am - 6pm • Sat 7:30-4

We are committed to rebuilding Jefferson Parish and Southeast Louisiana. We need your support. Together, we will prevail and have a better place to live and work than before Hurricane Katrina.

As you read this, Ray Brandt Toyota, its employees and families, and the residents of Southeast Louisiana all have something in common; we are truly "blessed".

Seafood industry losses may be felt nationwide

Hurricane Rita damaged what survived Katrina

By Janet McConnaughey
Associated Press writer

BATON ROUGE – It may be months before officials know the extent of hurricane damage to Louisiana's seafood and aquaculture industries, but to some shrimpers, it seems Hurricane Rita picked up right where Katrina left off.

Flooding or power outages caused by Hurricane Rita put nearly every shrimp dock and processing facility out of business, at least temporarily, said Martin Bourgeois, shrimp program manager for the Louisiana Department of Wildlife and Fisheries.

"I'm not sure of any port anywhere along the Louisiana coast, or for that matter from Galveston (Texas) to Bayou La-Batre, Ala., where a fisherman could land a pound of shrimp," he said Tuesday. "Gee whiz, we were enjoying a very productive white shrimp season before these storms."

The hurricanes also damaged about two-thirds of the oyster industry in the state, and ruined some alligator, turtle and crawfish farms.

On Tuesday, some 500,000 people in Louisiana were still without power and 350,000 people had no telephone service. Six of the major oil refineries in Louisiana were shut down and mandatory evacuation remained in effect for 10 southwest Louisiana parishes. Fifty-three parishes were declared a state of emergency from Rita.

"There is not one single part of the coastline that has not been affected negatively," Louisiana Gov. Kathleen Blanco said. "I don't think we've ever seen anything like it. ... Our fisheries are threatened. All of our agricultural assets are threatened. Oil and gas are threatened."

After Katrina, shrimpers were able to work without problems west of Bayou Lafourche. But Rita flooded docks and knocked out power across the rest of the coast.

"There was a lot of frozen inventory lost because of this," said shrimper James Cheramie of Galliano. He said that even though the fleet survived: "The problem is most of these shrimpers have had personal impacts. Their homes may have flooded. Their families are displaced. In order for them to proceed, (they) have to put their lives in order."

The oyster industry was also affected. Greg Lutz, an aquaculture specialist at Louisiana State University, said Hurricane Katrina wiped out an estimated two-thirds of the oyster harvest, while the impact from Rita was still being estimated.

"It's difficult to get a good handle on a lot of the commodities we work with, because you can't just drive around or fly around and see them. It's all under the water anyway," he said.

Louisiana provides about 35 percent of the nation's oysters and harvests about 40 percent of the nation's shrimp, according to John Roussel, assistant secretary of the state Department of Wildlife and Fisheries.

David Bushek, treasurer and president elect of the National Shellfisheries Association, said oyster farmers elsewhere are already seeing an increase in demand. For example, oyster farmers in Delaware Bay in New Jersey are now getting higher prices for their oysters at the dock.

"Demand will be increased throughout the Atlantic Coast ... I don't know that there will be a critical shortage of supply or anything, but there will be a sufficient shortage that prices will probably go up in the short term."

Prices for purses and alligator skin shoes could also increase.Pelts & Skins, LLC, which has four farms in southern Louisiana and Florida and owns more than 200,000 alligators, said 30 percent of this year's alligator production was lost because of Katrina. The number was expected to grow after Hurricane Rita. Pelts & Skins Chief Executive Zachary Casey said it will take at least five years to recover the losses.

Alligator farmers collect eggs from nests in the wild, then hatch them indoors. Alligators usually hatch in August, and a number of buildings were damaged or without power.

Crawfish farms seemed to escape Katrina's wrath, but not Rita's. Normally, crawfish ponds aren't flooded until mid-October, and filling the ponds too early lets dead plants decompose, reducing the amount of oxygen in the water.

Crabbers lost traps and couldn't get bait for those that remained because the menhaden fishery was at least at a temporary standstill, said Bourgeois, with the Louisiana Department of Wildlife and Fisheries.

GOP to focus on retaining budget cuts, not spending

But hurricanes may affect negotiations

By Andrew Taylor
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — Despite chest-thumping by conservatives, upcoming battles over the federal budget will center less on new spending cuts to defray the costs of hurricanes Katrina and Rita and more on salvaging promises made earlier this year to trim the growth of government programs.

The roster of spending cuts put forth by conservatives contains few new ideas that seem likely to pass and many oft-rejected old ones.

Instead, the White House and Republican leaders are focused on preserving a budget plan that Congress passed in April calling for a modest $35 billion cut over five years in the growth of programs for the poor including food stamps and Medicaid.

Under Congress' arcane budget process, though, it's a lot easier to pass a budget blueprint in the spring — which only sets an outline for future bills to follow — than it is to adopt subsequent legislation to actually impose the cuts.

Some GOP moderates are resisting carrying out the $35 billion in promised cuts in the wake of hardships placed on tens of thousands of low-income families by the hurricanes.

"It's very hard to reduce the rate of growth of spending around here," said Senate Budget Committee Chairman Judd Gregg, R-N.H.

Already, $62 billion has been approved for hurricane aid, with much more on the way. The Pentagon's open tab for the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan soon will top $300 billion, so whatever cuts Congress finds will barely make a dent.

House and Senate GOP leaders are determined to go ahead with the planned budget cuts, though they've delayed acting on them until next month. They are enlisting conservatives to push back against the balky moderates.

Conservatives and the White House are likely to have greater success at a separate effort to draw the line against efforts by longtime senators to slip a few extra billion dollars to domestic agencies as part of the normal gamesmanship played during the annual budget process.

That won't actually save money. Instead, conservatives will have to fight to make sure that more generous colleagues don't bust the budget with accounting tricks or by borrowing from the Pentagon to bulk up the budgets for domestic agencies such as the Education and Health and Human Services departments.

The Senate Appropriations panel, led by Chairman Thad Cochran, R-Miss., has shifted $8 billion from the defense and foreign aid budgets to domestic agencies whose budgets President Bush proposed to cut by about 1 percent on average. It's an open secret that the Pentagon cuts would probably be restored through emergency funding that's supposed to pay for the war in Iraq.

Another $3 billion in budget trickery was used by Senate appropriators to free up funds for health research, medical training programs, home heating subsidies for the poor and myriad other programs.

The budget tricks have earned veto threats from the White House and scorn from the House.

"We're going to have to stick to this budget. We're going to have to reduce the defense transfer, and we're going to have to drop the gimmicks," said House Appropriations Committee spokesman John Scofield. "That's our starting point and ending point."

Congress is supposed to have finished the annual appropriations process — which involves passing 11 bills through House and Senate and shipping them to Bush — by the start of the 2006 fiscal year Saturday.

It won't even come close. Only two of the 11 bills have been signed by Bush, and the Senate hasn't even considered four of its spending bills, including the largest two bills; one funds the military, the other health and education programs.

Instead, later this week — probably Thursday — lawmakers will vote themselves a six-week extension and fund most federal agencies on a stopgap basis at or just below current levels.

Evacuees in family home learn ways to get along

'I love you' and 'I'm sorry' help

By Sharon Cohen
AP national writer

BATON ROUGE — It's just past 5 p.m. and rush hour has begun inside the big brick house on Hanks Drive.

Auntie Deborah breezes in after a long day at school. Little Jasmine rushes out the front door with a squeal to hug her daddy. Great-grandma Audrey Mae is folding laundry. Jamal is at the kitchen counter, helping his younger sister, Kayla, with her homework, gently but firmly telling her she's not going anywhere until it's done.

This is a family reunion. Hurricane Katrina brought everyone together, and nearly a month later, no one knows when they'll part. For now, four generations are learning that life under one roof may be chaotic and cramped, but it's comforting, too.

"The thing that pulls you through a tragedy is not to be alone," says Emelda Jackson, surrounded by her mother, daughters and grandkids. "A couple of heads thinking is better than one. We've all had to stop and console each other. We all lift each other's spirits up. It works when you decide you're going to pull together, respect each other's space and respect each other's thoughts."

That can be a tall order when an extended family of 15, ages 5 to 81, is sharing meals and one another's breathing and sleeping space. But Jackson insists communal living works because everyone abides by one unwritten house rule:

"You have to say I AM sorry and I DO love you," she says, leaning in to be heard above the din from four other conversations going on in the living room.

Everyone living here fled New Orleans before Katrina struck. Some family members already know they've lost everything; others aren't sure. But no one is rushing to return to a city that faces a long cleanup.

"I refuse to rough it," says the 59-year-old Jackson, who hankers for her pre-hurricane life of college, vacations and everyday creature comforts. "I don't want to be a pioneer. ... I don't want to put up with inconveniences. When they make it convenient, then I'll go back."

For now, she and others are staying put.

But forget about sticking a nifty new label on the mailbox. The 15 people who now call this home include Riddles (three), Robertsons (three), Jacksons (two), Meades (two) and one Lutcher, Richardson, Chaney, Martin and Lewis. Five others have moved on, but two more Riddles may be coming.

And then there's Deborah Daniels, who invited her extended family to take refuge in her spacious five-bedroom home, then moved out, along with her mother, to make more room for them.

Daniels, who has an easy laugh and an unflappable spirit, remains a constant, soothing presence here.

"I just worry about them," she says. "I hope they don't get depressed."

It was Daniels who calmed her niece Monique Jackson, who doesn't like crowds, when she became overwhelmed by living in a place where someone is always underfoot. She erupted one day and said, "Auntie, I can't stand it!"

"I let her have her screaming fit," Daniels said with a serene smile that suggested she knows this territory well, being in charge of hundreds of children as principal of a Baton Rouge elementary school.

And it was Auntie Deborah who helped another niece, Debra Robertson (at one time there were three Deborahs and one Debra in this house), an assistant principal in New Orleans, find work as a third-grader teacher here.

"Some people won't let you sit on your butt and mourn," Robertson teases her.

She hasn't had much time for that. Robertson, who is divorced, has enrolled her two kids, 5 and 14, in Baton Rouge schools and now must drive them to see their father, whose job has been relocated to Houston.

In her new school, Robertson says she found herself poring over the roster checking for the names of former students who may have relocated here. She's trying to look ahead, though she can't help reflecting about the past month.

"You go from having a house, a job and everything to nothing," she said. "It's hard for me. I did what I was supposed to do. I went to college. I've always been a provider. It's hard for me to be on the receiving end from everyone else."

They still celebrate family milestones. A few weeks ago, Audrey Mae Riddle blew out a candle celebrating her 81st birthday — about the same time as she saw her 5-year-old great-granddaughter, Mia, head off to kindergarten.

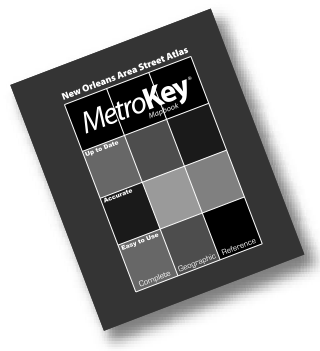
But life also has new rhythms and routines: Grocery shopping means buying the 20-pound bag of rice. Cooking means stirring a pot big enough to feed a platoon. Showering and bathing means plotting a schedule that starts at dinnertime and ends the next morning.

Family members say there haven't been any fights, just good-natured disagreements. About what? Everything, they say, quickly ticking off examples:

Who's going to take care of the kids? Where's everyone going to sleep? Who's going to have a bed? (There are three beds and three air mattresses.)

One thing they all agree on, Robertson says, is food.

As dinnertime approaches, Jamal Richardson, a 19-year-old who has had to temporarily abandon college studies in New Orleans, is preparing to work the late shift at Wal-Mart.



Living together with so many relatives "is hectic," he said. "Sometimes it might give you a headache. Everybody has something to say and everybody wants to be heard. But we all stick together, and when it's all said and done, we're family."

The time will come when they'll all move on, Emelda Jackson says.

"Everybody eventually has to go their separate ways," she says. "We're not sick of each other. We just don't want to live together forever."

Courthouse shooting suspect's hostage says she gave him drugs

In book, she admits she provided meth

By Greg Bluestein
Associated Press writer

ATLANTA — Ashley Smith, the woman who says she persuaded suspected courthouse gunman Brian Nichols to release her by talking about her faith in God, discloses in a new book that she gave him methamphetamine during the hostage ordeal.

Smith did not share that detail with authorities after she talked her way out of captivity.

In her book, "Unlikely Angel," released Tuesday, the 27-year-old Smith says Nichols had her bound on her bed with masking tape and an extension cord. She says he asked for marijuana, but she did not have any, so she dug into her illegal stash of crystal meth instead.

Smith, who has been in a mental hospital and has flunked out of drug rehab programs, says the seven-hour hostage ordeal led her to stop using drugs. She says she has not touched drugs since the night before she was taken hostage.

"If I did die, I wasn't going to heaven and say, 'Oh, excuse me, God. Let me wipe my nose, because I just did some drugs before I got here,' " Smith told the Augusta Chronicle.

Police said Nichols took Smith hostage in her apartment March 11 after a shooting rampage at the Atlanta courthouse.

During the ordeal, Smith said, she pulled out Rick Warren's book "The Purpose-Driven Life" and read to Nichols a chapter called "Using What God Gave Me" to gain his trust. Nichols later released her, and she called 911 and told authorities where to find him.

Nichols is accused of killing four people, including a judge, and could get the death penalty.

Since Nichols' arrest, Smith has received $70,000 in rewards and has been bombarded with offers for books, movies and speaking engagements. Her ordeal has been held up as an example of the redemptive power of faith.

"It's hard for people to understand the miracle of the story," she said. "This was totally a God thing, to me in my life. This was God getting my attention, going, 'I'm going to give you one more chance.' "

Financial details of the book have not been released, but Smith pledged to donate an undisclosed portion of the book's proceeds to a memorial fund for the victims.

Calls to Nichols' attorneys were not immediately returned Tuesday. Prosecution spokesman Erik Friedly would not comment on the case.

Smith says in her book that as the night wore on — after Nichols had snorted some of Smith's meth — she tried to win Nichols' trust by talking about her faith in God and relating to him her personal stories.

She says she told him how her husband had died in her arms four years earlier after being stabbed during a brawl.

She writes that she asked Nichols if he wanted to see the danger of drugs and lifted up her tank top several inches to reveal a five-inch scar down the center of her torso — the aftermath of a car wreck caused by drug-induced psychosis.

Cholesterol drug may be just what heart doctor ordered

Broader use of Lipitor wins FDA approval

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Food and Drug Administration has approved widening the pool of people who can take the popular cholesterol drug Lipitor to reduce the risk of stroke and heart attack to many diabetics who have risk factors for heart disease, the drug's manufacturer announced Tuesday.

Pfizer also said the FDA approved Lipitor to reduce the chance of stroke in people without diabetes but who have multiple other risk factors.

People considered at higher risk for stroke include those who are 55 or older, smoke, are obese or have high cholesterol, high blood pressure, a family history of stroke, or diabetes.

A study of 2,800 patients with Type 2 diabetes, the most common form of the condition, near normal cholesterol, and at least one other risk factor for stroke showed that patients on Lipitor suffered 50 percent fewer strokes than those taking a placebo, Pfizer said.

Another study of people with multiple risk factors for stroke found that Lipitor reduced the risk of stroke by 26 percent compared to those taking a placebo, the company said.

Al-Zarqawi lieutenant reportedly killed in Iraq

Separately, U.S. Marine killed by roadside bomb

By Thomas Wagner
Associated Press writer

BAGHDAD, IRAQ - U.S. and Iraqi authorities said Tuesday their forces had killed the No. 2 official in the al-Qaida in Iraq organization in a weekend raid in Baghdad, claiming to have struck a "painful blow" to the country's most feared insurgent group.

Abdullah Abu Azzam led al-Qaida's operations in Baghdad, planning a brutal wave of suicide bombings in the capital since April, killing hundreds of people, including police, army recruits and day laborers, officials said. According to an Associated Press tally, 698 people have been killed and 1,579 wounded since April 1 in suicide attacks in Baghdad. Abu Azzam also controlled the finances for foreign fighters that flowed into Iraq to join the insurgency.

Abu Azzam, who a government spokesman said was an Iraqi, was the top deputy to Jordanian militant Abu Musab al-Zarqawi. Abu Azzam was on a list of Iraq's 29 most-wanted insurgents issued by the U.S. military in February and had a bounty of $50,000 on his head.

Al-Qaida in Iraq denied that Abu Azzam was the No. 2 leader of the organization and said "it was not confirmed" that he was killed. "Abu Azzam was one of al-Qaida's many soldiers and is the leader of one of its battalions operating in Baghdad," the group said in an Internet statement by its spokesman, Abu Maysara al-Iraqi.

It called the U.S. and Iraqi claims that he was the group's top deputy "a futile attempt ... to raise the morale of their troops."

Violence continues

Elsewhere, a suicide bomber attacked Iraqis applying for jobs as policemen Tuesday in Baqouba, 30 miles north of Baghdad, killing nine and wounding 21.

The U.S. military also said a Marine was killed Monday by a roadside bomb in the town of Khaldiyah, west of Baghdad. The death brought to 1,918 the number of U.S. troops who have died since the Iraq war started in 2003, according to an AP count.

Police found the bodies of 22 Iraqi men who had been shot to death in southern Iraq, many of them bound and blindfolded, said Maj. Felah Al-Mohammedawi of the Interior Ministry. Their identities were not immediately known, but the district – northeast of Kut, about 100 miles southeast of Baghdad – is mostly Shiite.

It was not immediately clear what effect Abu Azzam's death would have on al-Qaida in Iraq, which has been one of the deadliest militant groups, carrying out suicide attacks that targeted the country's Shiite majority. The U.S. military has claimed to have killed or captured leading al-Zarqawi aides in the past and attacks have continued unabated, although Abu Azzam appeared to be a more significant figure.

Air Force Gen. Richard Myers, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, said the killing of Abu Azzam would force insurgents "to go to the bench and find somebody that is probably less knowledgeable and less qualified."

Iraqi government spokesman Laith Kubba called the killing of Abu Azzam a "painful blow" to al-Qaida but warned that the group would likely carry out revenge attacks.

Tip prompted raid

Abu Azzam was killed early Sunday when U.S. and Iraqi forces raided a high-rise apartment building in Baghdad, Lt. Col. Steve Boylan, a U.S. military spokesman, told the AP.

The Iraqi and U.S. forces targeted the building after a tip from an Iraqi citizen, Kubba said. During the raid, the troops captured another militant in the apartment with Abu Azzam, Kubba said.

Abu Azzam, whose real name is Abdullah Najim Abdullah Mohamed Al-Jawari, was the No. 2 figure in al-Qaida in Iraq, Kubba and Boylan said.

He had claimed responsibility for the assassinations of a number of top politicians, including a car bomb in May 2004 that killed Izzadine Saleem, the president of the U.S.-appointed Governing Council, and a July 2004 attack that killed the governor of Nineveh province, the military said. He was the group's "amir" or leader in Anbar, the vast western province that is the heartland of the insurgency, until spring, when he became the amir in Baghdad and led operations in and around the capital. He was "responsible for the recent upsurge in violent attacks in the city since April 2005," the military said.

Lights line the streets of the French Quarter on Monday night for the first time since Hurricane Katrina flooded much of New Orleans.

CURFEW? WHAT CURFEW?

BOURBON, from A-1

Byars was enjoying a cold beer with a friend at Stella, a Decatur Street establishment that was serving up smoked sausage sandwiches, cheeseburgers, salads – and blessed air conditioning.

On the upriver end of Bourbon Street, music, strobes and barkers lured passersby into several fleshpots and honkytonks that were back in business.

Rock reverberated from the Famous Door, where Deborah Richard, Heineken in hand, was one of a handful of patrons. "I'm surprised. I didn't think anything was open," said Richard, an off-duty corporal with the Department of Homeland Security. She had just arrived in the city from Philadelphia and had yet to learn her assignment.

Richard said she got the mistaken impression from TV media that New Orleans was flooded throughout. "The way the news explained it, I thought it was all under sea level," she said.

Famous Door manager Art Irons said the bar opened a week ago, only to be quickly shuttered by city officials and Hurricane Rita. "We had people. We had cold beers. We decided to see if we couldn't get back to normal," he said.

Irons said he wanted to give people something to do "besides looking at damage."

A block away, at Bourbon Street Blues Company, a female bartender climbed on top of the bar and gyrated to music before an enthusiastic crowd of about 18.

Another bartender, Bridgett Derdin, sang the praises of local residents. "During the summer, the local people pay our bills," she said. "We're trying to get Bourbon Street going again. New Orleans takes care of New Orleans."

Customer Wayne Williamson was happy to lend himself to the cause. "It wasn't a whole lot of fun until power today," said Williamson, a credit union manager who returned late last week to his French Quarter apartment. "The place has been dead," he said. "We can start the comeback now."

Along the Quarter's largely car-free streets, many storefronts and homes remained darkened, but streetlamps gleamed throughout the district.

Sidewalk trash bins had been emptied, but the stink of piled garbage was still inescapable. Closed pubs and boarded-up shops far outnumbered bustling businesses, but some, such as The Original Dungeon at 738 Toulouse St., posted signs promising a Tuesday reopening.

A small crowd gathered around the Royal Street Grocery, apparently the only store in the area selling staples such as cigarettes, aspirin, batteries and insect repellent.

Owner Robert Buras, wearing a Saints cap and a T-shirt with an alligator on it over the words "Cajun yard dog," said he left only briefly about four days after Katrina hit, when looting and lawlessness were at their peak.

"We had separation anxiety," Buras said.

After numerous trips in and out of the city to restock his wares, Buras was back in business within a week of Katrina, serving crawfish etouffee as well as red beans and rice.

On Monday, his wife, Fahreena, worked the kitchen and the counter, and their 3-year-old daughter, Ava, dashed around customers' legs and played drums on a plastic can.

One of his most loyal customers, James Stephan, 58, pronounced the chicken "delicious," then washed it down with a Coke.

The shop's inventory offered long-deprived locals such surprises as Starbucks coffee, lemons and peaches, postcards, and pints of Wild Turkey.

"I'm going to be resettled in the first place that's a community again," Buras said of the French Quarter, crossing himself as an expression of gratitude that the electricity was back on.

On Decatur Street near the Quarter's downriver boundary, laughter and conversation spilled from Molly's at the Market, a watering hole that, like Buras' grocery, had been operating even without electricity.

Before the power came on, Molly's honored the official curfew and closed at 6 p.m. On Monday, the bar stayed open until a more civilized 2 a.m.

"It's a regular Monday night crowd," said Uptown resident Greg Ensslen, who rode his bicycle to the bar with two friends and dined on donated burgers.

Ensslen said the bleak state of the city had been depressing. "It felt like when you break up with a girlfriend because you've done something wrong."

Shortly after 9 p.m., two New Orleans police officers pulled up to Molly's in a motorized cart. The crowd of about 18 grew hushed, and the jukebox stopped playing a Van Morrison song. Whether the bar was being shut down seemed an open question.

A moment later, the jukebox cranked up again and the officers were mingling in the crowd. Asked what time the curfew kicked in, officer S.M. Smith exhaled a cloud of cigarette smoke, shrugged and said, "Whatever."

Bruce Hamilton can be reached at radiomars@yahoo.com.

Microphone in hand, Peter Territo does his best to draw customers into the Famous Door on Bourbon Street on Tuesday. With power restored to the French Quarter on Monday, the neighborhood took on a much more spirited feel. Famous Door manager Art Irons said he wanted to give people something to do 'besides looking at damage.'

Mayor calls Compass a hero

very, very thankful God gave me the wisdom and discernment to make tough decisions.

"Over the next 30 to 45 days of a transition period, I will be retiring as superintendent of police," he said. "I ask you to respect my privacy and my decision, and my right to be by myself."

Nagin characterized Compass' retirement as "a sad day in the city of New Orleans," and hailed the chief as a hero. He added, somewhat cryptically, that he thought Compass would make a lot of money and asked him to send the occasional Christmas card.

"My heart goes out to the chief and his family," he said. "I wish him nothing but the best."

The news conference ended abruptly, with Nagin and Compass quickly parting and leaving through separate exits. In response to a shouted question about whether he asked for Compass' resignation, Nagin said, "No." The mayor also declined to elaborate in an email Tuesday afternoon.

"No comment," Nagin wrote. "The chief asks everyone to respect his privacy. He requested the press conference be held the way it was handled. He is a good man. Don't mess with him!"

But several sources said the sudden retirement came after a private meeting between Compass, 47, and the mayor not long before the announcement.

The announcement came two days after several comments Compass had made repeatedly about the alleged violence that had engulfed emergency shelters at the Superdome and Ernest N.Morial Convention Center were countered by others to be hyperbolic and based on faulty intelligence.

Compass had come under fire for a variety of other reasons after Katrina. At first, he seemed invisible, holed up in the Hyatt Hotel with Nagin and other city leaders. As anarchy threatened to overwhelm the city, cops on the street said they "had no chief."

Widespread looting, some of it conducted by police officers, branded New Orleans worldwide as lawless, and almost 249 officers left their posts without permission.

After that first week, however, Compass became a seemingly omnipresent fixture in media accounts, and was feted by broadcast news stars. After the crisis was in full swing, Compass was a virtual quote machine, offering a down-home mix of empathy and bravado.

"I'm still standing. I'm the ultimate warrior," Compass was quoted two weeks after the storm. "I'm going to be the last person to leave the battlefield."

While his tearful interviews made him a compelling local face of the horrors of the storm, his decision to leave the city and flip the coin at a New Orleans Saints game in Giants Stadium on Monday Night Football on Sept. 19 was criticized by some of his rank and file.

Deputy Superintendent Warren Riley, left, has been named interim police chief by Mayor Ray Nagin. Riley is a favorite at City Hall whom Nagin supported in an unsuccessful bid for criminal sheriff last year.

Then, on Friday, Nagin's press office issued an unusually tart news release that rescinded statements Compass had made to media outlets about taking guns from residents coming back to New Orleans, comments that prompted a lawsuit from the National Rifle Association. What's more, Nagin's staff made clear, Compass' statements "were made without the knowledge or the approval of the mayor."

After Tuesday's news conference, as the brass got into their tinted-window SUVs and rolled away, Riley, a favorite at City Hall whom Nagin supported in an unsuccessful bid for criminal sheriff last year, eluded a question about whether he has been tapped as a replacement.

But just a few minutes after Compass quit, Riley leaned up against the hood of a black SUV, next to department spokesman Capt. Marlon Defillo, smiling and talking into a cell phone. As he hung up, another colleague walked up to him and slapped his hand.

"Congratulations, bro!" the officer said. Riley smiled and thanked him.

In less than an hour, Nagin's office released a statement announcing Riley's appointment as acting chief.

The new head of the department declined any comment on his ascension to power or his boss's exit, but said he would address the topic today at an 11 a.m. news conference.

Top brass and patrol officers were jolted by the news.

"It was a little shocking," said Capt. Kevin Anderson, commander of the 8th District. "There was no indication earlier, but I'm sure he had his reasons. I can tell you this much: This has been the most trying incident anyone could go through in their lifetime," referring to Katrina.

Anderson praised Compass as an "outstanding" superintendent, who had been "a friend to me and a friend to the entire city."

Several district captains said they heard about Compass' sudden retirement through the media or by telephone as the news rippled through the department. They said they were surprised that Compass didn't follow the typical protocol of informing his officers before any public announcement.

"I'm extremely surprised by this, but these have been surprising times," said Police Association of New Orleans President David Benelli.

Two captains said they met with the chief Monday and nothing seemed amiss.

Capt. Timothy Bayard, the vice and narcotics chief who has commanded boat rescues since Katrina, said the timing of Compass' retirement was unfortunate, whether it was voluntary or forced.

"The timing is not good, man, not good at all," Bayard said. "We're in the middle of a crisis and now this? He was driving the ship. I have a lot of young officers with their heads cocked sideways, looking to someone for leadership, wondering which way they're going. It's going to have a trickle-down effect and it's not the right trickle-down effect."

Compass is the latest in a series of high-profile members of the Nagin administration to resign during the mayor's first term. Those who preceded him out the door included two chief administrative officers, an intergovernmental aide, the economic development director and a communications director.

Benelli heaped praise on a man he considered both a boss and a friend.

"The men and women of this department had a real friend in Eddie Compass. He was a cop's cop. He rose through the ranks and he experienced the department at every level," Benelli said. "He was the one who really brought the family tradition back to the New Orleans Police Department. He represented the spirit of this department and during the darkest hours of the hurricane, it was the spirit of the men and women of this department that kept this city afloat."

Other city politicians were also taken aback by the news.

"This is a big loss. He gave a damn," City Council President Oliver Thomas said. Thomas declined to speculate on whether Compass' handling of the Katrina crisis precipitated his departure.

"I have not had time to rate his performance," he said. "All I know is he managed to keep together as much of his department as possible."

Council member Jackie Clarkson said she, too, had no clue this was coming, and praised Compass for "the masterful job the police did in the saving of so many citizens of New Orleans."

On the choice of a permanent successor for Compass, Benelli said his only preference is someone from within the department.

"The next chief should be someone within the ranks of the NOPD. No outsider need apply," Benelli said. "If it's Chief (Warren) Riley or any of the deputy chiefs, I'm sure they'd serve the city well."

MURPHY
OIL USA, INC.

September 28, 2005

Dear St. Bernard Parish Friends and Neighbors:

I write this letter as many of you are returning to the parish for your first view of the unbelievable destruction wrought by Hurricane Katrina. If your experience is like mine, you will be stunned by the destructive force of the storm and the devastation left in its wake.

On the day after the storm, I went to the parish to see what the storm had done to our refinery and to the community. Murphy's Meraux Refinery sustained damage, but what was really heart-breaking was seeing what Katrina had done to St. Bernard Parish.

Two weeks ago, as I drove through the community seeing one street after another of broken windows, twisted roofs, battered buildings and water-ravaged homes, three things became obvious to me. First, Katrina had not only devastated the community, it had also devastated lives. Second, we all owe a huge debt to the brave men and women who stood on the front lines and battled this terrible tragedy on that first day and remain there today slowly but surely regaining ground. Third, Murphy Oil needs to help our neighbors and make a major commitment to bringing St. Bernard Parish back to life.

In the days since then, all of us at Murphy have committed ourselves to those two tasks and I would like to take this opportunity to tell you what we are doing, or plan on doing, to address both of these challenges.

As you might expect, in the days immediately after the disaster, Murphy's first priority was to do what we could to help local relief efforts, to contact our employees to ensure that they and their families had survived the disaster, and to make sure the refinery was secure. In those first dark days, Murphy did what we could to help the local relief effort by providing fuel for, and assistance to, all emergency relief vehicles in the area and cooperating as fully as possible with all relief officials. We also set out to find our employees and I am happy to tell you that we have now succeeded in locating all of them. Like you, many of them have homes that have been damaged or destroyed, but they all survived and many are working with us to bring the refinery back on line as soon as possible. On a less positive note, as many of you know, the storm damaged one of our storage tanks which leaked oil into some of the areas surrounding the refinery. All appropriate authorities were immediately notified and more than 100 spill response and recovery experts were deployed. Some oil did get off refinery property; however, much of the off-site spill has already evaporated or been recovered from public areas.

We also used this time to gain a better understanding of what we could do to help people, businesses and response organizations get through these difficult times and on to the road to recovery. We are still working on some of the questions and issues, but let me tell you about some of the things Murphy is committed to doing right now.

First, we want to help refinery employees get back on their feet. We've provided them with an extra month's pay to help them cover emergency expenses and have continued to pay salaries to all workers. Furthermore, we intend to announce some additional financial measures to help those refinery employees who are displaced from their homes by the storm until the plant is back up and running. We're also providing them with information about progress at the refinery and plans for getting people back to work.

Second, we are committing $5 million to community relief and rebuilding efforts, including:

- a $2 million gift to St. Bernard Parish to help fund relief efforts in the parish;
- a $1 million gift to the St. Bernard Parish United Way;
- a $1 million gift to the St. Bernard Parish Public Schools System; and
- creation of a $1 million program to help local businesses re-open and get people back to work.

We sincerely hope and believe that these contributions will benefit all of our neighbors.

We understand that some of you have questions about whether or not your homes and property may have been affected by the oil leak caused by the storm. At the moment it is our understanding that all final determinations about the safety and habitability and future of property in St. Bernard Parish have to be made by local, state and federal governmental agencies. Residents who believe they may have been impacted are encouraged to call 1-877-511-1006.

There is no doubt that Hurricane Katrina tremendously impacted St. Bernard Parish, but my travels in the parish and conversations with the brave people of the community have reassured me that it didn't damage our spirit or willingness to help each other. It is clear to me that the families and businesses of St. Bernard Parish intend to rebuild their lives and their community, and I want you to know that Murphy will help you with both.

Thank you for your courage and determination.

Sincerely,

W. Michael Hulse
President, Murphy Oil USA, Inc.

A car in Orleans Parish turns around after finding Airline Drive still blocked by a rock levee on Tuesday. The dam was built in a race against the clock after floodwaters from the breached 17th Street Canal began pouring out of New Orleans along Airline and into East Jefferson. The dike stands about seven feet tall and runs about 500 feet across Airline at the Jefferson-Orleans line.

Materials may be kept near dam sites

AIRLINE, from A-1

"It's not feasible to leave an eight-foot hump in the middle of a primary business route. We need Airline open," said Assistant Secretary Gordon Nelson of the Louisiana Department of Transportation and Development. "I haven't had a chance yet to talk with local officials — which I will do — but I would think that with the cool front moving in, water levels will drop in the next few days, and we'll be able to go ahead and remove the levee."

The rock dams were built in a race against the clock after floodwaters from the breached 17th Street Canal began pouring out of New Orleans along Airline and into East Jefferson. The largest of the dikes stands about seven feet tall and runs about 500 feet across Airline at the Jefferson-Orleans line. Others blocked Jefferson Highway, Palmetto Street and Northline.

Some Jefferson Parish officials want the structures to remain in place, to stop the possibility of more flooding during the two months that remain in the hurricane season. And the dams did win a temporary reprieve because Hurricane Rita barreled into the Gulf of Mexico and threatened Louisiana last week.

But now that the water level in Lake Pontchartrain and the canal is falling dramatically, state highway officials say, the dams must fall as well.

Nelson said materials used to build the Airline levee, which included three sizes of rock stacked from largest to smallest, can be stockpiled near the site so they are handy if the dikes need to be rebuilt in a pinch.

Jefferson Parish Public Works Director Jose Gonzalez said someone already has removed part of the Jefferson Highway dike so that one lane is available for travel. The Palmetto and Northline dams remained in place Tuesday, but Gonzalez said he knows those eventually will have to go.

"I can tell you that eventually, the state will require removal of all of them, but I can't help you with when," he said. "I've not been given any marching orders from Jefferson Parish officials to remove them, but it would make sense that when that happens for the materials to be maintained on the site."

When asked whether the dams could be rebuilt quickly enough to save Jefferson Parish from flooding if another breach occurs in the New Orleans side of the canal, Gonzalez said it's all a matter of timing.

"If we were to have a problem in the middle of the night, and there was too little communication with New Orleans and we wouldn't know about a breach until the next morning, it could be difficult," he said.

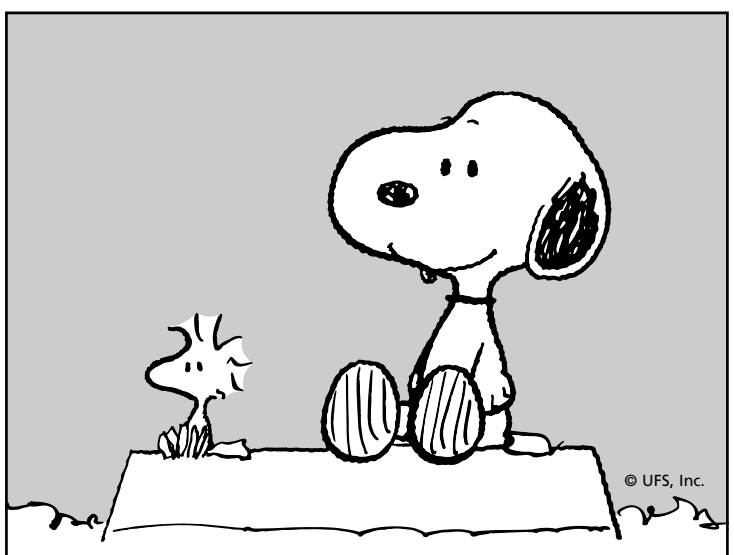
"But there's a lot of eyes out there now, with the (Army) Corps of Engineers and all the contractors, so I suspect if something happened again, we'd know pretty soon," Gonzalez said. "Then we'd get busy mobilizing our people."

That's cold comfort to other parish officials who aren't comfortable with the idea of removing their makeshift dikes until the damaged canal bank is in better shape. Parish Councilman John Young, for example, said he understands the state's desire to reopen Airline, but he's wary of seeing the dike removed with the levee system in Orleans so battered.

"I'm not trying to be insensitive to other parishes, but I was elected to represent the residents of Jefferson Parish," Young said. "And as long as hurricane season is still open, we have to protect this parish."

Young said he's concerned it might not be possible to protect East Jefferson without the makeshift levee.

"We're really on the horns of a dilemma," Young said. "And it seems to me that the levee needs to be preserved until … everybody sits down together and comes up with a global solution to this problem."



East Jefferson Levee District President Patrick Bossetta suggested leaving the Airline dam in place and building a temporary asphalt road over it, so that Airline could accommodate some traffic until the canal levee on the New Orleans side is fully restored.

"I wasn't consulted because it's not my bailiwick," Bossetta said. "But my opinion is now that it's there, it needs to stay until somebody can assure Jefferson Parish that the Orleans levee system won't have another breach," he said.

"Had that levee been in place when the breach in the 17th Street Canal occurred, these homes off Airline and in Old Metairie wouldn't have flooded."

Laura Bush joins filming on Mississippi coast

'Extreme Makeover' brings in donations

By Jay Reeves
Associated Press writer

BILOXI, MISS. — Laura Bush made her reality TV debut Tuesday, helping with a filming of "Extreme Makeover: Home Edition" in a sweltering community building as she toured hurricane relief sites on the Mississippi coast.

With hundreds of people crowded into the Biloxi Community Center, where a mountain of donated clothes covered a stage, Bush and Preston Sharp, a designer on the ABC-TV show, greeted storm victims and handed out donated items from big plastic bins.

"Extreme Makeover" usually remodels homes for needy people with compelling stories. It came to the coast to help distribute items donated for victims of Katrina, which displaced as many as 1 million people in Louisiana and Mississippi.

Later, with sweat beading on her forehead under the blazing sun, Bush said she was encouraged by the way governments, private organizations, faith-based groups and individuals were helping ease the suffering after the Aug. 29 hurricane that killed at least 220 Mississippians and left major damage along the state's 90-mile coast.

"It's going to take all of these working together to help people rebuild their lives," she said.

Bush previously visited the Mississippi town of Poplarville with the president to view damage. On Tuesday, she was struck by the extent of the devastation in Biloxi, where virtually every building was damaged and mounds of rubble lined streets waiting to be picked up.

"It really is heartbreaking," she said.

As she spoke, the president toured areas along the Louisiana-Texas border where Hurricane Rita came ashore last weekend.

A spokeswoman for Laura Bush, Susan Whitson, said the "Extreme Makeover" segment would likely air in early December.

Before Bush entered the community center where the show was filming, a director shooed away both victims and volunteers from the doorway, instructing them how to react as her entourage entered.

"Act surprised!" he said above the din.

A clinic offering free treatment and medicine at the community center had to shut down briefly during Bush's visit. Some of the people who came to see her had the mistaken belief that there was going to be a drawing for free appliances donated by Sears, Roebuck & Co., which has a tie-in with the show.

"That's why people are here. We don't need clothes. We're not walking around naked," said Susie Hightower, 53.

Afterward, Bush handed out meals to storm victims and volunteers at a Salvation Army assistance center set up in an old football stadium.

Displaced residents and workers are living in about two dozen tents set up under the goal post in an end zone, and dozens of people stood in line awaiting assistance beside a concrete bleacher.

Les Burroughs, a Salvation Army captain from Canada, said as many as 500 people a day receive gift cards at the center to use for merchandise. Hundreds more are getting meals, medical help or shade under the big red-and-white awning set up on the field, he said.

"A lot of people come here because it's become home sort of," Burroughs said.

Katrina sticks lawmaker into dad's shoes

Father gave speech after Camille in '69

By Emily Wagster Pettus
Associated Press writer

JACKSON, MISS. — Rep. Jim Simpson Sr. stood before the Mississippi House in 1969 to thank the state and the nation for helping the Gulf Coast after a horrific hurricane.

On Tuesday, his son did the same.

Rep. Jim Simpson Jr., R-Long Beach, first apologized to his colleagues for breaking the House chamber's coat-and-tie dress code.

"The fact is, I don't own a suit and I don't own a coat and I don't own a tie and I don't own a home," he said. "I am no different than 90 percent of my constituents and my neighbors."

The younger Simpson choked back tears as he read the speech his father delivered on Aug. 27, 1969 — just 10 days after Hurricane Camille flattened the Simpsons' hometown of Pass Christian.

Jim Simpson Sr., a Democrat, served from January 1964 to January 1992 and died in 1994. He said in 1969 that he saw a new light on the Mississippi coast in the dark days after Camille.

"'This light comes from the north, the east and the west and every point in this great state and generous nation,'" his son read. "'This light is called hope.'

"'It comes from every place in the United States of America, in the form of medical supplies, food, water, clothing and the essentials that are necessary to sustain life,'" he read. "'But even more important, it has come in your faith and your prayers and your love, and these are essentials to sustain not our bodies but our spirits — and sustain them it has.'"

Camille was one of the most intense hurricanes ever to hit the United States, but its band of destruction was narrower than that of Hurricane Katrina, which wiped out tens of thousands of homes and business across Mississippi's 80-mile coastline when it hit last month.

Several coast legislators lost their homes in Katrina. The House and Senate are in special session to respond to the hurricane.

Like his father 36 years ago, Jim Simpson Jr. thanked fellow Mississippians and Americans for their help and their prayers.

"We call upon you again individually and collectively to help us stand proudly in our communities again," he said, choking back tears. "We need you to help our fathers to go back to work. We need you to help our mothers return to making our homes proud and places where we can raise our children again. We need you to help our children laugh and have a place to go to school and a place to come home to again."

Virginia to open oyster season early to help harvest

By The Associated Press

NEWPORT NEWS, VA. — Virginia marine regulators took steps Tuesday to prop up the oyster industry ravaged by Gulf Coast hurricanes by opening the state's harvesting season early and increasing the daily catch permitted.

The Virginia Marine Resources Commission voted to open the season Oct. 1 for most areas and to increase the daily limit from eight to 12 bushels.

However, the commission granted a request from Tangier Island watermen to delay the start of their season until Dec. 1 and to retain an eight-bushel limit.

Tim Wesson, director of oyster replenishment for the commission, said the increase in the daily catch means that Virginia's beds will be depleted faster.

"It will definitely shorten the season," Wesson said.

Brown is lambasted by both parties

BROWN, from A-1

Orleans can be attributed to the refusal of Gov. Kathleen Blanco and New Orleans Mayor Ray Nagin to order a mandatory evacuation until the day before Hurricane Katrina hit. By then, he said, it was too late to evacuate all of the city's nearly 500,000 residents, including thousands without transportation.

Brown said his two biggest mistakes were not holding regular briefings for the media and his failure "to persuade Gov. Blanco and Mayor Nagin to sit down, get over their differences and work together. I just couldn't pull that off."

Under questioning, Brown said another mistake was not recognizing by the Saturday before the hurricane made landfall that "Louisiana was dysfunctional," describing the state's command center as in a constant state of confusion.

Nagin called it "unfortunate" for Brown "to be up there in Washington trying to deflect attention away from his own performance. I'm not up there, so I really can't defend myself. But at the proper time I will."

Blanco pointed out that Brown had wrongly characterized the area covered by her emergency order and the timing of her evacuation order.

"Such falsehoods and misleading statements, made under oath before Congress, are shocking," Blanco said in a written statement. "It clearly demonstrates the appalling degree to which Mr. Brown is either out of touch with the truth or reality."

Rep. William Jefferson, D-New Orleans, called it "absolutely stunning" that Brown would blame Blanco and Nagin. Even if the criticism was valid, and Jefferson said it wasn't, FEMA's own study showed a Category 4 hurricane in New Orleans, like Katrina, would overwhelm local and state officials. The burden clearly was on the federal government, and it didn't respond adequately in the days after the hurricane, Jefferson said.

Others members were harder on Brown than they were on former Attorney General Janet Reno after the botched attempt to rescue children from the Branch Davidian compound in Texas, and the closed-door questioning of former Central Intelligence Agency Director George Tenet over the failed intelligence that led the United States to claim that Saddam Hussein had weapons of mass destruction before the invasion of Iraq in 2003.

AP PHOTO

Michael Brown, former chief of the Federal Emergency Management Agency, defends his response to Hurricane Katrina before Congress on Tuesday. Brown said he is happy to take responsibility for post-storm failures if it causes FEMA to get more resources.

'You get an F-minus'

The criticism didn't just come from Democrats. Republicans also sharply criticized Brown, who resigned as FEMA head three days after the Bush administration replaced him as the coordinator of the federal government's Katrina relief efforts.

Rep. Christopher Shays, R-Conn., said Blanco and Nagin clearly carry an "incredible black mark" for not ordering a mandatory evacuation sooner than 24 hours before the hurricane struck. But he said Brown failed to exercise the kind of leadership to respond to such a huge emergency. Coordinating an emergency response, he said, meant doing more than trying to persuade Nagin and Blanco to evacuate New Orleans.

"And that's why I'm happy you left," Shays said. "That kind of look in the lights like a deer tells me you weren't capable of doing that job."

Gene Taylor, D-Miss., one of three Democrats from hurricane-ravaged communities participating in the hearing despite a boycott declared by Democratic leaders who questioned its impartiality, said the recovery effort failed outside of Louisiana as well.

He said local residents and first responders in coastal Mississippi were left with little choice but to loot stores for food and clothing because promised food water and supplies from FEMA never arrived.

"Now, again, you can try to throw as much as you can on the backs of Louisianians, but I'm a witness as to what happened in Mississippi. You folks fell on your face. You get an F-minus in my book," Taylor said.

Some Republicans on the panel tried to shift some of the blame from Brown to Nagin and Blanco. Rep. Steve Buyer, R-Ind., for example, asked Brown whether he found it "stunning" that Blanco, in her initial request for disaster status before the hurricane struck, had not included Orleans and Jefferson parishes in the initial request for federal assistance.

Jefferson later presented copies of the governor's request for an emergency declaration, which included all "the southeastern parishes including the New Orleans metropolitan area."

Budget cuts blamed

Brown, who for many became the symbol of the government's failure to help thousands of people in New Orleans who were trapped without water and food for the days, called some of the criticism unfair. He angrily disputed Shays' suggestion that he should have done more to force an earlier mandatory evacuation.

"So, I guess you want me to be the superhero, to step in there and take everyone out of New Orleans," Brown said.

Shays responded: "What I wanted you to do is do your job and coordinate."

Brown said he is happy to be the scapegoat if it means that FEMA will get the resources it needs.

He said he probably should have resigned long before the hurricane to indicate his dissatisfaction with budget cuts that at one point left his agency 500 workers short of its normal staff of 2,500. The agency became part of the Department of Homeland Security after the 2001 terrorist attacks, and some members of Congress are now proposing to make it an independent agency again.

At one point after the hurricane struck, Brown said he met with Nagin outside the Superdome and got a detailed list with priorities of what the city needed to help people stranded in the Superdome, the Ernest N. Morial Convention Center and on rooftops and attics.

Brown said he wanted to help Nagin and delivered the requests to the state emergency coordinator who was supposed to coordinate all requests for help.

But to this day, he said, he doesn't know whether the requests were acted upon.

It's not all bad out there for evacuees

I don't know all my cousins in Maringouin.

I don't even pretend to know all the cousins of cousins and the many people who are "just like family" in this small town, now a refuge to Hurricane Katrina evacuees like me.

My first couple of weeks here, this proved to be confusing. As I drove by, people waved at me from their yards and front porches.

Was I supposed to know them? Were these the cousins who owned the unfamiliar names my mother had mentioned?

Maybe, maybe not.

I've come to learn that, in at least one respect, Maringouin – a few highway exits west of Baton Rouge — is the way New Orleans used to be. People speak and wave to each other, even if they haven't met.

You earn a "Hello" or a "How're feeling?" just because you are a human being. No other criteria need be met.

Civility was rationed

I have often lamented the decline of this sort of civility in my home town.

In recent years, you can't be sure that an adult will respond to a "Good morning."

I've come to learn that, in at least one respect, Maringouin – a few highway exits west of Baton Rouge — is the way New Orleans used to be. People speak and wave to each other, even if they haven't met.

For the younger generation, kids raised on the angry lyrics of rap and heavy metal, smiles and greetings seem to be precious commodities to be dispensed sparingly or privately.

Even the cashiers in most of the check out lines at home, say "thank you" begrudgingly. You get the impression that they are only saying it because the training manual demands it. They do not wish to feign any sort of warmth or familiarity with someone as lowly as a mere customer.

A learning experience

Now that the New Orleans diaspora has been cast into the various regions of this country, no doubt many of us are seeing things, new things, that are very different from the things we are used to at home.

We evacuees spend a lot of time complaining about the difficulty of finding the good restaurants in Baton Rouge, or the impossibility of finding good smoked sausage or pickled meat of any caliber in Vermont.

These complaints have their place.

But, perhaps by the time we return home, we will have left something of ourselves in these far flung locales and helped to make them better.

Perhaps when we return, we will have learned something about civility or dressing for cold weather that can be useful in the construction of a better New Orleans.

Clarence Rodriguez's neighborhood is now barren, silent and dirty. But he confounds the cliché that no man is an island by finding peace amid the 9th Ward ruins

As a young man growing up in New Orleans and neighboring Jefferson Parish, Clarence Rodriguez always dreamed of life in the wild, on the bayou, in a water world free of the slings and arrows of city life.

He yearned for solitude and peace.

After decades in the city, Rodriquez said his dreams of sweet loneliness are now his reality, thanks to the catastrophe named Katrina.

For nearly a month – since the big one rumbled through the city and floodwaters swallowed most neighborhoods whole – he has been an island unto himself, living a post-hurricane fantasy from his water-logged home on Lesseps Street, in the upper reaches of the city's devastated 9th Ward.

"This is what life is all about. Peace and quiet," he said Tuesday, sitting on a glider bench in front of his baby-blue shotgun double and tinkering with a radio he'd rigged to a 9-volt battery.

During the day he works to clean up his house. He removes debris, works on stripping the floors and dumps his home's moldy guts on the curb.

At night he paces the block, taking in the now quiet nights of the 9th Ward. The silence is golden, he said. No more gunshots in the darkness. No car stereos blaring and no neighborly chatter.

Most mornings he rises when he feels moved to do so. He strips off his clothes and steps into his backyard. He unrolls the shower curtain that once hung in his bathroom and spreads it across the ground, using the rain water collected from a cracked drain jutting from his roof to soap up and rinse off.

"I finally feel free," Rodriguez said. "I ain't going nowhere."

For 12 days following the hurricane, Rodriguez lived inside his flooded domain, water on the first night having crested just a foot or so from his ceiling.

Rodriquez's neighborhood, not far from the breached Industrial Canal, is now barren, silent and dirty. Dark flood lines ring the battered homes on his block, between Roman and Derbigny streets, like black eyes on prizefighters

St. Bernard death toll grows

Grandmother, diabetic man are new victims

By Manuel Torres and Paul Rioux
St. Bernard/Plaquemines bureau

A woman found dead by her grandson inside her Meraux mobile home and a school janitor who suffered a heart attack following treatment for a Hurricane Katrina-related injury have pushed the storm's official body count in St. Bernard Parish to 100, officials said Tuesday.

St. Bernard Parish Coroner Bryan Bertucci said the two latest victims were added to the storm's grim tally even though an autopsy is pending on the janitor, a diabetic man who injured a leg during the storm. Bertucci said the injury got infected, possibly aggravating the man's heart problems. Officials have not publicly identified any of the storm's victims. The body of the elderly woman was found Monday morning after officials reopened most of the parish to residents.

Bertucci said a Kenner Police officer who is the woman's grandson went by

Road to recovery starts with gridlock

St. Tammany bureau

Traffic on several major roadways in Slidell ground to a near-halt this week as thousands of anxious St. Bernard Parish residents struggled to return to what's left of their homes by routes through a city whose population has almost doubled in recent weeks.

Although traffic has been unusually heavy on many roads in St. Tammany Parish's densely populated suburban areas in recent weeks, the worst chokepoint Tuesday was through south Slidell along Pontchartrain Drive and southbound U.S. 11.

Police posted along the road in front of First Baptist Church monitored the situation to be on the lookout for road-rage incidents and to respond to accidents more quickly than other units whose movements were

9 N.O. firefighters central to Katrina rescues

They took 911 calls, patrolled for days

By Meghan Gordon
Staff writer

The nine men of New Orleans Fire Engine Company No. 18 who rode out Katrina in the Lake Marina Tower could see water rising around them as the storm pushed across the city. They climbed to the building's 18th floor and peered out through the rain and flying debris.

At first suspecting the city had missed another "big one," they knew differently when they spotted the scene about a half-mile away along the 17th Street Canal.

"Once we saw the levee breach, my heart just dropped," Capt. Paul Hellmers said. "We knew it was all over, that the entire city was going to flood."

Hellmers and his colleagues started scanning the surrounding neighborhoods with binoculars, searching for boats floating in now-flooded back yards and driveways.

When the winds finally died down to 40 mph, Hellmers went out with firefighter Gabe King to retrieve the first vessel – a key to the engine company's rescue efforts that would play out for the better part of the week.

The pair reached the boat by swimming through blocks of floating debris. They cut it loose from its trailer, which was still attached as it floated.

HURRICANE HEROES

Firefighters searched block by block for survivors

"We were able to get it across the street and up into a fallen tree to keep (the wind) from sweeping us away," Hellmers said.

They held onto a downed power line until they were able to safely head back to the tower. One in the group made quick repairs to the boat and returned to find more boats, while Hellmers patched up two large gashes on his foot from sheet metal and glass in the floodwaters.

Hellmers stayed behind to stop the bleeding, but continued to coordinate the crew's new fleet of rescue boats. He hopped back into a boat a day and a half later.

The first call the team received from the still-working 911 system was from an elderly man in Lakeview.

"The old man was standing on his bathtub with the water up to his neck, and the water was rising about six inches every 15 minutes," Hellmers said. "A few minutes later might have been too late."

The 911 calls and shouts from houses continued, and the faces of survivors blurred together as the number of rescues mounted, Hellmers said.

"It was almost impossible to go through the streets, because you were trying to go through an oak tree," Hellmers said. "You had to go through front yards."

By Tuesday afternoon, the boat crews had started to patrol methodically, moving from block to block, sometimes docking on a roof and hollering into an attic homes seem to have reached the end of the line. Some are crumbling or have heavy debris – yard ornamentation, even cars — tossed across their lawns or through their windows and doors.

His neighbors long since vanished into the ether. Most were evacuated. Some were rescued. All are gone.

Except for a friend of his who's a state trooper and the occasional National Guard patrols who stop by to check on him, he's had very little human contact.

But there are the animals: three dogs, two birds and a gaggle of homeless cats he keeps alive with foraged pet food and water.

The animals aren't like most of the people in his life. They're not like his brother, sister or buddies who ran off and got married and are now too caught up in their own lives to bother with him.

The animals, he said, "know how to show you that they love you."

"They're always so happy to see me," he said, sticking his tongue out, panting and shaking his behind the way the dogs do when they see him coming.

"People ain't like that," he said, "they always want to ask 'what you want, can I borrow this, or what did you do now.'"

Instead of fleeing in the face of possibly toxic, tainted waters, Rodriguez decided to defy mandatory evacuation orders and stay put.

"I was built for this," Rodriguez said, striding barefoot across exposed floorboards. "I got those survival instincts. I'm like Robinson Crusoe, a neighborhood MacGyver."

Going to a shelter wasn't an option. Too many people. Too much negative energy.

"Living like a gypsy wasn't going to work for me," Rodriguez said. "I'm too much of a loner."

Before hurricanes Katrina and Rita, the pressures of life were closing in on him.

"Just some personal problems," he said. "I just wanted a change. I needed some time away."

Katrina stormed through New Orleans that Monday. The floodwaters came on her heels, spilling from several breaks in the city's levee system.

Rodriguez's home, a shotgun double, appeared structurally sound, but on its way to the ceiling the water had damaged much of his personal property.

"This whole hurricane brought on a whole new perspective.... Before this I think we all took so much for granted," Rodriguez said as he ducked clothes hanging from a rope across his bedroom and walked into the kitchen. He pointed to the counter where he slept for several days when his home was a reservoir.

His prized audio system and television set: destroyed. His record collection: wilted but drying on the mildewed, buckling floorboards. The record sleeves are faded and folding. All his favorites were destroyed, sand in their grooves: Richard Pryor, Morris Day and the Time, Earth Wind and Fire, The Commodores, Rick James, Grover Washington, Jr., all lost.

The tools of his trade as a "fix-it man" — a brand new miter saw, an air compressor and various mechanized tools — were also damaged in the flood.

In the corner of the living room, plastered against a backdrop of peeling beige wallpaper is what he calls his "bachelor's shrine," a collage of Jet magazine Beauty of the Week centerfolds and buck-naked pictures of curvaceous women, circa the late 1980s.

Rodriquez spread his arms wide, took a deep breath and smiled.

"Just a little bit out of place," he said, surveying soiled furniture scattered cockeyed and catty-corner around and about. "You know. Just a little bit out of place."

He said he can live without the material comforts he'd grown somewhat attached to over the years, but two losses hit him especially hard, he said: "The companionship of a fine woman and some cold Heineken" – as distinguished from the warm Heineken he squirreled away for emergency use.

Before the hurricane tore away the neighborhood's power lines, Rodriguez said he barely used his telephone, besides his weekly call to his mother, and rarely watched television or used the air conditioner.

"I never really aspired to be rich," he said. "Just happy."

He sipped from a warm can of Heineken, recalling the moment he realized his home was filling with water.

The night of the hurricane, Rodriguez said he was laid up in bed with a girlfriend from the neighborhood. A beer buzz had carried him into a deep sleep.

Then he heard water, lots of it, lapping in what he thought was the alley next to his home. He stumbled from his bed, and found himself standing in water, waist-high and rising.

Everything began to float. The box spring rose to the top of the door frame and got wedged on top of a bookshelf. He hoisted his lady onto the mattress and then followed her up there. They slept like logs that night.

The next day the water had fallen to chest high levels and Rodriquez's survival instincts kicked in.

"I had to be strong," he said. "I had to take care of me, my lady and some of my neighbors."

Food was a first consideration. His refrigerator had flipped over and opened. He plunged into the bayou that was now his kitchen and emerged with eight pieces of chicken, a bag of cooked jambalaya and some macaroni and cheese in a plastic container.

Escaping neighbors handed off more meat: pork chops, chicken wings and hot dogs. Rodriguez grabbed a square foil pan, the rack from his oven and some charcoal. He took his makeshift grill to the top of his pick up truck, the driest place he could find, and started barbecuing.

"I thought it was brilliant," he said of his improvised cookout. "Just brilliant. We ate good. Real good."

For his efforts, Rodriguez said he got an ear infection and lost hearing on one side for three days.

"But I proved to myself what I already knew, that I'm a survivor," he said, adjusting the wad of toilet paper he'd jammed in his left ear.

His neighbors were the first to go; the 30-something twins and their elderly father, then the man and woman across the street. As for his woman friend, she left to be with her family on the West Bank and didn't come back.

Two days into the hurricane's aftermath, Rodriquez was alone. And a month later he's still alone and loving it.

He finally has the time to gut that old 1975 Camaro in his driveway.

And while he's at it, maybe finish rehabbing his rusted 1968 Ford pickup as well.

"This suits me just fine," he said. "All I got to do now is sit on my porch and watch the grass grow. Just sit back, wait and watch everybody else come back."

Woman's home may have been overlooked

BODIES, from B-1

her home at the Myrtle Grove trailer park, in the shadow of the Murphy Oil Refinery in Meraux. Hurricane Katrina, however, had pushed the mobile home off its foundation, carried it about half a block and over a fence before dumping it in the backyard of a nearby home. That's where the officer found the home, Bertucci said, and inside it the body of his grandmother.

Bertucci said recovery teams searching every home in the parish "may have overlooked" the woman's home, perhaps believing it was an uninhabited work shed because of its location in the backyard of another home.

"The trailer . . . wasn't where it was supposed to be," Bertucci said. "The family was very angry at first. After we explained what had happened they became very depressed."

The finding came almost a month after Katrina roared through the parish, lashing it with fierce winds and a tidal surge that put much of it under 22 feet of water. Since nearly all of the parish's homes have been searched for victims, some on several occasions, St. Bernard Council members were surprised Monday when Bertucci announced the discovery of the woman's body's during a regular Parish Council meeting.

"Jesus!" exclaimed Councilwoman Judy Hoffmeister.

News of the second victim came shortly after. The man, a janitor at Chalmette High School, was working in the same building where the meeting was taking place when he collapsed. Emergency personnel rushed to his aid, but their efforts to keep him alive were in vain. After the meeting adjourned, it was announced that he had died, and the Lord's Prayer was said for him.

"He was our No. 100," Bertucci said.

The figure includes 34 people found dead at St. Rita's Nursing Home near Poydras. The couple who owns the home has been booked with 34 counts of negligent homicide for failing to evacuate the victims ahead of the storm.

But in spite of the rising body count, officials found a bit of good news. Bertucci said the final tally of victims will be much lower than officials' initial forecast of several hundred.

And on Tuesday he confirmed that no bodies have been found related to reports that the storm had drowned as many as 22 people in the Jumonville Estates subdivision in Meraux. In the days following Katrina, officials said they had received reports that the bodies had been seen tied to one another, suggesting the victims had tried to save themselves from Katrina's rage. That detail and the large number of potential victims made the reports one of the most chilling facts in the chaotic aftermath of the storm.

But Bertucci on Tuesday said multiple recovery teams, including himself, have searched the subdivision and nearby areas and found no bodies.

"Not one," he said. "And that many bodies, you would have been able to smell them."

It's likely, he said, that those who called in the report saw something that looked like bodies and were not.

"You learn pretty early that until you pick up a body you don't record anything," Bertucci said.

vent to search for survivors.

They kept at it for two more days, exhausted, hot and sunburned. Besides Hellmers and King, the team was Capt. Gordon Case; Capt. Joe Fincher; firefighters Pat Ball, Lee Beba and Michael Byrne; and operators Steve Condon and Stanley Harris.

After three nights of little sleep on Lake Marina Tower's concrete pool deck, as helicopters buzzed overhead, the fire company made it to the New Orleans Saints' training facility in Metairie for a bit of well-deserved rest.

Hellmers praised his colleagues' efforts during that grueling first week and said none of them complained, despite the many discomforts and traumatic scenes.

"It really couldn't have gone any better," he said. "Everyone did what they had to do."

Tragedy takes a human face

3 bodies identified in St. Tammany

By Meghan Gordon
St. Tammany bureau

A falling tree killed Gary Hingle, and it wasn't until the next day that firefighters could retrieve his body from his traumatized relatives. Ralph Rutledge's sport utility vehicle floated off Interstate 10 as floodwaters swallowed half of Slidell. And Tommy Kikendall's body ended up near a heap of debris days after he struggled to survive in his flooded home, where he wrote a goodbye letter to his wife.

Though the bodies represent only a fraction of the dead pulled from Hurricane Katrina, the three identifications made public by the St. Tammany Parish coroner this week put some of the first faces on southeast Louisiana's death toll. As hundreds of corpses plucked from floodwaters and unearthed from debris piles lay unidentified at the St. Gabriel morgue, families of the three men who died in Slidell became part of the initial wave of relatives to have certainty about their loved ones' fates.

But the knowledge hasn't amounted to an endpoint for most of them, as their grieving stretches on while the routine processes for handling the dead are re-established. Two families will wait five weeks to hold funerals, and one expects to wait many months longer for a burial.

David Hingle knew hours before Katrina's winds even ceased that his brother's tombstone would read Aug. 29.

Gary Hingle, 51, stayed for the storm at his house on Hunter's Creek Road north of Slidell with his fiancee, her two children and his brother. When water began seeping into his enclosed patio at 5 a.m., Hingle woke up his brother and asked him for help rigging two pumps to bail out the room. They alternately worked on the equipment and tried to pull large branches away from the house in the moments they thought it was safe to step outside.

"I got about 15 feet away, and I felt the ground tearing all around me. I stepped to the side, and the tree just missed me."

The uprooted white oak crashed down on Gary Hingle, its mass of branches and 3-foot trunk obscuring him. David Hingle spent almost 10 minutes pulling tree limbs from the pile and eventually found his brother's face. He tried desperately to drag him to level ground and start chest compressions to revive him.

"He was twisted really bad, but I was able to get his chest down a little bit," he said. "I put my hand under the top of his head to tilt his head to clear his airways. When I put my hand around the back, I felt the top of his head open."

TRAFFIC, from B-1

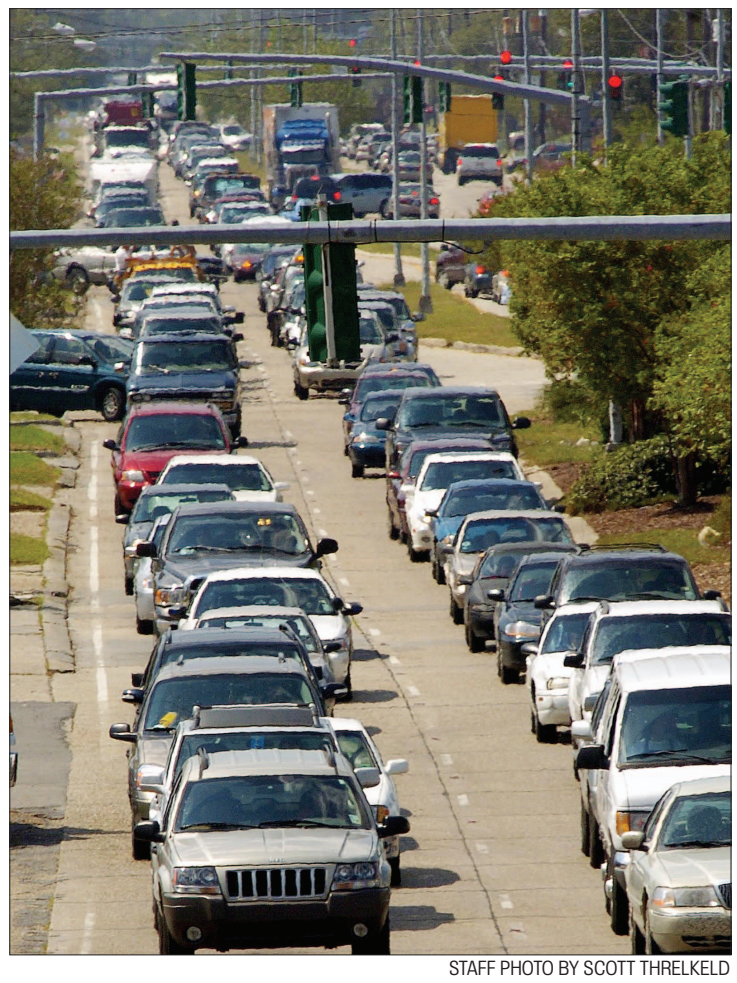
hampered by traffic elsewhere in the city.

Throughout the day, progress along a 2.5-mile stretch on Pontchartrain was measured by feet instead of blocks as motorists waited to get onto the U.S. 11 bridge across the lake to Interstate 10, then I-510 in eastern New Orleans and finally into St. Bernard.

Already-heavy traffic that developed within two weeks of Hurricane Katrina's Aug. 29 devastation of the New Orleans area became a "nightmare," in the words of several officials, during the weekend.

Many St. Bernard residents who fled the nasty weather visited upon them a second time by Saturday's Hurricane Rita began traveling back to their home parish for a Monday morning re-entrance.



The mix of anxiety, jangled nerves, heat and gridlock resulted in a spate of accidents and road-rage incidents, Slidell police and the St. Tammany Sheriff's Office said.

"If there are incidents and we can get our hands on, we are going to arrest them," Slidell Police Chief Freddy Drennan said. "We're not going to tolerate it."

Police Capt. Rob Callahan said there have been no road rage-related arrests thus far. As most municipal and parish officials have been doing for weeks, he urged Slidell area residents and motorists through the area to be patient.

"I've heard a couple of complaints about people exchanging words, shouting, giving gestures and the like, but nothing physical – at least not yet," Callahan said. "People are really agitated about the situation, but there's nothing we can do about it."

St. Tammany Parish Sheriff's Office spokesman James Hartman said there have been "very few" road rage complaints reported to deputies. "What we have had has been relatively minor" and resulted in no arrests, he said.

STAFF PHOTO BY SCOTT THRELKELD

Traffic is backed up Tuesday on Gause Boulevard at Interstate 10 in Slidell. Since Hurricane Katrina hit the region, congestion has been severe on Gause, at times extending from the interstate all the way to Northshore Boulevard.

"I've heard a couple of complaints about people exchanging words, shouting, giving gestures and the like, but nothing physical – at least not yet. People are really agitated about the situation, but there's nothing we can do about it.

Police Capt. ROB CALLAHAN

Although deputies haven't been posted at specific sites, Hartman said, south Slidell and further toward the lake on U.S. 11 have been the "area of primary gridlock" in the parish. "We've made an extraordinary effort to maintain a presence in that area," Hartman said.

Accidents before and after the drive-throughs to St. Bernard have been the worst problem, Callahan said.

"It's incredible," he said. "It's an average of about 20 a day" between 7 a.m. and 7 p.m. Most are rear-end accidents in which damage or injuries are minor.

There were two accidents involving 18-wheelers within a short time Tuesday in south Slidell.

One was a late-morning hit-and-run in which a rig scraped across the side of a woman's car at Pontchartrain and Third Street, followed by a more serious one in which "moderate to severe injuries" were reported further south.

Police said the car was "totaled" and that the axle of the tractor-trailer was broken in the accident, leaving the 18-wheeler blocking half the roadway until it could be towed away.

With many vehicles getting onto I-10 a the Gause Boulevard interchange to head toward eastern New Orleans and St. Bernard, authorities reported the traffic was heaviest from about 7 to 9 a.m. and from about 3:30 to 7 p.m.

"There's no way to put enough police officers out there to move that traffic," Slidell Mayor Ben Morris said. "You just have to go with the traffic lights. … The road system just wasn't designed to handle this many people. You just have to be patient, patient, patient."

Jeff Council to consider loan

West Bank bureau

Meeting at home for the first time since Hurricane Katrina struck Aug. 29, the Jefferson Parish Council today will consider borrowing up to $30 million to keep the government running.

"It's a safety net," said Parish Finance Director Nancy Cassagne. "It is just to prevent a cash flow crunch, to keep us flowing to pay bills and the employees."

The parish received its first payment of $12 million from the Federal Emergency Management Agency on Tuesday morning, but until then, parish officials were unsure when the money would come and are seeking the line of credit as a precaution, Cassagne said.

The council also will consider a resolution giving businesses a 30-day extension to remit their sales taxes due Sept. 1 and Saturday without penalties and interest.

"We understand everybody went through a rough time" because of the storm, Cassagne said.

When the council convenes today at 10 a.m. in the General Government Building on Derbigny Street in Gretna, it will mark the first meeting in a month. Council members met in an emergency session Aug. 31 in Baton Rouge, where they also set up a temporary office. A meeting slated in East Jefferson on Sept. 14 was canceled because of power outages, damage to the east bank government building and other problems.

By ordinance, the council is required to meet at least once a month.

Council Chairman Tom Capella said that today's meeting is important because it shows that Jefferson is open for business as residents return home.

"I am very proud of where the parish has come in less than a month," Capella said Tuesday. Referring to residents of the parish, Capella said, "Their council is up and running.'

Team spirit may rally Kenner's University City

Floods damaged homes, but neighbors have hope

By Mary Swerczek
Kenner bureau

The front lawns of many of the houses in Kenner's largest subdivision are pockmarked by mounds of trash, most taller than an adult, with items once treasured inside homes.

Mattresses, books, dining room tables, strollers, stuffed animals, couches and comfy armchairs line the curbs and neutral grounds of University City's streets.

"All of these streets are the same thing," Doyle "Ray" Patrick said, swatting flies attracted by the growing piles of garbage. "It's devastation everywhere."

But the refuse heaps are a good sign, some residents say: They mean people are returning to clean up, and stay.

"I think everybody's coming back," said Sal Scott, sweeping his Tulane Drive driveway. "There are already a lot of people cleaning their houses."

A close-knit, quiet community of modest homes on streets named after colleges, University City is a neighborhood where parents and their grown children often live nearby.

Parts of the subdivision, especially near the canals, have had flooding problems in the past, but the damage from Hurricane Katrina was on a much larger scale.

Two-thirds of the neighborhood – about 2,000 homes – took in water, said Kenner City Councilman Kent Denapolis, who represents the area.

"It's big numbers, not smaller numbers," he said. The storm put 18 inches to four feet of water in homes, he said.

But some residents returned to the area to clean up worry their neighbors may settle elsewhere if they don't have jobs in the area.

Joan S. Patrick used her savings to buy a trailer for her and her husband, and one each for their grown daughter and son, and all were parked in their driveways on West Loyola Drive.

"Where are they going to get jobs?" Joan Patrick asked, estimating that it will take four to five years for the neighborhood to return to normal. "Some of them are not going to rebuild. They're not going to come back."

Data from Census tracts which include University City show a number of area residents earn up to $6,000 less than Kenner's median income of $45,866.

Arthur Williams, who lives nearby on West Louisiana State Drive, said he will stay because he's on a fixed income.

"I will come back as soon as we can get it livable," he said, as his daughter, Fannie Rogers, and two granddaughters, Chicola Williams and Michele Hackett, cleaned up around his property. "I can't buy anywhere else because there's nothing to buy with."

Nearby, at the corner of Stanford and West Louisiana State drives, Rueben Guerra said the floods washed away his job as an outfitter for a marine company in eastern New Orleans. Forced into an earlier-than-planned retirement at 66, he said he would like to stay in the neighborhood as he cleaned up after the 18 inches of water that got inside his house.

"I still would like to stay here," he said. "I have roots here. Kenner's been my place."

But if any Kenner neighborhood rebounds quickly, residents say, it will be University City.

"These people are very resilient," Denapolis said. "They've got a lot of heart."

Resident Linda Robinson said Hurricane Katrina's floods that left four feet of water in her West Louisiana State Drive home is the first time the house has flooded in its 34 years.

Already armed with a housekeeping job, Robinson predicted that the subdivision's landscape will change, but that most residents will return.

"It's a nice neighborhood to live, very quiet," she said. "They've been here so many years. It's their home."

A row of flood-damaged appliances – including a clothes dryer that bears a Kenner resident's clearly stated feelings about Hurricane Katrina – line a street in Kenner's University City subdivision. Some residents say the piles of trash at curbs in the subdivision are a good sign: They mean people are returning.

Warren Cox of New Orleans lugs a sheet of paneling out of the home of Joan and Doyle 'Ray' Patrick, who have taken up temporary residence in a camper on their front lawn in Kenner's University City subdivision. 'All of these streets are the same thing: It's devastation everywhere,' Ray Patrick said of the subdivision, Kenner's largest.

Chelsea Adams, 9, of Belle Chasse smiles as her mother, Diane Adams, registers her for home-schooling Tuesday. Classes in Plaquemines Parish will resume Oct. 17, and home-schooling will reduce the number of days a student is counted absent from school.

Kristen Stifflemier's family evacuated to Ville Platte for Hurricane Katrina, but had to split up soon afterward when her husband returned to Plaquemines Parish to work.

The Belle Chasse family stayed behind so that their boys, Cameron Miller, 12, and Austin Miller, 11, could go to Chicot Bayou Elementary School. But the separation was tough.

"We were in Ville Platte, and we were extremely homesick," Stifflemier said.

Though Chicot Bayou school officials were nice, Stifflemier said, "it just wasn't home. They didn't give them homework."

So when the family returned home, Stifflemier decided to teach her sons herself until classes resume at Belle Chasse Middle School on Oct. 17.

Other parents also are home-schooling as they wait for the Plaquemines Parish public schools to reopen.

School officials began offering free assistance to parents Sept. 19. About 700 students had registered with the state Department of Education for the state's home-schooling program by Monday. At least 100 register daily, said teacher Jemi Carlone, one of the volunteers at a registration table set up in the primary school office.

School officials forward parents' forms to the state. Parents also can borrow textbooks and get curriculum guides at Belle Chasse Primary School. They even can get help covering tough topics from volunteer teachers working at a church in Belle Chasse.

"It's a great program," Plaquemines schools Superintendent Jim Hoyle said. "It's an opportunity for kids to continue getting their education."

Anissa Casbon and her family evacuated to Mississippi. Then they moved on to Abbeville, and when Hurricane Rita threatened that town, they returned to Mississippi.

"It was a month yesterday. We were so stir-crazy," she said.

She registered her daughter, Megan, for home-schooling Monday. She plans to enroll her at Belle Chasse High School next month.

"I know that it's going to be all right," said Megan, 14. "I know where I'm at now."

Home-schooling has other advantages for students and the district. It will reduce the number of days a student is counted absent from school, Plaquemines Parish secondary education director Carol Roberts said.

It also supports families who want to move back to the parish, something Hoyle has said is vital to maintaining the district's employee force.

"I know people want to come back, even people who don't have a home," said Belle Chasse Primary Principal Cindy Hoyle, who is married to the superintendent. "I hope we have at least 80 percent of our (pre-Katrina) enrollment."

School officials are asking parents to put their children's schoolwork in a folder for when they return to school. It is unlikely there will be time for parents to give any tests that the state may require for students who are home-schooled, Cindy Hoyle said.

A group of 30 volunteer teachers are staffing a tutoring program from Monday through Friday from 9 a.m. until 1 p.m. at the Belle Chasse Church of Christ, 105 Kimable St.

Parents in the program agree to be the teachers, teacher Nancy Fussell said. They and their children can get help, but parents must remain during the tutoring, she said.

Students sign up for Jeff schools

Gina Anderson of Algiers waits in line to register Nia, 9, left, and Ryan, 11, on Tuesday morning at Geraldine Boudreaux Elementary. Parents packed the school, with about 260 registering by 4 p.m.

Jefferson Parish public schools took a step toward normalcy Tuesday, launching a weeklong registration of students ahead of next week's opening of school.

On Tuesday by 2 p.m., 689 students had signed up, school system spokesman Jeff Nowakowski said, adding that most sites reported light crowds.

Registration, which will run through Saturday from 7:30 a.m. to 6 p.m., is designed to enroll students who are coming to Jefferson from other parishes or who have relocated within Jefferson in the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina.

At Riverdale Middle School in Metairie, Brian Walker, a rising senior at Alcee Fortier High School in New Orleans, spent about 20 minutes in the registration process.

Although worried that changing schools might jeopardize a football scholarship to Louisiana State University, Walker, 17, said he is anxious to complete high school and that signing up for a new school was the first step.

"I have to handle my business and get out," he said. "I don't care what school it is."

Rosalind Mathes, a system administrator overseeing the Riverdale Middle site, said about 60 students had registered by early afternoon.

"We can accommodate as many parents and students who show up," she said. "We are here to meet their needs. We'll take them all."

Nearby, a Riverdale Middle School Spanish teacher helped a Hispanic woman who couldn't speak English register her three young children. Registration is quick, Mathes said, with parents filling out a few forms and the information then going into the system's computer files. Before they leave, registrants have in hand the name and location of their new school and tentative transportation details, Mathes said.

Meanwhile, at Geraldine Boudreaux Elementary in Terrytown, parents packed the school early, with about 260 registering by 4 p.m.

"When we opened at 7:30 a.m., this hall was full," said Marjorie King, the administrator running the Boudreaux site, which drew the largest crowd Tuesday.

Anxious to have their children back into a school day routine, the parents didn't mind the slight wait or the paperwork, King said. "It's a load off their minds," she said.

Officials at both sites said they have seen students from across the region, including many from Orleans and Plaquemines parishes, two areas devastated by Katrina.

Jefferson's enrollment will remain unclear until next week, officials said. In the meantime, the system is trying hard to make new parents and students feel as welcome and secure as possible, officials said.

"We'll be their source of strength and help get them over the hump," Assistant Superintendent Richard Carpenter said.

The nine locations for registration are:

- Riverdale Middle, 3900 Jefferson Highway, Jefferson, 828-2706.
- Ella Dolhonde Elementary, 219 Severn Ave., Metairie, 837-5370.
- Hazel Park Elementary, 8809 Jefferson Highway, River Ridge, 737-6163.
- Bissonet Elementary, 6818 Kawanee Ave., Metairie, 887-0470.
- Greenlawn Elementary, 1500 38th St., Kenner, 468-1016.
- Boudreaux Elementary, 950 Behrman Highway, Terrytown, 393-8732.
- Estelle Elementary, 2800 Barataria Blvd., Marrero, 340-4014.
- Butler Elementary, 400 Fourth St., Westwego, 341-1351.
- Waggaman Elementary, 6801 River Road, Waggaman, 436-1304.

Environmental agency reports no leaks at DuPont facility

By The Associated Press

DELISLE, MISS. — Despite some damaged facilities, no hazardous material leaks have been found at the DuPont facility in this coastal town that was slammed by Hurricane Katrina, Mississippi Department of Environmental Quality officials said Tuesday.

A jury last month awarded Bay St. Louis oyster fisherman Glenn Strong $14 million in damages after finding chemicals from the plant responsible for causing Strong's multiple myeloma, a rare blood cancer.

Strong's wife, Connie, received $1.5 million for loss of "love and companionship."

The same jury deadlocked over a request for $225 million in punitive damages.

DEQ officials said inspections at the facility in Harrison County since Hurricane Katrina have revealed that the plant site was inundated with water and railcars were pushed off their tracks and onto their sides but no hazardous material releases or leaks were observed.

The onsite landfill for waste disposal remained intact and was not overcome by the storm surge.

"We were pleased to learn that DuPont's landfill, which is a series of impoundments constructed with levees and berms, worked as it was designed and did prevent the inflow of water," said Phil Bass, Director of MDEQ's Office of Pollution Control. "EPA and MDEQ will begin monitoring at the facility and the Bay, but our visits to the site assure us there have been no leaks or releases."

Council to Nagin: We need to talk

Communication feud spills over onto radio talk show

By Martha Carr and Frank Donze
Staff writers

Even as the city fights for its very survival, it's politics as usual in New Orleans.

A rift between Mayor Ray Nagin and four of the City Council's seven members grew into a gaping chasm early Tuesday, when members vented during a day-long series of meetings about the mayor's failure to provide them with critical information regarding his plans to repopulate and rebuild the city.

The mayor defended himself by calling in to a radio talk show early in the day, then making a personal appearance that afternoon before the council, which was meeting at Armstrong International Airport. On WWL radio, Nagin said he was doing his best to keep everyone in the loop, but indicated that he has been dealing primarily with three council members, all of whom were politically aligned with him prior to the storm.

Nagin said he was funneling information to the entire council through longtime ally Oliver Thomas, the council president. He also said he was "really paying attention to the folks who are on the ground," naming Thomas, and Council Members Cynthia Morrell and Jacquelyn Brechtel Clarkson.

Nagin's insinuation was that the complainers are council members who fled the city and have been hard to find. "Sometimes when you don't have a good position, you go on offense so you don't have to go on defense. My question is, where were they," Nagin said on WWL.

The council members who complain of being left out of the loop, a majority faction comprised of Eddie Sapir, Renee Gill Pratt, Cynthia Willard Lewis and Jay Batt, say it has hampered their ability to communicate with constituents, most of whom have not yet been allowed to return to their homes.

They accuse Nagin of ignoring repeated requests to provide information about their districts. E-mails aren't answered, they said, and phone calls are not returned.

Morrell, by contrast, said she has spoken several times with the mayor and Chief Administrative Officer Brenda Hatfield, and has had no problem getting her phone calls or questions answered. Clarkson also described her communications with the mayor as "good."

"When I need help, I demand it," Clarkson said. "When I don't, I do it on my own."

But all things aren't equal in politics.

Batt, who has been extremely vocal about the lack of information coming from the mayor's office, told WWL radio early Tuesday that Nagin has yet to share with him any information about the eventual return of his constituents in District A. Later, outside the council meeting at the airport, Batt cornered Nagin's Intergovernmental Affairs director Kenya Smith and demanded a face-to-face meeting with the mayor.

"I'm getting 100 calls a day from my constituents who want to know when they can come back," he said. "I'm going to forward every one of them to you and the mayor unless you all tell me something."

Sapir echoed Batt's concerns.

"Communication?" he said. "What communication?"

Even the council members who have had contact with the mayor's office joined with their colleagues on some issues, such as the failure of the Nagin administration to provide them with daily "situation reports" being issued to the media and to inform them of daily briefings for public officials at the Hyatt Regency.

Nagin staffers said that's because they were still without critical contact information for many council members. Smith spent part of the day gathering e-mail addresses and fax numbers.

Council members also said virtually no information had been passed along concerning contracts being doled out to companies involved in the cleanup.

After listening, Hatfield, viewed as the most talented peacemaker on Nagin's staff, conceded that "communication could be better."

When Nagin finally appeared about 4:30 p.m., tensions appeared to cool considerably, with the mayor pledging to step up his effort to keep in touch with the council. Nagin's conciliatory tone prompted Batt to leave his seat, place his baseball cap on

Police investigate death in Luling

By Jenny Hurwitz
River Parishes Bureau

St. Charles Parish authorities are investigating the death of a Luling man found in his apartment six days ago. Investigators think the man was stabbed in an apparent homicide.

The body of James E. Underwood, 41, was discovered by deputies in an apartment at 324 River Oaks Drive on Thursday, St. Charles Parish Sheriff's Office spokesman Capt. Pat Yoes said.

The body, which authorities think had been in the apartment for eight to 10 days, was badly decomposed, Yoes said. An autopsy performed by the Jefferson Parish Coroner's Office on Monday verified Underwood's identity and found stabbing to be the cause of death, he said.

Police were tipped off after a neighbor, Regina Gautreaux, called because she had not seen Underwood in several days.

Gautreaux, who said she last saw Underwood on Sept. 6, said she thought it odd that he had left his dog in the yard for several days. A deputy entered the apartment through an unlocked rear door and found the body inside, Yoes said.

The victim's vehicle, a 1996 black Dodge pickup with license number V-539389, is missing, Yoes said.

Authorities are following up on several leads, and Yoes declined to discuss suspected motives or additional details of the incident.

Gautreaux, who has known Underwood since he moved to her neighborhood five years ago, said he lived alone. She and her family often would invite him over for dinner, along with other neighbors in their Luling neighborhood, she said.

"He was a good neighbor," she said. "He wasn't rowdy; he never had wild parties or anything liked that. He was just a nice person."

Anyone with information about the crime is asked to call the St. Charles Parish Sheriff's Office at (985) 783-6807 or Crimestoppers at 1 (877) 903-7867. Callers do not have to give their names or testify and can receive as much as $2,500 for tips that lead to an indictment.

HURRICANE AFTERMATH

"Obviously there was a lot of water covering southwest Louisiana below I-10 but wind damage covers almost the entire state."

BOB ODOM, Commissioner of Agriculture

Agriculture in Louisiana hit hard by Rita

Sugar cane, cotton fields flattened

By The Associated Press

BATON ROUGE — From sugar cane fields in the south to cotton fields in the north, Hurricane Rita devastated Louisiana agriculture, the state's agriculture commissioner said Tuesday.

Winds flattened cane across south central and southwest Louisiana, and rains and storm surge left thousands of acres standing in water below Highway 90, Commissioner Bob Odom said. "If it's salt water from the storm surge then that cane is gone. It can't tolerate salt water," he said.

He said it's only one of many crops facing problems across Louisiana, with cattle, poultry and some specialty crop producers hurt worst. "Obviously there was a lot of water covering southwest Louisiana below I-10 but wind damage covers almost the entire state," Odom said.

Wind caused great damage to pecan orchards, one of the state's most popular specialty crops, he said. "Little Eva Plantation near Natchitoches lost 75 to 80 percent of its crop. Limbs are twisted or down and green pecans were blown to the ground," Odom said.

The storm's winds also flattened cotton fields in the north, where only about 40 percent of the crop had been harvested. The remaining 60 percent was knocked to the ground and soaked.

Cotton is sprayed with defoliants so mechanical pickers can harvest it. "Without any foliation to protect it, the crop just blew to the ground and it can't be harvested when it's on the ground. It's a major loss," Odom said.

State Veterinarian Maxwell Lea is coordinating efforts with USDA's Veterinary Services and the Louisiana Catttleman's Association to move cattle to higher ground so they may be fed and watered, Odom said. In Cameron Parish alone, as many as 4,000 cattle may have been killed by floodwater, and LCA officials believe up to 30,000 cattle in the coastal parishes may be in trouble.

"At this point the cattle are standing in floodwaters and there is no dry place to drop food and water. We're hoping to use airboats to drive them to higher ground," Odom said.

With power out in much of south Louisiana, poultry producers had to use generators to keep their chicken houses cool and operations running properly, adding to expenses for Louisiana's second largest agriculture business.

Odom said farmers need federal grants, not loans. "Low-interest loans aren't going to cut it. You can't borrow yourself out of debt. These people need real relief, real help not more debt," he said.

Odom was to meet later this week with USDA Secretary Mike Johanns week when Johanns is touring areas affected by hurricanes Katrina and Rita. He said he will ask the secretary to have his department forgive federal farm loans and pay back loans made through banks.

Nearly a month after storm, FEMA opens in St. John

Many residents blame Monica for delay

By Allen Powell II
River Parishes bureau

Nearly a month after Hurricane Katrina wreaked havoc upon southeast Louisiana and amid heavy grumbling by parish residents, the Federal Emergency Management Agency opened its first disaster relief center in St. John the Baptist Parish on Tuesday.

The disaster center, which is one of 18 in the state, is at 160 Belle Terre Blvd. in LaPlace. It is open from 9 a.m. to 7 p.m. FEMA staffers are on hand to answer residents' questions about financial, housing and insurance assistance from the federal government. In addition, residents can register for assistance at telephone banks at the office, although they are encouraged to register for assistance before they come to the office, FEMA spokesman Dean Cushman said. Residents affected by Hurricane Katrina or Hurricane Rita can register www.fema.gov or (800) 621-FEMA.

The opening came weeks after disaster centers in St. Charles and St. James parishes began operations, and the delay angered many parish residents. Although very few homes in St. John Parish sustained serious storm-related damage, many residents were without power for some time or lost jobs in hurricane-affected areas. In addition, many St. John residents have been housing people from areas that had substantial hurricane damage.

However, instead of directing their ire toward the federal government, many residents have blamed Parish President Nickie Monica for the delay. Some said Monica denied offers of assistance from FEMA and the American Red Cross, charges his chief administrative officer, Natalie Robottom, denied.

"There is no basis for that," said Robottom, who attributed the rumors to people's frustration and a lack of information. "Mr. Monica went to Baton Rouge twice to request aid from FEMA."

Robottom said that when FEMA made its first forays into St. John Parish, the agency's workers came with ice bags and meals-ready-to-eat, despite the fact that most parish residents no longer needed those supplies because power already had been restored. She said parish officials have been working with FEMA representatives for weeks to establish a disaster relief center in St. John, and provided the agency with a list of possible of sites shortly after the storm. However, she said FEMA has repeatedly given the parish a variety of reasons for the delay in opening of the center.

"For whatever reason, they haven't been holding true to the dates and time frames," Robottom said. "Everybody's (been) looking for a reason why FEMA's not here, and the reason is they're just not."

FEMA spokesman Dean Cushman said it often takes time for the agency to locate and lease space for the disaster relief centers, as well as find staffers. Cushman said it was unlikely that FEMA reneged on any assurances given to the parish, although he could not speak about specific discussions.

"I'm not sure it really took so long (to open a center). We've been opening them as soon as we can," Cushman said. "It's a fairly intricate process, and we try to work things out. ...Things don't always go as smoothly as we like."

Nagin to announce plan to speed repopulation

New Orleans Mayor Ray Nagin promises a "major announcement" today about "loosening restrictions" so residents can begin returning to the city in larger numbers.

He also said the city was "close to making a major breakthrough" on utility issues, such as power and water.

In preparation for people re-entering the target zones — the French Quarter, the Central Business District and parts of Uptown — structural engineers have put red signs on homes and businesses that are structurally unsound.

"As people come in, they now have a much safer environment to walk around in," Nagin said.

For more devastated parts of the city, particularly areas that were heavily flooded, the mayor envisions a plan that would allow residents back in to "look and leave." After that, structural engineers will go through and examine the neighborhoods, structure by structure.

To date, Algiers is the only New Orleans neighborhood that is fully habitable. In addition to the aftereffects of flooding and power outages, resettling the east bank has been bedeviled bv extensive damage to water and sewer lines.

Franklinton man sentenced in 2001 rape

A Franklinton man has been sentenced to 20 years in prison after pleading guilty to the forcible rape of a woman near Abita Springs in 2001.

Danny L. Trotter pleaded guilty Sept. 12 and was sentenced by state Judge William R. Knight.

Rick Wood, spokesman for the district attorney's office, said Trotter was booked with forcible rape by the St. Tammany Parish Sheriff's Office shortly after he pulled a gun on the woman, who was visiting a friend, and forced her from the front steps of a house and assaulted her in October 2001.

The case was prosecuted by Assistant District Attorney Leigh Ann Wall.

In announcing the conviction and sentencing on Tuesday, Wood said District Attorney Walter Reed anticipates increased caseloads in state courts in Covington and Franklinton over the next 60 days as the court system rebounds from Hurricane Katrina.

Reed said that anyone who missed a court date in Franklinton or Covington because of the storm should contact his offices at (985) 809-8363 in Covington and (985) 893-6711 in Franklinton for rescheduling.

Jacquelyn Marie Roth of Reserve, the driver of this 1988 Ford LTD, was killed Tuesday after she apparently lost control of the car on Airline Drive in Norco and crossed the median into oncoming traffic.

An unidentified woman was killed and three others were injured in a four-vehicle accident Tuesday on Airline Drive in Norco.

State Police say the driver of a 1988 Ford LTD, who died at the scene, was headed north on Airline Drive in St. Charles Parish shortly before 1 p.m. when she apparently lost control of the car, veering across the median and into the path of oncoming traffic. Authorities say the car struck two Cox Communications utility trucks that were in the right, southbound lane before hitting a 1988 Chevrolet pickup truck that was in the left lane.

Harvey resident Alex Green, 55, said he was driving south on Airline Drive near Shell Oil with his niece and sister-in-law at 12:53 p.m. when the accident happened.

"'They were screaming," Green said about his family members. "They said, 'Look out, look out,' and then, bam.

"I thought I was gone, man; I thought I was gone," Green said while waiting to give a statement to police.

Green's niece, Lily Scott, and sister-in-law, Mona Green, were taken to River Parishes Hospital in LaPlace with leg and arm injuries, Green said. The driver of one of the utility trucks also was taken to the hospital.

State Police said all three sustained non-life-threatening injuries.

Trooper Omar Landrum, spokesman for the State Police, said the driver's identity would not be released until notification of her next of kin.

Landrum said it was too early to determine if either alcohol or speed was a factor in the crash. Authorities don't know what caused the woman to lose control of the vehicle.

The accident closed Airline Drive and backed up traffic for several hours.

"We're trying to do it right and as quickly as we can."
BEN MORRIS, Slidell Mayor

Slidell mayor requests residents to be patient

It could take 4 or 5 weeks to collect debris

By Paul Bartels
St. Tammany bureau

Although the city has promised to absorb any extra costs for picking up the mega-tons of curbside debris from Hurricane Katrina, Slidell Mayor Ben Morris cautioned residents Tuesday that it will take many weeks to get the job done.

Morris, irked by what he considered minor complaints from "whiners" who otherwise are now living in relative comfort, urged citizens to be patient and to avoid unnecessary trips on Slidell's crowded streets.

"We're trying to do it right and as quickly as we can," he said from his office at the Department of Public Operations headquarters, serving as a temporary City Hall while crews work to repair the badly flooded old one on Second Street.

"If you're getting impatient, it's not going to do you any good," he said. "The (Army Corps of Engineers) may bring in some additional contractors, but it may be four or five weeks before it's picked up. You just have to wait. ... Quit whining."

Those who expect a total or near-total return to normalcy, while thousands of people have suffered serious damage to their homes from flooding or fallen trees, "have to realize that this is the greatest national disaster in the history of the United States."

Cleaning up the mountains of tree chunks and limbs, soggy carpets and bedding, ruined appliances and the like "is not going to happen overnight. People have to understand this. ... You're talking thousands of tons, thousands of truckloads."

The City Council, meeting in emergency session Sept. 2 only days after Katrina devastated the New Orleans area, approved an amendment to the city's contract with Coastal Waste Management for regular garbage and trash pickup to cover the additional cleanup of storm debris.

But Morris said Tuesday that administration of that contract has been taken over primarily by the corps, as has another one awarded Sept. 13 to McDonald Construction Inc. to clean out debris impeding the flow of city drainage channels.

Morris does not approve.

"We could've had it (the work) done by now," he said about what he called nitpicky regulations forced on storm-ravaged areas by corps and Federal Emergency Management Agency bureaucrats.

As for repeated requests to FEMA for house trailers or other mobile residences for the city's displaced employees — at least 40 percent of Slidell's work force is among the ranks of hurricane homeless — the mayor again leveled criticism at the agency.

"We don't have a clue," he said. "FEMA does not have an answer. FEMA can't provide an answer. I know (St. Tammany Parish President) Kevin Davis is in the same boat."

Electrical work draws criticism

FEMA pledges to send inspectors to N.O.

By Keith Darcé
Business writer

Members of the New Orleans City Council complained Tuesday that Mayor Ray Nagin's administration isn't moving quickly enough to devise a plan for restoring electricity to homes and businesses whose wiring was damaged by wind or flooding from Hurricane Katrina.

The city's power utility, Entergy New Orleans, has been re-energizing electricity distribution wires in neighborhoods along the Mississippi River that were untouched by floodwaters.

But for most New Orleans residents and business owners, even some in unflooded neighborhoods, power won't be coming on for weeks if not months because storm damage to buildings' wiring and circuit boxes makes it too dangerous to reconnect the structures.

Getting the damage fixed will require hiring a licensed electrician and getting an inspection from a city building code enforcer, but none of that will be easy in a city that has been shut down and virtually empty for more than a month.

Some council members at a meeting of the panel's utility regulatory committee were running low on patience with the mayor's administration for its master plan for repopulating the city, which will include a plan for getting electricians and inspectors into the city to do the work.

"We have no information about the progression of (restoring) utilities," said Councilwoman Jacquelyn Brechtel Clarkson. "People want to have an idea of when they can come back."

Later in the day, city Department of Safety and Permits Director Michael Centineo told council members that his office already has asked the Federal Emergency Management Agency to supply extra electricians and at least 75 inspectors to the city.

A FEMA representative at the meeting said his agency would supply the inspectors, just as it did last year in Florida after that state was ravaged by a series of hurricanes.

But Councilman Oliver Thomas questioned whether the plan was adequate. "How are you going to get enough electricians into the city, and inspectors? Seventy-five inspectors from FEMA are not going to be enough," he said.

Power should be back on by the weekend in much of Uptown between St. Charles Ave. and the river, said Rod West, regional manger for electric distribution for Entergy New Orleans.

Electricity already has been restored in the Central Business District, the Warehouse District and parts of the French Quarter. And power is back in isolated pockets around some Uptown hospitals and municipal facilities, as well as at a handful of manufacturing plants in eastern New Orleans.

Electricity also is flowing in most suburban communities except for St. Bernard and lower Plaquemine parishes, which sustained massive destruction from storm surge flooding.

Utility workers have been scouring neighborhoods, going building to building looking for signs of damage. When they find it, they cut the power line connecting the structure to neighborhood distribution lines and transformers.

Floating casinos may be rebuilt on land

La. losing $500,000 a day on closed boats

By Rebecca Mowbray
Business writer

While Mississippi is moving forward on a proposal to allow the floating casinos damaged by hurricanes to rebuild on land, Louisiana is starting to think about the same thing.

But the prospects are more uncertain in Louisiana.

The Mississippi Legislature convened a special legislative session Tuesday that will consider, among other things, whether to allow Gulf Coast casino barges to rebuild on nearby land. Most Mississippi Gulf Coast casinos were destroyed by Hurricane Katrina, taking with them thousands of jobs, millions in tax revenue for the state, and a key driver of the coast's tourism business.

In Louisiana, casino damage wasn't nearly as bad. During Katrina, the Belle of Orleans vessel, formerly known as Bally's, was ripped from its terminal at Southshore Harbor on Lake Pontchartrain and left listing at the water's edge, its marina destroyed and buffet and nightclub building seriously damaged. During Hurricane Rita on Saturday, the two-boat riverboat complex of Harrah's Lake Charles broke free from its moorings and drifted about 150 yards to a beach.

But the question of economic vulnerability is the same. Louisiana is losing about $500,000 a day in tax revenues while the three New Orleans area riverboats and five Lake Charles riverboats remain closed, according to the riverboat lobbying group the Casino Association of Louisiana.

Louisiana originally created casinos on riverboats in its experiment with gambling so that the boats could sail away if things didn't work out. But with gambling apparently here to stay, some say the state's vulnerability to hurricanes makes it a good time to re-consider having casinos on water.

"Absolutely. When you look at a natural disaster that would cause the kind of destruction that's happened in Lake Charles, everyone should pause and take a look at why we do the things we do," said Anthony Sanfilippo, president of Harrah's Central Division. "The whole reason that gaming was brought into Louisiana was to promote economic development."

Rep. John Alario, D- Westwego, chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations, said several legislative colleagues have been asking the same question.

"There doesn't seem to be anything that makes gambling more sinful on land than on water," Alario said. "If Mississippi in particular goes on land, we ought to give our people the ability to compete."

But the Casino Association, whose members do not include Harrah's, the largest casino operator in the state, does not plan to lobby for land-based casinos. "I would not look for a similar move in Louisiana," said Executive Director Wade Duty.

Duty said casino companies other than Harrah's that have operable buildings may have trouble justifying the expense of building new land-based facilities.

Taxes are also part of the equation, Duty said. Casino companies in Mississippi can more easily afford to invest millions in land-based facilities because they only pay 12 percent in state and local taxes, but riverboat casinos in Louisiana pay 21.5 in state taxes, plus local taxes.

But Alario said most concerns can be resolved. For example, riverboat casinos could have the opportunity to rebuild on land, but would not be required to do so. However, if casino companies wanted to rebuild on land, Alario said, they may be required to build such amenities as hotels, restaurants and golf courses.

Sen. Francis Heitmeier, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, worries that state law allows for only one land-based casino – Harrah's New Orleans – and deviating from that would require a statewide vote to amend the constitution.

Other state lawmakers say that nothing is off the table after Katrina and Rita because the state needs money and it needs to help businesses restart.

"I could tell you if there were casinos at the airport we'd have one up and functioning right now," said Rep. Cedric Richmond, D-New Orleans, who had sponsored legislation which failed earlier this year about installing slot machines at the Louis Armstrong New Orleans International Airport.

Rep. Danny Martiny, R-Kenner, said that he is mainly concerned about video poker operators, because they're mostly small businesses, many of them were likely permanently wiped out by the flooding, and the state depends heavily on video poker revenue.

Entergy starts rolling blackouts in Texas

By Mary Judice
Business writer

Entergy Texas, struggling to supply power despite severe damage to its transmission network, has been forced to implement rolling blackouts this week in areas north of Houston, the utility said.

"The transmission system is so severely damaged we can't use the system to bring power into the area," said Chanel Lagarde, a spokesman for Entergy. Only two of the 14 power plants that serve the area are operating, Lagarde said.

Rolling blackouts are used to prevent more damage to the transmission system. The utility said about 301 transmission lines and 301 substations are out of service, including key transmission lines that must be restored before enabling service.

The utility said 142,000 homes and businesses are experiencing the rolling outages, which last for about an hour at a time. The outages are imposed most often during the afternoon and evening when air conditioner use increases power demand.

Tuesday morning, 417,000 Entergy customers in Texas, Louisiana, Alabama and Mississippi remained without power, including seven oil refineries in Texas and Louisiana. Almost 349,000 customers from those four states have had their power restored since Hurricane Katrina moved through a month ago.

Lagarde said repairing the transmission lines to the refineries is a priority.

Oil refineries near the Louisiana-Texas border might be down for a month because of damage from Hurricane Rita, Bloomberg News said Tuesday. Several plants reported flooding and wind damage, but managers said lack of power was the sole problem at some plants.

Eastern New Orleans residents wait, worry

The abandonment of the citizens of our city continues for those of us who have homes in eastern New Orleans. We have yet to be informed of when we can see our homes and possibly salvage what little may remain.

Our elected officials and representatives have done and said little to ease the tensions. It is shameful that the citizens of St. Bernard Parish, bless their souls, have been allowed to view their homes while we have to sit in the dark or sneak into our property.

I offer a simple proposal. Coordinate with homeowners to see our homes on a two- or three-day rotation by ZIP code and bring a small amount of closure and peace to the hearts and minds of citizens.

Rumor-mongers hurt the city

One has to wonder what the residents of the city of New Orleans must think of Mayor Ray Nagin and Police Chief Eddie Compass, after it was revealed that the two of them were among the most vocal spreaders of false information about the conditions at the Superdome and the Convention Center.

The mayor demonstrated hysteria ("10,000 dead!") not befitting a leader who should have been helping people stay calm and offering hope. Then there are the multitude of media who spread the rumors of mayhem, rape, murder and general pillage while not once offering, that I saw, an interview with anyone who actually saw these scenes.

When there were camera shots of the crowds at the Dome, Iíd see people standing about looking bored, hot and miserable, but not out of control, even as the report might be mentioning atrocities that were supposedly going on inside.

One poor elderly lady dead in a wheelchair became "bodies in wheelchairs." The fact that the media showed the same body over and over indicated there was a scarcity of bodies to be found lying around to stumble over in the streets.

The mayor has done a sorry job, and I hope his career in politics is soon over. The man has done more than anyone to harm the image of New Orleans.

Plan ahead to save pets

It is painfully real that in a hurricane evacuation thousands of animals are left behind to starve to death in our streets and vacant homes.

The letter to the editor from a woman who faulted humane workers for not locating a sick 15-year-old cat rescued from her home was one of those painfully real stories. She never mentioned why she had to leave her cat behind. There are numerous logical reasons why pets were left behind, but I know of one person who did not leave his friends behind.

Mike Lala, founder of the Lala Foundation for Animals, was one who would not leave his animals; he stayed with them at his restaurant, The Olde N'Awlins Cookery. The heat and stress must have been too much because he died there.

Thankfully, humane groups across our nation came to help us rescue our animals. Although there are still animal rescues going on and many volunteers are feeding the ones left behind, now is the time to determine that we will never let this happen again.

Plenty of crates have been donated to house animals; let us find a way to store these crates so that we can house the animals along with the caretakers who have to evacuate. If we have to pass a law, let's do it. Our companion animals who love us unconditionally deserve nothing less than our full support every day, but especially in time of disaster.

Odds are in insurance company's favor

My husband and I live a few miles north of Picayune, Miss., about 45 miles from the coast. If I were depending only on the media for information about the storm, I'd conclude that Katrina stopped dead after passing Biloxi, Gulfport, New Orleans and Slidell.

This is not the case, but because we are high enough to have been spared the storm surge and flooding, areas like ours and Bogalusa are being ignored.

The western eyewall of the storm moved right over this area. It must be obvious to anyone who cared to fly overhead that we also had more than one tornado. We are lucky that our power was restored after only 15 days, but we still have no phone.

More than 40 large trees came down just in our yards, hitting our workshop, carport, tractor shed, the front porch of our guest house and many fences, but sparing our house.

Because we didn't suffer flooding and we have a roof over our heads, we are much better off than thousands more, and we are very thankful. Nonetheless, we have to deal with damage caused by the storm, and find that our insurance company does not cover removal of downed trees "not on buildings" or repair of fences "not attached to the house."

Insurance companies gamble when they write a policy. Just like casinos, they manipulate the odds in their favor. Sometimes they have to pay off, but they rely on the majority of other policyholders to keep paying and paying to cover their losses.

We would have been better off to have put the money spent on insurance premiums over the last 30 years into a savings account so that we would now have cash available to pay for the removal of the trees (assuming we are able to find somebody to do the work). In the future, we'll insure ourselves — the only people upon whom we can depend.

OUR OPINIONS

Looking for a leader

Eddie Compass, the brash street cop who ran his department largely by force of personality, is stepping down as superintendent of the New Orleans Police Department. He and Mayor Ray Nagin are calling the chief's abrupt departure a retirement, and that may be true.

But it is difficult to believe that Superintendent Compass is leaving entirely of his own choice. Despite the chief's firm belief that he and his department performed valiantly in the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina, the failings have been painfully obvious.

The Police Department was in virtual chaos after the storm, with dedicated street officers left to organize themselves to try to curb looting and violence. Mr. Compass himself acknowledged this week that 249 officers were missing in action after the storm, and many of them abandoned residents in their most vulnerable hours. Some officers even took part in looting the Wal-Mart on Tchoupitoulas Street.

Mayor Nagin characterized the chief's departure as a sad day for New Orleans, but in truth, the move is a positive step for the city. If the mayor hastened Superintendent Compass' exit, he did the right thing.

This is a crucial time for New Orleans, and the rebuilding and recovery of the city depends to a great degree on how secure it is. As businesses and residents move back into the city, they need to be able to have complete confidence in the Police Department and its chief.

Mr. Compass' performance in the past four weeks has made it impossible to trust his ability to lead the department. Even before Katrina blew through the city and left much of it full of water, this was a department in some trouble. Five days before Katrina hit, a two-year veteran of the force was booked with aggravated rape, kidnapping and malfeasance in office after a woman accused him of assault. That brought the total to 11 officers who were arrested in 2004 and 2005 on criminal charges ranging from shoplifting to conspiracy to rob a bank. Violence in the city was a stubborn problem as well, with the murder rate rising week by week compared with the year before.

This is not the best time to be searching for a new police chief. It would be better to have stability in such a crucial job. But New Orleans does not have the luxury of waiting for a more convenient time to replace Superintendent Compass. As Mayor Nagin looks for a new police chief, there are certain qualities that are essential.

The new chief must have a zero tolerance for misbehavior among officers and must make sure the department is set up to ferret out those officers and to respond promptly to residents' complaints. The new chief must understand law enforcement from the streets upward. Superintendent Compass' strength was his intimate, street-level knowledge of New Orleans. The department's nitty-gritty managerial duties, however, were not his forte. That has become undeniable in the weeks since Katrina hit.

Superintendent Compass' love of his city is not in doubt. Neither is his love of police work. "Every man in a leadership position must know when it's time to hand over the reins," he said Tuesday. Sadly, that time came for Eddie Compass.

Now Mayor Nagin must find a stellar leader to replace him.

Do you promise?

New Orleans was the reason the United States bought Louisiana in 1803, and it served as the capital of the state for much of the 19th century. The state and federal governments have maintained a significant presence in the metro area ever since.

And they ought to maintain that same presence now and in the future. In the metro area's hour of need, New Orleans area residents need to know that these state and federal agencies' plan on sticking around. We need to hear firm, clear, emphatic promises — from President Bush and the U.S. Congress, from Gov. Kathleen Blanco and the Louisiana Legislature — that the federal and state governments will not disinvest from our region.

By contrast, unequivocal state and federal commitments would be a sign of confidence in the New Orleans area's ability to rebuild. If the public sector pulls back from New Orleans, it would send a worrisome signal to all employers.

In the past, officials at a number of state agencies have concluded that some activities are best situated in New Orleans. While two of the three branches of the state government are headquartered in Baton Rouge, the Supreme Court building is in the French Quarter. The medical school at Louisiana State University is also located in New Orleans, even though LSU's flagship campus is in the capital. These institutions are a crucial part of the fabric of the metro area. Their presence is a boon to the local legal and health care communities.

Likewise, the metro area also plays host to any number of federal installations — from military bases to a district office of the Materials Management Service to the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals, a high-profile stomping ground of potential Supreme Court nominees.

During the crisis that followed Hurricane Katrina, public employees who had been living and working in greater New Orleans have been scattered far and wide. The federal court for the Eastern District of Louisiana is operating out of Baton Rouge, Houma and Lafayette, and the LSU Health Sciences Center is operating in Baton Rouge.

New Orleanians need to be reassured that all such moves are only temporary.

At this point there is no specific evidence that state or federal officials are planning to cut back on their commitments to the New Orleans area. But when hundreds of thousands of people have been forced for weeks from what is normally Louisiana's largest city, the danger of disinvestment is not merely theoretical. Regrettably, some private businesses have already announced plans to leave. Ruth's Chris Steak House, the famous chain founded in the city by devoted New Orleanian Ruth Fertel, relocated its headquarters from Metairie to the Orlando area because of the hurricane. The company recently announced that the relocation will be permanent.

Losing public institutions would be a harsh blow for a stricken metro region. In dealing with Washington and Baton Rouge during the recovery process, New Orleans Mayor Ray Nagin, Jefferson Parish President Aaron Broussard and other local leaders should seek assurance that the federal and state governments will stand by our metro area.

A commitment to New Orleans doesn't just mean a steady flow of relief supplies and recovery dollars — although both are essential. It also means that the public institutions that have been integral to the development of the metro area will still be doing business here when Katrina is just a distant, miserable memory.

DISPLACED SEEK A PLACE TO CALL HOME

STAFF PHOTO BY SEAN GARDNER

FEMA-supplied trailers head toward Belle Chasse Naval Air Station-Joint Reserve Base along Interstate 10 in Metairie on Sept. 16.

A little more than a week ago, the citizens of Lake Charles were generously opening their homes, churches and civic center to New Orleanians displaced by Hurricane Katrina. By last weekend, locals and evacuees alike were on the road running from Hurricane Rita.

When Katrina hit, residents along the southwestern and south-central coast watched on TV people being plucked from their rooftops in New Orleans' Lower 9th Ward and St. Bernard Parish. On Saturday, many in coastal areas were waiting on their own rooftops and porches to be rescued from rising floodwaters.

JOHN MAGINNIS

While Rita was far less deadly than Katrina, the new storm increased the numbers of temporarily displaced citizens, who now face the disheartening challenge of finding new homes if they can't reclaim their old ones.

Yet government officials still are struggling and disagreeing on how and where to resettle them.

The Federal Emergency Management Agency's initial plan was to move most from transient quarters to temporary ones in the form of vast new communities of trailer homes spread across Louisiana. To do so would require not only leasing vacant land but also developing transportation and utility infrastructure, sewage treatment, security and, not the least consideration, something for people to do with their lives for the next 12 to 18 months.

FEMA soon found out that local communities willing to accommodate storm victims for weeks drew the line at having large numbers of them around for months in trailer parks at the edge of town. Residents packed police jury and town council meetings across Louisiana to challenge and protest putting up new temporary cities that would, in some places, nearly double the population and overwhelm public services.

The complications, expense and local opposition have caused federal planners to devise an alternate relocation strategy that relies more on what our government does best: cut checks. The federal Office of Homeland Security announced over the weekend that FEMA would make lump-sum payments of up to $2,358 to cover three months of rent to hundreds of thousands of displaced homeowners, wherever they find to live, even if out of state. Further assistance could be extended for up to 18 months.

The new plan tracks the trend in federal policy toward subsidizing rent payments to private landlords instead of building and maintaining large public housing complexes.

Yet, according to the report in The Times-Picayune, the new federal plan surprised Gov. Kathleen Blanco, whose objective has been to resettle as many people as possible back in Louisiana, if not in the New Orleans area.

Locally, elected officials already are clamoring to bring their voters home. The rent assistance plan also will raise concerns among local business owners who are struggling to find enough workers to get the economy going again. They face having to limit hours and services, even turn away customers, for the lack of employees.

Despite those concerns, the federal government is onto something. It will be far more cost-effective for the overtaxed recovery effort to simply pay the people and let them decide where and how to live. The feds' storm response has been criticized so much they would be wise not to plunge headlong into a new adventure in public housing trailer parks.

More importantly, it is fairer for American citizens to be able to make their own life choices instead of being assigned to a trailer in a space where only cows lived before. If a good many of them want to seek a new life in another state, government should not restrict their options.

Temporary housing can still be provided on a limited scale, especially in the New Orleans area. Many will choose to live in a trailer for 18 months if it keeps them closer to their families, jobs and the city they love.

The new federal payment plan will mean more people will start a new life elsewhere and stay there. But for many, the emotional ties to New Orleans will remain so strong that if we rebuild it, they will come home.

Higher education out of reach for lower class

Especially in these days after Katrina, everybody laments poverty and inequality. But what are you doing about it? For example, let's say you work at a university or a college. You are a cog in the one of the great inequality producing machines America has known. What are you doing to change that?

As you doubtless know, as the information age matures, a new sort of stratification is setting in, between those with higher education and those without. College graduates earn nearly twice as much people with only a high school diploma, and people with professional degrees earn nearly twice as much as those with college degrees.

DAVID BROOKS

But worse, this economic stratification is translating into social stratification. Only 28 percent of American adults have a college degree, but most of us in this group find ourselves in workplaces and in social milieus where almost everybody has been to college. A social chasm is opening up between those in educated society and those in noneducated society, and you are beginning to see vast behavioral differences between the two groups.

For example, divorce rates for college grads are plummeting, but they are not for everyone else. The divorce rate for high school grads is now twice as high as that of college grads.

There are other behavioral differences, large and small, that reflect the different social norms in the two classes. High school grads are twice as likely to smoke as college grads. They are much less likely to exercise. College grads are nearly twice as likely to vote. They are more than twice as likely to do voluntary work. They are much more likely to give blood. These behavioral gaps are widening.

We once had a society stratified by bloodlines, in which the Protestant Establishment was in one class, immigrants were in another and African-Americans were in another. Now we live in a society stratified by education. In many ways this system is fairer, but as the information economy matures, we are learning it comes with its own brutal barriers to opportunity and ascent.

In an agricultural or industrial society, you might grow up in a poor or disorganized family, but you could get a job in a factory and with some grit and determination work your way to respectability. But in an information society, college is the gateway to opportunity. Crucial life paths are set at age 18, which means family and upbringing matter more.

Educated parents not only pass down economic resources to their children, but they pass down expectations, habits, knowledge and cognitive abilities. Pretty soon you end up with a hereditary meritocratic class that reinforces itself generation after generation.

You see the results in college graduation data. In the 1970s, when the information age was young, children from poorer, less educated families were catching up to children from more affluent families when it came to earning college degrees. But now the gap between rich and poor is widening. Students in the poorest quarter of the population have an 8.6 percent chance of getting a college degree. Students in the top quarter have a 74.9 percent chance.

The most damning indictment of our university system is that these poorer kids are graduating from high school in greater numbers. It's when they get to college that they begin failing and dropping out.

Thomas Mortenson of the Pell Institute for the Study of Opportunity in Higher Education has collected a mountain of data on growing educational inequality. As he points out, universities have done a wonderful job educating affluent kids since 1980. But they "have done a terrible job of including those from the bottom half of the family income distribution. In this respect, higher education is now causing most of the growing inequality and strengthening class structure of the United States."

Part of the problem is that children from poorer families have trouble affording higher education. But given the rising flow of aid money, financial barriers are not the main issue. A lot of it has to do with being academically prepared, psychologically prepared and culturally prepared for college.

I'm going to come back to this subject and write about what some colleges are doing to help these students and how most colleges are neglecting them. But let me conclude with the thought that while we have big political debates in America about equality of results, all those on the left and right say they believe in equality of opportunity.

This is where America is failing most.

The truth is grim enough

Those who remember the dynamiting of the levees during Betsy are convinced it happened again as the waters rose after Katrina.

Of course, those who remember the dynamiting of the levees during Betsy will believe most anything. It didn't happen then and it didn't happen this time. But the story of unscrupulous fat cats preserving their property by drowning the poor is too rooted in the New Orleans consciousness to brook contradiction.

The levee was blown up at Caernarvon during the great flood of 1927 on the theory that New Orleans was worth the sacrifice of St. Bernard and Plaquemines parishes. With the approach of each hurricane ever since, it seems, rumors circulate that the dastardly sons of privilege are dusting off their plans to do it again.

Now that the worst has happened, official reasons for the levee breaches evoke the deepest suspicions, at least among the credulous souls who confide their thoughts to the Internet. Shortly after Katrina they either heard explosions or saw a barge deliberately punch a hole in the levee, in order, they believe, to save the French Quarter and Uptown.

One displaced homeowner reports that the levee was dynamited "to prevent Uptown (the rich part of town) from being flooded." Unfortunately the dynamiters were as incompetent as they were nefarious: "Apparently they "used too much, thus flooding part of the Bywater. So now I know who is responsible for flooding my house — not Katrina but our government."

There is much to blame on local, state and federal government, but not this. The natural elevation of the terrain ensured that, with or without explosives, parts of the city would remain more or less dry. Besides, if the objective was to spare the rich inconvenience, the inhabitants of Old Metairie, one of the flossiest neighborhoods in the entire state, should be scratching their heads in puzzlement.

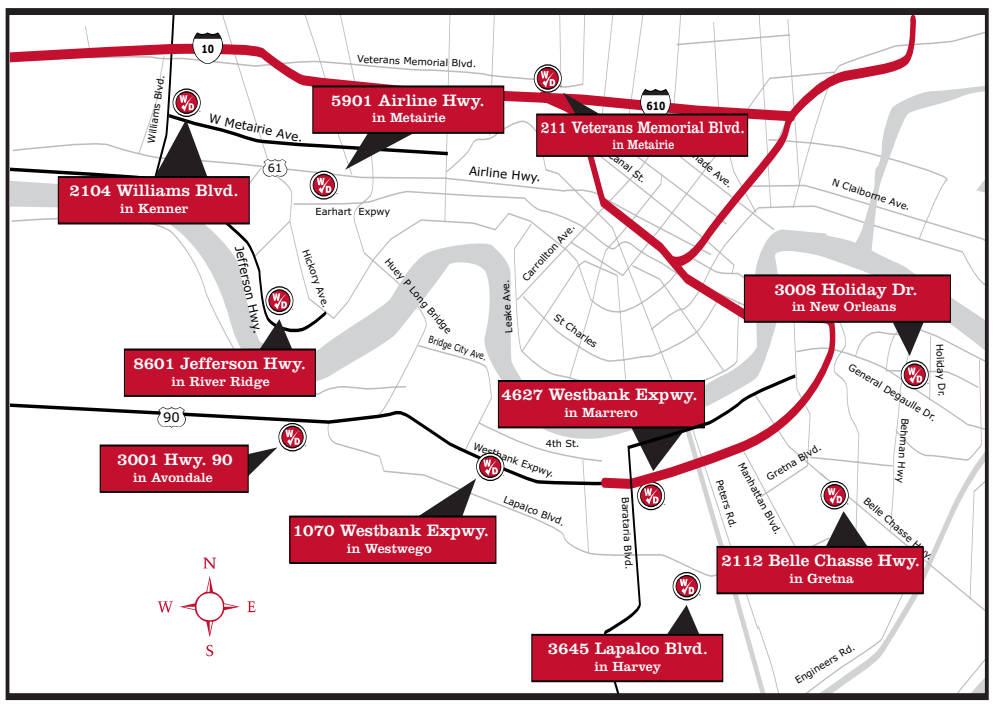
If the masses traduced government with tales of levee sabotage, government, in the persons of Mayor Ray Nagin and Police Chief Eddie Compass, turned the tables with highly sensationalized accounts of civilization's breakdown in the Superdome and the Convention Center in the days after the storm.

Certainly the truth was horrifying enough; conditions were unspeakable and no crowd that big is without its criminal element. Yet the picture that emerged worldwide of a city overrun by savages was a calumny as Nagin and Compass gave an official imprimatur to the grisliest rumors.

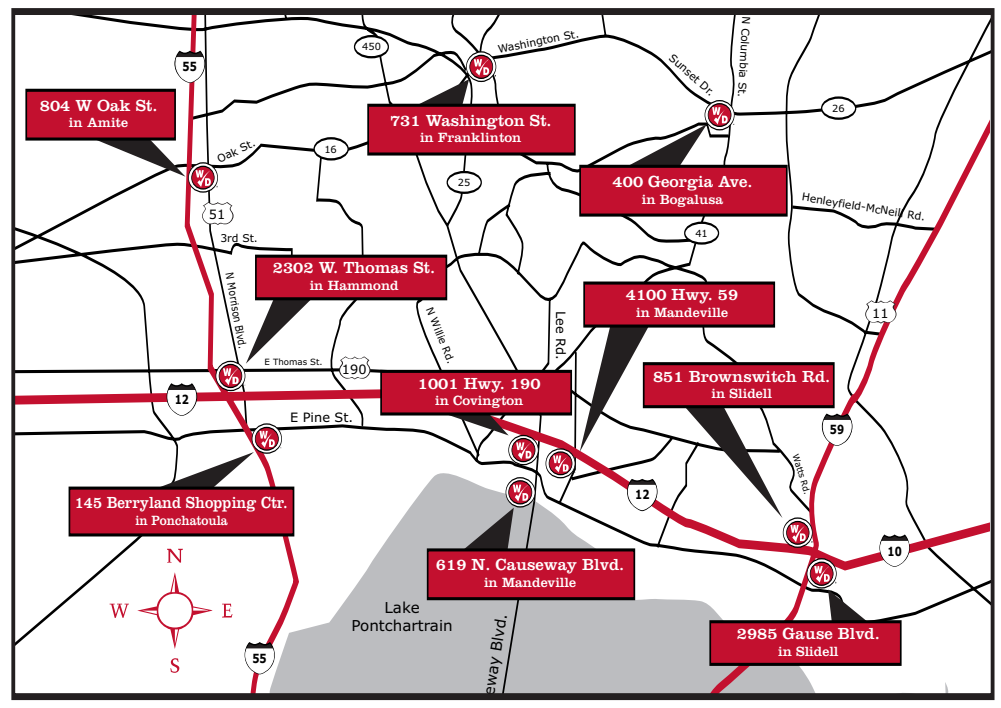
In the end, where there were supposed to be piles of corpses, only a handful were found. There was no evidence of children raped and murdered by marauding gangs. The gunfights between police and criminals in the dark recesses of the Superdome appeared to be figments of overheated imaginations.

No doubt Nagin, Compass and others who spread the tall tales believed them at the time, and it is only natural in times of crisis for the most outlandish rumors to take on ever more ghoulish details as they spread.In the confusion, the media swallowed it all since the stories appeared to be coming from eyewitnesses or officials who had interviewed them. Such is the respectable world's disdain for the underclass that not even the most horrific reports greatly taxed the credulity.

In fact, it appears that, amid all the squalor and terror, the most vulnerable evacuees were more likely to encounter a helping hand than the threat of harm. It was hell nevertheless, and the unvarnished truth, if it ever emerges, will be shocking enough.



The version of events that the world accepted is a slander on the citizens that can only retard the recovery. The wisdom of rebuilding New Orleans is being questioned in many quarters, and public support will not be aided by the perception that we are not only below sea level but outside the law. "Good riddance to the parasites of New Orleans," wrote one of the well-wishers who favor me with their thoughts via e-mail.



Decades hence, old timers will remember the child rapes of the Superdome just as clearly as they remember the dynamiting of the levees.

They say an army travels on its stomach. So do evacuees, and some are finding that the military's Meals, Ready to Eat aren't bad.

Mmm-Mmm . . . MREs!

STAFF PHOTOS BY KATHY ANDERSON

A spoonful of hot beef stew in minutes: That's the promise of MREs, in which the main entree is slipped inside a pouch that, with a little water, heats up, creating a hot meal on the run.

By Judy Walker
Food editor

In a city known world-wide for its cuisine, the manna that dropped from heaven during the hell after Hurricane Katrina came in a khaki plastic bag.

Helicopters dropped MREs — military jargon for meals, ready to eat — to residents stranded on rooftops who had not eaten for days. As Red Cross shelters were set up, MREs and military "heater meals" were served until catering operations got up and running. On the north shore, just off I-12 in front of a Target store, National Guardsmen tossed bags of ice, cases of water, and cartons of MREs into waiting cars. And, as usual, the military troops brought MREs as their own rations.

"They're not too bad," said Maj. Matt Kelly of the 192nd Military Police Detachment out of Omaha, Neb., who was stationed at the main Red Cross shelter at the Riverside Centroplex in Baton Rouge. He said the MREs are an improvement on the older versions of Army rations, and he should know. He ate MREs for 60 days in Iraq last year.

"I like the cheese tortellini," he said.

But soldiers with no choice in the matter aren't the only ones developing a taste for MREs.

Brenda Nolan, whose Gentilly home flooded, said her husband swears by MREs. When she told her husband she wasn't going to eat one, she recalled, her husband told her, "You don't know what you're missing." So she tried one, and liked it.

MY STORM STORY

Hurricane Katrina: In their own words

"I left on Saturday morning (before the storm). In the cab of my small pickup truck, I carried my eight cats, an old beagle and my ornery one-wing dove. In the back of the truck, I threw in a bicycle I was bringing home for my mother's birthday, and a small bag of clothes. I, like everyone else, thought I would be home again in a couple of days.

"On Sunday (Sept. 4), I rode with the Humane Society into New Orleans to rescue animals. The intention was to go to Lindy Boggs (Medical Center) in Mid-City, where numerous pets had been abandoned. Unfortunately, the water was too high and there was no way to make it there. We ended up at the Superdome. It was worse than any nightmare imaginable. However, out of the stench and filth, about 40 animals were rescued. I heard the next day they got 35 more. Some of the rescued included a momma pit bull and her 11 pups, a cockatiel, a cat with a broken leg (quickly named 'Fema Katrina'), many dehydrated dogs and a cute little fuzzy black kitten.

"For some reason the story that struck me the hardest occurred after we left the Dome. The trucks were full of animals heading down St. Charles Avenue. On an Uptown street corner was a well-dressed middle-age woman with three cat carriers. Extremely distraught, she waved the LASPCA trucks down and begged them to take her cats.

"That was all she had left — those three cats. Tearfully, she kissed each cat goodbye as it was loaded onto the truck. We left her on the street corner with a bottle of water and the promise that her cats would be well cared for. I will never forget watching that woman as we drove away. She just stood on that street corner sobbing. Behind her you could see the downed trees and smoke from the city fires and hear the constant droning of the helicopters overhead. She looked so small and forsaken.

"I couldn't help but think that last week this woman's life was good. Now she has nothing, not even her feline companions. I can only hope that somewhere down the line they will be reunited."

Benny Grunch's hunch

Song satirist thinks his New Orleans nostalgia is more relevant now than ever

I know I'm not the only New Orleans area resident who has thought about Benny Grunch's catchy tune, "Ain't Dere No More."

If you're not familiar with Benny, he's the talented New Orleans musician who has produced satirical Christmas songs for years and years, songs that include "The 12 Yats of Christmas," "Santa and His Reindeer Used to Live Right Here" and "O Little Town of Destrehan." He has some non-Yuletide numbers that are also favorites with his legion of fans.

Perhaps no one appreciates the city's past more than he does. That's reflected in several versions of "Ain't Dere No More," in which he humorously cites the litany of landmarks, icons and institutions that no longer exist:

"A&G's ain't there no more
"McCrory's ain't there no more
"Waterbury's ain't there no more
"Dailey's ain't there no more
"Red Goose — ain't there no more
"Them biddies' shoes — ain't there no more
"Godchaux's Men's . . . on the second floor
"That's the one! Ain't there no more."

In another version, he visits various sections of the city in his songs, naming many once-familiar places that "ain't there no more." The Lakeview list includes the Rockery Inn, the Velvet Swing, Lenfant's and Studio A record store. The St. Bernard version cites Jerry LaVie's, Cow Town, the Broom Factory and Atlantic Thrift. Metairie's disappearing act includes JC's, the House of Lee, "Metry" Ford on "Metry" Road, Pelican Bowl and the Real Superstore — ain't there no more.

"Krauss is gone so you can't try on
"No queen-size lingerie
"But, whatcha gonna do with K&B
"And Schwegmann's gone away."

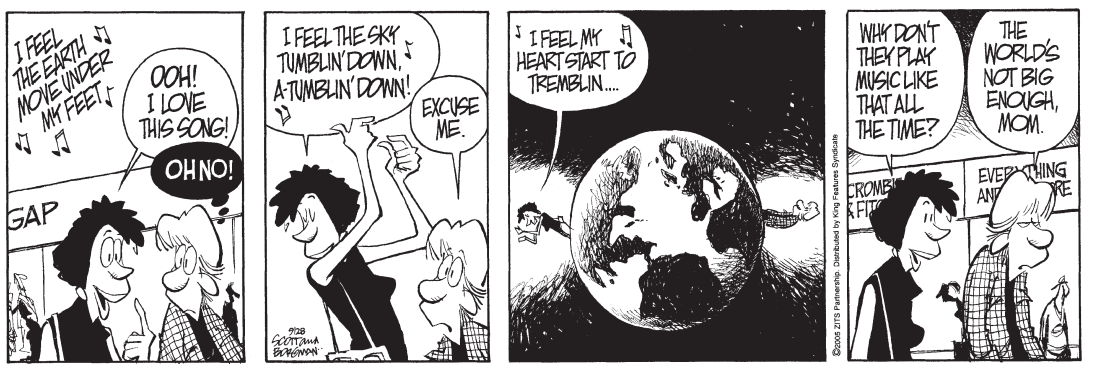
Like a lot of other post-Katrina residents, there's one more thing that ain't there no more for Benny — his home on Pontalba Street behind the Plantation Coffee House on Canal Boulevard at the railroad overpass. That's also where WWL-TV shot the "Santa and His Reindeer Used to Live Right Here" video that airs every holiday season.



"I'm wiped out — business and home — but I'm still gonna get ready for Christmas," said Grunch, who is staying with his daughter Angel in Denver.

"All my inventory is gone, my two-inch master tapes, my multi-tracks, copyrights for music, my Yatwear T-shirts and sweatshirts, and my

"I wouldn't eat them because they're stanky."

Mmm-Mmm... HOT MEALS IN A PLASTIC POUCH

"Several people are saying the lasagna is better than their own home-cooking," Nolan said.

MREs are proving particularly popular among teenage boys, perhaps as much for their nifty self-heating elements as for their taste. They showed up in the lunchboxes of numerous private school students who returned to school in St. Tammany Parish earlier this month.

But not everybody finds them appetizing.

"I wouldn't eat them because they're stanky," said Yolanda Hilbert, who evacuated from Uptown to the Riverside Centroplex in Baton Rouge. "I got one (chicken pasta) and I opened it up and I didn't like the smell."

Natasha White said she tried them when they were first served, but she didn't like them and neither did her four children, Christina, 15; Melshika, 14; Earl, 2; and Isaiah, 1.

"I tried to taste it," White said, "but the smell turned me off."

MREs come in dazzling varieties: beef steak with mushroom gravy, chili with macaroni, chicken fajitas, spaghetti with meat sauce and beef ravioli. For vegetarians, there are cheese omelets and veggie burgers with barbecue sauce. Kosher MREs are available, too.

Jambalaya and Cajun rice and vegetables are the Louisiana flavors in the mix. Meal No. 18 is Cajun sausage, beans and rice. (Consensus after a taste test of the jambalaya and Cajun rice by several New Orleanians: Not bad!)

The packages are designed to be complete nutrition for a day, enough food to sustain a soldier while doing heavy work. For example, the vegetarian burger meal contains two pieces of wheat snack bread, the veggie burger in barbecue sauce, sliced dried cranberries, a brownie with chocolate chips, a sturdy brown spoon, a packet of condiments with iced tea drink mix, matches designed for damp climates, gum, a napkin, a moist towelette, and a tiny ⅛ ounce individual bottle of Tabasco sauce.

Other MREs include snacks, such as M&Ms and Skittles, shortbread cookies, pumpkin pound cake and crackers with a whiz-like cheese spread.

So just how do you get a hot meal from a plastic pouch? Inside each brown bag is a green pouch with detailed instructions printed on the outside. Stuff the main entree into that pouch, add a little water, and the thing heats the food in minutes.

Food preservation has always had a military history: Canning was invented to feed Napoleon's army.

Today's MRE is a miracle of modern retort packaging, a type of food preservation method that is basically canning in laminated plastic packets instead of metal cans. The complete MRE is lightweight, fits into the pocket of a field jacket, and can withstand temperature extremes and rough handling. The military and their contractors have been working on MREs since the 1980s, constantly refining and improving them.

"Personally, I like them," said Sgt. Derek Sturtevant of Quincy, Ill., of a National Guard unit stationed in Belle Chasse. Serving in New Orleans, he's eating three MREs a day, including his favorites beef stew and chicken tetrazini. "But they're totally different from home-cooked meals, and once I get home, I never eat them."

In the line of cars at the Belk Shopping Center just off I-12 in Covington, Carmen Dozier brought 10 dozen doughnuts for the guardsmen who were piling MREs into her green Suburban for distribution to families stranded in Mandeville.

"My husband and I have eaten them about four times," Dozier said. "They're good, but they're also loaded with sodium.

"My husband and I, and other people, especially enjoy the snacks. The fig cookies are the best I've ever eaten."

LIND, from C-1

equipment. I brought one bass guitar, some jeans and T-shirts with me, and my 1994 Honda Civic, and that's all I've got."

As the senior member of his family, he also had most of the family memorabilia, the photos and mementos of happy moments — that ain't there no more. He also lost two antique Vespa motor scooters, a couple of new motorcycles and a restored antique T-Bird.

"A couple of CDs might have survived, but I think that's about it," he said.

So, the obvious question: How does a guy who has spent his life making people laugh because of his songs about the city he so dearly loves continue to play a song named "Ain't Dere No More" after Hurricane Katrina?

"I might take a look at the house and just walk away from everything," he said. "But I doubt it. I think what we'll do is take 'Ain't Dere No More' and make it a little more uplifting. We're gonna pick up all the dirt and say, 'Ain't dere no more.' Same with the sludge and the debris — ain't dere no more. Sure, it's tough to make a funny song about something so serious and tragic, but I'm gonna try. I think we'll all need a laugh by then."

His Ultrasonics recording studio on Washington Avenue near Xavier University, he said, "is gone. But I'll find another one. And my manufacturers are in Nashville, so that's OK."

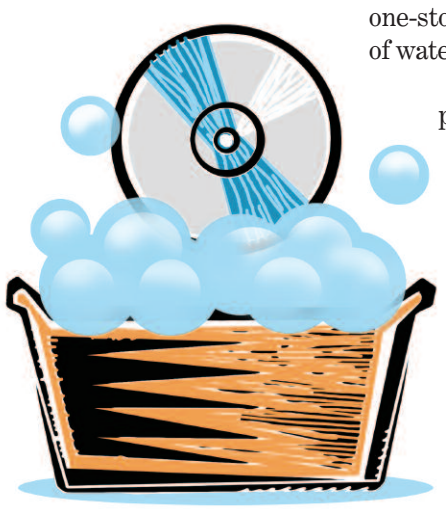
On this year's Christmas CD, Benny also plans to re-work "Over By Your Mom 'N' Nem," a haunting, nostalgic song which, unlike most of his stuff, is on the melancholy side. But he thinks it needs to be done. The old version is a song with a message we've all heard: You can't go back; things have changed. In that one, the chorus says, "You wish you could go, but you can't, now you know, over by your mom 'n' nem."

He sings about, "You used to see parades from the front porch . . . there's a place you should go, but you can't, now you know, over by your mom 'n' nem."

He says he's going to change all the references to "you" to "we" and see how it goes from there. It's going to be sad, he said, but he thinks it's something we all need to hear. It'll be a purging, a cleansing for the soul.

He's not just feeling bad for his own losses, he said, but for those of colleagues.

"A lot of musicians lost their stuff. A lot of guys I know lived between Lake Pontchartrain and Jeff Davis Parkway," not to mention many other low-lying areas.



Lakeview Harbor Bar & Restaurant on Harrison Avenue, a spot Benny Grunch & the Bunch plays gigs from time to time, took on 18 feet of water, the co-owner told Benny. But Mark Schenk told Benny that when he re-opens, he will book him for the grand opening.

"Count on it," Grunch said. "I'll be there."

Digital indestructible

Don't throw away those flood-damaged DVDs and CDs

I arrived at my rented refugee house the other night where four adults, three children and three dogs reside in a small space — we're an American Katrina family — and found everyone watching "Four Weddings and a Funeral," the Hugh Grant-Andie McDowell romantic comedy.

It made me cry.

Oh, I'm not that much of a softy. It's just that this particular DVD had been rescued just two days earlier from my shattered one-story home in Lakeview, after spending two weeks under 8 feet of water.

Like thousands of you, my family lost almost all our worldly possessions in the storm's aftermath. Among those items I thought lost was a collection of 260 DVDs, built up over many years of being a movie buff.

But strike a note of hope for the digital age: Many of your DVDs, and even more of your store-bought CDs, can be saved, even after weeks spent under black, contaminated water.

So far in my own recovery efforts, about three out of four DVDs, and probably five out of six factory-made CDs, made it out of the floodwaters intact. One note of pessimism: If it's a CD-R, or a DVD-R that you recorded yourself, chances are excellent that it's gone for good.

Here's how to do it:

Plastic cases and paper inserts are heavily contaminated with flood waters that I did not want to transport, so you might want to remove all of the DVDs and CDs from their cases and put them in a plastic bag.

Set up an assembly line consisting of two buckets, several bath towels and a roll of soft paper towels. Fill one bucket with water and dish soap. Fill the second with fresh rinse water. Spread the towels on a flat surface.

Place several of the discs in the soapy water, then pick them up one at a time and use your thumbs to remove any debris or film from both sides of the disc. You can use a cloth if you'd prefer, but make sure it is very soft and free of any abrasives, as scratching the plastic coating of the disc can render it unplayable.

Also, as you clean, move from the center of the disc out toward the edges as suggested by disc manufacturers when cleaning.

You can examine the disc and can often tell whether it has emerged unscathed. Look for variable colors, a darkened spot where water has seeped beneath the plastic seal, or bubbles under the surface of the plastic. Don't go by color alone, as discs come in a surprisingly wide range of shades, from silver to gold to grey.

Once you're confident the disc is clean, place it in the rinse water, and then place it label-side-up on the towel. When you have filled up your towel space, pick up each disc individually and towel dry it further with a soft paper towel or soft, dry cloth. Layer the discs on a firm surface on pieces of letter-sized plain paper, two discs to a page, followed by a layer of paper, followed by two more discs, etc. In this way, we made sure the discs were completely dewatered, and didn't stick together.

Test each disc in a DVD or CD player.

You'll find some that are gone. But there is very little discernible pattern. Some old discs and some new discs will be good, just as some old and new will be bad.

In my own collection, Miramax films seem to be the most rugged by far. Every Miramax disc I've recovered so far has been pristine.

And one more odd thing: I noticed that every movie we have with a nautical theme, from "Master and Commander" to "The Life Aquatic with Steve Zissou" to "Dead Calm" survived the flood waters intact. Even "Titanic," unlike my house, proved unsinkable.

Go figure.

VooDoo suspends play for upcoming season

Cites N.O. Arena damage, hopes to return in 2007

By Jim Derry

Add the New Orleans VooDoo to the list of sports teams which have been impacted severely by Hurricane Katrina.

The future of the VooDoo was left in doubt Tuesday, when owner Tom Benson announced the team will not compete in the upcoming Arena Football League season.

"The decision has been made to suspend play of the New Orleans VooDoo in New Orleans for the 2006 season," Benson said in a statement. "Factors beyond our control are forcing us to make this decision. We will not have a facility available to us to play our games, we will not be able to house players and staff, and we will not be able to utilize our practice facility, as it is being used by the government for Hurricane Katrina operations."

Executive Vice President/ General Manager Mickey Loomis said Tuesday there is no alternative, as the staff is burdened with working from San Antonio and trying to concentrate on the remainder of the Saintsí season.

"We thought about everything before we made this decision. We would love (for the VooDoo) to be competing this season, but ultimately, what it comes down to is that we don't have a place to play, we don't have a place to practice, and we don't have a place to house our players," Loomis said. "Right now, there are just too many questions and not enough answers. Something we have to deal with and focus on right now is that, as a staff, we have 13 remaining games with the Saints, so we'll have to deal with the VooDoo the best way we can."

The VooDoo's staff, other than the coaches, is made up of Saints personnel, and there hasn't been time to think about what will happen beyond this season.

"I don't think there's an answer for that right now," Loomis

Bayou Classic to be played in Houston

Stadium, hotel rooms give it nod over Shreveport

By Ted Lewis

Houston's Reliant Stadium will be the site of this year's Bayou Classic, beating out Shreveport for the game between Southern and Grambling, sources said Tuesday.

The official announcement will be made today.

The Nov. 26 game had to be moved from New Orleans because the Superdome is unplayable.

Houston appeared to be the favorite of officials from both schools, but a strong bid by Shreveport and uncertainty over conditions in Houston because of the approach of Hurricane Rita delayed the decision.

However, when Houston escaped the worst effects of Rita, the decision was finalized.

The Bayou Classic has been played in New Orleans since 1974, the first year at Tulane Stadium and since then in the Superdome.

Besides the football game, which annually drew sellout crowds in excess of 70,000, the weekend festivities that included the battle of the bands on Friday night, a job fair and several alumni gatherings attracted thousands of others for Thanksgiving weekend who never at-

SCOUTING REPORT

BUFFALO BILLS (1-2) vs. SAINTS (1-2)
at San Antonio (Alamodome)

By Pierce W. Huff
Staff writer

The Saints play their first game in the Alamodome on Sunday against the Buffalo Bills, who in a lot of ways are a mirror image of the Saints, minus hurricane displacement.

The Saints and the Bills have lost two games since impressive season-opening victories. The Saints defeated the Carolina Panthers then lost to the New York Giants and Minnesota Vikings. The Bills beat the Houston Texans then fell to Tampa Bay and Atlanta.

Both the Saints and the Bills lost key defensive players in losses on Sunday.

Saints safety Jay Bellamy is out for the season after injuring his right rotator cuff. Coach Jim Haslett said the rookie second-round draft pick Josh Bullocks will start in place of Bellamy.

Bills linebacker Takeo Spikes, the team's top defensive player, is out for the season with a torn right Achilles tendon.

Both teams have had mistake-filled performances that have played key roles in their losses.

The Saints are tied with the Oakland Raiders for most penalties in the NFL (36) and have had 27 penalties in the past two games.

The Bills, who ranked 29th in the NFL in touchdowns in the red zone last year, have two touchdowns in nine red-zone possessions this season.

LAST MEETING: Saints won at Buffalo 24-6 on Sept. 9, 2001.

BILLS ON OFFENSE: Losman hasn't conjured up any memories of Jim Kelly, or Drew Bledsoe for that matter. Losman has completed 38 of 79 passes (48.1 percent) for 358 yards, one touchdown and one interception. Running back Willis McGahee is the team's top rusher, and is showing some of the form that characterized his career at the University of Miami. McGahee has rushed for 291 yards and one touchdown on 62 carries and is averaging 4.7 yards per carry. The top receivers are former LSU wideout Josh Reed, who has nine catches for 101 yards, and veteran standout Eric Moulds, who has eight catches for 66 yards. Lee Evans is the deep threat.

BILLS ON DEFENSE: The unit is formidable, with plenty of big-name players, despite the absence of Spikes. London Fletcher is a tough middle linebacker who knocks down everything in reach and leads the team with 26 tackles, including 12 assists. He also has a fumble recovery. Safety Lawyer Milloy is a big hitter with good range, who has 20 tackles, including seven assists, one sack and one fumble recovery. Troy Vincent, once a solid cornerback, now roams at safety.

BILLS ON SPECIAL TEAMS: Place-kicker Rian Lindell has been the team's most consistent offensive threat, making all six of his field-goal attempts, including 3-for-3 between 40 and 49 yards. Brian Moorman is averaging 43.3 yards per punt, with a net average of 33.3 yards. Former Northwestern State player Terrence McGee is averaging 29.3 yards per kickoff return.

BILLS BY THE NUMBERS: 60 — Losman's quarterback rating. 19 — points scored by the Bills in their past two games. 17 — tackles this season by Spikes. 2 — consecutive losses the Bills have this season against teams in the NFC South. 0 — touchdown receptions by Reed and Moulds.

AP PHOTO

Wide receiver Eric Moulds (80) is the Buffalo Bills' biggest threat in the passing game.

INJURY REPORT: Bills - Spikes (Achilles) is out. Coy Wire (thigh) is listed as day to day. Saints — Bellamy (shoulder), Aaron Stecker (ankle) are out. Joe Horn is listed as day-to-day with a hamstring injury.

St. Martin's, Crescent City announce schedules

Pioneers to play without star receiver Sobalvarro

By Bill Bumgarner
Staff writer

St. Martin's and Crescent City have announced they will play abbreviated football schedules this season.

Crescent City will open its season Oct. 7 against Menard of Alexandria at St. Martin's at 6 p.m. St. Martin's, which will play a four-game schedule, will meet Ridgewood at St. Martin's on Oct. 14 in its season opener.

Crescent City, however, will be without star receiver Luis Sobalvarro, Pioneers coach Steve Ceravolo said. Sobalvarro, a Class 1A All-State receiver last season, has transferred to a school in the Miami area, and Ceravolo said he doesn't expect him to return. Crescent City quarterback Jared Mesa is expected back, Ceravolo said.

Crescent City will play at Fisher on Oct. 14, against Ridgewood on Oct. 22, at St. Martin's on Oct. 28 and against either Ecole Classique or Riverdale on Nov. 4.

If Crescent City plays Ecole, it would give the Pioneers two District 10-1A games - against Ecole and Ridgewood. However, Ecole has still not decided if it will play this season.

St. Martin's will play its lone District 11-2A game against Fisher on Nov. 4 at St. Martin's for the district championship. Those are the only two schools in the league that will field teams this season.

After the Ridgewood game, St. Martin's will play Ecole Classique on Oct. 21, if Ecole is able to field a team, then against Crescent City on Oct. 28. All four of St. Martin's games will be at St. Martin's.

Weary Gators look forward to finally playing a game

Fisher will open storm-ravaged season Friday

By Pierce W. Huff
Staff writer

Fisher receiver Brandon Troulliet has waited three years to play his senior season. But Troulliet, like many of his teammates, can't help but wonder what Mother Nature is going to do next to spoil this special season.

The small town of Jean Lafitte, where Fisher is located, avoided major damage when Hurricane Katrina swept through the area last month. Although Hurricane Rita sideswiped the area this past weekend, it caused major water damage, forcing the Gators to cancel their first game of the season against Holy Cross.

Weary but undaunted, Fisher will play Friday at Springfield.

"I'm very determined to play," Troulliet said. "I'd do anything to play in all 10 games this season."

So would Fisher coach Duane Foret.

"I'm going to do everything I can do in my power to help these kids play in as many games as I can," Foret said.

Whether or not that happens the 2005 hurricane season has been a memorable one for Fisher for all of the wrong reasons.

Like most of his teammates, Troulliet and his family have evacuated Lafitte twice because of hurricanes.

The Troulliets went to Houston to avoid Katrina. Troulliet didn't go to school during his stay in Texas because he wanted to go back to his home school.

The Troulliets then fled Rita by traveling to Panama City, Fla.

The ironic part about both hurricanes is that Fisher and Troulliet's family fared better against Katrina, which hit close to Lafitte, than they did against Rita, which slammed into the Texas-Louisiana border.

The storm surge from Rita partially flooded the Fisher practice field and playing field. The school only had slight damage from Katrina.

The same thing happened with Troulliet and his family during the hurricanes.

"We had a little wind damage with Hurricane Katrina," he said. "We had three feet of water with Hurricane Rita."

Still, the football season will go on now that the hurricanes have passed.

"I talked to the Springfield coach, and we're going to play no matter what," said Foret, a 1990 Fisher graduate and former football player. "I'm so concerned with these kids having a senior year that it's unbelievable. We're just trying to make it right for them."

Eugene propels Destrehan past South Lafourche

St. James rolls; Caesar carries Riverside

From staff reports

Destrehan found Monday night football much to its liking.

The unbeaten Wildcats (3-0) combined a ferocious defensive charge with the running and passing of quarterback Jai Eugene to score all of their points in the first half of a 38-7 nondistrict victory against South Lafourche (0-2) at Destrehan.

South Lafouche had not practiced since Wednesday because of a Hurricane Rita-imposed evacuation of Lafourche Parish and it showed against one of the state's top Class 5A teams. Destrehan led 14-0 after six plays from scrimmage and 21-0 after 12 plays.

Eugene passed for two touchdowns and ran for two more while totaling 208 yards in six series. The 6-foot, 185-pound senior completed nine of 11 passes for 114 yards with touchdowns covering 14 and 17 yards to Edwin Reed and Joshua Martin. Eugene also ran for scores of 3 and 79 yards, totaling 94 yards on three carries.

"We played a great game," Eugene said. "We came out and put them away early. My offensive line was tremendous. They just did a hell of a job. The coaches call great plays, and we jelled together.

"I'd like to thank South Lafourche for playing. I know they've been through a lot. The hurricanes have been messing everything up, but I'm trying to keep my teammates focused."

Destrehan's defense, too, was focused, smothering the Tarpons in the first half. South Lafourche gained only 21 yards and committed three turnovers. The Wildcats forced four fumbles, recovered two and recorded an interception.

Additionally, defensive back Jerico Nelson scooped up an errant pitch by quarterback Korte Cheramie returned the turnover 10 yards for Destrehan's second touchdown on the game's sixth snap. Defensive back Brandon Brexton also returned a first-quarter interception of a tipped pass 45 yards to set up Eugene's short scoring run.

St. James 42, Varnado 6:

St. James, the top-ranked team in Class 2A, gained 454 yards, including 363 rushing against Varnado (0-1) at St. James on Monday.

St. James had four running backs rush for more than 40 yards. Tramaine Charles led the team with 99 yards and one touchdown on six carries.

"We did a lot of good things tonight," St. James coach Rick Gaille said. "I thought we ran the ball pretty good inside and outside, and we spread the ball enough to where they couldn't key on one person."

St. James (3-0) led 7-0 when it drove 64 yards on 10 plays for a touchdown on its first possession of the game. Running back Tremayne Dapremont capped the drive with a 4-yard touchdown run. St. James increased its lead to 14-0 with 8:57 left in the first half when running back Luther Ambrose took an option pitch from quarterback Antonio Phillips and scampered around right end for a 4 yard touchdown run. The play capped an eight-play, 44-yard drive.

The Wildcats increased their lead to 21-0 with 2:42 remaining when running back Jason Zeno ran around right end for an 11-yard touchdown. St. James drove for 65 yards on eight plays for the score.

St. James finished its first-half scoring when Dapremont muscled his way through the Varnado defense for a 4-yard touchdown run, which made the score 28-0 with three seconds left in the half. Dapremont's run came one play after Phillips threw a 57-yard pass to Zenon, who zigzagged his way through the Varnado secondary to set up the late score.

St. James scored its last touchdown in the game when backup quarterback Marcus Dumas threw a 5-yard touchdown pass to receiver Chase Green to make the score 42-6 with 5:13 left in the game.

Riverside 51, West St. John 20:

Riverside sophomore running back Jarid Caesar ran for 257 yards and four touchdowns on 22 carries to lead the Class 2A Rebels (3-0) to victory Monday in Edgard.

It was Riverside's first victory against its River Parish rival since 2001. It was the first nondistrict contest between the teams since 1996. West St. John (0-3), last year's Class 2A state champion now competing in Class 1A, had won the past four meetings by a combined score of 161-27.

The Rebels (3-0) had 440 yards, nearly all of it on the ground. Caesar scored on runs of 9, 29, 43, and 10 yards, and he had another run that covered 58 yards. He had 172 yards on 14 carries in the first half.

Riverside quarterback A.J. Delaneuville completed five of seven passes for 80 yards and one touchdown, to Lee Haydel, all in the first half. Andrew Herring ran for 49 yards and two touchdowns. Jordan Poirrer added a 26-yard field goal and converted four extra-point attempts.

West St. John was hampered by turnovers. The Rams (0-3) lost four fumbles — three recovered by Riverside's Colling Yeargin. Jordan Poirrier and Tad Brack had interceptions for the Rebels.

Rams quarterbacks Olajuwon Hall and Blaine Gautier combined to pass for 214 yards — Hall had 107 in the first half, and Gautier had 107 in the second. Hall threw the Rams' only passing touchdown, a 12-yard strike to Tiarus Jenkins on the Rams' first possession.

SAINTS, KB OFFER TICKETS TO VICTIMS: The Saints are teaming up with the San Antonio division of KB Home to reach out to Hurricane Katrina evacuees, volunteers and support workers in the greater San Antonio and Austin areas for the Saints' first home game at the Alamodome at noon Sunday against the Buffalo Bills. Team owner Tom Benson and KB Home will provide 4,000 tickets apiece — 8,000 total — to Hurricane Katrina evacuees, volunteers and support workers. Tickets will be distributed through civic leaders in San Antonio and Austin, as well as through volunteer and relief organizations in the region, including the American Red Cross.

BROWN RE-HIRES ASSISTANTS: Phil Ford and Dave Hanners rejoined coach Larry Brown on Tuesday when they were hired as New York Knicks assistants. Ford spent last season as an assistant under Brown at Detroit. He served 12 years as a North Carolina assistant, including the 1993 NCAA championship season. Ford was the 1979 NBA Rookie of the Year. Hanners was an assistant the past two seasons with the Pistons. He has 17 years of coaching experience, including three with the Philadelphia 76ers under Brown. He also worked for 12 seasons on the North Carolina staff. They join Herb Williams, Mark Aguirre and George Glymph on the Knicks staff.

BOBCATS RE-SIGN WALLACE: The Charlotte Bobcats re-signed forward Gerald Wallace to a three-year contract. Wallace averaged 11.1 points and 5.5 rebounds last season while starting 68 of the 70 games he played. His average of 1.6 steals a game ranked ninth in the NBA. Wallace was drafted by Sacramento with the 25th overall pick in 2001 and spent three seasons with the Kings. The Bobcats selected him in the expansion draft last season.

JOHNSON OF NEGRO LEAGUE DIES: Byron "Mex" Johnson, a shortstop for the Kansas City Monarchs of the Negro leagues and Satchel Paige's traveling team, died at 94. Johnson died Saturday, and daughter Jacquelyn Benton said he had prostate cancer. Johnson played for the Monarchs in 1937-38, when blacks were barred from the National and American leagues. He joined the traveling team of the legendary pitcher Satchel Paige in 1939 and stayed through 1940. "He never complained about how hard it was being a black baseball player, and he was never bitter that he didn't get to play" in the majors, said baseball researcher Jay Sanford, who knew Johnson for 20 years.

AUSTRALIAN OPEN AWARD INCREASED: The Australian Open will award $905,000 to the men's and women's champions next year, up from about $865,000 this year. Tennis Australia also said the men's final for the Jan. 16-29 tournament at Melbourne Park will again be held Sunday night. Officials will add a night session to the middle Sunday for the first time. Tournament officials also announced a $4.5 million refurbishment to the main Rod Laver Arena.

GOLF

GOLF RULES AMENDED: The rule that got Mark Roe disqualified from the British Open two years ago when he forgot to swap scorecards with Jesper Parnevik has been revised to allow officials to correct the mistake without penalty. That was among the 111 amendments to the "Decisions on the Rules of Golf," which take effect Jan. 1. Other changes allow for measuring devices, such as GPS systems or rangefinders, to be used at the discretion of tournament organizers. The Tight Lies Tour began using a GPS system this year for players who can't afford caddies, hoping it would speed play. The PGA and European tours, among other top circuits, allow caddies or players to use rangefinders only during practice rounds. The U.S. Golf Association and the Royal & Ancient Golf Club also agreed to add a decision that would allow players to stand square to the hole if their intent is to stay out of another player's line. That got Brian Davis of England disqualified from a European tour event, and Tiger Woods was investigated - and cleared - when it appeared he did that on the 14th hole of the first round at this year's Masters. For Roe, the scorecard revision comes two years too late. He shot 67 in the third round at Royal St. George's that left him in a tie for fourth with Woods, two shots out of the lead. He played with Parnevik that day, but they forgot to swap scorecards on the first tee. When the round was over, Parnevik's score (81) was posted on Roe's card while Roe's 67 was under Parnevik's name. Under strict interpretation of the rules, they were disqualified. "I think it's a great move," Roe said. "I'm really, really pleased that something good has come from my mistake, really. I'd like to think that the way I handled it at the time, and what I went through, was probably a small factor in their decision to look at it."

WIE TO DEBUT ON MEN'S TOUR IN JAPAN: American teenager Michelle Wie will play in a top-tier Japanese men's tour event in November, organizers said. Wie, who will turn 16 next month, will play in the Nov. 24-27 Casio World Open, one of the richest events on Japan's men's tour. She will be the second woman to play in a JGTO tour event and the first since Sophie Gustafson teed off in the 2003 Casio World Open, where the Swedish pro failed to make the cut. Wie is an amateur but is expected to turn pro next month.

AUTO RACING

AIKMAN, STAUBACH MAKE FIRST HIRE: Hall of Fame Racing made its first hire when it tabbed Philippe Lopez to build the NASCAR team owned by former Dallas Cowboys quarterbacks Roger Staubach and Troy Aikman. Lopez was hired as a crew chief, and will be in charge of getting the Nextel Cup team ready to debut next season. "My first priority is to get the shop up and running," Lopez said. "We are working very closely with Joe Gibbs Racing. That will give us a great advantage right from the start." The team has yet to hire a driver for the car that will be sponsored by Texas Instruments.

COLLEGE FOOTBALL

KANSAS STATE RB CHARGED: Kansas State running back Thomas Clayton was charged with almost hitting a university official with his car while driving away to avoid having a boot put on the vehicle for parking violations. Clayton, a junior, was charged with misdemeanor battery. He was arrested Sept. 16 on a complaint of aggravated battery. Parking services officials said employee James A. Seymour was almost hit by Clayton. The player was arrested a short time later and released on $1,000 bond. According to the police report, Seymour, 44, was not injured. "I obviously shouldn't have left the scene, but the accusations of the aggravated battery, in my opinion, was inaccurate," said Clayton, adding he was certain he did not hit anybody.

TENNIS

TOP SEED OUSTED IN PALERMO: Top-seeded David Ferrer lost 6-2, 6-2 in the first round of the Palermo International to Francesco Aldi, a wild-card ranked 164th playing before hometown fans. Ferrer, ranked 13th, reached the quarterfinals of the French Open and was runner-up this season in Valencia, Spain. Third-seeded Juan Carlos Ferrero beat Florian Mayer 6-3, 6-3 in the first round. Ferrero, the 2003 French Open champion, is ranked 20th and has not won a title this year. Eighth-seeded Davide Sanguinetti defeated Florent Serra 6-7 (10), 6-1, 6-2. Serra was coming off his first tournament win in the BCR Open in Romania this month. Also, Alberto Martin upset seventh-seeded Gael Monfils 1-6, 6-1, 6-4; second-seeded Tommy Robredo beat Albert Portas 6-3, 7-5; and fifth-seeded Fernando Verdasco eliminated Tomas Zib 6-2, 6-2.

Jets have series of unfortunate events

Pennington, Fiedler out, Testaverde in for New York

From wire reports

Vinny Testaverde was plopped on his couch, watching his beloved New York Jets and, like millions of other fans, could hardly believe his eyes.

In a span of seven plays Sunday, not one but two quarterbacks went down, starter Chad Pennington and backup Jay Fiedler. Out for the season. Both of them, with shoulder injuries.

There was only one thing to do.

"I called Herm and said, 'I am here in whatever capacity you need me,'" Testaverde said, referring to Jets coach Herman Edwards. "To be a teacher ... or to play, to be a starter or a backup. I want to get this team back on track to where everybody expects it to be. Whatever that role is ... I feel in a good enough position to do that."

Suddenly, the 41-year-old Testaverde is back in the NFL.

"I'm excited, happy, nervous, anxious, all those feelings about playing for the Jets again," he said.

With Pennington and Fiedler gone with shoulder injuries, Testaverde likely was signed to back up untested Brooks Bollinger. Considering Bollinger's inexperience and the way Pennington and Fiedler were battered in Sunday's 26-20 overtime loss to Jacksonville, seeing Testaverde behind center soon isn't farfetched at all.

"Right now, Vinny is not starting, he is not running out of the tunnel in Baltimore being the starter," Edwards said. "He is going to be standing next to me. Brooks is starting. From there, we will see."

What Edwards and Testaverde saw Sunday was something they may never see again in the NFL.

Pennington came out of the game late in the third quarter with a tender right shoulder, but went back in when Fiedler dislocated his right shoulder after six plays. Pennington, who underwent surgery to repair a torn rotator cuff in February, had little on his throws, and an MRI exam Monday revealed another tear in the rotator cuff.

Pennington and Fiedler were on the same flight to Alabama to see Dr. James Andrews, the noted orthopedist who repaired Pennington's shoulder earlier this year.

"It's tough. I anticipate he will be out for the season," Edwards said of Pennington. "I've never been in the situation where you lose the No. 1 and 2 quarterbacks in a span of seven plays."

That means it's Bollinger and Testaverde against the Baltimore Ravens' rugged defense on Sunday. Bollinger has thrown nine passes in his career, all against Arizona in a victory last season when Pennington sat out.

HARRISON OUT FOR SEASON: New England Patriots safety Rodney Harrison will miss the rest of the season with torn ligaments in his left knee, the team confirmed.

The Patriots placed Harrison on injured reserve, and agent Steve Feldman said the 32-year-old strong safety is expected to undergo surgery in four to six weeks for a torn anterior cruciate ligament, medial collateral ligament and posterior cruciate ligament.

Coach Bill Belichick did not disclose the extent of Harrison's injury after he went down in the first quarter of New England's 23-20 win over Pittsburgh on Sunday.

BAILEY AWAITS MRI RESULTS: Denver Broncos cornerback Champ Bailey had an MRI exam on his injured left hamstring Tuesday, results of which were not immediately released.

Bailey hurt himself in the second quarter of Denver's 30-10 win over Kansas City on Monday night, aggravating an injury that forced him out of the entire preseason.

Broncos players were off Tuesday and coaches were working on the game plan for next week's game against Jacksonville. Team officials did not immediately respond to requests from The Associated Press for updated information on Bailey's tests.

"It's sore," Bailey said after the game. "But I'm not really worried. I just want to know what's wrong so I can start taking care of it."

NINERS PLACE WOODS ON IR: The San Francisco 49ers placed wide receiver Rashaun Woods on injured reserve with a thumb injury, ending a second consecutive disappointing season for the team's former No. 1 draft pick.

Woods, who was inactive the first three games this season, injured ligaments in his left thumb late last week. He practiced despite the injury, but further tests determined that he needed surgery, which he underwent Monday.

Woods was the 31st overall pick in 2004, parlaying his stellar college career at Oklahoma State into a high draft selection and the accompanying $3.85 million in guaranteed money from the 49ers.

But he has struggled from the start in the NFL. He missed three weeks of his first training camp with a hamstring injury, and he never caught up to his teammates during San Francisco's 2-14 season. Woods caught only seven passes for 160 yards and a touchdown last season.

He missed time in training camp this year with a strained quadriceps muscle and fell behind undrafted free agent Otis Amey on the depth chart.

New York Jets quarterback Chad Pennington, right, who underwent surgery to repair a torn rotator cuff in February, had an MRI exam Monday that revealed another tear in the rotator cuff. With Pennington and backup Jay Fiedler both out for the season, the Jets called upon Vinny Testaverde to backup new starter Brooks Bollinger.

Hornets to hold camp at Oklahoma school

Team to train at NAIA Southern Nazarene

By John Reid
Staff writer

After an extensive search to find a suitable facility to hold training camp and regular-season practices, Hornets general manager Allan Bristow said Tuesday the team has reached an agreement with Southern Nazarene (Okla.) University.

The Hornets will hold their practices, starting with training camp next Tuesday, at the Sawyer Center, a 98,000 square-foot facility built in 1998 at the small, NAIA school. The Sawyer Center has three levels, which includes a first-floor gymnasium, a second-floor weight room and jogging track, and athletic training facilities housed on the third floor.

"We researched the area, and it's really a first-class practice facility," Bristow said.

The Hornets will play 35 regular-season games in Oklahoma City and six in Baton Rouge because of damages to New Orleans Arena.

Southern Nazarene is located in Bethany, Okla., just outside Oklahoma City. The Hornets will share the facility with the school's men's and women's basketball teams and women's volleyball team.

"We will be able to provide them with their own training room, locker room and equipment room," said Bobby Martin, Southern Nazarene's athletic director. "We'll be able to carry on our own programs because their practice times fit perfectly with ours. They'll practice early, and our programs will go after them.

"We know that they would prefer to be in New Orleans and have the comfort of doing things the way they did last year. But, basically when Allan came in, I just said, 'We will try to make this as smooth as possible, and we'll help you any way we can.' Our athletes and students are getting excited already to be able to see professionals walking in the gym. It will be something totally new and different for all of us."

A few days after Hurricane Katrina devastated the New Orleans area, Bristow made contingency plans for the team to conduct training camp at the Air Force Academy in Colorado Springs, Colo. But eventually team executives, including Bristow, thought the best plan would be to have training camp in the city where the team will play the majority of its games this season.

For the past three seasons, the Hornets have held training camp and practices at the Alario Center on the West Bank, now being used by the Louisiana National Guard in the recovery efforts for the New Orleans area.

GEARING FOR CAMP: The Hornets are expected to sign three players before Tuesday's start of training camp, Bristow said. Currently, the Hornets have 15 players under contract.

"We'll probably get it up to 18 players," Bristow said. "We've got some young players (already on the roster), and hopefully they'll shine and show their potential that they belong."

MEET THE PRESS: The Hornets will hold media day Monday at the Ford Center. Most of the Hornets' players are expected arrive in Oklahoma City by Sunday.

"Certainly, one of my main focuses was to try and get the basketball operations up and running and get all our gear here," Bristow said. "It seems like we've got that going."

VooDoo's season canceled

VOODOO, from C-5

said. "New Orleans has been a great market for the AFL. We've had the third-highest attendance in the league the past two seasons, and we've had the best TV ratings. We have a strong fan base, and obviously, we'd like to recapture that.

"It's just not something we can be definitive on right now. We're logistically in the same situation as the Hornets. We don't know when the Arena is going to be ready, and we have to have a place to play."

AFL commissioner David Baker said his heart goes out to the people of the city, and that's all anyone should be concerned about right now.

"At this point, I respectfully say that there are more important things than arena football," he said. "It's tough when you have to find businesses to sponsor the team. You don't know if you'll have fans to come to the games, and to try and assess a schedule is just real tough right now.

"We looked at a number of alternatives, including the possibility of relocating them to somewhere else. There were a lot of issues that needed to be decided, but our biggest concern is the people of New Orleans. When all the dust settled, the (AFL) board (of governors) decided that the best thing to do was to allow New Orleans to suspend operations for the 2006 season."

If the VooDoo comes back in two seasons, the league likely will reward the city with its championship game.

"We love New Orleans, and the second thing the board decided was to move the city to the top of the list for ArenaBowl XXI (in 2007), if it's logistically and economically possible," Baker said. "Frankly, we just don't know what's going to happen, but if we can do it, we will."

Another unanswered question for the team is what happens to the 11 players who signed contracts three months ago to play in New Orleans. Three players — quarterback Andy Kelly and starting linemen B.J. Cohen and Mike Landry — signed two-year contracts.

Baker said he will discuss options with AFLPA executive director Gene Upshaw today, and that a decision should be made "within 24 to 48 hours."

One of the possibilities is the players could be exposed to a dispersement draft, in which they may be selected by the league's other 17 teams. If that happens, it is unknown whether they would be allowed to return to the VooDoo if the team resumes play.

According to Loomis, the organization will continue to employ Coach Mike Neu and his staff and, "hopefully prepare for 2007."

Neu did not immediately return phone calls Tuesday.

"I have spoken to him, and there's no question he is disappointed, because he, and we all, thought that we were going to be extremely competitive this season," Loomis said. "He understands the situation we're in right now. It hurts because we've won the second-most games to Colorado during the regular season over the past two years."

The VooDoo has an overall record of 20-12 in its two seasons in the AFL. In 2004, the team made the playoffs in its inaugural campaign, losing in the opening round to Colorado. Its record of 11-5 was the best mark for an expansion team in league history.

Last season, New Orleans remained in the playoff chase heading into the final week, before losing on the road to Orlando and being eliminated from the playoff race.

The VooDoo is 12-4 in the regular season overall at New Orleans Arena, including 7-1 at home in 2004.

Green Wave's King proves quite the catch

Freshman out of Slidell tied for 3rd in receptions

By Benjamin Hochman
Staff writer

RUSTON — Brian King is the latest Tulane freshman to make an impact before his first midterm.

In recent years, numerous freshmen have seen the field, notably linebacker Anthony Cannon — who led the team in tackles in 2002 — and running back Matt Forte — who earned the starting job late last year.

King, a receiver out of Slidell, played in both of Tulane's games this year, notching a start last Saturday at SMU. Playing primarily as a slot receiver, the 6-foot-1, 180-pound King has six catches, including a clutch 27-yard grab against the Mustangs, a season-long for the Green Wave.

"He worked out every day in the summer," Tulane coach Chris Scelfo said. "He drove from Slidell to there and back. I have tremendous respect. He comes from a great family. He's just a tremendous person. As he gets bigger and stronger over the next years, you'll be excited to watch him play."

King is tied for third-most catches among Tulane receivers with Damarcus Davis. Preston Brown has 11 but only two last weekend, and Bubba Terranova has eight. Davis, a wideout, leads Tulane with two touchdowns and an 11.5 average yards per reception.

"Damarcus quietly gets the job done," said Scelfo, whose team is 1-1. "He just needs to get a little stronger where he can get off press coverage — that's the thing that gets him in a little bit trouble. As far as catching the ball, he'll make the plays."

LUCAS QUESTIONABLE: Tulane free safety Sean Lucas is questionable for Saturday's game against Southeastern Louisiana, because of a bruised left quadriceps suffered in last Saturday's game at Southern Methodist.

"I want to play," said the senior Lucas, who rested during Tuesday's practice. "It's a matter of, can I run? I have come a long way since Saturday."

Senior Darren Sapp and sophomore Carlis Jackson are two projected replacements if Lucas cannot play.

Prior to the injury with 12:08 left in the third, Lucas returned three punts for a 24.6 average. His efforts earned him Conference USA special teams player of the week honors. With 3:52 remaining in the second quarter, he returned an SMU punt 47 yards to the SMU 24-yard line. Five plays later, Forte scored a touchdown to double the lead, 14-0.

"I just learned to trust my teammates," Lucas said. "I had some good blocks. I did make some people missed, but my teammates were there. It gave us momentum, and we scored on two drives that I returned punts."

RACKING UP TACKLES: Linebacker Anthony Cannon leads Tulane in tackles. The senior who led Tulane in tackles as a freshman and junior has 17 tackles on the season, including his game-high 12 in the opener against Mississippi State. He has 340 career tackles, just two from cracking Tulane's all-time top 10.

In three seasons, Cannon averaged 107 tackles, which would hypothetically give Cannon 430 career tackles, fourth all-time. Tulane's tackle leader is Burnell Dent, who made 492 tackles from 1982-85.

NO PLACE TO SLEEP: Tulane still does not have a place to sleep Friday night in Baton Rouge. The Green Wave will host Southeastern Louisiana at 2:30 p.m. Saturday at Tiger Stadium. With hotels filled with hurricane evacuees, Tulane is still searching for rooms, and the team may have to stay in the greater New Orleans area. Tulane is looking into staying at English Turn in the West Bank, where the team would have air mattresses in the clubhouse.

C-USA, N.O. Bowl extend agreement

SEC to have a team play in Liberty Bowl

By Ted Lewis
Staff Writer

Conference USA announced an extension through 2009 of its partnership with five bowls Tuesday, including the New Orleans Bowl.

"It's a good partnership that's only going to get better," said New Orleans Bowl executive director Billy Ferrante. "With the conference's new alignment, we are right in the middle of the footprint, which means we should always have regional representation."

The New Orleans Bowl, which will most likely be played in Lafayette this year because of damage to the Superdome, pits a C-USA team against the Sun Belt Conference champion.

In addition to the New Orleans Bowl, C-USA extended its contract with the Liberty, GMAC, Hawaii and Fort Worth bowls.

The Liberty Bowl deal is the most significant because gives the game first pick among C-USA's bowl-eligible teams against an SEC team.

The Liberty Bowl had been courting the SEC, but commissioner Mike Slive said last month that conference members did not want a bowl tie-in against a conference that did not have an automatic BCS berth.

Those objections apparently have disappeared, and the SEC will send one of its mid-level bowl qualifiers to Memphis, Tenn.

"This is definitely a red-letter day for the Liberty Bowl," said Steve Ehrhart, the game's executive director. "We have a rich history with the SEC that dates back to our first game. "And we've hosted the Conference USA champion since the league's inception. This enables us to build our partnership with both leagues."

The Liberty Bowl-SEC tie-in begins next year. With the bowl's contract with the Mountain West Conference expired, this year's game will pair the C-USA champion against an at-large team.

The Liberty Bowl replaces the Houston Bowl in the SEC's bowl lineup. However, during its two-year relationship with the Houston Bowl, the SEC never was able to fill its berth because it did not have enough bowl-eligible teams.

The SEC's other tie-ins are with the Sugar, Capitol One, Outback, Cotton, Peach, Music City and Independence bowls.

While the Liberty Bowl gets the first pick among C-USA teams, it is not obligated to take the conference champion. The GMAC Bowl in Mobile, Ala., will continue to have the second pick of C-USA teams.

Ferrante said Hurricane Rita has delayed finalization of a deal with Lafayette to play host to this year's New Orleans Bowl, but that he did not expect any problems finding enough hotel rooms in the city for the Dec. 20 game.

"We'll have to wait a week or two to be sure," Ferrante said. "But we've been told that we can use university housing at Louisiana-Lafayette for things like the bands, so that will help."

This will be the fifth year for the Liberty Bowl. The tie with C-USA has been in place since 2001.

LSU MEN'S GOLF TOPS VOLS: Sophomore Beck Troutman fired a 2-under-par 70 in the final round to lead the Tigers' men's golf team to a one-stroke victory over SEC rival Tennessee at the Shoal Creek Intercollegiate on Tuesday.

Troutman finished the three-round tournament at 5-under 211, good enough for a fourth-place tie. LSU's Chris Wells, who shared the tournament lead with Troutman after one round of play, finished in a tie for eighth place at 2-under 214. The Tigers won the tournament with a team total of 1-under 863.

TU HEADS FOR COVER AGAIN: Mother Nature again sent Tulane running for cover this past weekend.

The Green Wave student-athletes who have relocated to Texas A&M because of Hurricane Katrina again were forced to head for shelter, spending Friday night in the underbelly of Kyle Field in College Station, Texas, because of Hurricane Rita.

Because of the impending storm, two volleyball matches and two soccer matches were canceled. The volleyball team was to open Conference USA play at East Carolina on Friday and take on Marshall on Sunday. The conference is working to reschedule them.

Both soccer matches, however, were against non-conference opponents, and the games will not be rescheduled. The Green Wave will open Conference USA play against Memphis on Friday. Tulane has not played a match since Sept. 4 against Kennesaw State at the UAB/Nike Tournament.

Hurricanes Katrina and Rita have forced the cancellation or postponement of 18 events - nine soccer and nine volleyball.

WAVE WOMEN FINISH 10TH: Taking the course for the first time since Hurricane Katrina, the Green Wave women's golf team finished 10th at the Mason Rudolph Women's Championship on Sunday afternoon at the par-72-6,217-yard Vanderbilt Legends

Club in Franklin, Tenn. Senior Liliana Alvarez led the Green Wave with a six-over par 222 (72-76-74) to finish tied for 14th among 80 individual participants.

TICKETS AVAILABLE: Tulane season-ticket holders can pick up their tickets for Tulane's next two "home" games this week at LSU's Pete Maravich Assembly Center. The Green Wave will take on Southeastern Louisiana on Oct. 1 in Tiger Stadium in Baton Rouge, and will meet Houston on Oct. 8 at Cajun Field in Lafayette.

Southern Miss dominant over East Carolina

Golden Eagles have won eight of past nine

By Benjamin Hochman
Staff writer

RUSTON — No current East Carolina player has defeated Southern Mississippi. East Carolina's last victory in the series was a 14-9 win in Hattiesburg in 2000, which also was the only time in the past 21 meetings the Golden Eagles (1-1, 0-0) were held to a single-digit point total. Southern Miss has won eight of the past nine games in the series, including the past five in Greenville. Last season, the Golden Eagles won 51-10 in Hattiesburg.

NEW QB — AGAIN: Where art thou Danny Wimprine? Memphis (1-2, 0-1) has started two quarterbacks since the River Ridge native graduated — Patrick Byrne and Will Hudgens are out for the season, each with right fibula injuries. Freshman Billy Barefield, straight out of Shreveport's Evangel Academy, will make the start against UTEP (3-0, 1-0).

Barefield, 5 feet 10 and 175 pounds, is a legitimate running threat who has rushed for 78 yards and passed for 73 in his two appearances. He has directed the Tigers to scores on five of his eight series.

WHAT A CATCH: The C-USA player with the most receptions is a tight end. Tulsa senior Garrett Mills has 33 receptions in the first four games, the third-most catches in Division I-A. His 439 receiving yards are fifth nationally.

In Tulsa's 37-31 overtime win against Memphis, Mills caught the game-winning 25-yard pass. He posted his third consecutive 100-yard receiving game, finishing with seven catches for 106 yards and two touchdowns. He was selected the C-USA offensive player of the week.

Tulsa (2-2, 1-0) plays at Houston (1-2, 0-1) on Saturday. The Cougars have the worst pass defense in C-USA, allowing 302 yards per game.

AROUND THE LEAGUE: All 12 C-USA teams will be in action on the same weekend for the first time this season. ... Marshall (1-2, 0-1), which hosts Southern Methodist (1-3, 0-1), has not lost two home games in a row since 1990. Marshall lost to Kansas State, 21-19, in its most recent home game Sept. 10. ... East Carolina receiver Aundrae Allison ranked second nationally with 148 receiving yards per game.

tended the game.

For those reasons, Houston, with its ample hotel rooms and other amenities, held a distinct advantage over Shreveport, which would have been hard-pressed to provide the minimum 10,000 hotel rooms required and whose stadium has 20,000 fewer seats than Houston's.

Still, Shreveport offered rent-free use of Independence Stadium along with most game-day costs and had guaranteed reasonable hotel rates, often a sore point when the game was played in New Orleans.

"It's disappointing because we wanted to keep the event in the state," said Brandy Evans, vice president for communications for the Shreveport-Bossier Convention and Tourist Bureau. "But I am sure they had good reasons for choosing Houston.

"We made our best effort, but we don't have a domed stadium or as many hotel rooms. Shreveport did show it wants the event. So we just have to thank them for their consideration and wish them the best."

Houston and Shreveport were not the only cities vying to land the game. Jacksonville, Fla., Jackson, Miss., Birmingham, Ala., Orlando, Fla., Detroit and Los Angeles all submitted bids.

Officials from Southern and Grambling said they look on the move to Houston as a one-year disruption, and that even if the Superdome remains unplayable next year, the game likely would be played in Baton Rouge at LSU's Tiger Stadium, with most of the fans staying in New Orleans.

ed hat for an opening act, to make a 21-point advantage vanish into the soupy Monday night air. POOF! Gone. Check the sleeves. Nothing. No smoke. No mirrors. Quite a trick.

No coach in LSU history has ever pulled off such an impossible stunt - surrendering a three-touchdown advantage in the normally friendly confines of Tiger Stadium. Not Gerry DiNardo. Not Curley Hallman. Not Gus Tinsley. Certainly, not Nick Saban. Nobody.

"For all intents and purposes, it's Tuesday and we'll prepare for Mississippi State," Miles said, after the scoreboard seesawed the other direction, 30-27. "As much as we'd like to mull it over and recoach and get it fixed, we have to prepare to play the next game."

Wishful thinking. But much like that forgotten leftover pushed back, out of sight, to the rear of the fridge, the stinging memory of this loss isn't getting tossed anytime soon. LSU could post triple digits in Starkville, Miss., this weekend and all it would get is a sarcastic roll of the eyes from those drooling to dissect the Tennessee debacle.

Where to begin?

Well, since the public apparently can't get enough Bo Pelini criticism, let's start by breaking down the defense.

It was like someone broke open a 2003 time capsule for the entire first half, then LSU's defense proved to be nothing more than a desert mirage. Safety Travis Daniels set the tone early, blindsiding Erik Ainge and stripping the ball free for Kenneth Hollis to fall on and for Joseph Addai to convert into six points a play later. Using 11 defensive backs throughout the evening, Pelini dared Ainge to throw deep, letting fresh legs run with Tennessee's receivers regardless of their depth chart residence.

But once Rick Clausen replaced Ainge, LSU reverted to its previous cautious scheme, allowing the Vols adequate-armed senior to dink his way into Tennessee lore. Evidenced in the final play of overtime when Gerald Riggs bulled through Cameron Vaughn's attempted tackle, the Tigers' defense was completely spent, partially because of a 10-minute differential in time of possession.

Still, Pelini's group forced four turnovers, had four sacks and held Riggs to 3.7 yards per carry. They weren't dominant, but the popular punching bag shouldn't receive all the blows this abbreviated week.

Expect several fingers to be pointed at Miles for questionable decisions. Perhaps most embarrassing, ESPN replays captured Miles frantically signaling to use his final timeout following a fourth-quarter interception by LaRon Landry that put the Tigers near field-goal/Hail Mary range with less than 20 seconds left. Of course, the clock stops after a change of possession, but officials still could have granted Miles' unnecessary timeout had an LSU assistant coach not pushed him put of the ref's view, preserving the Tigers' final stoppage.

Clock management issues also arose in the dying seconds of the first half. LSU tossed away a field-goal chance when JaMarcus Russell failed to get out of bounds on a second-down scramble. Instead of having the offense try to spike the ball, Miles hurried on the special teams unit but not before time expired.

When those topics grow old, fans could reach for a bevy of fresh topics — Jimbo Fisher's conservative play-calling in the second-half, Russell's key fourth-quarter interception, the late-game love affair with getting Jacob Hester touches, Miles' original decision sit on the ball and settle for overtime, crucial penalties on Skyler Green kick returns.

For nine months, Miles waited for his inaugural run beneath Tiger Stadium's split goal posts.

But maybe someone should have informed him he needed to meet a recently established standard.

"We're all disappointed about it," Miles said. "We're all miserable."

The first three chemotherapy sessions reduced the cancer by 80 percent and the second three, the last of which was completed last week, finished the process. They were performed in Hammond by local oncologist Dr. David Oubre.

"It leaves my feet numb and just feeling beat down and weak in general," Roland said of the treatments. "It's not a cakewalk for anybody. It beats the alternative, though."

Another side effect is that Roland has been losing his hair. Prior to his diagnosis, Roland had a full head of hair with little gray.

"I'm anxious for it to grow back," he said. "But I am afraid of what color it's going to be."

Roland, in his first year as the Lions' head coach, said at no time did he seriously consider relinquishing his duties.

"There are always a lot of things that go through your mind when you're in the hospital," he said. "But I was always encouraged to stay on.

"Plus, my staff and players have been tremendous in taking a lot of the load off me."

Southeastern athletic director Frank Peregolizzi said he and school president Randy Moffett encouraged Roland to slow down.

"We had to keep an eye on him," Peregolizzi said. "When you are responsible for a lot of people, you always feel like you've got to be doing this or doing that instead of taking care of yourself.

"We are so happy for Dennis and his family. This is a great day for Southeastern."

Storms shutter all Gulf oil output

One third of U.S. drilling halted

By Mary Judice

Hurricanes Rita and Katrina have damaged more offshore drilling rigs than any storm in recent times, and one report Wednesday said all oil production in the Gulf of Mexico has temporarily ceased.

The Minerals Management Service said Wednesday that its survey indicated that 100 percent of oil production in the Gulf is shut down as well as more than 80 percent of natural gas production.

The Gulf supplies 29 percent of the nation's oil and 21 percent of the gas.

Rita, which came ashore Saturday morning, hit the western Gulf. Hurricane Katrina, which came ashore Aug. 29, struck the central Gulf. Both areas are rich with offshore production platforms and drilling rigs.

"We've never experienced the amount of damage to the rig fleet we've experienced from these two storms," said Tom Marsh, U.S. editor of the energy information firm, ODS-Petrodata.

Damage is not the only reason that production has stopped, or what the industry calls shut in.

Gary Strasburg, spokesman for the MMS, which is an agency of the U.S. Interior Department, said some production has stopped because of Federal Aviation Administration restrictions on overflights, which oil producers need to do to assess damage before sending crews out. Also, the oil industry is still attempting to locate its

After announcing his retirement Tuesday, New Orleans Police Superintendent Eddie Compass told several high-ranking officers that he had been forced out by Mayor Ray Nagin, the officers said Wednesday.

They said Compass told them the decision came on the heels of a heated confrontation with the mayor. The officers spoke only on condition that they not be named.

Reached Wednesday by e-mail, Nagin said that those accounts were "inaccurate."

Compass could not be reached for comment.

At a hastily called news conference Tuesday with Nagin in attendance, Compass announced that he was retiring. When asked by a reporter whether Compass was being forced out, Nagin said no.

But after the announcement, Compass returned to a cruise ship where he and other displaced officers had been living, where they say he told them he had been forced to resign.

"He was going around telling officers, including myself, it wasn't his doing, that he would've never quit," said a high-ranking officer who asked not to be named. "He had tears in his eyes. He didn't want to go."

Another officer said Compass told him, "You work at the pleasure of the mayor. This was not my decision."

Nagin later named Assistant Superintendent Warren Riley as acting superintendent.

Officers said Compass told them that he and Nagin had an angry confrontation Tuesday morning, hours before Compass announced his retirement, which he said would begin after a transition period of up to 45 days.

BATON ROUGE — New Orleans Mayor Ray Nagin announced a three-stage re-entry plan for city residents and businesses Wednesday, saying the West Bank and pockets of the east bank are safe for return but also cautioning citizens about limited infrastructure and potential health risks.

Re-entry begins today, with businesses receiving full access to their properties in the approved ZIP codes. The second phase will be Friday, when residents in those same codes will be allowed to return permanently.

The approved ZIP codes are 70112, 70113, 70114, 70115, 70116, 70118, 70130 and 70131. Security checkpoints will be repositioned to allow entry.

"New Orleans is back open," Nagin told a meeting of state lawmakers, parish council members and residents at the state Capitol on Wednesday afternoon. "If you want to stay, you're free to stay" in those designated areas as of Friday, Nagin said.

The final phase will come Oct. 5, when residents in all other areas of the city, except the Lower 9th Ward, will be allowed to visit their properties, though they won't be allowed to stay. The Lower 9th Ward will remain closed until further notice because it is flooded.

Katrina tragedy becomes personal

32 bodies identified, but many may stay unknown

By Ed Anderson
Capital bureau

BATON ROUGE — The names of the first of Louisiana's Hurricane Katrina victims to be identified were released Wednesday, but scores of victims may never be identified, the chief medical officer in charge of the task said.

The 32 were the first of the 896 victims recovered so far to be identified by the state.

The process has been difficult because many of the bodies underwent prolonged exposure to the elements, said Dr. Louis Cataldie, former East Baton Rouge Parish coroner who is now the chief medical officer charged with identifying the dead.

"Each person is a worst-case scenario," Cataldie said. "There is nothing worse than somebody dying like this."

Crews are still working their way through New Orleans' Lower 9th Ward as well as St. Bernard and Plaquemines parishes to retrieve bodies. Cataldie refused to speculate on how many more bodies would be found.

Most of the dead at a makeshift morgue in St. Gabriel so far have been recovered from Orleans and St. Bernard parishes, he said.

Autopsies have been conducted on 100 of the bodies. The causes of death for most of the victims has been drowning or from pre-existing conditions, such as heart problems, worsened by the stress of the evacuation from the storm, or from loss of power for ventilators or other life-sustaining devices, said Department of Health and Hospitals spokesman Bob Johannessen, whose agency is working with Cataldie.

About six or seven of the deaths were homicides that occurred after Hurricane Katrina, mostly in the New Orleans area, though none occurred at the Ernest N. Morial Convention Center or the Superdome, Cataldie said. Ten people died at the Dome and another four at

During her appearance before the U.S. Senate Finance Committee, Gov. Kathleen Blanco endorsed a proposal to provide more than $9 billion in health-care assistance to hurricane-battered states.

Blanco visits Senate as money worries mount

Health-care bid meets resistance

By Bill Walsh
Washington bureau

WASHINGTON — With hat in hand and emotions in check, Gov. Kathleen Blanco traveled to Capitol Hill on Wednesday seeking to keep the flow of post-hurricane financial assistance coming amid signs that policymakers are getting antsy about the escalating cost.

Blanco carefully avoided responding to the biting criticism leveled at her a day earlier by Michael Brown, the former head of the Federal Emergency Management Agency, who in testimony characterized Louisiana's response to Hurricane Katrina as "dysfunctional."

"I have come here to talk about job creation," Blanco told the Senate Finance Committee when invited to fire back at Brown, who resigned after becoming the focus of public dissatisfaction with the slow federal effort.

Blanco later told reporters, "The facts will speak for themselves. We will tell our story when the time is appropriate."

Blanco's studied restraint was likely intended to soothe a rift that has opened in Washington over the size and scope of hurricane relief. In response to Katrina, Congress and the Bush administration quickly approved $62.3 billion in emergency spending and last week passed $6 billion in tax incentives designed to encourage rebuilding in Louisiana, Alabama and Mississippi.

But now, senators and the Bush administration are at odds over $9 billion in proposed health-care assistance for the hurricane-battered states. In areas hit hardest by the storms, the bill would provide health insurance coverage through Medicaid to uninsured people, loosen welfare work requirements, extend unemployment insurance and pay $800 million to doctors and hospitals that have treated patients since the Aug. 29 storm, frequently with little compensation.

Blanco heartily endorsed the plan. So did Mississippi Gov. Haley Barbour and Alabama Gov. Bob Riley, who testified by video conference. They especially liked a provision calling for the federal government to pay 100 percent of Medicaid costs through 2006. Exploding Medicaid costs were straining state budgets even before hurricanes Katrina and Rita stripped thousands of people of their jobs and health insurance.

"States are not in a position to absorb additional costs of this magnitude," Blanco said.

But U.S. Health Secretary Michael Leavitt said the legislation is unnecessary because hurricane victims can already apply for enhanced Medicaid benefits and states have the power temporarily to ease welfare requirements. He also said the bill was too broad, extending benefits to regions declared major disasters even though some people living in those areas may not have been harmed.

"We believe that ... federal resources should be targeted to meeting the needs of those harmed by Hurricane Katrina," Leavitt said in a letter to Congress.

The administration's wariness drew rebukes from senators on both sides of the aisle.

"It's just ludicrous this bill can't move," Committee Chairman Charles Grassley, R-Iowa, said.

"Here we are fretting and arguing over the details when these people are in need," Sen. Blanche Lincoln, D-Ark., said.

Blanco left the expressions of outrage to the senators. Before and after the hearing, she met with congressional leaders of both parties to press her case for more aid. In her testimony, she painted a harrowing picture of economic devastation wrought by back-to-back natural disasters in Louisiana.

About 81,000 businesses were wiped out or severely handicapped by Katrina, about a quarter of the state's total, officials said. Nearly half were in Orleans and Jefferson parishes.

After Rita blew through last week, she said, a third of the businesses in Louisiana were out of commission. The vast majority were small companies with little means of rebuilding without some government support.

Congress is in the process of writing a new economic stimulus package designed to attract businesses back to the Gulf Coast. A bill could be ready for a vote by mid-October.

Blanco estimated that small businesses in Louisiana need $150 million in loans to recover from Katrina. But so far, they have been slow in coming. Sen. John Kerry, D-Mass., said that of more than 1 million applications to the Small Business Administration, only six have been approved: four in Alabama and two in Mississippi.

Kerry called for direct federal grants for businesses to get them on their feet quickly. Blanco agreed, calling for the creation of a $10 billion grant program to encourage businesses to return to their previous locales, much as was done after 9/11 to revive lower Manhattan.

"By comparison to New York's economic recovery challenges, Louisiana's situation is vaster, more complex and will be more protracted," Blanco said.

The governor said she is eager to get help – and fast. If, for no other reason, political support may soon erode.

A month after Katrina, there is still a deep wellspring of sympathy in Congress for helping the Gulf Coast states. But some lawmakers were taken back last week when Louisiana Sens. Mary Landrieu and David Vitter unveiled a $250 billion request for federal aid, more than the United States has spent in rebuilding Iraq.

Just as Blanco steered clear of any mention of former FEMA Director Brown in her testimony, she also didn't mention the controversial legislation by her state's two senators.

"We still have great needs in our state," Blanco said. "I do believe Congress will respond to the issue at hand."

Students get break from LEAP this year

Passing not required for 5th, 9th grades

By The Associated Press

BATON ROUGE — The state education board revised its high stakes testing policy Tuesday because of Hurricanes Katrina and Rita, deciding that public school students won't have to pass the LEAP exam this school year to move to the fifth and ninth grades.

Education officials said they needed to consider the hardships many children face after being displaced by the back-to-back storms, with thousands of students dealing with classes in different school districts and living away from home, many in shelters.

The changes "are in no way a retreat from accountability or a pursuit of excellence in Louisiana education," said James Stafford, a member of the Board of Elementary and Secondary Education. "It does represent a compassionate, common sense approach to guiding students and school systems through our most difficult year."

The LEAP test, taken in the spring, officially is known as the Louisiana Education Assessment Program exam. It measures fourth- and eighth-graders' abilities in English, math, science and social studies, but only students' performance in the English and math portions determine whether they pass.

Fourth- and eighth-graders in Louisiana's public schools will have to take the LEAP test even though the results won't be held against them during the current school year.

High school students still must pass the Graduate Exit Exam, however, to receive a high school diploma. And BESE agreed to allow Louisiana high school students who were scattered to other states by Katrina and Rita to receive a Louisiana diploma even if they are going to school out-of-state. They must take the required courses and pass the GEE to get the Louisiana diploma.

In other action at the emergency meeting, BESE agreed:

▶ To give state Superintendent of Education Cecil Picard the ability to change school calendars for districts rather than force them to make up large portions of the year when their schools were shut down by either hurricane. The Legislature also must approve this change.

▶ To boost the maximum class size requirements so that schools can fit the evacuated students without violating education policies.

▶ To support the state education department's push to get a partial waiver of federal accountability requirements. Louisiana is asking that only students enrolled in schools or districts for two years be included in grading calculations that determine whether schools are sanctioned and that no schools or districts be moved into a higher level of sanctions based on testing results for this year.

Military could head up future disaster relief

President backs idea; others call it 'terrible'

By Donna Cassata
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — The U.S. military, built for manmade battles, could end up leading fights against Mother Nature.

In the aftermath of hurricanes Katrina and Rita — and the federal government's sluggish response to the first — President Bush is raising the possibility of putting the Pentagon in charge of search-and-rescue efforts for catastrophic natural disasters.

Such a precedent-setting shift would require not only some change in law but a greater degree of consensus. Congress is divided over the prospect of troops massed in U.S. cities and increasing the power of the federal government at the expense of the states.

And there's the question of what would be left for the recently created Homeland Security Department to do.

Bush has described the armed forces as "the institution of our government most capable of massive logistical operations on a moment's notice," and defense analysts echo that assessment.

With its wealth of all-terrain vehicles, helicopters, boats, satellites, and coordination and control operations, the military can quickly dispatch what a lot of people need in a hurry after a disaster, whether that means 1,000 choppers to pluck residents from rooftops or shallow-water vessels to navigate flooded streets.

Still, the Pentagon seems lukewarm about taking control and providing the core of disaster relief. "It's something we've thought about," Gen. Richard Myers, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, said Tuesday. But he said there is a long way to go before "you ... decide you want to give active forces law enforcement authority."

Retired Gen. Charles Wilhelm, who accompanied the Army general in charge of the military's hurricane response, said civilian agencies, not the Pentagon, should continue to lead the response.

Turning the military into first responders risks making it "a jack-of-all-trades, master of none," he said.

In response to Rita, Navy and Air Force teams, flying from the deck of the USS Iwo Jima and Randolph Air Force Base in Texas, conducted rescue missions into Texas and Louisiana. During the weekend, they transported several thousand people to safety, including 1,300 patients.

Four Navy ships were off the Gulf Coast on Tuesday, providing hurricane relief, including the salvage ship USS Grapple, which was beginning survey operations. About 600 members of the 82nd Airborne Division were sent from New Orleans to southwestern Louisiana late Monday to assist in rescue and recovery.

"The military has more plans on the shelves that you can kick a stick at, and that's a good thing," said retired Adm. James Loy, a senior counselor at the Cohen Group who was commandant of the Coast Guard and deputy in the Homeland Security Department for two years.

The U.S. Northern Command, which began operations in October 2002 as the first command with the United States in its area of responsibility, assists the Federal Emergency Management Agency in disaster relief and has the organizational skills.

"In some disaster unforeseen, you need somebody right away, and the active-duty military is, of course, organized and together on one installation where you can move them quickly," said Robert Gard, a senior military fellow at the Center for Arms Control and Non-Proliferation.

This unique ability comes at a price: more than $400 billion a year.

"Do we want to have that mobilization capability in non-defense agencies?" asked Clark Murdoch, a senior adviser at the Center for Strategic and International Studies. With Katrina, "we had the 82nd Airborne on alert for 24 hours, and no one pulled the trigger on them for three or four days."

The all-volunteer force also is stretched thin by fighting in Iraq and Afghanistan, and an added role would require an influx of troops. Plus, the armed forces' unique chain of command could prove difficult to impose on elected civilian officials.

"It's a terrible idea to put the military in charge because they still have a day job," said James Jay Carafano, a senior fellow at the Heritage Foundation who taught at West Point and co-authored a book on homeland security. "What happens if the Iraq invasion had coincided with Hurricane Katrina? Does (Secretary of Defense Donald) Rumsfeld stop the war to do Hurricane Katrina?"

The military's purpose, and its training and exercises are not geared to domestic operations or law enforcement.

"The military as an institution is not too fond of this thing," said retired Air Force Gen. Charles Boyd, president and CEO of Business Executives for National Security. "They're the lethal arm of American foreign policy. They fight the nation's enemies."

The military is prohibited from performing law enforcement duties by the Posse Comitatus Act of 1878, enacted after the Civil War. But the Insurrection Act does allow the president to call troops into federal action inside the United States when there is a threat to authority.

President Eisenhower sent troops from the 101st Airborne to Little Rock, Ark., and also federalized the Arkansas National Guard in 1957 to ensure the integration of Central High School. President Kennedy ordered federal troops to Oxford, Miss., to stop the riots precipitated by James Meredith's enrollment at the University of Mississippi in 1962.

Making the military the lead agency and sending troops after a hurricane could upset local officials.

"The federal government does not lightly put troops into states, particularly Southern states, without the request of the governor," Richard Falkenwrath, a former deputy homeland security adviser, said at a recent conference. "It's a very big deal, if the government were to do that unilaterally."

Sen. John Warner, R-Va., chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, said his panel would review a specific proposal from the president.

In a letter to Bush on Tuesday, House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif., said she was disturbed by the notion of rewriting laws that could result in active-duty military operating as "police officers in America." She asked the president to clarify his comments.

Legislature looking into barring of escape routes

Attorney general's staff to talk with witnesses

By Laura Maggi
Capital Bureau

BATON ROUGE — Attorney General Charles Foti agreed Wednesday to conduct what he described as a "fact-finding mission" into reports about New Orleans evacuees being denied entrance to neighboring parishes in the days after Hurricane Katrina.

Members of the Senate Local and Municipal Affairs Committee asked Foti to investigate incidents of law enforcement officers turning back evacuees as they tried to get out of New Orleans. In particular, lawmakers expressed outrage at reports of people being blocked from entering Jefferson Parish after crossing the Crescent City Connection.

State Sen. Cleo Fields, D-Baton Rouge, said the panel agreed to have the attorney general do a "thorough investigation" of any instances when people were not allowed to leave Orleans Parish.

Foti said he would look at what happened, but added during the committee meeting that emergency officials can limit who is allowed to leave or enter a municipality. After the meeting, Foti noted that the situation in the days after the storm was chaotic and that his investigators would have to talk to witnesses to find out exactly what happened.

Fields said that even though the state had declared emergencies in the New Orleans area that didn't give law enforcement the authority to "take away people's constitutional rights." Several officials have noted the racial dimension of the incidents, saying that largely white law enforcement officers were turning away poor, African-American evacuees.

Lawmakers had asked Gretna Police Chief Arthur Lawson to attend the committee meeting to explain his statements in a newspaper article that he believed he acted properly when blocking evacuees trying to escape New Orleans by walking across the Crescent City Connection.

But Lawson informed the panel in a "two-line letter" that he could not attend the meeting, said state Sen. Ann Duplessis, D-New Orleans, who initially suggested that the committee subpoena the police chief to make him appear before legislators. "We gave him every consideration," Duplessis said. "There was no consideration given to those people."

Lawson said the committee "is welcome to look into anything they like, and I will cooperate with any investigation by the attorney general, because I know I did nothing wrong. I stand behind my decision and I would invite the committee to look into what happened in New Orleans that caused that situation to reach the boiling point."

Lawson said he received a letter from Fields inviting him to attend the meeting but he had duties at home. "We're still trying to get Gretna going. We're serving food and doing other things, and I elected to stay here," he said.

After an objection from one lawmaker, the committee members decided not to subpoena Lawson. Fields said after the meeting that he will be turning over the results of the attorney general's investigation to the special "steering committee" set up by the Legislature to help guide the recovery process in the New Orleans area.

Crowds overwhelm Houston FEMA site

About 1,500 line up as center reopens

By Juan A. Lozano
Associated Press writer

HOUSTON — Saying they were caught off-guard by the number of people in need, FEMA officials closed a relief center early Wednesday after some of the hundreds of hurricane victims in line began fainting in triple-digit heat.

The midday closing of the Houston disaster relief center came as officials in areas hit hardest by Hurricane Rita criticized FEMA's response to the storm, with one calling for a commission to examine the emergency response.

Across southeastern Texas, the Federal Emergency Management Agency delivered ice, water and packaged meals to residents who rode out last week's hurricane, which blew ashore early Saturday at Sabine Pass in East Texas.

But the agency was not ready for the roughly 1,500 people displaced by hurricanes Rita and Katrina who sought help at the Houston center when it reopened Wednesday.

The center, offering help from a variety of government and private organizations, initially opened for Katrina refugees. It closed last week when Houston was evacuated before Rita.

The line started forming Tuesday night, and as temperatures reached record highs, some people fainted and had to be carried off by police and other refugees.

FEMA spokesman Justin Dombrowski said the agency closed the center for the day because of the heat and the unexpectedly large crowds. Those already in line were allowed to enter.

Frances Deculus, 65, of Beaumont got in line at 3 a.m. and emerged shortly before the center shut down. She said that all she was able to do was register for FEMA assistance, and that she will have to return to actually get any help.

"We don't know what to do. It's frustrating. We have five small children," said Deculus, who is staying in a Houston hotel with 12 other relatives.

"I don't know what could have been done better, since the materials were in place before the hurricane. We're doing everything we can to get water and ice to whomever remains."
ROSS FREDENBURG
FEMA spokesman

Dombrowski said FEMA is asking refugees who do not need help right away to wait a few days. He also encouraged refugees to register with FEMA by telephone or the Internet.

Local officials, including Port Arthur Mayor Oscar Ortiz and Jefferson County Judge Carl Griffith, whose county includes Beaumont, said FEMA's response has been inadequate.

Griffith said he has asked Gov. Rick Perry to set up a commission to study the emergency response to Rita. Congress is holding hearings this week on the federal government's response to Katrina.

FEMA spokesman Ross Fredenburg in Austin said communications between Austin and rural East Texas have been troubled, in part because of power problems. But he said FEMA had set up 27 distribution points in 27 southeastern Texas cities.

"I don't know what could have been done better, since the materials were in place before the hurricane," Fredenburg said. "We're doing everything we can to get water and ice to whomever remains."

In rural Tyler County, north of Beaumont, volunteer firefighters distributed food, water and ice to hundreds of residents trapped in their homes by fuel shortages or by huge fallen trees blocking the one-lane, dirt roads out.

Firefighters are climbing over the trees to get to stranded residents until crews can cut the debris away, said Roger McGee, a firefighter.

McGee said the firefighters had been collecting the supplies on their own until Tuesday, when FEMA showed up to give them meals, water and ice to distribute.

"We're tired. We're wore out, but we ain't giving up," McGee said.

Ortiz said he expects to allow residents back into Port Arthur by the weekend, even though as of Wednesday, the industrial town of about 58,000 had no power, water or sewer service. Ortiz said it could take three to five weeks to fully restore electricity.

Corps determined to provide answers to levee questions

'Thorough and transparent' investigation is promised

By Bruce Alpert
Washington bureau

WASHINGTON — Top Army Corps of Engineers officials Tuesday promised Congress a "thorough and transparent" investigation into whether design, maintenance or construction problems caused levees to breach in New Orleans during Hurricane Katrina and said that restoring the levees to pre-storm conditions will take about nine months.

Pressed by some members of the House Energy and Water Subcommittee, who raised questions about rebuilding neighborhoods in the city's most flood-prone areas, Lt. Gen. Carl Strock said it isn't the corps' role to dictate development decisions. But he promised to make agency engineers available to help city, state and federal planners understand the risks associated with redevelopment in vulnerable neighborhoods.

Rep. Michael Simpson R-Idaho, told Strock many in Congress are concerned that billons of dollars will be funneled into New Orleans and other communities ravaged by Hurricane Katrina before a comprehensive plan for sustainable development is completed.

"What I'm afraid of is that we're going to spend a whole lot of money before we know what we're doing," Simpson said.

He said he would like to see the city and state, along with federal agencies, develop a plan to rebuild New Orleans in a way that makes it less vulnerable to catastrophic flooding. In Grand Forks., N.D., he noted, a decision was made to turn devastated neighborhoods near the flooded Red River into parkland, creating a natural buffer against flooding.

Some members wanted to know whether it made sense to spend more than $200 million to restore the damaged New Orleans levees to pre-Katrina conditions when they were designed to handle only a Category 3 hurricane. Would it not make more sense, some members asked, to proceed with development of levees that could protect the city against Category 4 and Category 5 hurricanes?

Strock said he saw no way to avoid the design and planning process for the more advanced levees, which normally takes 24 months to 30 months. It would take another five years to build a Category 5 levee protection system, he said, adding that the city can't wait that long for levee protection.

John Paul Woodley, the assistant Army secretary who oversees the corps, said the breaches of the 17th Street Canal and London Street Canal levees were a major disappointment to the corps and that the agency would conduct a thorough investigation that would fully disclose any problems in design, maintenance or construction. Strock said "it's important to remember" that the levees were never intended to protect against the Category 4 hurricane such as Katrina.

However, category strength is a generalization that doesn't accurately describe the varying forces that hit New Orleans. Katrina passed east of New Orleans, so some parts of the city were struck by winds and storm surge waters equivalent to those of a direct hit by a weaker storm.

REP. MICHAEL SIMPSON

Surge measurements taken near the 17th Street and London Avenues canals indicate the water height may not have exceeded the corps' design for a Category 3 storm, raising questions about possible flaws in the floodwalls' design or construction.

Rep. David Hobson, R-Ohio, chairman of the water and energy subcommittee, said the failure of the levees in New Orleans revealed a systematic failure in the way the federal government sets its priorities for critical infrastructure.

"For the corps to persuade people that it is part of the solution and not part of the problem, it will have to change its behavior," Hobson said. "Continuing the practice of spreading funding across a wide range of projects in the hopes of growing the corps program will not be an acceptable answer. We have to return to a situation where the Corps of Engineers is respected for its professional engineering judgment."

He said that he is asking the corps to provide a list of the 10 most critical projects so Congress can provide financing based on objective standards.

Hotel manager accused of fraud

By The Associated Press

BATON ROUGE — A night manager at a Holiday Inn has been accused of stealing money from Hurricane Katrina evacuees who had been put up at the hotel for free by the Federal Emergency Management Agency.

Simone Harrell James, 34, was being sought on an arrest warrant alleging credit card fraud and theft over $10,000, said Fred Raiford, a spokesman for the East Baton Rouge Parish sheriff.

The Holiday Inn was working with FEMA to provide 14 days of free lodging for evacuees, according to an affidavit filed by investigators. But James told patrons they would have to pay cash for the first two days of their stay before the federal agency would pick up the tab, according to investigators.

Harrell also charged at least seven credit cards to cover room costs for which she had taken cash, the affidavit said.

Blessed - "ADJECTIVE: highly favored or fortunate; characterized by happiness and good fortune."

Prior to Hurricane Katrina, "blessed" was an often used word. Today, as Ray Brandt Toyota and it's employees and families begin the long and arduous rebuilding process, we can now truly understand the meaning of the word "blessed". Our employees, like the residents of Southeast Louisiana have begun the task of rebuilding our homes and our business. We would ask for your support in "Jumpstarting Jefferson", as our Parts, Service, and Sales Departments are open and available to serve any of your needs.

Ray Brandt has authorized the New Car, Used Car, Parts, and Service Departments to provide the citizens of the affected areas with reduced pricing in all departments to help with the rebuilding process. Our new and used car departments sustained no water damage and the damage by the wind to a few of our units provide remarkable savings. Most of the slight damage is not even visible to the eye; rather than save the insurance money, Mr. Brandt would rather pass the savings on to the public as part of his contribution to the "Jumpstarting Jefferson" campaign. This is a very limited opportunity, and availability is restricted.

We have employment opportunities available in the Sales Department, including management availabilities.

Because of severe damage to sugarcane fields in south Louisiana, harvesting that was supposed to start this week has been pushed back until early October at many of the state's 13 raw sugar mills. 'It appears like the cane has been hit with a freeze,' said Ben Legendre, a sugarcane expert with the Louisiana State University AgCenter.

Sugar cane future looking bleak

Hurricanes wreak havoc on industry

By Laura Maggi
Capital bureau

BATON ROUGE — Sugarcane fields in south Louisiana that were already damaged by the winds of Hurricane Katrina now are soaking in saltwater surges from the Gulf of Mexico caused by Hurricane Rita, contributing to losses that could top $200 million this year, industry experts said this week.

"The industry is in a position it hasn't been in for a long, long time," said Jim Simon, president of the American Sugar Cane League in Thibodaux. "It is a dire time for us."

Experts said they already were anticipating losses of about $140 million to $160 million after Katrina hit Aug. 29, when winds bent the stalks of sugar cane down to the ground. Ben Legendre, a sugar cane expert with the Louisiana State University AgCenter, said cane that is simply blown over is damaged; its ability to produce sucrose is limited as it tries to stand back up.

But when Hurricane Rita floodwaters soaked particularly St. Mary, Iberia and Vermilion Parishes, the cane was hurt further. Many of the stalks in those areas have soaked up saltwater, turning them brown and limiting the amount of sugar that will be recovered from the cane, Legendre said.

"It appears like the cane has been hit with a freeze," he said, adding that in areas where tidal surges deposited grass from the coastal marshes on the cane fields could also be lost.

With all of the physical damage to the sugar cane, the stalks that can be processed will yield less raw sugar than in a good year, experts said. On top of this, much of the seed cane that was planted in the past month probably has been damaged, hindering crops in future harvest years.

Legislation recently filed in Congress by the Louisiana delegation included a proposal that $165 million be allocated to sugar cane farmers to help with the losses inflicted by Hurricane Katrina, Simon said.

With the additional problems caused by Rita, he said, more money will need to be directed to the industry, including direct finance assistance to farmers to compensate them for lost production. A good cane crop can be valued as high as $700 million, Simon said.

For Ronald Gonsoulin, a farmer in New Iberia, the storm wasn't as bad as with some of his neighbors; he didn't get any water in his house. But he still expects to take some losses in his flooded fields, where the cane is turning brown because of the salt water intrusion.

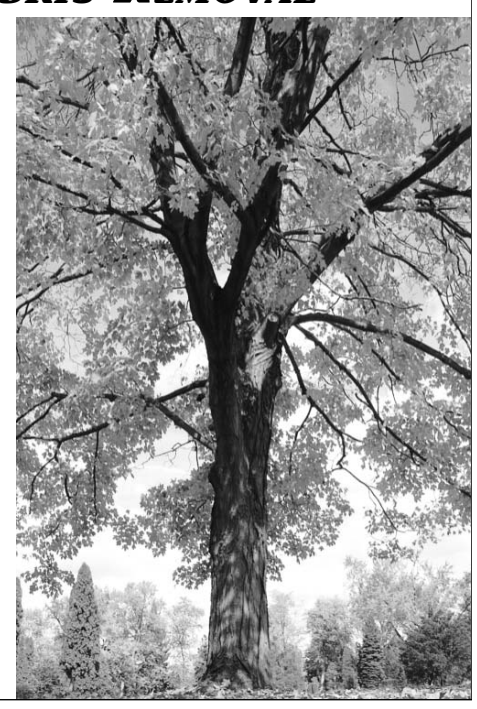
With sugar prices static and costs of production going up, farmers across south Louisiana have said in recent years it is harder to stay in business. Gonsoulin said this fall's storms could hasten the exodus of producers from farming.

"Many of the growers that were financially leveraged are asking themselves if they should continue," he said.

Harvesting was supposed to start in much of south Louisiana this week, but that will be pushed back until early October at many of the state's 13 raw sugar mills.

In Lacassine, where Agriculture Commissioner Bob Odom has been building a $45 million syrup plant for growers in southwest Louisiana, Hurricane Rita has pushed back the potential starting date until mid-November, said Jackie Theriot, the facility's general manager.

The mill, which is still in the finishing stages of construction, did not sustain significant wind damage during the storm, but electricity is out, Theriot said. It is unclear how much of the crop in this part of the state, which took a direct hit from Rita, has been damaged by the storm, he said.



The syrup mill, which has been criticized by several state officials as a misuse of public money, was supposed to be ready by the beginning of November. Theriot said he is hoping to have a two-week delay before they can begin processing sugar cane.

Any syrup produced at Lacassine will have to be shipped to traditional sugar mills along Bayou Teche to be processed into raw sugar.

Woman suicide bomber kills six recruits

Seven U.S. troops killed since Sunday

By Lee Keath
Associated Press writer

BAGHDAD, IRAQ — A woman disguised in a man's robes and headdress slipped into a line of Iraqi army recruits Wednesday and detonated explosives strapped to her body, killing at least six recruits and wounding 35 — the first known suicide attack by a woman in Iraq's insurgency.

The attack in Tal Afar near the Syrian border appeared aimed at showing that militants could still strike in a town where U.S. and Iraqi offensives drove out insurgents only two weeks ago. A female suicide bomber may have been chosen because she could get through checkpoints, at which women are rarely searched, then don her disguise to join the line of men, Iraqi officials said.

Iraq's most notorious insurgent group, al-Qaida in Iraq, claimed responsibility for the attack in an Internet statement, saying it was carried out by a "blessed sister."

The bombing came a day after U.S. and Iraqi officials announced their forces killed the second-in-command of al-Qaida in Iraq, Abdullah Abu Azzam, in a weekend raid in Baghdad. His death has not slowed insurgent violence, with at least 84 people — including seven U.S. service members — killed in attacks since Sunday.

President Bush warned violence will increase in the days leading up to a key Oct. 15 referendum on a new constitution, a document that has sharply divided Iraq's Shiite Muslim majority and the Sunni minority that forms the backbone of the insurgency.

"We can expect they'll do everything in their power to try to stop the march of freedom," Bush said. "And our troops are ready for it."

The U.S. military announced Wednesday that two more American soldiers and an airman were killed in violence and a Marine was killed by a noncombat gunshot. The deaths brought to 1,922 the number of U.S. service members who have died since the Iraq war started in March 2003, according to an Associated Press count.

In the holy city of Najaf, south of Baghdad, an attacker set off an explosion in the home of a bodyguard of radical Shiite cleric Moqtada al-Sadr on Wednesday, killing two people and wounding five, al-Sadr aides and a hospital official said.

In the attack at the Tal Afar army recruitment center, the female suicide bomber was wearing a traditional white "dishdasha" robe and a checkered kaffiya headscarf, both worn only by men, to blend in with the line of Iraqi applicants, Maj. Jamil Mohammed Saleh said.

She detonated explosives packed with metal balls and hidden under her clothes, Saleh said. Six recruits were killed and 35 wounded, said hospital officials in Tal Afar, 260 miles northwest of Baghdad.

In a photo of the attacker's head taken by Saleh and shown to AP, the woman appeared to be in her early 20s with dark eyes, light skin and brownish hair. Saleh said it was not known whether she was Iraqi.

U.S. and Iraqi troops swept through Tal Afar in a Sept. 8-12 offensive, with Iraqi authorities claiming nearly 200 suspected militants were killed and 315 captured, though many of the insurgents in the town escaped. Since then the bulk of the forces participating in the offensive withdrew, though a U.S. base remains.

It was the first known time that a woman has succeeded in carrying out a suicide bombing in Iraq since the insurgency began, though it was not the first attempt.

In March, four women, reportedly sent by the insurgent group Islamic Army in Iraq, were caught in a town south of the capital before they could set off explosives belts they were wearing. In the last days of Saddam Hussein's regime, just before the April 2003 fall of Baghdad, two women detonated their car near the city of Haditha, killing three American soldiers.

Gen. Ahmed Mohammed Khalaf, the regional police chief, said insurgents were exploiting the fact that women are not searched at checkpoints "because of religious and social traditions."

Women and children will now be searched at Tal Afar checkpoints, he said.

Still, the attack raised the prospect of more women bombers being used by the insurgency, a tactic difficult to defend against, especially during the referendum. Men and women turned out in large numbers to vote in parts of Iraq during January parliamentary elections, and images of veiled women flashing their ink-stained fingers after voting became an iconic symbol of hopes for democracy.

Maj. Gen. Hussein Ali Kamal, intelligence head at the Iraqi Interior Ministry, said the Tal Afar attack "rings danger alarms" and requires new techniques, including increased searches of women at sensitive locations.

"But this will be a problem, because women are taking part in our new political life and finding large numbers of female security officers to search them is not an easy process," he said.

In the past, women have played only a supportive role in the insurgency, helping smuggle equipment or feed, shelter and give medical treatment to fighters, said Nora Bensahel, an insurgency expert with Rand Corp., a nonprofit research group based in Santa Monica, Calif.

"This could be a sign that the insurgency is getting greater support among a larger segment of the population, that women are getting more militant and willing to take on a greater role," Bensahel said. "It could also be a sign that the insurgents are having trouble finding male recruits."

Army reservist gets three years

She was pictured with Iraqi prisoners

By T.A. Badger
Associated Press writer

FORT HOOD, TEXAS — Army Pfc. Lynndie England apologized for appearing in some of the most infamous pictures of detainee abuse at Abu Ghraib prison, saying she did so at the behest of a boyfriend who took advantage of her love and trust.

England, speaking in response to questions from a defense lawyer, said she was embarrassed by the pictures.

Pfc. Lynndie England
Says she was duped by boyfriend 14 years older

"I heard attacks were made on coalition forces because of the photos," she said Tuesday before the jury of five Army officers sentenced England to three years behind bars.

The charges against the 22-year-old reservist from rural West Virginia carried up to nine years, but prosecutor Capt. Chris Graveline asked the jury to imprison her for four to six years. The defense asked for no time behind bars.

Neither prosecutors nor defense lawyers spoke with reporters after the sentence was announced.

England, who was convicted Monday on six of seven counts involving prisoner mistreatment, spent time with her 11-month-old son, Carter, before being escorted out of the Fort Hood courthouse. Her reddened eyes stared straight ahead as she made her way to a waiting van.

England was the most recognizable of the nine low-ranking reservists charged in the scandal that severely damaged America's image in the Muslim world and tarnished the U.S. military at home and abroad.

In some of the pictures, England is shown holding a naked prisoner on a leash, posing with a pyramid of naked detainees and pointing at the genitals of a prisoner while a cigarette hangs from the corner of her mouth.

England's defense contended she is a compliant person who took part in the detainee maltreatment to please Pvt. Charles Graner Jr., who prosecutors said was the ringleader of the abuse by a group of U.S. troops.

She calmly recounted how her relationship with Graner, 14 years her senior, developed as they prepared for deployment to Iraq with the 372nd Military Police Company in 2003.

"He was very charming, funny and at the time it looked to me like he was interested in the same things I was. ... He made me feel good about myself," she said. "I trusted him and I loved him. ... Now I know it was just an act to lure me in."

England has said that Graner fathered her son.

Graner and another former guard also were convicted at trial, while six other soldiers struck plea bargains. Graner was sentenced to 10 years.

No officers have gone to trial, though several received administrative punishment.

Graner's testimony Tuesday supported that of a defense expert witness who said officers in charge at Abu Ghraib failed to control the guards, creating stressful conditions that disoriented England and led her to take part in the mistreatment.

Graner said he, England and others who worked the overnight shift in a high-security section of Abu Ghraib had scant supervision.

"It seems like the junior soldiers were on their own," he said. "We had little leadership."

"I nearly beat an MI detainee to death with MI there," he said before Col. James Pohl, the judge, interrupted his testimony.

Stjepan Mestrovic, a sociology professor at Texas A&M University called as an expert witness by the defense, testified that England should be punished lightly because of the "poisonous environment" that existed at Abu Ghraib.

"She was caught up in this chaotic situation like everyone else," said Mestrovic, who also testified that officers at Abu Ghraib "knew or should have known what was going on."

Texans indict DeLay in campaign finance case

House leader cedes post temporarily

By Larry Margasak
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — A Texas grand jury on Wednesday indicted Rep. Tom DeLay and two political associates on charges of conspiracy in a campaign finance scheme, forcing the House majority leader to temporarily relinquish his post. A defiant DeLay insisted he was innocent and called the prosecutor a "partisan fanatic."

"I have done nothing wrong. ... I am innocent," DeLay said at a Capitol Hill news conference during which he criticized the Texas prosecutor, Ronnie Earle, repeatedly. DeLay said the charges amounted to "one of the weakest and most baseless indictments in American history."

In Austin, Earle told reporters, "Our job is to prosecute abuses of power and to bring those abuses to the public." He has noted previously that he has prosecuted many Democrats in the past.

Republicans at the Capitol selected Rep. Roy Blunt, R-Mo., the current Republican whip — No. 3 in the leadership ranks — to fill the vacancy temporarily.

Reps. David Dreier of California, the chairman of the House Rules Committee, and Eric Cantor of Virginia, the chief deputy whip, will assist Blunt with some of the majority leader duties.

Republicans expressed their backing for DeLay, the first House leader to be indicted in office in at least a century.

"He will fight this and we give him our utmost support," said Speaker Dennis Hastert of Illinois following a private GOP meeting.

DeLay said he was certain the indictment would be dismissed and shrugged off the charges as a "political witch hunt" designed to drive a wedge in the Republican ranks.

AP PHOTO

During a news conference on Capitol Hill, U.S. Rep. Tom DeLay of Texas called the case against him and two political associates 'one of the weakest and most baseless indictments in American history.'

"If the Democrats think we're going to go crawl in a hole and not accomplish our agenda, I wish they could have been a fly on the wall" of the closed-door meeting, DeLay said after the session.

The indictment accused DeLay, 58, of a conspiracy to violate Texas election law, which prohibits the use of corporate donations to advocate the election or defeat of political candidates. Prosecutors say the alleged scheme worked in a roundabout way, with the donations going to a DeLay-founded political committee, then to the Republican National Committee and eventually to GOP candidates in Texas.

The indictment stems from a plan DeLay helped set in motion in 2001 to help Republicans win control of the Texas House in the 2002 elections for the first time since Reconstruction.

Indicted with DeLay were two of his associates, John Colyandro, former executive director of a Texas political action committee formed by DeLay, and Jim Ellis, who heads DeLay's national political committee.

The grand jury's foreman, William Gibson, told The Associated Press that Earle didn't pressure members one way or the other. "Ronnie Earle didn't indict him. The grand jury indicted him," Gibson told The Associated Press in an interview at his home.

Gibson, 76, a retired sheriff's deputy in Austin, said of DeLay: "He's probably doing a good job. I don't have anything against him. Just something happened."

The Texas Republican temporarily stepped down from the No. 2 leadership post that he had held since 2002, as required by House rules.

Criminal conspiracy is a state felony punishable by six months to two years in a state jail and a fine of up to $10,000.

At the White House, press secretary Scott McClellan said the president still considered DeLay, a fellow Texan, to be a friend and an effective leader in Congress.

"Congressman DeLay is a good ally, a leader who we have worked closely with to get things done for the American people," McClellan said. "I think the president's view is that we need to let the legal process work."

The indictment puts the Republicans — who control the White House, Senate and House — on the defensive. Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist, R-Tenn., also is fending off questions of ethical improprieties. And less than a week ago, a former White House official was arrested in the investigation of Jack Abramoff, a high-powered lobbyist and fundraiser.

The indictment accused DeLay of a conspiracy to "knowingly make a political contribution" in violation of Texas law outlawing corporate contributions. It alleged that DeLay's Texans for a Republican Majority political action committee accepted $155,000 from companies, including Sears Roebuck, and placed the money in an account.

The PAC then wrote a $190,000 check to an arm of the Republican National Committee and provided the committee a document with the names of Texas State House candidates and the amounts they were supposed to received in donations, the indictment said.

DeLay's attorney, Dick DeGuerin, said he preferred a trial as soon as possible, at least by the end of the year. Asked when DeLay would turn himself in, DeGuerin said, "I'm going to keep from having Tom DeLay taken down in handcuffs, photographed and fingerprinted. That's uncalled for."

The grand jury action is expected to have immediate consequences in the House, where DeLay is largely responsible for winning passage of the Republican legislative program.

Democrats have kept up a crescendo of criticism of DeLay's ethics, citing three times last year that the House ethics committee admonished DeLay for his conduct.

Democratic Chairman Howard Dean cited the problems of DeLay, Frist and Karl Rove, the White House deputy chief of staff at the center of questions about the leak of a CIA operative's name.

"The Republican leadership in Washington is now spending more time answering questions about ethical misconduct than doing the people's business," Dean said.

This public notice concerns activities that may affect historic properties, activities that are located in or affect wetland areas or the 100-year floodplain, and critical actions within the 500-year floodplain. Such activities may adversely affect the historic property, floodplain or wetland, or may result in continuing vulnerability to flood damage.

Presidential Executive Orders 11988 and 11990 require that all federal actions in or affecting the floodplain or wetlands be reviewed for opportunities to relocate, and evaluated for social, economic, historical, environmental, legal and safety considerations. Where there is no opportunity to relocate, FEMA is required to undertake a detailed review to determine what measures can be taken to minimize future damages. The public is invited to participate in the process of identifying alternatives and analyzing their impacts.

FEMA has determined that for certain types of facilities there are normally no alternatives to restoration in the floodplain/wetland. These are facilities that meet all of the following criteria: 1) FEMA's estimate of the cost of repairs is less than 50% of the cost to replace the entire facility, and is less than $100,000; 2) the facility is not located in a floodway; 3) the facility has not sustained major structural damage in a previous Presidentially declared flooding disaster or emergency; and 4) the facility is not critical (e.g., the facility is not a hospital, generating plant, emergency operations center, or a facility that contains dangerous materials). FEMA intends to provide assistance for the restoration of these facilities to their pre-disaster condition, except that certain measures to mitigate the effects of future flooding or other hazards may be included in the work. For example, a bridge or culvert restoration may include a larger waterway opening to decrease the risk of future washouts.

For routine activities, this will be the only public notice provided. Other activities and those involving facilities that do not meet the four criteria are required to undergo more detailed review, including study of alternate locations. Subsequent public notices regarding such projects will be published if necessary, as more specific information becomes available.

In many cases, an applicant may have started facility restoration before federal involvement. Even if the facility must undergo detailed review and analysis of alternate locations, FEMA will fund eligible restoration at the original location if the facility is functionally dependent on its floodplain location (e.g., bridges and flood control facilities), or the project facilitates an open space use, or the facility is an integral part of a larger network that is impractical or uneconomical to relocate, such as a road. In such cases, FEMA must also examine the possible effects of not restoring the facility, minimize floodplain/wetland impacts, and determine both that an overriding public need for the facility clearly outweighs the Executive Order requirements to avoid the floodplain/wetland, and that the site is the only practicable alternative. State of Louisiana and local officials will confirm to FEMA that proposed actions comply with all applicable State and local floodplain management and wetland protection requirements.

FEMA intends to provide IA program funding for disaster-related emergency housing. These actions may adversely affect a floodplain/wetland, or may result in continuing vulnerability to floods. These actions may include repair, restoration or construction of housing or private bridges, purchase and placement of travel trailers or manufactured housing units, or repair of structures as minimum protective measures. This will be the only public notice concerning these actions.

FEMA also intends to provide HMGP funding to the State of Louisiana to mitigate future disaster damages. These projects may include construction of new facilities, modification of existing, undamaged facilities, relocation of facilities out of floodplains, demolition of structures, or other types of projects to mitigate future disaster damages. In the course of developing project proposals, subsequent public notices will be published if necessary, as more specific information becomes available.

The National Historic Preservation Act requires federal agencies to take into account the effects of their undertakings on historic properties. Those actions or activities affecting buildings, structures, districts or objects 50 years or older or that affect archeological sites or undisturbed ground will require further review to determine if the property is eligible for listing in the National Register of Historic Places (Register). If the property is determined to be eligible for the Register, and FEMA's undertaking will adversely affect it, FEMA will provide additional public notices. For historic properties not adversely affected by FEMA's undertaking, this will be the only public notice.

As noted, this may be the only public notice regarding the above-described actions under the PA, IA, and HMGP programs. Interested persons may obtain information about these actions or a specific project, by writing to the Federal Emergency Management Agency, Disaster Field Office, 1500 Main Street, Baton Rouge, Louisiana, 70802, or by calling (225) 389-7274. Comments should be sent in writing to William Lokey, Federal Coordinating Officer, at the above address within 15 days of the date of this notice.

New Orleans Police Superintendent Eddie Compass shakes hands with NFL Commissioner Paul Tagliabue on Sept. 19 in East Rutherford, N.J. to the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina, in which some officers were seen looting a store and 249 officers left their posts.

At the news conference, the two men were amicable, with Nagin calling Compass' retirement, after 26 years on the force, good for his family and bad for the city.

Nagin wished Compass well, calling him a hero and saying that he hoped Compass would at least send him a Christmas card during the holidays.

Compass seemed to fight back tears. Handlers shuffled Nagin off in one direction, Compass in another.

Even before Katrina, both Nagin and Compass had come under pressure, dealing with controversies over alleged underreporting of crime statistics in the 1st District, the enforcement of the residency rule for officers, and Compass' hiring of members of the Nation of Islam to do sensitivity training for the Police Department. The city also had seen a substantial rise in the murder rate in 2005.

Alabama legislator says Katrina was God's wrath on sinful coast

'Wickedness' brought punishment, he says

By The Associated Press

BIRMINGHAM, ALA. — A state senator in Alabama says Hurricane Katrina was God's punishment on a sinful part of America.

State Sen. Hank Erwin, R-Montevallo, wrote in a weekly column for news outlets: "New Orleans and the Mississippi Gulf Coast have always been known for gambling, sin and wickedness. It is the kind of behavior that ultimately brings the judgment of God."

Erwin, a former conservative talk-radio host and now a media consultant, wrote the column after a tour of hurricane-wrecked Gulfport and Biloxi, Miss., and Bayou La Batre on the Alabama coast.

"Warnings year after year by godly evangelists and preachers went unheeded. So why were we surprised when finally the hand of judgment fell?" Erwin wrote. "Sadly, innocents suffered along with the guilty. Sin always brings suffering to good people as well as the bad."

The New Orleans Baptist Theological Seminary was flooded by Katrina. Erwin said the Baptists knew they had put themselves on the front lines ministering in a sinful place that could be targeted.

He said he didn't think the hard-hit residents of the low-income Lower 9th Ward in New Orleans were singled out for especially harsh punishment but were merely in the way, as were the shrimpers in Bayou La Batre.

William Willimon, bishop of the North Alabama Conference of the United Methodist Church, said Erwin is "sure no theologian."

"I'm certainly against gambling and its hold on state government in Mississippi, but I expect there is as much sin, of possibly a different order, in Montevallo as on the Gulf Coast. If God punished all of us for our sin, who could stand?" Willimon said.

The bishop said 300 United Methodist clergy from Alabama will be on the Gulf Coast next week to help hurricane victims.

"That seems to me a much more appropriate Christian response than that of the senator," he said.

A member of Shades Mountain Independent Church, Erwin said, "As harsh as it may sound, those hurricanes do say that God is real, and we have to realize sin has consequences."

employees, and even when oil is produced, refineries and pipelines cannot always accept the oil.

But damage is a main cause.

"There is a tremendous amount of damage out there," said Jefferson Parker, president of the energy investment firm Howard Weil, which has moved its New Orleans headquarters temporarily to Houston. The two storms each reached a Category 5 status at one time and that Rita "left the Gulf in shambles."

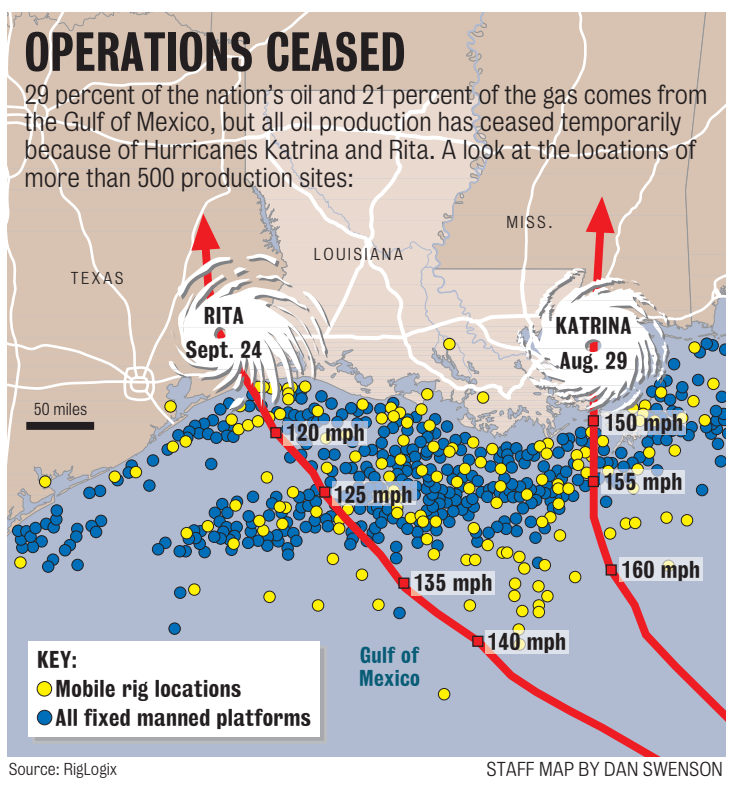
Marsh's rig report showed that six jack-up rigs, which are used for shallow water drilling, may have been lost in the wake of Hurricane Rita, including one rig that probably sank.

One hard-hit drilling company, Rowan Cos. Inc. of Houston, has not been able to locate one of its rigs and found that two others were no longer in their pre-storm locations. The hull of another rig, the Rowan Louisiana, was sheared from it legs and was found beached in Louisiana.

Deep water drilling platforms, known as semisubmersibles, also sustained damage. Diamond Offshore found two semis about 100 miles away from pre-storm locations and two others grounded.

Marsh said the survey of mobile rigs had accounted for all but one of the rigs and that early surveys showed that the fixed platforms had fared better than the mobile rigs.

Another segment of the industry, refining, also was damaged. A quarter of U.S. refining capacity was knocked out for a time, and much of that capacity is in refineries that still lack a firm schedule for restarting. The fallout from Hurricane Rita included 1.5 million barrels per day of refining capacity out of service in addition to the 800,000 barrels per day that had not been restarted after Hurricane Katrina.



But the damage to refineries was not as severe as it could have been, Parker said, and several refineries sustained minimal damage. A number of refineries have not restarted because they do not have power.

Gene Gillespie, research director at Howard Weil, said that although the Gulf is shut in, several refineries are able to operate by running imported crude and domestic crude from sources other than the Gulf.

He also said the real amount shut in may not be as great as reported. On Wednesday, Kerr McGee and Nexen reported their deep water oil wells in the Gulf had begun producing. The MMS survey is based on a sampling.

Gillespie said within two to four weeks he expected that the shut-in oil figures would fall by as much as 50 percent.

Futures prices for November light, sweet crude rose $1.28 a barrel to settle at $66.35 on the New York Mercantile Exchange.

the Convention Center from other causes, he said.

As of Wednesday, he said, the St. Gabriel morgue held 783 Katrina victims. The rest were scattered among coroners' offices in 13 parishes.

Until three experts verify a deceased's identity, a body will not be released to the funeral home picked by the survivors for burial.

In some cases, Cataldie said, it may take one to two months to make a positive ID. "Speeding up the process would compromise the process" of making valid identification, Cataldie said. "These are hard times. I wish I could speed up the process. I am sorry we have to do that. I want to make sure the process is as pure as possible."

Those who are never identified or claimed will be buried at the Gillis Long Center in Carville, where there is vacant land and a chapel.

"I am hoping we won't have that (many unidentified bodies), but I think we will," Cataldie said.

To help identify bodies, workers from the Find Family National Call Center contact and interview family members of the deceased, looking for information about scars, birthmarks or other features that may make identifying a person's body easier, Cataldie said. The staff also can collect DNA samples. A fingerprint analysis can also be done, but many bodies do not have good prints because they have been degraded after being in the water for weeks, he said.

Cataldie said the St. Gabriel operation also uses "full-body X-rays" to detect possible serial numbers of a prosthetic device or artificial heart valve and trace the number back to the manufacturer to determine for whom it was ordered.

Once a positive ID is made at the morgue, a funeral home will pick up the remains and a death certificate after it has been signed by a coroner.

Cataldie said families should call local police if they return home and detect a stench emanating for their homes or an infestation of flies.

"I am extremely concerned about what people will find when they go back home," he said.

Tulane prepares for January reopening

TULANE, from A-1

the university's fiscal health, he said.

"Even if 80 percent came back, we would be able to maneuver to financial viability," he said. "Sixty percent would be difficult."

The university's $810 million endowment is smaller than most schools its size and it collects an additional $700 million in annual revenue.

But Cowen said there is good reason to be encouraged, noting that only 78 students have officially withdrawn from Tulane.

To that end, the university is offering a number of incentives. It is reimbursing tuition for students who enrolled at other campuses and is offering the intensive "lagniappe semester" in late spring and early summer.

Students can earn up to 12 hours of credit tuition-free during the semester, assuming they've already paid regular fall and spring tuition. Undergraduate seniors who cannot attend the lagniappe semester can receive $5,000 tuition credit toward an advanced degree at Tulane.

University College, the continuing education wing of Tulane, is starting courses Oct. 24 at Elmwood and Biloxi sites, as well as online.

Amid Tulane's announcement, other major universities are gearing up to allow students' return in the coming months. Loyola also plans to reopen in January, although an exact date has not been set, and the University of New Orleans' lakefront campus is also expecting to resume classes in January. UNO also announced Wednesday the opening of enrollment for classes at satellite campuses in Jefferson and St. Tammany parishes that begin Oct. 10.

Dillard University sustained severe flooding after Katrina and is not expected to reopen during this academic year, its president said, although some classes could be offered at other sites in January. Xavier University officials could not be reached for comment.

The Saturday before Katrina hit, Cowen said some 1,700 students and their parents were moving into campus residence halls when news of the approaching storm prompted Cowen to call a town-hall meeting. There, everyone was told to evacuate on their own or was promised a spot on one of more than 15 buses the university chartered to take students to Jackson State University in Mississippi, where about 600 rode out the storm.

Cowen and some core staff stayed behind in the university's Reily Center, where they waited out Katrina. On Monday afternoon, Cowen said he took a walk around campus and was encouraged, finding mostly broken windows and debris littering lawns and walkways.

"My feeling was, 'We can get this fixed in a month,' " he recalled.

Later that night, however, after news came out that several of the city's levees had been breached, water began to rise around campus, with up to 3 feet in some areas.

Employees of a private contactor hired by Tulane University remove refrigerators from flooded Rosen House.

Although the campus still fared exceedingly well, Cowen said there were some casualties, not the least of which were a collection of government documents in the basement of the campus library, which was soaked with floodwaters.

The university also lost a number of laboratory animals, although some survived a trip to the university's primate center on the north shore, along with 33 years of blood samples, part of a study of adolescent heart disease in Bogalusa, after 27 large freezers on campus lost generator power.

By Thursday, Cowen and the last few staff remaining on campus hopped into a motorboat, which took them to dry land on Freret Street, where one of his aides hotwired a golf cart. They then drove to Gibson Hall, where they found a university dump truck that could get them through deeper waters and into Audubon Park, where a helicopter retrieved them.

Cowen has been in Texas since then, working with his staff to prepare for the spring semester out of an office park in Houston.

Meantime, the university is still paying its 6,000 employees, except for some part-timers, for the entire fall semester – a commitment, Cowen said, that so far has prevented any faculty from being poached by other universities.

Besides, he said, "I think the vast majority of universities will not actively recruit unless they felt we weren't going to reopen, which of course we are."

So far, he said, only four staff members have said they're taking jobs elsewhere.

As for displaced students, a number of universities are allowing them to enroll in classes tuition-free, letting Tulane keep the roughly $13,500 charged each semester. While students at those schools typically have to pay for room and board, Cowen said those costs will be reimbursed to all students. Students who had to pay tuition at other universities will be reimbursed for those costs, he said, either by the university or Tulane.

Meantime, there is reason to be encouraged about the future of the student body, Cowen said, noting that applications for the fall 2006 semester are up 50 percent over the same time last year.

"We're clawing our way back and that is attracting a lot of attention," he said, "particularly among kids interested in community service."

Cowen said he does not expect the university's academic standards to change. Even if fewer students were to apply, he said, "if anything, we'll accept fewer students."

The university accepted about 40 percent of the 18,000 freshman applications for this fall. The vast majority of those students graduated in the top 10 percent of their class and had an average SAT score of 1355 out of a possible 1600.

The university has also blocked student athletes from transferring their scholarships to other campuses, Cowen said. Faculty have also been asked to postpone sabbaticals.

Because the campus' dormitories only have space for 3,300 students and homes of staff and students flooded, the university is considering ways to provide temporary housing, everything from leasing a cruise ship to constructing temporary housing, he said.

Cowen declined to say where that temporary housing would be located or whether it could be in nearby Audubon Park.

At The Boot, a popular campus hangout on Broadway, doors were swung wide for ventilation, and a lone worker inspected the inside the bar at the edge of campus. The dark interior looked relatively clean. Another worker outside of a Plum Street dorm said, "I think we're going to make the January date."

Guards had cut off campus access points such as the entrance to Ben Weiner Drive, but most buildings appeared to have weathered both storms well. Swaths of green grass were visible around the campus' interior.

Trailer-size generators and Belfor restoration trucks were parked along Freret Street, where chairs and bags of trash were piled outside the university library. Workers wearing decontamination suits gathered at the entrance.

At the main entrance to Tulane on Wednesday, three professors and their friends were turned away by armed security guards. They were trying to retrieve manuscripts and teaching materials, said French and Italian professor Hope Glidden, but "not the way they've got it locked up at the moment."

"We came from all over the Eastern Seaboard to be here today," said Jane Carter, a classical studies professor. "We thought we had permission." She said the group — coming from Chicago, Boston and Austin, Texas — had called Monday for passes and received them.

Carter, who is working as a visiting professor in Austin, said the students she has talked to are eager to return in winter. One told her, "I'm coming back to campus next term," she said.

Where bayou lives were built, only bayou remains

Brutal Rita stripped away La. marsh towns

By Manuel Roig-Franzia
The Washington Post

It's gone. Plain gone.

That's what they'll say when they finally get in, when the people who love Louisiana's bayous and marshes get into the towns where hardly anyone can go now.

That's what they'll say when they get to Holly Beach, where a forest of stilts is all Hurricane Rita left of a resort town that once had houses stacked six-deep up to the sand. That's what they'll say in whole neighborhoods of Cameron and Grand Chenier and Oak Grove and the other little towns where there was much more to life than the hunting and fishing that made these places diamonds to sportsmen; there were also churches and schools and offices and homes.

At its worst, Rita behaved like a viciously effective bulldozer, scraping away everything it met, scraping away places such as Holly Beach. The full scope of the storm's brutality can be comprehended only from the air, and from the air the images are heartbreaking: 200 miles of Louisiana coastal life broken apart or left to steep in the brownest, dankest water imaginable. The destruction stretches west from the wobbly levees that flooded New Orleans for a second time to the shattered levee whose waters submerged more than 10,000 homes near Houma; westward along the coast, where the lowest-lying parts of Louisiana were wrecked; and inland to Lake Charles, a major city so battered that each highway exit is blocked to keep residents out.

Row after row of gray foundations — laid out like tombstones in a monster-size graveyard — are the only clues that some coastal neighborhoods, some towns, once existed. In other places, subdivisions are ringed by moats and houses are transformed into islands. Cows push against one another for comfort on tiny patches of dry land in deep bayou-country pastures, stranded three football fields of water away from the high road. Their determined human keepers patrol by horseback, hoping to save a few, while elsewhere the most intrepid residents float flatboats up to their roofs and hack through, hoping to salvage something.

On the ground, the scene is a still life. Most of the bayou towns are empty; even repair crews cannot get in. And in the places where people have managed to cajole or sneak or power their way in, the plastering that Rita administered is so complete that there is seldom anything to do but stand in awe. They would clean up if there were something there to clean up. But there isn't.

"It's hard to believe what water can do," Jerry Melancon said, standing on the empty ground where his dream pad used to be in Pecan Island, below the expanse of White Lake. "Unbelievable."

Looking down from above, it's clear what functions in Louisiana and what doesn't. The places where the marsh — run through with brilliant patches of orange amid seas of browns and green — was allowed to thrive without development are vibrant. The marsh wears a storm well, wrapping water around it like a shawl, guzzling the excess. But the places where people pushed themselves into the marsh — where houses and businesses sprouted in place of marsh grass and lilies — are apocalyptic, smashed and eerie zones where the few things left standing are in tatters.

Arriving by flatboat, Pecan Island residents try to salvage belongings by hacking through the roof . Hurricane Rita decimated Louisiana's bayou towns, blowing away home after home and flooding what remained.

The coastal carnage begins as far east as Houma — a Terrebonne Parish town devastated by the loss on a single day earlier this year of six local National Guardsmen in Iraq. Now the town must endure the fallibility of its outer levee, where concrete flood walls that once topped an earthen mound now lie in deep water, tossed aside like dominoes by storm surge that burst through, forcing the evacuation of a hospital.

To the west, upriver in Vermilion Parish, the little Cajun towns are underwater. Erath and Delcambre are still filled with the water that consumed half their houses. In Erath, a police sport-utility vehicle is tipped onto its side in a roadside ditch. If the police couldn't navigate the streets, who could?

At the sunken bottom of the parish, boats glide into the town of Pecan Island. Down below on the soggy soil, Melancon and his friends watch crabs and shrimp flitting through the high water that covers what once was open ground behind their houses. "That," said Jackie Abshire, first pointing at the salty water behind his house, then at the Gulf 200 yards away, "used to be over there."

But no place is worse than Cameron, a town of 1,900 clinging to a narrow strip of land between Calcasieu Lake and the Gulf of Mexico. Rita came ashore just west of Cameron, exposing the town that once advertised its "Cajun cabins" to the most ferocious winds a hurricane carries, the winds in its northeast quadrant.

Rita abused Cameron's dead as much as its living. The town cemetery is macabre. Coffins float in fetid water, mausoleums are in shards, and human bones lie blanching in the sunlight next to disintegrating burial vestments. Not far away, a church sags beneath a steeple that once pointed to the skies. It points west now, almost accusatorily, to the place where Rita came ashore.

From above, the town's amphitheater appears to have transformed into a convertible, its roof stripped off, exposing the bright-red seats where people once sat for school and community events. Cameron had been poised to become a big thing, a really big thing. When Hurricane Katrina pounded the port in New Orleans, the people in Cameron thought their own little port would pick up a lot of the business, which would have meant millions. "Now it's all headed to Texas," said Billy Gibson, an electrical cooperative representative who was one of the few people on the ground there Tuesday.

Gibson let out a laugh, a sad kind of laugh, when the conversation snaked around to getting Cameron lighted again. "There's nothing salvageable here," he said.

'Algiers is alive and well and breathing'

phase 3 areas, Nagin said.

Nagin cautioned that if a home in any area is uninhabitable, the resident must leave the city by sunset. The city has posted red stickers on homes that inspectors say pose a structural hazard. Nagin recommended that residents not try to enter homes that have been marked with a red sticker.

He said some homes are damaged and that people who return do so "at your own risk." He advised residents to be especially cautious about access to upper floors of homes if they have been damaged.

The mayor said the city's reentry plan for the West Bank, which started Monday, is going well.

"Algiers is alive and well and breathing," Nagin said.

Conditions primitive

Power is on in 75 percent to 85 percent of the targeted ZIP codes, Nagin said. Water on the east bank must be boiled before drinking, and Nagin suggested people drink bottled water. Nagin said people could shower in the water on the east bank, but Department of Health and Hospitals Secretary Fred Cerise, who spoke at the meeting, recommended that people use bottled or boiled water for showers and washing dishes.

Residents who return should run their hot and cold water faucets for 15 minutes to clear the pipes. The water temporarily might have a chlorine odor, Nagin said, because the Orleans Parish Sewerage & Water Board has added disinfectant.

New Orleans School Board President Torin Sanders, who spoke at the meeting, set a Nov. 1 target date to reopen nine schools on the West Bank and said some schools Uptown might also open around that time if enough students return to make it necessary. "That's what we're shooting for," Sanders said.

Nagin's comments came as Cerise warned in a news release that those who return to the east bank of New Orleans are doing so at their own risk. "The two things that are absolutely necessary to public health – clean drinking water and proper sewage systems – simply are not available in the east bank area of New Orleans at this time," he said in the new release.

The release, which warned that returnees are at risk of diseases such as E. coli, salmonella or diarrhea, infuriated legislators who said displaced residents are getting mixed messages from authorities about whether it's safe to return.

"Either get on board or get off," state Sen. Derrick Shepherd, D-Marrero, told Cerise, echoing several of his colleagues.

Nagin accused state officials of trying to put a negative spin on New Orleans while being more positive about other parishes in storm-damaged areas.

"Every time we talk about re-entry into the city, some official pops up and says we're not ready," Nagin said. "We are not rowing in the same direction in the same boat."

'At your own risk'

Cerise, who was not originally scheduled to testify but was asked to come to the meeting and clarify his remarks, said he simply wanted returning residents to take proper precautions until the water has been deemed safe.

"We don't recommend people washing dishes, washing their hands (with tap water)," he said. "If it's on your hands, there's still a risk there."

Although Cerise said many healthy adults could bathe or wash dishes in the contaminated water without getting sick, he advised residents to boil water or treat it with bleach before using it to wash. All officials agreed that residents should drink only bottled water until the tap water has been decontaminated.

The Health and Hospitals document was nearly identical in tone and message to a news release posted Wednesday on the city's official Web site, in which returning residents are warned that they are "entering the city of New Orleans at your own risk," because "there are still many health and safety issues."

Farther down, the city's news release warns east bank residents against drinking, bathing or washing one's hands in untreated tap water.

Hot damn! Sauce plant doesn't flood

By The Associated Press

AVERY ISLAND — On a salt dome that rises from the Cajun flatlands like an island from the sea, the plant that makes Tabasco sauce was safe from floods caused by Hurricane Rita. And it had enough stock on hand to ship out until the factory regained power.

Many of its workers weren't so lucky.

"We've got a lot of employees that live in Delcambre and Erath and Lydia and low-lying areas around Avery Island," Paul McIlhenny, chief executive of McIlhenny Co., said Wednesday.

Their houses flooded, so the company is trying to find them rooms in New Iberia and Lafayette — sometimes hotel rooms, sometimes rooms in someone's house.

Power had been out since Friday night, when the storm was still offshore.

"I don't think the flow of Tabasco sauce will be interrupted because we had a good supply on hand," McIlhenny said.

It was the company's second hit by a hurricane. "We had a kind of double whammy," McIlhenny said.

Hurricane Katrina did wind damage to the company's office and museum in a part of New Orleans still under evacuation orders. The bricks recently had been re-mortared, and appeared to have held up under the storm. People apparently broke in to take shelter, but there was little other damage, McIlhenny said.

Eight or nine New Orleans workers and their spouses were working and living at Avery Island when Rita hit.

City Council requires information on rebuilding contracts

Officials want priority given to local firms

By Frank Donze
Staff writer

Hoping to keep close eye tabs on how New Orleans spends what may be billions of dollars in post-Katrina federal and state aid, the City Council wants Mayor Ray Nagin's administration to require contractors to disclose the identities of everyone sharing in the profits, down to the penny.

Under a proposal approved late Tuesday night by council members, companies hired to participate in a massive recovery effort likely to last years would have to certify by affidavit all individuals and entities with a financial interest in the contracts "no matter how minimal."

The disclosure information being sought includes "subcontractors, consultants and finder's fees billed, paid or promised in furtherance of landing a contract."

The guidelines, spelled out in a resolution that does not have the force of law, would require certification of firms handling the work before a contract can be executed.

While provisions of the City Charter give the council the authority to conduct after-the-fact investigations into how municipal contracts are handed out, the executive branch would have to enforce the recommended disclosure procedures.

Administration officials said Wednesday that they will supply the council with a list of all contractors. But they said they were not certain whether they can provide the level of detail being requested as the city struggles to recover from the disaster.

With the eyes of the nation fixed firmly on a city preparing to partner with the federal government in an unprecedented rebuilding program, officials across the region have said that the process must be scandal-free.

In the resolution authored by Eddie Sapir, the council echoed that sentiment, saying "it is of vital importance to the citizens of New Orleans to maintain integrity in the process of distributing contracts, and such integrity is best achieved by promoting a transparent process."

In addition to ensuring accountability, council members said, the disclosure requirements will help track how much of the rebuilding money goes to Louisiana firms and individuals.

During a series of meetings Tuesday that lasted more than 10 hours, local participation in the recovery from the devastation wrought by Katrina was a dominant theme.

The Rev. Jesse Jackson, Treme activist Dyan French Cole and prominent businessmen including John Casbon and Erik Johnsen urged the council to recycle as much of the financial assistance as possible inside the region.

"The world is watching New Orleans," said Jackson, who read from recent newspaper accounts that the federal government had hired a Danish company to prepare food for relief workers and that large American conglomerates were earning significantly higher fees to remove storm debris than small local firms.

"Disaster survivors should have the preference to return here," Jackson said "And they should have the preference on jobs, job training and contracts."

During an emotional, profanity-laced tirade, Cole, a fixture at council meetings for years, berated local law enforcement officials and the military for forcibly removing her from her neighborhood, where she said she oversaw her own private relief effort.

Cole also said she was aghast that workers who she described as "illegal aliens" had been brought in to New Orleans to assist in the hurricane cleanup even as residents were being prevented from returning. "Why aren't able-bodied black men being allowed back in the city to rebuild their homes?" she asked.

Council President Oliver Thomas urged Nagin administration officials to go the extra mile to funnel federal and state dollars to local companies and workers.

Chief Administrative Officer Brenda Hatfield said Nagin has been emphatic with the Federal Emergency Management Agency and the Army Corps of Engineers about the importance of hiring local vendors and contractors, "because they know our city."

But because the city is scrambling to replace big-ticket items such as garbage trucks and firetrucks, it is sometimes forced to make purchases from companies outside the region, officials said.

"This is equipment we need desperately," said Chief Deputy City Attorney Evelyn Pugh. "And we can't get that locally."

Pollution limits eased as refineries restart

Some plants were shut as much as two weeks

By Jenny Hurwitz
River Parishes bureau

In a move intended to restore gasoline production in the wake of Hurricane Katrina-related shutdowns, three St. Charles Parish refineries were granted permission to disregard certain emissions standards for the month of September, according to the state Department of Environmental Quality.

The Norco refineries asked the state to ease emissions standards limiting the amount of pollution released into the air. The variances came at a time when energy analysts feared that the refinery shutdowns would result in gasoline shortages and soaring prices at the pump.

Most variances will remain in effect through Friday, said Chris Roberie, an air quality administrator with the DEQ.

While emissions ramped up once the refineries regained full operation, Roberie said that the area likely saw an overall net decrease in monthly emissions due to the fact that some plants had shut down entirely for up to two weeks.

"We don't anticipate any major emissions or air quality problems as a result," he said of the variances.

Valero Norco Refinery applied for emissions waivers to allow for increased flaring that came as part of the start-up sequence, said Valero spokesman Ron Guillory.

Rob Martin, Valero's environmental engineering manager, said that the increase in emissions for the month of September represents less than 3 percent of the total emissions produced by the refinery in a year.

Motiva St. Charles Refining and Shell Chemical requested waivers to allow for start-up flares as well, Roberie said.

Flaring allows refineries to burn off excess fuel. Motiva has a 240,000 barrel-per-day capacity; Valero Norco Refinery has a 260,000 barrel-per-day capacity.

Additionally, Motiva requested permission to vent vapors into the atmosphere while loading fuel into vessels, which expedites the loading process, Roberie said. Motiva also received authorization to empty fuel storage tanks, allowing more gasoline to be distributed and resulting in increased emissions, he said.

The DEQ could not specify the extent of the emissions increases at the Motiva and Shell plants.

In St. John the Baptist Parish, Marathon Petroleum's Garyville plant, which produces 245,000 barrels per day, did not submit requests for emissions variances, according to the DEQ.

"We started up with no problem," said Linda Casey, a Marathon spokeswoman. "We were back up and running by the end of the weekend, when the hurricane had passed."

St. John tries to pave way for parish welcome wagon

Meeting to focus on housing storm victims

By Allen Powell II
River Parishes bureau

The St. John the Baptist Parish Council will hold a public workshop and special meeting today in an effort to create a comprehensive plan for temporary housing for people displaced by Hurricane Katrina and Hurricane Rita.

The decision to hold the workshop and special meeting came during the council's regular council meeting Tuesday. The move came after almost an hour of discussion among council members and residents about what the parish has done to help individuals stranded by the storms and whether the parish has a workable plan for providing housing.

The workshop and meeting, which will be open to the public, are scheduled to start at 6:30 p.m. in the council chambers at the Percy Hebert building in LaPlace.

The Federal Emergency Management Agency has contacted several parishes about hosting storm victims in temporary housing, and it held a meeting this month to discuss those plans. The agency has said it wants to put temporary housing only in communities that welcome the idea and have the infrastructure to handle the new structures, said Natalie Robottom, St. John Parish's chief administrator. Although FEMA can build new infrastructure to handle temporary housing, it would prefer not to, she said.

On Tuesday, Councilman Richard "Dale" Wolfe and a resident chastised Parish President Nickie Monica for not doing more to provide housing for the estimated 15,000 displaced people now living in the parish.

Wolfe and Raydell Morris of Reserve said Monica has been unfairly selective in who he allows to place travel trailers or mobile homes on their property. Wolfe also criticized the council, including himself, for not being more involved in finding housing for evacuees.

Wolfe complained that the parish administration has met with FEMA officials about temporary housing in the parish but did not notify council members about the meeting.

"We should know what's going on, but we don't," Wolfe said. "Administration has ignored us to the hilt."

Robottom bristled at comments that the council was not invited to the FEMA meeting, noting that Council Chairman Cleveland Farlough attended the meeting. Robottom also said the parish has not made any secret plans with FEMA and only has provided the agency with a map of the parish that shows which areas allow mobile homes.

"I've had one visit from two FEMA representatives, and they have not come back," Robottom said.

On Sept. 23, Monica issued an executive order relaxing restrictions on using travel trailers to house industrial, commercial and construction workers. The move was an effort to jump-start St. John's economy and help other parishes. In addition, the executive order allowed the placement of travel trailers on private property on any residential lot on a non-rental basis with the receipt of a special permit from the parish.

Such permits will be valid for three months with an option for an additional year. The housing units are required to have their own sewage containment and disposal capabilities. The permits will be issued through Oct. 7, according to the executive order.

The executive order did not allow for more permanent mobile homes to be placed on property unless residents went through the parish's formal permitting process with the Planning and Zoning Board. In addition, mobile homes are allowed only in specially zoned areas of the parish unless there is a zoning variance.

Morris, who is a member of the St. John Housing Authority's Board of Commissioners, said FEMA has approached the housing authority about renovating some of its units and also placing travel trailer on some of its property. However, he said those efforts have been thwarted because they have had to stick to the parish's normal zoning process, while other trailers have been placed without the need for formal approval by the council. Morris said that if Monica is making exceptions for some people, he needs to make exceptions for all residents.

However, Robottom said, the administration has applied the guidelines of the executive order evenly to all residents, and the only dispute seems to be attached to whether mobile homes should be approved without the regular zoning process. Robottom said the administration is willing to allow mobile homes in properly zoned areas and is working to expedite all requests.

Planetarium first of attractions to reopen in historic Rivertown

Other museums still need major repairs

By Mary Swerczek
Kenner bureau

While most museums in Kenner's historic Rivertown need major repairs before they can reopen, the popular Louis J. Roussel Planetarium could open next week, officials said.

"We're on target to possibly reopen the planetarium within a week," said Phil Ramon, chief of staff for Kenner Mayor Phil Capitano. "The new show is called ëDolphins.' "

The planetarium building suffered one minor leak and possible damage to the projection equipment, possibly from the hot, humid conditions while power was out, but "fared best of all the buildings," Ramon said.

Most buildings received roof damage and flooding. For example, the roof caved in on the KTV, Kenner's cable television station, located in the Wildlife and Fisheries building, Ramon said.

"We've got the roof put on but we don't know how much damage was actually done," Ramon said. "Water was just pouring down. A lot of things are just going to have to be rebuilt."

Wind whipped the Cannes Brulees Indian Village, stripping a tepee and an artists' shack. Nearby, a wall of bricks fell at the Freeport McMoRan Daily Living Science Center, flooding the entire science museum and the Saints Hall of Fame.

Ramon didn't have an estimate of when the most heavily damaged buildings would reopen. "Some of them will need some major (repair)," Ramon said.

The 23 or 24 city employees who worked in Rivertown museums have been reassigned to storm-related jobs ranging from handling the overflow of telephone calls to doling out goods at the city's hurricane-relief distribution center at Woodward gym, Ramon said.

"We're doing everything to keep our employees and utilize them in the most productive manner in an effort to have our community return to the way it was," Ramon said.

The same is true in other departments. For instance, about 10 recreation employees have been reassigned to public works to help with grass-cutting or debris removal.

Kenner spokeswoman Karen Boudrie said officials would like the city to hold a Halloween event in Rivertown.

"I bet we can pull that off," Boudrie said, adding that the feature would be good for children who can't go house to house because of work on their homes or other difficulties. "It just might be the one thing we can do."

State Farm customers angry over change

Company now applying deductible to checks

By Jeffrey Meitrodt
Staff writer

Franki LaRocca didn't waste any time. The Metairie resident, who has been living in Houston since she was forced to evacuate four weeks ago, called her State Farm agent the day after Hurricane Katrina clobbered the New Orleans area on Aug. 29.

At first, she was delighted by what the insurer had to tell her. Because civil authorities ordered the evacuation, she said, State Farm offered to cut her a check for $2,500 to help cover the family's living expenses for 14 days. But between work and lining up a new school for her 16-year-old son, LaRocca wasn't able to make it to a State Farm office until this week. By then, she said, the offer had been retracted.

"I am totally floored," said LaRocca, whose home sustained no flood or wind damage. "It's like because we have a home to return to that this company is changing the way they're responding. It shouldn't be that way."

LaRocca isn't the only State Farm customer scratching her head these days. Though the company shelled out $225 million to its policyholders for living expenses immediately following the catastrophic storm, the rules for handing out that kind of assistance have changed, State Farm spokesman Dick Luedke said Wednesday.

Previously, the company was willing to relax its rules for living expenses, which means State Farm did not apply its standard deductible to the $2,500 checks it sent to about 90,000 policyholders in Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama and Florida. Customers also were told that they didn't have to provide receipts or return any unspent cash as long as they don't seek any additional money from the company for Katrina-related expenses.

But any policyholder who was left out of the company's initial burst of largesse cannot expect such treatment. Any claims for living expenses now are subject to the standard deductible — which typically ranges from $1,000 to $2,000 — and receipts will be required for payment, Luedke said.

He said policyholders shouldn't be disappointed, as State Farm is simply abiding by the terms of its homeowners policy. He said this policy will apply to anyone who sought assistance for living expenses more than two weeks after the storm passed.

"We are sacrificing absolute uniformity in the application of the deductible, but we are still making sure that everybody gets — at the very least — what they are entitled to," Luedke said.

So why did State Farm treat the first wave of claims differently?

"We took this action in response to a horrific event at a time when the need among

Hasty deal leads to $236 million cruise

Lack of preparation is costly, critics say

By Jonathan Weisman
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — On Sept. 1, as tens of thousands of desperate Louisianans packed the New Orleans Superdome and convention center, the Federal Emergency Management Agency pleaded with the U.S. Military Sealift Command: The government needed 10,000 berths on full-service cruise ships, FEMA said, and it needed the deal done by noon the next day.

The hasty appeal yielded one of the most controversial contracts of the Hurricane Katrina relief operation: a $236 million agreement with Carnival Cruise Lines for three ships that now bob more than half empty in the Mississippi River and Mobile Bay. The six-month contract — staunchly defended by Carnival but castigated by politicians from both parties — has come to exemplify the cost of haste that followed Katrina's strike and FEMA's lack of preparation.

STAFF PHOTO BY CHRIS GRANGER

St. Bernard Parish emergency officials gather on the slip beside the Scotia Prince, a ferry that landed one of four FEMA contracts for Hurricane Katrina housing. The ships have been housing many emergency workers, but many evacuee see them as a dead end, far away from any job or potential new life.

To critics, the price is exorbitant. If the ships were at capacity, with 7,116 evacuees, for six months, the price per evacuee would total $1,275 a week, according to calculations by aides to Sen. Tom Coburn, R-Okla. A seven-day western Caribbean cruise out of Galveston can be had for $599 a person, and that would include entertainment and the cost of actually making the ship move.

Carnival's bid totaled $192 million over six months, plus $44 million in reimbursable expenses, such as port charges, fuel, food and docking costs. To Carnival executives, the contract will ensure only that the company breaks even when it pulls three ships from holiday operations. About 100,000 passengers had their vacations canceled to accommodate the government's needs, said Michael Crye, president of the International Council of Cruise Lines, who has been answering questions about the deal for Carnival.

``In the end, we will make no additional money on this deal versus what we would have made by keeping these ships in service," said Jennifer de la Cruz, a Carnival spokeswoman. ``That has been our position from the outset, and it has not changed."

Government contracting officials defended the deal. ``They were the market," Capt. Joe Manna, director of contracts at the Sealift Command, said of Carnival. ``Under the circumstances, I'd say we're getting a pretty good value."

Coburn and Obama disagreed. ``Finding out after the fact that we're spending taxpayer money on no-bid contracts and sweetheart deals for cruise lines is no way to run a recovery effort," they said in the statement.

But the Carnival deal has come under particular scrutiny. Not only are questions being raised over the contract's cost, but congressional investigators are examining the company's tax status. Carnival, which is headquartered in Miami but incorporated for tax purposes in Panama, paid just $3 million in income tax benefits on $1.9 billion in pretax income last year, according to company documents. ``That's not even a tip," said Robert McIntyre of Citizens for Tax Justice. U.S. companies in general pay an effective income tax rate of about 25 percent, analysts say. That would have left Carnival with a $475 million tax bill.

Carnival's public records boast ``that substantially all of our income in fiscal 2004, 2003 and 2002 ... is exempt from U.S. federal income taxes," largely because the company maintains that its operations are not in the United States but on the high seas.

Carnival does not want to see that tax status jeopardized just because three major ships are clearly operating in the United States.

Cruise line council President Crye said the company will reduce its billings under the contract by the amount of income taxes forgiven. The waiver would spare Carnival and its employees the paperwork of filing tax returns.

But Congress's main focus remains on cost and just how the Carnival contract came to pass. After a one-day competition, Sealift Command had bids from 13 ships, but only four of them met FEMA's requirements for providing accommodations, which included full meal service, between-meal snacks, linen and maid service, medical support, even prescription refills. Four ships — the Ecstasy, Sensation and Holiday, all owned by Carnival, as well as a ferry called the Scotia Prince — landed the contracts.

Flooding freezes real estate deals in N.O.

Rescued records need to dry out

By Greg Thomas
Real estate writer

It's still impossible to close on a real estate transaction in Orleans Parish because mortgage and conveyance records remain in 18 refrigerated trucks outside the once-flooded basement of Civil District Court on Poydras Street.

But after rescuing and freeze-drying them from the flooded basement weeks ago and with experts assuring that the 12 million pages of documents are OK, the problem has been finding and establishing a place where the drying process can be completed and abstractors can access them to do the necessary research for the closing of real estate transactions.

Finally, according to New Orleans' Custodian of Archives Steven Bruno and Recorder of Mortgages Gasper Schiro, a temporary solution has been reached to establish temporary operations at the Ernest N. Morial Convention Center. That decision has been approved by Orleans Parish Civil District Court Judge Ethel Simms Julien.

Bruno said he hopes that by Oct. 10, the records should be open to the public. "By Oct. 10, the records, which are intact, will be out of boxes. It's going to be rough, but we're going to do our best to make these records available to the public," Bruno said.

Munters, a Swedish-based records restoration firm, rescued the documents from the basement of the 56-year-old courthouse, where the Recorder of Mortgages and Register of Conveyances have worked since 1951.

Gasper has sworn — and Wednesday, Chief Judge Simms Julien backed him up — that the records will never be returned to the basement of the courthouse.

While access will be made to the records at the Convention Center through the Julia Street entrance, a permanent deal is being sealed to locate both the Recorder of Mortgages and the Register of Conveyances to the fifth floor of 1340 Poydras St., the office tower opposite the courthouse. It was long known as the Amoco building. That move should remain in place until a new Civil District Court complex, long planned but a long way from fruition, happens, Julien said.

The critical need for re-establishing both offices, along with the restrictions on commerce caused by the unavailability of the records, was brought to the attention of New Orleans City Council members by John Casbon at the council's meeting Tuesday, the second meeting since Hurricane Katrina devastated the city.

Casbon said Wednesday that he told council members, who seemed unaware of the seriousness of the issue, "that you can't have commerce in this town until we have a conveyance office" in Orleans Parish.

He sharply criticized a preliminary plan to open a mortgage and conveyance intake office in Gonzales, where Civil District Court and Civil District Clerk of Court Dale Atkins will relocate. While the office would allow for filings, it would not have allowed for abstractors — the researchers who conduct title searches and check documents critical to land and property records — to do the necessary work to move a real estate deal to closing.

He said that Councilmen-at-large Eddie Sapir said council members were "clueless" to the critical need for the operation.

Casbon added that there were numerous pending real estate transactions in the city, from speculators looking to snap up properties to home buyers looking to replace flooded or wind-destroyed homes in hopes of returning to their city.

Casbon and Bruno said that they expected to be swamped once the offices are up and running and real estate transactions can be completed.

Meanwhile, land records and abstract work have continued operating in Jefferson and St. Tammany parishes, where courthouse operations were not affected by the storm.

Land records in River Parishes were unaffected by Hurricane Katrina.

In St. Bernard Parish, title attorney Sidney Torres III, whose mother is the long-time St. Bernard Parish Clerk of Court, said land records were moved from the basement of the St. Bernard Highway courthouse as the storm approached and secured on higher floors. Torres said his mother, Lena Torres, said that all St. Bernard Parish officials would meet today to discuss reopening government offices, including access to land records.

No word on the status of Plaquemines Parish land records was available late Wednesday.

Archivist Bruno said that he has told Munters to begin slowly warming the refrigeration trucks from their maintained 42 degrees, where workers have checked the books three times daily. The trucks contain 60,000 boxes holding 20,000 containers with two to three conveyance or mortgage inside books each. It will take three days to unload the trucks and shelving already ordered should arrive in time to allow access to the books. The books still need to sit in a climate-controlled atmosphere for a few days once offloaded to the Convention Center, Bruno said. Some of the documents will need "remediation," Munters officials told Bruno, but officials call the survival of the documents "a miracle."

Critics: Carnival getting special treatment

INSURANCE, from A-22

many of our policyholders was great," Luedke said. "I know there will be some cases where someone received more money than they were entitled to. But that is a business risk we decided to take."

With 33 percent of the market, State Farm is the largest provider of homeowners insurance in Louisiana. Based on a survey of other companies, it also appears to be the only major insurer in the state to apply the deductible to living expenses under the so-called civil authority clause, which was triggered when local officials ordered residents out of their homes and didn't let them immediately return.

At Allstate Insurance Co., which has about 20 percent of the Louisiana market, no deductible will apply to such payment requests, no matter when the claim was filed, Allstate spokesman Mike Trevino said.

"The timing doesn't matter; no deductible applies," Trevino said.

Such unequal treatment is infuriating many State Farm customers. In fact, some policyholders say State Farm agents warned that their deductible probably would offset any help they could get for living expenses, even if they contacted the company immediately after the storm passed.

"My deductible is $1,000, and my (State Farm) agent kind of convinced me not to file a claim," said Paul Perque, a LaPlace resident who spent about $1,200 to move his family to a hotel near Marksville for about 10 days. "They said these checks are for people who lost everything and had total destruction of their homes. But that's not what I read in the newspaper."

Luedke said it's possible some State Farm agents gave bad information to their policyholders in the immediate aftermath of the storm, probably because communication was fouled up. He urged the company's customers to look at the "declarations" page of their policies, which he said spells out how the deductible applies to "loss of use" claims related to actions taken by a civil authority, such as a mandatory evacuation.

SHEILA STROUP

Outreach group seeks people with answers

Anita Gilford is looking for her children and their families. "We have over 100," she said.

When I talked to the founder of Angels' Place on Tuesday, she had been making phone calls and getting few answers.

"We have children from New Orleans, Belle Chasse, Algiers, Covington, Chalmette, everywhere," she said. "I hope they know Angels' Place is trying to find them."

Angels' Place Inc. is a nonprofit outreach group that provides support and assistance to families of children with life-threatening illnesses. When Anita started Angels' Place in 1994, her ultimate goal was to build a respite and hospice home for seriously ill children in southeast Louisiana, a dream that seemed in reach until Hurricane Katrina.

"Now, we're going to put our trust in God and just keep working until all the money runs out," she said.

Future blown away

Anita and her two staff members, Barbara Lane and Charlotte Ward, are operating out of their office on Division Street near West Esplanade Avenue in Metairie.

"I'm completely amazed that we even have phones and can use our computer," Anita said. "The right half of the building was blown away."

Much of the future of Angels' Place seems to have blown away, too: Three fall fund-raisers had to be canceled, and the group's staunchest financial supporters have suffered personal Katrina-related tragedies.

"We're hoping to get some money through the Governor's office to keep us going. Surely, there's something we qualify for," Anita said.

She sees the survival of their office as a sign that they mustn't give up. Every morning since Katrina, she has said the same little prayer: "Jesus, I trust in you. Please tell us what to do."

"The answer is always the same," she said. "'Love one another and help our children.'"

Better than Oprah calling

Angels' Place was featured in the April 25 issue of People magazine, and when I called to congratulate Anita after the story came out, she said she hoped "someone like Oprah" would read it and want to help with her special mission.

The next time I talked to her, she said no, Oprah hadn't called, but something better had happened: She had received dozens of phone calls and e-mails from people around the country.

"Everyone wants to know how we got started because they desperately need something like Angels' Place in their communities," she said.

She knows that now, when so many have lost homes, livelihoods, everything, her families need Angels' Place more than ever. And she'd also like to hear from other parents with ill or disabled children who have special needs because of Katrina.

"It's a magical thing we're still here," she said, "and I know we're meant to be here to help our kids."

To reach Angels' Place, call (504) 455-2621, or e-mail apgilford123@bellsouth.net. For information about Angels' Place, go to www.angelsplace.org.

With storm damage comes risk of fraud

Workers from Roofing Specialist of Opelousas put a new roof on a Metairie home Wednesday. While many contracting companies responding to catastrophic damage are legitimate, experts say, the influx of money also brings scam artists.

Experts warn of predatory contractors

By Jeff Duncan
Staff writer

First came the hurricanes. Now another type of storm threatens New Orleans area homeowners: unscrupulous contractors.

In the wake of Katrina and Rita, waves of home builders have descended on the region. But not all of them have good intentions, experts say.

Desperate, disillusioned homeowners might be tempted to take the first offer they receive from a contractor as they begin the laborious process of rebuilding their homes. But be wary, experts say — and if possible, be patient.

Scam artists habitually follow natural disasters, taking advantage of disaster victims by swindling them out of their precious and often limited resources. It's not a question of if unscrupulous contractors will scam people after Hurricane Katrina but when, experts say, and how many victims will they claim.

"Unfortunately, these kinds of storms not only bring out the best in people but also the worst in people," said Jerry Howard, CEO of the National Association of Home Builders. "The people down there in New Orleans are going to be depressed, and they are going to be easy prey for a lot of these scoundrels."

Already, signs for home builders and subcontractors such as roofers, plumbers and landscapers have mushroomed on neutral grounds and street corners around town. Contractors have swarmed the French Quarter and Central Business District since Mayor Ray Nagin opened them to business owners this week. The sound of hammers, circular saws and drills filled the air as the city buzzed back to life.

"They're already here," said Phil Huffman, president of the Home Builders Association of Greater New Orleans, about the out-of-town contractors. "Most of these guys are legitimate, but there's always opportunists out there that see that there is plenty of money to be made."

Randy Noel, president of Reve Inc., a building company in LaPlace, said he's already heard reports of contractors charging $8 a square foot for debris removal in some parts of Jefferson Parish. The typical rate, he said,

Thousands wait for hours to get debit cards

Thousands of people displaced by hurricanes waited in a 3-mile line of cars in Slidell or stood in a shorter line in Mandeville for the American Red Cross' first on-site, direct financial aid giveaway in Louisiana.

Residents from throughout the Gulf Coast region waited in their cars for as long as five hours to get into the Red Cross site in the parking lot of the former Slidell factory outlets at Interstate 10 and Old Spanish Trail. The line in Mandeville reported a wait of about 3 hours.

The payoff for the patient: a laminated plastic Red Cross debit card good for several hundred dollars – up to $1,565, depending on family size and needs.

"You have to give your name, address, the number in your family and a driver's license number – not even a Society Security number," said Jennifer Gomez, who stood in line for 2½ hours in Mandeville and emerged with four cards worth $1,200. "They told me there are no restrictions. I can get medication with the card, and I have

Storm-related illnesses not major threat

Two steps to take: Wash hands often, avoid impure water

By John Pope
Staff writer

With thousands of New Orleanians poised to re-enter their city and inspect their homes, health officials Wednesday said that the potential of disease exists but that storm-related illnesses should not be life-threatening.

"People need a lot of common sense" on these visits, said state epidemiologist Raoult Ratard, adding the two of the most important disease-prevention measures people can take are washing their hands frequently with safe water and not drinking impure water.

But people intent on resuming their lives in New Orleans are risking exposure to foodborne illnesses if they return before health inspections conclude whether water can be used without boiling and whether food establishments can reopen, the state health department said.

Businesses that haven't received placards from the department do not meet sanitary-code standards and are not allowed to reopen, department officials said.

In surveying the area where Hurricane Katrina struck, officials said in a telephone news conference Wednesday that they are looking for long- and short-term health hazards.

In the former category is mold, a rampant feature in waterlogged homes. It can pose problems for people with suppressed immune systems because it can spur infections, and for people with allergies because it can trigger hay-fever symptoms, said Dr. Stephen Redd, a respiratory-health expert at the federal Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

Although a homeowner probably can take care of mold covering less than 10 square feet, a professional should be hired to remove mold covering a bigger area, Begg said.

N.O. cops reported to take Cadillacs from dealership

Foti investigating looting allegation

By James Varney
Staff writers

Louisiana Attorney General Charles Foti's office confirmed Wednesday that it is investigating the alleged looting of a New Orleans car dealership by city police officers.

More than 200 vehicles were taken from the Sewell Cadillac Chevrolet dealership in the Central Business District, and in the most chaotic hours after Hurricane Katrina, some New Orleans Police Department officers reportedly pulled up outside the mobile command center at Harrah's casino in bright, shiny Cadillac SUVs.

The cars allegedly still had "2004" stickers in their windshields and "Sewell" medallions on the back. The fancy rides appeared at a time when a desperate force, having already lost scores of its marked units to floodwaters, was siphoning gas from abandoned vehicles scattered throughout the city, and officers claimed to be operating under emergency orders that allowed them to commandeer necessary supplies. Now, however, that tactic has drawn the attention of investigators.

"Yes, we are investigating although there have been no arrests so far," said Kris Wartelle, a spokeswoman for Foti. "The investigation involves the activities at Sewell of both the New Orleans Police Department and another sort of city official whom I can't identify right now."

NOPD spokesman Capt. Marlon Defillo said the force "welcomes any review" of its actions. At no time did any officer remove a car from the Sewell lot or showroom, he said.

"There were a number of vehicles stolen by individuals from that dealership, and the police department recovered more than 100 of those vehicles," Defillo said. "A small fraction of those recovered were then used for essential purposes by officers whose vehicles had been damaged in the hurricane."

Defillo said late Wednesday the recovered vehicles were warehoused and returned to Sewell. Yet in an interview Wednesday morning, Sewell President Doug Stead did not mention those arrangements. He said the dealership had recovered a handful of cars – some from as far away as Baton Rouge – by working with its insurance companies.

The investigation into alleged looting comes at a time the NOPD is reeling from the resignation of Superintendent Eddie Compass on Tuesday and reports in The Times-Picayune that Compass and Mayor Ray Nagin repeated exaggerated tales of cruelty and violence in a New Orleans shattered by Katrina.

The tale of purloined Cadillacs is not the first allegation of improper confiscation of goods by NOPD officers. In Katrina's immediate aftermath, The Times-Picayune published photographs online of NOPD officers taking items such as DVDs from the Wal-Mart on Tchoupitoulas Street. Officers said at the time that police were either obtaining critical supplies for their own efforts or removing attractive targets for looters.

There have been other allegations as well. CNN aired a story recently that said some officers stored stolen goods in a suite of rooms at the American Suites Hotel on Canal Street. And Chad Clayton of Clarence M. Kelley, a firm that has handled security at Children's Hospital since shortly after the storm, said he stopped a couple of officers who were attempting to take a car from the hospital lots.

Whether Compass or Nagin ever issued an order that allowed officers to commandeer supplies remained unclear Wednesday. Wartelle said the city has not furnished investigators with a copy of any such document, and lawyers described the issue as "a legal gray area."

The orders, if they were issued, may have come not from the top but from district commanders, according to one source who has reviewed the matter, but Defillo declined to address the issue.

"I don't want to get into the specifics of authorization," he said. "That will all come out in the review which, as I said, we welcome."

Stead's own review began when he returned to the dealership eight days after the storm. He had heard while evacuated in Lafayette that police officers were patrolling the city in Cadillacs that carried $60,000 sticker prices. But the destruction of his dealership did not become apparent until he arrived back in New Orleans eight days after the storm.

"Someone had told me, 'We saw the police driving your cars,' and then when we got here the dealership was in total disarray, totally smashed up, every door was kicked in and we were looted," he said.

Nevertheless, Stead stressed that neither he nor any other Sewell employee requested a formal investigation from any law enforcement agency.

"The attorney general's office contacted us, we did not contact them," he said. "Please make that clear because I have to live here, you know."

All told, Stead said more than 200 vehicles were taken. Some of them were new, some were used; some were part of the dealership's inventory, some were customers' cars in for service.

Cadillacs were not the only high-end vehicles that vanished. A handful of Sewell Corvettes were also gone, and as recently as last week an NOPD officer at Harrah's was seen driving a black Corvette with a dealer's sticker in the windshield.

"They took anything that was drivable – they even hotwired a tractor we use to move cars around, a thing that can't go any faster than 12 miles per hour," Stead said of the looters.

It was Sewell's location – relatively high and completely dry at 701 Baronne St. – that made it a victim, Stead believes. Other dealerships, even those of high-end vehicles on Tulane Avenue, were engulfed by quickly rising.

should be closer to $2 to $3 a square foot.

He's also heard of some companies charging as much as $2,500 to put tarps on roofs, a job that usually costs $150 to $1,000.

"That's obscene," said Noel, the state representative for the National Association of Home Builders. "In people's mind, insurance is going to pay for it. But they're going to be in for the shock of their lives when the (insurance) adjuster comes around."

This isn't a new phenomenon.

Thousands of people complained about being swindled by con artists after Hurricane Betsy ripped through New Orleans 40 years ago.

A plague of unscrupulous contractors also swooped into south Florida after Hurricane Andrew in 1992. Officials received more than 4,000 complaints from homeowners about shoddy repairs, ignored construction codes and uncompleted work in the first year after Andrew.

Depending on the offense and the location, unlicensed contractors can be booked for fraud, misappropriation of funds or federal profiteering, Howard said. But he admitted that policing such illegal activities is difficult, especially since resources and manpower are stressed because of the storms.

In response to the growing problem, some Florida municipalities have formed agencies to protect consumers from scams by verifying contractors' credentials and questioning repair workers.

No such agencies are in place in Louisiana, so residents are going to have to perform due diligence on their own as the area begins the massive rebuilding project which could take years, or even decades.

It took south Florida contractors more than a decade to rebuild the 28,000 homes that were destroyed by Andrew. That storm appears minor compared to Katrina, which damaged an estimated 360,000 homes in New Orleans' seven-parish metropolitan area. Experts say as many as half of those homes could need to be completely rebuilt.

"No one has ever seen anything of this scale," Howard said.

All out-of-town contractors must be licensed by the state to do business in Louisiana. The Louisiana State Licensing Board requires any contractor who performs services for more than $7,500 to be licensed. Jefferson Parish regulations are more stringent, requiring licenses for $2,500 or more of work.

Just because a contractor is from out of town doesn't mean they can't be trusted. However, they're more likely to pull scams in areas where they have no history of bad references or dealings with the local Better Business Bureau.

"The out-of-town contractors are a double-edged sword," Noel said. "They are here to help us get back up and running. The other side is they don't have to ties to the area, so they don't have to be as diligent.

Huffman said disaster victims are particularly vulnerable to scams because of their unstable living conditions. Many of them are displaced and eager to get back in their homes as quickly as possible. Officials estimated that more than a half a million people along the Gulf Coast were displaced from their homes by Katrina and Rita.

"People get real emotional," Huffman said. "The first construction guy that knocks on their door and tells them he can get them back in their home in four or five weeks, they go ahead and sign the contract. That's music to their ears. Then the next thing you know they can't get in touch with the guy, and he's run off with their deposit.

HOW TO AVOID GETTING SCAMMED

Local and national experts offer the following tips for consumers on how to avoid being scammed by unscrupulous contractors:

1. Make sure your contractor is licensed. Search for licensed contractors at the Louisiana State Licensing Board for Contractors at 1 (866) 310-7819 or online at www.lslbc.state.la.us/findcontractor.asp.
2. Make sure that the name of the company, the name on the license and the name on insurance certificates are the same. Some contractors borrow someone else's license number.
3. Get a written estimate.
4. Get at least three bids for the project costs.
5. Require a written contract.
6. Require proof of general liability and worker's compensation insurance.
7. Ask for references. Contractors should be willing to provide names of previous customers. Call them and ask whether they would hire the contractor again.
8. Never pay more than a 10 percent down payment.
9. Never pay cash.
10. Pay invoices for actual work completed.
11. Don't agree to obtain an owner-builder permit. It can be a signal that your contractor isn't licensed and can't get his own permit.
12. Don't pay extra because a contractor says materials have increased in price. Pay only what is spelled out in the contract for materials and labor.

one year to use it all up."

Armed with ZIP code lists to try to prevent fraud, agency officials were processing evacuees and others from Louisiana, Alabama, Mississippi, Texas and Florida who suffered losses from Katrina, Rita or both hurricanes. Most people processed by closing time Wednesday appeared to be St. Tammany Parish residents.

The sites for Red Cross disaster relief money were just what local officials and their constituents have been demanding for weeks, since storm victims have been frustrated by long waits as they attempt to contact the agency via its toll-free assistance line.

The distribution points will be open seven days a week from 9 a.m. to 7 p.m. until all hurricane victims who need Red Cross assistance have been helped, Red Cross Slidell site spokesman Peter Teahan said.

That will take "weeks and weeks and weeks," said Sarah Shogren, a Red Cross spokeswoman. "This is not a one-day operation. This is not a two-day operation."

Shogren and Teahan said other debit card distribution points are scheduled to be set up soon along the stricken Gulf Coast.

By Wednesday at 1:15 p.m., police in Slidell began turning back vehicles halfway between the end of Old Spanish Trail at Third Street and the Caruso Boulevard entrance to the site because the dozens of volunteers knew they would be unable to process them by 7 p.m.

On the west end of the parish, things moved a little faster at the Red Cross debit card site along East Causeway Approach in Mandeville.

The crowd was much smaller — the waits averaged 2½ to 3 hours — but people had to wait outside in the blazing heat before they could get inside the DonahueFavret Contractors building, where the Red Cross set up.

With 300 still in line, police cut off the line at noon but said everyone still in it at that point would be handled until about 4 p.m. Late-comers were told to return today at 9 a.m. at the Paul Spitzfaden Community Center next door.

Richard Broglin and Theresa Galvis, both of Mandeville, were the last two in line before the cutoff.

"We can wait for 3 hours if necessary," Galvis said. "We survived two hurricanes; we can survive a long wait in a line.

sampling the air for potentially dangerous chemicals, but results so far have been inconsistent, said Barnes Johnson, deputy director of the EPA's Office of Radiation and Indoor Air.

Reports on the monitoring would not be helpful to the general public because no level has been established at which such substances can cause problems, Johnson said.

So far, a survey of three major local hospitals – Ochsner Foundation Hospital, East Jefferson General Hospital and West Jefferson Medical Center – has shown no spike in storm-related diseases such as respiratory infections and diarrheal problems, Louisiana Secretary of Health and Hospitals Fred Cerise said.

The main reason people have been going to those hospitals is that they have injured themselves working on their homes, he said, although some people with coughs, colds and allergy symptoms gone to emergency rooms, too.

According to information the city of New Orleans released Wednesday, about one-third of all people who visited New Orleans area hospitals and clinics reported injuries. Most of the unintentional injuries were due to insect stings, fall, cuts, and blunt trauma.

Hospitals are more likely to see patients who have been injured due to falls and blunt trauma, while clinics are more likely to see injuries due to cuts and insect bites and stings. Also, the city said, injuries due to motor vehicle crashes have increased steadily since surveillance data collection began.

A small percentage of the injuries seen in hospitals and clinics are due to carbon monoxide poisoning. Flyers on prevention of carbon monoxide exposure have been delivered to local home improvement stores for posting and distribution to educate users of generators, pressure washers, and other gasoline powered devices, the city said. There has been an increase of carbon monoxide in the air due to generator usage.

Potential problems with asbestos and lead that surging waters may have pried loose will have to be evaluated on a case-by-case basis, doctors said. Both can pose health hazards, especially to younger children.

Lead would have to be eaten to cause a problem, and asbestos shouldn't be a problem if it is behind another wall, said Dr. Joseph Bocchini of Louisiana State University Health Sciences Center in Shreveport.

Parents should work with experts to eliminate such possibilities, he said.

Although New Orleans Mayor Ray Nagin said Wednesday that children probably shouldn't be brought back into certain areas of the city yet, they should be all right as long as their parents follow basic precautions, such as treating injuries promptly, keeping them away from strange animals, tossing spoiled food and washing their hands frequently, said Bocchini, a member of the American Academy of Pediatrics' infectious-diseases committee.

Before taking children back home, Bocchini said parents should ensure that it is as stable as possible.

Jefferson lines up credit as backup for FEMA aid

Officials weigh response to trash-collection woes

By Michelle Krupa
West Bank bureau

With $12 million in federal money already in hand to help Jefferson Parish pay for emergency response to Hurricane Katrina, the Parish Council voted Wednesday to tap a secondary line of credit to support further relief efforts and sketched out other plans to help residents rebuild.

Meeting at its Gretna chambers for the first time since Katrina and Hurricane Rita delivered their one-two punch, the council gave the parish permission to borrow as much as $30 million through the state's Hurricane Katrina Relief Program, though officials said they expect the Federal Emergency Management Agency to shoulder the cost of recovery, negating their need for a loan.

"It's our safety net in the event that FEMA doesn't" come though, Finance Director Nancy Cassagne said of the state loan contingency. "I hope I don't have to access it."

Jefferson's municipalities also would be allowed to borrow money under the plan, though council members agreed that cities and towns not paralyzed by the storms should request reimbursement or loans for themselves, following state and federal rules. Officials did not estimate how much it might cost to resurrect the parish from the hurricanes' destruction.

Meanwhile, the council voted to suspend garbage collection fees for September and promised to withhold all payments from its trash hauler, Waste Management, until the parish attorney can examine the terms of the $11 million annual contract, one of the parish's largest service deals, and possibly issue a default notice.

Officials have complained in recent weeks about Waste Management's slow response in gathering tons of storm debris. Even before the hurricanes, the parish announced in early August that it intended to levy $1.1 million in fines against the company because it had not collected recyclables and for other reasons that officials did not detail.

A Waste Management spokesman said that his company initiated once-weekly collection of garbage and recyclable goods in Jefferson three weeks ago and that in light of one of the biggest natural disasters in the nation's history, "we're mustering all the resources we can."

"We feel like the action is unfair," spokesman Tim Hawkins said, adding that the company had been in "constant communication" with parish officials. "Our employees evacuated the area at the urging of the leaders of the community. It had been something of a challenge to get our employees back. We had our fuel commandeered by FEMA, and the housing situation's been a challenge for us, but we feel like we're working that out."

Council members also voted Wednesday to let each of its seven members name one engineer and one architect as temporary building code inspectors to review plans for refurbishing storm-damaged structures.

Councilman Chris Roberts, who authored the proposal, said he aimed to prevent residents' and business owners' renovation plans from stalling if the parish's regular staff of code enforcement officers and inspectors cannot handle the spate of building requests sure to arise in the coming year. The political appointees, expected to serve until Oct. 1, 2006, would not be allowed to survey plans submitted by their own firms and would be paid by the hour.

"I do believe it's going to be a backlog," he said. "There are going to be so many commercial permits (requests) coming through that they're going to need the help."

Extending a hand to its hardest-hit towns, the council also voted to advance as much as $100,000 each to Grand Isle and Jean Lafitte to purchase emergency vehicles to aid with restoration efforts.

Muhleisen and Son Funeral Home, 2607 Williams Blvd., on Tuesday, September 27, 2005 at 11:00 am. Interment in Garden of Memories Cemetery. The children of Mrs. Congemi are very proud of their mother. While her entire life's story cannot be told here, the children wanted everyone to know a little about her. She was the daughter of Italian immigrant farmers and spent her pre-marital years working in the fields with her eight siblings near Independence, LA. In 1938, she married Sam Congemi, a poor shoemaker from Kenner. She was married to Sam for 57 years. Together struggled to raise six children, living in a house with one bedroom and no indoor plumbing. Meals were cooked on a kerosene stove which was also used to heat water for baths taken in a washtub. She was a proud woman and kept her home spotless. She believed it was bad luck to put your shoes on the bed. And playing cards during thunderstorms was prohibited. For her children, she worked hard getting up at 5 a.m., catching the bus to work, sometimes in the cold and rain, then standing for eight hours as a box-catch In a Harahan box manufacturing plant. For a small woman, barely five feet tall, she was strong. At age 80 she endured open heart surgery, recovered, and proved her strength by living beyond the doctor's expectations to age 93. She believed in God and loved life. She loved her family, her home, flowers, the color blue, shopping, and taking rides to visit her daughter in Memphis and her brothers and sister that still live near Independence, LA. The Congemi family wants to thank everyone that has offered their sympathies.

St. John gives bonus to school employees

Extra check isn't due to Katrina, spokesman says

By John-John Williams IV
River Parishes bureau

Employees of the St. John the Baptist Parish public schools system received a $750 check on top of their regular pay this month, just in time to help defray costs associated with Hurricane Katrina.

About 950 people who worked for the district on Aug. 20 received the one-time bonus as a result of months of union negotiations for additional pay for employees, school and union officials say.

In addition, the date paychecks were issued was Sept. 16 instead of Sept. 20, so that employees could have money to use immediately.

"Our School Board is so wonderful in making accommodations for us in anticipation for problems," said Ann LaBorde, executive director of personnel and legal services for the district.

The $750 payment cost the district $825,000, with $390,000 coming from the district's reserve fund and the remaining $435,000 taken from money gathered during July and August sales tax collection, an official said.

Although St. John has enjoyed recent fiscal success, it hasn't always been that way. In the summer of 2003, the district had to make $2.7 million in budget cuts that affected textbook purchases and eliminated field trips.

The district has $5 million remaining in its general fund balance, LaBorde said.

The St. John Association of Educators, the employee's union, said the money was the result of months of negotiation and not because of Katrina, as some employees may think because of the timing.

LaBorde said that it was never the board's intention to lead others to believe that the additional money was the result of Katrina.

"That was talked about for a long time," LaBorde explained. "This wasn't just the result of just Katrina. This was a good time. It was a matter of when and how much."

LaBorde said she could not comment on whether or not additional money would be issued to employees in the near future.

"That's a negotiated item, and I couldn't address it," LaBorde said.

Hurricanes have Harahan rethinking city's budget

By Matt Scallan
East Jefferson bureau

The Harahan City Council will meet at 7:30 p.m. tonight to reshuffle its budget after Hurricanes Rita and Katrina, and to set the 2005 property tax rate at 15.81 mills. The 2004 rate was 14.72 mills.

The tax will generate $295,000 per year at the city's current property valuation, up from $234,000 before the renewal.

Also on the agenda is the introduction of a measure to move $140,000 into the city's payroll account to cover unbudgeted expenses, such as increased overtime, due to the hurricanes. The money will come from the city's surplus and other areas of the budget, Mayor Paul Johnston said.

Johnston said he will ask the council to consider putting off action on a measure that would rezone property behind an office building at the intersection of Jefferson Highway and Oak Avenue from the R-2 classification to the C-1 light commercial classification. Neighbors oppose the plan, and Johnston said he would prefer to put off a vote until October, when the majority of the city's residents have returned home from storm-related evacuations.

The meeting will he held at City Hall.
