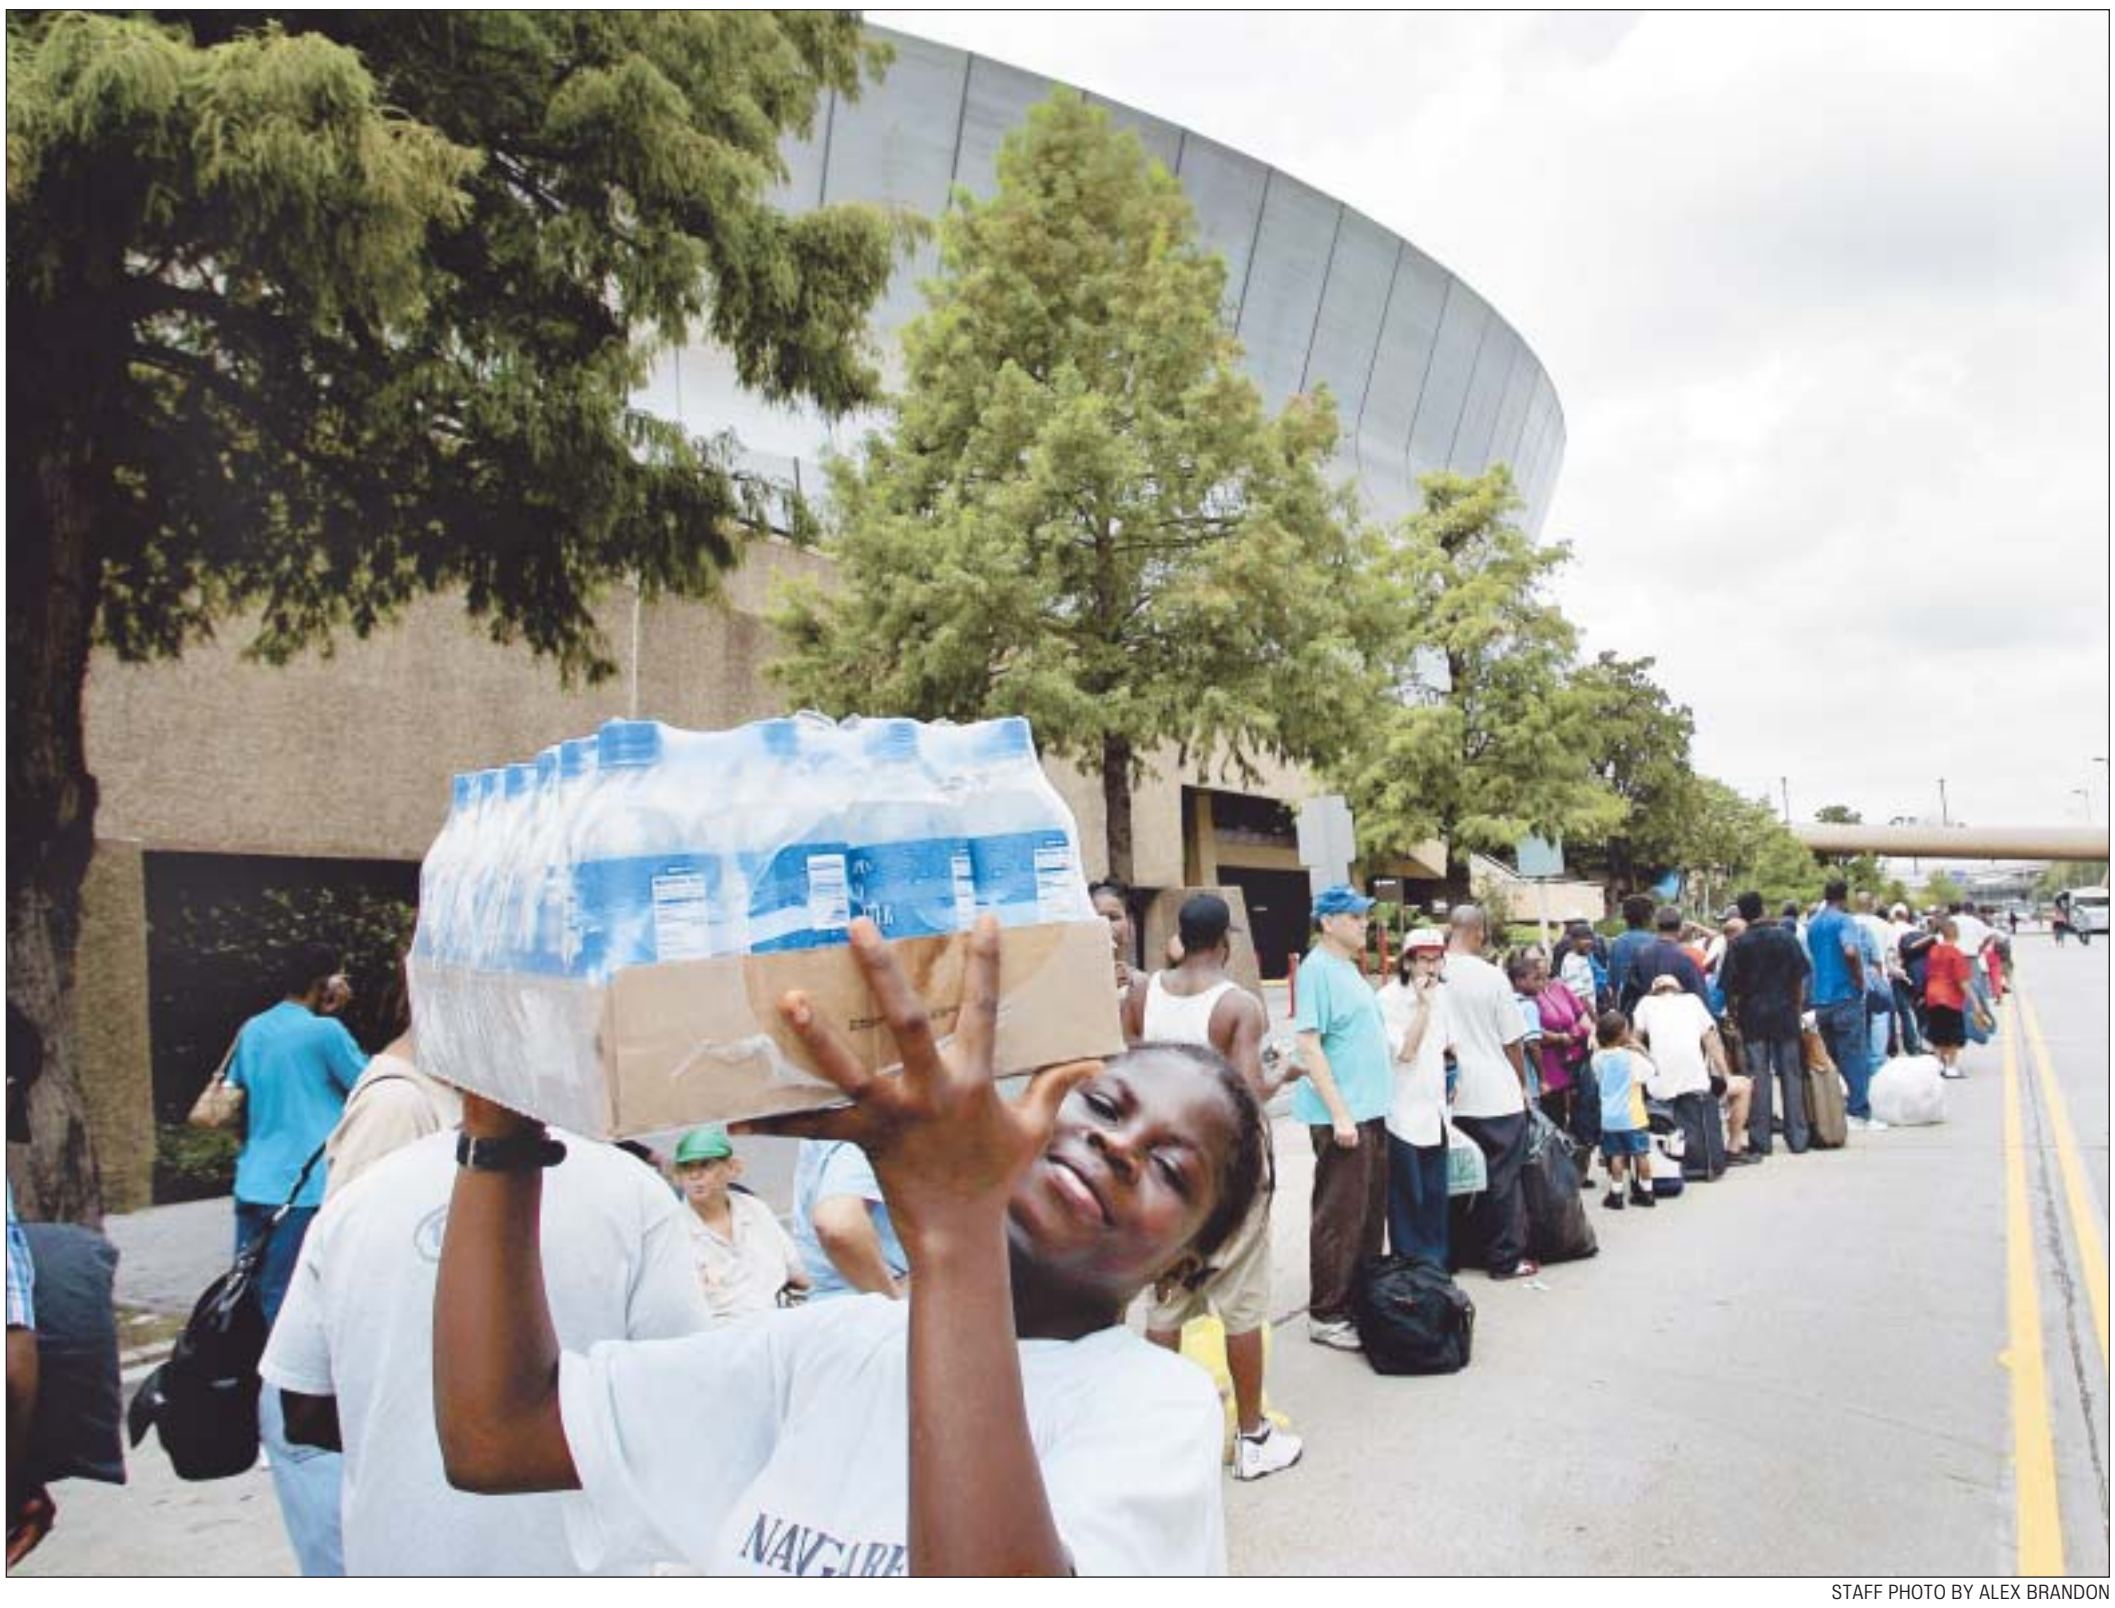
Sun, Aug 28, 2005 6:34 PM 29.a1.prehurricane CMYK

The Times-Picayune

50 CENTS 169th year No. 220 | MONDAY, AUGUST 29, 2005 | HURRICANE EDITION



HURRICANE KATRINA

GROUND ZERO

SUPERDOME BECOMES LAST RESORT FOR THOUSANDS UNABLE TO LEAVE

NEW ORLEANS BRACES FOR NIGHTMARE OF THE BIG ONE

STAFF PHOTO BY ALEX BRANDON

Gina Sannoh, 12, carries a case of water as she gets in line to take refuge at the Louisiana Superdome Sunday. Thousands of people with special medical needs or those who simply could not get out of the city came to the Dome to escape the storm, which was forecast to make a direct hit on the New Orleans area today.

At least 10,000 find refuge at the Superdome

By Gwen Filosa
Staff writer

A 2-year-old girl, clutching a bottle and ignoring her knock-off Barbie doll, running in circles around her mother. Homeless men trying to doze on the sidewalk, using backpacks as pillows. People without cars. People with cars but nowhere to go.

More than 10,000 of them.

These are the people without enough money or luck to leave town as Hurricane Katrina was poised to have its way with New Orleans.

With a mandatory evacuation hanging over the city Sunday morning, they were left with no

See DOME, A-5

STAFF PHOTO BY ELIOT KAMENITZ

On Sunday at 11:10 a.m., traffic is sparse in both directions looking toward downtown from the Broad Street overpass the day after contraflow was put into effect.

nola.com COMPLETE COVERAGE A3–5

For full text of The Times-Picayune and the latest coverage, visit nola.com

By Gordon Russell
Staff writer

As a ferocious Hurricane Katrina drew a bead on their precariously sited city and suburbs, metropolitan New Orleans residents prayed for salvation and scrambled to prepare their homes for a storm with the power to level the city and flood whole neighborhoods, struggling to get themselves, their loved ones and their neighbors to safety.

Some residents might have been predicting a close call, along the lines of last year's Hurricane Ivan, which threatened the city but then spared it serious damage. Katrina, by contrast, stubbornly hewed to the track predicted by hurricane forecasters Friday, one that aimed it straight at the Crescent City.

On Sunday at 4 p.m., National Hurricane Center Meteorologist Chris Lauer said Katrina was still on track to hit the New Orleans area as a devastating Category 5 hurricane as its eye comes ashore this morning. A computer model estimate of storm surge conducted by the Louisiana State University Hurricane Center Sunday afternoon indicates that even without

See KATRINA, A-5

INSIDE

| | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Comics | F-6 | National | A-2 | Sports | B | World | A-2 |
| Editorials | B-4 | People | A-2 | Television | F-5 | | |
| Living | F | Puzzles | F-4 | Washington | A-2 | | |

HIGH WINDS, RAIN
HIGH 86 LOW 76
Weather, B-6

29.A1.PREHURRICANE 6:34 PM CMYK

Sun, Aug 28, 2005 6:34 PM 29.a1.prehurricane

Utilities prepare for the worst

Thousands of workers, trucks assembling

By Keith Darcé
Business writer

Some parts of the New Orleans area could be without electricity and telephone service for weeks, or even months, if flooding and damage from Hurricane Katrina hamper repair crews, utility officials said Sunday afternoon.

"This is going to be really bad," said Dan Packer, chief executive officer of Entergy New Orleans, the city's electricity supplier.

Packer said the company was bracing for a level of destruction never seen in its four-state territory of Louisiana, Arkansas, Mississippi and Texas.

"I believe damage is going to be fairly extensive. It's going to cover the whole gamut, everything from transmission lines to poles snapping to wires being down," Packer said.

"We think this could be the worst storm in history to affect (Entergy's) electricity distribution system," he added.

Interruptions to power and phone services were expected later Sunday evening, as the outer edge of Katrina moved through the area and wind speeds built to tropical storm and hurricane force.

Entergy repair crews will work on damaged lines until winds in the area reach 35 miles per hour and pose a threat to the workers, Packer said. Workers will not head out again until the storm moves through the area and wind speeds fall below 35 mph, he said.

Once the storm subsides, Entergy will deploy workers to assess damage to the company's power grid before sending out repair crews, Packer said.

The assessment process could take as long as two days to complete, depending on flooding and road damage, he said.

By Sunday afternoon, Entergy and other utilities had positioned thousands of workers, hundreds of trucks, dozens of portable generators, and extra supplies of fuel in Baton Rouge, Jackson, Miss., and other locations on the edge of the metropolitan area.

Entergy had gathered about 2,000 power-line repair workers and tree trimmers, Packer said. Another 5,500 workers were expected to join Entergy during the next two days. Many of those workers, from utilities as far away as New Mexico, have been in southern Florida since late last week, helping restore power to the more than 1 million customers who lost electricity when Katrina crossed the state.

In Orleans and Jefferson parishes, Entergy and BellSouth Corp. moved repair trucks to higher ground, such as elevated roadways, to protect them from flood waters.

Though local interruptions to phone service were expected, much of the region's phone network is likely to remain in tact, BellSouth spokesman Merlin Villar said.

Even if remote phone substations lose power from electricity lines, backup generators and batteries should keep them running for as long as two days after a power failure, he said.

Even before the winds and rain arrived, wireless phone service providers struggled much of Sunday to handle the huge volume of calls on their networks, as tens of thousands of people dialed family and friends while evacuating.

Wireless customers can help minimize the strain on local networks by limiting their use to emergency calls and other high-priority uses, Cingular Wireless spokeswoman Dawn Benton said.

Sending text messages instead of making voice calls also reduces network demands, she said.

• • • • • • • •

Keith Darcé can be reached at kdarce@timespicayune.com or (504) 826-3491.

STAFF PHOTOS BY DAVID GRUNFELD

Shelly Byers, 26, of Covington hugs her son Victor at the Red Cross shelter at William Pitcher Jr. High School in Covington. The family found safety from the storm after St. Tammany Parish had called for a mandatory evacuation.

Surge likely to top N.O. levee system

KATRINA, from A-1

waves, a Category 5 storm would flood most of eastern New Orleans, the 9th Ward, Mid-City, much of downtown and areas in St. Tammany close to Lake Pontchartrain. Kenner also will see severe flooding entering from St. Charles Parish. Areas outside the levee protection system are particularly vulnerable.

Given those factors, levees in the New Orleans area likely will be topped.

Direct hit

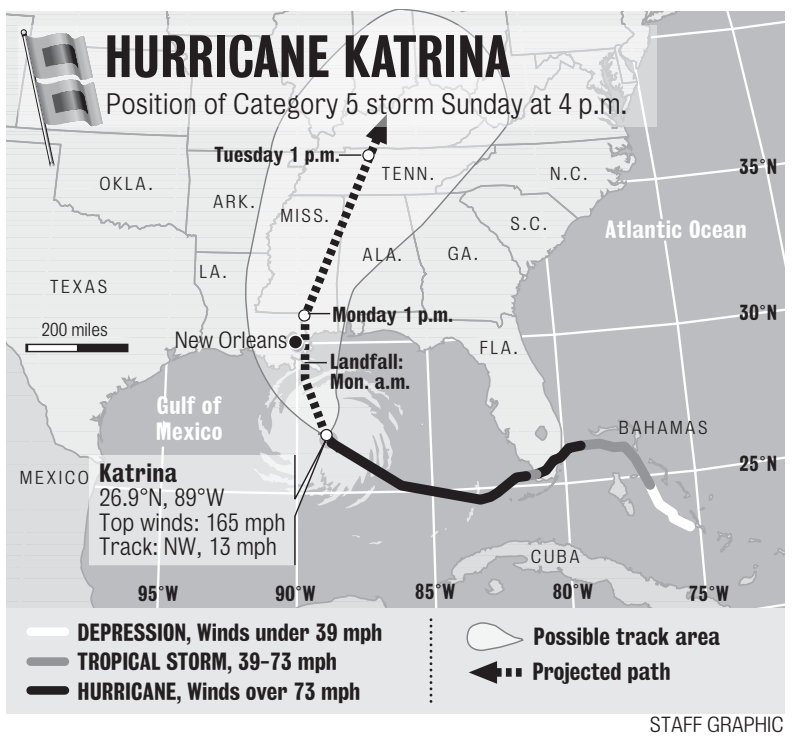
New Orleans has not been directly hit by a major hurricane since Hurricane Betsy, a Category 3 storm, in 1965. Although levees have been improved since then, Louisiana has lost hundreds of square miles of wetlands and barrier islands, making New Orleans, most of which lies below sea level, far more vulnerable to a devastating storm.

High-rise office and apartment buildings were likely to sway dangerously, "a few to the point of total collapse," the service said.

The National Weather Service also warned that "blown debris will create additional destruction. Persons, pets and livestock exposed to the winds will face certain death if struck."

It was impossible to get a clear sense of how many people decided to ride out the storm. City streets were eerily quiet in most areas as businesses shut down and residents cleared out. While neutral grounds around the city were full of parked cars by early afternoon, most streets were nearly devoid of traffic, though the occasional pedestrian or bicyclist could be seen.



In a somewhat surreal morning news conference, Mayor Ray Nagin issued an emergency order giving state and local authorities the right to commandeer private buildings and vehicles — including boats — as they see fit. The mayor did not say which buildings might be seized for public use, but said that if the Superdome became too full, additional buildings might be needed for shelter.

Nagin also said the city has 30 boats at its disposal, but could need far more, depending on the water level in the city after the storm.

After the storm

While officials were mostly concerned about preparing for the storm's impact, there already was discussion of its aftermath.

Dan Packer, CEO of Entergy New Orleans, said extra crews from other areas Entergy serves already are in the area, ready to begin repairs to what the company expects will be devastating storm damage.

STAFF GRAPHIC

The storm "may destroy the electrical distribution system in New Orleans and a good part of southeast Louisiana," he said. Packer said it may take weeks or months to rebuild the system.

Like Packer, the weather service warned of likely devastating power outages that could last for weeks, with power poles down and transformers destroyed. Most trees, the service predicted, would be snapped or uprooted; the heartiest, if they survive, would be stripped of all leaves.

The service also warned of devastation to buildings.

"At least one-half of well-constructed homes will have roof and wall failure," the service warned. "All gabled roofs will fail, leaving those homes severely damaged or destroyed."

As the city prepared to go into the bunker Sunday, airlines shut down their operations at Louis Armstrong International Airport and a Carnival cruise ship scheduled to end a one-week voyage in New Orleans was diverted to Galveston, Texas.

Officials in Orleans, St. Bernard, Plaquemines, St. Charles, St. John the Baptist and St. Tammany parishes called for mandatory evacuations of all or portions of these parishes.

Even Jefferson Parish, considered a more affluent and mobile community than New Orleans, opened three shelters of last resort Sunday afternoon at Bonnabel High School in Kenner, Stella Worley Middle School in Westwego and Truman Middle School in Marrero.

Jefferson also used public transportation to pick up residents and take them to the shelters.

"Let's hope and pray," said parish President Aaron Broussard at an afternoon news conference from the West Bank Emergency Operations Center.

Although the newly developed contraflow plan was executed much more smoothly than in last year's debut, motorists still complained of slow going.

A Dome divided

Meanwhile, tens of thousands of less fortunate Orleanians, many of whom lack access to cars, hustled to the Superdome, the "shelter of last resort" that was opened to the public by city officials Sunday at noon. Nagin, who imposed a 6 p.m. curfew, warned residents not to expect comfortable conditions inside the Dome, saying power outages could last for days.

The Dome was set up as a divided safe haven, with one side of the facility for the disabled and medically ill, where food and water and emergency personnel were plentiful, officials said. For the masses of residents, however, there was the other side, where all that was provided was a concrete stadium built for athletes and spectators.

While conditions in the Dome were far from ideal, many locals waiting in the long line that circled Poydras Street were not complaining that their city had no more to offer them.

"It's a safe haven," said Lee Andrews, 47, who accompanied his wife, Stephanie, and her sister and her sister's five children. "You can't expect to have everything."

Elsewhere around the city, for a few foolhardy souls — the number was hard to gauge, but it appeared relatively small — getting safe meant locking the doors and hoping that the vicious winds and high waters Katrina was expected to bring wouldn't prove fatal.

Among them was Dan Fuller, a74-year-old artist that lives in his studio in Mid-City. Sunday afternoon, Fuller was rolling a suitcase down Canal Street, returning from an unsuccessful stint of hitchhiking at the intersection of Interstate 10 and City Park Avenue.

"I thought I would hitchhike and just count on people's generosity, but I can't say if they were generous or not — all their cars were full," he said.

Nagin warned Sunday morning in issuing his evacuation order that seawater pushed by the storm's winds was expected to top the city's complex levee system, pouring water into the city's many low-lying areas — something that hasn't happened since Betsy. Gov. Kathleen Blanco said models predicted water could be as deep as 20 feet in places, totally inundating some neighborhoods.

Such a doomsday scenario could result in thousands of deaths, depending on factors ranging from the storm's intensity when it hits the city and the number of people who evacuated.

At Memorial Hospital, employees streamed into the facility with cats and dogs and pillow in tow, taking advantage of the stout Napoleon Avenue institution's long-standing practice of providing a hurricane refuge to its workers and their pets.

Even as the window for evacuation began to slam shut, some Orleanians were making the decision to get out.

As an RTA bus prepared to take another load of residents to the Dome, a family of nine pulled up in a faded blue Ford pickup, with Eddie Mason driving. The back was packed with children along with clothes, blankets and other essentials.

"I think we'll be there three or four days," Mason said. "But then again, I think we might be spared. I really do. I just keep thinking it can't be as bad as they been saying it's going to be."

• • • • • • • •

Staff writers Mark Schleifstein, Gwen Filosa, Coleman Warner and Brian Thevenot contributed to this report.

Field flooding, loss of power expected at Superdome

STAFF PHOTO BY TED JACKSON

The stress of evacuation takes hold as a family that had expected to join a relative closer to the front of the line at the Superdome is directed to the end of the line by a National Guardsman.

DOME, from A-1

other choice but to assemble outside the Louisiana Superdome, waiting in an unorganized line to take refuge in a sprawling building meant more for touchdowns than for emergencies.

Mayor Ray Nagin called the Superdome's opening as a shelter a "last resort." He didn't have to explain that to the hundreds of New Orleanians gathered about Poydras Street's sidewalks Sunday before noon.

In a city famed for its come-what-may attitude, the scene at the Superdome was somber, as the lines snaked inside.

"No funds," a 41-year-old woman surrounded by four children, ages 2 to 14, said when asked what brought her to the shelter. The woman didn't want to give her name as she waited with stacks of bedding and a few children's toys resting on the sidewalk.

She stood beside her modest Chevy Nova, which she drove Sunday from their Marrero home to the Dome.

"I can't have them in all this water," the mother said of her children, explaining why she didn't choose to evacuate from the coming hurricane. If only things were different, she said, she would have reserved seats on a Trailways bus, or perhaps bought plane tickets. But she wasn't placing her children in a car for hours on end, she said.

"If I hadn't had to work last night, you wouldn't be seeing me here," said Arthur Simpson, 46, an Uptown resident who left his job as a printer in Harahan on Sunday at 6:30 a.m. and headed north.

But his run washed out in Hammond, while sitting in slow traffic. Instead of making it to Jackson, Miss., or Memphis, he said, he made the biggest decision of his weekend: He turned around and sought shelter at the Dome.

By 3 p.m., more than 10,000 people were either outside the Dome in long, deep lines or had made their way inside. Those with medical illnesses or disabilities were funneled to one side of the makeshift shelter, equipped with supplies and medical personnel. The other side was a place to ride out the storm.

"The people arriving on this side of the building are expected to fend for themselves," said Terry Ebbert, the city's homeland security director. "We have some water."

About 150 National Guard soldiers, New Orleans police and civil sheriff's deputies were patrolling the facility. Some weapons were confiscated.

Officials were settling in for what they predicted would be an incredibly hot and uncomfortable night. They expected flooding on the field and loss of power early today.

But officials were confident they could care for those with special needs.

"I'm not worried about what is tolerable or intolerable," he said. "I'm worried about, whether you are alive on Tuesday."

Kenneth Roby, 41, a bearded man in a black baseball cap, also worked Saturday night, as a dishwasher at Antoine's Restaurant in the French Quarter. Roby smiled gently as he surveyed the crowd about to enter the Superdome, which was tightly guarded by young men and women in Army fatigues. A guardsman shooed away reporters and those seeking shelter until noon time.

"Everything else is closed up," Roby said, sitting on his black duffel bag that he said held dirty clothes and little else. "You can't buy anything or get around like you usually do. Everybody is panicking. I'm not. I need some food. It wouldn't make sense to shelter us" without providing water and food.

Roby, who grew up Uptown and lives in the 7th Ward, has spent time in homeless shelters before. He said the city could do more in times like Katrina. "This is the time they really need to help," he said of city leaders.

Geraldine Johnson, 67, has no car. So she and her 41-year-old daughter and three grandchildren, ages 8, 10 and 12, caught the bus from Algiers early Sunday and landed at the Dome after 11 a.m.

"This is my last resort," Johnson said, seated and surrounded by her family.

The children had their suitcases and snacks. "They may provide food," Johnson said. "But it would take so long to wait in that line. You can't depend on people to give you everything."

•••••••

Gwen Filosa can be reached at gfilosa@timespicayune.com or (504) 826-3304.

Cruise diverted out of Katrina's path

Travelers bound for N.O. stuck in Galveston

By Coleman Warner
Staff writer

STAFF PHOTO BY JENNIFER ZDON

Tourists wait for taxis on Canal Street on Sunday. Some airlines had already begun canceling flights, leaving visitors stranded in a city under evacuation.

Hurricane Katrina's approach Sunday forced Carnival Cruise Lines to divert a cruise scheduled to end in New Orleans to Galveston, Texas, while an undetermined number of travelers were stranded at Louis Armstrong International Airport as operations came to a virtual halt.

The redirected cruise left thousands of Carnival travelers scrambling to make other airline connections in Houston.

After a seven-day Caribbean trip, the New Orleans-based Carnival Conquest, carrying more than 3,000 people, was scheduled to arrive at a downtown wharf at 7 a.m., but the storm threat and the closure of the port forced the cruise ship to Galveston, arriving about 7:30 a.m., spokeswoman Jennifer ve la Cruz said.

"We're going to keep the ship docked in Galveston overnight, and people have the option of getting off today (Sunday) or getting off tomorrow," she said. "We are running buses to the Houston airport."

Carnival gave each passenger a $200 credit to help offset additional costs they might face in changing flight plans, and said anyone who booked flights through the Miami-based cruise line would not be charged fees for changes.

"In these storm situations the airlines tend to be quite flexible," ve la Cruz said.

Carnival also offered the passengers a 25 percent discount on a future cruise.

Passengers who left cars in New Orleans couldn't return immediately because they can't fly in, the spokeswoman said.

"They have to figure out what they want to do and where they're going to head to," she said.

Carnival's temporary port switch didn't jeopardize any other planned cruise by the Conquest because the ship is scheduled for maintenance work.

The ship's diversion offered a measure of good news on a bad-news day at the New Orleans airport. The missing Carnival passengers opened up at least 1,000 seats for desperate passengers whose flights were disrupted or suspended, said airport spokeswoman Michelle Duffourc.

Among airlines serving New Orleans, Delta, United, US Airways, Northwest, American, AirTran, Southwest and Continental suspended flights at various times Sunday.

When regular flights resume will depend on how much hurricane damage the airport sustains and how long it takes for airlines and a federal agency in charge of security screening to get crews in place again, Duffourc said. Flight schedules aren't expected to resume until Tuesday at the earliest, she said.

"We don't know. We've never sustained one of these this strong," Duffourc said. "We're just trying to batten down the hatches and hope for the best."

Lakefront Airport, run by the Orleans Levee Board, also closed because of the storm threat.

•••••••

Coleman Warner can be reached at cwarner@timespicayune.com or (504) 826-3311.

Tue, Aug 30, 2005 2:43 AM 30.a1.hurricanehits CMYK

KATRINA: THE STORM WE'VE ALWAYS FEARED

The Times-Picayune

50 CENTS 169th year No. 221 | TUESDAY, AUGUST 30, 2005 | HURRICANE EDITION

CATASTROPHIC

STORM SURGE SWAMPS 9TH WARD, ST. BERNARD

LAKEVIEW LEVEE BREACH THREATENS TO INUNDATE CITY

STAFF PHOTO BY ALEX BRANDON

NINTH WARD: An elderly resident is rescued from chest-high floodwaters by two New Orleans police officers.

By Bruce Nolan
Staff writer

Hurricane Katrina struck metropolitan New Orleans on Monday with a staggering blow, far surpassing Hurricane Betsy, the landmark disaster of an earlier generation. The storm flooded huge swaths of the city, as well as Slidell on the north shore of Lake Pontchartrain, in a process that appeared to be spreading even as night fell.

A powerful storm surge pushed huge waves ahead of the hurricane, flooding much of St. Bernard Parish and New Orleans' Lower 9th Ward, just as Betsy 40 years ago. But this time the flooding was more extensive, spreading upriver as well to cover parts of the Bywater, Marigny and Treme neighborhoods.

As with Betsy, people scrambled into their attics or atop their roofs, pleading for help from the few passers-by.

The powerful Category 4 storm crossed the coast near the mouth of the Pearl River shortly after daybreak with winds of 135 mph. Naval Air Station-Joint Reserve Base in Belle Chasse reported an early morning gust of 105 mph.

With the power out throughout the area and fierce winds raging throughout the day, officials barely began Monday to assess the full damage of the monstrous storm, which was expected to leave thousands homeless and many more coping with damage from the wind and water.

Meantime, 5 miles to the west, engineers worked to close a breach along the New Orleans side of the 17th Street Canal.

Huge drainage pumps ordinarily can drive millions of gallons of rainwater uphill through

See KATRINA, A-4

Flooding wipes out two communities

By Brian Thevenot and Manuel Torres
Staff writers

As Jerry Rayes piloted his boat down St. Claude Avenue, just past the Industrial Canal, the eerie screams that could barely be heard from the roadway grew louder as, one by one, faces of desperate families appeared on rooftops, on balconies and in windows, some of them waving white flags.

The scene wouldn't change for the next three hours, as Rayes and his son and nephew boated down St. Claude Avenue and deep into St. Bernard Parish, where water smothered two-story houses, people and animals. The men had to duck to miss streetlights that towered over Judge Perez Drive, the parish's main thoroughfare.

The people Rayes rescued all told the same story, already written on their stunned and shivering

See FLOOD, A-6

INSIDE

PHOTO BY A.J. SISCO

DOWNTOWN: The damage to the Hyatt Regency on Poydras Street shows that vertical evacuation is no solution to the dangers of a Category 4 hurricane. See story, A-15

After the mighty storm came the rising water

By Doug MacCash and James O'Byrne
Staff writers

A large section of the vital 17th Street Canal levee, where it connects to the brand new 'hurricane proof' Old Hammond Highway bridge, gave way late Monday morning in Bucktown after Katrina's fiercest winds were well north. The breach sent a churning sea of water from Lake Pontchartrain coursing across Lakeview and into Mid-City, Carrollton, Gentilly, City Park and neighborhoods farther south and east.

As night fell on a devastated region, the water was still rising in the city, and nobody was willing to predict when it would stop. After the destruction already apparent in the wake of Katrina, the American Red Cross was mobilizing for what regional officials were calling the largest recovery operation in the organization's history.

Police officers, firefighters and private citizens, hampered by a lack of even rudimentary communication capabilities, continued a desperate and impromptu boat-borne rescue operation across Lakeview well after dark. Coast Guard helicopters with searchlights criss-crossed the skies.

Officers working on the scene said virtually every home and business between the 17th Street Canal and the Marconi Canal, and between Robert E. Lee Boulevard and City Park Avenue, had water in it. Nobody had confirmed any fatalities as a result of the levee breach, but they conceded that hundreds of homes had not been checked.

As the sun set over a still-roiling Lake Pontchartrain, the smoldering ruins of the Southern Yacht Club were still burning, and smoke streamed out over

See BREACH, A-2

INSIDE • Residents' insurance claims sure to set record, A-14 • Looters in the city strike hard and fast, A-19 • LATEST STORM COVERAGE @ NOLA.COM

7 12393 11111 8

30.A1.HURRICANEHITS 2:43 AM CMYK

Tue, Aug 30, 2005 2:43 AM 30.a1.hurricanehits

'We lost everything: cars, art, furniture, everything'

STAFF PHOTO BY DOUG MACCASH

LAKEVIEW: Firefighters deliver residents they had rescued to the levee near the corner of Orleans and Filmore avenues.

BREACH, from A-1

the lake. Nobody knew the cause of the fire because nobody could get anywhere near it to find out what happened.

Dozens of residents evacuated to the dry land of the Filmore Street bridge over the Marconi Canal were stranded between the flooded neighborhood on their right, and the flooded City Park on their left, hours after they had been plucked from rooftops or second-story windows.

Firefighters who saved them tried to request an RTA bus to come for the refugees, but realized was no working communications to do so.

Ed Gruber, who lives in the 6300 block of Canal Boulevard, said he became desperate when the rising water chased him, his wife, Helen, and their neighbor Mildred K. Harrison to the second floor of their home. When Gruber saw a boat pass by, he flagged it down with a light, and the three of them escaped from a second-story window.

On the lakefront, pleasure boats were stacked on top of each other like cordwood in the municipal marina and yacht harbor. The Robert E. Lee shopping center was under 7 feet of water. Plantation Coffeehouse on Canal Boulevard was the same. Hynes Elementary School had 8 feet of water inside.

Indeed, the entire business district along Harrison Avenue had water to the rooflines in many places.

Joshua Bruce, 19, was watching the tide rise from his home on Pontalba Street when he heard a woman crying for help. The woman had apparently tried to wade the surging waters on Canal Boulevard when she was swept beneath the railroad trestle just south of Interstate 610. Bruce said he plunged into the water to pull her to safety. He and friends Gregory Sontag and Joey LaFrance found dry clothes for the woman and she went on her way in search of a second-story refuge downtown.

The effect of the breach was instantly devastating to residents who had survived the fiercest of Katrina's winds and storm surge intact, only to be taken by surprise by the sudden deluge. And it added a vast swath of central New Orleans to those already flooded in eastern New Orleans, the Lower 9th Ward and St. Bernard and Plaquemines parishes.

STAFF PHOTO BY JAMES O'BYRNE

LAKEVIEW: At sunset Monday, the listing old Coast Guard station was silhouetted against the smoldering remains of the Southern Yacht Club.

Beginning at midday, Lakeview residents watched in horror as the water began to rise, pushed through the levee breach by still-strong residual winds from Katrina.

They struggled to elevate furniture and eventually found themselves forced to the refuge of second floors just when most in the neighborhood thought they had been spared.

"It would have been fine," refugee Pat O'Brien said. "The eye passed over."

But his relief was short-lived.

"It's like what you see on TV and never thought would happen to us. We lost everything: cars, art, furniture, everything."

Scott Radish, his wife Kyle and neighbor Brandon Gioe stood forlornly on their Mound Street porch, where they had ridden out Katrina, only to face a second, more insidious threat.

"The hurricane was scary," Scott said. "All the tree branches fell, but the building stood. I thought I was doing good. Then I noticed my Jeep was under water."

The water had risen knee-deep during the storm, but despite the clearing skies, it had continued to rise one brick every 20 minutes, according to Kyle Scott, continuing its ascent well into the night.

"We were good until the canal busted," Sontag said. "First there was water on the street, then the sidewalk, then water in the house."

Officials of the Army Corps of Engineers have contingencies for levee breaches such as the one that happened Monday, but it will take time and effort to get the heavy equipment into place to make the repair. Breach repair is part of the corps' planning for recovery from catastrophic storms, but nobody Monday was able to say how long it would take to plug the hole, or how much water would get through it before that happened.

In Lakeview, the scene was surreal. A woman yelled to reporters from a rooftop, asking them to call her father and tell him she was OK – although fleeing to the roof of a two-story home hardly seemed to qualify.

About 5 p.m., almost as if on cue, the battery power of all the house alarms in the neighborhood seemed to reach a critical level, and they all went off, making it sound as if the area was under an air-raid warning.

Two men surviving on generator power in the Lake Terrace neighborhood near the Lake Pontchartrain levee still had a dry house, but they were watching the rising water in the yard nervously. They were planning to head out to retrieve a vast stash of beer, champagne and hard liquor they found washed onto the levee.

As night fell, the sirens of house alarms finally fell silent, and the air filled with a different, deafening and unfamiliar sound: the extraordinary din of thousands of croaking frogs.

Still wondering if he would spend the night on the Filmore Street bridge over the Marconi Canal, Gruber tried to be philosophical.

"I never thought I would see any devastation like this, and I've lived here more than 30 years," Gruber said. "But at least we have our lives. And that's something."

Staff writer Mark Schleifstein contributed to this report.

STATE FARM

is here to help.

Hurricane Katrina has caused extensive property damage, and State Farm® agents and catastrophe team members will help you recover.

If you are a State Farm policyholder, and your home, car or business sustains damage, please:

- Contact your State Farm Agent,
- Call 1-800-SF-CLAIM (1-800-732-5246), or
- Visit statefarm.com® to initiate your claim online.

LIKE A GOOD NEIGHBOR STATE FARM IS THERE.®

Providing Insurance and Financial Services

State Farm Insurance Companies • Home Offices: Bloomington, IL

STAFF PHOTO BY TED JACKSON

CHALMETTE: A woman emerges from a space chopped in the attic to await rescue.

'The largest recovery operation the Red Cross has ever attempted'

KATRINA, from A-1

the canal, as it takes water from the low-lying city into Lake Pontchartrain. But the breach turned the canal into a major threat. Lake water flowed back through the breach, hemorrhaging into Lakeview and beyond.

Across Lake Pontchartrain and closer to the site of Katrina's landfall, thousands of homes in Slidell flooded.

From the Interstate 10 overpass at Slidell's Old Spanish Trail, the only visible structure from the dense commercial intersection was a boat bobbing on the waves.

"This is Lake Pontchartrain," said St. Tammany Sheriff Deputy Kenny Kreeger.

Sections of the I-10 twin bridges linking St. Tammany and Orleans parishes over Lake Pontchartrain have been "severely damaged" in both directions, Louisiana's transportation chief said. Some are probably knocked out, he said.

There were no confirmed reports of fatalities in New Orleans, although officials, including Gov. Kathleen Blanco, said they expected to find bodies in rescue efforts today.

St. Tammany Parish President Kevin Davis said there was one storm-related fatality on I-10, although he declined to give details. Earlier, three elderly residents of a nursing home died during their evacuation to Baton Rouge on Sunday.

Meanwhile, Margaret O'Brien-Molina, a spokeswoman for the American Red Cross' southwest service area office in Houston, said national Red Cross executives earlier today described Katrina as "the largest recovery operation the Red Cross has ever attempted."

"The Red Cross response to this event is the equivalent Hurricane Andrew, Sept. 11 and more," said American Red Cross Executive Rick Scofield.

The huge storm also flooded cities along the Mississippi and Alabama coasts.

Katrina pushed Mobile Bay into the city's downtown district. A 22-foot storm surge devastated parts of Gulfport and Pascagoula, officials said.

Mayor Ray Nagin called the storm "pretty awesome."

He noted the city's strategic importance as a port and a domestic oil refiner as reasons the federal government should assist in the rebuilding. "I think this is a wake-up call for the city and country," he said.

President Bush promised swift federal relief for New Orleans and other devastated communities.

"FEMA said give us a list of your needs," said Nagin, referring to the Federal Emergency Management Agency. "And let me tell you, we're giving them a helluva list."

As night gathered over a city without lights, it appeared that at least 150 people – perhaps many more – were marooned on rooftops, sometimes with their children.

State Wildlife Secretary Dwight Landreneau said that by dawn he would have more than 200 boats in the water, about 120 more than he had on Monday. He said he also has a commitment from Texas for another 50 boats.

City officials said they might open the Ernest N. Morial Convention Center as a temporary refuge to shelter an estimated 50,000 people made homeless by the storm.

Police Chief Eddie Compass said officials were desperately trying to make conditions a little more comfortable for the more than 25,000 refugees housed in the sweltering Superdome. Saying that the Dome was filthy and smelled bad, Compass said he was going to allow people to go outside.

Travel about the city on the east bank of the Mississippi River to assess damage was limited, but certain reference points emerged:

Floodwaters blocked entry to the Lower 9th Ward along St. Claude Avenue.

"Look, look man, it's gone. It's gone," said City Council President Oliver Thomas, who grew up in the 9th Ward and teared up while discussing the devastation. "This is crazy. Nothing like this ever happened before."

Jackson Barracks near Arabi was beneath 12 feet of water. Chalmette High School and the St. Bernard Civic Center, both on St. Bernard's main commercial artery, were both under an estimated 12 feet of water.

9th WARD: Two men wait for transport after they were plucked from their flooded homes.

STAFF PHOTO BY TED JACKSON

STAFF PHOTO BY TED JACKSON

9th WARD: A family bobs with their belongings in the floodwaters of Hurricane Katrina.

Along I-10 between Treme and Gentilly, only housetops were visible in a sea of floodwater. People waiting for rescue shined lights or called out to the rare motorist on the interstate.

At 3:30 p.m., National Guard trucks started bringing dozens of people trapped in their houses to the Superdome. Many were barefoot and wrapped in sheets.

In many neighborhoods, people waded through more than water waist, sometimes carrying food. Late Monday, a party of five adults waded along Tulane Avenue between Canal and Broad Streets, towing five toddlers in a large plastic tub.

In Kenner, Williams Boulevard flooded from I-10 to a point near Lake Pontchartain. Officials said it appeared worse than a memorable flood on May 8, 1995.

The Southern Yacht Club burned to the ground.

Meanwhile, Katrina's winds split homes, collapsed buildings and uprooted trees across a vast area.

The famous oaks along St. Charles Avenue and its Uptown side streets were shattered. The avenue was made impassable by thickets of downed trees, many entangled with downed utility poles and criss-crossing power lines. Parked cars were smashed; many trees fell onto houses they once shaded.

Winds of more than 100 mph tore open a large part of the Superdome's distinctive white roof. Rain poured in, forcing officials to move some refugees, who were using the building as a refuge of last resort.

Windows blew out of high-rise hotels in downtown New Orleans. Thousands of curtains waved like tattered handkerchiefs out the empty windows of the Hyatt Regency Hotel next to the Superdome.

Charity Hospital lost windows on five floors. Nagin said doctors and nurses there were ventilating patients manually.

Glass shards and other lethal debris whipped down deserted streets. In some hotels, elderly or infirm guests were carried down flights of stairs to the safety of windowless ballrooms.

In Marrero, nurses at West Jefferson General Hospital moved sick patients from their rooms into hallways to protect them as windows shattered, said Jennifer Steel, hospital spokeswoman.

Remarkably, the French Quarter seemed largely untouched.

The neighborhood was among the last to lose power as the storm strengthened shortly after dawn. After its passage, pedestrians bought beer through walk-up windows and guests loitered on second-floor balconies.

Among the only obvious signs of damaged: a portion of a wall collapsed exposing part of the third floor interior of Antoine's Restaurant, and the U.S. Mint appeared to suffer heavy roof damage.

Jefferson Parish's Chief Administrative Assistant Tim Whitmer said the damage from Katrina was almost equally split between the east bank and the West Bank. "We have widespread devastation in the parish," he said.

Whitmer said officials were not able to assess all areas of the parish because of flooding and downed trees and power lines, which were scattered everywhere, as well as a shortage of workers, who had evacuated to escape the storm.

Based on reports officials had received, Whitmer said Westwego was particularly hard hit, with about 90 percent of the homes on the south side of the West Bank Expressway sustaining some kind of damage. Avondale also was hard hit.

Widespread flooding also was reported in Kenner in East Jefferson, particularly north of the interstate. Power remained out and water pressure was lost, but not because pumping stations were not working, he said.

"We had trees that came down and pulled up our (water) distribution lines, which caused breaks and we lost pressure," he said.

By nightfall, the storm left behind a cluster of soaked, blacked-out coastal communities. Power failed. Telephone service was spotty or nonexistent.

Jefferson Parish authorities told residents to boil their drinking water.

Sporadic looting broke out in some locations in New Orleans.

Katrina cut power service to an estimated 770,000 people, including 700,000 who form Entergy's entire customer base, said utility spokeswoman Amy Stallings.

Stallings warned 700,000 electrical customers to be prepared to go without power for a month or more.

The storm damaged every element of the power grid, from big generating plants to transmission lines to smaller feeder lines connecting to homes and businesses, she said.

She called the damage the worst ever seen in Entergy's four-state territory.

Terry Ebbert, director of homeland security for New Orleans, said it could be two months – twice Entergy's estimate – before electricity is restored to all of the city.

He said Entergy will send 4,500 workers to the region and house them on barges on the Mississippi River.

Katrina struck a nearly empty city. Given the gift of a full weekend to evacuate, hundreds of thousands fled as far as Dallas, Little Rock and Memphis.

Officials urged them to stay away until further notice.

Blanco said people who attempt to return to the city will be stopped.

"You will be turned back. Only official emergency personnel will be allowed in," Blanco said at an early afternoon news conference at the state Office of Emergency Preparedness.

State Adj. Gen. Bennett Landreneau said that it is too early to say when people will be allowed to return to the city. He said civil authorities haven't even begun to make initial assessments of the damage.

O'Brien-Molina, the Red Cross spokeswoman, said state officials shut off interstate highways re-entering Louisiana to keep people from returning to flooded areas.

"I-10 is completely closed down," she said. "No one can go back in and we have to find a place for them to stay."

Officials are telling the public to expect no one will be allowed to go home for at least two days, O'Brien-Molina said.

STAFF PHOTO BY DOUG MACCASH AND JAMES O'BYRNE

LAKEVIEW: Firefighters lift I.C. Redd Satterlee from a rescue boat.

"Then, next thing you know, it's just gushing, gushing, gushing ..."

JOAN HANSON
St. Bernard Parish resident

STAFF PHOTO BY TED JACKSON

9th WARD: A car sinks, or floats, in the floodwaters. Insurance industry officials said they have teams of more than 1,000 insurance adjusters ready to handle claims in Louisiana, as soon as conditions improve.

STAFF PHOTO BY DOUG MacCASH AND JAMES O'BYRNE

LAKEVIEW: A cooler and toys are among the debris floating on floodwater near the intersection of Fillmore and Orleans avenues.

Hundreds believed to be trapped in their attics

FLOODING, from A-1

faces: The water, it just came up so fast. Waist-deep in five minutes and neck-deep in 10.

"I was talking to my mother on the phone at 8 in the morning, telling her everything was fine," said Joan Hanson, 52, minutes after Rayes pulled her from a boat sitting at rooftop-level at a relative's house, where she and her son had to swim to survive. "Then, next thing you know, it's just gushing, gushing, gushing, and we can't open the door, and then the water was up to my neck."

As Rayes surveyed the area hardest hit by one of the most destructive hurricanes in the nation's history, he could only guess what rescuers would find when the water receded. The devastation of property appeared total, all the way from the Industrial Canel to well past Paris Road in Chalmette. The storm surge appeared to have wiped out the entire parish, given that most areas east of Chalmette are lower and closer to the Gulf of Mexico.

The cause of the flooding remained unclear, and city officials could not immediately be reached. But American Red Cross officials said water from the Mississippi River-Gulf Outlet, or MR-GO, topped the levees.

As he passed second-story windows that had been boarded up before the storm, Rayes wondered aloud if the boards had served to trap people inside rather than keep the storm out.

"There are going to be tons of dead people," Rayes said as he passed through the 9th Ward, where officials estimated that hundreds of people remained trapped late Monday. "They're going to start finding them in their attics tomorrow. I would have never thought of anything like this. This is the worst thing I've ever seen in my life."

Other areas were nearly as hard hit. The storm surge approached the rooflines of homes across Treme and Gentilly Ridge. Eastern New Orleans also endured heavy flooding, though the extent was not immediately clear.

In the Bywater neighborhood, more than 90 percent of homes flooded and waters rose above 4 feet, particularly north of St. Claude Avenue, the main thoroughfare. Only a small area between the Mississippi River levee and Burgundy Street was spared the flooding.

Dozens of residents sought refuge at Bywater Hospital, said a New Orleans police officer who, along with National Guard personnel, were trying to siphon gasoline from a nearby vehicle for the hospital's generators, which ran respirators and other medical equipment for critically ill and elderly patients.

"We're getting gas so they can keep on ticking, you know," said the officer, who did not give his name.

Many stores along St. Claude were flooded, their windows shattered. Signs littered the road, and power and telephone lines fell or dangled. At a neighborhood grocery store near the intersection of St. Claude and Elysian Fields avenues, a man could be seen through the store's front windows sleeping on top of the counter.

Rayes, who rode out the storm uneventfully in the La Quinta Inn on Camp Street, started his day by putting his boat in the high water along Elysian Fields Avenue. "We were the first boat out; the police wouldn't even go out," said the 48-year-old locksmith. "We went down Elysian Fields and picked up about 50 people on their roofs."

Then he brought his boat to the Industrial Canal, where a small SWAT team had put two boats in the water, not nearly enough to retrieve what some estimated as hundreds of stranded people in the neighborhood.

Rayes had a mission: to pick up a friend on top of a roof in Chalmette. He passed 20 or 30 screaming people in the 9th Ward along the way.

A woman screamed as Rayes boated by: "Hey! Damn! Hey!"

"You can't save everybody," he said, as he passed street signs barely visible above the water along with scores of felled trees and downed power lines. "That's all we heard for hours this morning."

As he motored toward St. Claude Avenue, which looked like a bayou rather than a thoroughfare, his boat passed Fats Domino's pink-and-yellow-trimmed house on Caffin Avenue. About a half a dozen men screamed from the balcony, flailing their hands for help. He passed them by.

"What am I going to do? I got to go to the parish," he said. "There's way too many people out there and to few boats."

A boat pulled alongside Rayes, driven by Wayne Landry, also of St. Bernard Parish and also on a private rescue mission. "I just dropped some off at the sugar mill, and I'm going to get more," he yelled from his boat. "The guy cut himself out with an ax. It's sad."

Some people used cruder methods. Hanson's 20-year-old son, Chris, had cuts all over his shaking hands when Rayes picked him up, from breaking the window so he and his mother could swim to safety. On their way to climb into a nearby relative's boat, they swam during the peak of the hurricane, dodging felled branches and pieces of their destroyed fence.

In the Lower 9th Ward, Felton Bercy and his wife, Marie, stood in the darkness of their attic for hours only to have the water rise to their one-story ceiling in less than an hour – then threaten to take over the attic. Bercy had no ax, only an 18-inch hunting knife. It took him an hour and a half to claw through his roof.

"I had to have some daylight," Bercy said hours later, shivering after rescuers carried him and his wife to safety.

Back at the Industrial Canal, where St. Claude Avenue served as a boat launch, SWAT teams offloaded several boatloads of people with similar woeful tales: They hadn't had money to leave; they had no car; they didn't think it could possibly be as bad as they said on TV. Others said they had been abandoned by friends or family members.

"It's not like we disregarded the warning," Darlene Wilson said. "We had people we depended on, and they abandoned us. I can't believe they left us behind. The neighbors tried to help us out. We went to the attic. I thought I was going to die with my kids."

Timothy Jones emerged from the water after a long stay at St. Paul's Church of God in Christ. He helped carry a beaten and soaked elderly couple from the boat, their feet dragging, their bodies limp.

Sitting in the bed of a National Guard truck, peeking over the rails, Jones' wife Isabella Vinnett was thankful her many prayers that day were answered, but also angry at a relative.

"I was abandoned by my family," she said, resisting her husband's attempts to quiet her. "I got hold of my auntie, but she still abandoned me."

Another family the police boats pulled from the water emerged without its matriarch. Allison Berryhill, 30, said she had been talking to her mother on the phone right before a tree fell on their house and the water started rising fast.

"She said water was above their house and getting into their attic," Berryhill said. "I wasn't able to reach her after that."

Rayes had gone to St. Bernard to pick up a friend, but discovered he had already found another boat out by the time Rayes arrived. But he would come back with a full boat anyway, picking up several stranded strangers.

Some waved him on, saying others needed his help more.

"You all right?" asked Ian Reyes, 20, to one man in a yellow two-story house nearly filled with water. "Yeah," the man said. "I'm just here with the dogs. The family's out."

A while later, the men passed a brick two-story house. A man waved a white flag on a stick out the window. "I got my old lady here and a chow, that all right?" asked James Waringen, 48.

Rayes had been trying to avoid pets to make room for people, but he allowed it. After all, he's got a dog, too.

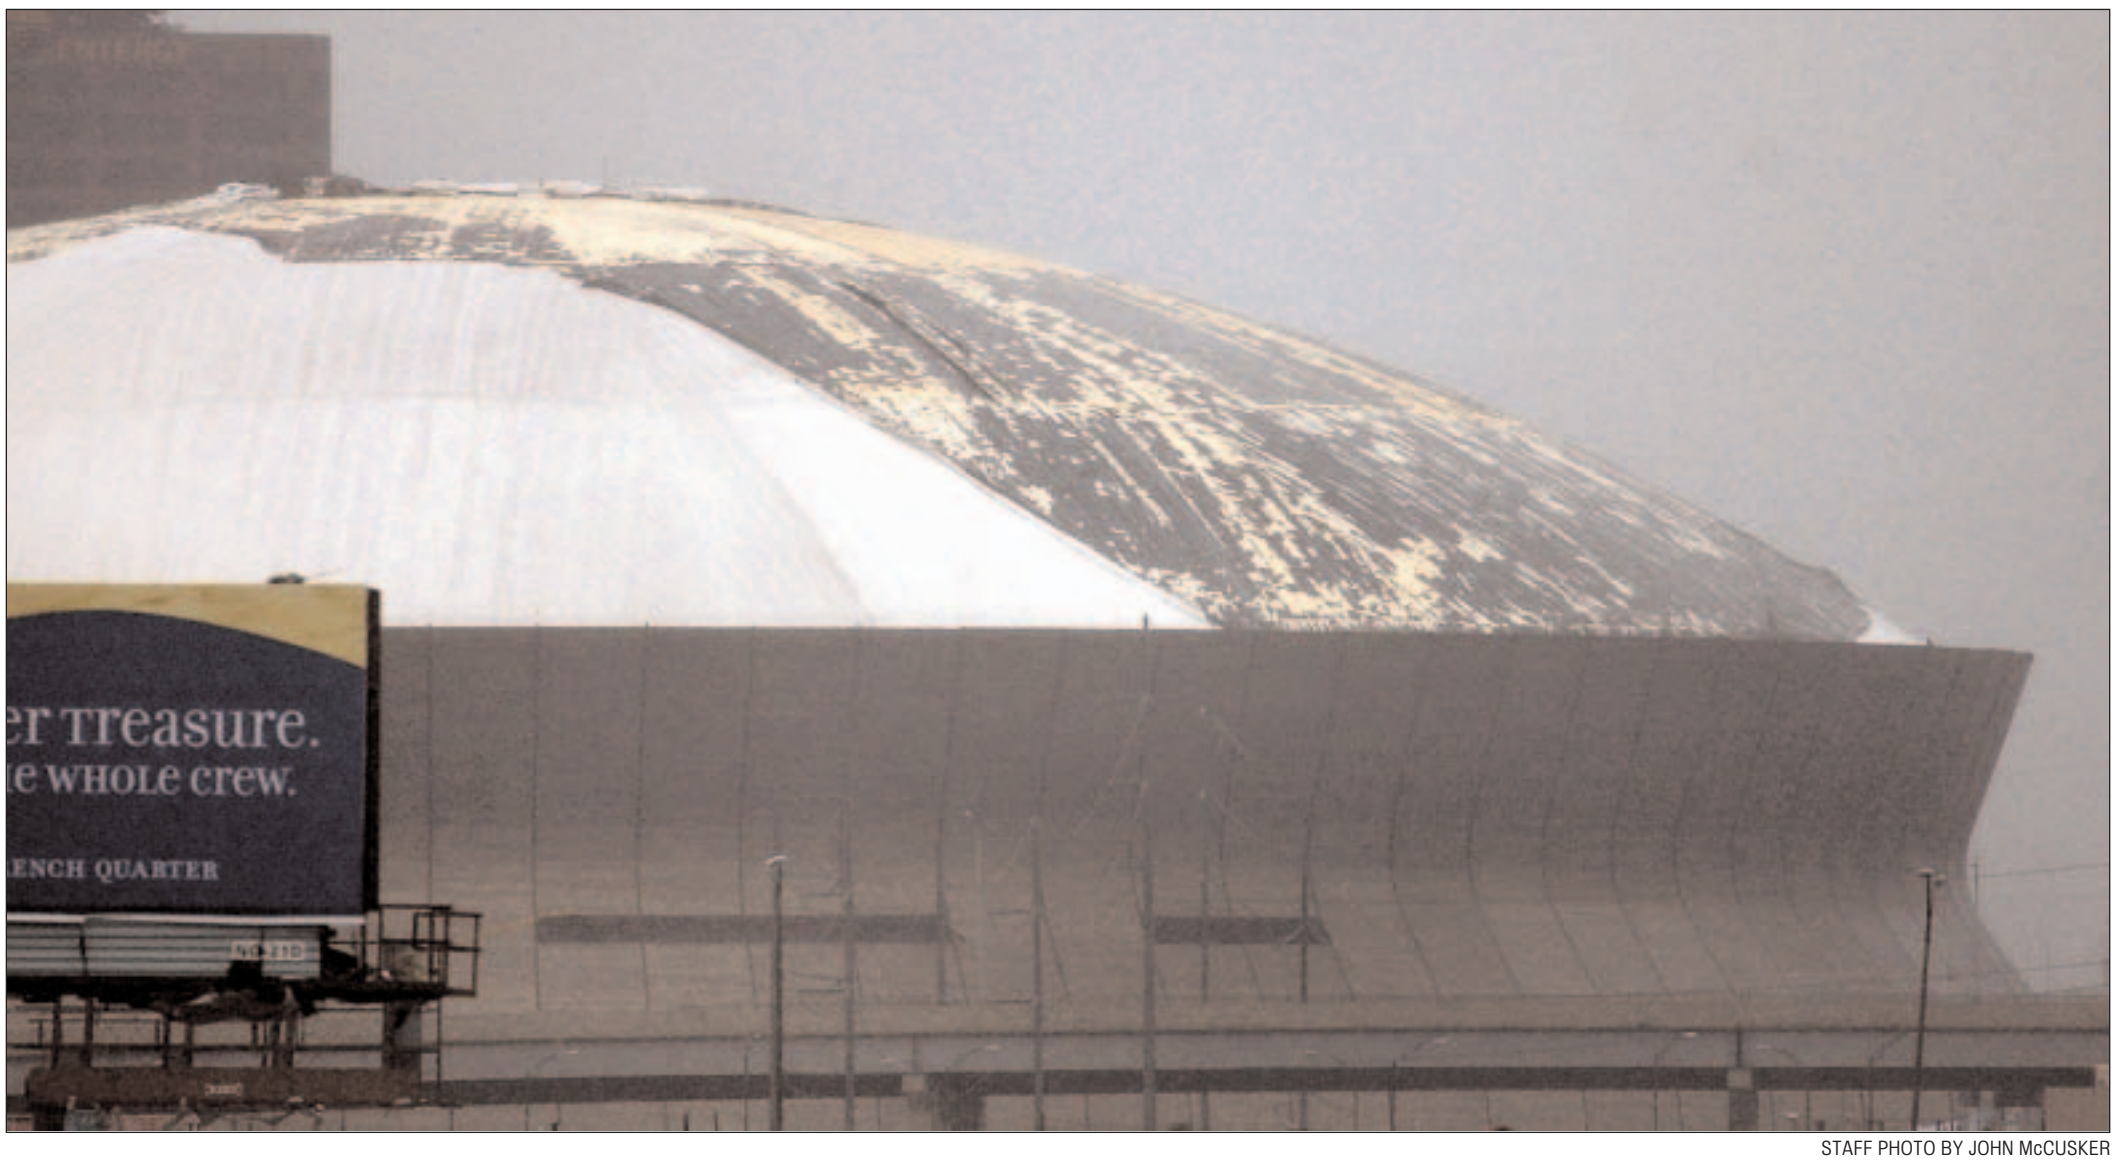
Inside the second-story apartment, Waringen's companion, Ann Griffin, starting shoving her cats into a duffel bag, as if to hide them. "Get your little whiskers in there," she said, zipping up the bag. She didn't tell Rayes what was in the bag as she loaded it onto the boat.

Asked why she hadn't evacuated, Griffin said, "I wasn't going to leave my babies," motioning to the squirming duffel bag. "Plus, I'm just more comfortable staying at home than going somewhere where I don't know anybody."

Even as she was surrounded by submerged buildings along Judge Perez Drive, Griffin predicted that, ultimately, little would change in the parish because of the storm.

"Same thing that happened after Betsy: nothing," she said. "We'll just rebuild. But I'll tell you what we're going to do. We're going to buy a new car because his car doesn't run. Hopefully, we won't be in Louisiana."

Then she reconsidered.



"But everybody always comes back. I had three brothers and a sister get out, and they all came back."

Rayes dropped off Griffin, along with several other passengers, at the Regions Bank building, where an ad hoc shelter operated out of a broken mirrored window.

At first, the shelter turned her away because of her pets, but Rayes plied the men at the window with food and drinks, of which they had little.

They willingly took the Chow. They unknowingly took the bag full of cats, which Griffin handed up gingerly to the window. "Be careful," she said.

CBD landmarks in tatters; Poydras littered with debris

STAFF PHOTO BY JOHN McCUSKER

DOWNTOWN: The Superdome looks skinned Monday after Hurricane Katrina ripped part of the roof off.

Bank left open to the elements; Hyatt shredded

By Greg Thomas
Business writer

Hurricane Katrina ravaged the Central Business District on Monday and left its main artery, Poydras Street, looking little better than a war zone.

Windows were shattered, facades were destroyed, and a portion of the roof on the LL&E building, 909 Poydras, was ripped off. Metal, insulation and shards of glass littered the street.

Perhaps the most striking damage was at the former Amoco building, 1340 Poydras, where ground-floor glass windows and entrances were shattered, leaving the Chase Manhattan Bank branch open to the elements. Windows on nearly every floor of the 21-story building were missing.

The glass ground-floor entrance and retail locations in the 1555 and 1515 Poydras office towers also were shattered and exposed.

At the Hyatt Regency New Orleans Hotel, the curved façade on Poydras was destroyed, and hundreds of windows in the 1,200-room, 48-story hotel were blown out.

And at the Louisiana Superdome, with its iconic curved roof, nearly half of the building's exterior white coating was stripped away.

The Dominion Tower, Entergy Corp. building and Energy building also all suffered exterior damage and had numerous windows blown out.

•••••••

Greg Thomas can be reached at (504) 826-3399 or at gthomas@timespicayune.com.

Mangled twin spans need repair

Residents face weeks of wait

By Ed Anderson and Robert Travis Scott
Capital bureau

Sections of the Interstate 10 twin bridges linking St. Tammany and Orleans parishes over Lake Pontchartrain have been "severely damaged" in both directions, some probably knocked out, Louisiana's highway chief said.

"It is just like in Florida," Johnny Bradberry, secretary of transportation and development, said, referring to damage caused by Hurricane Ivan last year to the I-10 bridge across Escambia Bay in the Florida Panhandle.

Bradberry said he will send crews to fly over the site today to assess damages.

Federal Emergency Management Agency Director Mike Brown called Hurricane Katrina one of the worst disasters he has seen, exceeded only by California wildfires.

"This is a catastrophic storm," he said. "People will not get back to their homes for several weeks – if not longer."

Lt. Kevin Cowan, a spokesman for the Office of Homeland Security and Emergency Preparedness, said the only confirmed deaths have been three New Orleans area nursing home residents who died while being transported to or after arriving at shelters in Baton Rouge.

Cowan said communication with St. Tammany Parish has been spotty and little is known of the number of persons rescued from that area.

He said said at least 31,000 evacuees were still hunkered down in shelters in south Louisiana, and 917,000 households were without power in 23 south Louisiana parishes.

STAFF PHOTOS BY SCOTT THRELKELD

SLIDELL: In the Old Spanish Trail subdivision, Bob Smith, left, and Keith James went from house to house rescuing people who had fled to their attics. The Superdome looks skinned Monday after Hurricane Katrina ripped part of the roof off.

SLIDELL: Cars sit flooded at Academy Sports after Hurricane Katrina blew through Monday.

SLIDELL: Floodwaters rose as high as six feet near Old Spanish Trail, where this flooded and wind-damaged Shell station was photographed Monday.

THE ALLSTATE CATASTROPHE TEAM IS HERE TO HELP

To report a storm-related claim, call:

1-800-54-STORM

If your insured property or auto was damaged by the recent hurricane, the Allstate Catastrophe team is here and ready to help with your claim. Call 1-800-54-STORM, contact your Allstate Agent or file your claim online at allstate.com. In your time of need, you deserve personal help and attention.

Allstate®

You're in good hands.

Allstate Insurance Company, Allstate Indemnity Company, and Allstate Property and Casualty Insurance Company: Northbrook, IL. ©2005 Allstate Insurance Company

Tue, Aug 30, 2005 2:14 AM 30.a12,a13

Katrina's wind and rains hit Mississippi coast just as hard

At least 3 dead as many must escape to rooftops

By Holbrook Mohr
Associated Press writer

GULFPORT, MISS. - Rescuers on the Mississippi Gulf Coast pulled residents from rooftops Monday as a storm surge swirled around buildings, and Gov. Haley Barbour said Hurricane Katrina left death and terrible destruction on the coast and inland.

Three deaths were confirmed Monday in central Mississippi as the storm pushed northward with blinding rain and winds topping 100 mph, said Robert Latham, director of the Mississippi Emergency Management Agency.

Several roads and highways in south Mississippi were engulfed by water, and trees snapped as far north as Jackson. More than half of Entergy Mississippi's 410,000 customers lost power in the wake of the storm and boil water notices were issued in several counties.

By Monday evening, the storm had been downgraded to a tropical storm as it passed through eastern Mississippi, moving north at 21 mph with wind still dangerous at 65 mph.

MEMA officials recorded deaths in Hinds, Warren, and Leake counties more than 150 miles inland, although details of those deaths remained sketchy Monday afternoon.

"The state today has suffered a grievous blow," Barbour said in Jackson. "We know some people got trapped and we pray they are OK."

Emergency officials on the Gulf Coast said rescue teams braved strong winds and high water to reach people stranded on roofs and in attics _ people who apparently ignored repeated orders to evacuate on Sunday.

Barbour said officials know there has been tremendous damage in the state, although it wasn't immediately possible to quantify either property damage or casualties.

"The most immediate priority for us is going to be search and rescue, in the same way that up until this morning our main priority was trying to get people out of harm's way and get them to evacuate," he said.

In Gulfport's Forest Heights subdivision, which is several miles from the beach but south of Interstate 10, young children clung to one another in a small blue boat Monday evening as neighbors shuffled children and elderly residents out of the neighborhood, which was flooded with at least four to six feet of water.

People gently helped a 64-year-old woman with an oxygen tank get into a boat to leave.

"Everything is flooded. Roofs are off and everything," said Shun Howell, 25, who was trying to leave with her 5-year-old son.

She said cars in the neighborhood were flooded or flipped over.

"We're going to need some serious help to start over," Howell said. "Everything is ruined."

Barbour said people who evacuated from south Mississippi and Louisiana should not travel home until officials give the all-clear _ possibly in several days. He also strongly warned against looting in storm-ravaged areas.

"To me looting is about the equivalent of grave-robbing," Barbour said. "We're not going to stand for it."

Katrina signaled its advance on Hancock, Harrison and Jackson counties with stinging squalls, destructive winds and a rash of tornadoes. Then came the storm surge, a wall of water estimated at more than 20 feet that spread out around homes and businesses. Storm winds ripped at roofs, shattered windows and sent debris and overturned trees onto streets.

In some cases, debris was stacked 4 to 5 feet, covering cars. Houses were washed from their foundations.

Tim Cross, 48, of Gulfport said a door and other debris floated up and lodged on his front porch.

"We got scared when the water came up," Cross said. "It came up quick. I mean real quick. It came onto the porch and then into the house."

Interstate 10 was closed because of flooding from the Biloxi River, officials said.

Emergency officials said it would take hours for the high water to recede into the Mississippi Sound to allow search teams into hardest-hit areas for rescues and, if necessary, to recover bodies.

Katrina's winds slowed but still packed a damaging punch as the storm moved through south Mississippi. In the Hattiesburg area, winds about 95 mph were reported at mid-afternoon. In advance of its arrival in central Mississippi, the storm toppled trees and sent branches from mighty oaks at the Governor's Mansion sailing onto downtown Jackson streets.

Meridian, located along the Alabama border in east-central Mississippi, also took a pounding. The storm was expected to dump more torrential rain as it plowed northward Monday night.

The storm surge, the most severe since Hurricane Camille devastated Mississippi's coast in 1969, rolled over beaches and coastal U.S. 90, then into dwellings. In Harrison County, boats were propelled from the Mississippi Sound onto the beachside U.S. 90 and into nearby structures.

"Let me tell you something, folks. I've been out there. It's complete devastation," Gulfport Fire Chief Pat Sullivan said Monday afternoon. "I'm going to go out on a limb here: 75 percent of the buildings in Gulfport have major roof damage if they have a roof left at all."

Similar damage was reported

See COAST, A-13

STAFF PHOTO BY MICHAEL DEMOCKER

GULFPORT, MISS.: Debris, including a boat, made eastbound I-10 east of Gulfport impassable Monday afternoon.

STAFF PHOTO BY MICHAEL DEMOCKER

GULFPORT, MISS.: A pickup truck is submerged in front of a business destroyed by Hurricane Katrina on Monday afternoon.

STAFF PHOTO BY MICHAEL DEMOCKER

GULFPORT, MISS.: Hurricane Katrina utterly gutted First Baptist Church in Gulfport.

Tue, Aug 30, 2005 2:14 AM 30.a12,a13

It's a different story now for coastal restoration effort

President's tour would show wetlands needs

By Mark Schleifstein
Staff writer

It could be the biggest irony of the Hurricane Katrina experience.

Late last week, Gov. Kathleen Blanco's staff received a note from President George W. Bush's schedulers responding to Blanco's request that she be allowed to accompany him on an aerial tour of Louisiana's fragile coastal wetlands.

White House officials sent a letter at the end of the week saying the president wasn't going to be able to make the trip at this time, said Sidney Coffee, coastal activities adviser to Blanco.

On Sunday, Louisiana Sens. Mary Landrieu and David Vitter sent another invitation, this time urging Bush to tour Katrina's devastation.

Such a tour would take Bush over the controversial Mississippi River-Gulf Outlet, which St. Bernard Parish President Henry J. "Junior" Rodriguez has for years said would funnel storm surge water over levees into Chalmette, eastern New Orleans and the Ninth Ward.

One version of the restoration plan calls for a one-year study by the Army Corps of Engineers leading to a decision on whether to build a lock or other structure to block surge, to just allow it to fill over time or to continue to allow it to be used as a ship channel.

The aerial tour also would require flights over threatened wetlands in St. Charles Parish, where storm surge waters pushed all the way south to the Mississippi River.

And it would require an aerial view of what remains of the bridal-lace pattern of wetlands on the West Bank surrounding Barataria Bay, which once provided at least some protection from hurricane and tropical storm surge events.

"After this many letters, let's hope he actually comes, now that we've had a major hurricane," Coffee said.

Coffee said she also hopes Katrina's object lesson isn't lost on members of Congress who have been hesitant to support the $1.2 billion Louisiana Coastal Area Ecosystem Restoration plan included in the pending Water Resources Development Act.

"If this doesn't paint the picture of the value of restoring our coastal wetlands, then I'm not sure they're reachable," Coffee said.

STAFF PHOTO BY TED JACKSON

NEAR TREME: Much of the flooding in New Orleans can be blamed on a lack of barrier islands and swamps near the coast of Louisiana, which would tone down the storm.

Coffee and wetland scientists will be making their own aerial tour of the coastal devastation caused by Katrina later this week, looking for shredded areas of marsh and whether wind and surge may have damaged existing federal, state and local restoration projects.

U.S. Geological Survey biologist Tommy Michot also will be in the air to check on how much of the Chandeleur and Breton island chains survived Katrina's destructive power.

The Chandeleur chain to the east of New Orleans and St. Bernard Parish has been a frequent target of tropical storms and hurricanes, Michot said.

In 1998, Hurricane Georges, with only 110 mph winds, chopped the narrow sand crescent into a thousand slices that slowly healed until 2002, when the one-two punch of Tropical Storm Isidore and Hurricane Lili again diced the spit.

Last year, Hurricane Ivan again pushed much of the sand on the crescent inland towards the Louisiana coast.

The Breton islands also were cut asunder by those hurricanes, resulting in a loss of habitat for a variety of nesting birds, including pelicans, terns and skimmers.

Katrina also poses a threat to sea grasses that grow adjacent to barrier islands and provide habitat for fisheries, Michot said.

Tom McKenzie, a spokesman for the U.S. Fish & Wildlife Service, which administers the two island chains and several other refuges in southeastern Louisiana, said it's too soon to know what effects Katrina had on the refuges.

"It's a little preliminary for us for damage estimates," he said. "We usually wait until after the disaster has hit, and we have a number of facilities in that neck of the woods that are in the impact area.

Meanwhile, Louisiana State University biologist Gene Turner said not all Katrina's effects on wetlands can be considered bad.

"Most of the inorganic material supplied to coastal wetlands is not deposited by rivers' overland flow," such as in spring flooding, Turner said. "One way for sediment to raise the height of a marsh is to come in during a storm. It turns out most of the sediment supply comes from the very largest storm, not over-bank flooding or biannual floods."

Gulf rig damage worries energy traders

Oil companies will assess situation today

By Michael J. Montalbano and Kimberly Quillen
Staff writers

Hurricane Katrina tore through the Gulf of Mexico's oil patch early Monday, threatening the nation's energy supply and raising the possibility that gasoline prices -- already at record highs -- will climb further.

The storm will probably do little to calm anxiety among consumers and energy traders about high oil and gas prices. "We already are seeing the effect, and in this case, it's fear," said Mindy West of Murphy Oil.

The extent of the damage sustained by oil rigs in the Gulf and refineries throughout the region was unclear Monday, but oil companies were vowing to assess the situation today and return to normal operations as soon as possible.

"It's important for us to get back to business as much as usual. It's important to the country," said Tony Lentini, vice president of public and international affairs for Apache Corp.

"The real interesting thing will be what sort of structural damage was done to refineries," said Fred Schuster, manager of the commodities trading desk at DRW Investments LLC in Chicago. "That's the rub. We can't just use oil, we have to refine it."

Fifty percent of the U.S. refining capacity is located along the Gulf of Mexico, and a number of refineries – including Chevron's oil refinery in Pascagoula, Miss., and Exxon Mobil's Chalmette refinery – shut down as the storm approached. Refiners said late Monday that initial reports showed minimal damage.

Many of the oil rigs operating in the Gulf were also evacuated in advance of the storm. According to the Minerals Management Service, the federal agency that oversees drilling activity in the Gulf, 92 percent of the region's oil output – and 83 percent of its natural gas – was shut down Monday.

Lentini said Apache shut down 336 of its 386 structures in the Gulf of Mexico in advance of the storm and will reopen the units as soon as it is safe to do so.

"We have to balance safety and production in the Gulf," Lentini said. "We have no timetable, but it is important for us to get back online."

West, of Murphy Oil, echoed Lentini's sentiments.

"We will be assessing our situation Tuesday," she said. "I honestly don't know if there was any structural integrity compromised with any of our platforms in the Gulf."

Schuster said there is also a possibility that underwater pipelines were damaged in the storm, just as they were when Hurricane Ivan ripped through the Gulf last year.

"It's these pipelines that connect the (oil) rigs to land," Schuster said.

It could take weeks to determine the extent of pipeline damage. "It really seems like we just won't know for a while," Schuster said.

But at least one analyst said damage in the Gulf may not be extreme. "It's a lot less than we originally thought," said Fadel Gheit, senior energy analyst with Oppenheimer & Co. in New York. "All in all it turned out to be a lot bigger noise than actual damage. This could be a pleasant surprise."

The Gulf of Mexico region is responsible for 35 percent of the nation's production of oil and gas.

The price of light sweet crude jumped to $70.80 a barrel early Monday before retreating to close at $67.25 a barrel, up $1.12 from its close on Friday.

Michael J. Montalbano can be reached (504) 826-3405 or at mmontalbano@timespicayune.com. Kimberly Quillen can be reached at (504) 826-3416 or at elsewhere.

STAFF PHOTO BY MICHAEL DEMOCKER

GULFPORT, MISS.: Downtown Gulfport just north of U.S. 90 after being struck by Hurricane Katrina on Monday.

COAST, from A-12

Casinos, a major economic contributor to the state's tax base, were closed and secured before the storm. However, Barbour said he understood there could have been flooding up to the second floor of some gambling houses.

Sullivan said Beau Rivage, a casino and hotel in Biloxi, had been flooded up the third floor. Visual checks of the casinos from nearby U.S. 90 were impossible because of water and debris on the highway.

During the briefing in Gulfport, Harrison County coroner Gary Hargrove was asked what rescuers in flood areas should to if they come across bodies.

"If they're dead, they're dead," Hargrove said. "We've got the living to take care of."

Wind collapsed walls at Harrison Central High School, which was closed. Even emergency officials had problems: A foot of water spilled into the Hancock County emergency management offices.

IMPORTANT NOTICE TO
ST. PAUL TRAVELERS CUSTOMERS

WE'RE HERE TO HELP.

If you have suffered a loss, please call us as soon as your family and property are safe from further harm.

Our claim services representatives are standing by 24 hours a day, 7 days a week to take your claim.

For Travelers Home & Auto claims, please call
800.CLAIM33
(800.252.4633)

For Travelers Flood claims, please call
800.356.6663

For St. Paul Travelers and Travelers Business claims, please call 800.238.6225

For St. Paul Business claims, please call
800.STPAUL1
(800.787.2851)

We're here for you when you need us most.

TRAVELERS
travelers.com
The Travelers Indemnity Company
and its property casualty affiliates
One Tower Square, Hartford, CT 06183

ST PAUL TRAVELERS
stpaultravelers.com
St. Paul Fire and Marine Insurance Company
and its property casualty affiliates
385 Washington St., Saint Paul, MN 55102

No power for a month is possible, Packer says

Lines, plants suffer extensive damage

STAFF PHOTO BY KATHY ANDERSON

CARROLLTON: The numbers of downed power lines and poles pose a sustantial challenge to the thousands of workers who will repair them over the next weeks.

By Keith Darcé
Business writer

Most of metropolitan New Orleans could be without electricity for at least a month because of catastrophic damage to the region's electricity system from Hurricane Katrina, Entergy New Orleans Chief Executive Officer Dan Packer said Monday afternoon.

The storm's powerful winds appear to have caused severe damage to all elements of the power grid, including power lines and the plants that generate electricity.

"This is the worst we've ever seen," Packer said.

With every utility customer in the dark by the peak of the storm – about midmorning Monday - Katrina produced the largest power outage ever in Louisiana and the most devastating blackout to hit Entergy's four-state territory, utility managers said.

But the degree of damage didn't surprise Packer. "We were expecting the worst, and I think it's meeting those expectations," he said.

Power service was lost to all of Entergy's 700,000 customers in Jefferson, Orleans, Plaquemines, St. Bernard and St. Charles parishes, Entergy spokeswoman Amy Stallings said.

Another 80,000 customers of Cleco Corp. in St. Tammany and Washington parishes also lost power, said Kathleen Nolen, the Pineville utility's senior vice president and chief financial officer.

"This will be a very long and difficult period for our customers and our employees," Stallings said.

Telephone companies, both wired and wireless, also suffered outages - but they were more sporadic, and many people continued to make calls into and out of the area throughout the day. At times, callers were met with busy signals or recordings indicating that networks were congested by heavy call volumes.

Most of those problems were because of the huge volume of calls being made over the local network, said Joe Chandler, spokesman for BellSouth, the region's biggest phone service provider.

Only 10,000 of the area's 790,000 phone lines were without a dial tone Monday at 5 p.m., said Joe Chandler, spokesman for BellSouth, the region's largest phone service provider.

But the number of phone outages will rise in the coming days.

Many neighborhood phone switches were operating Monday night on backup batteries after losing normal electricity service, Chandler said. More phone customers will lose their connections as the batteries run dry in the coming days.

"The potential exists for the outage numbers to rise," Chandler said.

Wireless phone networks also operated sporadically after Katrina hit.

As Katrina's winds and rain subsided Monday afternoon, Entergy and Cleco continued gathering nearly 10,000 line repair workers and tree trimmers on the edges of southeastern Louisiana. The workers will begin moving into the disaster area today, first to assess damage to the power system and then to begin repairing the damage and restoring electricity to customers.

Managers with both companies decided to hold back workers and their bucket trucks until today, so winds could fall to safer levels and flood waters could begin to subside.

BellSouth repair crews will follow behind the utility crews as normal power is restored to communications switches, Chandler said.

Entergy and Cleco both planned to use helicopters this morning to fly over the region and evaluate damage to power plants and large transmission lines. They also will look for flooding, torn up roads and other obstacles that might prevent line crews from reaching damaged equipment.

"We will have helicopters in the air at day break," Nolen said.

The flights will give utility workers a "big picture" of the damage, essential to drawing up systematic plan for attacking failures and breaks in the power grid, Packer said.

"The first thing I want to know about is geography: What does New Orleans look like? The only way to do that is by air," he said.

One of the biggest obstacles facing repair crews is flooding. High water could block road access to power lines and substations or pose a danger to crews trying to reach remote areas, utility managers said.

For that reason, Cleco customers on the north shore of Lake Pontchartrain could get their lights back on faster if floodwaters subside more quickly there, Nolen said.

Packer and other Entergy employees rode out the storm at the company's command center in the Hyatt Regency Hotel next to the Superdome. During the peak of Katrina's furry, Packer and other hotel guests were bunkered down in the hotel's lower floors.

In Packer's assigned room on the 25th floor, the storm's winds blew out a floor-to-ceiling window, overturning furniture and spewing debris everywhere.

A book left by Packer on a desk near the window tumbled out of the high-rise. He said the "Tipping Point," by Malcolm Gladwell topped his current reading list.

"It's about how small things make big things happen," he said.

.....

Keith Darcé can be reached at kdarce@timespicayune.com or (504) 826-3491.

Predicted damages could reach $16 billion

FEMA to survey from air today

By Bill Walsh
Bruce Alpert
and Laura Maggi
Staff writers

As the final gusts of Hurricane Katrina lashed southeastern Louisiana on Monday, rescue crews fanned out across the flood-soaked region to assess the damage to lives and property caused by one of the worst storms in memory.

Casualty figures weren't available late Monday as emergency officials responded to a deluge of calls for help in floodwaters 12 feet deep in some areas and power cut off to some 800,000 people.

Early assessments by insurance industry officials concluded Katrina could be the second-most expensive hurricane in the nation's history. A risk-management firm, Eqecat Inc., predicted property damage between $9 billion and $16 billion, behind only Hurricane Andrew in 1992, which caused more than $20 billion in damage.

As soon as conditions improve, insurance industry officials said thousands of adjusters would begin handling claims in Louisiana. Homeowners were urged to cover damaged openings with plastic or other heavy covering and make detailed lists of costs – such as motel bills – resulting from the storm. They also were reminded not to touch any downed power lines or attempt to remove trees that had fallen on their property.

Twelve boats were deployed from Jackson Barracks to search for people stranded on the roofs and upper stories of their homes in eastern New Orleans and St. Bernard Parish, which sustained the worst flooding. Federal search and rescue teams, which had begun taking up stations around the region since Saturday, also were dispatched.

"First and foremost, we need to save lives and protect property," said Mike Brown, director of the Federal Emergency Management Agency, at an afternoon briefing in Baton Rouge.

Brown is expected to conduct his own aerial survey of the region today as one of the first steps to figuring out the needs of the area.

An immediate problem in the aftermath of Katrina was access to drinkable water. Blanco said that a water main had "sheared" in New Orleans, and she issued an alert to boil water. But with electricity out in almost all areas of the city, that could prove difficult.

FEMA stockpiled water, food, medical supplies, blankets and cots at Camp Beauregard near Alexandria in anticipation of the storm, and was preparing to distribute them once it is clear where the greatest needs are. By Monday evening, FEMA had not identified distribution points in the metropolitan area.

Brown said that because of the early emergency declaration issued by President Bush, trucks full of supplies were ready to be shipped into the state.

STAFF PHOTO BY RUSTY COSTANZA

KENNER: A group of youths walks past the Backyard BBQ on Veterans Memorial Boulevard near Loyola Drive. While devastation in the New Orleans area was substantial, it was well short of what had been feared, according to Robert Klein, director of the risk management and insurance department at Georgia State University.

"We have supply lines backed up all the way to Fort Worth," Brown said.

Bush's disaster declaration makes federal financial assistance available in 31 south Louisiana parishes stretching from Mississippi to the Texas line. The assistance includes grants for temporary housing and low-interest loans for home and business repairs from storm damage not covered by insurance. Local governments also are eligible for financial assistance to aid in debris removal and emergency protective measures.

Individuals may begin applying for aid as early as today at the Federal Emergency Management Agency Web site, http://www.fema.gov, or by calling 1-800-621-FEMA (ext. 3362).

"I want the folks there on the Gulf Coast to know that the federal government is prepared to help you when the storm passes," Bush said at an appearance in Arizona where he was promoting his Social Security plans. "When the storm passes, the federal government has got assets and resources that we'll be deploying to help you. In the meantime, America will pray – pray for the health and safety of all our citizens," Bush said.

The amount of standing water could cause special problems for buildings as well as for underground storage tanks, according to one expert.

Brick and mortar foundations that didn't crumble under the force of the wind could be severely damaged by the weight of the water left behind, said Don Chase, a former U.S. Army engineer who now lectures at the University of Dayton. He said standing water could seep into underground gas and chemical storage tanks, rendering their contents useless.

"From an engineering standpoint, this may be worse than Hurricane Andrew," Chase said.

Even as the winds began to dissipate, Blanco reiterated her warning for residents not to attempt to return to their homes. Teams from the state Department of Transportation had been dispatched to clear major arteries, but roads leading back to the metropolitan New Orleans area remained blocked late Monday, Blanco said.

"If you try to get in now, it will make it hard for us to do the work we need to do," Blanco said. "Wherever you live, it is still too dangerous to go home."

Looking tired at an afternoon press briefing at the Office of Emergency Preparedness in Baton Rouge, Blanco also sounded a weary message of hope to those worried about loved ones and damaged property.

"Our work has just begun," she said. "We will recover. We are a strong people."

Tue, Aug 30, 2005 1.46 AM a15.8.30.05.HURRI

Evacuations to hotels come with own set of hazards

Hyatt loses at least 175 of its windows

By Rebecca Mowbray
Business writer

Nearly 3,000 guests at the Hyatt Regency New Orleans had a frightening evening Sunday as Hurricane Katrina blew out more than 175 windows in the high-rise hotel.

"The glass was crashing everywhere. It sounded like a hailstorm," said Leslie, an Algiers resident wearing a blue New Orleans Athletic Club T-shirt who declined to give her last name. "Now it looks like the Murrah Federal Building in Oklahoma."

"There were beds flying out the windows," added Juli, another hurricane refugee from Algiers who wouldn't give her last name. Juli said she sneaked back to her room after the hotel had safely relocated guests to a windowless ballroom on a lower floor Sunday night. She awoke to find the curtains from the neighboring room whacking the outside of her window. On Monday, those curtains were flapping against tufts of pink insulation left exposed by cracks in the modern building's once sleek black exterior.

While the Hyatt was probably in the worst shape of any downtown hotel, locals who sought refuge from Hurricane Katrina in downtown hotels discovered that the practice of so-called "vertical evacuation" is not without its hazards - or discomforts.

On Monday afternoon, Hyatt guests camped out on blue and gold hotel bedspreads in the ballroom. Many sat dazed in the oppressive heat, unable to go back to their rooms to retrieve toothbrushes, books or snacks because of safety concerns while hotel engineers surveyed damage in the rooms.

Hyatt spokeswoman Susan Oakland said the hotel began evacuating guests to the ballroom Sunday at about 10:30 p.m. as a precaution against Katrina's strong Category 4 winds. No one was hurt in the relocation, which Oakland said went as planned. "We do not anticipate guests returning to their rooms this evening," she said Monday.

Evacuating to hotels has become a controversial practice this hurricane season, as many hotel operators began to question whether they really wanted to be responsible for hundreds of guests without power and water for an extended period of time if the city flooded. Public safety officials decry the practice, but many locals love to avoid the traffic jams and spend the storm throwing back cocktails. And hotels long have viewed housing locals in a storm as a valiant community service.

Although they were bored sitting in the beige ballroom, many guests said they were grateful that the hotel had kept everyone safe in what could have been a dangerous situation.

New Orleans resident Gordon W. Martine sat on a folded hotel bedspread and closed his eyes Monday afternoon. He had nothing but compliments for the hotel and its guests.

Martine and his wife, Marie, checked into the hotel because Marie had just had surgery to remove three discs a few days earlier. When Marie had to go back up to her room for medical reasons Sunday night and got stuck, three firefighters carried her down 14 flights of stairs before the room's two windows blew out. "I've been very impressed with the service," Martine said.

Lakeview nurse Lisa Buchanan, also sitting on the ubiquitous blue Hyatt bedspread, was tired from trying to sleep on the floor with a herniated disk and annoyed that she hadn't been told when she would be able to return to her room, which lost its window. But no matter how grouchy, Buchanan said vertical evacuation was still worth it to avoid the stress on the highways.

"I'd rather evacuate to a hotel than be bumper-to-bumper in traffic," she said. And however primitive the conditions, she appreciated that the Hyatt took guests for the storm. "At least they didn't put people on the streets."

At other hotels, the mood was similar. Steve Daney, former chef at Rendon Inn who now lives in Fayetteville, Ark., had come back to New Orleans to try to sell his house when he got caught by Katrina and checked into the Astor Crowne Plaza.

Daney, who rode out Hurricane Betsy in New Orleans, was philosophical about the past 24 hours.

"At 5 years old, it's fun to sit through a hurricane. But when you're an adult, you start thinking about other things: your life, your house, your family," Daney said.

Daney tried to pass the time by watching television, but he had to turn it off when the national news kept talking about whether high-rise buildings would be able to withstand the storm.

"I'm not the strongest religious person you'll ever meet, but I'll tell you, I prayed. I prayed for that sucker to go to Gulfport," Daney said.

Outside the Inn on Bourbon, Kirk Hayes Sr. took his first break late Monday afternoon, sitting across the street at a closed bar smoking a cigarette and drinking a 7-Up. Hayes, the Ramada hotel's engineer, had stayed up all night checking elevators and generators.

"We took a hit, but she stood her ground," Hayes said of the 150-year-old building. "Everything worked out, and everyone came out alive. That's what I'm happy about."

.....

Reporters Frank Donze and Mary Judice contributed to this report. Rebecca Mowbray can be reached at 504-826-3417 or at rmowbray@timespicayune.com.

PHOTO BY A.J. SISCO

CBD: The facade of the New Orleans Centre is pock-marked with blown-out windows Monday after Hurricane Katrina — a fate shared with the Hyatt Regency New Orleans and many other tall buildings and hotels downtown. Nearly 3,000 people evacuated to hotels, but found their stays pretty harrowing.

Tue, Aug 30, 2005 1:50 AM 30.a16,17

5 feet of water covers Slidell;

STAFF PHOTO BY SCOTT THRELKELD

SLIDELL: A houseboat sits on Interstate 10 near the Old Spanish Trail. St. Tammany Parish President Kevin Davis confirmed one person died on Interstate 10.

All interstate entrances to parish are closed

By Meghan Gordon and Chris Kirkham
St. Tammany bureau

STAFF PHOTO BY SCOTT THRELKELD

SLIDELL: The Sun Vallley Apartments are flooded after Hurricane Katrina blew through Monday.

The brunt of Hurricane Katrina's force passed through eastern St. Tammany Parish Monday morning, appearing to leave much of southern Slidell beneath almost 5 feet of water.

The storm left much of the southern portion of Slidell submerged in the waters of Lake Pontchartrain.

Vehicles on Interstate 10 could make it only as far as the Old Spanish Trail exit before water blocked the route.

Strong winds downed trees throughout the rest of the parish, making most roads impassable.

In neighborhoods near Old Spanish Trail and I-10 in Slidell, homes and businesses had water as high as 6 feet lapping at the sides.

From the overpass at Old Spanish Trail, the only visible structure was a boat that had drifted in and was bobbing up and down in the storm surge.

"This is Lake Pontchartrain," said St. Tammany Parish Sheriff's deputy Kenny Kreeger as he surveyed the flooding from atop the I-10 overpass at Old Spanish Trail.

"I wanted to get a good idea of where my house was."

Parish officials declined to describe the extent of the storm's damage, possible injuries or their emergency response efforts Monday evening.

Parish President Kevin Davis confirmed one person had died on Interstate 10, but declined to issue further details.

"There's no message going out right now, except, 'Don't come back,'" said Dana LaFonta, spokeswoman for Kevin Davis.

Sheriff's spokesman James Hartman said all entrances into the parish from Interstates 10, 12 and 59 would be closed until further notice.

"Even if they come back, they can't stop," Hartman said. "The blockages of roadways from debris is extensive and catastrophic."

At Robert Levis Chevrolet on the I-10 Service Road in Slidell, only the tops of cars and trucks in the lot could be spotted beneath the water.

Residents in the neighborhoods near Old Spanish Trail were forced to seek shelter on second floors, in attics or at neighbors' houses as floodwaters cascaded through the streets after the strongest winds pummeled Slidell.

Keith James, 20, of Slidell and Bob Smith, 22, of Waveland, Miss., braved the winds and choppy waters that continued into Monday afternoon in a small fishing boat.

Just before James' home was submerged, he had time to unhook the boat from the trailer and secure it to the side of the house.

The two went from house to house in the Old Spanish Trail subdivision rescuing people who had fled to their attics.

They said they transported at least 12 people from the subdivision to the second floor of the Comfort Inn on Old Spanish Trail, just above the water level.

In the Old Spanish Trail subdivision, Richard Saavedra's two-story home served as a safe haven for five displaced families who managed to wade over after water inundated their homes.

"People used to look at my two-story home and say, 'Why do you have that, you're not on the water,'" Saavedra said as he peered out of his screened-in second-floor porch.

"He's got waterfront property now," one of his guests said.

Information about damage in Eden Isles and other subdivisions south of Old Spanish Trail was unavailable Monday evening, as Slidell Police could not be reached because of downed phone lines and cell towers. Hartman declined to comment Monday afternoon about conditions in Slidell.

Subdivisions further north in Slidell suffered street flooding and tree damage. Gause Boulevard had several downed power lines and trees, and many portions of the main Slidell artery were unreachable because of flooding.

Several paramedics with Lifeguard Ambulance Service spent a harrowing night at the Days Inn on Gause Boulevard west.

Approximately 15 workers were staying on the second floor of the motel when winds ripped off the roof.

"We managed to stay one step ahead of it, barely one step," said James Durk, a cook at the motel's restaurant.

Although Mandeville escaped major flooding, the streets were impassable hours after the storm left a dangerous tangle of power lines and pine trees across roadways.

"We've got damage everywhere," Sgt. Ron Ruple said. "Almost every street in the city is blocked."

Thick pine trees toppled almost in an east-west line near Montgomery Street, cutting off access to the lake-

See TAMMANY, A-17

Tue, Aug 30, 2005 1:50 AM 30.a16,17

Spanish Trail exit submerged

STAFF PHOTO BY SCOTT THRELKELD

SLIDELL: A tree hangs on power lines on Gause Boulevard, many portions of which were unreachable due to flooding.

TAMMANY, from A-16

front. Police Chief Tom Buell said he expected some flooding in Old Mandeville, but by 4 p.m. officers had yet to carve a path through the debris to survey Lakeshore Drive.

Mayor Eddie Price estimated that 30 homes were either destroyed or suffered at least 40 percent losses.

He reiterated parish officials' pleas for evacuees to stay away from the parish. "Old Mandeville is going to be out of commission for a week, at least," Price said.

In downtown Covington, several buildings' roofs were partially ripped off, including those on the Greater Covington Center and the Back Porch restaurant.

Hefty trees crashed into many downtown streets.

STAFF PHOTO BY DAVID GRUNFELD

COVINGTON: The remains of Backyard Oasis on Rutland Street burns during the storm.

STAFF PHOTO BY SCOTT THRELKELD

SLIDELL: Richard Saavedra looks out at flood waters surrounding his Short Street home, which served as a safe haven for five displaced families.

STAFF PHOTO BY SCOTT THRELKELD

SLIDELL: Two people are helped into a boat after riding out the storm on Short Street.

"I've lived here for 30 years, and I've never seen anything like this. I know there's going to be at least some damage to my house, especially if that big old oak tree I got in my yard falls... . I'm almost afraid to go home."

BERT AVERY

Family who fled gets trapped on return

They planned to spend night under Jeff Davis overpass

By Trymaine D. Lee
Staff writer

Bert Avery; his 82-year-old mother-in-law, Myrtle Albert; and two family pets — Fe Fe the ferret and Max the Dalmatian — packed up Saturday about 6 p.m. and evacuated New Orleans north on Interstate 10 to Baton Rouge. They spent Saturday and Sunday nights in a shelter.

They spent Monday night trapped in their gold SUV, just off flooded Howard Avenue under the Jefferson Davis Parkway overpass.

The family, weary of the crowded shelter, decided to head back to New Orleans after they thought the worst of Katrina had passed. They arrived to find floodwater, still rising by the minute, choking every available route. The city was swampy and strewn with debris. Any hope of Avery getting into his Mid-City neighborhood, and Myrtle into her two-story home, were dashed.

The closest they got was Causeway Boulevard near West Esplanade Avenue, where downed power lines danced across the street. "We're happy we're back and happy we're alive," said Avery, a 63-year-old retiree. "But we're definitely not happy with what we're seeing."

On the way to New Orleans, Myrtle said they'd seen the results of Katrina's tirade: apartment buildings and homes scalped of their roofs, their walls crumpled; clothing and personal belongings tossed across back yards and nearby roads.

Pieces of green highway signs from the interstate littered Howard Avenue. Trees were snapped like pretzel sticks. All the roads from Howard Avenue to Earhart Boulevard were flooded, and most of the businesses on the street were missing windows and walls.

"I've lived here for 30 years, and I've never seen anything like this," Avery said, eating from a can of tuna he'd packed for the evacuation. "I know there's going to be at least some damage to my house, especially if that big old oak tree I got in my yard falls... . I'm almost afraid to go home."

They had left home with hopes of a hotel room. Hotels and motels along the highway, which was saturated with New Orleans refugees, had long stopped handing out keys, he said, and instead were handing out lists of nearby shelters. "After nearly four hours on the road, we made it to Baton Rouge with about 10,000 other people," Avery said. "But it was OK. We didn't have much of a choice. We wanted to stay alive so we left."

Four hours later, they had made it to Baton Rouge and were holed up in a shelter with 15, then 100, then 300 others fleeing Katrina. Two nights, they decided, were enough.

Max seemed to be taking the stressful journey in stride, Avery said. "And Fe Fe's been sleeping a whole lot," Myrtle said with a chuckle.

STAFF PHOTOS BY TED JACKSON

JACKSON SQUARE: A homeless man walks through pelting rain in front of St. Louis Cathedral as Hurricane Katrina blows through southeast Louisiana.

FRENCH QUARTER: Parked cars are crushed under bricks that have fallen from a building on Camp Street near Canal.

STAFF PHOTO BY KATHY ANDERSON

CENTRAL CITY: People walk away with bags of clothing from Coleman's Retail Store and furniture from Universal Furniture on Earhart Boulevard during Hurricane Katrina in New Orleans.

Widespread looting hits abandoned businesses

Lack of police after storm leaves stores vulnerable

By Walt Philbin
Staff writer

High waters from Hurricane Katrina made law enforcement difficult but provided loads – truckloads in some cases – of opportunity for looters.

At midafternoon Monday, a parade of looters streamed from Coleman's Retail Store at 4001 Earhart Blvd. The looters, men and women who appeared to be in their early teens to mid-40s, braved a steady rain and infrequent tropical-storm-force winds to tote away boxes of clothing and shoes from the store. Some had garbage bags stuffed with goods. Others lugged wardrobe-sized boxes or carried them on their heads.

The line going to and from the store along Earhart numbered into the dozens and appeared to be growing. Some looters were seen smiling and greeting each other with pleasantries as they passed. Another group was seen riding in the back of a pickup truck, honking the horn and cheering.

The scene also attracted a handful of curious bystanders, who left the safety of their homes to watch the heist. But no police were present in the area, which was flooded with water two to four feet deep on all sides of Earhart.

Looting also was reported at the Winn-Dixie just outside the French Quarter, near the Iberville public housing complex.

In Mid-City, people waded through waist-deep water on the way to loot the Shell station at South Jefferson Davis Parkway and Tulane Avenue.

Three people even trudged through the water pulling a blue and white boat down Tulane, apparently to make it easier to haul goods away from the station's convenience store. And they weren't the first to get there.

Minutes before, a pair of teenagers floated two rubber trashcans full of beer, hard liquor and other plunder toward the South Jefferson Davis Parkway overpass over I-10. When they reached dry roadway on the span, they abandoned the garbage cans and carried the contents away in blue plastic bags.

One of the young men even shucked a pair of wet jeans when they fell to his ankles and walked away in a red bathing suit.

STAFF PHOTO BY KATHY ANDERSON

CENTRAL CITY: People abscond with bags of unpurchased merchandise.

STAFF PHOTO BY TED JACKSON

CENTRAL CITY: Items are removed from the from Coleman's Retail Store at 4001 Earhart Blvd. People braved a steady rain and infrequent tropical storm wind gusts to tote boxes of clothing and shoes from the store.

STAFF PHOTO BY TED JACKSON

CENTRAL CITY: Coleman's merchandise goes out the door Monday. Another group was seen riding in the back of a pickup truck, honking the horn and cheering.

IN RUINS

STAFF PHOTO BY ELIOT KAMENITZ

FRENCH QUARTER: The roof of the Old U.S. Mint, blown off by Hurricane Katrina, lies crumpled near the French Market on Monday.

STAFF PHOTO BY TED JACKSON

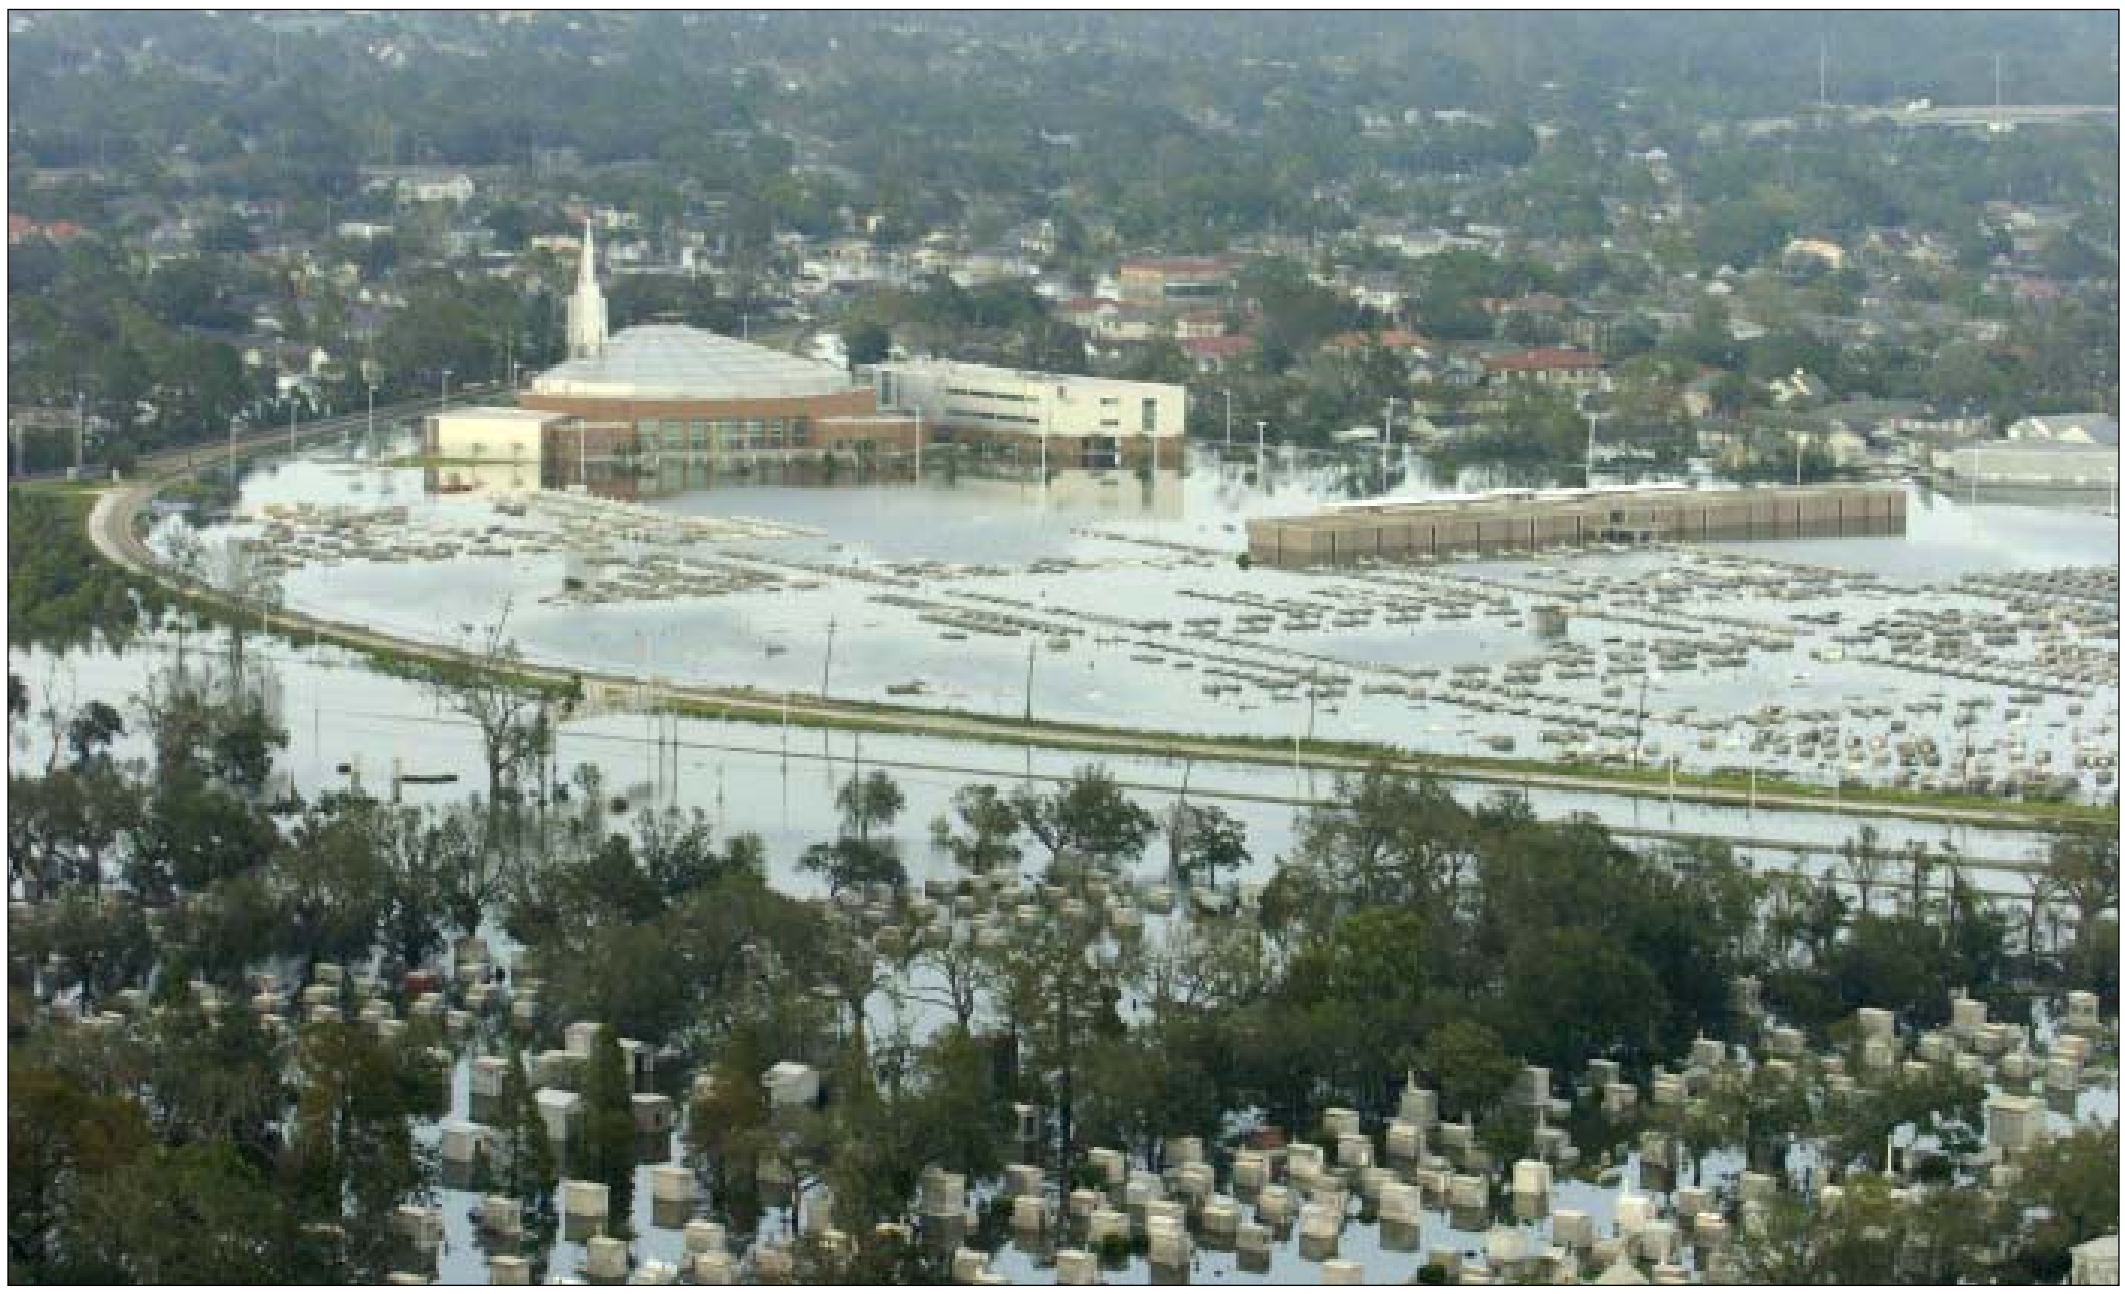
9TH WARD: Only parts of some homes remain standing after Hurricane Katrina came through. The governor warned that people who attempt to return to the city will be stopped. 'You will be turned back,' Gov. Kathleen Blanco said. 'Only official emergency personnel will be allowed in.'

Many wonder whether the city will ever recover from Katrina's devastation. The power of wind and water came too fast, was too harsh, proved too much.

STAFF PHOTO BY RUSTY COSTANZA

KENNER: Hurricane Katrina caused extensive flooding at the intersection of Veterans Memorial Boulevard and Loyola Drive.

KATRINA: THE STORM WE'VE ALWAYS FEARED



The Times-Picayune

50 CENTS 169th year No. 221 | WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 31, 2005 | HURRICANE EDITION

UNDER WATER

LEVEE BREACH SWAMPS CITY FROM LAKE TO RIVER

Population urged to leave; years of cleanup ahead

STAFF PHOTO BY TED JACKSON

NEW ORLEANS: Gravess at Greenwood and Metairie cemetariesmark the waterlineof the sheet of water that covered the city from Lake Pontchartrain to nearly the French Quarter on Tuesday.

Daylong efforts to repair levee fail

By Dan Shea
Staff writer

New Orleans became an unimaginable scene of water, fear and suffering Tuesday after a levee breach in the 17th Street Canal sent billions of gallons of Lake Pontchartrain coursing through the city.

As the day wore on, the only dry land was a narrow band from the French Quarter and parts of Uptown, the same small strip that was settled by Bienville amid the swamps.

On Tuesday night, it appeared the city was returning to swamp when a daylong effort to shore the levee near the Hammond Highway failed. Mayor Ray Nagin said pumps were being overwhelmed and warned that a new deluge would bury the city in up to 15 feet of water.

With solid water from the lake to the French Quarter, the inundation and depopulation of an entire American city was at hand.

"Truth to tell, we're not to far from filling in the bowl," said Terry Ebbert, the city's director of homeland security. The waters were still rising at 3 inches per hour, and eventually could move close to the French Quarter levee.

Although the breach occurred on the Orleans side of the canal, it did not spare the Jefferson side. Water found its way into much of the east bank, meeting the flow that came in from the west from Hurricane Katrina's storm surge Monday.

An accurate tally of death was hard to determine. Five deaths related to Katrina have been confirmed in Jefferson Parish, officials said. There also are seven people missing who decided to ride out Katrina on Grand Isle.

Gov. Kathleen Blanco spoke of "many deaths," but there were only rumors and anecdotes of firefighters tying floating bodies to trees.

"We have some bodies floating," Ebbert said. "Not like thousands, but we have seen some."

As to the living, with the absence of cars and electric motors in the powerless city, a sad tableau played itself out in an eerie quiet.

All day, a weary army of storm victims trudged through waist-deep muddy water toward the Superdome, where more than 20,000 people took refuge. The next problem is what to do with them. Late Tuesday Gov. Blanco ordered them out, saying the facility was too damaged to house people and the atmosphere too dangerous. Officials said the National Guard soon would begin driving them out to dry ground, then airlift them out of southeast Louisiana.

In other areas, lawlessness took hold.

See KATRINA, A-2

STAFF PHOTO BY ALEX BRANDON

MID-CITY: A New Orleans Police officer ferries refugees out of the danger zone as floodwaters rose Tuesday.

Flooding will only get worse

By Mark Schleifstein
Staff writer

The catastrophic flooding that filled the bowl that is New Orleans on Monday and Tuesday will only get worse over the next few days because rainfall from Hurricane Katrina continues to flow into Lake Pontchartrain from north shore rivers and streams, and east winds and a 17.5-foot storm crest on the Pearl River block the outflow water through the Rigolets and Chef Menteur Pass.

The lake is normally 1 foot above sea level, while the city of New Orleans is an average of 6 feet below sea level. But a combination of storm surge and rainfall from Katrina have raised the lake's surface to 6 feet above sea level, or more.

All of that water moving from the lake has found several holes in the lake's banks - all pouring into New Orleans. Water that crossed St. Charles Parish in an area where the lakefront levee has not yet been completed, and that backed up from the lake in Jefferson Parish canals, is funneling into Kenner and Metairie.

A 500-yard and growing breach in the eastern wall of the 17th Street Canal separating New Orleans from Metairie is pouring hundreds of thousands of gallons of lake water per second into the New Orleans

See WATER, A-4

"We're going to try and get who we can get and take them to higher ground. We may have to come back for some."

STAFF PHOTOS BYTED JACKSON

NEW ORLEANS: Acadian Ambulance workers rush two small children from a Louisiana National Guard helicopter as they were evacuated from the Superdome.

Weariness, danger, death take hold in drowned city

KATRINA, from A-1

The giant new Wal-Mart in the Lower Garden District was looted, after a limited distribution of supplies broke down in chaos. The entire gun collection was taken.

"There are gangs of armed men in the city moving around the city," Ebbert said.

One looter shot a New Orleans police officer, who was in critical condition with a head wound.

Although local police focused solely on rescue, a call for help was answered by swarms of deputies from western Louisiana parishes.

But cops on the street, cut off from their superiors by a failure of the communications system, complained of chaos.

"Put this in your paper," one officer on Canal Street said. "They told us nothing. We were unprepared. We are completely on our own."

If it wasn't coordinated, the rescue was heroic.

Firefighters, police and Coast Guardsmen waded through water and climbed to roofs.

"We've got boats everywhere," said Capt. Tim Bayard of the New Orleans Police Department. "We're going to try and get who we can get and take them to higher ground. We may have to come back for some."

There were joined by an armada of Louisiana sportsmen in flat-bottomed boats, who responded to an appeal for help.

Ferdinand Emory rescued about 100 people, ten at a time in his boat.

Ebbert estimated 1,500 to 2,000 people were saved in Lakeview and Mid-City.

But rescue from the water didn't mean an end to misery. They were simply dropped off at the few stretches of dry ground, overpasses and parking lots along Metairie Ridge.

NEW ORLEANS: Members of a Texas Task Force One and FEMA search and resuce team call for a man they were told had been calling for help from his attic all night. When they arrived they found that he was dead.

Aleck Scallan, 63, a parapelgic, was ferried in a boat from his Lakeview home. But he had been sitting for more than six hours on an overpass, with no clear indication when he and scores of others would be picked up.

Along the Metairie Road railroad embankment, the only passage through two parishes, people wandered aimlessly, along with dogs and cats that headed for high ground.

After the rescue effort, the next priority is trying to heal the breach. Ebbert said plans called for giant panels to be dropped in place in place by helicopter, accompanied by 50, 3,000-pound sandbags. Next the Interstate 10 underpass under the railroad trestle would have to be drained, after the giant new pumping station uttlerly failed its first test. That would give disaster recovery teams open access to the city from the west.

The failure of the Industrial Canal levee created massive flooding in St. Bernard and the 9th Ward on Monday.

Estimates on when the city would become habitable again ranged from two weeks to months.

HURRICANE KATRINA AFTERMATH

800 tons of concrete on route to block breach

WATER, from A-1

area. Water also is flowing through two more levee breaches along the Industrial Canal, which created a Hurricane Betsy-on-steroids flood in the Lower 9th Ward on Monday that is now spreading south into the French Quarter and other parts of the city.

New Orleans Mayor Ray Nagin warned Tuesday evening that an attempt to plug the holes in the 17th Street Canal had failed, and the floodwaters were expected to continue to rise rapidly throughout the night. Eventually, Nagin said, the water could reach as high as 3 feet above sea level, meaning it could rise to 12 to 15 feet high in some parts of the city.

Louisiana State University Hurricane Center researcher Ivor van Heerden warned that Nagin's estimates could be too low because the lake water won't fall quickly during the next few days.

"We don't have the weather conditions to drive the water out of Lake Pontchartrain, and at the same time, all the rivers on the north shore are in flood," he said. "That water is just going to keep rising in the city until it's equal to the level of the lake.

"Unless they can use sandbags to compartmentalize the flooded areas, the water in the city will rise everywhere to the same level as the lake."

This isn't the first time that the 17th Street Canal has proved to be a hurricane-flooding Achilles heel.

Following a 1947 hurricane that made a direct hit on New Orleans and Metairie, officials were unable to clear floodwaters from Metairie through the canal for two weeks.

Sewage from a treatment plant that stagnated in the canal created enough sulfuric acid fumes that nearby homes in Lakeview painted with lead-based paint turned black.

The slow-motion flooding of the south shore mirrors a similar flooding event during Tropical Storm Isidore, when weather conditions blocked water from leaving the lake as heavy rainfall pushed its surface higher and higher, causing extensive flooding in low-lying areas of Slidell a day after the storm had passed by.

Van Heerden said water flowing through New Orleans' back door used a weakness that he and many others have been concerned about for years: a V-shaped funnel formed by the joining of the Mississippi River-Gulf Outlet and the Inner Harbor Navigation Channel. Storm surge as high as 18 feet pushed through the funnel, into the Industrial Canal and on to the lake. It's that surge water that is thought to have caused breaks in the Industrial Canal levees breaks that lake water is now flowing through into the 9th Ward.

Water entering that funnel also is thought to have topped levees surrounding Chalmette and eastern New Orleans, causing extensive flooding in both places.

Van Heerden said that if there's a silver lining to this disastrous event, it's that the eye of Katrina didn't go directly over or to the west of the city. If that had happened, the storm surge could have been much higher and would have directly topped levees all along the lake and much more rapidly filled the bowl, which would have meant an even higher death toll than is anticipated from this slow-moving event, he said.

This flood event contains many of the features used by federal, state and local planners early this year to begin shaping what was supposed to be a catastrophe recovery plan for New Orleans: failed pumping stations, breached levees, rooftop rescues, makeshift medical triage zones.

In drawing the plan, officials assumed that it would take several days to a week before enough manpower and equipment could be staged to deal with many of the problems they're facing now, such as how to close the breach in the 17th Street Canal.

There, the problem is how to close the hole quickly. Strategies suggested during tabletop exercises indicated it could take several days to position barges and cranes in place to more permanently fill such a gap, assuming it was part of the worst-case, storm-surge-driven flooding scenario.

The slow-motion reality of the collapsing canal wall has the state Department of Transportation and Development and the Army Corps of Engineers working into the night to plug the breach and try to stem the flooding in Lakeview, West End, Bucktown and large swaths of East Jefferson.

A convoy of trucks carrying 108 15,000-pound concrete barriers - like those used as highway construction dividers - was en route to the site Tuesday night, said Mark Lambert, chief spokesman for the agency.

Helicopters will lift the barriers above the hole and drop them in place, even as another 50 sandbags, each weighing 3,000 pounds, are also being maneuvered into place.

"That's 800 tons of concrete," Lambert said. "What we are trying to do is just stop the water from going into the city."

More difficult will be the overtopping of levees along the Industrial Canal caused by the high lake water flowing in. Lambert didn't say how the state would address that problem.

The problems caused by floodwaters will only get worse, according to van Heerden and the earlier tabletop exercises.

For one, if the water in the city does rise to the height of levees along the lakefront, it may be difficult to open floodgates designed to keep the lake out that would now be needed to allow the lake to leave.

Van Heerden said the rising floodwaters also would cause major pollution problems in coming days, as they float dozens of fuel and chemical storage tanks off their fittings, severing pipelines and allowing the material to seep into the floodwaters.

"In our surveys of the parish, a lot of the storage tanks we looked at weren't bolted down with big bolts," he said. "They rely on gravity to hold them down. If an industrial property is 5 feet below sea level and the water gets to 5 feet above sea level, that's 10 feet of water, and I'm certain many we looked at will float free

"You'll see a lot of highly volatile stuff on the surface, and one spark and we'll have a major fire," he said.

AP PHOTO

FLORIDA AVENUE CANAL: Two breeches flooded St. Bernard Parish on Monday as a massive storm surge from Hurricane Katrina roared up the MR-GO waterway.

"Truth to tell, we're not to far from filling in the bowl."

TERRY EBBERT, New Orleans director of Homeland Security

AP PHOTO

17TH STREET CANAL: Attempts to plug the 200-yard breech along the New Orleans side of the canal failed late Tuesday. Mayor Ray Nagin warned a new deluge would completely flood the city.

Looters leave nothing behind in storm's wake

Police officers seen joining in on free-for-all

By Mike Perlstein and Brian Thevenot
Staff writer

Law enforcement efforts to contain the emergency left by Katrina slipped into chaos in parts of New Orleans Tuesday -- with some police officers and firefighters even joining looters in picking stores clean.

At the Wal-Mart on Tchoupitoulas Street, an initial effort to hand out provisions to stranded citizens quickly disintegrated into mass looting. Authorities at the scene said bedlam erupted after the giveaway was announced over the radio.

While many people carried out food and essential supplies, others cleared out jewelry racks and carted out computers, TVs and appliances on handtrucks.

Some officers joined in taking whatever they could, including one New Orleans cop who loaded a shopping cart with a compact computer and a 27-inch flat screen television.

Officers claimed there was nothing they could do to contain the anarchy, saying their radio communications had broken down and they had no direction from commanders.

"We don't have enough cops to stop it," an officer said. "A mass riot would break out if you tried."

Inside the store, the scene alternated between celebration and frightening bedlam. A shirtless man straddled a broken jewelry case, yelling, "Free samples, free samples over here."

Another man rolled a mechanized pallet, stacked six feet high with cases of vodka and whiskey. Perched atop the stack was a bewildered toddler.

Throughout the store and parking lot, looters pushed carts and loaded trucks and vans alongside officers. One man said police directed him to Wal-Mart from Robert's Grocery, where a similar scene was taking place.

A crowd in the electronics section said one officer broke the glass DVD case so people wouldn't cut themselves.

"The police got all the best stuff. They're crookeder than us," one man said.

Most officers, though, simply stood by powerless against the tide of law breakers.

One veteran officer said, "It's like this everywhere in the city. This tiny number of cops can't do anything about this. It's wide open."

At least one officer tried futilely to control a looter through shame.

"When they say take what you need, that doesn't mean an f-ing TV," the officer shouted to a looter. "This is a hurricane, not a free-for-all."

Sandra Smith of Baton Rouge walked through the parking lot with a 12-pack of beer under each arm.

"I came down here to get my daughters," she said, "but I can't find them."

STAFF PHOTO BY JOHN McCUSKER

GARDEN DISTRICT: A New Orleans police officer is seen carrying DVDs at the Wal-Mart on Tchoupitoulas Tuesday. Many police officers said they felt helpless in enforcing the looters, which were found all over the city.

The scene turned so chaotic at times that entrances were blocked by the press of people, shopping carts and traffic jams that sprouted on surrounding streets.

Some groups organized themselves into assembly lines to more efficiently cart off goods.

Toni Williams, 25, packed her trunk with essential supplies, such as food and water, but said mass looting disgusted and frightened her.

"I didn't feel safe. Some people are going overboard," she said.

Inside the store, one woman was stocking up on make-up. She said she took comfort in watching police load up their own carts.

"It must be legal," she said. "The police are here taking stuff, too."

(Staff writers Doug MacCash and Keith Spera assisted in this story.)

Looter shoots N.O. officer in the head

Relatives chose to stay behind in New Orleans

By Matt Brown
West Bank bureau

A New Orleans police officer was shot in the head Tuesday after confronting looters on the West Bank, officials said.

Details were scarce, but officials said the officer and another officer confronted several looters stealing merchandise from the Chevron station at the corner of Shirley and Gen. DeGaulle drives. One of the officers went inside the store, while the other remained outside and confronted a man he saw looting the store.

When he did, another looter came from behind and shot the officer in the head, a police officer told a reporter for The Times-Picayune.

The officer who was shot was rushed to West Jefferson Medical Center, where he underwent surgery. Other officers told a reporter that reports from the hospital said the wounded officer was expected to survive. Jefferson Parish deputies arrested four people on the scene, and police said one of those arrested was wounded in the arm after exchanging gunfire with another officer.

STAFF PHOTO BY TED JACKSON

NEW ORLEANS: Residents fled their homes any way they could on Tuesday, faced with the threat of rising waters.

Unscathed parishes ready for evacuees

Areas that stayed dry become staging areas

By Allen Powell II
River Parishes Bureua

Thanks to already operating parish utilities and aggressive roadblocks, St. John the Baptist Parish has morphed into a staging point for evacuees trying to return to New Orleans and Jefferson Parishes in the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina.

A steady stream of southeast Louisiana residents have attempted to use Airline Highway and the River Road to return to their homes on Monday and Tuesday. But, many of them have found themselves stranded in parking lots in LaPlace, thanks to State Police roadblocks preventing them from advancing past the Bonnet Carre Spillway in St. Charles Parish.

New Orleans Mayor Ray Nagin and Jefferson Parish President Aaron Broussard both have declared martial law in their respective areas and residents will not be able to return to their homes until next week at the earliest. The roadblocks are supposed to prevent residents from entering unsafe areas and limit looting.

St. John Chief Administrative Officer Natalie Robottom said the parish has notified the Louisiana Department of Emergency Preparedness that it is willing to help house individuals evacuating New Orleans and Jefferson Parish. However, Robottom said the parish will need state assistance to operate the facilities because it does not have the manpower or resources to operate shelters on its own.

"We can't do it by ourselves, we're not equipped for that," Robottom said. "We don't want to get people in and not have basic services."

Robottom said St. John Parish schools Superintendent Mike Coburn has agreed to open Lake Pontchartrain Elementary School in LaPlace as the parish's first shelter, possibly as early as today, once power is restored there. Robottom said Entergy has told the parish that electricity should be returned gradually over the next two to four weeks, with U.S. 51 and Airline Highway receiving service first. She said Entergy officials have told her it takes six workers four to six hours to install one pole.

The minimal damage to St. John Parish has meant that traffic into the parish was brisk once Katrina's winds subsided on Monday night. But, as more and more travelers became trapped in the parish, and camped out in the parking lots of local businesses, the parish decided to limit access to individuals essential to repairing infrastructure and parish residents who can prove their residency with identification, Robottom said.

Marty Stevenson was one those evacuees trapped in St. John Parish. Stevenson said he evacuated from New Orleans' 6th Ward on Sunday afternoon, but he and his family couldn't afford to stay in a hotel for more than one night. Stevenson was camping in his car in the parking lot of the LaPlace Home Depot, and said he stopped there because he saw lights after he was turned around on Airline Highway.

"A lot of people just started stopping right around here," said Stevenson, who added that he hopes a shelter opens up soon in St. John. "It just seemed like the safest place."

Reba Tullier, 40, and her three children also were camping in the Home Depot parking lot in their truck and a tent they brought with them.

Tullier said she was waiting in the parking lot because she couldn't stand to stay away from her Kenner home any longer, especially since she hasn't spoken to her husband since she left him to ride out the storm on Sunday.

Tullier, who was also turned around at roadblocks on Airline Highway, said she can't afford a hotel because her family must save money for gas, and eventually, repairs to their home. She and her children were using a makeshift shower they had constructed from water faucets and hoses outside of Home Depot.

"I just want to be here when they say we can go in. I don't want to have to wait," Tullier said. "I have to hear from my husband. I want to know if he's alive or if he's dead."

St. John Parish crews were clearing roads Tuesday. Although much of the parish is still without electricity, there are a few grocery stores offering limited service in Reserve and LaPlace.

Thousands of customers came to Gregg's Neighborhood Market on Central Avenue in Reserve in the roughly seven hours it was open. Most were Reserve residents stuck in their hot homes without power. While there was a minor riot when the store first opened as residents attempted to push inside at the same time, by early afternoon, owner Gregg Simon had things running smoothly with the assistance St. John sheriff's deputies. Simon said he plans to be open today starting at 8 a.m.

"I'm just trying to help the community the best I can," Simon said.

Refugees in Houma wait for word

Relatives chose to stay behind in New Orleans

By Bob Ussery
Staff writer

HOUMA - Some of the numerous New Orleans area residents who took refuge in the Terrebonne Parish Civic Center here Tuesday were worried about the safety of relatives they left behind in the path of Hurricane Katrina.

Julius Jones, 68, and his wife, Geneva, 63, got a call from their grandson, Gerald Williams, 21, early Monday as the storm approached him in the Lower 9th Ward. Gerald Jones and about 15 friends and neighbors were stranded on the second floor of the home where he and his grandparents live at 1400-02 Tupelo St. Water was halfway up the second floor and the group, including two neighbors' babies, needed help.

Julius Jones said he finally got through to New Orleans police but does not know if help arrived in time. The phones stopped working, and as of Tuesday evening, the Joneses had no idea of the safety of Williams and the others.

Tragedy already has struck at the same house. Julius Jones said his son, Joseph, 23, and daughter, Geraldine, 34, were murdered there in 1997.

The Joneses wound up at the shelter at the Houma Terrebonne Civic Center after their first refuge, the Best Western Hotel, in Gray, lost electricity and had sewage problems.

Ester Dumas, who also was forced out of the Best Western along with her family, had her own worries. Her husband, Ernest Dumas, 63, wanted to stay at their home at 5411 Marais St. Her parents, Emelda and Chester Jenkins of Roffignac Street, joined Ernest Dumas on Marais Street and could not be persuaded to evacuate the city.

"They probably didn't think it was going to be as bad as it was," Ester Dumas said. "I called them Sunday night when we got to the hotel. Poor darlings, they thought they could go home. I explained to them they could not go home. I hope and pray they're OK."

Tuesday evening, Dumas was worried because she had not been able to get in touch with anyone.

Will Torres, human resources director for Terrebonne Parish, said the shelter has a capacity of 2,200 people. As of Tuesday, there were only about 250 people. But that was likely to change later Tuesday because more refugees from flooded New Orleans were expected to arrive. Some would come on two buses sent by Terrebonne Parish.

Old West has nothing on Katrina aftermath

Death, violence, lawlessness put cities under martial law

By Brian Thevenot, Keith Spera, Gorden Russell, and Doug MacCash
Staff writers

STAFF PHOTO BY TED JACKSON

LAKEVIEW: Members of Texas Task Force1, a FEMA Search and Rescue Team,call out for a man they were told was calling for help from his attic all night. When they finally found him, he was pronounced dead.

STAFF PHOTO BY TED JACKSON

DOWNTOWN: Rising water that began to cover the streets of New Orleans forced many residents to flee the city, as well as take the law into their own hands.

Sitting on a black barrel amid the muck and stench near the St. Claude Avenue bridge, 52-year-old Daniel Weber broke into a sob, his voice cracking as he recounted how he had watched his wife drown and spent the next 14 hours floating in the polluted flood waters, his only life line a piece of driftwood.

"My hands were all cut up from breaking through the window, and I was standing on the fence. I said, 'I'll get on the roof and pull you up,'" he said. "And then we just went under."

Weber sat among hundreds of refugees rescued Tuesday from rooftops, attics and floating debris in the 9th Ward and St. Bernard Parish by an armada of more than 100 boats. Officials from the Coast Guard estimated they pulled thousands of people off of rooftops and attics, many with stories as grim as Weber's. Officials believed hundreds and maybe thousands more remained in peril. They declined to estimate the number of dead. That will come later.

"We've got cadaver dogs, but we're only looking for the live people at this point," said Rachel Zechnelli of the Department of Wildlife and Fisheries, which deployed all available boats to the Industrial Canal Monday night. "We're dealing only with live voices and heartbeats."

While the 9th Ward remained the focus of the search and rescue effort, refugees from other neighborhoods flooded by the massive breach of Lake Pontchartrain streamed to the Superdome and CBD, trudging through deep waters to get there.

Then, in an evening press conference, Mayor Ray Nagin announced that the already crippled city would take yet another blow: Another surge of water from the failed 17th Street Canal levee could push an additional 10 feet of water into already waterlogged neighborhoods, flooding the remaining dry sections of Uptown.

The expected surge stems from a failure to execute a plan to dump sandbags via helicopter into the 200-meter wide breach. Nagin offered up no culprit but promised to investigate the matter.

"I thought everyone understood this morning that that was the highest priority," the mayor said. "It didn't get done. Now there's nothing to slow down the pace of the water."

That was enough to prompt some of the city's few remaining residents to start packing.

Uptown resident Margeaux Gonzalez rode out Katrina at the Queen and Crescent Hotel, then returned to find her Laurel Street home dry. As she and her neighbors watched Nagin on Tuesday night on a TV rigged to a car battery, they reluctantly made plans to evacuate to Baton Rouge.

"We were feeling really positive three hours ago," Gonzales said. "The storm is long gone, we suffered through the wind and the rain and survived the flood. It's ridiculous that we can't get the help we need from the government to keep the city intact. That's sad."

Earlier in the day, as floodwaters rose to knee-deep levels along Poydras Street, the city's top brass evacuated to Baton Rouge via the Crescent City Connection, the only clear route out of town. They recommended others follow.

"Get out," said City Attorney Sherry Landry from the window of the SUV she would use to evacuate. "I'm serious."

For many, that wasn't an option. In the impoverished 9th Ward, many didn't flee the storm in the first place because of lack of money and transportation, as well as a belief the storm wouldn't be nearly as bad. On Tuesday, they remained the focus of efforts to evacuate the homeless to the already crowded Superdome.

That left thousands of people in other neighborhoods close to the lake, whose homes had not flooded until late Monday when the canal gave way, with no option other than to walk to the few dry areas of the city. Interstate 10 remained largely devoid of cars, but a steady stream of pedestrians seeking food, water and shelter walked along the highway.

More than 100 New Orleans police officers riding out the storm in the LSU Medical Center were still trapped by high water on Tuesday. Assumption Parish deputies in boats rescued them.

Some who left their flooded homes faced heart-rending dilemmas. Bethaney Waith of Mid-City, who walked in chest high water with a neighbor to the Superdome, had to leave her disabled housemate behind. The woman suffered from epidemia and can't walk.

Those trapped in the city faced an increasingly lawless environment, as law enforcement agencies found themselves overwhelmed with widespread looting. Looters swarmed the Wal-Mart on Tchoupitoulas Street, often bypassing the food and drink section to steal wide-screen TVs, jewelry, bicycles and computers. Watching the sordid display and shaking his head in disgust, one firefighter said of the scene: "It's a hurricane, what are you do with a basketball goal?"

Police regained control at about 3 p.m., after clearing the store with armed patrol.

One shotgun-toting Third District detective described the looting as "ferocious."

"And it's going to get worse as the days progress," he said.

In Uptown, one the few areas that remained dry, a bearded man patrolled Oak Street near the boarded-up Maple Leaf Bar, a sawed-off shotgun slung over his shoulder. The owners of a hardware store sat in folding chairs, pistols at the ready.

Uptown resident Keith Williams started his own security patrol, driving around in his Ford pickup with his newly purchased handgun. Earlier in the day, Williams said he had seen the body of a gunshot victim near the corner of Leonidas and Hickory streets.

"What I want to know is why we don't have paratroopers with machine guns on every street," Williams said.

Like-minded Art Depodesta sat on the edge of a picnic table outside Cooter Brown's Bar, a chrome shotgun at his side loaded with red shells.

"They broke into the Shell station across the street," he said. "I walked over with my 12-gauge and shot a couple into the air."

The looters scattered, but soon after, another man appeared outside the bar in a pickup truck armed with a pistol and threatened Depodesta.

"I told him, 'Listen, I was in the Army and I will blow your ass off,'" Depodesta said. "We've got enough trouble with the flood."

The man sped away.

"You know what sucks," Depodesta said. "The whole U.S. is looking at this city right now, and this is what they see."

In the Bywater, a supply store sported spray-painted signs reading "You Loot, I Shoot" and "You Bein Watched." A man seated nearby with a rifle in his lap suggested it was no idle threat. At the Bywater studio of Dr. Bob, the artist known for hand-painted "Be Nice or Leave" signs, a less fanciful sentiment was painted on the wall: "Looters Will Be Shot. Dr. Bob."

As the afternoon faded, aggression filled the air on the neutral ground of Poland Avenue as well, as people grew increasingly frustrated with the rescue effort. Having already survived one nightmare, a woman with five children feared going to go to the Dome, saying that some of the men preparing to board transport vehicles had smuggled razor blades with them.

On the other side of the bridge, rescue boats continued to offload as many as 15 people at a time late into the afternoon, with no end in sight. Some said they had seen dead bodies floating by their boats.

Many stumbled from dehydration as they made their way onto dry land. Several rescue workers said some of the people trapped were so shell-shocked or stubborn they refused to leave their houses. "If you can figure that one out, let me know," said Oscar Dupree, a volunteer who had been trapped on a roof himself and returned to help save others.

The scene called to mind a refugee camp in a Third World nation.

Liquor flowed freely and tempers flared amid complaints about the pace of the relief effort, which seemed to overwhelm the agencies involved and the city's inability to contain floodwaters.

As they emerged from rescue boats, at times wobbling and speaking incoherently, many of the rescued seem stunned they had not died. Johnell Johnson of Marais street said she had been trapped on her roof " with a handicapped man with one damn leg."

Gerald Wimberly wept as he recounted his unsuccessful effort to help a young girl, who rescuers ultimately saved.

Dupree said he had seen a young man he knew drown. "I just couldn't get to him," he said. "I had to tell his people."

Weber, the man who lost his wife, seemed at the breaking point as he waited, surrounded by anger and filth, for a National Guard truck to ferry him to the Dome. After 14 hours of floating on a piece of wood, volunteers who knew him had fished him out.

"Another hour, I would have just let myself drown," he said.

A moment later, staring ahead to a bleak future without his wife, he said he almost wished he had.

"I'm not going to make it. I know I'm not."

STAFF PHOTO BY DAVID GRUNFELD

SLIDELL: Storm surge in Slidell reached 16 feet in some areas and did severe damage to the Eden Isles, Oak Harbor and Clipper Estates neighborhoods. All three of those neighborhoods, which are boarded by canals, were built 12 feet above sea level.

Slidell rescue operations continue, mostly by boat

Many must wait until water

By Meghan Gordon
St. Tammany bureau

St. Tammany Parish officials and volunteers continued Tuesday pulling trapped

Slidell residents out of submerged homes in the city's low-lying neighborhoods. Where waters had receded, homeowners emerged to find a sludge-covered mess of fallen trees and other debris.

Police had rescued more than 100 people as of Tuesday afternoon, said Rob Callahan, a Slidell policeman. It may take until Thursday to complete boat rescue operations, he said.

"The hardest part is going to be going back later on and finding the casualties, although I hope there are none," Callahan said. "Until the water recedes, we can't get to those bodies."

"The hardest part is going to be going back later on and finding the casualties, although I hope there are none," Callahan said. "Until the water recedes, we can't get to those bodies."
ROB CALLAHAN, Slidell policeman

James E. Collins, 67, discovered in his yard proof that not even occupants of the cemetery down his street experienced rest during the storm.

A concrete vault, with its coffin inside, floated a block to his house and tumbled open beside his Square Road house. The corpse lay crumpled on its side.

Collins said the flooding that carried the gruesome debris to his yard stunned him and his wife, Joycelyn. When the screaming winds ceased, they thought they had made it through the worst of the storm. That's when the lake water - usually six to seven miles away – whipped up to their doorstep and wouldn't stop.

"The water just kept rising, and the only way we could go was up," said

Joycelyn Collins said. "It still kept rising."

They trudged through chest-deep water and climbed into the attic of their shed. From 1 p.m. Monday to 6 a.m. Tuesday, they huddled in the crude structure fearing they would drown. After most of the water had subsided, Collins pointed to his Ford F-150's antennae, about 5 inches from the top to mark how far the waters rose.

"My husband, I love him with all of my heart, but he better not ever tell me to sit here again," Joycelyn Collins said. "I'm never, ever going to sit through something like this. I am so petrified."

Up and down Fremaux Road near Slidell – at one point the lake's farthest reach - dazed people walked for miles either away from the flooded homes where they spent a fearful day or toward the houses they left behind to evacuate.

Along the way, the flooding left a perplexing collection of debris. A grounded boat was tethered to an "End school zone" sign outside of Northshore High School, and a mullet lay several feet away.

Pat McMannis, 57, and his daughter, Jessica Miller, walked north on Voters Road toward Shortcut Road in search of the car Miller had to abandon the night before.

At about 7 p.m. Monday, she drove from Picayune, Miss., in search of her parents. When her car flooded, Miller and her 10-year-old daughter walked for an hour through the darkness and debris. They hitched a ride with a sheriff's deputy, then walked another three miles. When she reached the house on Miller Road, she found her parents in 4 feet of water.

"We started getting everything ready to climb in the attic," McMannis said. "I thought we were going to have to knock a hole in the roof."

The survival stories poured out all afternoon, as people slowly decided where to go next. None of the residents expected the flooding that swamped half of the city.

Meanwhile, Slidell neighborhoods that escaped serious flooding were scattered with downed trees. Returning evacuees used chainsaws to carve narrow paths through the wreckage across the city, including in neighborhoods French Branch Estates, Old River Road and the Village Acadian.

Parts of the Crossgates neighborhood on Military Road experienced up to 2 feet of flooding in homes.

In Mandeville, police made headway assessing damage on the Lakefront.

When they cleared a route through Lafitte Street, they discovered several demolished buildings, including Rips restaurant and a few homes. Lt. Thomas Breazeale said the storm surge reached one or two blocks past Lakeshore Drive.

STAFF PHOTO BY DAVID GRUNFELD

SLIDELL: Boats were blown out of Lake Ponchartrain by the Hurricane Katrina storm surge that reached as high as 16 feet in some areas of Slidell.

STAFF PHOTO BY DAVID GRUNFELD

SLIDELL: The devestation in some neighborhoods was overwhelming. “Oh, man, oh, man, I just don't know, I had no idea it would be as bad as this," said Slidell resident Mike Parks.

"We really thought we could make it; we were told the water had never gotten much higher than the docks, even in big storms."

ODETTE NASH

Couple uses their skiff to aid stranded people

‘I had no idea it would be this bad’

By James Varney
Staff writer

As he pushed his skiff past the big boats aground on the interstate, Mike Parks feared the worst.

On the horizon, Parks could just make out the catamaran perched atop the twin-span bridge over Lake Pontchartrain. To his left, car antennas poked above the surface of the white caps splashing against a dealership's display windows, and to his right was the vast, watery plain of Oak Harbor and Eden Isles, the upscale neighborhood that at daybreak had contained more than 1,000 houses, a marina and a sprawling three-story apartment complex with scores of units.

The north shore of Lake Pontchartrain – the one that existed before Hurricane Katrina – was some three miles to the south. The home Parks and his wife, Melinda, had moved into less than a year ago was about 2 3/4 miles south. It was Monday about 3 p.m., roughly four hours after Katrina's ferocious eye wall had shaved Slidell and roared off northeastward toward the Mississippi coast.

"Oh, man, oh, man, I just don't know, I had no idea it would be as bad as this," Parks said as he navigated what had once been a golf course fairway. In every direction, Parks saw houses without roofs, with boats smashed through garages and walls, with possessions mean and exquisite spilling into the dirty water that lapped into their foyers and bedrooms.

The tops of street signs provided some landmarks, but what was once an intricate web of streets and canals was now simply a marine wasteland.

"Even if insurance covers it, do we want to rebuild?" Melinda asked.

Parks, jumping out of the skiff now and then to push it across the shallow water over a driveway, shook his head.

"Let's see if there is anybody we can help first," he said.

And so, like a Titanic lifeboat crew, they puttered amid the wreckage of Slidell, where authorities said Katrina had killed at least two people and left untold hundreds, perhaps thousands, of residents homeless.

In knots creeping along the water's edge, or in motorboats that criss-crossed the flooded landscape, people scavenged for scraps of their former lives. Communications were out everywhere; even fire and rescue crews were having trouble staying in touch with each other. News from New Orleans or Mississippi was non-existent and the blackout over St. Tammany Parish meant that radio broadcasts carried no information about what was happening across the north shore.

Throughout Oak Harbor and Eden Isles, a creepy calm seemed to have settled over the flotsam of forever-shattered lives. In canal network cul de sacs, swaths of boards and shingles and bobbing coolers and appliances formed what appeared to be a solid mass, as if one could walk across the wreckage to the flooded homes just beyond. Boats, some of them whacking big yachts, were aground at weird angles, the air filled with the high-pitched thwack and ping of lines whipping across their booms and masts. Cars had been tossed into homes. Insulation foam bubbled around the fringes of ragged, ripped edges of houses.

And then a screaming came across the water. To his right, Parks saw a woman gesticulating wildly from a second-floor balcony at her home. Parks, a captain of sport fishing boats and offshore supply vessels who works out of Gulfport, Miss., navigated closer.

The woman, Ann Nash, told Parks her in-laws were trapped in their house nearby. She had spoken to them that morning, as they crawled into their attic to escape the rising storm surge. Parks agreed to check on them.

But the exact address proved difficult to find. So the Parkses pushed on further south toward their own house, figuring they could stop by Nash's in-laws on the return. By now, they were certain they would find little, if anything, worth salvaging.

And then, incredibly, when they motored into the canal behind Cutty Sark Cove, there was their home, largely intact, and sitting atop one of the few mounds of grass still visible. Inside, a slippery layer of mud coated the stone floors and had ruined the carpets, but the water had not reached that high, and the meticulous cutout and crayoned tigers and balloon vendors on one wall – the artwork of Aaron and Brady Parks, identical 2-year-old twins currently residing with grandparents in Baton Rouge – was intact.

Melinda Parks opened and closed her mouth like a fish out of water.

"I do not believe it," she said, shaking her head. "I am pleasantly surprised beyond belief."

The Parkses quickly surveyed their astonishing good fortune, stuffed Hershey bars and crackers into a Ziploc baggie, and returned to their skiff. This time, rather than leave the search for the Nashes to chance, he picked up Ann Nash at her home and set off once again.

With Ann Nash guiding, Parks returned to a pocket of a canal he'd searched before, but this time the cries from the boat were returned from shore. Jim Nash, 77, and his wife, Odette, 65, had heard the yells before but could not get out of their attic in time to respond.

Parks cut the motor and the skiff drifted on to the back porch, and the grateful, stunned Nash family was reunited. They were surprisingly upbeat given what they'd endured.

"We really thought we could make it; we were told the water had never gotten much higher than the docks, even in big storms," Odette Nash said.

Indeed, she had just ended a cell phone conversation with an evacuated neighbor about 8 a.m. when she looked out her back window and saw the water coming over the edge and charging her house like a train in a tunnel.

"We just scrambled to the attic and prayed, and we've been up there ever since," Odette said.

As the now-crowded skiff returned to Ann Nash's house, Parks encountered two St. Tammany Parish Sheriff's deputies in another boat.

"Are you OK?" one deputy shouted across the canal. "What are you doing out here?"

"We're fine," Parks sang back. "We're rescuing people."

"That's just fine. Thank you," the deputy replied. "We're the first boat that could get out here."

"Second boat," Melinda Parks said softly, a smile creasing her face.

The Nashes deposited on higher ground, Parks turned his skiff toward the Oak Harbor marina and, across the horizon, the oddly lumpy line of the twin-span bridges that carry Interstate 10 across Lake Pontchartrain. Even from a distance, it was clear the marooned catamaran was the least of the bridges' concerns. Katrina had left both the eastbound and westbound elevated stretches structurally unsound.

The same was true of the marina, where boats had been tossed about recklessly. One giant vessel had pierced a three-story apartment building, parked their half inside and half outside the wrecked building. Now, hours into his odyssey, Parks faced less light and more wind, and he needed to return to the interstate where he could pull his skiff ashore before dark.

And then another voice wafted across the increasingly unruly water.

On a strip of land still left along what had been the lake's north shore, standing among the demolished camps and houses and restaurants that had once faced the water, a man was waving his arms above his head.

Parks crossed over, his skiff slapping on the waves, and found Jim Elorriaga, a New Orleans blues musician who goes by the simpler name of E.L.

"Do you want a lift?" Melinda Parks yelled. "Oh, God, do I," E.L. said.

As the skiff pulled up in some reeds, E.L. began to relate his tale.

Trapped in his apartment along the lake's edge, he had gone first to the second floor and then the roof as Katrina built in fury and the water rose.

Finally, with the water closing over the top of his roof, Elorriaga saw the Sundance sailboat adrift and passing nearby. He said he jumped to a floating refrigerator and from there to the boat, which began to lurch about crazily in the tempest.

Eventually, the Sundance rammed an even bigger boat, and the two of them ran aground in a T. With his belongings and home gone, Elorriaga sat down to wait for help.

"I even lost my dog, Woody," he said in despair.

But, as it happened, the Parkses had seen Woody earlier. He was nearby, jumping among the wreckage floating around a gas storage tank. Elorriaga splashed off and soon was carrying Woody in his arms.

It was nearing 7 p.m. when Parks finally turned north and headed back to the interstate. By the time he returned, the water had receded enough so that Slidell Fire Department units had been able to set up a command post near where the interstate meets Lake Pontchartrain.

Firefighters scrambled into the shallows and helped pull up Parks' boat, and then got a heavy jacket around Elorriaga. The rescue crews were still desperate for information, asking about survivors and the extent of the destruction in Eden Isles, and possessing little news about New Orleans or Mississippi.

"It's like St. Tammany is a black hole," one firefighter muttered. "They don't know anything at all has happened here."

HURRICANE KATRINA AFTERMATH

Feds' disaster planning shifts away from preparedness

By Bill Walsh,
Bruce Alpert
and John McQuaid
Staff writers

STAFF PHOTO BY DAVID GRUNFELD

SLIDELL: With the big one talked about for years, the focus now is on why federal and state officials did so little in creating an adequate plans for the aftermath.

WASHINGTON -- No one can say they didn't see it coming.

For years before Hurricane Katrina roared ashore Monday morning, devastating the Gulf Coast, officials from Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama have been warning about their vulnerability to the storms that swirl menacingly in the Gulf of Mexico every hurricane season.

Now, in the wake of one of the worst storms ever, serious questions are being asked about the lack of preparation.

On Tuesday, looters could be seen carrying away whole shelves of merchandise from stores in New Orleans with no police in sight. A shortage of boats left people stranded on their roofs a day after the storm passed. State, local and federal rescue workers, all supplied with different radio equipment, were having trouble communicating with one another.

Meanwhile, local officials said that had Washington heeded their warnings about the dire need for hurricane protection, including fortifying homes, building up levees and repairing barrier islands, the damage might not have been nearly as bad as it was.

"If we had been investing resources in restoring our coast, it wouldn't have prevented the storm, but the barrier islands would have absorbed some of the tidal surge," said Rep. Bobby Jindal, R-La. "People's lives are at stake. We need to take this more seriously."

Jindal and other elected officials credited the Federal Emergency Management Agency for positioning stockpiles of food, water and medical supplies throughout Louisiana and Mississippi more than a day before Katrina made landfall. The quick response was triggered by an unusually early emergency declaration from President Bush.

Still, the level of devastation from a storm that everyone agreed was not a "worst-case scenario" has focused attention on whether policymakers took the much-heralded threat seriously and whether adequate plans are in place for future natural disasters.

'Wake-up call'

Warning signs have been everywhere. More people than ever are living near hurricane-prone coastlines, earthquake fault lines, forest fire-prone areas and flood plains, a trend that has created a landscape of expanding risk, with more people, homes and communities in the path of danger.

Not surprisingly, disaster costs are rising to levels unimagined by generation ago. This poses a growing problem for insurers, governments and the people in harm's way. The number of federal emergency disaster declarations doubled from an average of 23 a year during 1980-84 to 53 a year from 2000 to 2004.

Hurricane Andrew set a record of more than $30 billion in losses in 1992, followed quickly by California's Northridge earthquake the next year, which cost more than $40 billion. Early estimates have put the cost of Hurricane Katrina at upwards of $19 billion.

"We've been on this trajectory for about 15 years. We're seeing increasingly bigger disasters and increasingly higher losses," said Kathleen Tierney, director of the Natural Hazards Research and Applications Information Center at the University of Colorado. "Now just about any place a hurricane is going to come in, it's going to hit a developed area. This is the way it's going to be from now on."

Disaster and emergency experts have warned for years that governments, especially the federal government, have put so much stress on disaster response that they have neglected policies to minimize a disaster's impact in advance.

"In the same way that Hurricane Andrew was a wake-up call to Florida, this storm will be a wake-up call to Louisiana and Mississippi," said Robert Hartwig, chief economist for the Insurance Information Institute. "It's going to be very evident that there were an enormous number of vulnerabilities that weren't addressed. There's going to be a lot of finger-pointing."

Focus on coast

Louisiana's elected officials were quick to seize on the disaster to press for long-requested federal financial assistance in shoring up Louisiana's coastline. The coastal wetlands erode at a rate of 24 square miles a year and expose south Louisiana to increasing danger.

Until recently, efforts to squeeze coastal protection money out of Washington have met with resistance. The Louisiana congressional delegation urged Congress earlier this year to dedicate a stream of federal money to Louisiana's coast, only to be opposed by the White House.

Ultimately a deal was struck to steer $540 million to the state over four years. The total coast of coastal repair work is estimated to be $14 billion.

In its budget, the Bush administration also had proposed a significant reduction in funding for southeast Louisiana's chief hurricane protection project. Bush proposed $10.4 million, a sixth of what local officials say they need.

Some critics said that in a post-Sept. 11 world, when the Department of Homeland Security is focused on preventing another terrorist attack, not enough emphasis is being placed on preparing for natural disasters.

A case in point, they say, is the decision to take away from FEMA its historic responsibility for disaster preparedness. Now the agency, part of the Department of Homeland Security, will focus on post-disaster search and rescue.

The Homeland Security agency plans to create a new directorate of preparedness, covering planning for both terrorism and natural disasters. But it is still on the drawing board.

Russ Knocke, a Homeland Security spokesman, said the reorganization will lead to better disaster preparation.

"It will let the experts on planning and preparation focus on that and the experts on search and rescue focus on that," Knocke said.

But experts in disaster planning say that it has already sown confusion among those on the front lines of preparing for disasters like Hurricane Katrina.

"It's very confusing to the state and local governments," said James Lee Witt, the FEMA director in the Clinton administration. "Who do they go to and how is it going to be coordinated now? It's really going to be fragmented. I've talked to a lot of the states, and I don't think they're very happy about this."

Bill Walsh can be contacted at bill.walsh@newhouse.com. Bruce Alpert can be contacted at bruce.alpert@newhouse.com. John McQuaid can be contacted at john.mcquaid@newhouse.com.

Broussard pleas with Jefferson residents to stay away

By Mark Schleifstein
Staff writer

In a bleak plea to Jefferson Parish residents, President Aaron Broussard urged evacuated residents to stay away from their homes until Monday, and insisted that most areas of the parish won't be habitable for at least a month.

In an interview on WWL-AM radio, broadcasting from an emergency shelter on Ames Boulevard on Jefferson Parish's West Bank, Broussard said he was awaiting the helicopter arrival of Gov. Kathleen Blanco to give her a handwritten note containing the parish's most pressing needs.

At the top of the list is a request for the American Red Cross to immediately staff four evacuation shelters for which parish officials already have identified buildings. Broussard also wants an immediate armed National Guard presence throughout the parish to arrest and detain looters, who he said were emptying stores.

He said he would ask Blanco to authorize the establishment of a military prison for looters at Fort Polk in northwest Louisiana, and that the National Guard transport all looters there as quickly as possible.

Broussard also wants State Police and military police to set up five checkpoints at major entrances to the parish to stop people from re-entering. Jefferson Parish sheriff's officers were blocking exit ramps on the elevated West Bank Expressway on Tuesday.

Jefferson Parish residents with proper identification will be allowed to return Monday, Broussard said, but only to gather whatever belongings they can and check damage to their homes.

"I will tell you that you that when you get to local streets, you're on your own," he said. "You may have to walk for blocks to get to your homes. "Then get what you can, go back to your car and find a safe place to live for the next month," he said.

Broussard said he's asked that National Guard and other military units bring in street-clearing equipment that will clear an east-west and north-south route of major streets to the parish, a job he dubbed Operation Snowplow.

Operation Information will be an attempt by the parish to re-establish its Web site, which eventually will contain block-by-block status reports on damage for the public.

Operation Water Back will be aimed at restoring water and sewerage service on the east bank and West Bank, Broussard said. He said firefighters could only stand by and watch Monday when a home and a business burned to the ground because of a lack of water pressure in fire hydrants.

He said people should be hesitant to use toilets until the water is restored, adding that he's carrying a plastic bag around for his own waste.

Operation Feed and Care is a plan to have American Red Cross, Salvation Army and other charity organizations set up food kitchens in the parish.

Broussard said returning to the New Orleans area could be difficult for some time, as the Interstate 10 twin span from Slidell are severely damaged and only emergency traffic is being allowed on the Lake Pontchartrain Causeway until engineers can assure that high water hasn't knocked any bridge segments out of kilter.

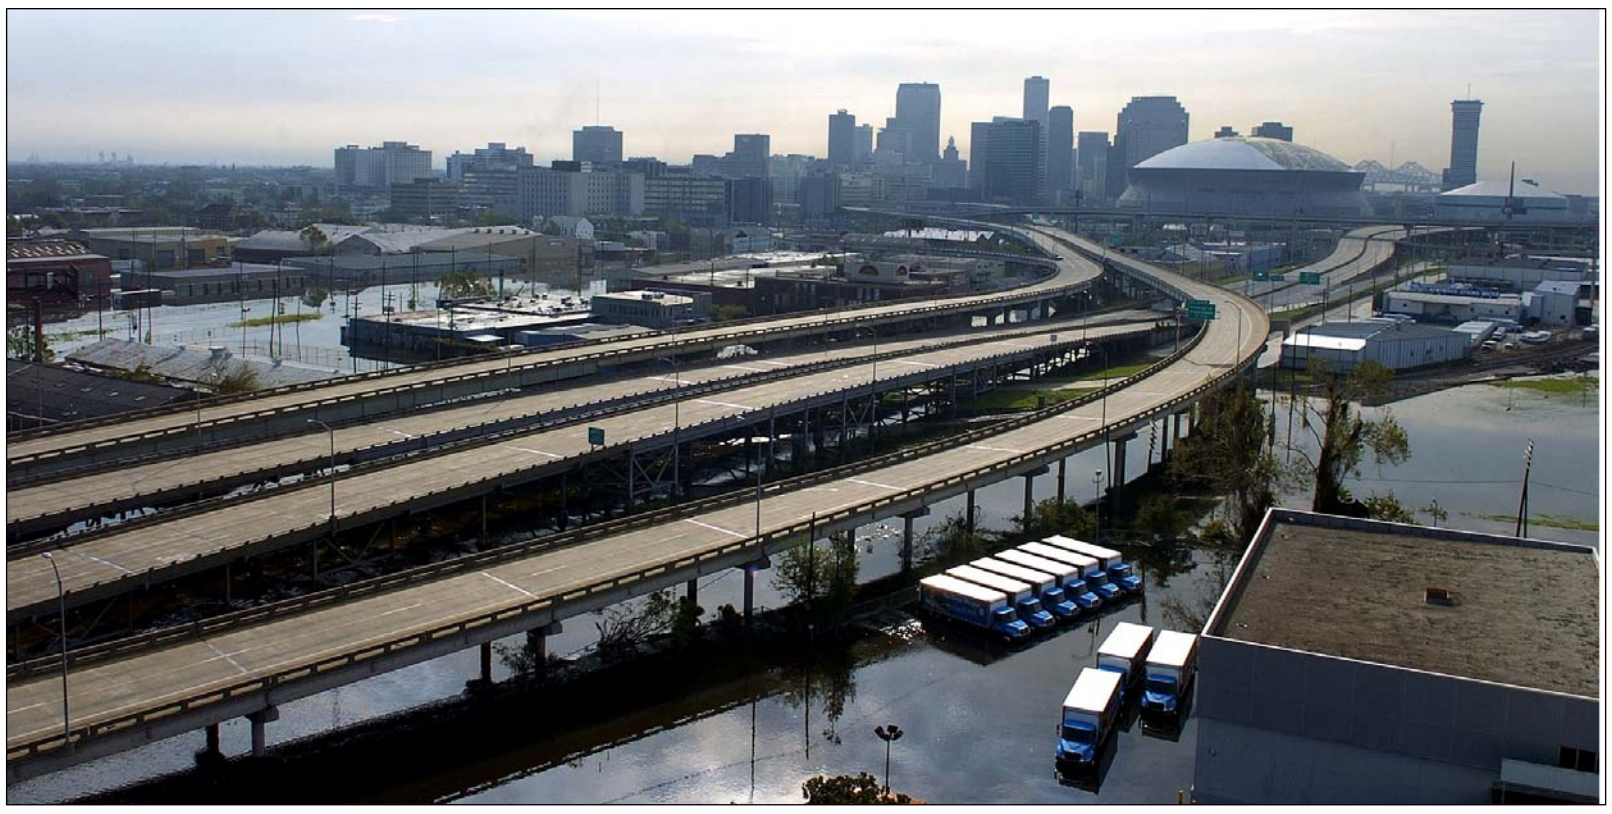
Special checkpoints eventually will be established to provide credentials to medical personnel and to owners and operators of stores and gas stations who might be able to reopen and supply those remaining in the devastated area, Broussard said. But he said business owners will not be able to tell whether their stores are in any shape to open until they return to inspect them.

Broussard warned parish residents that living in the community will be difficult for some time, as it could take as long as a month to restore electricity and water.

"Every thing we do in Jefferson Parish for now will be Flintstones and not the Jetsons," he said, and reminded listeners that a curfew will be enforced and martial law will be in effect for the foreseeable future.

Broussard also reported that in addition to sewage and chemicals that might be in floodwaters in parts of the parish, parish officials already have spotted at least one three-foot shark.

"The other sharks spotted are the ones that are looting our stores, and they will be dealt with," Broussard said.



He said Sheriff Harry Lee was continuing to rescue people from flooded homes Tuesday, and 200 of his own deputies and their families from the Landmark Hotel in Metairie, where they were stranded by floodwaters.

Lee requested that residents with flatboats to bring them to the Sam's Wholesale Club parking lot on at Airline Boulevard and Cleary Avenue, where they would be used to assist in rescue operations.

Councilman Elton LaGasse said it was too early to determine how much damage had been done to Jefferson Parish schools, but estimated that repairing damage and finding enough teachers to hold classes could delay the opening of school for two months after Labor Day.

HURRICANE KATRINA AFTERMATH

In search of higher ground

STAFF PHOTO BY KATHY ANDERSON

WATER RISING: An aerial view of the city of New Orleans from The Times-Picayune tower on Howard Avenue on Tuesday.

STAFF PHOTO BY KATHY ANDERSON

IN UNCHARTED WATERS: A man hands a child over a fence Tuesday as a group of residents moved to get to Interstate 10, which was one of the places where people could reach high ground in New Orleans on Tuesday.

STAFF PHOTO BY ALEX BRANDON

BOAT PEOPLE: An Orleans Parish boat carries victims to higher ground along North Broad Street in New Orleans on Tuesday.

STAFF PHOTO BY KATHY ANDERSON

UNQUENCHED FLAMES: A fire burns out of control Tuesday in the city after Hurricane Katrina devastated the city of New Orleans.

On-air images anchor force of hurricane

By Dave Walker
TV columnist

New Orleans TV newscasters have mostly covered Hurricane Katrina as evacuees, abandoning their local studios to team with corporate cousins or work on impromptu news sets around the region.

With power dead in New Orleans, their viewers were primarily evacuees as well. It's a service that will grow more valuable in the coming days, as departed citizens hang on every word about their damaged city. Until power is restored to New Orleans, Web site simulcasts - at www.wdsu.com and www.wwltv.com - will likely have more (relocated)local viewers than will be able to watch over-the-air signals. I've watched so far from just outside of Baton Rouge, to where I evacuated with my family.

Monday and Tuesday, Meteorologist Bruce Katz and anchor Michael Hill of WGNO-Channel 26 covered the powerful storm's landfall and aftermath from the studios of Baton Rouge ABC affiliate WBRZ-TV. It was there that I, and no doubt many heartsick evacuees, saw the stunning helicopter footage of New Orleans flooding on Monday night.

Also Monday, a team from WWL-Channel 4 set up in a studio in LSU's Manship journalism school. From there, anchor Jennifer Huntley, sportscaster Lee Zurik was acting as news anchor and reporter Bill Capo reported Katrina's swath through southeast Louisiana. Capo filled in as weather guy during Katrina for WWL, which was shorthanded because of David Bernard's recent departure and the arrival of a son to John Gumm, whose wife gave birth during Katrina's approach.

WWL veteran Brad Panovich, now a staff member at WCNC-TV in Charlotte, N.C., was also brought in to pinch-hit. WWL appeared to shift back to its French Quarter studio Monday night. Starting Tuesday night, WWL's signa was to be carried statewide by Louisiana Public Broadcasting affiliates.

Also visible in Baton Rouge on Monday morning was a dim New Orleans signal from WDSU-Channel 6. Staffers from that station, including Norman Robinson, Dan Milham and Rich Lenz among others, reported Katrina's landfall from WAPT-TV in Jackson, Miss. WDSU's broadcast signal apparently went dark late Monday afternoon, but not before some stellar work by reporters still in New Orleans, starting with a live audio report at about 7 a.m. Monday from WDSU reporter/anchor Roop Raj, who delivered the first account of blown-out windows in downtown New Orleans structures.

A "Today" show videophone report shortly thereafter had the first pictures of the same scene. Later footage of the Hyatt's upper-level glass damage would play repeatedly on cable news outlets and became the first hint to national audiences of Katrina's force. Lenz and WAPT carried the first reports of possible water pump failure in New Orleans. A few minutes later, Ed Reams, stationed inside the Superdome, filed a live audio report about the structure's failing roof. Positioned beneath the breach, he felt - then reported - the first raindrops inside the dome. A ghostly camera-phone still photo of the roof holes, seemingly shot from the dome's floor, became another iconic image in national coverage. The pictures were used in a mid-afternoon MSNBC report by NBC Nightly News anchor Brian Williams, who'd spent Monday in the dome. "We found out today (that) they have some roof issues," said Williams.

> "You guys are doing a great job of keeping the public up to speed."
> RAY NAGIN, concluding his interview with Bruce Katz

There was no apparent signal from WVUE-Channel 8, at least in Baton Rouge, though the station's Web site - www.wvue.com - was still being updated with text news stories on Tuesday.

Working from WBRZ's Baton Rouge studio, Katz and Hill fed evacuees timely information about the state of the storm. Monday night, that's where we watched the first stunning helicopter pictures of the flooded city.

Earlier that day, Katz conducted a telephone interview with New Orleans Mayor Ray Nagin, who confirmed several news items that had been tentatively reported there and elsewhere.

Nagin's first words: "The city is under siege by Katrina." Nagin then handed his phone to Entergy's Dan Packer, who, hours before the worst weather subsided, described the earliest stages of the city's electricity woes.

Packer then handed the phone back to Nagin, who concluded the interview by saying to Katz, "You guys are doing a great job of keeping the public up to speed."

No argument here.

Water endangered city's public records

By Bruce Nolan
Staff writer

Floodwater from Hurricane Katrina is seeping into the basement of the Civil District Court in downtown New Orleans, endangering 150 years of real estate and other records, Civil District Sheriff Paul Valteau said.

The city's vital notary, mortgage and real estate records are locked away in rooms in the building's darkened basement, where water is beginning to puddle.

Some of the records go back to 1850, Valteau said.

Valteau has charge of securty for no public buildings but offices supervised by other city officials who may have evacuated, he said.

Valteau said if the situation becomes much worse, he may force the doors open and haul the records upstairs into the lobby of the court building to save them from immediate damage.

What's a bar's best defense? To stay open

By Dante Ramos
Staff writer

Ms. Mae's Bar has been open around the clock at Napoleon and Magazine streets for 11 years. The bar stayed open during Hurricane Katrina, but owner Mae Brigham decided to shut down Tuesday at 1 a.m.

"Everybody was just worn out," she said.

But Brigham reopened about 9 a.m. later that morning, partly as a defense against looters. The bar is located across from a police station, and Brigham figured looters would be unlikely to attack a busy bar, especially since some of the patrons might be police officers.

By early Tuesday evening, the bar had become the meeting place for residents of surrounding neighborhoods. Patrons sitting outside on the sidewalk watched a National Guard truck pass by with a load of rescuees.

Pay phones pick up when cellular service fails

By Dante Ramos
Staff writer

Cellular telephone service was one of the first casualties of Hurricane Katrina. So pedestrians and bicyclists resorted to a neglected technology: pay phones.

The BellSouth pay phone at Prytania Street and Louisiana Avenue became a busy stop for people trying to catch up on storm news.

At one point, a woman in medical scrubs stood at the phone, arguing with a person on the other end.

Scott Kroehle, 23, originally from Cleveland, has only lived in town a month. He had been coming and going from the location, using the phone to check in with family. That's how he learned about the levee breach. After ending one call, he immediately got another.

Our Opininons

Katrina's reign and chaos not welcome

In the hellish aftermath of Hurricane Katrina, it is imperative to restore some semblance of order to our wounded hometown.

But on the second day after the storm slammed into Southeast Louisiana, chaos flourished in parts of New Orleans.

Unfathomably, some New Orleans police officers and fire fighters, as well as harbor police joined a crazed mob in looting the Wal-Mart on Tchoupitoulas Street.

As some police officers were carting off flat screen TVs, their co-workers stood by and watched the crowd plunder the store.

Some fire department employees loaded a utility truck with fishing gear, and one harbor police officer pointed another toward the sporting goods department.

The level of shamelessness and lawlessness was almost incomprehensible.

Tens of thousands of New Orleans area residents have lost their homes, their cars and virtually every other possession. Countless others have lost their lives and scores of desperately frightened people still clung to rooftops Tuesday awaiting rescue as waters continued to rise.

In the face of such heartache and despair, it is a despicable act for law enforcement officers to turn into common hoodlums. It is bad enough that the officers originally on the scene refused to keep order. It is unforgivable that some of them joined in the looting.

It took shotgun-toting police brought in to reinforce order to the store.

Police superintendent must shed his force of the obviously renegade element in its midst. The fire department and harbor police must do the same.

This community has months of back-breaking work ahead to clean up and rebuild. Residents must be able to trust that they can return to their mangled homes in safety, and they must be able to trust the officers who were sworn to protect them.

Getting out was the easy part

By Chris Rose
Columnist

I got out.

I'm mystified by the notion that so many people didn't even try, but that's another story for another time.

We left Saturday, my wife, kids and me. We went first to Picayune, Miss., thinking that a Category 3 storm would flood New Orleans and knock out power, but that we'd be dry and relatively comfortable in the piney woods while the city dried out.

Sunday morning, of course, Katrina was massive red blob on our TV screens - now a Cat 5 - so we packed up and left again.

We left my in-laws behind in Picayune. They wouldn't come with us. Self-sufficient country folk; sometimes you can't tell 'em nothing.

We don't know what happened to them. My wife's dad and her brother and their families: No word. Only hope.

Like so many people around the country wondering what happened to those still unaccounted for; we just don't know. That's the hardest part.

If you take the images you've seen on TV and picked up off the radio and Internet, and you try to apply what you know to the people and places you don't know about, well, the mind starts racing, assumptions are made and well … it consumes you.

The kids ask you questions. You don't have answers. Sometimes they look at me and though they don't say it, I can see they're wondering: Daddy, where are you?

My 6-year-old daughter, she's onto this thing. What is she thinking?

We spent Sunday night in a no-tell motel in a forgotten part of downtown Vicksburg; a neighborhood teetering between a familiar antiquated charm and hopeless decay. Truth is, it called to mind my beloved New Orleans.

Most of the folks in the hotel seem to live there permanently and it had a hard-luck feel to it. It was the kind of place where your legs start itching in the bed, and you think the worst. You don't want your kids to touch the carpet or the tub, and we huddled together, and I read them to sleep.

Monday morning, my wife's aunt told us they had a generator in Baton Rouge. As Katrina marched north and east, we bailed on our sullen little hotel and drove down along he western ridge of the storm, mostly alone on the road.

Gas was no problem. We had catfish and pulled pork in a barbeque joint in Natchez, Miss., and the folks there - everyone we have met along our three-day journey - has said the same thing: Good luck, folks. We love your city. Take care of it for us.

Oh, my city. We have spent hours and hours listening to the radio. Image upon image piling up in your head.

What about school? What about everyone's jobs? Did all our friends get out? Are there still trees on the streetcar line? What will our economy be like with no visitors? How many are dead? Do I have a roof? Have the looters found me yet? When can we go home?

Like I said, it consumes you as you sit helplessly miles from home, unable to help anyone, unable to do anything.

If I could, what I'd do first is hurt the looters. I'd hurt them bad.

But you have to forget all that. You have to focus on what is at hand, what you can reach and when you have three little kids lost at sea, they are what's at hand and what you can reach.

I brought them to a playground in Baton Rouge Tuesday afternoon. They'd been bottled up for days.

Finally unleashed, they ran, they climbed, they fell down, they fought, they cried, they made me laugh, they drove me crazy; they did the things that makes them kids.

It grounds you. You take a breath. You count to ten. Maybe - under the circumstances - you go to twenty or thirty this time.

And tonight, we'll just read them to sleep again.

We have several books with us because - and this is rich - we brought on our evacuation all the clothes and things we planned to bring on a long-weekend trip that we were going to take over Labor Day weekend.

To the beach. To Fort Morgan, right at the mouth of Mobile Bay. Man.

Instead of that, I put on my sun tan lotion and went out in the yard of the house where we're staying in Baton Rouge and I raked a massive pile of leaves and limbs from the yard and swept the driveway.

Doing yard work and hitting the jungle gym on the Day After. Pretending life goes on. Just trying to stay busy. Just trying not to think. Just trying not to fail, really.

Gotta keep moving.

STAFF PHOTO BY TED JACKSON

SUPERDOME: WIth local hospitals in shambles, medical personnel made life-or-death decisions all day Tuesday. Those they judged seriously ill, were airlifted to hospitals all over the state.

Empty I-10 a triage area

By Jim Varney
Staff writer

They came from eastern New Orleans, Lakeview, Gentilly and Hollygrove on helicopters that arrived one after another and landed on Interstate 10 where it intersects with Causeway Boulevard.

On a normal day, the point where the two thoroughfares cross - often referred to as the busiest intersection in the state - would be choked with vehicles. But heavy chopper traffic was one of many signs that Tuesday was anything but normal.

The 500 or so people who emerged from the helicopters on I-10 were tired, wet and bedraggled after being rescued from rooftops, attics and other places of refuge that proved no match for the flooding spawned by Hurricane Katrina. And Tuesday afternoon, with nowhere else to go, they ended up at a makeshift triage center staffed by paramedics and volunteers.

Some victims landing at the center of the interstate who were in dire need of medical attention were packed into ambulances and transported to hospitals to the north. Others who were just weak or spent from the emotional ordeal of escaping the storm with nothing more than the clothes on their backs were taken to a temporary holding place on the campus of Louisiana State University in Baton Rouge. Their blank and expressionless faces told the story of the catastrophe that was Katrina.

Kim Lewis, a paramedic from Lafayette who worked in rescue efforts during California wildfires, was one of those trying to help the victims.

"I've never seen anything like this," she said, taking a break from her duties to snack on crackers. "It seems the whole city has been triaged."

Alex and Edna Burkley, who were rescued from their home in the 3900 block of Paris Avenue, were among those waiting at the center and wondering what will happen next.

"We've got no food, no water," said Alex Burkley, 73. "We have to take our medicine and we can't even find water to take a sip."

Dorothy Spears, 55, was pulled from the second story window of her home on Dwyer Road in eastern New Orleans by a man who was dropped down on a line from a helicopter hovering above the floodwaters. The chopper took 11 people from her home.

Deciding to ride out the storm, Barbara Carroll hunkered down in her home on Milne Drive in Lakeview. But at about 2 p.m. Monday, water began to come through the floor of her single-story home. By the time she looked outside, the street had become a roaring current.

Carroll and members of her family used an inner tube to take them across the street to a neighbor's two-story home. Not long after, a fire truck took them to the Jefferson Parish side of the 17th Street Canal. They walked from there to the triage center.Some at the center were restless, wondering what would happen to them. National Guard troops were on hand to control the crowd.

Len Martin, 55, of New Orleans, said he had been living on noodles and pickles for two days and was getting a bit anxious.

"I don't think they have a clue of what they're going to do with us," he said.

While their stories of rescue varied, all of those at the triage center seemed to have the same feeling of surreal disbelief.

"I lived through Betsy," Martin said, referring to the 1965 hurricane that devastated the New Orleans area, "but I never imagined anything like this."

Schools postpone games

Status on Saints home opener still unclear

From staff reports

Because of the continuing effects of Hurricane Katrina and need for LSU campus resources in the relief effort, the Tigers' Sept. 3 home football opener against North Texas has been postponed, school officials announced Tuesday.

"I don't have any doubt, whatsoever, that all Louisiana (residents) who are looking at the front pages of the papers and are looking at what's been broadcast on TV recognize that this is of epic proportions in terms of the tragedy," LSU Chancellor Sean O'Keefe said. "So, as a consequence, (fans) are going to be extremely understandable.

"We're a part of this community -- and we recognize it first and foremost -- and we worry about each other."

Police barricaded parts of North Stadium Drive, the road that runs between Tiger Stadium and the Pete Maravich Assembly Center, to clear a path for medical vehicles and supply trucks.

The Carl Maddox Fieldhouse is being used as a special needs shelter, while the adjacent PMAC has been designated as a triage unit for medical emergencies. Also, orange cones lined in the shaped of "X" on the infield of the Bernie Moore Track Stadium served as a landing area for helicopters.

Originally, O'Keefe intended to play the game as scheduled, and for it to be a source of civic pride, but reconsidered because the logistical complexities of hosting games in Tiger Stadium could create traffic problems for medical vehicles and take away resources better used in the relief effort.

LSU and North Texas will determine the rescheduled date, which might require some creative maneuvering since the two schools do not share a common bye week. An announcement is expected by Thursday.

"The football team feels just like you do, just like we all do," Athletic Director Skip Bertman said. "They want to help. And hopefully, against Arizona State (on Sept. 10), that will be a time -- after some recovery and some mourning -- when the athletics can once again act as a bonding agent to get everybody back together on a positive note."

Damage around campus was minimal, including some to the partially constructed West Upper Deck of Tiger Stadium. The hurricane should not alter the athletic department's plan for all seats to be habitable by Sept. 24, when Tennessee comes to town.

TULANE

If Tulane has trouble opening its doors in the near future, that could lead to a football team playing without a university. That may be a first, and brings to mind all sorts of issues regarding not only rescheduling, but academic progress.

"That's the type of situation that doesn't come up very often, thankfully," NCAA spokesman Erik Christianson said Tuesday. "We'd certainly work with one of our members to be as flexible as possible. It will really depend on what transpires at Tulane."

In the meantime, Conference-USA Commissioner Britton Banowsky said his office has received many calls asking how they can help Tulane and Southern Mississippi. The game between the two, scheduled for Sunday at Hattiesburg, Miss., has been postponed until Nov. 26.

On Tuesday, the Green Wave traveled to Dallas, where it will practice at either SMU's Pettus Practice Fields or at Ford Stadium.

Tulane, Southern Miss and Conference USA officials made the decision to postpone the game Tuesday in light of the dislocation of the Green Wave because of damage to USM's M.M. Roberts Stadium and other parts of the Hattiesburg, Miss., campus.

Tulane's next scheduled football game is Sept. 17 in the Superdome against Mississippi State. The Dome was damaged in the storm and its status has yet to be determined.

Conference-USA commissioner Britton Banowsky said he was aware of damage to the Dome plus the prospect of a continuing evacuation of New Orleans, but added it would be premature to speculate whether the Green Wave's entire season is in jeopardy or at the least the team might play all of its games on the road.

SAINTS

The Saints will fly to San Antonio following Thursday's 8 p.m. game at Oakland, making that their home base for the immediate future, said director of media and public relations Greg Bensel.

Several teams and cities offered assistance. But Saints owner Tom Benson has long-standing ties to San Antonio, and that is where the team evacuated to before Hurricane Ivan last year. The Saints are planning to stay in San Antonio until their season opener Sept. 11 at Carolina.

Where they will play the home opener, Sept. 18, against the New York Giants, is uncertain. General Manager Mickey Loomis and the NFL are looking for a site, including college stadiums.

PREPS

Nothing official has been released yet, but the high school football season could be in jeopardy. Several areas of the city are under water, meaning school could be out for several months.

LSU sports centers now medical centers

Hundreds already have been treated

By John Pope
Staff writer

BATON ROUGE -- In the shadow of Tiger Stadium, where the LSU Tigers were scheduled to launch their football season Saturday, two field hospitals have been set up in other sports centers to treat thousands of medical refugees from Hurricane Katrina.

On the floor of Pete Maravich Assembly Center, the home of LSU's basketball team, doctors and nurses bustled from patient to patient as they were wheeled in from ambulances.

Occasionally, helicopters landed on a brightly lit athletic field.

"We're trying to set up a 200-bed hospital," said Dr. Chris Trevino, medical director of Ascension Parish.

"It's for critically ill patients only, and we're moving them through as quickly as possible."

Since the hospital opened Monday, the staff, made up mostly of volunteers, has treated 300 to 400 patients, nearly all from the New Orleans area, he said.

"They're pretty sick; they need to get special care," Trevino said.

So far, most of the people brought to the LSU campus had been in hospitals and nursing homes, he said.

They were suffering from exposure and chronic diseases such as diabetes and high blood pressure that were worsened by the storm, Trevino said.

"We expect injuries afterward" as more people are rescued and brought here, he said.

In the Carl Maddox Fieldhouse nearby, the track lanes and sports courts are covered by chairs and stretchers in what has become a clinic for patients with special medical needs, such as chronic ailments.

Some arrive on their own, and some have been sent by the Federal Emergency Management Agency, said Dr. Pat Cain of Earl K. Long Medical Center.

After triage, patients may be discharged to go home, they may be sent to a general shelter if they seem healthy, or they may be treated there, he said.

The patient list includes people who have been brought over from the Assembly Center after being sized up there.

When asked how many patients he expected to treat for hurricane-related problems, Cain replied, "Hundreds and hundreds and hundreds."

FEMA and the state Department of Health and Hospitals are running the clinics.

Although Katrina sprang up quickly late last week, many of the medical personnel at the two centers started training for such a calamity last summer when they carried out an exercise here based on a disastrous, yet fictitious, hurricane in New Orleans.

"You can plan for something like this," Trevino said, "but it's difficult to plan for this scope."

KATRINA: THE STORM WE'VE ALWAYS FEARED

The Times-Picayune

50 CENTS 169TH YEAR NO. XXX | THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 1, 2005 | HURRICANE EDITION

HITTING BOTTOM

THE WATER HAS FINALLY STOPPED POURING IN BUT IT COULD BE OCTOBER BEFORE THE CITY DRIES OUT

STAFF PHOTO BY BRETT DUKE

SUPERDOME: A man carries his belongings toward the Superdome on Wednesday. The water later reached a turning point and began moving back into Lake Pontchartrain.

Engineers punching holes in levee to speed draining

From staff reports

New Orleans glimpsed a possible turning point Wednesday as floodwaters that had risen harrowingly for two days reached equilibrium and began spilling back into Lake Pontchartrain through breaches in the levee system, officials said.

At midday, Maj. Gen. Dan Riley, chief of engineers for the Army Corps of Engineers, estimated the floodwaters had receded by as much as 2 feet overnight and would continue to flow out of the city at a rate of about a half-inch per hour - a process that could be slowed, if not temporarily reversed, by the next high tides.

The continuing magnitude of the flooding, with some neighborhoods buried under as much as 20 feet of water, was made clear in Riley's added estimate that it would be at least 30 days before the saucer-shaped city would be pumped out.

To accelerate the draining process, engineers were making plans to punch holes in the lakeside levee, at strategic points starting in eastern New Orleans and working west to the Jefferson Parish line. The levees along the Intracoastal Waterway would also be breached to help dry St. Bernard Parish and the Lower 9th Ward.

The good news about receding floodwaters coincided with a massive ramp-up in federal relief efforts. President Bush, cutting short his Texas vacation, flew low over New Orleans en route to Washington to witness the devastation,

See ENGINEERS, page A-2

Nightmare in the 9th Ward all too real for one woman

By Trymaine D. Lee
Staff writer

Lucrece Phillips' sleepless nights are filled with the images of dead babies and women, and young and old men with tattered T-shirts or graying temples, all of whom she saw floating along the streets of the Lower 9th Ward.

The deaths of many of her neighbors who chose to brave the hurricane from behind the walls of their Painter Street homes shook tears from Phillips' bloodshot eyes Tuesday, as a harrowing tale of death and survival tumbled from her lips.

"The rescuers in the boats that picked us up had to push the bodies back with sticks," Phillips said sobbing. "And there was this little baby. She looked so perfect and so beautiful. I just wanted to scoop her up and breathe life back into her little lungs. She wasn't bloated or anything, just perfect."

A few hours after Phillips, 42, and five members of her family and a friend had been rescued from the attic of her second-story home in the 2700 block of Painter Street, she broke down with a range of emotions. Joy, for surviving the killer floods; pain, for the loss of so many lives; and uncertainty, about the well-being of her family missing in the city's most ravaged quarters.

In a darkened lobby of the downtown Hyatt hotel turned refuge, she hugged an emergency worker closely; a handful of his sweaty blue T-

See NIGHTMARE, page A-3

HURRICANE KATRINA AFTERMATH

Rescues continue as city hospitals lose generator power

ENGINEERS, from page A-1

and he ordered regular Army, Navy and Air Force troops into action on the search-and-rescue front, freeing hard-pressed National Guard units to concentrate on restoring public order and to confront the looting that continued unabated Wednesday.

Health and Human Services Secretary Mike Leavitt declared a federal health emergency throughout the region, a designation that will allow for expedited action on his plan to set up 40 emergency medical centers for evacuees and victims.

Efforts resumed to plug the giant breach in the swollen 17th Street Canal by using Chinook helicopters and barges to drop more than a thousand, 10-ton sandbags and about 250 concrete highway construction barriers into the chasm.

As New Orleans breathed a cautious sigh of relief, less devastated Jefferson Parish grew anxious about water that began sluicing across Interstate 10 at the parish line and into Metairie neighborhoods, according to Jefferson Parish Emergency Management Director Walter Maestri.

The West Bank, far less afflicted by flooding than parts of Orleans and Jefferson parishes across the Mississippi River, found itself a magnet for exhausted refugees, some of whom were seen wandering along highway embankments in search of dry ground, sustenance and a place to stay.

In St. Tammany Parish, Slidell Mayor Ben Morris said half of Slidell's homes were under water and that 2,168 residents had been evacuated to emergency shelters. Upriver in St. Charles and St. John the Baptist parishes, the first wave of evacuees began trickling back to check out what one radio-station caller described as generally intact and dry homes.

Mississippi Gov. Haley Barbour flew over his state's ravaged coastline and likened it to Hiroshima in 1945. Bush ordered four Navy ships to deploy off the state's shore.

CANAL UNDER WATER: Residents walk in waist-deep water on Canal Street Wednesday morning, making their way around submerged cars and other debris. At midday, after floodwaters reached equilibrium and began to spill back into Lake Pontchartrain through breaks in the levees, an official with the Army Corps of Engineers estimated the floodwaters had receded by as much as 2 feet overnight.

STAFF PHOTO BY JOHN McCUSKER

Civilian armadas also massed Wednesday in Orleans and Jefferson parishes. Capt. Timothy Bayard, in charge of maritime operations for the New Orleans Police Department, said as many as 200 volunteers had showed up with skiffs and flatboats, some from as far away as Texas and Kentucky.

Assistance from afar

Working alongside watercraft operated by the state Department of Wildlife and Fisheries, the NOPD and the Coast Guard, the volunteers targeted inundated communities from Lakeview to the Lower 9th Ward, and they plucked survivors off rooftops and out of attics.

As soon as the survivors had been offloaded onto bridges or other elevated surfaces, the rescue teams were rushing back through the flooded city. At times, the influx of the rescued residents threatened to overwhelm the ability of city and military officials to cart away the survivors to more permanent safety.

"We are relying on the military to run the trucks," Bayard said as troop transport vehicles rumbled to and from gathering points, such as interstate on-ramps and the drawbridge that carries St. Claude Avenue across the Industrial Canal and into the Lower 9th Ward.

Bayard stopped short of concurring with New Orleans Mayor Ray Nagin's contention on "Good Morning America" that Katrina's death toll in New Orleans would be "most likely thousands" - figures that would make it the deadliest U.S. natural disaster since the San Francisco earthquake of 1906.

But Bayard acknowledged many elderly or otherwise fragile residents trapped in their homes had made it into attics as floodwaters rose, and later drowned or were killed by scorching temperatures before they could climb onto rooftops and wave to rescue teams.

Bayard declined to estimate a death toll but said, "Absolutely, the worst is yet to come."

Massive evacuations

Meanwhile, 475 buses were dispatched to the Superdome to begin evacuating thousands of refugees who sought shelter there. The evacuees were destined for another temporary shelter, Houston's Astrodome, in what could be "one of the largest, if not the largest, evacuation in this country," said Col. Jeff Smith, deputy director of the Louisiana Office of Homeland Security and Emergency Preparedness. Alternate plans, possibly involving the use of cruise ships and troop transport vessels in the Mississippi River, were being developed for those not well enough to endure the seven-hour bus ride.

At the city's major hospitals, diesel-powered generators critical to sustaining the lives of people on ventilators or other electric-powered medical devices began to run out of fuel Wednesday. Plans were made to relocate the 350 patients and 1,000 doctors and nurses at Charity and University hospitals to facilities in Alexandria, Lafayette, Shreveport, Lake Charles and Monroe. Methodist Hospital evacuated its 1,000 patients.

Louis Armstrong International Airport reopened Wednesday, solely for humanitarian aid. But seven of the region's eight major oil refineries remained shut down, contributing to a gas shortage that sent spot oil prices spiking above $70 per barrel again Wednesday. The crisis was felt sharply by motorists who found bags over gas pump nozzles at drained service stations in Baton Rouge and other cities to the north and west that had a heavy flow of evacuees. Some of the evacuees began returning Wednesday to the brim of the devastation to await the first opportunity to venture back into the city and find out what was left of their homes.

Reversing his earlier refusal to tap the nation's Strategic Petroleum Reserve, about 700 million barrels of crude oil stored in salt domes near the Louisiana and Texas border, Bush authorized a draw-down from the reserves to ease the pressure on refineries. Within minutes of the announcement, crude futures fell back below $70.

Anarchy and menace

The massive recovery effort contrasted starkly with the widespread looting that continued to shame the city. It had moved well beyond theft of water, food and other necessities to include electronic gear, liquor, cigarettes. One woman was seen hauling a Baskin-Robbins ice cream cooler down a Bywater street.

The Wal-Mart Supercenter on Tchoupitoulas Street was stripped of huge amounts of goods, including its ample supply of guns and ammunition. The Winn Dixie at Basin Street across from the French Quarter was all but stripped of inventory.

A late afternoon fire at one of the Footlocker outlets on Canal Street contributed to the sense of anarchy and menace. Another plume of smoke at the foot of Canal Street suggested the Aquarium of the Americas also was on fire. But an attendant, roused from a catnap, said the rooftop smoke was from a failing generator used to keep the aquarium's huge fish tanks aerated.

Preliminary body count expected today

Nagin says death toll could hit thousands

By Ed Anderson
Capital bureau

BATON ROUGE - Federal Emergency Management Administration officials will release some preliminary numbers today on the number of bodies FEMA mortuary teams have accounted for, FEMA Director Mike Brown said.

On Wednesday, New Orleans Mayor Ray Nagin estimated that the death toll in New Orleans from Hurricane Katrina could range into the thousands. But Smith said authorities are concentrating more on rescuing living people than accounting for the dead.

"We are still in life rescue mode,'' he said. "We must continue to do what we can to save lives. We don't want to feed you incorrect numbers. We just don't know until we get rescue people into the areas that are flooded.''

Brown said the agency and other rescue workers are more concerned with "pulling people off of roofs'' and saving lives than counting bodies.

"Most operations take second place to saving lives,'' Brown said. "This is an incredibly fluid situation.''

Several New Orleans area officials said they saw bodies floating in floodwaters as they plucked survivors from trees and rooftops, but State Police and National Guard officials said they do not have numbers to release, and deferred all inquiries to FEMA officials, as did aides to Gov. Kathleen Blanco.

State officials would not even say if preparations are being made to set up temporary morgues, or whether body bags have been ordered.

Brown said the number of dead was more easily obtained in Mississippi because Katrina mainly affected the less-populated Gulf Coast, which did not experience the deep standing water problems of south Louisiana.

National Guard spokesman Lt. Kevin Cowan would not say if Nagin's numbers were even in the ballpark.

"We have a limited number of resources down there,'' he said. "There is an unknown number of evacuees. It has been several days. You have heard the reports of (weather and water) conditions. You can do the math.''

Delivered from storm, mother gives birth in attic

Family in good shape

By Matthew Brown
Staff writer

From a crowded, dark attic surrounded by floodwater in a city pushed to the brink by Hurricane Katrina, 5 pounds, 4 ounces of hope has arrived.

James Kenneth Brundy Jr. was born just after midnight Tuesday to Waldrica Nathan, 19, as she was stranded with family members in her fiance's 9th Ward attic.

More than 36 hours after they were rescued by boat, Nathan and the baby were in excellent shape Wednesday at West Jefferson Medical Center in Marrero, doctors said. The child had been delivered by his father, James Brundy Sr. and his two grandparents, who had picked up a few obstetric skills from watching the Birth Channel.

"The doctors said they were amazed that the family did all the right things," hospital spokeswoman Jennifer Steel said.

As she lay in a maternity gown in the hospital's delivery unit, Nathan said her family's saga began Monday about 6:30 a.m. Nine months' pregnant, she and the others were forced to climb into the attic as waters rose rapidly on Metropolitan Street. By about 8 a.m. at the height of the storm, she started having contractions. While she gritted her teeth through the pain, family members dialed 911 but were told no one could help.

"Boats and helicopters were passing by all day but none stopped," Nathan said. At exactly midnight, her water broke, and James Brundy Jr. was born 22 minutes later.

The grandfather "knew just where to cut the cord and how to tie a shoestring around it," she said.

"We cleaned him off with some alcohol pads, wrapped him in a clean sheet, and I breast-fed. That's all he wanted to do, was eat," she said.

By morning, as the rising sun quickly heated up the house, the newborn's father and grandfather broke through the roof to try to wave down rescuers. To keep the baby cool, they took him down from the attic to the still-flooded first floor.

In a cradle fashioned from a laundry basket, the baby floated on top of waist-deep water in the living room. Help arrived Tuesday afternoon: a rescue boat manned by agents of the state Department of Wildlife and Fisheries.

"The man was crying in the boat. He couldn't believe it," Nathan said. "He was like, 'A baby, look at this baby!'"

After being dropped off on a highway overpass, mother and baby were driven to the hospital and arrived about 4 p.m. But Nathan said the joy she feels for her new son is tempered by the fact that her own mother, who is 9 months' pregnant and thought to be trapped in her own attic in another part of town, has not been heard from since the storm.

"We don't know if that baby is born. We don't know nothing. We still can't get in touch with her," Nathan said. "I'm happy I got through that and survived the storm."

Temporary levee blocks flooding near Ochsner

West Jeff hospital reaches critical point

By Matthew Brown
Staff writer

A storm-smashed West Bank teetered on the edge of chaos Wednesday as officials struggled to rein in looting. Thousands of hurricane refugees streamed across the Mississippi River from New Orleans and supplies of food and water ran dangerously low.

On the east bank, an early scare caused by rising floodwaters in Metairie had been put in check by midday. A hastily constructed temporary levee was erected near Ochsner Foundation Hospital to block water flowing out of an inundated New Orleans.

Neighborhoods along Airline Drive near the 17th Street Canal had some flooding but officials said the threat of more damage appeared to have passed.

But as lingering high water in New Orleans forced many in the city to escape, officials in Jefferson Parish scrambled to deal with the additional strain on emergency operations.

Throughout the day, thousands of evacuees fled across the Crescent City Connection to the West Bank by foot, car and bicycle, even via two stolen mail trucks that were stopped on the West Bank Expressway.

While many who passed through the parish headed to points west, others joined the growing crowds at three West Bank emergency shelters, swelling them to way past their capacity, officials said.

Jefferson Parish Director of Emergency Management Walter Maestri warned an already dire situation at those facilities soon could get far worse.

"We don't have the food, we don't have the water for these people," he said. "People are starving."

At one shelter, Stella Worley Middle School in Westwego, occupants said they had received only one bottle of water since Tuesday and had awakened to a breakfast of candy bars and fruit cups.

Toilets at the shelter were overflowing and anyone who tried to leave on foot was stopped by armed police who said they were guarding against looters.

"They don't want us here but they're going to have to help us," said Artemise Pittman, 33, who fled New Orleans late Tuesday with her 11 children. "There's no life on the other side of the river. We can't go back."

Maestri said at least 30 people had been detained for looting by Jefferson Parish.

Along Manhattan Boulevard in Harvey, people could be seen ransacking convenience stores, gas stations and electronic stores. When police arrived, the looters would scatter, only to return as soon as the police left.

Along Lapalco Boulevard in Harvey, a gun store reportedly was broken into and emptied of its weapons, officials said.

In the city of Gretna, Police Chief Arthur Lawson said he put the city on "lockdown" after 50 looting arrests the past two days.

"I gave our officers instructions to use whatever force is necessary," he said. "We've had no major injuries or deaths. Just some dog bites with our canine officers with looters."

Maestri estimated that half the looting was out of greed, the other half desperation of people searching for food and water.

To try to end the latter, he issued an urgent call to federal officials and the Red Cross to bring in truckloads of supplies.

Entergy Regional Manager Gary Silbert said power could be restored soon at vital facilities, including hospitals, the emergency operations center and the Sheriff's Office. But for everyone else, he said prior projections still stood - 30 to 45 more days with no electricity.

Necessities were running low at West Jefferson Medical Center.

Chief Medical Officer Alfred Abaunza said a lack of air-conditioning was compromising heat-sensitive equipment, including X-rays and blood analysis machines.

"We need food, we need water, we need medication, we need medical supplies, we need another generator," he said.

STAFF PHOTO BY TED JACKSON

CBD: As the water continues to rise in the Central Business District, a homeless man settles into a corner of a building.

Boat propellers are sound of salvation

NIGHTMARE, from page A-1

shirt rippling from each of her fists.

She had barely gotten out a fifth thank you when the emergency worker whispered into her ear that "it was going to be OK," and that "it was our job to save lives."

Phillips' downstairs neighbor, Terrilyn Foy, 41, and her 5-year-old son, Trevor, were unable to escape, Phillips said. By late Monday the surging waters of Lake Pontchartrain had swallowed the neighborhood. The water crept, then rushed, under the front door, Phillips said, then knocked it from its hinges. In less than 30 minutes, Phillips said, the water had topped her neighbors' 12-foot ceiling and was gulping at hers.

"I can still hear them banging on the ceiling for help," Phillips said, shaking. "I heard them banging and banging, but the water kept rising." Then the pleas for help were silenced by the sway of the current, she said.

Phillips and her family -- her daughter and niece, 20 and 18; an uncle, 40, and his wife, 35, along with their 2-year-old daughter and a friend, 45 -- rushed to the attic for safety. The water was rising and death seemed near, she said. Her back was hurting from the two bones she'd recently had fused during surgery for a car wreck she had in 2003. The group had been up there for hours, and they were growing more frantic as each moment passed. The water kept rising. They saw it inching up.

Phillips said they didn't want to die like little Trevor or his mother or the others who couldn't or wouldn't leave the neighborhood in the face of Katrina. So they pounded, kicked and pulled at the wooden boards in the roof till something gave way. The boards around a vent near a trestle gave way. When the din of boat propellers seemed near, they screamed and waved shirts from the roof. Finally the din got closer and they could see from the broken-out vent men in a boat. A few got in, and then another boat arrived and picked up the others.

Officials early Tuesday said 1,200 stranded residents had been rescued in the city. Later in the day that estimate rose to more than 3,000.

Parents, siblings missing

The seven of them were safe, but Phillips had still not heard from her mother or father out in east New Orleans. Both were 62 years old and both refused to evacuate. Her mother and father's 13 siblings from across the city also chose the four walls of home over evacuating out of town or trekking to the Superdome. For Phillips, evacuation seemed too costly. She and her family evacuated for Hurricane Dennis earlier in the summer. The few days in Houston cost her $1,200.

Phillips had not heard from any of them by late Tuesday, as nearly 90 percent of the city was underwater. Several other family members, most from outside Louisiana and in town since Aug. 21 for a family reunion, had also not been accounted for. After spending money for weeks, eating out, buying gifts and enjoying the Crescent City, "they figured they would stay until after Labor Day."

"I know this storm killed so many people," Phillips said. "There is no 9th Ward no more. No 8th or 7th ward or east New Orleans. All those people, all them black people, drowned."

She hadn't slept for days. The faces of the dead haunted her waking moments, badgering her not to forget them.

'No respect'

Like so many other survivors, Phillips and family were picked from the flood and dropped off downtown, which was slogged with thigh-high waters, but had the Superdome and some hotels giving solace to refugees.

By early Tuesday evening, officials estimated that about 20,000 people were packed inside the Superdome. Most were hopeless, hungry and increasingly desperate, witnesses and officials agreed. Rumors of murder, rape and deplorable conditions were circulating.

"After all we had been through, those damn guards at the Dome treated us like criminals," Phillips said. "We went to that zoo and they gave us no respect."

The family slogged down Poydras Street to the Hyatt. The hotel didn't have electricity or water, and nearly every glass window on the Poydras side had been blown out by the hurricane, but it was secure. Ranking officials from City Hall across the street had been evacuated there, including Mayor Ray Nagin and Police Chief Eddie Compass..

But there was no real solace for the weary woman or her family. Phillips said she had to contend with not knowing whether her mother or father or extended family had survived. And she's still haunted by the deaths she saw with her own eyes.

HURRICANE KATRINA AFTERMATH

AP PHOTO

Flooded streets throughout New Orleans are evident in this DigitalGlobe satellite image taken Wednesday. The breaches occurred at the 17th Street Canal at the upper left of the photo, and the Industrial Canal levee at the lower right.

Corps aggressively attacks drainage

We have a plan, officials explain

By Jan Moller and Mark Schleifstein
Staff writers

The Army Corps of Engineers will begin aggressively attacking the process of draining New Orleans today by beginning to build a dam that will block the entrance of the 17th Street Canal at the Old Hammond Highway Bridge and moving sheet piling into the area to begin plugging the large breach on the canal's eastern side that has flooded much of the city.

Officials said they expect the process to take about two months.

A civilian engineer with the Corps' Mississippi Valley Division, based in Vicksburg, Miss., who Federal Emergency Management Agency officials allowed to speak on the condition his name was not used, said he was still "very concerned" that additional reinforced concrete panels that make up the top of the canal levee could fail, widening the breach.

He described the emergency dam, which would be placed where debris from the lake has built up in front of the bridge, as "the only way we know to stop the water from coming into the canal."

The Corps abandoned plans Wednesday to use Army Chinook helicopters to drop 15,000-ton bags filled with sand and gravel in the levee hole, citing problems with the slings that would hold the bags and the potential for running into power lines or other obstructions.

We have a plan, he said. That plan is changing as we speak.

In addition to power lines, there is a tall cell tower near the breach.

Officials did not address whether they will attempt to plug a 300- to 400-foot gap in the London Avenue Canal levee.

STAFF PHOTO BY RUSTY COSTANZA

Robert Gough with the Louisiana Wildlife and Fisheries listens for sounds from a vent of a house in Lakeview, the neighborhood closest to the 17th Street Canal breach. State and federal experts assessed the flooding damage in Lakeview on Wednesday.

We are working very hard on removing the water from the city, Maj. Gen. Don Riley, director of civil works for the Corps, said in a news briefing. The levels have equalized with the lake. Now we are working with contractors to get the pumps working and fix the breaches in the levee to allow the water to flow out.

Officials confident

And despite the behemoth job of removing water from the city, Corps officials said they are up to the task.

Have we ever experienced a situation like this before? Yes, we have, said Don Basham, chief of the Corps' engineering construction division in Washington, D.C.

Maybe not the same exact situation. We've had breaches in the levee system across the United States over the past 50 years. We've solved each of them, and each is a unique situation that is addressed by the circumstances of the time.

The Corps will contract with Boh Bros. Construction Co. of New Orleans to install the metal sheet piling in the break. The engineer said the material was chosen because it's already at a nearby job site.

If those two steps work, pumping stations in Orleans and Jefferson parishes can begin what he said will be a 60-day effort to pump water out.

New Orleans Sewerage and Water Board officials are working on getting pumping stations in the city activated. Once that happens, they said, they can begin pumping our water, a process that could take 30 days.

At the same time, the engineer said, contractors will begin making notches in the Lake Pontchartrain hurricane protection levee at locations in eastern New Orleans, working their way along the levee as needed to the Jefferson Parish line.

Levee notches

The notches are only a first step, as they must be dug to a level above that of the lake's surface at high tide. Because much of the city is an average 6 feet below sea level, the rest of the water will have to be pumped out through existing pumping stations, which will be a slow process.

Where we can notch and drain, we will notch and drain, the engineer said.

While the New Orleans pumps are some of the largest and most efficient in the world, they were designed to remove rainwater and are capable of removing the equivalent of an inch of rain an hour or less over long periods of time.

Even so, the two-month prediction by the Corps is shorter than the minimum six months estimate given by New Orleans District engineers in 2002, when asked how long it would take if the city were completely flooded. The difference is that under their worst-case scenario, the Corps assumed the pumps and electric power supply might have to undergo extensive repairs or replacement.

The Corps official said the agency doesn't need to cut the lakefront levee in Jefferson Parish.

Levee notching also will take place along the south side of the Gulf Intracoastal Waterway in St. Bernard Parish, which should assist in removing water from Chalmette, the engineer said. Water from the Holy Cross neighborhood now is flowing west into the Inner Harbor Navigation Canal through a break in the levee that was instrumental in flooding that neighborhood.

In a news briefing, Riley said his agency is setting up a command force at Camp Shelby, Miss., which is 125 miles northeast of New Orleans that will assist residents with debris removal in all three states hammered by Hurricane Katrina.

The Corps also will help FEMA establish temporary housing, everything from clearing land to assisting in placement of manufactured housing and trailers and the provision of utilities and roads.

Staff writer John McQuaid contributed to this report. Staff writer Mark Schleifstein can be reached at mersmia@cox.net.

HURRICANE KATRINA AFTERMATH

'WE WILL DO WHAT IT TAKES TO RESTORE LAW AND ORDER'

Forces called in to curb widespread looting

By Ed Anderson, Michael Perlstein and Robert Travis Scott
Capital bureau

Hoping to curb widespread looting, New Orleans law enforcement is getting an infusion of 200 State Police troopers and 350 Louisiana National Guard troops, Another 500 Guard troops may be deployed to the area in the coming weeks.

Gov. Kathleen Blanco also sent a strong message to scofflaws who loot guns, merchandise and food from New Orleans area stores in the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina: You will be arrested and prosecuted.

We will do what it takes to restore law and order, Blanco said during a news conference Wednesday afternoon. We will not put up with petty criminals doing their business. We want to take these people off the streets.

State Police spokeswoman Sgt. Cathy Flinchum said 200 state troopers assigned to riot control and SWAT units will be working with the New Orleans Police Department to reduce looting, which New Orleans City Council President Oliver Thomas called widespread and major looting.

They are looting houses and businesses, he said. Gangs are sticking people up in their homes. They are looting gun stores; they are stealing guns out of Wal-Marts.

Besides State Police, 350 Louisiana National Guard troops will be deployed to New Orleans to help patrol the streets, said Guard spokesman Lt. Kevin Cowan.

Another 500 troops may be deployed to New Orleans in the next two days to work with police in the area, Cowan said.

He said some consideration is also being given to deploying some of the Guard soldiers returning from Iraq to work hurricane disaster duty in New Orleans.

Looting in New Orleans was so widespread Wednesday that police were forced to prioritize their overwhelmed enforcement effort.

For instance, Winn-Dixie s Riverside Market Place on Tchoupitoulas Street was breached in the morning by foragers who broke through a metal security door. Eight police officers in marked cruisers made it to the parking lot by noon, but they had a more pressing problem than people walking off with food and liquor.

The officers were rushing to a break-in next door at the Sports Authority, desperate to secure the store s stockpile of guns and ammunition.

I think we ran them off before they got any of it, said the commanding officer at the scene. The police secured the store with heavy plywood before moving on to other emergencies.

At about 2 p.m., the officers rushed back to disrupt a second break-in at the sporting goods store. An officer in a squad car tried to chase a Bell South utility truck that fled the scene, but he lost the truck amid fallen trees.

Upon surveying the thefts, the officer said the most conspicuous missing items were all the weapons from the store s knife case.

Similar scenes were reported across the storm-ravaged region. In Gretna, 50 people have been arrested; in unincorporated Jefferson, 30 have been arrested.

State Rep. Arthur Morrell, D-New Orleans, said he has seen some people looting for survival by taking food from stores. He said one store even invited neighborhood residents to take food before it spoiled.

But others, he said, are stealing items such as electronic appliances, tennis shoes and furniture. They don t need that for survival, he said. They can t take home the appliances and plug them in; there is no electricity.

The atmosphere of near anarchy in New Orleans is another major concern, said Arthur Wiese Jr., vice president of corporate communications for Entergy.

We can t send workers out and put their lives in jeopardy, he said late Wednesday afternoon from the one of the company s storm command centers in Jackson, Miss. Once we have facilities back operating, we have to know that our workers can get to work safely.

We are as alarmed as anyone over the chaos in the city. It is a very serious question, Wiese said.

Attorney General Charles Foti, a former criminal sheriff in New Orleans, said his office and New Orleans officials are trying to set up a temporary detention center in New Orleans to house and process those arrested for looting and other crimes.

Until that is built, State Police officials said those arrested will be sent to Fort Polk.

Officials could not estimate the number of looters.

Meanwhile, Department of Public Safety and Corrections Secretary Richard Stalder said that because of high water, lack of air conditioning, food shortage and lack of potable water, his office and local police have moved all 1,112 inmates from the Jefferson Parish Correctional Center to state prisons or parish jails with available beds in other parts of the state.

Department spokeswoman Pam Laborde said the convoy of buses made the trip to St. Gabriel s Hunt Correctional Center for processing on Tuesday and Wednesday.

Stalder said more than 2,100 of the 5,100 inmates were moved from the Orleans Parish Prison by late Wednesday and another 3,000 would be moved to other state and parish jails in the next 36 to 48 hours.

It is being measured in hours, not days, Stalder said.

REFUGEES FIND DOME AN INTOLERABLE REFUGE

I s worse than being in prison in there

By Gordon Russell
Staff writer

The Superdome resembled a scene from the Apocalypse on Wednesday morning, with thousands of refugees trapped in a hellish environment of short tempers, unbearable heat and the overwhelming stench of human waste.

Evacuees told horror stories of assaults and the apparent suicide of a man who leapt from a balcony. Although none of the accounts could be confirmed by authorities, many refugees offered remarkably similar accounts.

A sense of desperation overtook those stuck at the Dome as they waited in vain to hear where they might be taken next. Later in the day, authorities announced a plan to begin bringing ill evacuees to the Ernest N. Morial Convention Center, from which they would be taken by bus to shelters and hospitals elsewhere.

The Houston Astrodome was preparing to take in thousands more, who were expected to start arriving by busloads this morning.

Throughout the day, frustration boiled over into anger and fear. Occasional skirmishes broke out outside the building, where people sought shade from a brutally hot sun under the Dome s narrow eave.

They re treating us like crap, said Tina Wilson of Mid-City as others chimed in with amens. They have us living like not even pigs.

Cleo Fisher of the Bywater sat atop a concrete cylinder in waist-deep water on Poydras just outside the Dome. Fisher, 86, said he left because he didn t have heart medications he wouldn t survive without.

Medical technicians were unsympathetic, he said, leaving him no choice but to try to get out and get help. He wasn t faring well outside either in fact, he was rescued from drowning by two passers-by after falling off the pier he sat on, he said.

I s worse than being in prison in there, he said. They don t have nothing for me.

Safety concerns

Others were leaving because of concerns about their safety. The Dome situation had deteriorated noticeably from earlier days, as new swarms of refugees and rescuees arrived. On Wednesday morning, running water to the building was lost as it was throughout the city making the already overwhelming bathrooms downright noxious.

As people stood in long lines to receive rations of water and pre-made military meals, they put their shirts over their noses to block out the odor. Once word got around that some areas of the city near the Mississippi River remained dry, some refugees decided to leave.

I s chaotic, and it smells, said barbershop owner Ted Mitchell, who after three nights in the Dome was leaving and contemplating walking back to his flooded home near Canal and Broad streets. It s worse than the Depression. That place is not fit for people to be living in.

They re treating people like prisoners in there, said Shelton Alexander as he left the Dome for the thigh-high waters of Poydras Street. It s so hot in there, and people are s ting on the floors.

Tensions ran high between the Louisiana National Guardsmen assigned to secure the building and those they were protecting, with some people upset over what they felt was an inability to keep order and others saying they felt soldiers were too brusque.

Those crowded outside the Dome along a security line jeered and yelled at a guardsman after he shoved a man to the pavement who had ignored his order not to go back in without clearing a checkpoint accessible only by the deep water on Poydras Street.

Call for leadership

Evacuees also vented their anger at city officials, in particular Mayor Ray Nagin, who many said they felt should have put in an appearance at the Dome in a show of sympathy.

Ray Nagin should come speak to these people, said Julie Joseph, who huddled in a bleacher seat with friends who nodded in agreement. To be the mayor he should have come in here. We got people who lost family members.

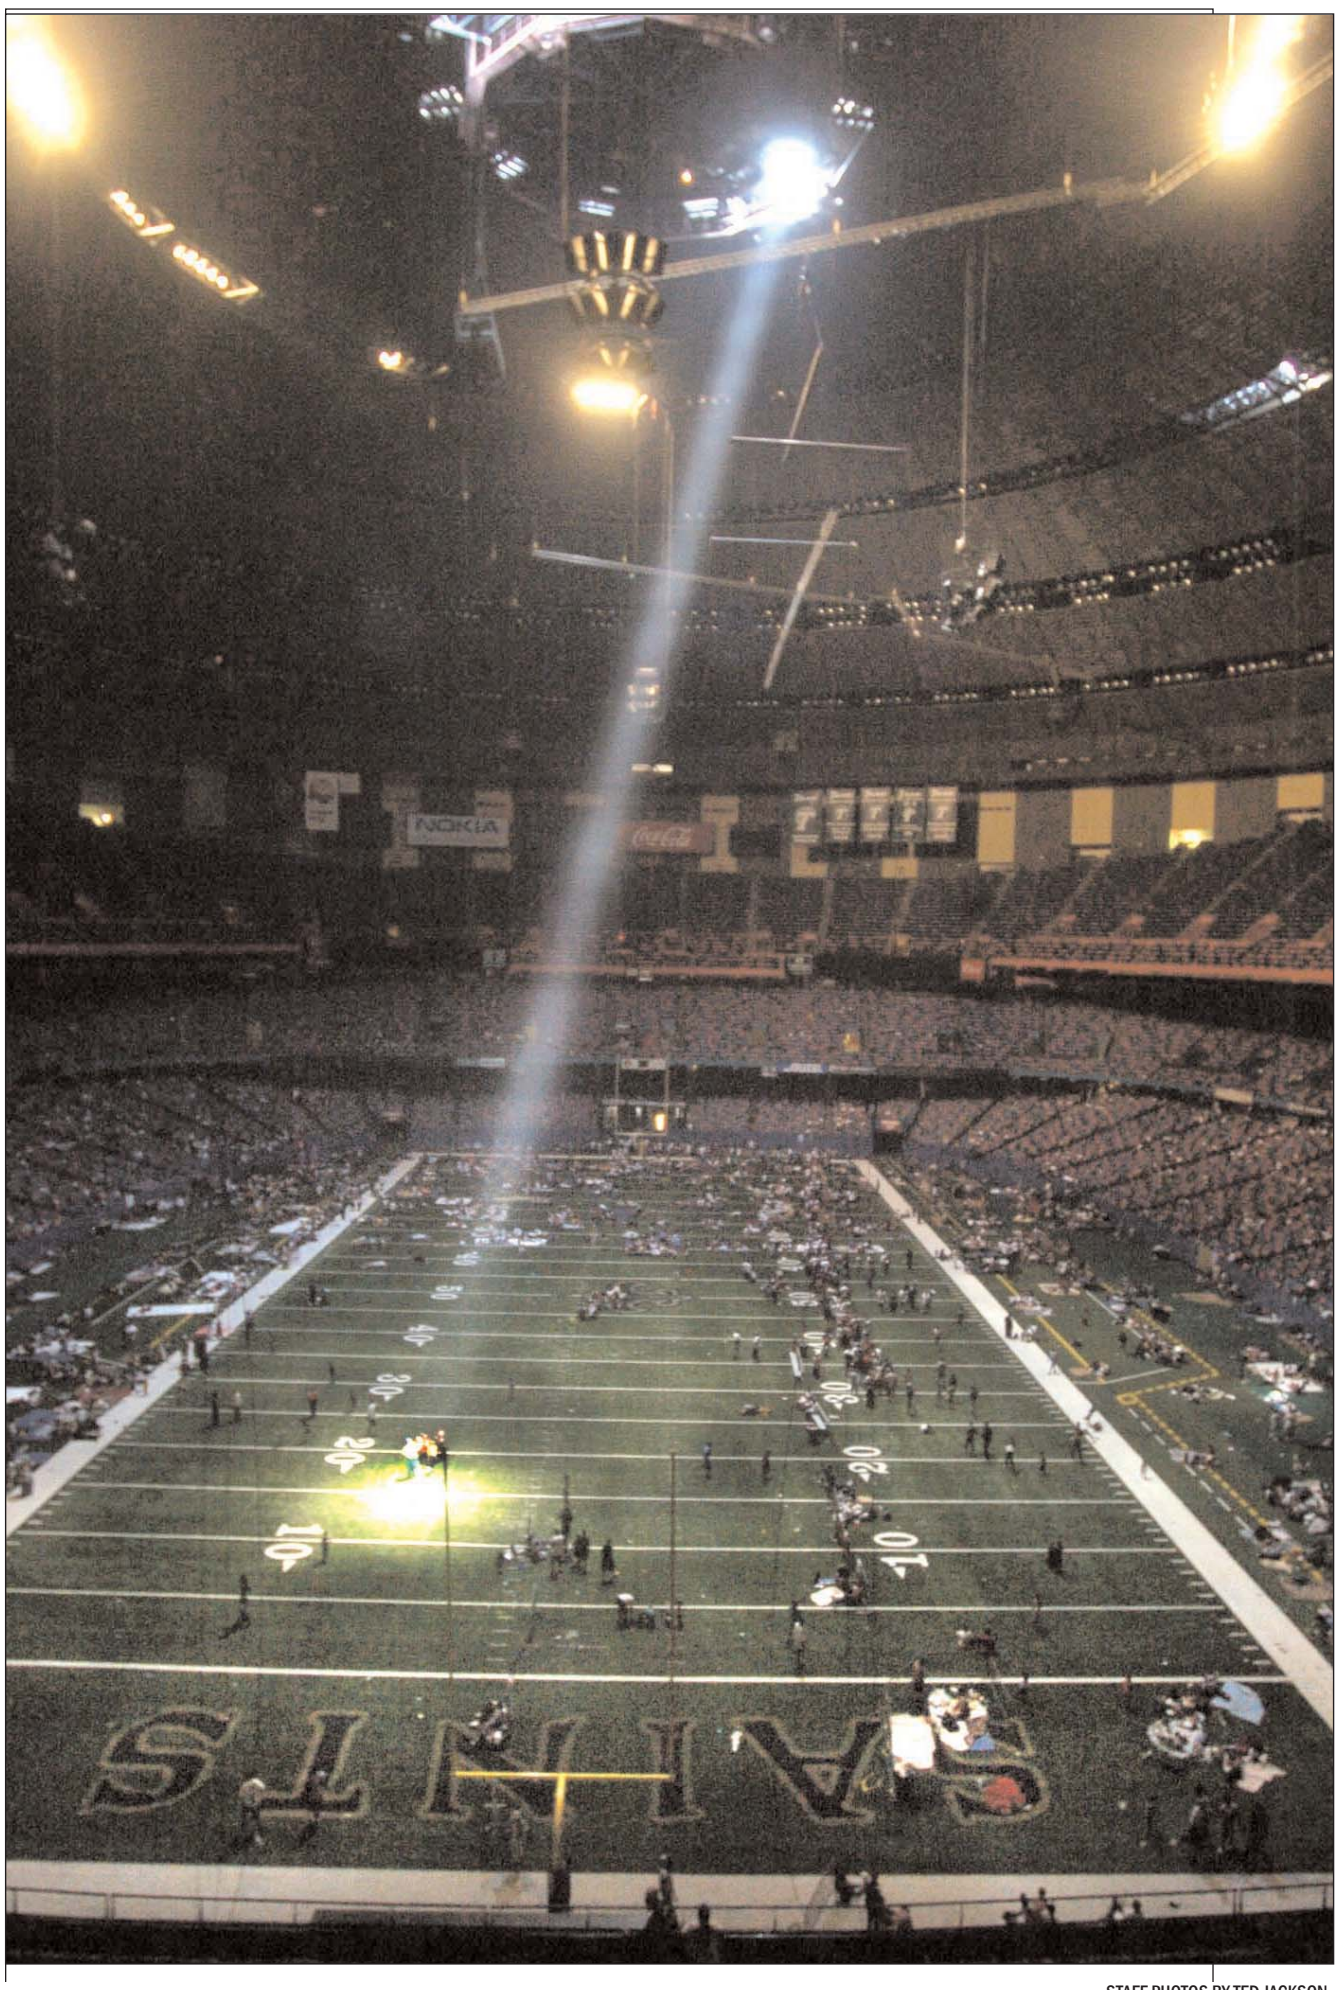
Even some of the police officers and military members assigned to the Dome none of whom wanted to speak on the record said they felt the situation was being poorly managed, if it was being managed at all.

This plan was no plan, said one cop, shaking his head.

The hellish confines stood in stark contrast to those of people nearby in the restricted-access New Orleans Centre and Hyatt Hotel, where those who could get in lounged in relative comfort.

A few blocks farther away, guests were being fed foie gras and rack of lamb for dinner, according to a photographer who stayed there, while the masses, most of them poor, huddled in the Dome.

While many were angry at what they perceived as third-class treatment, others were simply glad to be alive or perhaps too numbed by tragedy to feel anything like anger.



I m sorry for the ones not here today, said Byron Price of Bywater, who came to the Dome just before the storm hit. But thank God for the soldiers and police protecting us. I t s going to be all right.

Delia Crumby, crouched by a wall outside the Dome, said was rescued by a Louisiana Wildlife & Fisheries boat after her Lower 9th Ward home flooded. She and her brother, who had recently had a stroke, holed up in the attic after the levee breach.

Her brother didn t make it.

I don t really know what he died from, she said. He just died up in the attic with me.

She pleaded with an outsider to call her sister in New Jersey to tell her that she was all right. The news about her brother would have to wait.

STAFF PHOTOS BY TED JACKSON

SUPERDOME: At first glance, it might be a Saints game being played by spotlight. Unfortunately, the scene is of Hurricane Katrina evacuees trying to get by in the Superdome, which has a large hole in its roof.

HURRICANE KATRINA AFTERMATH

AS EVIDENCE FLOODS, CRIMINAL CASES LIKELY COLLAPSE

Court basement also housed thousands of appeals

By Michael Perlstein and Trymaine D. Lee
Staff writers

New Orleans criminal justice officials cringed Wednesday at another disaster evolving in the wake of Hurricane Katrina: the possible long-term collapse of the city's criminal justice system.

With the flooding of the police department's evidence and property room in the basement of police headquarters, evidence and records in hundreds of criminal cases appeared to be irretrievably lost, police spokesman Marlon Defillo said.

Evidence in the most serious, pending cases, from murder to rape to robbery, was housed in the basement, Defillo said.

"We lost thousands of documents and untold evidence," Defillo said. "We lost everything."

The floodwaters in the basement of criminal court at Tulane Avenue and Broad Street also inundated old evidence in thousands of old cases under appeal. The lost evidence could reopen cases that otherwise had little chance of getting back into trial court.

"We're in serious trouble," Defillo said.

Officials averted a separate crisis by transporting about 3,000 inmates out of Orleans Parish Prison. Under heavy armed guard, inmates who lined Interstate 10 above the flooded surface streets were loaded onto buses from the Dixon Correctional Center and other state lockups.

While the inmates were successfully evacuated, the ongoing shutdown of criminal court could lead to the unavoidable release of dozens of suspects awaiting charges. By law, suspects must be tried within 30 days of a misdemeanor arrest and within 45 days of a felony arrest or they are automatically released from any bond obligation.

Even with the potential long-range problems facing the court system, officials were more concerned Wednesday with citywide crimes and looting sprouting amid the storm's chaotic aftermath.

Terry Ebbert, the city's homeland security director, said police received numerous reports of armed groups of marauders robbing scores of people throughout the hard-hit parts of the city. Authorities were unable to patrol the most lawless areas of the city, and it appeared police had little chance of investigating much of the unchecked crime.

Storm-displaced students urged to keep learning, where they are

Administrators to cut red tape of transfers

By COLEMAN WARNER
Staff writer

BATON ROUGE Louisiana Superintendent of Education Cecil Picard on Wednesday urged school systems across the state and elsewhere to quickly find a place for roughly 150,000 public school students displaced by Hurricane Katrina s devastation in the New Orleans area as officials said recovery efforts will consume months.

Administrators of various private schools around New Orleans, meanwhile, began mapping plans for alternate placements for their students, making Web site appeals for information about where families are temporarily living. Archdiocese of New Orleans school officials are discussing options for displaced families but haven t yet released details, a spokesman for the Diocese of Baton Rouge said.

It was not immediately clear how many parochial and private school students will need to seek new school placements. Picard said 23 percent of the region s public school students were severely affected by Katrina, noting that once flood waters recede it may be found that some schools no longer exist.

During an afternoon news conference called by Gov. Kathleen Blanco and other emergency-response officials, Picard said there is interest among families that evacuated to Baton Rouge, Lafayette, Monroe and Shreveport, among other places, in enrolling their children in those area s public schools, and urged them to take that step.

I implore you to get your children enrolled in a school district closest to you, as soon as possible, Picard said.

He said state education officials would try to try to ease paperwork, facility and transportation problems caused by the changes. He also urged other school systems to quickly hire teachers displaced by the storm damage, and said the state will let up in its demand for enforcement of certification standards.

We re going to work all these little details out, said Picard.

In an interview, Picard said he isn t calling for any lengthy delay in the school year. He said he would embrace plans by individual families to home-school their children if they are capable of doing so and registered properly with school officials.

Picard s remarks came as Texas education officials prepared to find places, as needed, for thousands of New Orleans students who are part of a large contingent of refugees to be relocated from a storm-damaged, sweltering Superdome to the Astrodome in Houston. Among other comments Wednesday on the school issue, East Baton Rouge Parish schools Superintendent Charlotte Placide urged families taking shelter in the area to furnish preliminary details to neighborhood public schools that they are interested in attending, so that a census of the demand can be prepared.

Federal education officials on Wednesday echoed Picard s position, saying they are worried that students in New Orleans and other hurricane-ravaged won t have access to their regular schools for months.

The important thing is to stabilize educational process for these children, said Deputy Secretary of Education Raymond Simon.

He said that districts should work cooperatively to help students displaced by the hurricane even if records must be sent to another state. That means districts should be flexible in applying teaching licensing requirements so, for instance, a teacher in New Orleans or in another Louisiana district can bet a school position in Texas or in another state accepting displaced students.

Federal role

The unprecedented tragedy brought by Katrina will prompt federal officials to be flexible in granting waivers from federal regulations, Simon said.

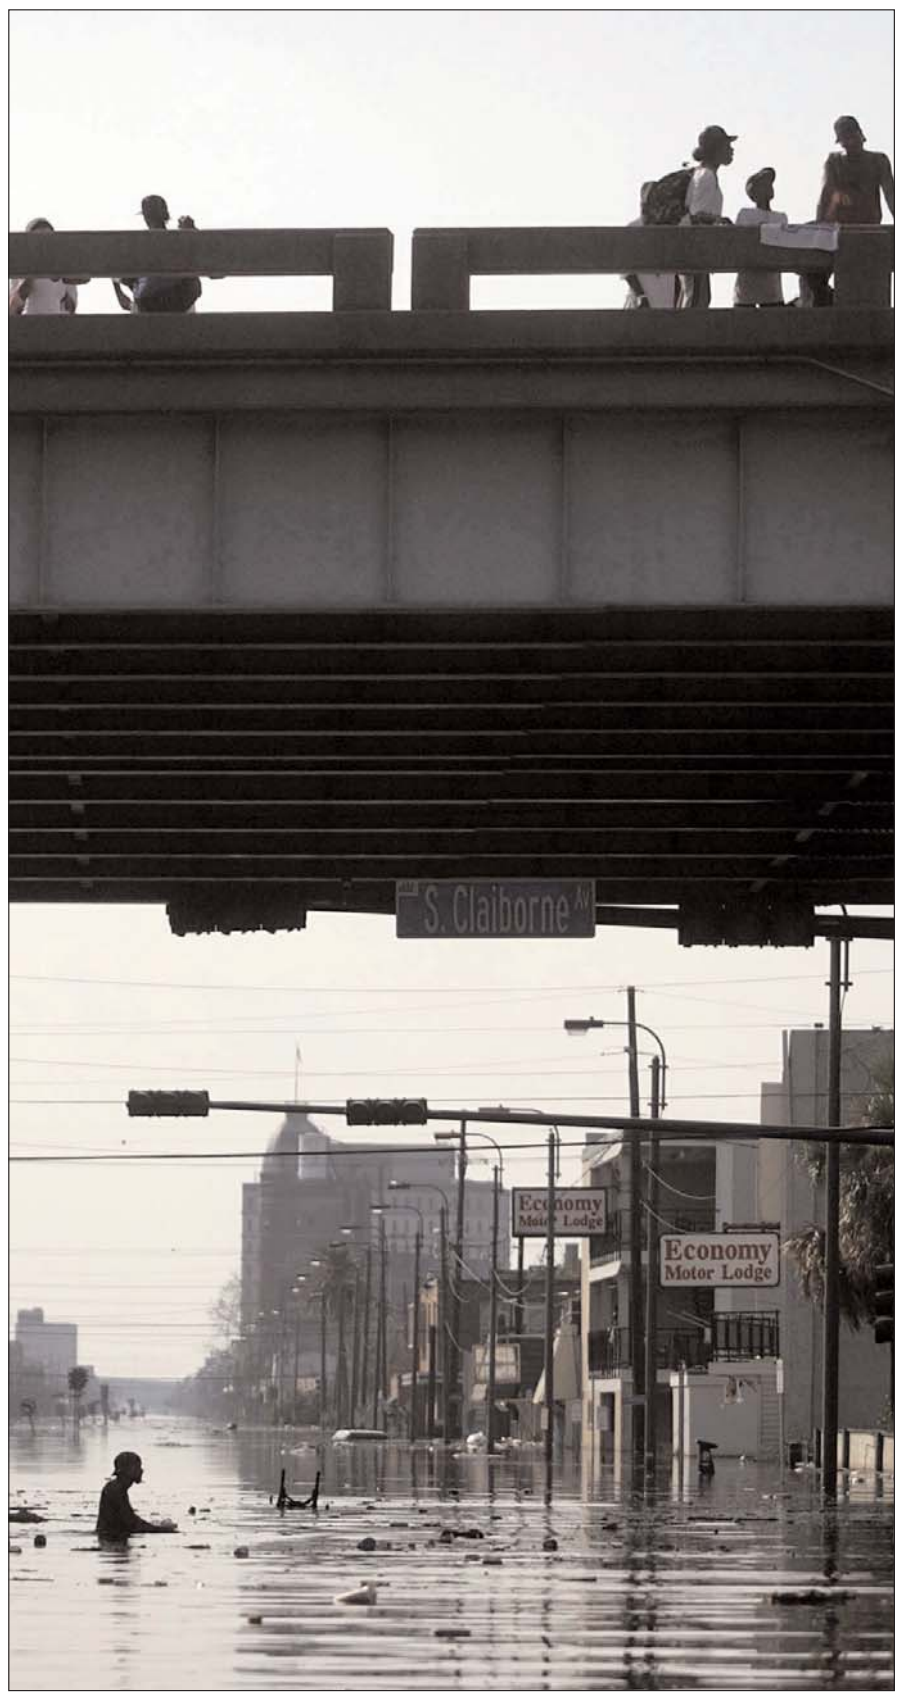
You can be assured that the red tape will be put in the drawer, he said.

Federal education officials said they expect Congress, as part of an emergency supplemental spending bill covering hurricane relief costs, will tackle funding issues resulting from the disaster. For example, they must decide whether districts taking extra students will get extra per-capita financing that is generated based on enrollment, and whether districts losing students because of the hurricane should lose money.

Louisiana and Mississippi education officials already have told the U.S. Education Department they face unprecedented costs in repairing or replacing damaged buildings, and Picard said he hopes that the federal government will provide a major infusion of money for building needs.

The superintendent said federal emergency management money is available for 75 percent of the cost of adding portable buildings to serve displaced students, and that federal officials may be persuaded to waive the 25 percent local match.

Picard said state education officials can answer questions from families or teachers through his office s hot line, 1 (877) 453-2721. The hotline is answered between 7 a.m. and 7 p.m. weekdays.



A message posted Wednesday on the Web site of Metairie Park Country Day School said local members of the Independent Schools Association of the Southwest are gathering details through e-mail responses on temporary addresses and phone numbers of families that evacuated. We are exploring with other ISAS schools alternate placements for students We will have an update in 24 hours, but it will probably be early next week before plans are well developed, the Web site reported.

ISAS schools include Metairie Park Country Day, Academy of the Sacred Heart, Christ Episcopal, Louise S. McGehee, Isidore Newman, St. Andrew s Episcopal, St. George s Episcopal, St. Martin s Episcopal, St. Paul s Episcopal, Stuart Hall School for Boys and Trinity Episcopal.

Archbishop Alfred Hughes said that as he and fellow administrators of the New Orleans archdiocese, who are setting up a remote headquarters in Baton Rouge, are discussing storm impacts but don t yet have solid information about damage to schools. Decisions haven t been made about what to do about displaced students, he said.

Staff writers Bruce Alpert and Susan Finch contributed to this report.

WATER UNDER THE BRIDGE

STAFF PHOTO BY BRETT DUKE

NEW ORLEANS: A man wades across Tulane Avenue at South Claiborne Avenue, as refugees gather on the overpass overhead.

Rumors of divine intervention swirl around statue

By James Varney
Staff Writer

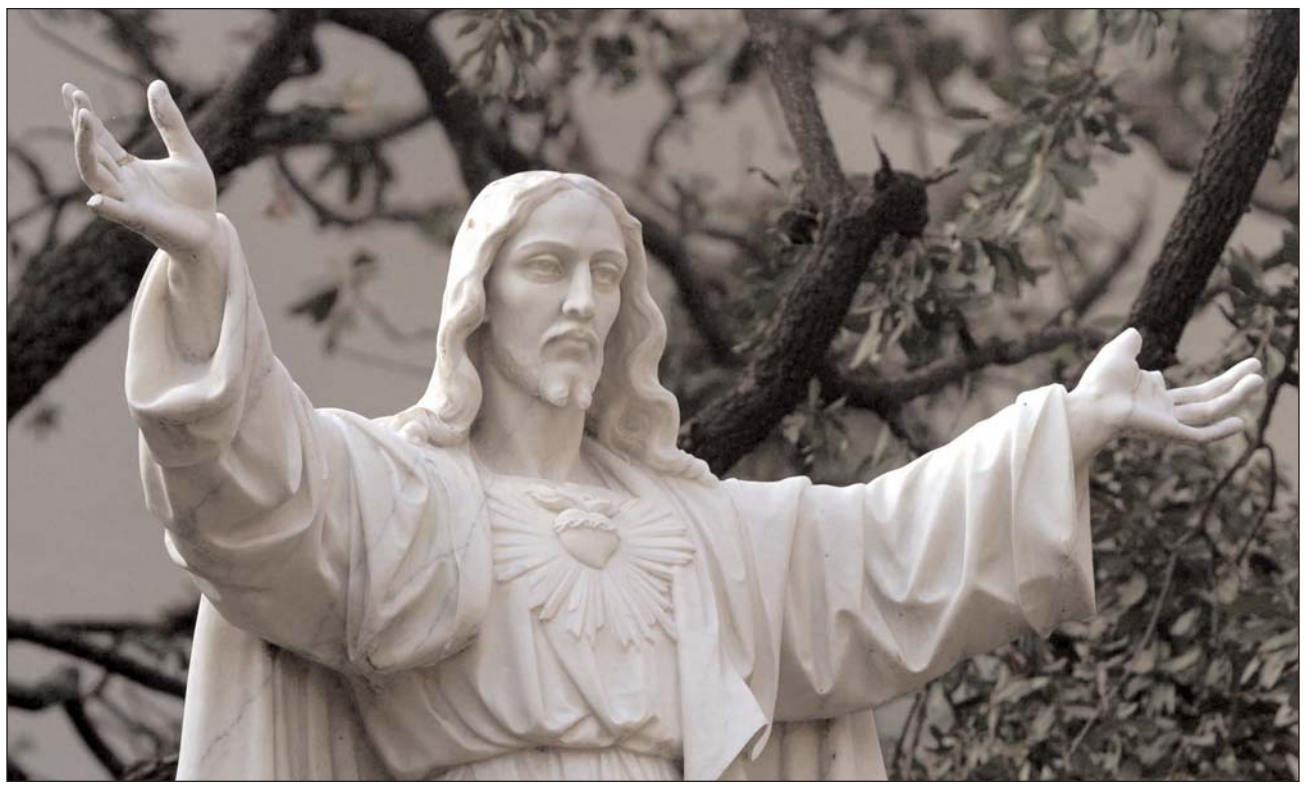
In the garden behind St. Louis Cathedral on Royal Street lies an incredible tangle of zig-zagging broken tree trunks and branches, mixed with smashed wrought iron fences.

But right in the middle, a statue of Jesus is still standing, unscathed by the storm, save for the left thumb and index finger, which are missing.

The missing digits immediately set off speculation of divine intervention.

New Orleans has a long history praying to saints for guidance and protection in times of great peril. In fact it was Our Lady of Prompt Succor who was said to be responsible for saving the Ursulines Convent in the French Quarter from a raging fire that consumed the rest of the city centuries ago.

Since then, New Orleanians have prayed to the saint for protection from natural disasters. On Saturday, Archbishop Alfred Hughes read a prayer over the radio asking for Our Lady's intervention to spare the city a direct hit by Hurricane Katrina.



Many in the Quarter are now saying it was the hand of Jesus, the missing digits to be precise, that flicked the hurricane east just a little to keep the city from suffering a direct blow.

And the search is one for those missing fingers.

Shortly after Katrina passed, several men went to Robert Buras, who owns the Royal Street Grocery and told him they know who has the finger. Buras said he'd give them all the water and beer they need if they bring him the finger.

They told him they'd find it and asked to be paid upfront. But Buras told them he wouldn't take it on credit

"I'm going to find Jesus' finger,'' Buras said. "I've got a lead on it."

FRENCH QUARTER: The thumb and index finger of the statue of Jesus behind St. Louis Cathedral in the French Quarter were sheared off by the storm, but it remained a largely intact symbol of hope to residents of a battered city.
STAFF PHOTO BY DAVID GRUNFELD

HURRICANE KATRINA AFTERMATH

'WILL NEW ORLEANS EVER BE THE SAME?'

Colossal reconstruction effort to cost tens of billions

By Bill Walsh
Katherine Lewis
and John McQuaid
Washington bureau

WASHINGTON The floodwaters swamping New Orleans ultimately will recede, but Hurricane Katrina's destructive legacy is certain to be felt for years to come as the city contemplates rebuilding after one of the worst natural disasters in the nation's history.

Not only does the city face a massive reconstruction estimated to be in the tens of billions of dollars, but it must rebuild a tourist industry that is New Orleans' life blood and an economy that was stagnant even before the storm plunged 80 percent of the city under water.

"Will New Orleans ever be the same?" asked Bernard Weinstein, a professor of applied economics at the University of North Texas in Denton. "You're talking about a major city that has been made uninhabitable and large parts of it have been destroyed. What do you compare it to? Dresden? Berlin? Those cities came back but it took a long time. It took years and that was with a lot of American aid."

Gov. Kathleen Blanco has left no doubt that the 287-year-old city beloved for its quirkiness and old-world charm plans a comeback. She vowed: "We will recover. We are a strong people."

That fortitude will be put to the test as soon as the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers figures out how to get the water out.

One expert on rebuilding after disasters estimated it likely would take five years before the region attains a semblance of normalcy.

"All the past (major U.S.) disasters, they have hit suburban areas, not the central urban areas of major cities," said Mary Comerio, author of "Disaster Hits Home," a book on post-disaster reconstruction. "Here we have a significant hit on the entire urban area - not just the core, but everything. It is going to be an incredibly complex staging operation."

Comerio compared it to the 1995 earthquake that struck Kobe, Japan, killing 6,000 people and running up more than $150 billion reconstruction costs. More than 100,000 buildings were destroyed and 300,000 people were left homeless. Kobe took up to 10 years to rebuild, she said.

Although it's smaller than Kobe, New Orleans has a different set of problems. It is isolated, meaning that it will be hard to house people near their homes and jobs. That will lead to people leaving permanently, she said.

Housing will be a long-term problem - especially for New Orleans' sizable low-income population, which will find it harder to secure resources to rebuild. Apartments are always the last to be rebuilt, Comerio said, and low-income housing lags behind that. The result could be an explosion in the homeless population.

"In Japan people lived in temporary housing for eight years. They finally closed the last of the temporary housing sites before the 10th anniversary," she said.

In New Orleans, neighborhoods submerged to the rooftops may have to be rebuilt from the ground up. If floodwaters prove to be a polluted "toxic stew" that some fear, those areas could be rendered uninhabitable.

"The thing about water is, even if the frame of your house looks OK, corrosion and the smell could make it a total loss," said Larry Griffis, president of structural engineering at Walter P. Moore & Assoc., in Houston. "Sometimes, you just have to start all over again."

Fortunately, New Orleans has learned from its flood-prone past. Many homes are built on pilings sunk deep into the ground, protecting foundations from lasting water damage. Most of the office buildings in the city's financial center were built to withstand severe flooding.

An immediate challenge will be a shortage of contractors, some of who fled the city along with the rest of the population. If the experience in Florida is any judge, some residents may simply throw up their hands.

"It's amazing how many buildings we still have abandoned. Some of the strip malls are vacant," said Tony Palermo, a planner in Fort Myers, Fla., which was hit with four hurricanes last year. "Some people decided they didn't want the stress and moved back up north."

Once the city is dried out and infrastructure rebuilding begins, officials will have a better idea of the magnitude of the job ahead. Louisiana's importance as a national energy supplier and commercial hub will put pressure on a quick recovery for certain sectors.

Oil refineries could be up in a week, industry experts said, followed by the resumption of oil and gas drilling operations in the Gulf of Mexico, notwithstanding floating platforms swept away in Katrina's fury.

There will be similar pressure to restore New Orleans as a critical junction for the nation's commerce. The Port of South Louisiana is the busiest port in the nation and New Orleans' port ranks fifth. Commodities such as crude oil, rubber, metals, coffee and lumber come travel up the Mississippi River, while grains and petroleum products go out to the world.

STAFF PHOTO BY BRETT DUKE

WALKING TO THE DOME: Refugees wade through knee-deep water on Poydras Street on Wednesday as they make their way toward the Superdome, hoping to find shelter in the aftermath of Katrina.

The ports will be out of commission longer than oil and gas production, but eventually should return to pre-hurricane levels of economic activity, Weinstein said.

"Because of the railroads and the pipelines that converge in and around New Orleans, I can't believe they're going to suffer any long-term business loss," he said.

Tourism is another matter. Conventions often are arranged years in advance so many planners may decide in the coming years to skip New Orleans, which is among the top four U.S. convention destinations. A plunge in visitors would send a shudder through the local economy, hurting business such as restaurants, bars and the city's many tourist attractions.

One potentially bright spot is that the aesthetic heart of New Orleans, the French Quarter, may have escaped the severe damage seen in other parts of the city because of its elevation, a whole 3 feet above sea level. St. Charles Avenue, where in better times streetcars rumble beneath ancient oaks past stately mansions, also appears to have avoided the heaviest damage.

Still, the possibility of lasting damage to the city's historic buildings has preservationists, not to mention business leaders, worried.

When Kobe, Japan's reconstruction was finished, the city looked a lot different.

"The commercial stuff is rebuilt, but usually it's somebody else - it's not the same businesses that were there before," Comerio said. "And a lot of the housing in areas where it was rebuilt, it's a lot more gentrified, upscale than what was there previously. The low income population was pushed out."

For now, businesses are vowing to reopen even as they wait to see how bad the damage is. According to a statement, Pinnacle Entertainment intends to rebuild its Boomtown casino in suburban New Orleans and Casino Magic Biloxi. The Hyatt Regency New Orleans, whose blown-out windows and fluttering curtains became a lasting image of the hurricane's ferocity, is still sheltering guests, said Katie Meyer, spokeswoman for Global Hyatt Corp. in Chicago.

"We're absolutely committed to New Orleans, and our owners are too, but we have to assess the damage," Meyer said. "A lot of what happens looking in the future will depend on what happens with the infrastructure of the city."

A critical question for any rebuilding is whether business, bank and municipal records are salvageable, said Colleen Woodell, a managing director at the Standard & Poor's rating firm in New York. After the Sept. 11 attacks, firms housed in the World Trade Center struggled with the loss of payroll and other business records, if they didn't have backups at another location.

"Were the city's records lost?'' Woodell asked. ''It would make what's already a really horrible situation that much more horrible."

Years of rebuilding expected to create national shortages

Historical character of N.O. to be altered

By Greg Thomas
Business writer

Rebuilding New Orleans after Hurricane Katrina will be a years-long process that will create nationwide shortages of building materials, keep builders across the country busy for years, and ultimately result in a wave of new construction that will change the face of New Orleans.

The massive effort - coming in the wake of what is being billed as the nation's largest natural disaster ever - will probably "change the historical architectural style" of many areas of the city, said G. Robert Fuller of the National Association of Home Builders Research Council. The 9th Ward, which includes some of the oldest homes in the nation, may have to be replaced almost entirely by new construction, Fuller said.

"We're talking many, many years after months to cleaning up," said Ken Ford, a program specialist for the National Association of Home Builders' disaster assistance program.

Some major projects currently under way in the metro area will probably be put on hold in the process, like the long-awaited fourth phase of the Ernest N. Morial Convention Center.

That's because the top priority going forward, local authorities say, will be rebuilding New Orleans.

"My personal opinion is that we'll have to restore the city's infrastructure before Phase 4 work starts," said Derryl Cohoon, chief executive officer of the Louisiana Associated General Contractors.

But the reconstruction process will not be easy.

Ford said shortages of building materials will certainly occur. Major manufacturing operations of lumber companies such as Georgia Pacific were in Katrina's path along the Gulf Coast.

"It depends on any damage to those facilities," Ford said.

Compounding the problem will be the fact that the nation has been in the midst of a housing boom that has resulted in concrete shortages and rising steel prices, he said.

One thing that won't be a problem will be labor.

Most of the area's biggest contractors - including Barriere Construction Co., Boh Bros. Construction Co., Gootee Construction Inc. and Broadmoor Construction Inc. - are relocating operations to Baton Rouge in the wake of the storm.

"You name them, the big New Orleans companies are here, and we're being told it will be three weeks before we can get back into the New Orleans metro area," Cohoon said.

But he said those companies - as well as the association's 700 member companies across the state - will play a role in the rebuilding process.

Employees of these companies will be eager for work. Many of the construction workers, Cohoon said, lived in St. Bernard Parish and were out of work overnight.

"And we have sister associations from across the nation who are calling and telling us, 'When it's time to come, we can,' " he said.

But the building effort can't begin until the city is drained, security is restored, and a host of other issues are addressed.

"So much has to take place to stabilize the city before, my gut tells me, reconstruction can take place," Ford said.

One of the biggest issues will be to clearing and disposing of the debris Hurricane Katrina created.

"The quantity of the debris itself will be of such a magnitude that disposing of it becomes a major problem inhibiting rebuilding," Ford said.

For example, after Hurricane Andrew slammed into south Florida in 1992, the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency had to issue special permit waivers to allow the debris to be burned, with no landfills capable of handling the tons of material from destroyed homes, commercial buildings, utility pools, trees and foliage.

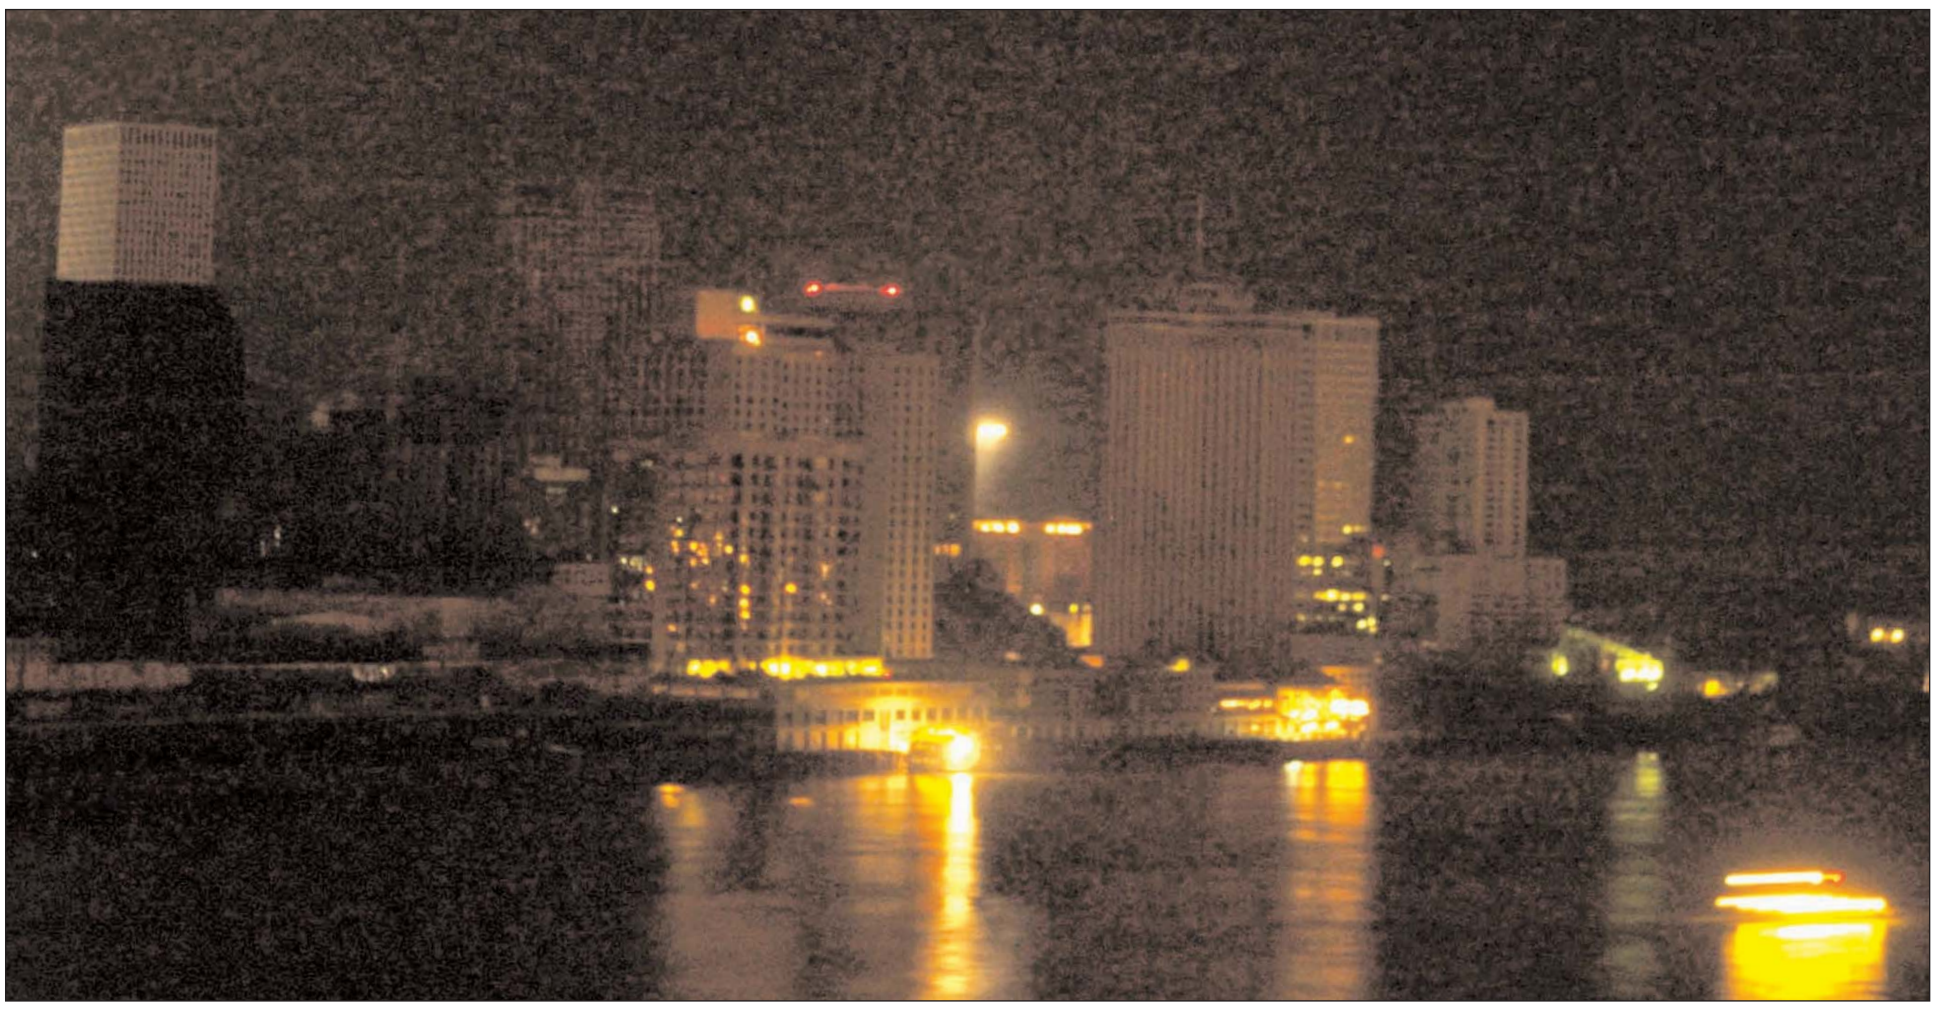
Another option may be loading railroad cars to haul the debris out of New Orleans to much larger and numerous out-of-state landfills.

And after the debris is removed, the area will have to be inspected for chemical and sewage contamination.

Local governments may be facing more permitting and inspections than they are prepared to handle. "I'm sure those departments aren't staffed to handle the magnitude of work they're going to face," Ford said.

And for damage involving commercial structures, legal issues may crop up.

In many cases, controversy may arise as to who is responsible for disaster coverage. In retail, for example, the issue may be whether the mall owner or the retail tenant is responsible, said Sean Milano, a Boston lawyer and member of the International Council of Shopping Centers.



"Take sewage problems, per se. The sewage backs up into the tenant's space and destroys the tenant's goods," Marino said. "Is that the landlord's or insurer's responsibility or the tenants?"

In many instances, insurers for major retailers foot the bill for the repairs and then work out the problems through litigation.

All in all, the rebuilding effort will be a lengthy process, Fuller said. Following Hurricane Andrew, residents lived in temporary housing erected by the Federal Emergency Management Agency for several years. That type of housing may become a common site in New Orleans.

NOT ENOUGH POWER WORKERS TO FIX PROBLEMS

Utility crews still working on Florida

BLACKOUT IN THE CBD: The Central Business District is bathed in darkness Wednesday night as New Orleans remains without power and immersed in water days after Hurricane Katrina swept through the metropolitan area and along the Gulf Coast in Mississippi and Alabama. In the New Orleans area, 990,000 utility customers remain without power.

STAFF PHOTO BY DAVID GRUNFELD

By KEITH DARCÉ
Business writer

The 6,000 power line workers currently assembled in southeastern

Louisiana won't be nearly enough to restore power to the 990,000 utility customers who are still without electricity in metropolitan New Orleans, the region's electricity suppliers said Wednesday.

But getting more workers to the area might be impossible until late this week because many utility crews from neighboring states are still restoring power to southern Florida, which was hit surprisingly hard by Katrina, said Chanel Lagarde, spokesman for Entergy Corp., the state's largest power supplier.

"There are severe limits on resources at this point," he said. "We are told that the utilities in Florida are expected to wrap up later this week. Many of those (workers) will come directly here or to the east" in coastal Mississippi and Alabama.

The atmosphere of near-anarchy in New Orleans is another major concern, said Arthur Wiese Jr., vice president of corporate communications for Entergy.

"We can't send workers out and put their lives in jeopardy," he said late Wednesday afternoon from one of the company's storm command centers in Jackson, Miss. "Once we have facilities back operating, we have to know that our workers can get to work safely.

"We are as alarmed as anyone over the chaos in the city. It is a very serious question," Wiese said.

A month or more

Those problems further validated earlier predictions by Entergy managers that many people in the hardest-hit parts of the state could be without electricity for a month or more.

Flooding and road blockage from debris remained the most immediate barriers to repair crews moving into the most damaged parts of the region.

A main transmission line running 25 miles between Madisonville and Bogalusa suffered catastrophic damage, with at least 18 miles requiring repairs, said Mark Segura, vice president of transmission and distribution services for Pineville-based Cleco Corp.

Transmission lines connect power plants to community substations and supply electricity to large numbers of customers.

Even so, by Wednesday night Entergy had restored power to 181,829 customers in Louisiana and Mississippi, mostly in areas not affected by flooding, Wiese said. "We are making good progress where we can get access."

All of the region's power and telephone companies were struggling to restore services in the wake of KatrNearly every customer of New Orleans-based Entergy and Pineville-based Cleco in metropolitan New Orleans remained without power Wednesday night, for the second day since the storm ripped through the region.

Communication was another problem, for utility workers as well as everyone else in southeastern Louisiana. Telephone services, over both wired and wireless networks, remained sporadic and, in some cases in Orleans, Jefferson and St. Bernard parishes, completely dead.

Nearly 81,000 wired phone lines were dead in southeastern Louisiana, said BellSouth Corp., the state's largest phone service provider. And more phone lines were expected to fail as backup generators at communications terminals that survived the storm ran out of fuel.

Doing all they can

BellSouth reported several key breaks in the company's fiber-optic line system, the backbone of its communications network.

Work crews focused on repairing major cables, firming backup power to switching centers and restoring phone service to emergency personnel, local officials and hospitals, the Atlanta-based company said in a statement Wednesday afternoon.

"We are doing everything possible to assess the extensive damage this destructive storm has caused," said Bill Oliver, president of BellSouth's Louisiana operations.

Call volume created its own problems in the parts of the network that were working. Many people trying to make calls to and from the region were met with busy signals or messages saying that circuits were busy.

Wireless phone networks experienced similar troubles.

Cingular Wireless lost at least 700 antennas, or cell sites, throughout the region, according to a company operator.

Verizon Wireless also lost portions of its network, but spokesman Patrick Kimball couldn't say how many towers were down in the region. "Strangely enough, some cell sites are still operating on rooftops," he said.

Wireless services were improving in Baton Rouge, Mobile, Ala., and Pensacola, Fla., where crews had easier access to damaged facilities, Kimball said. But damaged equipment in much of metropolitan New Orleans remained unreachable, he said.

"The situation could improve in certain cases and it could worsen in others. It's such a fluid situation, it's hard to tell," he said.

Most of the electricity and phone companies had storm operations centers outside the metropolitan area.

Managers with Entergy, which supplies electricity to 1.2 million customers in Louisiana, are orchestrating the historic power grid restoration effort from command centers in Baton Rouge and Jackson, Miss.

Nearly all of the company's employees who rode out the storm in the Hyatt Regency Hotel next to the Superdome in downtown New Orleans evacuated the city Tuesday when floodwaters continued rising in the Central Business District and other conditions in the city deteriorated. The hotel, which also served as the command center for city officials, suffered major damage during the storm.

Historic proportions

Dan Packer, chief executive officer of Entergy's utility in New Orleans, remained at the hotel with Mayor Ray Nagin and a handful of city officials. At 5 p.m., 693,156 Entergy customers in southeastern Louisiana, or more than half of its customer base in the state, were in the dark. Some 21,636 more were without powWith 1.1 million Entergy customers losing electricity at the peak of the storm, the outage more than quadrupled the severity of the previous high outage event for the company, which came in June with Tropical Storm Cindy, Lagarde said.

All 88,000 Cleco customers in the parishes of St. Tammany and Washington remained without power, Cleco spokeswoman Fran Phoenix said.

Contact Keith DarcØ at nolapaperboy@cox.net.

Gulf Coast refineries lack electricity; some production restored

Storm cripples supply, pumps up gas prices

By BRAD FOSS
AP Business Writer

Gasoline prices leaped nationwide Wednesday as key refineries and pipelines remained crippled by Hurricane Katrina, crimping supplies and leading to caps on the amount of fuel delivered to retailers.

To boost supplies, the U.S. government said it would loan oil to refiners facing shortfalls and relax environmental restrictions on the type of gasoline sold during summer. Crude futures prices fell but remained close to $69 a barrel.

Just how bad the situation becomes for motorists, who are facing pump prices in excess of $3 a gallon in a growing number of markets, depends on how quickly electricity can be restored to Gulf Coast pipelines and refineries, analysts said. Flooding may have left some important refinery equipment submerged and it will be days before a full damage assessment is completed, industry officials and analysts said.

Some rays of hope emerged Wednesday. The Colonial Pipeline Co. said it would restore partial service with help from diesel generators that will allow it to begin shipping gasoline, heating oil and jet fuel from Houston to markets up and down the East Coast. A Transportation Department spokesman said Wednesday the Plantation Pipe Line Co. would restore partial service on its East Coast lines Wednesday night as well and that both companies expected to be fully operational by late Thursday.

Similarly, the Louisiana Offshore Oil Port, through which 10 percent of all U.S. oil imports flow, said generators would enable it to gradually resume partial service.

"Every little bit is going to help," said oil analyst John Kilduff at Fimat USA in New York.

A significant amount of oil and gas production in the Gulf of Mexico remains shut and reports of banged-up platforms and missing rigs continued to trickle in as companies conducted aerial inspections of offshore facilities.

Onshore, wholesale gasoline suppliers have begun capping the amount of fuel they sell to retailers in certain markets to make sure retailers do not take delivery of more fuel than they actually need. Analysts said that while shortages have been reported in a small number of markets, they do not believe the problem is widespread and they cautioned motorists not to top off tanks out of fear.

With retail gasoline prices surging, BP PLC said in an e-mail to clients that it is making "pricing decisions with prudence and restraint in the wake of this natural disaster."

Light sweet crude for October delivery on the New York Mercantile Exchange fell 87 cents to settle at $68.94 a barrel, down from an overnight high of $70.65. On Tuesday, oil futures settled at $69.81, the highest closing price on Nymex since trading began in 1983, although still below the inflation-adjusted high of about $90 a barrel that was set in 1980.

October gasoline futures surged as high as $2.92 a gallon on Nymex and settled at $2.6145 per gallon, an increase of 14 cents. That is 35 percent higher than they were on Friday.

"There's too much uncertainty," said Kilduff said.

While the details were being worked out about how much oil would be loaned from the U.S. Strategic Petroleum Reserve _ and which refiners would receive it _ European nations began considering the release of their own government-controlled stockpiles of gasoline and heating oil, according to officials at the Paris-based International Energy Agency. The officials demanded anonymity because the consultations were confidential.

"We're the highest (wholesale) price market in the world right now," said Lawrence J. Goldstein, president of the New York-based nonprofit Petroleum Industry Research Foundation. "We're going to attract a lot of supply here."

In another attempt to ease the crunch on motor fuel supplies, the Environmental Protection Agency said it would temporarily allow retailers nationwide to sell gasoline and diesel that does not meet stringent summer air-quality standards.

Even before Katrina plowed through the Gulf Coast, oil producers and refiners had been struggling to meet rising demand around the globe, particularly in the U.S. and China. Energy markets have been on edge for about two years because the amount of excess oil production capacity worldwide is only about 1.5 million barrels a day, or less than 2 percent of demand.

"The hurricane has made a bad situation worse," said oil analyst Fadel Gheit at Oppenheimer & Co. in New York.

Eight Gulf refineries remain out of service, and will be for days if not weeks, according to analysts, though most of their owners have not yet publicly announced the extent of any damage.

It could take a week to 10 days before refineries and pipelines will be able to draw power from the grid, John Zamanek, vice president of Entergy Corp. told CNBC.

The hobbling of a pipeline that carries crude oil from the Gulf of Mexico to the Midwest has increased the need for Canadian imports, industry officials said. And the shutdown of pipelines that carry various fuels to markets on the East Coast means that more gasoline and diesel will have to be shipped by barge and by truck, according to John Eichberger, director of motor fuels at the National Association of Convenience Stores.

The U.S. Minerals Management Service said Wednesday that 91 percent of the Gulf of Mexico's oil output was out of service, with more than 6 million barrels of production lost since Friday. The agency said 83 percent of natural gas output was shut down, resulting in a loss of 34.2 billion cubic feet of lost production since Friday.

While the loss of oil is significant, Energyintel analyst Tom Wallin said Katrina would likely have a more serious impact on the nation's supply of natural gas.

"Crude oil production could be replaced by a release of barrels from the U.S. strategic reserve," he said. "There is no such safety valve for natural gas."

Natural gas futures fell 35.9 cents to $11.30 per 1,000 cubic feet on Nymex. That is almost double the price from a year ago.

Heating oil futures slipped 2.29 cents to $2.053 per gallon.

STAFF PHOTO BY KATHY ANDERSON

BATON ROUGE: Trauma teams tend to patients at the Pete Maravich Assembly Center on Louisiana State University's campus. The injured and sick continued to file into Baton Rouge from New Orleans on Wednesday.

Ailing refugees find care at LSU arena

Path to Baton Rouge harrowing for many

By Ron Thibodeaux
Staff writer

BATON ROUGE Diabetic Darrell Johnson hadn t had an insulin injection in three days. Gail Holmes was staggered by her high blood pressure, and her infant grandson was badly dehydrated. Sheila Morris battled collapsed veins.

They had been rescued in dramatic fashion from different parts of New Orleans, and they were in a bad way.

For hundreds like them, the dangers and discomforts inflicted by Hurricane Katrina s rampage began to subside Wednesday at Louisiana State University, as volunteer doctors and nurses converged to treat refugees with acute medical needs at the Pete Maravich Assembly Center.

Throughout the day, helicopters and ambulances ferried ailing, storm-weary evacuees onto the campus. Medical teams scurried to triage them there before dispatching them yet again to hospitals or shelters, depending on the severity of their conditions.

Johnson, 55, and his wife Pearl, 53, reclined side-by-side on makeshift beds on the arena floor at midday, sharing small talk and a plate lunch of sausage jambalaya and corn in air-conditioned comfort. After a harrowing escape from the ravages of hurricane floodwaters, followed by two days of isolation and exposure before a helicopter finally plucked them off an elevated highway, a hot meal in air-conditioned comfort was just one more surreal experience in a week of surreal experiences.

After three days without his insulin, Johnson s blood sugar was three times as high as normal, and medical personnel were quick to attend to him. He and his wife were just as quick to recount the ordeal that preceded their rescue.

'So miserable'

They abandoned their house on St. Denis Street when the water got waist-deep inside, then gathered with others from the neighborhood on the third floor of the St. Bernard housing project. As the water continued rising to dangerous levels, they flagged down someone in a boat to take them to Interstate 610. Although high and dry, they were stuck there for two days before a helicopter picked them up and took them to Metairie. From there, an ambulance brought them to Baton Rouge.

It was miserable, miserable, so miserable out there, Pearl Johnson said, recounting the ordeal that preceded their rescue. It took so long for them to come see about you.

But, we re here, her husband was quick to add. At least we made it here.

Holmes was bused to LSU after waiting out the storm on I-10 near the Superdome, with her 6-month-old grandson, Jahim Harris. He lay listless on a hospital bed Wednesday as she sat stoically at his side, utterly exhausted, thinking about the husband, son, daughters, sons-in-law and grandchildren from whom they had gotten separated during the emergency.

I can t sleep until I find the rest of my family, she said softly.

36 hours on 1-10

Outside, Morris sat with two daughters and five grandchildren as she awaited processing into the PMAC. They had spent 1 ‰ days on the elevated I-10 near Claiborne Avenue, in the midst of hundreds, maybe a thousand other storm victims. When they could sleep, they slept on the concrete roadway. There were no bathroom facilities. Their water ran out long before they were rescued.

Morris summed up the experience: It s sad out there.

Patients entered through the northeast corridor in wheelchairs, on gurneys or on foot, passing under the purple-and-gold sign proclaiming the Assembly Center s longtime nickname, DEAF DOME, a tribute to the rowdy, noisy crowds there that have cheered the exploits of Shaquille O Neal, Chris Jackson, Simone Augustus and other LSU basketball greats over the years.

But Wednesday, the Deaf Dome was oasis of care in soothing, hushed tones, the calm after the storm.

Doctors and nurses were joined in the triage center by social workers, mental health professionals and clergymen.

The Rev. Keith Crider of Ascension Baptist Church in Gonzales was struck by the suffering he found as he made his rounds.

It s shattering, he said. These are sick people.

But most of all, he added, They re thankful to be here.

Hotels offer refuge amid turmoil

Good food, carpools provided

By Rebecca Mowbray
Business writer

After Gov. Kathleen Blanco ordered all remaining inhabitants of New Orleans to leave Tuesday, tourists stranded at downtown hotels hastily arranged carpools and taxis or even hitchhiked across the Crescent City Connection to escape the floodwater spreading down Canal Street.

After coming to town for exceedingly normal things such as a wedding, a business meeting, a museum opening or a rendezvous with friends, these tourists found themselves in Hurricane Katrina s path, and spent days in hotels with dim emergency lighting and no air conditioning.

But all those questioned said that workers at their hotels knocked themselves out to make sure everyone got out safely

Hotel security drove us out in their own cars, said Gerald Reagan, who had been celebrating his 50th wedding anniversary with his wife at the New Orleans Marriott and was trying to fly home to Columbus, Ohio, from Baton Rouge Metropolitan Airport. There was a small caravan of tourists.

On Monday, during the storm, the Reagans stayed in their hotel room until about 6 a.m., when the hotel staff asked them to move to a ballroom so they would be away from the windows.

Florida resident Tom O Brien got stuck at the Sheraton New Orleans while he was in town for the opening of the Odyssey s Shipwreck and Treasure Adventure, an exhibit about the S.S. Republic, a Civil War-era ship that sank in a hurricane while sailing to New Orleans.

At the Sheraton, O Brien gave a man with a car a couple hundred bucks to take him and his son to the Baton Rouge airport. Another group at the Sheraton with O Brien for the Odyssey opening paid a taxi $500 to take all seven of them to the Baton Rouge airport.

We saw people walking over the bridge, O Brien said, speaking of the Crescent City Connection. When the O Briens left Wednesday morning, they said the water was still about 200 yards up Canal Street from the Sheraton.

At the Sheraton, the roof above the eighth-floor administrative offices was peeled off. We could look down at all the computers, said O Brien, who stayed on the 19th floor.

Debbie and Raymond Zeringue had been visiting New Orleans from Tampa, Fla., for a wedding on Saturday, and got stuck at the Hilton New Orleans Riverside when their flight home on Sunday was canceled.

While some guests in the hotel chose to stay in ballrooms during the hurricane, the Zeringues stayed in their room until the wind blew out a bridge between two of the hotel s towers. They had to walk down to the base of the tower they were staying in and through six inches of water in the kitchen to get to the main section of the hotel.

Despite the inconveniences, the Zeringues had nothing but raves for the city s largest hotel, which often houses as many as 5,000 people during hurricanes to spare them from having to evacuate.

They got three meals a day even though the hotel was short-staffed, and ate food purchased for a convention that canceled.

At the Hilton, on a scale of one to 100, they re 1,000, Debbie Zeringue said.

When Blanco ordered everyone out of the city, hotel staff went door to door and asked them to leave. The Zeringues still had their rental car from the wedding, but others weren t so lucky. They re hitching rides, Debbie Zeringue said.

Carol and Robert Allred of High Point, N.C., flew into New Orleans on Friday to meet friends from Italy at the Windsor Court. The friends never made it because of the storm, but the Allreds said the Windsor Court staff kept them comfortable at the hotel. The staff was incredible, Robert Allred said.

They were losing their homes and they had smiles on their faces, Carol Allred added.

During the storm, the Windsor Court was hit by windows that were flying off of the nearby Doubletree and W hotels, but the Allreds window didn t break.

When it became clear that everyone needed to leave, the hotel began making lists of people with cars and where they were going and tried to coordinate rides for those without. The Allreds left Wednesday morning in a caravan of cars that dropped them off at the Baton Rouge airport.

We would see people walking down Canal Street pulling their luggage, Carol Allred said.

They beg, plead, put their names on lists

But there're still no rooms to be had in Baton Rouge

By William Kalec and Jim Kleinpeter
Staff writers

Some begged knees resting on cold tile, fingers interlocked for rooms with no lights, no air conditioning, nothing but a roof and a stained concrete floor.

When they finally reached the front desk at Southgate Towers, evacuees of Hurricane Katrina shared stories of loss and destruction, hoping that the severity of their own accounts would somehow create a vacancy. But the four-building complex already had a waiting list of more than 200 people, each scribbled name with an equally distressing tale.

There are just so many people that we can t help, said Melissa Breland, regional property director of Southgate Towers said. There are people who need permanent housing, and I don t know where they are going to find it. But you still see faces. And you have to tell them: We just don t have room.

Wednesday at 2 p.m., the newly opened apartment-condominium complex on Nicholson Drive, about 500 yards from LSU s athletic facilities that were transformed into relief shelters and medical work areas this week, had no occupancies after deciding to house several FEMA agents and a few refugees.

Typically, we re not set up to do nightly rentals, credit card payments; in many cases we have contracts that tenants need to sign, said Sandra Avery, director of real estate at Southgate. The government wanted a nightly contract that doesn t require a notice to vacate, and that type of thing.

We said, You know, it s a national emergency. Forget about the contracts. Forget about everything. Ya ll come. Stay the number of nights you need to stay, and we ll settle up with you when it is all done.

With the influx of FEMA, medical specialists and evacuees to Baton Rouge, most hotels and apartments in the area are booked, forcing those seeking shelter to venture farther west.

There are no hotel rooms available, or apartments, said Paul Arrigo, director of the Baton Rouge Visitors and Convention Bureau. Best bet is www.visitdallas.com.

That s Dallas, as in Dallas, Texas.

Best Western employees are telling everyone trying to find rooms or shelter to call the American Red Cross hotline, 1 (866) GET-INFO.

Southgate officials organized ration kits for its temporary residents, which included buying 120 air mattresses, several hundred sheets, shower curtains, towels and other toiletries. Avery and Breland said other R.W. Day properties, the company that owns Southgate Towers, are providing similar services but not on such a grand scale because those buildings were older and had higher occupancy rates.

Whatever we had left in the portfolio, we ve now secured for FEMA, Avery said. In some cases, they are bunking up six or seven people in a room, just to get everybody in.

Some of the rooms in Southgate have full or partial electricity thanks to the complex s generator system that has kept hallway and parking garage lights on when the power went out.

Breland occupies one of those fully functioning rooms. To provide minimal electricity to her floor, several wires were running from her propped-open front door last night.

Oh, if you go back to your room and see a bunch of towels in your washer, Avery said to her co-worker, that s us. You re one of the few with a washer.

Both women laughed, midway through a seemingly never-ending day.

There have been many tears, Breland said. I don t have a house or know anybody in New Orleans, but it s been a physical and emotion drain. Hearing the stories and seeing the desperation is just heart-wrenching.

HURRICANE KATRINA AFTERMATH

Houston readies Astrodome for evacuees

Mental, physical health a concern

By Josh Peter and Tara Young
Staff writers

HOUSTON A crew of about 1,000 people worked Wednesday to prepare the Astrodome for thousands of evacuees scheduled to start arriving today from New Orleans.

Food, cots and medical services will be ready, said Artee Jones, a spokeswoman for Houston TranStar, an agency serving as a command center. The indoor stadium is being transformed into a temporary shelter for up to 23,000 people.

The evacuees, many of whom have endured sweltering conditions in the Superdome since the building lost power Monday, were expected to begin arriving by bus early today, Jones said.

The relocation effort, being led by the Federal Emergency Management Agency and the American Red Cross, represents one of the largest emergency responses in history. With no historical points of reference, officials will learn through trial and error, said Margaret O Brien-Molina, Red Cross spokeswoman for the Southwest service area.

I guess what I keep trying to get people to understand is the enormity of the situation, said O Brien-Molina, adding more trained volunteers are needed. This is a global event.

Law enforcement officials also will be involved to ensure the safety of the evacuees.

The goal, O Brien-Molina said, is to make life as normal for the evacuees as possible over the next several weeks. Many of them have never been to Houston, and many will be unaware of the level of devastation, she said.

They don t know what s going on right now, O Brien-Molina said. We are trying to create for them basically a big, safe space. A lot of it is going to be simply reassuring people that things are going to be OK. We are going to try to cushion the blow as they come in.

Along with showers, beds and food, a day care center and counseling services will be available. Local officials are worried about the mental and physical health of thousands who endured sweltering conditions in the Superdome and spent the past few days with no air conditioning and little food and water.

There is a concern about the condition of the people coming from the Superdome, understanding they have been in the same clothes for days now, said Gloria Roemer, a spokesman for Harris County Judge Robert Eckels, who runs the county that owns the Astrodome. We are concerned that they are going to be in emotional and mental anguish because they don t know where their families are.

Religious leaders also have offered their services as part of an outpouring of support from Houston residents. Phone calls from those wanting to volunteer and contribute to the effort have flooded the Harris County office, Roemer said.

Officials are even discussing the idea of holding free concerts in the parking lot outside the Astrodome and providing free admission to college football games scheduled to be played over the next two weeks at Reliant Park Stadium that sits adjacent to the Astrodome.

So that emotional, human level is very present in all of these operations, Roemer said. But then again, you re talking about talking about people who have been enclosed and mentally distraught, so you don t know. You don t know until they get here what their state of mind will be. But the response from the community has been overwhelming.

The Astrodome will serve only as a temporary shelter, Jones said. Local officials say they re hearing the Louisiana evacuees could need places for up to 16 weeks, and eventually they will be dispersed to smaller facilities better suited for long-term shelter.

Shea Guinn, president and general manager for SMG/Reliant Park, who has cleared the Astrodome s schedule through December, said he was confident the facility would be able to accommodate the needs of the evacuees. But the facility would open only to those coming from the Superdome.

Throughout the day Wednesday, weary New Orleans area residents who fled before the storm were turned away at the gate leading to the Astrodome.

Warren Gabriel, 27, of eastern New Orleans, was among them. He came to the Astrodome Wednesday hoping officials would make anexception for him and his family.

Gabriel, who was in tears, said he and eight others had been driving around looking for shelter for days, living out of a Nissan Maxima, he said. The Astrodome was his last resort, Gabriel said.

I don t have no money, said Gabriel, in tears, after five shelters turned him away. Our homes are destroyed. We know we don t have anything to go back to. You can t relax right now. New Orleans is a lake.

This city is lost, said Gabriel, whose mother escaped to the Superdome before the storm. We lost. Everybody s lost. All we have is each other, but we can t get together at the Astrodome.

The Astrodome, built in 1965, was known as the world s Eighth Wonder when it opened because it was the first ball park with a roof. It served as home to the now-defunct Houston Oilers of the National Football League through the 1996 season and home to the Houston Astros of Major League Baseball until 1999.

Both of the city s professional football and baseball team have moved to new facilities, and the Astrodome has been used for events such as the annual, six-week rodeo.

The Astrodome is very much a stable facility, Roemer said. It has working (air conditioning), running water, locker rooms with showers and, needless to say, hundreds of toilets that work.

Jones said many people who call Houston home have some sort of link to Louisiana. We are looking at this in many ways as family helping family, she said.

STAFF PHOTO BY RUSTY COSTANZA

AIRLINE DRIVE: Michael Dow of Metairie is all smiles after getting water and MREs at the Sam's Club on Airline Drive in Metairie. The essentials were brought from the Federal Emergency Management Agency, trucked in by the Cheyenne and Arapaho Tribe Wild Land Firefighters from El Rono, Okla.

U.S., private groups embark on massive relief effort

Bush says recovery will take years

By Bruce Alpert
Washington bureau

WASHINGTON The federal government and private relief organizations are promising an unprecedented effort to help victims of Hurricane Katrina recover from what the White House says could well be the worst natural disaster in our nation s history.

The Navy is sending five ships, including a hospital boat, along with eight maritime rescue teams. The Department of Homeland Security said 1,700 trucks have been dispatched to the affected communities with tons of water, ice, food, medical supplies, generators, tents and tarpaulins.

This is our tsunami, said Paul Maniscalco, a disaster response expert at George Washington University. We re in uncharted territory. We ve never had to deal with something encompassing so much destruction over such a large area with such large population centers. He said the effort would require just about every agency in the federal government, tens of thousands of private volunteers and trillions of dollars.

Red Cross spokeswoman Devorah Goldburg said the agency has opened 230 shelters in Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama, serving about 46,000 evacuees, and was preparing to provide food, drinks and counseling to the thousands of people being relocated from the Superdome to the Houston Astrodome.

The response for contributions has been overwhelming, with 100,000 calls to the organization s toll-free donation number, 1 (800) HELP-NOW, the most ever for a single day, Goldburg said.

President Bush, who got a firsthand look Wednesday at the destruction as Air Force One flew over New Orleans and other hurricane-ravaged communities in Louisiana and Mississippi, said the recovery effort will take years.

He offered some words of hope for hurricane victims, who in many instances lost their homes, possessions and jobs simultaneously.

I m confident that with time you ll get your life back in order, new communities will flourish, the great city of New Orleans will get back on its feet and America will be a stronger place for it, he said.

Mike McClellan, Bush s spokesman, said it was very sobering for the president and his staff to look down at the widespread destruction in New Orleans. I think it s becoming clear to everyone that this could well be the worst natural disaster in our nation s history, McClellan said.

The disaster may have produced more than 1 million newly homeless Americans.

Sen. David Vitter, R-La., said he s satisfied with the federal response to the hurricane, although it might not be as fast as some hard-pressed hurricane victims would like.

We just have horrible conditions to deal with, Vitter said. For instance, every land route into (New Orleans) except one is flooded and obviously we are using air assets, but it is tough. They are moving things into the city diesel fuel, water, ice, food, etc. as fast as they can.

The disaster marked the first time that the White House has declared such an event to be an incident of national significance. That designation enables the Department of Homeland Security to pull together usually independent federal agencies for a unified response to the disaster.

Michael Chertoff, the Homeland Security secretary who appeared at a news conference that brought together top officials with seven federal agencies, said residents in New Orleans and other affected communities can expect a full range of federal resources. Among them, he said, are generators to help restore power to key facilities, supplies like food, ice and water, help repairing roadways and bridges, along with help caring for those injured or made sick by the storm. The help includes a Navy medical ship now sailing from Baltimore to the Gulf Coast and mental health professionals ready to offer counseling to displaced hurricane victims.

He promised the recovery effort won t last for just a few days, or even a few months, but for years. Sens. Mary Landrieu, D-La, and Vitter, said they expected a generous supplemental spending bill to be ready when Congress returns from a summer recess next week.

But there are all sorts of challenges, federal officials said.

Michael Leavitt, secretary of Health and Human Services, said he had declared a public health emergency in communities stretching from Louisiana to Florida.

We are gravely concerned about the potential for cholera, typhoid and dehydrating diseases that could come as a result of the stagnant water and the conditions, he said.

The Coast Guard Auxiliary, which provides volunteers for water safety and rescue efforts, said its members have had a hard time responding to the calls for help.

There is no gasoline, communications are limited at best, no place to bed and feed our members and a lack of sanitation, said Jim Vass of the Eighth Coast Guard Auxiliary District, which covers southern coastal states. Auxiliarists will need to be patient until the federal agencies at the scene are able to provide the necessary logistics to the rescuers before more people arrive on the scene.

Myles Fish, president and CEO of International Aid, a Christian relief organization, said he traveled through the most ravaged sections of Indonesia after last year s tsunami and the devastation in New Orleans is comparable. He said that in many ways the relief efforts will be similar, because while many of the rural sections devastated by the tsunami lacked infrastructure, like well equipped hospitals, now unfortunately, because of all the destruction, you can say the same thing about New Orleans.

We got to start all over to rebuild that city, Fish said.

Refugees tell of harrowing escapes

Fleeing to shelters is tricky business

By Laura Maggi
Capital Bureau

GONZALES Like many refugees who ended up in this shelter an hour outside of New Orleans, Alonza Moore got out of the city a day after Hurricane Katrina using his ingenuity and more than a little luck.

Trapped alone in the attic of his eastern New Orleans home since early Monday morning, Moore decided the next dawn to brave the waters at that point up above his waist and try to escape on foot. His goal: Get to the Superdome.

But as he tramped toward downtown, the Superdome seemed impossibly far away. Water was everywhere, Moore said, tearing up as he recalled walking by what appeared to be a family that died trapped in their car. Seeing looters breaking into stores along Chef Menteur Highway, Moore said he tried to keep his head down and just kept walking.

Ididn t think I was going to make it, said Moore, who goes by the nickname Sweet. But after hours of walking he caught a remarkable break in Gentilly: A former co-worker who also was embarking on a last-minute exit from the city drove by in a van. I heard somebody holler, Sweet, said Moore, hugging Norman Gallo Sr., who had also decided on Tuesday morning to try to drive out of the city with his wife and son as floodwaters began to engulf his Gentilly home.

With Gallo s 17-year-old son walking through flooded areas to test the water s depth, they eventually made it onto the Crescent City Connection and headed out, eventually finding refuge in this town outside of Baton Rouge.

Federal officials could not say how long they will have to stay in the shelters, which have air-conditioning, food, bedding and other basic amenities, but lack any extras.

Many of the last-minute escapees from the drenched city recounted similar if less harrowing journeys, getting out as more of New Orleans became deluged with water and looting made the city seem less safe. They ended up at a last-minute shelter established at the Lamar Dixon Exposition Center in Gonzales, which volunteers said filled up just a couple hours after opening Tuesday afternoon.

About 40,000 refugees from the metropolitan New Orleans area have ended up at 120 shelters, officials reported Wednesday. Federal officials could not say how long they will have to stay in the shelters, which have air-conditioning, food, bedding and other basic amenities, but lack any extras.

The Federal Emergency Management Agency remains focused on trying to find people who remain trapped by the floods in their attics or rooftops, said Nicole Andrews, a spokeswoman for the agency. The next stage will be ensuring that basic necessities, such as water, ice and military meals-ready-to-eat, are available to those who need them.

After these things are taken care, of the agency will begin to figure out how to set people up in temporary housing, Everything is on the table in terms of what length we will go to get the people out of the immediate-need shelters and into temporary housing, Andrews said.

At the Lamar Dixon center, which one volunteer said has a maximum capacity of 1,200 people, evacuees were camped out on blankets and air mattresses, chatting or trying to sleep amid the low-level buzz, children bouncing balls and playing with toy cars, as well as sporadic loudspeaker announcements.

Those interviewed described the shelter as a welcome haven, with helpful volunteers and a pleasant vibe among the refugees. But at one point Wednesday afternoon volunteer coordinator Dhana Johnson took the microphone to tell people that reports of stolen clothes and personal items would be taken seriously, with the authorities brought in to investigate. Johnson later said the thefts were so far only a mild problem, but she wanted to make sure people understood they would not be tolerated.

Laney Moses, who waited out the storm with friends at the Hilton Hotel, said she tries to be optimistic, despite the anxious feelings she can t shake. As with many people who fled the storm, she hasn t been able to get in touch with any of her family members, including her husband. Moses said that although her husband might have tried to stay at their Read Boulevard apartment in eastern New Orleans, one of the areas with extensive flooding, she said he was very safety-conscious.

I ve prayed. I have a lot of faith, said Moses, who wiped away tears as she talked about the lives that would need to be rebuilt and the difficulties of finding loved ones.

Several evacuees said they are just beginning to think of the coming struggles: picking up the pieces of destroyed homes, finding other places to stay and trying to get back to work.

What is there to go back to? asked Moore, who was heading up to Shreveport with his wife, who had decamped over the weekend and drove back from north Louisiana to fetch her husband. Moore had been able to get a text message to his wife on his drive out of New Orleans.

STAFF PHOTO BY RUSTY COSTANZA

METAIRIE: Sister Silvia Gurrusquieta, left, uses a prayer card to fan Sister Margarita Rivera while they wait on Interstate 10 near Causeway Boulevard. They were two of several nuns with the Sisters of Mary who were rescued by boat from their Perlita Street convent. They were accompanied by five people who they took in during the storm.

STAFF PHOTO BY SUSAN POAG

NEW ORLEANS: A Louisiana National Guard truck full of refugees comes off the Crescent City Connection and heads toward drier ground on the West Bank.

Without work, money runs out for evacuees

New Orleanians gather at Port Arthur hotel

By Jaquetta White
Business writer

Some New Orleanians who evacuated to Port Arthur, Texas, are already feeling the financial strain of living in a hotel.

Carmen Miranda of Metairie packed up her extended family of nearly 15 people and checked out of the Southwinds Motel on Wednesday. The family headed to a church shelter because they could no longer afford hotel rooms; especially after not working since Hurricane Katrina struck the metro New Orleans area early Monday.

We didn t even get paid at our jobs, said Miranda, who works at a day-care center. My aunt and my sister, they re ready to look for jobs here.

Miranda is just one of a number of New Orleans refugees at the motel who have resigned themselves to the fact that they may be living there for some time. Many are considering finding jobs in the Texas community so that they can replenish dwindling food supplies and pay their hotel bills.

Everybody is trying to get a plan at this point, said Jennifer Lucineo, a resident of eastern New Orleans who is staying at the hotel. Right now, we re trying to find out what options are available.

Lucineo has petitioned restaurants in Port Arthur to provide complimentary meals to the evacuees. KFC has responded by bringing food to area hotels.

Lucineo s sister, Solome Lucineo-Boyd, plans to apply for a job at a nearby Wal-Mart.

We need the help, Lucieno-Boyd said. If that message can get out we d be happy.

Chad Leblanc said he plans to stay in Port Arthur with his wife and children for a few more days before they make their way to Baton Rouge, where he has lined up temporary work.

The unknown is the worst of all, said Leblanc s wife, Courtney, who is worried about a relative who refused to evacuate. It s hard to say what you re going to do from here because you don t know where you re going to have to start from. You don t know if you re going to have to start from scratch.

Most evacuees were worried about their homes and their friends and family who fled the city as the storm approached.

All we hear about is New Orleans and Slidell, but nothing at all about the West Bank, said Tyrone Boudreaux of Harvey. Our biggest problem is we hear people saying stay away, stay away but we want to know what happened to our home.

Although adult evacuees are in a somewhat panicked state, children, for the most part, seem to consider their displacement an extended vacation. The pool at Southwinds Motel is always filled with children splashing around, but that s not to say they don t know what s going on.

In between yells of Daddy, watch me dive, Caitlyn, Leblanc s 10-year-old daughter, said that besides her more serious worries about the safety of her family and friends, she was concerned about the likelihood that her school year will be extended.

I don t want that to happen, she said. I don t want to go to school in the summer.

Swollen feet impede diabetic s evacuation

As city drowns in chaos,death gets little notice

By Keith Spera
Staff writer

At 91, Booker Harris ended his days propped on a lawn chair, covered by a yellow quilt and abandoned, dead, in front of the Ernest N. Morial Convention Center.

Mr. Harris died in the back of a Ryder panel truck Wednesday afternoon, as he and his 93-year-old wife, Allie, were evacuated from eastern New Orleans. The truck's driver deposited Mrs. Harris and her husband's body on the Convention Center Boulevard neutral ground.

And there it remained.

With 3,000 or more evacuees stranded at the Convention Center - and with no apparent plan to deal with them - collecting a body was no one's priority. It was just another casualty in Hurricane Katrina's wake.

A steady stream of often angry or despondent people, many from the flooded Central City neighborhood, trickled first toward Lee Circle and then to the Convention Center, hoping to be saved from increasingly desperate straits.

Food, water and options had dwindled across Uptown and Central City, where looters seemed to rage almost at will, clearing out boutique clothing shops and drugstores alike. Hospitals no longer would accept emergencies, as staffers prepared to evacuate with patients.

"I lived in Los Angeles during the Rodney King riots. That was a piece of cake compared to this."
KEN ELDER, custodian at Christ Cathedral, St. Charles Avenue

"If you get shot," said a security guard at Touro Infirmary, "you've got to go somewhere else."

As a blazing sun and stifling humidity took their toll, 65-year-old

Faye Taplin rested alone on the steps of the Christ Cathedral in the 2900 block of St. Charles Avenue. Rising water had finally chased her from her Central City home. She clutched two plastic bags containing bedding, a little food and water and insulin to treat her diabetes.

She needed help but was unsure where to find it. She wanted to walk more than 15 blocks to a rumored evacuation pickup point beneath the Pontchartrain Expressway, but she doubted that was possible.

"I'm tired," she said. "My feet have swollen up on me. I can't walk that far."

The church custodian, Ken Elder, hoped to free his car from the parking lot behind the church as soon as the water went down.

He rode out Katrina on the Episcopal church's altar steps and was well stocked with food. But he feared the marauding looters who roamed St. Charles Avenue after dark.

"I lived in Los Angeles during the Rodney King riots," Elder said.

"That was a piece of cake compared to this."

Clara Wallace pushed her brother in a wheelchair down St. Charles from Fourth Street to the Pontchartrain Expressway. Suffering from diabetes and the aftereffects of a stroke, he wore only a hospital robe and endured part of the journey through standing water.

"Nobody has a bathroom he can use," Wallace, 59, said of her brother.

"Nobody would even stop to tell us if we were at the right place. What are we supposed to do?"

A man in a passing pickup truck from the state Department of Wildlife and Fisheries finally directed Wallace and the 50 other evacuees under the overpass to the convention center.

But they would find little relief there.

New evacuees were being dropped off after being pulled from inundated eastern New Orleans and Carrollton, pooling with those who arrived on foot. Some had been at the convention center since Tuesday morning but had received no food, water or instructions. They waited both inside and outside the cavernous building.

The influx overwhelmed the few staffers and Louisiana National

With so much need and so few resources, the weakest and frailest were bound to suffer the most. Seated next to her husband's body on the neutral ground beneath the St. Joseph Street sign, Allie Harris munched on crackers, seemingly unaware of the tragedy unfolding around her.

Eventually, guardsmen loaded her into a truck and hauled her off with other elderly evacuees.

Mr. Harris' body was left behind.

Such a breakdown did not bode well for other evacuees. As the afternoon wore on, hope faded, replaced by anger.

"This is 2005," John Murray shouted, standing in the street near Mr. Harris' body. "It should not be like this for no catastrophe. This is pathetic."

AWAITING RESCUE

AP PHOTO

New Orleans residents huddle on the path next to Bayou St. John as they wait to be rescued from the floodwaters all around them.

Michoud plant's equipment undamaged

By Keith Darce
Business writer

The condition of the eastern New Orleans plant that makes external fuel tanks for the space shuttle was uncertain Wednesday in the wake of Hurricane Katrina, but space equipment inside the buildings appeared undamaged, according to a statement from NASA headquarters.

Some windows and roofs at the Michoud Assembly Facility were damaged and debris is blocking some of the roads on the 58-acre plant, but the 36 workers and 28 firefighters who rode out the storm at the plant escaped without any injuries.

The agency's Stennis Space Center in Hancock County, Miss., just across Louisiana's state line, sustained similar window and roof damage, NASA said.

However, the space shuttle rocket engine test structures at Stennis didn't appear damaged.

Normal electricity services to both facilities were down, but generators were providing limited power to parts of Stennis. The only access to Michoud was by helicopter, NASA said. And like other buildings in metropolitan New Orleans, Michoud had no electricity and limited communications services.

NASA managers said in a written statement Wednesday afternoon that they were trying to help workers and others at Michoud and Stennis.

A helicopter from NASA's Marshal Space Flight Center in Huntsville, Ala., delivered several satellite phones and supplies to Michoud on Tuesday, NASA spokeswoman Katherine Trinidad said.

That helicopter and another one from Marshal were scheduled to make more deliveries to Michoud and Stennis on Wednesday.

The Michoud plant, which employs about 2,100 workers, is operated by Lockheed Martin Space Systems.

The facility is critical to NASA's effort to fix the external tank and start flying shuttles again. The fleet of orbiters was grounded in July after several large pieces of tank insulation foam broke free after liftoff.

At Stennis, 4,000 NASA employees, contractors and family members sought shelter as the most ferocious part of Katrina passed over Hancock County.

About 1,000 people remained at the center Wednesday afternoon, but more workers whose homes were damaged or destroyed in the storm were expected to seek shelter there in the coming days.

Employees at both Michoud and Stennis are excused from work through the duration of the recovery, NASA managers said.

"My heart goes out to all the people affected by the hurricane," said NASA Administrator Mike Griffin.

He promised to visit Michoud and Stennis "as soon as possible."

An agency assistance fund will provide a grant of up to $400 and an interest-free loan of up to $600 to NASA and contractor employees living in declared disaster areas, the agency said.

Contact Keith Darcé at nolapaperboy@cox.net.

Baton Rouge airport takes over for N.O.

By Rebecca Mowbray
Business writer

Airlines are adding flights to Baton Rouge and bringing larger planes to the city, which will become the state's primary aviation hub for the foreseeable future.

"We're told that some of the airlines that serve New Orleans are trying to come here," said Bill Profita, spokesman for the Baton Rouge Metropolitan Airport. "We've got enough concrete and ramp space to do it. Our airfield is undamaged and everything is operating."

Louis Armstrong New Orleans International Airport in Kenner closed late Sunday in advance of Hurricane Katrina.

American Airlines began adding additional flights during the weekend before the storm hit, Profita said. Delta Air Lines, the second-largest carrier at the New Orleans airport, has begun to put larger planes on its Baton Rouge routes. And JetBlue Airways, which operates two daily flights between New Orleans and New York's JFK International Airport, is considering moving its route to Baton Rouge, Profita said.

Airport officials in Baton Rouge have been told by their counterparts in New Orleans that Louis Armstrong's two runways are dry, but the terminals sustained wind damage, there are electrical problems, and all of the entrance roads to the airport are flooded. Until the water is drained, the airport can't reopen because fuel and supplies cannot be delivered.

The Baton Rouge airport has two 7,000-foot runways and a 3,800-foot runway. It is served by American, Delta, Northwest Airlines and Continental Airlines.

Airport officials in New Orleans couldn't be reached, but a telephone recording said the airport remains closed for the foreseeable future.

Southwest Airlines, the largest carrier at the New Orleans airport, said that it has been told that the airport hopes to reopen Sept. 12.

Many airlines have waived rebooking fees and penalties. Details are available on airline Web sites.

On Wednesday, the Baton Rouge airport was buzzing with tourists ordered to leave from New Orleans hotels, workers with disaster relief organizations and military personnel in camouflage.

The airport's new air cargo building has been turned into a staging area for rescue and relief supplies, and a growing number of military helicopters sat on the tarmac.

"I have been told that by nightfall, we will be staging 70 helicopters for the rescue efforts," Profita said.

KATRINA: THE STORM WE'VE ALWAYS FEARED

It s a mess, but we have our life.

Wilhelmina Batiste, 70, Lacombe resident

STAFF PHOTOS BY SCOTT THRELKELD

SLIDELL: A makeshift tent becomes the new home of Edith Nata, left, and her husband Anthony Nata, whose home was blown away by Hurricane Katrina.

HOMEOWNERS GET FIRST GLIMPSE OF DEVASTATION ON NORTH SHORE

By Meghan Gordon, Richard Boyd, Charlie Chapple and Paul Bartels
St. Tammany bureau

With major roadways in St. Tammany Parish dramatically clearer Wednesday, returning evacuees got their first awful look at the devastation caused by Katrinia s high winds and flooding.

As homeowners walked and biked into their lakefront neighborhoods from the cleared roads, they saw much of the same wreckage whether they were in Lacombe, Mandeville, Madisonville or Slidell. Enormous trees rested on crushed roofs and cars, and putrid sludge covered the once-flooded ground. And except for those people with generators, no one had power.

Central Louisiana Electric Co. officials said they had no firm estimate of when they would restore electricity to parts of St. Tammany and Washington parishes. They said they found serious damage to the equipment that connects power plants with distribution lines.

Every circuit that we have has damage, said spokeswoman Robbyn Cooper. It s going to take us weeks, an extended period of time.

Taking a short break at the parish emergency preparedness center in downtown Covington, Parish President Kevin Davis said the parish is now in recovery mode.

Even though we we re still rescuing people and searching for people, our focus now is trying to bet things back to normal, Davis said. But it s going to take a long time. I d say it ll be at least two to three months before all parish infrastructure is restored.

He estimated that that some 15,000 to 20,000 homes in St. Tammany were destroyed or damaged by Katrina s storm surge and high winds that toppled trees through houses. Davis said he envisioned many of those homeowners will live in temporary homes set up in the parish while their houses are repaired or rebuilt.

But the initial goal is to take care of residents still in the parish and restore essential services so evacuees can return and the parish s reconstruction can begin, Davis said.

One of the hardest hit areas in the parish was the Slidell, where many homes were swamped by Katrina s tidal surge.

In Palm Lake, water at Gaye and Henry Sollberger s home rose to the roof at one point.

Gaye Sollberger grew up in New Orleans and was a child when the devastating Hurricane Betsy blew through in 1965.

This was worse, she said, echoing the words of many city officials and private residents. We knew we were going to have water. We just didn t know it would be that high. I was not prepared for this.

It s 2 feet now. It s receded, she said.

And the areas that didn t flood, sustained heavy wind damage.

The hurricane, which apparently spun off a handful of tornadoes in some areas, also was quirky and arbitrary in inflicting its pain. Huge trees and power lines were toppled up and down the affluent Military Road area, especially the southern half, but had been removed or pulled to the side by Wednesday afternoon.

Hundreds of homes suffered damage from falling trees. Many interior streets remained impassable. Many neighborhoods appeared to be almost deserted.

The Lakewood subdivision was typical of the tree damage that inflicted so much of southeastern St. Tammany. Roughly every fourth house suffered mashed shingles or holes in the roof from wind-snapped trees.

SLIDELL: His guitar and trademark black Cadillac are all that remain of the home of blues legend Clarence 'Gatemouth' Brown on U.S. 11 near Slidell.

In Lacombe, meanwhile, most streets off Lake Road showed the remains of Katrina s flooding. Evacuees trudged through inches of muck or rode four-wheelers through standing water to confirm what they expected: flooded homes and wind-damaged roofs.

It s a mess, but thank God we still have our life, said Wilhelmina Batiste, 70, who lives on Napoleon Avenue. Katrina was a terrible girl.

Lacombe s most vulnerable houses on Elenore Drive weathered the storm fairly well, because most are raised on piers. But Jimmy Impastato learned different news when he drove through the neighborhood and found his wooden A-frame house relocated to the middle of the road.

Although Jeffrey Fontenette s Elenore Drive house fared well, the storm left him with bad memories of the screaming winds and rising waters. But he said the toughest part of the storm s aftermath has been the virtual absence of communication between those who stayed and their families across the country.

It s nauseating, Fontenette said. I ve got a mama. My son s got a mama. That s all we want to do: Call our mommies and tell them we re living.

Though Madisonville s flood damage was more limited than Lacombe s, the signs of Katrina s high winds were just as apparent in the riverfront town. The tin roofs of Salty s Marina were peeled back like soup cans. The banks of Bayou DeZare were a mess of sludge. Perhaps most dramatically, enormous trees, which just days ago added to the town s charm, now lay across houses, beside roads and at odd angles. A 5-foot-wide tree on Main Street was tilted to a 45-degree angle.

Just about every old tree in town is down, Madisonville police spokesman Dave Smith said. The town just will never look the same in our lifetime. It breaks my heart. I m so disgusted. Just about every ancient pecan and a lot of the oaks are gone.

Police cruising through Madisonville could help clear trees and patch up homes, but they didn t have many answers for those left homeless by the storm. Plans for distributing food, water and building supplies had yet to circulate across the parish. There s no ice, no food, no fuel, Smith said. People are asking everywhere, Where can I find it?

Smith said at least one person was apparently desperate enough for fresh meat that he shot a deer.

The damage to historic buildings along Mandeville s lakefront became clearer Wednesday, a day after police cleared one route to Lakeshore Drive. Mayor Eddie Price raised his estimate of seriously damaged homes to more than 100 in Mandeville. On the lakefront, six homes were leveled and most of the others had serious structural damage. Mandeville building inspector Bill Wohler said every home not raised in Old Mandeville was seriously damaged.

Many landmark buildings were all but shells, including the Pontchartrain Yacht Club, Rips on the Lake, Java Grotto, Juniper Restaurant, Rest-A-While church summer camp and the Down on the Lake bar. Le Petit Fleur, one of the city s most historic homes, was gutted but still stood.

In Abita Springs, some water remained on the ground in low areas. Large pine and oak trees spliced roofs and made driving through most streets impossible.

Winds ripped the face off a yellow house on Level Street, and fallen trees left a white house nearby demolished. The Tammany Trace was covered with debris, and the Abita Springs Cafe s roof was torn off.

Cleco s Cooper said crews were working simultaneously on the transmission system and the distribution lines that power 78,940 homes in St. Tammany and 709 in Washington Parish. The distribution system has about 65 percent overhead lines, with the rest buried underground. In every corner of the parish, the lines and poles hang precariously over roads and tangled with fallen trees.

Like parish officials, Cleco officials are urging residents not to return to St. Tammany. Cooper said darkened street lamps and traffic lights make driving incredibly dangerous, especially as more evacuees return.

SCENES FROM A CITY IN CRISIS

People got by as best they could Wednesday despite the water, the heat and the growing sense of despair.

STAFF PHOTO BY DAVID GRUNFELD

CENTRAL CITY: Evacuees walk, and ride, toward the Crescent City Connection. The underpass beneath the elevated West Bank Expressway became a refuge from the heat Wednesday for frustrated New Orleans evacuees.

STAFF PHOTO BY DAVID GRUNFELD

NEW ORLEANS: A family with nowhere to go wanders in the floodwaters, aimless but together.

STAFF PHOTO BY RUSTY COSTANZA

METAIRIE: Dozens of evacuees crowd a bus while waiting to be taken out of the area on Interstate 10 at Causeway Boulevard.

STAFF PHOTO BY BRETT DUKE

SUPERDOME: Elmore Gibson, 83, is helped out of a boat at the Dome on Wednesday. Maj. Gen. Don Reily of the Army Corps of Engineers said flood levels are now receding at a rate of 1 inch per hour, but it's likely to take at least 30 days before all the water is gone from New Orleans.

LEFT BEHIND

Unbelievable debris, unbearable sadness and the unrelenting need for water are among the things Hurricane Katrina deposited in Gulfport, Miss.

STAFF PHOTOS BY MICHAEL DeMOCKER

Beverly Ikerd, 85, sits in a chair she found in a driveway a block inland from the beach after she and her family went to check on her home in Gulfport. It had been destroyed.

Near a downed sign on Route 49 in Gulfport, people fill up jugs, bottles and tubs with water from a broken spigot by the side of the road.

A stuffed bunny and a large appliance are just some of the trash near the beach in Gulfport, near Long Beach.

OUR OPINIONS

AN EDITORIAL

WHERE IS THE CAVALRY?

New Orleans needs a show of force. Now.

Until the city is inundated with law enforcement officers from every level of government, the anarchy of the past three days will only worsen. More stores will be ransacked. More cars and bicycles will be stolen. More fights will break out over water, the most precious commodity in the aftermath of Katrina.

Only Wednesday did police officers from across the state start to appear on city streets, and then only sporadically. National Guard troops were working in parts of the city, but the beleaguered residents left in this drenched city need the troops on every corner. That is the only way to curb looting, robberies and worse. The lawlessness was intensifying to horrific levels Wednesday. Some residents said armed gangs were terrorizing people up and down Chef Menteur Highway in eastern New Orleans. There were reports of rapes and murders. In other parts of the city, looters became more and more brazen. One looter used a forklift to rip the metal security doors off a drugstore near Carrollton Avenue. At the Sports Authority in Riverside Marketplace, police had removed guns and ammunition and boarded up the place at noon. But looters broke through the plywood at 2 p.m. and stole every knife.

Not all the looting was so mercenary. Some people were taking only essentials: food, water, dry clothes.

The lack of a law enforcement presence is stunning. It is apparent that no one -- neither New Orleans Police Chief Eddie Compass nor state and federal officials -- were prepared for what would come after Katrina had passed through.

Not only did they not have basic communication plans in place locally, there seems to have been no strategy to get the hundreds of military and law enforcement officers on the ground who were needed to establish order immediately.

The city police officers who are on the streets don't know what the overarching strategy is and have had little or no communication with top brass.

Of course, this sort of horrific event is far beyond the ability of any single law enforcement agency. But that should have been obvious from the time Katrina entered the Gulf.

Virtually everyone involved in public safety has failed the people left in New Orleans who are trying desperately to survive.

KATRINA: THE STORM WE'VE ALWAYS FEARED

The Times-Picayune

50 CENTS 169TH YEAR NO. 225 FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 2, 2005 HURRICANE EDITION

'HELP US, PLEASE'

AFTER THE DISASTER, CHAOS AND LAWLESSNESS RULE THE STREETS

STAFF PHOTO BY BRETT DUKE

NEW ORLEANS: A distraught Angela Perkins screams "Help us, please!" outside the Ernest N. Morial Convention Center on Thursday. A cloud of desperation settled over the hundreds of hungry, homeless people at the Convention Center, creating an atmosphere of fear and hopelessness.

Local leaders call relief efforts too little, too late

By Jed Horne
Staff writer

New Orleans on Thursday pulled back from an almost complete collapse of public order, a near anarchy that had supplanted receding floodwaters as the gravest threat to the city's still tenuous recovery.

Evidence that authorities were beginning to get a grip on gargantuan problems varied from the successful and orderly evacuation of Baptist Mercy Hospital to a sharp reduction in the menacing bands of idle refugees, many of them intent on looting that had haunted Uptown neighborhoods in the immediate aftermath of Hurricane Katrina.

With thousands of National Guard troops being mustered to join the Louisiana guardsmen already deployed to the hurricane-stricken city, one of the early signs of the beefed-up military presence was a Blackhawk helicopter touching down near the Riverwalk to deliver water to some 1,000 refugees still sheltered in the Ernest N. Morial Convention Center.

The mounting relief effort did not allay concerns from local officials that it remained too little and mighty late. And Thursday offered continuing evidence that the city's flirtation with sheer chaos was not yet over: a medivac helicopter scared off by gunfire as it attempted to airlift patients from a downtown hospital; the Oakwood Mall reduced to charred rubble after looters broke in and set fires throughout the sprawling complex; corpses floating in flooded streets; scores of police officers simply abandoning their posts to flee a city gone at least temporarily mad.

State Police Cmdr. Henry Whitehorn said some troopers had resigned rather than accept an assignment to go into New Orleans.

He was uncertain how many, but I

See EFFORTS, page 4

STAFF PHOTO BY ALEX BRANDON

NEW ORLEANS: Renowned singer Charmaine Neville weeps Thursday after telling New Orleans police Capt. Jeff Winn how she and others were attacked in her home after the hurricane.

Blanco demands thousands of troops

By Paul Purpura and Ed Anderson
Staff writers

BATON ROUGE - Thousands of National Guard troops are converging on southeastern Louisiana, and Gov. Kathleen Blanco on Thursday called for no less than 40,000 troops to be on the ground. But it remained unclear how many soldiers will be assigned to quell the violence that is sweeping the New Orleans area.

If we need more, I will ask for it, Blanco said Thursday in Baton Rouge. Looting and lawlessness will not be tolerated.

See BLANCO, page 5

KATRINA: THE STORM WE'VE ALWAYS FEARED

Bush seeks $10.5 billion in relief

Quick OK expected; more to be sought

By Bill Walsh
Washington bureau

WASHINGTON - President Bush asked Congress on Thursday for $10.5 billion in emergency assistance for the Gulf Coast communities battered by Hurricane Katrina, and it is expected to be approved quickly.

The money will finance ongoing rescue and recovery efforts in Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama that are costing the federal government $500 million per day, according to Josh Bolton, director of the Office Management and Budget.

Bolton said the aid package is "a stop-gap measure" and that the administration will soon ask for more.

"This is an initial measure to ensure that there is no disruption in funding for the relief efforts," Bolton said. "We do anticipate going forward to the Congress again within the next few weeks to make an additional request that will be better informed about the likely scope and cost of the disaster."

Members of the House and Senate raced back early from their summer vacation to consider the bill, which leaders in both parties said would be approved.

The ultimate cost of the devastation wrought by Katrina has been estimated to be as high as $30 billion, but with search and rescue teams still pulling people from the water in New Orleans' flooded streets, any estimate falls into the realm of speculation.

The aid package, which will fund the Federal Emergency Management Agency and the Department of Defense, was welcomed by members of both parties in Louisiana, the last stop on Bush's expected visit today to the Gulf Coast to survey the damage.

"It's a reasonable start," said Rep. William Jefferson, D-New Orleans. "The administration seems tuned into making this work. We all know that the ultimate amount will be much higher than that."

The lightning pace of the financial-aid package and the bipartisan goodwill came on a day when one prominent Republican seemed to question the wisdom of rebuilding New Orleans.

The Daily Herald in suburban Chicago published a story quoting House Speaker Dennis Hastert, R-Ill., suggesting that rebuilding the 297-year-old city, which is below sea level and will always be susceptible to hurricanes, isn't sensible.

"It doesn't make sense to me," Hastert was quoted as saying.

Assailed by criticism, Hastert quickly issued a statement saying his comments had been taken out of context.

Spokesman Ron Bonjean said Hastert believes the city should be reconstructed and refortified to stave off hurricanes. But, Bonjean said, Hastert also thinks the current hurricane-protection system is inadequate and needed to be upgraded to prevent the kind of widespread devastation Katrina caused.

"He thinks it doesn't make sense to rebuild New Orleans in the way it was built," Bonjean said. "It clearly doesn't protect its citizens He doesn't want to move or abandon the city."

A transcript of the interview recounts a disjointed conversation in which Hastert is asked point-blank whether he thinks "it makes sense to spend billions and billions of dollars rebuilding"; he answers, "It doesn't make sense to me." However, he later states, "We are going to rebuild this city."

Nonetheless, others directly questioned whether New Orleans should continue to exist on the Mississippi River bank where French explorers settled in 1718.

The Waterbury (Conn.) Republican-American newspaper published an editorial Wednesday titled, "Is New Orleans worth reclaiming?"

"Americans hearts go out to the people in Katrina's path," it said. "But if the people of New Orleans and other low-lying areas insist on living in harm's way, they ought to accept responsibility for what happens to them and their property."

Former Sen. John Breaux, D-La., said the United States has always pitched in to rebuild after disasters.

"That's like saying we ought to shut down Los Angeles because it's in an earthquake zone," Breaux said. "When Chicago burned down (in 1871), should the government have turned its back on the city?"

President Bush left no doubt about his own views on the future of New Orleans.

"I want the people of New Orleans to know that after rescuing them and stabilizing the situation, there will be plans in place to help this great city get back on its feet," Bush said in an appearance on ABC's "Good Morning America".

"There is no doubt in my mind that New Orleans is going to rise up again as a great city."

As he did after the tsunami devastation late last year in Indonesia, Bush asked his father, former President Bush, and former President Clinton, to join forces to raise money for Katrina's victims.

The two raised more than $1 billion for tsunami victims.

Bush also announced his administration would shoulder the full cost of debris removal and rescue operations for the next two months.

The decision came in response to requests from officials in Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama who said their state budgets would be overwhelmed if they had to pitch in for the cost.

Under federal rules, state and local governments are required to pick up 25 percent of the cost. Bush's action waives those rules for 60 days.

Storm surge dug gouge in canal

High water too much for levee's design

By Mark Schleifstein
Staff writer

The initial wave of storm surge that poured over the concrete wall of the 17th Street Canal as Hurricane Katrina passed New Orleans dug a 26-foot-deep gouge on the other side, resulting in the failure of several wall panels and the flooding of much of the city, an Army Corps of Engineers official said Thursday.

Al Naomi, project manager for the east bank Lake Pontchartrain hurricane levee system, said the high water that the strong Category 4 storm pushed into the lake overwhelmed the levee's design when the lake backed up into the canal.

"They were designed to withstand a surge for a Category 3 or less storm," Naomi said. "You might have had one or two feet of water pouring away over the top of the wall, cutting away at the earth below it, and as that happened, the walls began to collapse.

"When that occurred, there was no way to get water out of the city. Those walls are basically there, or they're not."

Naomi said corps engineers think the same thing happened along the London Avenue canal in Gentilly and along segments of the Inner Harbor Navigation Channel that gave way and flooded Chalmette.

"They're pretty similar walls at that area, in the pictures we looked at," he said. "The floodwalls were collapsed."

Naomi said there was no way officials could have done anything about the collapses during the storm, even if they had become immediately aware of them.

"You can't go out there in the middle of a hurricane and put your finger in the dike," he said.

"Now the task is to close the gap so you can start pumping the city out. You can't pump until they're closed."

Boh Bros. Construction Co. has begun installing metal sheet piling along the Old Hammond Highway bridge over the 17th Street Canal to keep lake water from backing up into the canal. State Transportation and Development Secretary Johnny Bradberry said the job will be complete by this afternoon.

A similar dam might be installed at the lake end of the London Avenue Canal, Naomi said.

Workers also are putting huge sandbags into the 17th Street Canal breach in an effort to fill the scour hole. They hope to complete the plugging of the gap by Saturday.

The corps and the New Orleans Sewerage & Water Board are evaluating each of the city's drainage pumping stations and fixing those that aren't working properly.

"We're working very closely with the New Orleans Sewerage and Water Board and have identified pump stations they have prioritized to get in service quickly," said Walter Baumy, chief of the engineering division of the corps in New Orleans. "We're working with them to get those stations dry" so they can get stations ready to pump.

Metairie resident Thomas Jackson, vice president of the engineering consulting firm DMJM Harris-AECOM, which works closely with the New Orleans branch of the corps, said another major obstacle will be reactivating the S&WB power station near Claiborne Avenue at the Jefferson Parish line. It provides juice to about 60 percent of all New Orleans drainage pumping stations.

"Unless and until they get the power generation station going there, they won't run, period," he said.

But before the huge pumps at the southern end of the 17th Street or other canals can be turned on full blast, Naomi said, engineers must inspect the canal levees and walls.

"We want to make sure that when we turn them on, that the force of the water being pumped out doesn't do something to weaken the walls and collapse them," he said.

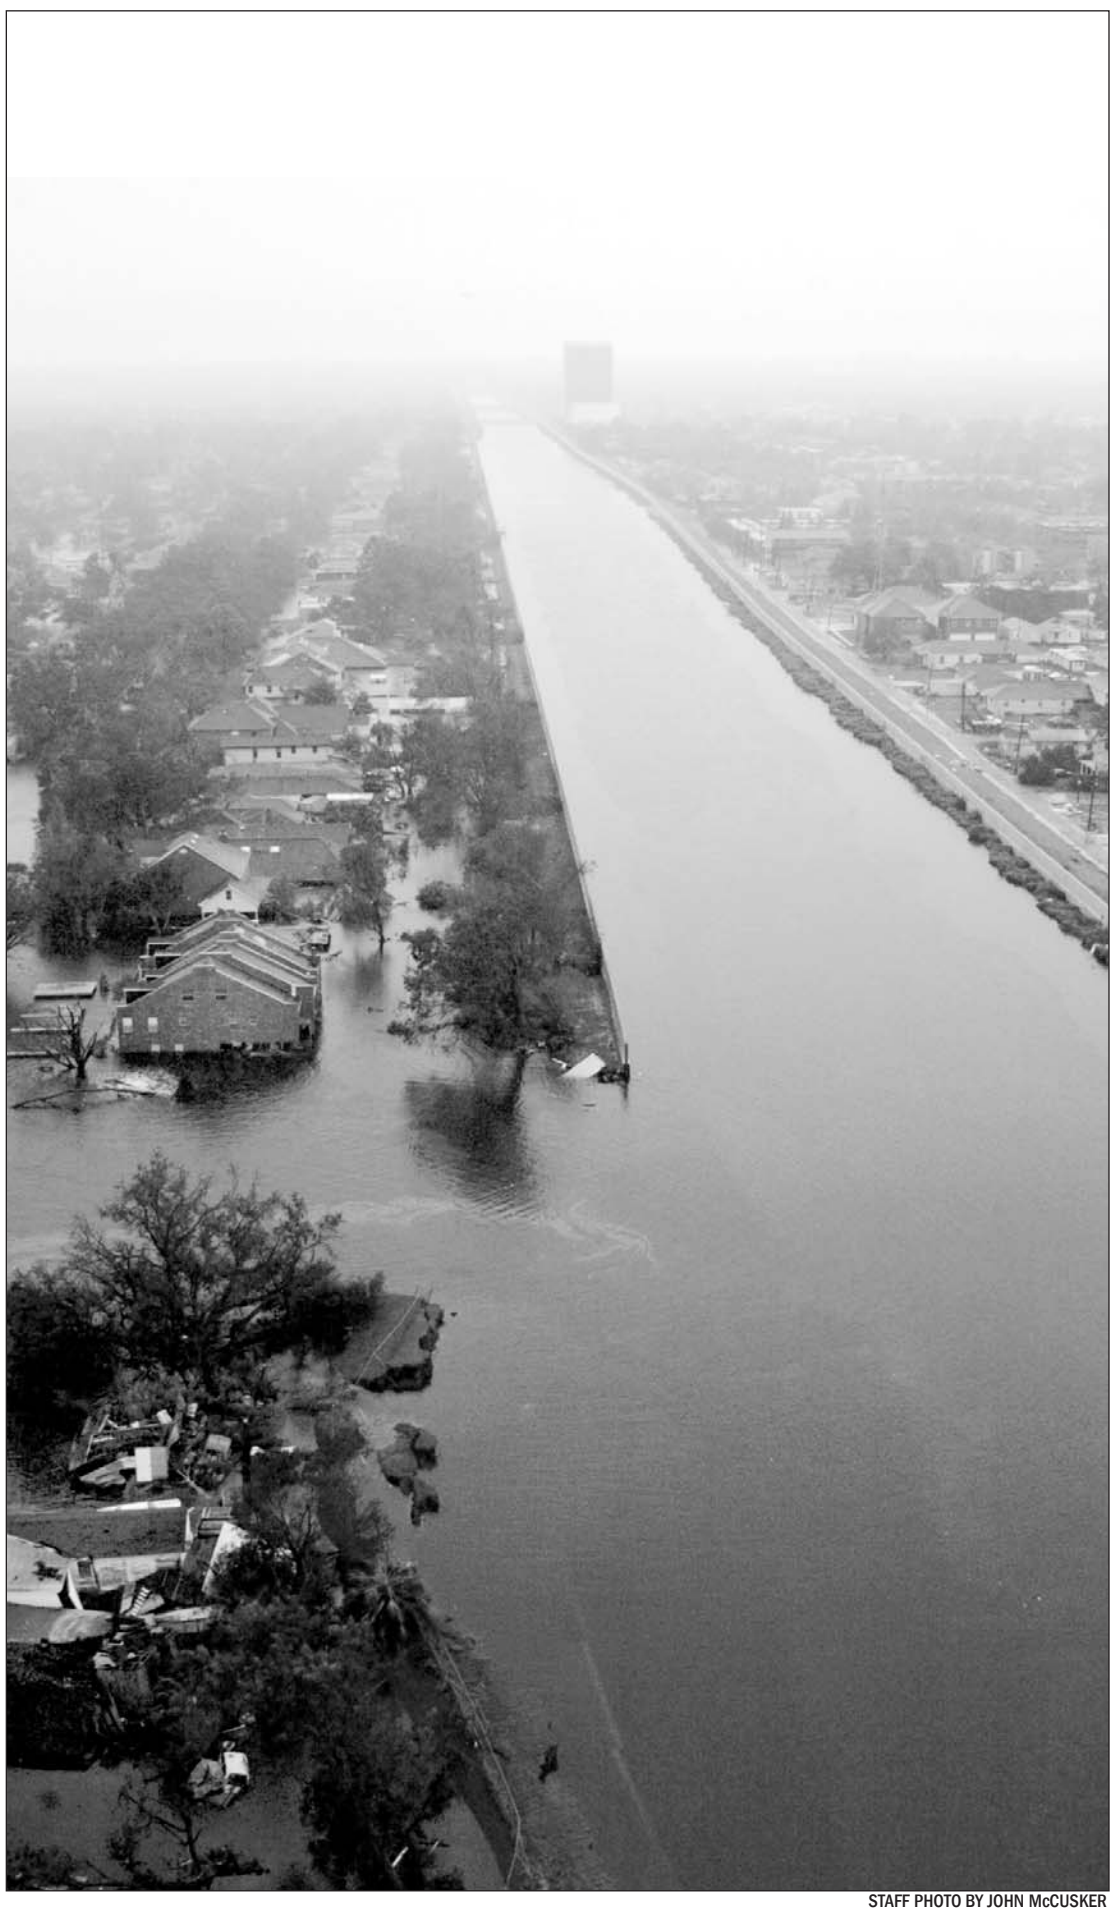
Water is normally in the canal at a height of 1 to 2 feet above sea level, the same height as the top of Lake Pontchartrain, as they're designed to drain water into the lake. And pumping the floodwater out of neighborhoods into canals will add two more feet to the canal height, he said.

But the streets below average 5 feet below sea level. If another levee wall breaks, even with the lake back to a normal level, water will again pour into the city, Naomi said.

Naomi said that in addition to the plans announced on Wednesday to cut levees surrounding the city, the corps is considering bringing in additional pumps and other equipment to suck water out.

Naomi said the deepest water in the area flooded by the 17th Street and London Avenue canals was in the Lakeview, Pontchartrain Shores and Pontchartrain Gardens neighborhoods. In the lowest spots, the water reached 20 feet deep, or five feet above sea level.

He said additional rainfall in coming days is a relatively minor threat, considering the amount of water already in the city. The water level is steadily falling in the city, he said, and will continue until it reaches the level of the breaks being made in the levees.



"Today, the lake is at 2.1 feet, almost normal stage, and water is flowing out through the gaps," he said Thursday at 8 a.m. "It is going down. "There's no way it can go up again."

Naomi said the levees failed because they weren't designed for a hurricane as strong as Katrina.

"This is an extreme event that the system could not handle," he said. "It was designed for a Category 3 hurricane or less, and it has protected us from those for a while.

"But there's no way we could have this type of event without some type of failure," he said. "It's going to stress the system tremendously and you should not be surprised with failures. When you put the physical properties of the concrete and steel walls built on the canal under this kind of stress, there's going to be a catastrophe."

Washington correspondent John McQuaid contributed to this report.

STAFF PHOTO BY JOHN McCUSKER

New Orleans/Metairie: Water rushes into New Orleans through the break in the 17th Street Canal on Thursday.

BACK FROM THE BRINK, TP RETURNS TO PAPER AND INK

3 electronic editions followed evacuation

The Times-Picayune resumed printing a newspaper today with this edition printed in Houma. Since Hurricane Katrina struck Monday, the paper has published three electronic-only editions on its affiliated Web site, Nola.com.

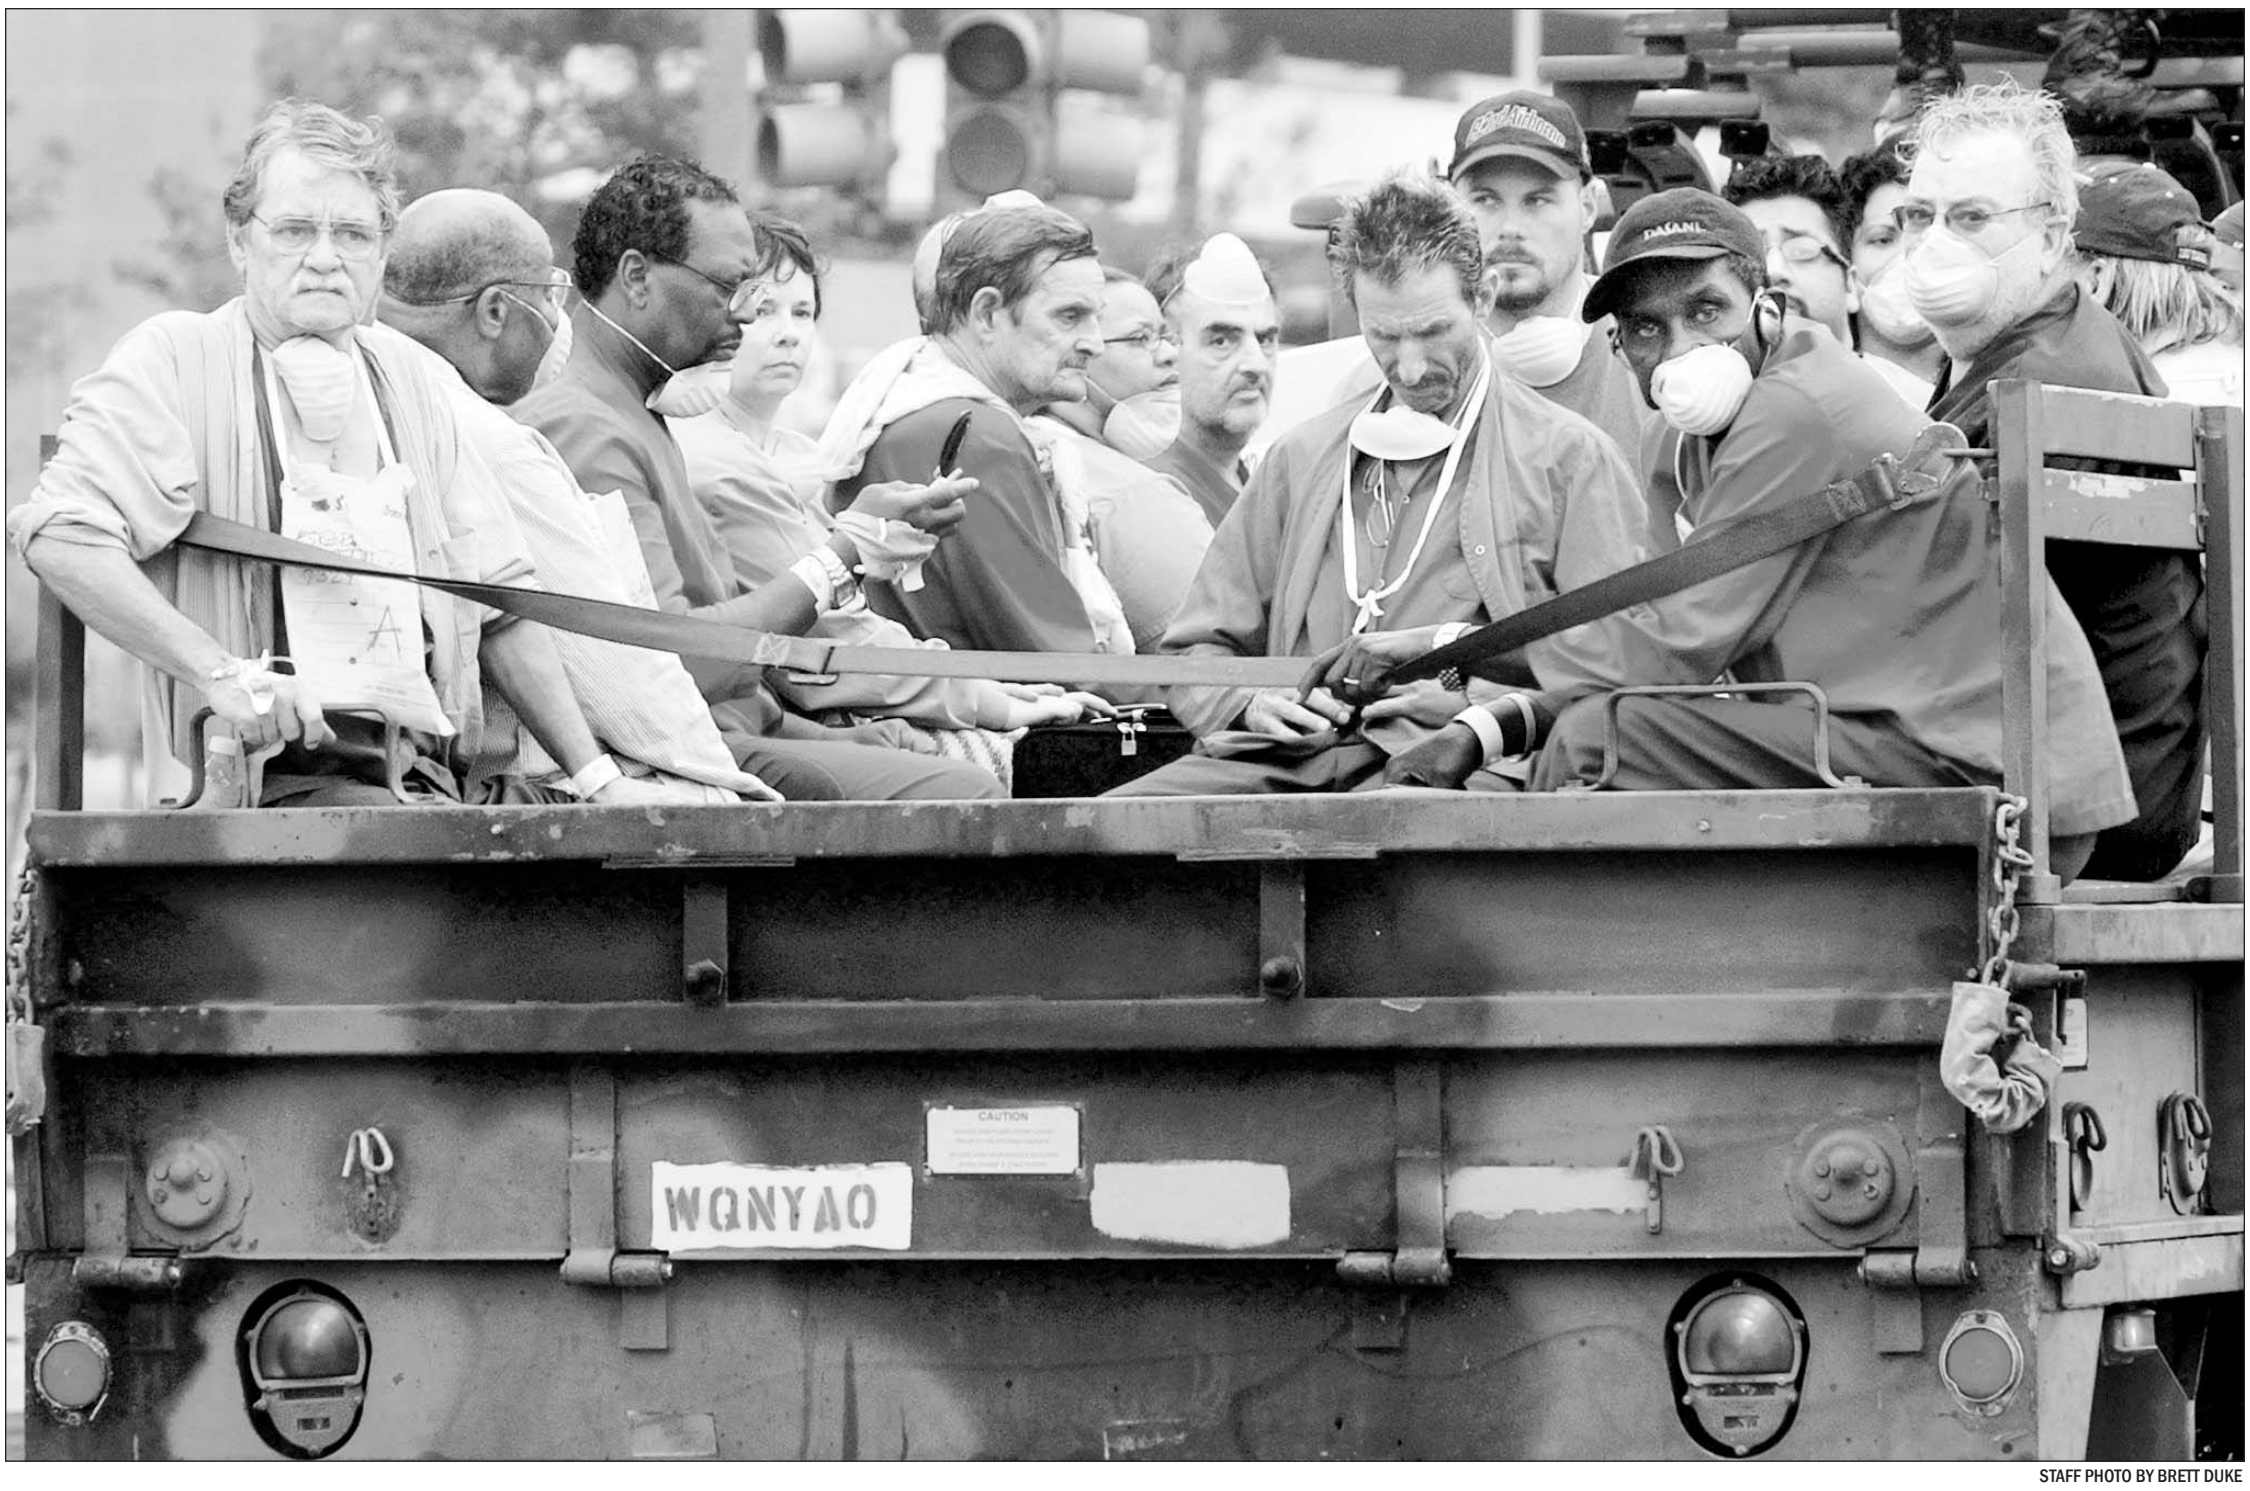
"We appreciate the dedication of employees, and the patience of advertisers and subscribers," said Ashton Phelps Jr., the newspaper's publisher.

Company executives said they planned to print roughly 50,000 copies Thursday night, using the press of The Houma Courier, for distribution today in parts of the New Orleans metro area that are now inhabited and accessible, including western St. Tammany Parish, and the east and west River Parishes.

Copies also are being distributed to Baton Rouge, Hammond, Houma and Thibodaux, they said.

The newspaper will continue publishing an expanded electronic edition on www.nola.com. The Times-Picayune reporters also will deliver breaking news to the Web site through the newspaper's "Breaking News" weblog.

Nola.com will maintain a missing persons forum, launched Wednesday morning, that had more than 7,400 postings by late Thursday. The site also has started forums for people who want to volunteer in the rescue and rebuilding efforts and to offer homes to displaced New Orleans residents.



Newspaper employees, forced to evacuate the paper's main facility in downtown New Orleans on Tuesday, have been working on the streets of the city, at the Houma Courier, in temporary offices at Louisiana State University's Manship School for Mass Communications and The Baton Rouge Technology Center, as well as in other sites across the devastated region.

Our sympathies to all of those who have suffered so much in this great catastrophe. The City of New Orleans and all affected areas will recover. We will be there to assist all of our clients and friends.

Correro Fishman Haygood Phelps Walmsley and Casteix LLP

NOTE: We have temporarily relocated our offices to Baton Rouge. We can be reached at our normal e-mail addresses or through our website, www.cfhlaw.com, or by telephone at (225) 214-7162. Our temporary office is located at Suite 200C, 7389 Florida Blvd., Baton Rouge, Louisiana 70806.

KATRINA: THE STORM WE'VE ALWAYS FEARED

STAFF PHOTO BY BRETT DUKE

NEW ORLEANS: Medical workers and patients ride in the back of a military vehicle on Thursday as they are evacuated through the Central Business District. State and federal authorities began evacuating hundreds of patients, including those from Charity and University hospitals, that morning. Shortages of fuel and medicine had put strains on the hospitals' ability to provide the most basic of care.

Violence, looting reported in East, West Jeff

EFFORTS, from page 1

have heard that and I know that's a fact, Whitehorn said, noting that the officers also were coping with the impact of the storm. They lost everything and don't feel it's worth going back and taking fire from looters.

And everywhere: the homeless, some wandering aimlessly, others massed at bridges and ferry landings waiting for boats and buses no longer in service, many of them drunk on looted liquor in a city without drinking water.

Some of the violence and lawlessness appeared to be born as much of desperation as of the more jubilant greed that marked looting shortly after the storm had passed. When the first dozen buses finally arrived Thursday at the Superdome to start transporting about 23,000 refugees to Houston, shoving and fights broke out and trash cans were set ablaze as people jockeyed to get out of the fetid, stinking stadium in which they had been captive since entering the city's shelter of last resort four days earlier.

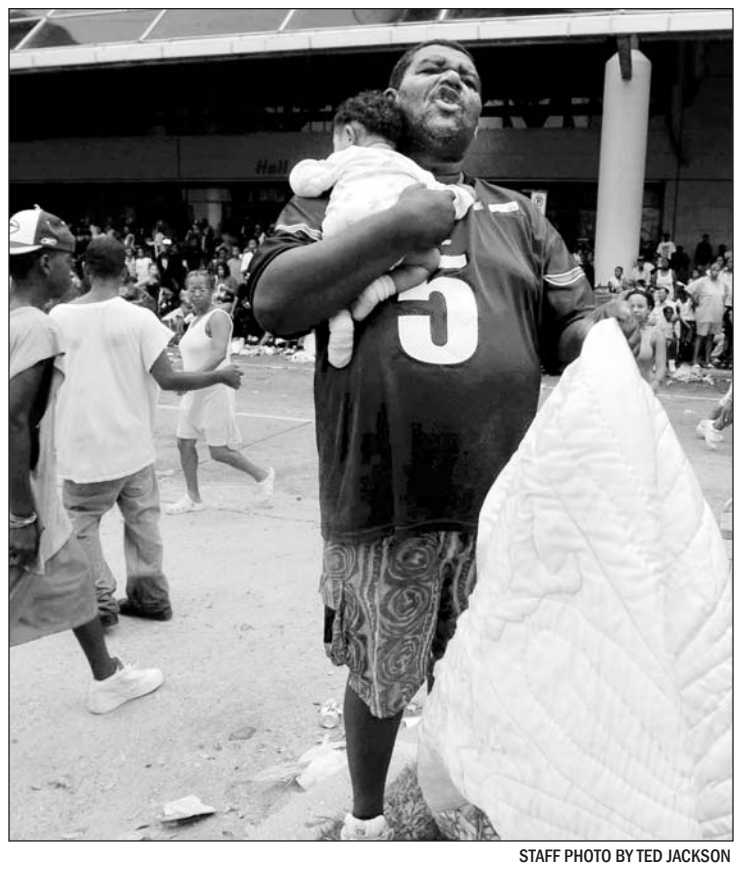
The violence was not limited to New Orleans.

I'm supposed to be cleaning up after a storm and I have to have sheriff's deputies walking around on the roof with AK-47s and machine guns, said Jefferson Parish Emergency Operations Director Walter Maestri. Basic cleanup operations, such as clearing downed trees, were on hold, and relief agencies, including FEMA and some private groups, had either pulled out or threatened to do so because of the dangers to their workers, Maestri said.

Ignoring pundits and politicians who question the wisdom of rebuilding a city below sea level surrounded by water, President Bush has vowed a massive relief effort after a storm that inflicted a record $20 billion-plus in damages across the Gulf south. Bush, who dipped below the clouds for a look at New Orleans on Wednesday en route to Washington, is scheduled to be on the ground in the area today.

But comments from officialdom and commoners alike, seethed with the sense that New Orleans had yet to be accorded a response adequate to the crisis at hand.

Terry Ebbert, head of the city's emergency operations, contrasted what he deemed a lackluster response by the Federal Emergency Management Agency to the massive outpouring of humanitarian and military aid after this past winter's tsunami in southeast Asia.



Jefferson Parish President Aaron Broussard called the lack of federal response a disgrace.

New Orleans Mayor Ray Nagin was equally blunt. Federal and state officials need to stop having goddamn press conferences and get the relief effort rolling, he said in a late-afternoon radio interview, an angry flare-up out of character for the popular, generally easy-going former cable TV executive.

Appearing in a New York studio on NBC's Today show, former New Orleans Mayor Marc Morial, now national president of the Urban League, called for an effort of 9-11 proportions.

A great American city is fighting for its life, he said. We must rebuild New Orleans, the city that gave us jazz and music and multiculturalism.

That effort was being waged against long odds Thursday. National Guard spokesman Jack Harrison, in Arlington, Va., said the number of active-duty guard troops in Louisiana would rise to 20,000 overnight, about a quarter of them Louisiana guardsmen, but Gov. Kathleen Blanco estimated it would take at least 40,000 troops to quell the violence.

STAFF PHOTO BY TED JACKSON

SEEKING SHELTER: A man holds his baby on Thursday as refugees crowd into the Earnest N. Morial Convention Center, hoping for buses to come and evacuate them in the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina. More than 20,000 people were evacuated by bus to the Houston Astrodome.

As troop transport vehicles rumbled through downtown streets, some soldiers appeared visibly unnerved by the chaos they witnessed around them. Scores of New Orleans police had simply gone AWOL and fled, according to a ranking NOPD officer, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Though flood waters continued to recede, the functional remains of New Orleans had been largely reduced to the narrow strip of neighborhoods up against the Mississippi River levee from the Uptown area to the Industrial Canal, high ground in a low-lying city.

We have three main concerns: Orleans Parish Prison, the Superdome and the Convention Center, said Police Capt. Kevin Anderson, commander of the Eighth District, which includes the French Quarter, the city's oldest neighborhood and most valued tourism draw.

To maintain those assets and whatever else can be restored to order, police command operations had been concentrated at the sprawling Harrah's Casino port-cochere and in the Royal Orleans Hotel. On Thursday, the block between the tony hotel and the alabaster Beaux Arts courthouse across from it was under guard by rooftop sharpshooters and a phalanx of officers brandishing pump-action shotguns, their grim presence offset by smoky barbecue grills and socializing among officers taking a break in the street below.

The focused police work had not been enough to shield all French Quarter shops from the looters who ranged more widely and aggressively in other parts of town. Early Thursday police were briefly caught up in a gun battle in front of the Convention Center and a male civilian was left dead in a puddle of blood.

Across the line in Jefferson Parish, deputies and relief workers were drawn into four shootouts with lawless elements, according to Sheriff Harry Lee. No one was killed, Lee said. Earlier in the week, a New Orleans police officer was shot to death by a looter.

National Guard casualties were limited to a soldier shot in the leg, authorities reported.

As a greater presence of Chinook and Huey military helicopters became apparent in the skies over New Orleans, the near-term tactical goal was a simple one: to rescue survivors and complete an evacuation that, while massive in the days just before the hurricane struck, still left behind somewhere between 50,000 and 100,000 of the city's 480,000 residents, many of them infirm, elderly and low-income people without the means to escape.

By day's end, the massive bus-lift to Houston had reduced the Superdome's population to a few thousand refugees, authorities said. But many now homeless people continue to wait on bridges and highway ramps. And while officials remained adamant about the need to get out of a flooded city without power, water, or much prospect of these services being restored for months to come, efforts to comply were frequently mired in miscommunication.

Beside himself after failing to get through to city and state officials, the chief of trauma surgery at Charity Hospital called a news conference on Thursday to beg for help. Charity was nearly out of food and power for its generators and had been forced to move patients to higher floors to escape looters prowling the hospital, Dr. Norman McSwain said.

Texas officials said they were concerned by unconfirmed reports that a group of prisoners under guard had somehow been mixed in with refugees in the bus convoy to Houston's Astrodome.

A cluster of refugees attempted to leave the city by way of the Crescent City Connection, only to be blocked on grounds that the crossing was unsafe for pedestrians. At the suggestion of officials, they retreated to the Superdome, where they learned that the bus convoy to Texas was closed to new arrivals.

Continuing evacuation of the refugee population and the less visible presence of looters had begun to make media crews the last civilian presence on downtown streets.

It's like Iraq, one veteran war correspondent remarked. But the difference is that we don't have the army to embed with.

Staff reporters Matt Brown, David Meeks, Mike Perlstein, Gordon Russell and Jim Varney contributed to this report.

Teams to sweep stricken area to find those killed

By Ed Anderson
Capital bureau

BATON ROUGE - Federal officials said Thursday that they are assembling mortuary teams downriver from Baton Rouge to start locating and identifying bodies from Hurricane Katrina. Gov. Kathleen Blanco said the death toll could swell into the thousands.

Federal Emergency Management Agency Director Mike Brown said that six teams will be using St. Gabriel as a staging area and will fan out from there to the metropolitan New Orleans area to begin the tedious process of recovering bodies and identifying them.

Despite assurances Wednesday from aides to Brown that early death toll numbers would be available, Brown said the data was not available, but instructed aides to provide numbers today.

You have to deal with these bodies with respect and get them properly secured, identified and notify surviving relatives.

The mortuary teams will also pick out sites for temporary morgues, Brown said.

With focus on the living, the dead lie waiting

He reiterated that the first priority of National Guard, police and other rescue workers is to rescue survivors from trees, rooftops, houses and other sites where they have been clinging to hope for four days. Another top priority, he said, has been to care for the 50,000 evacuees crowded into 131 shelters in the state.

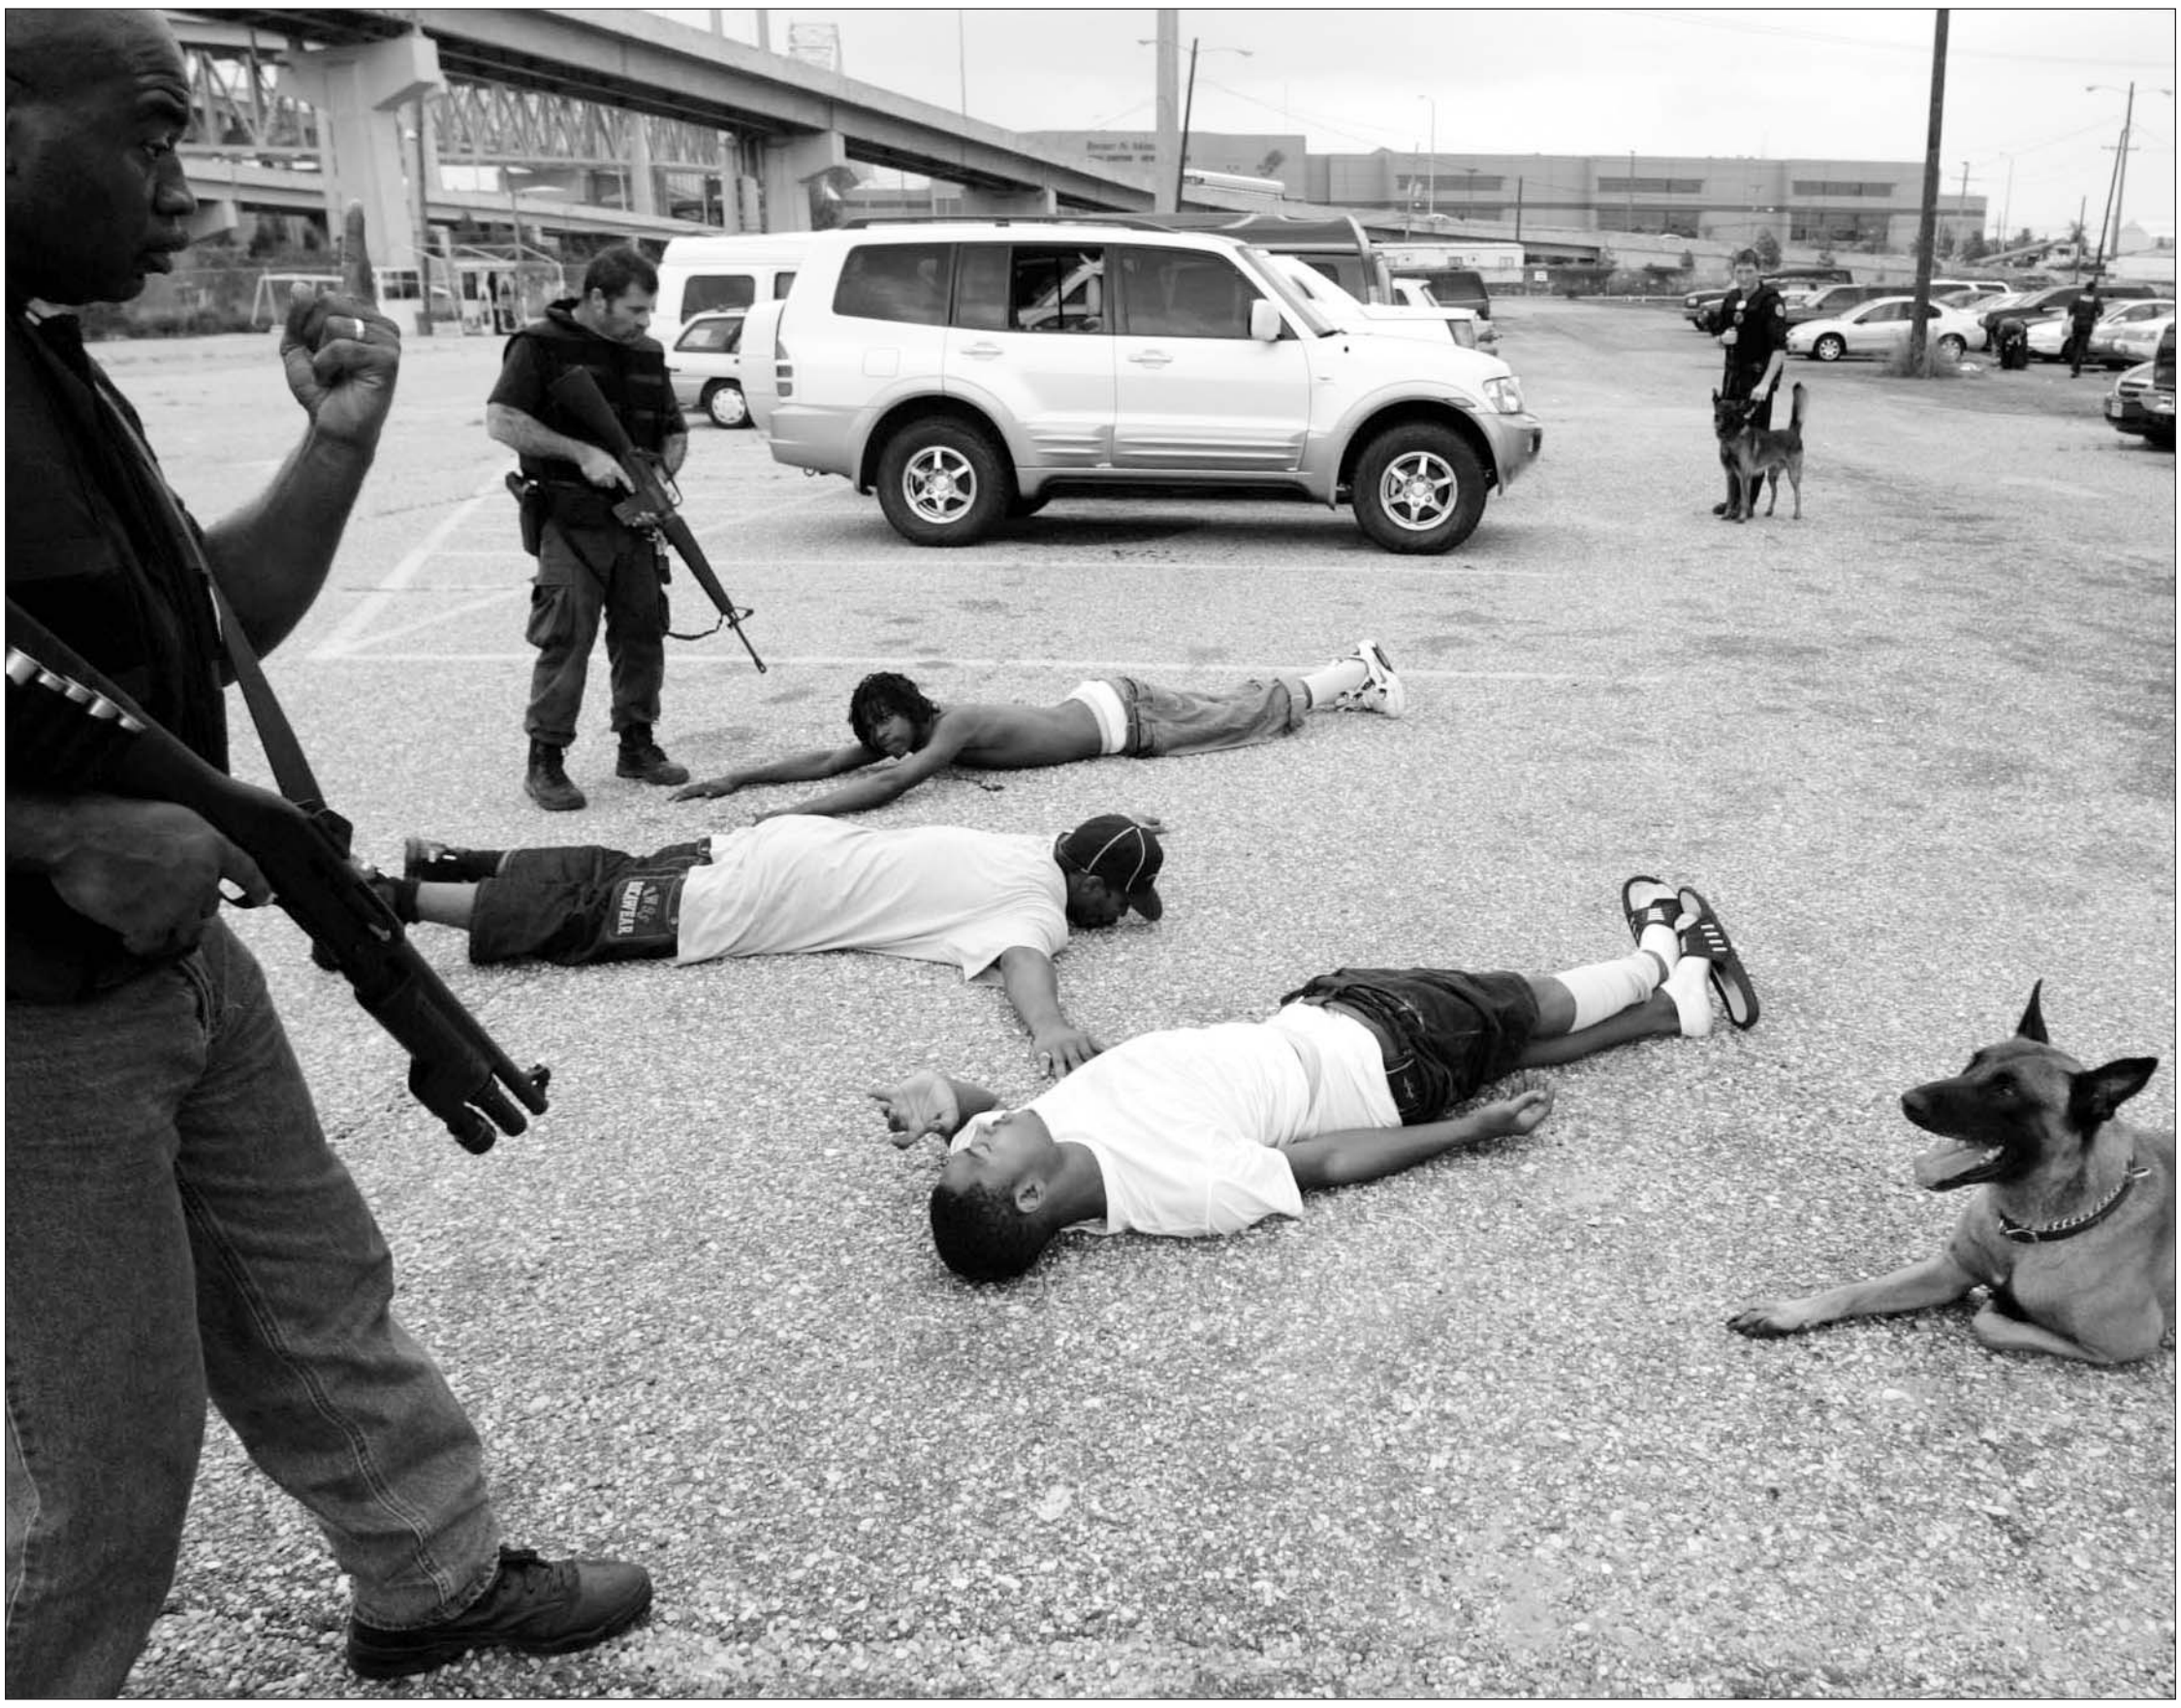
State lawmakers and local officials, who have made tours of the flooded areas, have reported that bodies are floating in the streets but are being ignored in favor of having a fleet of more than 300 boats rescue survivors.

We had to push bodies out of the way to get our boat through the streets (of New Orleans) to pick up survivors, one official said, asking that he remain anonymous.

Others said there were bodies stacked up near the Ernest N. Morial Convention Center near the foot of Canal Street in New Orleans, but that was not confirmed late Thursday.

It is not a pretty sight, said Lt. Gov. Mitch Landrieu, who has toured the stricken area participated in some rescue missions.

Blanco estimated as many as 200,000 to 300,000 area residents may have remained at their homes and refused to evacuate, heightening the death toll.



I know there are dead bodies, Blanco said, declining to estimate how many may be lost. It could well be thousands. It is a difficult thing for people.

Blanco said that as each day goes by, the chances of finding fewer survivors and more victims grow.

This is a great Louisiana tragedy, she said. Some (survivors) are very sturdy. Some are on a very short timeline.

Blanco said that is why the first priority remains helping those who need help, and not picking up the dead or counting bodies.

KATRINA: THE STORM WE'VE ALWAYS FEARED

STAFF PHOTO BY ALEX BRANDON

NEW ORLEANS: Police K-9 officers hold a group of looting suspects at gunpoint after arresting them near the Ernest N. Morial Convention Center on Thursday.

Police volunteers from other states to help out

BLANCO, from page 1

The National Guard expects about 30,000 soldiers and airmen from states across the nation to be in the region soon. Their mission is basically the gamut, whatever the guardsmen need to do to support the local authorities and local emergency management authorities, said Jack Harrison, a spokesman for the National Guard Bureau in Arlington, Va.

However, officials could not pinpoint Thursday how many armed National Guard troops will be assigned specifically to help local civilian law enforcement agencies in their attempts to control the streets that, by some accounts, teetered on anarchy.

"These individuals will not take control of the city of New Orleans. We will secure them. It may be in the form of handcuffs and shackles, but we will secure them."

STATE POLICE SUPERINTENDENT COL. HENRY WHITEHORN

As of midday Thursday, 13,000 National Guard soldiers and airmen were on active duty in Louisiana, including anywhere from 4,800 to 5,700 from the Louisiana National Guard, officials said. That number was expected to increase to 20,000 overnight, Harrison said.

We think it will get up to somewhere around 30,000 in the next few days, Harrison said.

Blanco said some of the troops will be sent to other Louisiana cities, such as Baton Rouge, and in particular shelters like the RiverCenter, where 5,000 evacuees are housed.

In New Orleans, where thousands of evacuees sheltered in the Superdome were being transported to Houston, the scene is secure and under control, Blanco said, adding that her primary concern there is transportation to get the people out of the stricken areas.

Crimes reported in the area near the Superdome include rape, armed robberies and assaults, but numbers were not available, according to the Louisiana State Police.

The lawlessness has spilled into the West Bank of Orleans and Jefferson parishes, where looters Thursday ransacked the Oakwood Mall in Terrytown and set it afire.

It is anarchy, said state Rep. Jim Tucker, R-Algiers, whose district was largely spared the brunt of Katrina and is overrun now by lawlessness. We are going to have more problems from the looting than the storm.

In addition to about 4,700 National Guard troops already in New Orleans, 200 Louisiana State Police are there, including troops who work in riot control as well as SWAT teams, said State Police spokesman Lt. Lawrence McLeary.

State Police Superintendent Col. Henry Whitehorn said a group of Louisiana sheriff's deputies and local police departments have assembled a task force to help control New Orleans. Police volunteers from places such as Michigan, Arkansas, Kentucky and other states are streaming in to help out, Whitehorn said.

He said a minute number of individuals are causing the problems.

These individuals will not take control of the city of New Orleans, Whitehorn said. We will secure them. It may be in the form of handcuffs and shackles, but we will secure them.

Under a state of emergency, the National Guard troops are designated as peace officers assigned to help civilian police and sheriffs' offices, Harrison said, adding that it is not martial law.

On a separate front, the Defense Department is assembling a force of about 7,000 active-duty soldiers, airmen, Marines and sailors at military bases across the South and off the coast in the Gulf of Mexico to help the Federal Emergency Management Agency deal with Katrina's wrath.

However, the group, known as Joint Task Force Katrina and headed by Army Lt. Gen. Russel Honore, is barred by federal act from providing security for the civilian population.

That is totally being done on the National Guard side of the house, said Michael Kucharek, a spokesman for the Colorado-based U.S. Northern Command, the Defense Department organization responsible for homeland defense.

The task force, which is separate from the National Guard troops, will work with FEMA and is based at Camp Shelby, Miss., near Hattiesburg.

Supplies and relief personnel headed into the region will be staged at Fort Polk in west-central Louisiana, Barksdale Air Force Base near Bossier City and military bases in neighboring states.

We are building a force to address the civil unrest and other missions, Honore said in Baton Rouge Thursday.

The USS Bataan, based in Texas, already is off the Gulf Coast and is launching Navy helicopters into the region to evacuate people, officials said.

The task force personnel also include a Marine Corps expeditionary strike group led by the USS Iwo Jima that is expected to be anchored off the Gulf Coast by Sunday, according to the Northern Command. The USNS Comfort, one of two Navy hospital ships, is scheduled to arrive by Sept. 8.

IMPORTANT NOTICE TO
ST. PAUL TRAVELERS CUSTOMERS

WE'RE HERE TO HELP.

If you have suffered a loss, please call us as soon as your family and property are safe from further harm.

Our claim services representatives are standing by 24 hours a day, 7 days a week to take your claim.

For Travelers Home & Auto claims, please call
800.CLAIM33
(800.252.4633)

For Travelers Flood claims, please call
800.356.6663

For St. Paul Travelers and Travelers Business claims, please call 800.238.6225

For St. Paul Business claims, please call
800.STPAUL1
(800.787.2851)

St. Paul Travelers employees affected or displaced by the hurricane, please call the Employee Service Unit at 800.441.4378

TRAVELERS

travelers.com

The Travelers Indemnity Company
and its property casualty affiliates
One Tower Square, Hartford, CT 06183

ST PAUL TRAVELERS

stpaultravelers.com

St. Paul Fire and Marine Insurance Company
and its property casualty affiliates
385 Washington St., Saint Paul, MN 55102

KATRINA: THE STORM WE'VE ALWAYS FEARED

STAFF PHOTO BY ALEX BRANDON

NEW ORLEANS: Fats Domino arrives at the St. Claude Avenue bridge in the Lower 9th Ward, where a rescue boat brought him late Monday. Assisting the legendary musician were a New Orleans Harbor Patrol officer, left, and New Orleans Police Department SWAT officer Trevor Reeves.

Receding flood waters reveal devastation of St. Bernard

Bodies found as rescue continues

By Paul Rioux and Manuel Torres
Staff writers

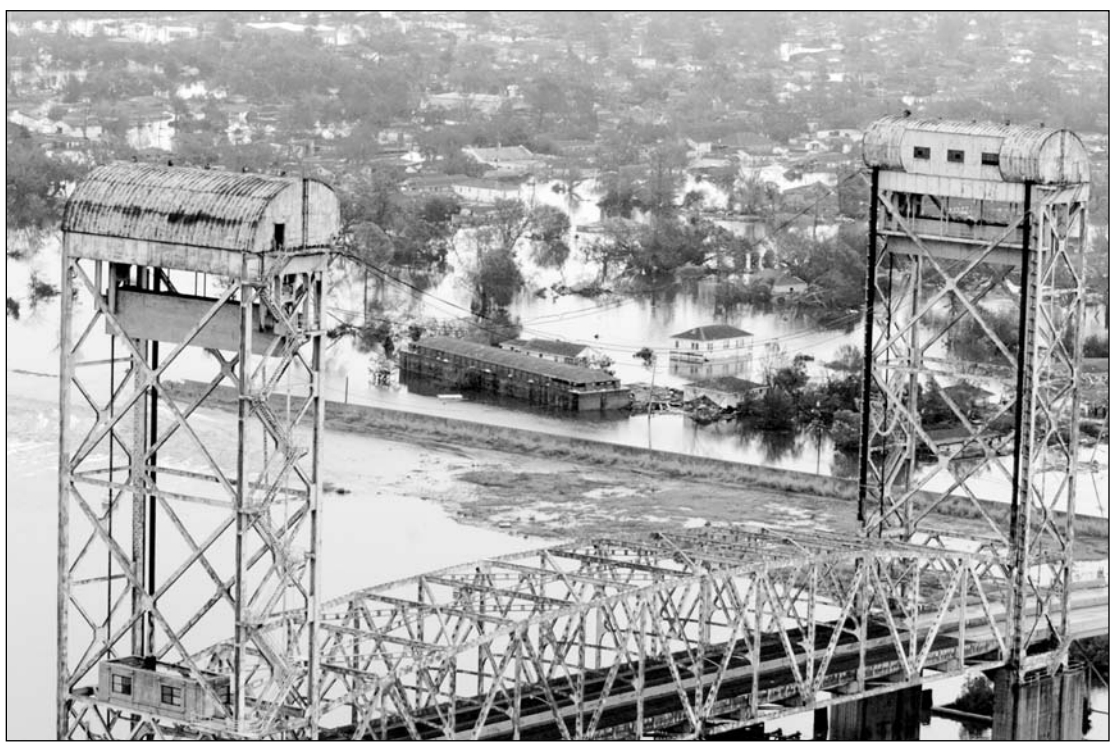
As the bodies of Hurricane Katrina's victims in St. Bernard Parish continued surfacing Thursday, local and state officials said thousands of residents had yet to be rescued and at least 2,000 others risked dehydration in a crammed makeshift shelter at the parish port.

Meanwhile. about 100 people have died at the Chalmette Slip after being pulled off their rooftops, waiting to be ferried up the river to the West Bank and bused out of the flood ravaged area, U.S. Rep. Charles Melancon, D-Napoleonville, said Thursday.



"It's an absolutely horrific sight," State Rep. Nita Hutter, R-Chalmette, said of bodies found floating in areas across the parish.

Officials don't have an estimate on how high the death toll may reach. But the hellish scenario prompted Parish President Henry "Junior" Rodriguez to send an SOS into cyberspace, imploring President Bush in an e-mail message to contact him and send help.

"I am in danger of having many citizens die if they are not rescued now," Rodriguez wrote in an e-mail sent late Wednesday to the White House and confirmed Thursday by parish officials.

"On behalf of the citizens of St. Bernard Parish, Louisiana, I am begging for your help," it read.

Rodriguez's plea came as a flotilla of St. Bernard residents using their private boats, joined by federal and state agencies, rushed to retrieve residents stranded in their roofs and attics since Katrina submerged the parish under up to 20 feet of water on Monday.

STAFF PHOTO BY JOHN McCUSKER

NINTH WARD: A barge runs aground in the 9th Ward after washing through a break in the Industrial Canal near the Claiborne Avenue bridge.

The storm flooded practically every one of St. Bernard's 26,700 homes.

"We are talking about the complete destruction of St. Bernard Parish as we know it," said Parish Council Chairman Joey DiFatta. "Every neighborhood, every street, every home, every building has water - lots of it."

DiFatta called Rodriguez's e-mail message an "act of desperation" after several futile attempts to reach federal authorities. He said Rodriguez has yet to receive a response to the message.

The White House press office could not be reached for comment Thursday.

DiFatta said Rodriguez and a handful of parish officials are guiding some rescue efforts from an office at Chalmette Refining LLC.

"It's the only dry spot left," DiFatta said.

But illustrating the difficult conditions officials face to manage rescue efforts, DiFatta said a reporter's call Thursday afternoon was the first to get through on his cell phone in nearly two days.

Lt. Governor Mitch Landrieu, one of the few state officials who have entered the parish, said personnel with FEMA and the state Wildlife and Fisheries Department are working to collect stranded residents.

In a parish where many people make their living on the water or own recreational boats, dozens of residents have also been using their vessels to help, DiFatta said.

Landrieu said the parish jail at the intersection of Parish Road and St. Bernard Highway has been transformed into a makeshift hospital.

Patients are being airlifted out of the area.

He also said the St. Bernard Sheriff's Office has staged a collection point for refugees at the parish courthouse in Chalmette. People are then being moved to a makeshift shelter at St. Bernard Port, from where they are being ferried across the Mississippi River to Algiers, Landrieu said.

"We are now starting to go house to house to find the ones we can't see or hear," he said. "Our biggest fear is how high the death toll will be."

With 2,000 people crammed into the port's slip, DiFatta said officials were concerned about the wellbeing of the evacuees.

He said who are being treated for dehydration after spending up to three days in the searing heat of their attics or exposed to the blazing sun on rooftops.

Parish officials said they need food, water and medicine. They also are trying to arrange for a large vessel to begin evacuating people from the port shelter.

The magnitude of the disaster in St. Bernard has surpassed Hurricane Betsy in 1965, which flooded thousands of homes, mostly in Arabi; killed dozens of residents; and forced many to escape the waters by climbing into their attics and then hacking holes in the roofs.

Like Betsy, Katrina has produced examples of extreme survival measures in the parish. Rescuers saved a man who lashed himself to a tree to avoid being swept out to sea as floodwaters surged beyond 20 feet.

Another resident, Ernie Geraci of Poydras, swam to a boat moored at a nearby house to rescue his wife and two adult children after 7 feet of water rushed into their home.

"In two minutes the water rose 2 feet. In 30 minutes it was up to 4 feet," said Geraci, who jumped from a second story window to get the boat.

DiFatta said he has tried for two days to reach the Army Corps of Engineers to discuss blowing up parts of the Lake Borgne Basin levee to drain water trapped inside the parish.

"The levees that used to protect us are now threatening people's lives," he said.

In the western half of the parish, water levels have dropped to 10 feet or below in most spots. In the eastern half outside the levee protection system, roads are beginning to emerge from the floodwaters, said Geraci, who is staying on a boat owned by his company, Shallow Draft Elevating Boats.

But Geraci said the good news is bittersweet as the receding floodwaters in eastern St. Bernard have revealed the near total devastation wrought by the storm. He said just a handful of structures remain standing in the communities of Hopedale, Yscloskey and Shell Beach.

The devastation throughout the New Orleans area has raised questions about how many displaced residents will return. The extreme flooding will even test the resilience of St. Bernard, where many families have lived with severe storms for generations.

Staff writer Robert Scott contributed to this report.

PAN-AMERICAN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

Pan-American ask all employees and policy holders to contact us toll free Monday – Friday, 8am-5pm, central time at

1-877-939-4550

Operators are available to take your calls and provide information in the wake of Hurricane Katrina.

We are extending a 60 day grace period on premium payments for residents of Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama and Florida.

KATRINA: THE STORM WE'VE ALWAYS FEARED

Going home after storm can be a harrowing trip

STAFF PHOTO BY JOHN McCUSKER

METAIRIE: Airline Drive is underwater at the Orleans Parish line. On Thursday, officials at the State Emergency Operations Center said Jefferson Parish President Aaron Broussard's plan to allow citizens back into the parish Monday is not a good idea.

STAFF PHOTO BY SCOTT THRELKELD

SLIDELL: Electric company workers move new wire into place near U.S. 190 and Northshore Boulevard. 'Electricity is six to eight weeks away,' Slidell Mayor Ben Morris said in a CNN report Thursday morning.

Jeff reconsiders letting residents return Monday

Violence, cleanup may keep parish closed

By Matt Brown
Staff writer

Amid continuing violence and looting on the West Bank of Jefferson Parish, punctuated by the torching of the Oakwood Center mall on Thursday, Jefferson Parish officials are reconsidering plans to let residents back to their homes Monday.

They promised a harsh crackdown on looting and loitering and imposed a dusk-to-dawn curfew that went into effect Thursday evening.

Basic cleanup operations, such as clearing downed trees off streets, were on hold and relief agencies, including FEMA and some private groups, had either pulled out or threatened to do so in light of a situation described by one official as "close to anarchy."

"I'm supposed to be cleaning up after a storm and I have to have sheriff's deputies walking around on the roof with AK-47s and machine guns," said Parish Emergency Operations Director Walter Maestri, speaking from a heavily fortified operations center in Marrero.

Parish President Aaron Broussard pinned blame for the situation on the lack of federal support and said the government's response to Katrina's aftermath was "a disgrace." He said pleas for more security personnel had so far gone unanswered.

Maestri said the looting is not as rampant in East Jefferson as in New Orleans.

Speaking at a news conference Thursday afternoon in Baton Rouge, FEMA Director Mike Brown said federal officials were moving as fast as they could and planned to bring in thousands of additional National Guard troops as soon as possible.

Broussard said law enforcement officers would continue to keep out anyone who is not a parish resident.

"People with guns are going to be guarding our borders from this moment on. We're taking control of this parish back. Whatever leniency, whatever cooperation we've shown, it ends right now."

Meanwhile, military police units already in place were stretched thin. Sheriff Harry Lee said there had been at least four shootouts on Thursday involving law enforcement or hurricane relief workers. No one was killed, he said.

Lee promised to put that to an end by arresting nighttime curfew violators and all looters. Previously, some looters were released with only a warning.

"They will stay in our jail with no air-conditioning and no toilets until they can be transferred to another parish," he said.

n Terrytown, a blaze apparently sparked by looters was reported at the Oakwood Center Mall at about 1 p.m. Fire companies from across the West Bank responded, but with no water services available, only a single hose tapping water from a nearby canal could be used to battle the flames.

But after about 90 minutes, firefighters conceded defeat, pulled back, and watched as the shopping center continued to burn. Thick black smoke climbed high into the sky as flames quickly spread.

"There's just no water and the fire is out of hand. There's no sense putting people in harm's way," said a visibly shaken Chief Bryan Adams with the Terrytown Company 5 Volunteer Fire Department. "I've been in this community all of my life, 45 years. This is tough."

The desperation that officials blamed for at least some looting could be seen just across the street from the burning mall, where about 200 storm refugees from New Orleans were lined up beneath the elevated West Bank Expressway.

Dozens of police officers armed with assault rifles surrounded weary-looking men, women and children, carrying duffel bags and plastic sacks with the few belongings they managed to escape with.

With the parish attempting to shut at least three of its four emergency shelters Thursday, the crowd massed beneath the expressway was expected to be bused out of the region later in the day.

They would join a steady exodus heading west along the expressway, the last open route out of the metropolitan area.

People from across the parish with medical issues and other special needs were going to be taken to the shelter at Bonnabel High School in Kenner, and the parish is taking in people who come into Jefferson from New Orleans at a staging area at Interstate 10 and Causeway Boulevard until they can be transported to shelters out of the region.

Meanwhile, the flooding caused by waters that came in around the 17th Street Canal stabilized on Thursday and only a limited number of homes were inundated, officials said.

St. Tammany neighbors brave muck, rotting fish

By Meghan Gordon
St. Tammany bureau

They made it 350 miles from a deer camp in Darling, Miss., scouting out scarce fuel along the way and navigating debris-covered roads as they neared St. Tammany Parish.

By the time next-door neighbors Fred Liebkemann and A.J. Escheter reached the end of Thompson Road in Slidell on Thursday, the returning Katrina evacuees had hardly begun their treacherous journey home.

They launched Liebkemann's fishing boat at the Bayou Liberty marina and held out hope that something from their lives on Legendre Drive remained intact and dry.

So they set out past rows of shaken-up sailboats and a frayed purple and gold rope where swimmers once swung from docks on . Liebkemann steered through the canal past swaths of ripped-up marsh grasses, south toward the lake and then east again toward their Coin du Lestin neighborhood.

"All that marsh wasn't there before," Liebkemann said, pointing a mound of floating soil and tall grass.

They passed huge two-story homes on Peninsula Drive with minor roof damage but no apparent lines marking where floodwaters had risen.

"Y'all doing all right?" Escheter yelled to a man on shore who had just removed the plywood on his back door. He shook his hand, "so-so."

As they drove further into the canal, the devastation of Monday's flooding and high winds became more obvious. A boat rested on a house's back door. A line of grass clung to the top of a window, proof the storm's tidal surge. An upside-down "No Wake Zone" sign peeked out from the water.

"The smell of rotten fish is just starting to get good," Escheter said, as the boat passed the countless dead catfish and perch.

Then a mass of marsh debris stopped them in their path. Liebkemann tied up the boat on a nearby bridge, then carefully stepped onto the mucky banks of Coin du Lestin Drive. Thick sludge was everywhere in sight, lining the subdivision's roads and filling its ditches.

The pair walked two slippery blocks, climbing over fallen trees and soaking their feet as the muck grew deeper and deeper.

"Oh, I see my roof!" Escheter said.

"Do you see mine yet?" Liebkemann asked, falling behind in sandals that the sludge tried to suck under with every step. Where the muck ended, water glistening with gasoline and dead fish filled the gaps. The mess and the smell stretched for blocks.

STAFF PHOTO BY SCOTT THRELKELD

SLIDELL: Fred Liebkemann, left, and A.J. Escheter return to their boat Thursday with bags of dry clothes after checking on their homes on Legendre Drive in the Coin du Lestin subdivision near Slidell. Both homes, which are on raised pilings, sustained wind and water damage but no flooding - unlike others in the subdivision.

Both men worked their way through their backyards, then around their first-floor garages where they opened the few doors that weren't swollen shut. Grass debris clung to the walls six inches from the ceiling. A hole gaped from Liebkemann's roof.

"My house is still here," Escheter said. "Thank God for that."

But the havoc around them wasn't pretty. Escheter's wife's favorite oak, the one the couple planted two decades ago, was gone. His five beehives had floated away. A pop-up camper was nowhere in sight.

On Liebkemann's patio, a patch of transplanted marsh grass stood up straight, as if growing from the planks of his deck.

The men climbed stairs to the backdoors of their houses' second stories. First Escheter peaked in. The colorful rug in his kitchen was dry, as were the rest of his belongings.

Soon, Liebkemann called out from a screened patio, "Yeah, none in mine."

"No kidding?" Liebkemann yelled back. "Thank the Lord for that."

Grime and tons of debris surrounded them, but at least their homes were standing.

Escheter broke out a Styrofoam tray of fried pork skins, crunching on them as he sloshed through the mud on his patio and all around his yard.

Before retracing their steps in the slimy streets, they reflected on the storm that dropped a long clean-up project in their backyards.

"You might never see another one like this, I hope to God we won't. I hope to God," Escheter said. "If it gets any bigger than this, I don't want to see it."

HURRICANE KATRINA AFTERMATH

LEVEES' WEAKNESS WELL-KNOWN BEFORE BREACHES

Lack of political will, funds cited in failure

By John McQuaid, Bill Walsh, Jim Barnett and Mark Schleifstein
Staff writers

Officials at the Army Corps of Engineers knew it for years, and emergency managers and hurricane experts issued dire warnings: The hurricane levees surrounding the New Orleans area were built to withstand only a relatively weak Category 3 hurricane - not anything like Hurricane Katrina, a Category 4 megastorm.

So it should not have been a surprise that the system failed when the waves pushed ahead by Katrina topped levees in the 17th Street and London Avenue drainage canals, broke through them and poured into the city. Water also spilled over levees in St. Bernard and in eastern New Orleans and inundated those areas. The result is one of the worst natural disasters in U.S. history.

Now that the nightmare scenario has become a reality, devastated New Orleans residents, emergency managers and political leaders are asking why one of the nation's most vulnerable cities wasn't better protected. And when the city is rebuilt, how to protect it in the future?

"There were a lot of people in emergency management who were very frustrated," said Joseph Suhayda, a professor emeritus at Louisiana State University's Coastal Studies Institute who studies catastrophic hurricane risks. "They said this was just ridiculous. They couldn't stand the fact that they had this situation known as an unsolvable problem that had lasted for years, and they were faced with little staff and little resources. It should have been prevented."

The problem was, in fact, solvable. It's possible to engineer protections for the New Orleans area against Category 4 and 5 storm surges, which can top 20 feet. It would mean raising and fortifying levees, and building gates to control water flow into the lake. But that would cost billions of dollars, according to Corps estimates.

It never happened because of two main problems, Suhayda said: A lack of political will to tackle an enormous and costly problem when competition for federal resources is intense; and what he called a "bureaucratic mentality" at the Corps of Engineers that focused on incremental upgrades of existing structures.

Outdated design

The current levee system was designed in the 1960s in response to 1915 and 1947 hurricanes, whose storm surges inundated parts of the region. Corps engineers were limited by 1960s-era knowledge; they used pencils and slide rules and suppositions about hurricane storm tracks and surges that engineers today say are no longer valid. Only later, using computer modeling, did they estimate the system would protect against a fast-moving Category 3 storm.

Designing levee systems is a complex task. Storm surges crossing South Louisiana's unusual landscape of lakes, wetlands and artificial barriers rise up to variable heights, making it impossible to design a simple solution.

It also is a political process based largely on experience. For example, Mississippi River levees - raised to 20-plus feet after disastrous flooding in 1927 - are much higher than hurricane levees and offer much more protection, according to Corps statistics.

Since the 1960s the Corps has dedicated itself to building, then maintaining and upgrading existing river levees. That alone is a major job. Levees are sinking in many spots because the whole area is sinking and eroding under the weight of natural and man-made forces. That means proposing projects, passing them through channels in successive presidential administrations and getting money from Congress.

It also means applying what are bureaucratic standards for weighing costs against risks. "To identify a level of risk a given area faces, we do engineering and an economic analysis and come to an optimum solution for a level of protection," Corps of Engineers chief Carl Strock said Thursday. "In its early design stages it was meant to provide protection from a 200- to 300-year event striking the city. It is a very low probability."

> "We certainly do need to put more attention on our levee network."
> Gov. Kathleen Blanco

But Suhayda said that approach - which measures mainly property damage as the cost of disaster - does not take into account the sheer scale and human toll of the disaster unfolding now.

"The Corps says, 'we did a benefit-to-cost analysis, and that's how it came out,' he said. "If you give an insurance adjuster an assignment to do a job like this, this is what you'll get. Well, what happens to your benefit-to-cost ratio now that the costs are astronomical?"

Urgent priorities, major obstacles

Louisiana's members of Congress, who pride themselves on securing federal spending for the state, said they had asked in general terms for more money for Corps projects, but not singled out catastrophic hurricane protection for the New Orleans area.

"In speech after speech that I made, that the governor has made, we have said we need to fully fund the Corps of Engineers or we would have monumental problems," said former Sen. John Breaux, D-La., who retired in January after 32 years in Congress and was a leader in getting coastal restoration money for the state. "Because there is a limited amount of money, Congress hasn't been able to find funding for what the Corps' needs are."

Gov. Kathleen Blanco acknowledged Thursday that the state's priorities have not always focused on improving the levee system around New Orleans. "We certainly do need to put more attention on our levee network," Blanco said in Baton Rouge.

There were many competing and seemingly more urgent priorities and significant political obstacles. In recent years the Bush administration, struggling with budget deficits and the war in Iraq, has tried to cut financing for the Corps while agency officials and members of Congress have struggled to restore it - succeeding only sometimes.

At the behest of officials in low-lying areas in suburban New Orleans, for example, the Corps has pressed most strenuously for financing of flood protection measures outside the city, notably the Southeast Louisiana urban flood control project, known as SELA, an intricate drainage system designed to quickly divert water in flood-prone areas.

Securing adequate financing for SELA year after year has been the major spending battle for the Louisiana delegation in Washington. The Bush administration annually budgets far less than officials say they need, and Louisiana lawmakers lobby their colleagues in Congress to boost it.

"Whenever the Corps has come and talked to me, it has always been oriented around SELA," said Rep. Bobby Jindal, R-Kenner, who was elected in January.

The state's other principal focus has been on coastal restoration.

The bipartisan delegation united this year like never before and secured a steady, $570 million stream of federal financing over four years to repair Louisiana's coastline, which erodes at a rate of 24 square miles per year and leaves the southeastern part of the state increasingly vulnerable to storms raging northward from the Gulf of Mexico. It was far short of the $14 billion the state says it needs.

Protection and prevention

The Corps did begin a decade-long study of the issue of expanded hurricane protection after Hurricane Georges sideswiped the city in 1998 and devastated the Mississippi Gulf Coast.

"Because that storm scared a lot of people, we were asked to start looking at how to protect the city from a Category 4 or 5 storm," Corps project manager Al Naomi said.

An initial report concluded that "there is a federal interest in Category 5 protection for this area," he said.

Naomi estimates it would cost $2.5 billion to build higher levees stretching from south of Chalmette to north of Slidell and around West Bank communities, combined with floodgates that would barricade the Mississippi River-Gulf Outlet at the Paris Road bridge and the Rigolets and Chef Menteur passes. All would be designed to withstand the impact of a 30-foot or higher storm surge, Naomi said.

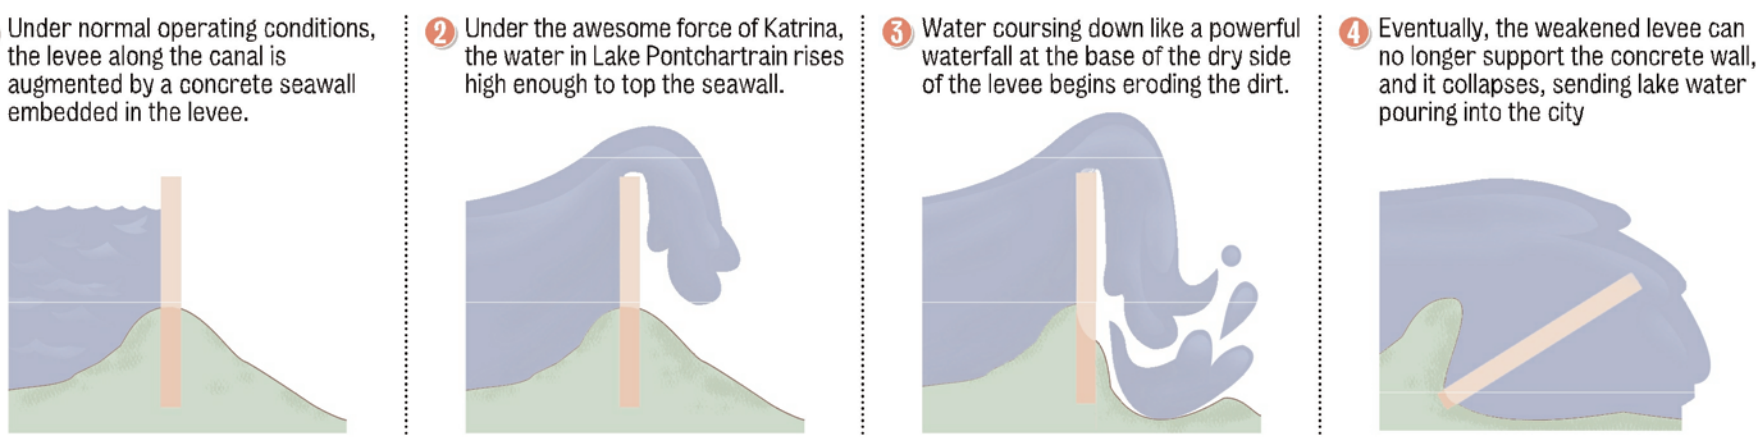
The next step would be a $12 million feasibility study, which would include a detailed estimate of the project's cost, determinations of levee height, width, strength, its economic impact, and an environmental impact statement, all of which has yet to be financed by Congress, Naomi said. But that faced obstacles.

"There have been funding issues in getting the project management plan together, and issues about getting permission to get the study totally funded," he said.

Naomi said even if officials had embarked on the study years earlier, such projects can take decades from inception to completion, so it's doubtful the city would have been completely protected against Katrina.

Now that political leaders are saying New Orleans will be rebuilt, Naomi and other officials are saying the huge infusion of federal cash likely to follow the disaster must include enhanced protection so it never happens again.

If history is any guide, Congress may pass legislation ordering the Corps to prevent a similar tragedy from happening, said retired Gen. Robert B. Flowers, the Corps' former chief of engineers, who pointed to the Mississippi's high river levees built in the wake of flooding.



"You are like to see something akin to that come out of this disaster," Flowers said. "Sometimes, unfortunately, it takes the worst to happen before things get done."

WHY IT WENT UNDER

Experts have long warned of the precarious nature of living below sea level. Katrina brought that danger home in a horrific way. Once the edges of the bowl failed, there was no stopping the catastrophe.

A WALL, AND A CITY, TUMBLE DOWN

Here's what Army Corps of Engineers officials believe happened at the 17th Street Canal that caused the cataclysm

Note: Elevations are approximate.
Source: LSU's Louisiana Water Resources Research Institute, Army Corps of Engineers, staff research
STAFF GRAPHIC BY DAN SWENSON, KENNY HARRISON AND EMMETT MAYER III

KATRINA: THE STORM WE'VE ALWAYS FEARED

Astrodome full of survival stories

Those who tried to stay join rabbis, single moms, others in Houston

By Josh Peter
Staff writer

AP PHOTO

HOUSTON: Emergency personnel prepare to transport 29 patients from New Orleans' Veterans Administration Hospital after they arrived on a Tennessee Air National Guard transport plane at Ellington Field in Houston. Conditions at the hospital had deteriorated to intolerable levels.

HOUSTON - A married couple and their 16-month-old son escaped the rising waters of New Orleans in a pirogue.

Two Orthodox rabbis shared their last supplies of kosher food with out-of-town Jews before evacuating the city.

A single mother of four young children saw two dead bodies float by as she moved three of her children to safety and worried about the fourth left behind with his grandfather.

A young father was separated from his fiancØe and 3-day-old child before boarding a bus headed out of New Orleans.

And a 28-year-old man who stayed to test his inner strength despite a mandatory evacuation order waded through hip-deep water and found a charter bus after food and hope started running low.

They were among the thousands of evacuees at the Astrodome - the indoor stadium converted into a temporary shelter in the wake of Hurricane Katrina that left about 80 percent of New Orleans flooded - and they arrived with meager belongings and tales of survival.

Damon Evans sat on a shaded picnic bench outside the Astrodome waiting to reunite with 15 family members who piled into three cars and a truck Sunday and, taking heed from the mandatory evacuations orders, drove to Houston. They left only after pleading with Evans to join them.

Even as his family prepared to leave, Evans, 28, said he never even started to pack.

"My family got upset," he said. "They kept asking, 'Why do you want to stay?' "

He still wondered about the answer Thursday as he sat under the shade of a tree in his blue adidas jersey, blue jeans, shower sandals and a black do-rag.

An arrest for marijuana possession in 2004 cost Evans his job as a cook at a restaurant in the French Quarter, said Evans, who added that after serving four months in jail he's gotten work through a temporary agency for everything from construction to loading frozen chicken with a forklift. Mostly, he said, the jobs pay $5.15 per hour - and his financial struggles may have contributed to his desire to ride out the hurricane that left about 80 percent of New Orleans under water.

"It was like something was drawing me to stay," he said. "And I was like, 'If something's drawing me to stay, it's for a reason."

"When you struggle for money every day but you're dealing and making ends meet, you want to test your inner being. You know, I watch 'Survivor' and those kinds of thing on TV.

"The ones that stayed, we go through so much, you want to test your strength during something that's out of your hands .When it's out of your hands, you don't know how far you can go. But I made it through the hurricane. I did. I got that experience."

Braving gale-force winds, Evans said he spent much of the time outside and watched the water creep up to the top step of the porch at his aunt's house. He eventually moved across the street to a two-story apartment that was housing about two dozen others who's stayed behind.

He and the others in the apartment began to run out of food Tuesday and held their last barbecue that night. Evans said he stood in ankle-deep water and barbecued dozens of chicken wings.

"I couldn't live on peanut butter and jelly for three months, and my people kept telling me, 'Come on, D. Come on.' "

By the following afternoon, hearing that buses were picking up evacuees near Lee Circle, Evans and four others waded through waist-deep water for eight blocks and climbed aboard a bus that took them and about 40 other evacuees to Houston.

They arrived at the Astrodome on Thursday at about 7 a.m., and Evans said he was looking forward to seeing his family members, who were supposed to meet him on the north side of the Astrodome. He also was thinking about the 10 people who stayed behind at the two-floor apartment complex in New Orleans.

While Evans waited for his relatives, he contemplated his future - one that might not include a return trip to his hometown. He needs to find a job soon, he said as he smoked a Camel, jingled the loose change in his pocket -- $1.46 that included 101 pennies - and sifted through a backpack duffel bag whose contents held a disposable camera and undeveloped photos he took of the disaster, two pair of shoes and a few other items.

f"I always heard any other place besides New Orleans, there's more to offer," he said. "In New Orleans, it seemed like their main attraction was partying and Mardi Gras and events. When it comes down to jobs, you're lucky, you're blessed. And if you lose a job at a certain time of year, especially summertime, it's hard.

"I'm going to use this for an advantage to break away and really see what the rest of the world's got to offer. It's a beginning.

"The worst part was over when I stepped off that bus," he said, referring to his ride to Houston. "Now everything else is in my hands."

The three men clad in black fedoras, black suit pans and bushy beards were unmistakable: Orthodox rabbis. As they searched inside the Astrodome and circled the outdoor perimeter of the building, they were on a mission.

"Are you from New Orleans?'' one of the asked.

They were looking for evacuees - Jews and non-Jews alike in need of help.

Zelig Rivkin and his son, Mendel, serve as rabbis at the Chabad House, the synagogue on Freret Street that during Hanukah lights the oversized Menorah.

Zelig Rivkin, who 30 years ago started the synagogue with a congregation up to 150 Tulane students and 35 local families, said he and his son remained in New Orleans as long as possible to help others who stayed behind.

"We didn't' take it seriously enough," Zelig Rivkin said. "And we figured there may be a lot of people staying behind and they may need some help along the way."

One of the requests came via phone Sunday night, when a Jewish couple visiting New Orleans called the Rivkins in search of kosher food.

"We just emptied out our fridge and split half for us and half for them," Mendel Rivkin said.

But by Tuesday, when their land lines and cell phones went out, they realized it was time to leave. The Rivkins loaded their 13 family members into three cars and local firefighters helped them navigate around the downed power lines and fallen trees on Broadway Avenue as the rabbis and their family made their way to Houston. Instead of seeking shelter at the Superdome, they called Chaim Lazaroff, the rabbi who oversees the Chabad community in Houston, and moved into his house.

"We always preach, 'Love your fellow as yourself,' " Mendel Rivkin said. "But here we see it in practice. These people have opened up there homes and given up an office."

While reaching out to the Jewish community, the Rivkins said they were reaching out to evacuees regardless of faith. In fact, they spent a couple of hours inside and outside the Superdome speaking mostly to non-Jews.

"I mean these people are glad to see somebody else," adding that a Palestinian woman approached him and struck up a friendly conversation.

Lazaroff said a special service was planned for Thursday night during which Zelig Rivkin would give a talk.

"A plea for help," Zelig corrected with a grin.

Lazaroff said New Orleans Jews would be welcome at Shabbat services at 8 p.m. Friday and 10 a.m. Saturday at the Chabad synagogue 10900 Fondren Road. And that offer came with a promise.

"We've got great kosher food," he said.

With a stuffed hefty bag over her left shoulder, Robin Ventris used her right arm to push the stroller and her 1-year-old daughter, her hair in short braids and ears pierced with small gold earrings. Ventris, 19, was returning from a site across the street from the Astrodome, where she loaded up on free supplies such as diapers, clothes and hygiene products.

A film of sweat covered Ventris' face as the mother of four between 2 months and 4 years old trudged back to the Astrodome. But her look of fatigue stemmed only in part from the physical burden of simultaneously pushing a stroller and hauling an overstuffed Hefty bag. She wore a bright yellow short-sleeve shirt, blue jeans and open-toe sandals - the same clothes she'd been wearing for two days.

She said her mother, Janice, rescued her and three of her children from their house in Harvey in the nick of time as flooding water rapidly rose. When Janice's car failed to start, Robin Ventris, her mother, the three children and several others waded through waste-deep water to get to busses on the Causeway.

With the power out, it wasn't long before the pot of beans and rice Ventris' mother had made for the family ran out. They also had no milk for the babies.

"Everybody was drinking hot sodas, hot juices, eating potato chips,'' she said of the days preceding the family's evacuation. "Don't got no grill to fix no meat on. Everybody was eating potato chips and candy trying to make it That's all we had.''

Along with Ventris and her family, hundreds of others trudged through the floodwaters to the busses that would take them to Houston - and that's what bothered Ventris most about a fight that broke out between two men in the Astrodome on Wednesday night.

"Everybody lost their home and everybody's going through the same thing," she said. "But people have like nasty attitudes.

"I feel like all of us should stick together because all of us struggled together. They weren't walking through water by themselves. Everybody's babies were in dirty water.

"Not that you wanted to have you children in dirty water, but there was no other way."

During that walk through foul water, Ventris said, the vandalism and destruction she saw reinforced the idea that New Orleans residents must band together if they hope to rebuild the city.

"Everybody had broken into stores and tore up and vandalized. Every store we saw, the windows were broken. It's going to take them a long time to fix the city up and get it back in order."

But her biggest concern was the whereabouts of her 4-year-old. When Ventris and other family members left, her 4-year-old son was with his grandfather. She had spoken to him by cell phone every day until Thursday.

"I'm worried about him,'' she said, her eyes welling up with tears.

Refugees seek loved ones in Houston

By Jeffrey Kuhn
Staff writer

HOUSTON -- Even before the first busload of Katrina refugees arrived early Thursday morning, New Orleanians were already at the Astrodome hoping to catch sight of loved ones. There were mothers and fathers searching for small children, sons and daughters looking for ailing parents, and toddlers holding signs in an effort to find relatives.

All looked desperate. Some were distraught. Sandra Williams of eastern New Orleans was looking for a brother, Lavelle Payton, who had called them from a rooftop in Hollygrove, waiting for rescue. Belva Carter was looking for her son, Ter-Ron Miles, 12, who had been with her godmother. Andrea Brown, who lived in the St. Bernard housing development, was tearfully searching for her children, who had gone to the Superdome. Kenta Summera, also of the St. Bernard housing development, was looking for her daughter, Killia, 9, last known to be with a godmother at the Fairmont Hotel, and a son, Larry Rudolph, 14, who was with her sister. Damien Gaines was looking for his girlfriend, Kemalushanda Jones, and 7-month-old son, Dimen Gaines. He had last seen them under Interstate 10. Bryan Washington, band director at Eleanor McMain school, was waiting outside the Astrodome for his father, a resident of the Lower 9th Ward who needs chemotherapy.

Katelyn White, 5, held a hand-painted cardboard sign in front of news cameras. She was hoping to find her father. The sign said: "Looking for the Newman family and Robinson family, please (832) 335-0440." Nicole Florent from the West Bank had been in the Superdome but found a place to stay at a motel in Houston. She was looking for the Woolridge family. She wrote a message for them: "Love always, keep safe."

A message board in the Astrodome was filled with notes. The Red Cross was allowing family members who went to the Astrodome's west gate to go inside and look for relatives, but asked them not to call the Red Cross, fearing that calls would tie up phone lines. Phone banks would be established at the Astrodome and other shelters to allow refugees inside to call loved ones. The Red Cross was also making a master list of all evacuees in shelters.

Some Katrina refugees had more mundane but still pressing concerns. Ashana Bigard of Uptown said she and her daughter, Brandon Bigard, 12, had remained in her Uptown home through the storm, but fled as waters began to rise. She was staying, at least for the night, at a LaQuinta Inn on Buffalo Speedway and was trying to contact her boss, Judith Watts, chief executive officer of Agenda for Children. "It's ironic in a way," Bigard said, that she worked as an advocate for the poor and was "now totally impoverished herself."

Florence Exnicious, a longtime employee of the New Orleans public school system, had heard that the system would be making paychecks available to employees who had gone to the Houston area. Exnicious had not a penny to her name.

At least one rumor proved to be true. Dozens of Good Samaritans in Houston had established an impromptu "free market" in a parking lot on Kirby Drive near the Astrodome, handing out bottles of water, food, clothing and toiletries from card tables and the trunks of cars. Houstonian Joe Gustav, handing out cookies and bottles of cold water, said he was "just doing what I can." Lisa Alexander, who was giving away sandwiches, cold drinks and water, said she was there "by the will of God. He sent us this way."

Pam Oswald, of the Montrose neighborhood in Houston, had adopted a family. She drove to the Astrodome, spotted a young couple with an infant and offered them the downstairs portion of her home. The couple went back to find grandparents in the Astrodome, begging Oswald, "please don't leave us."

People from the Astrodome, many of whom had nothing but the clothes they were wearing, flocked to the parking lot, grateful for the generosity of strangers. By 3:30, the Good Samaritans had been forced to leave the parking lot.

Texas scrambles to aid survivors

By Tara Young
Staff Writer

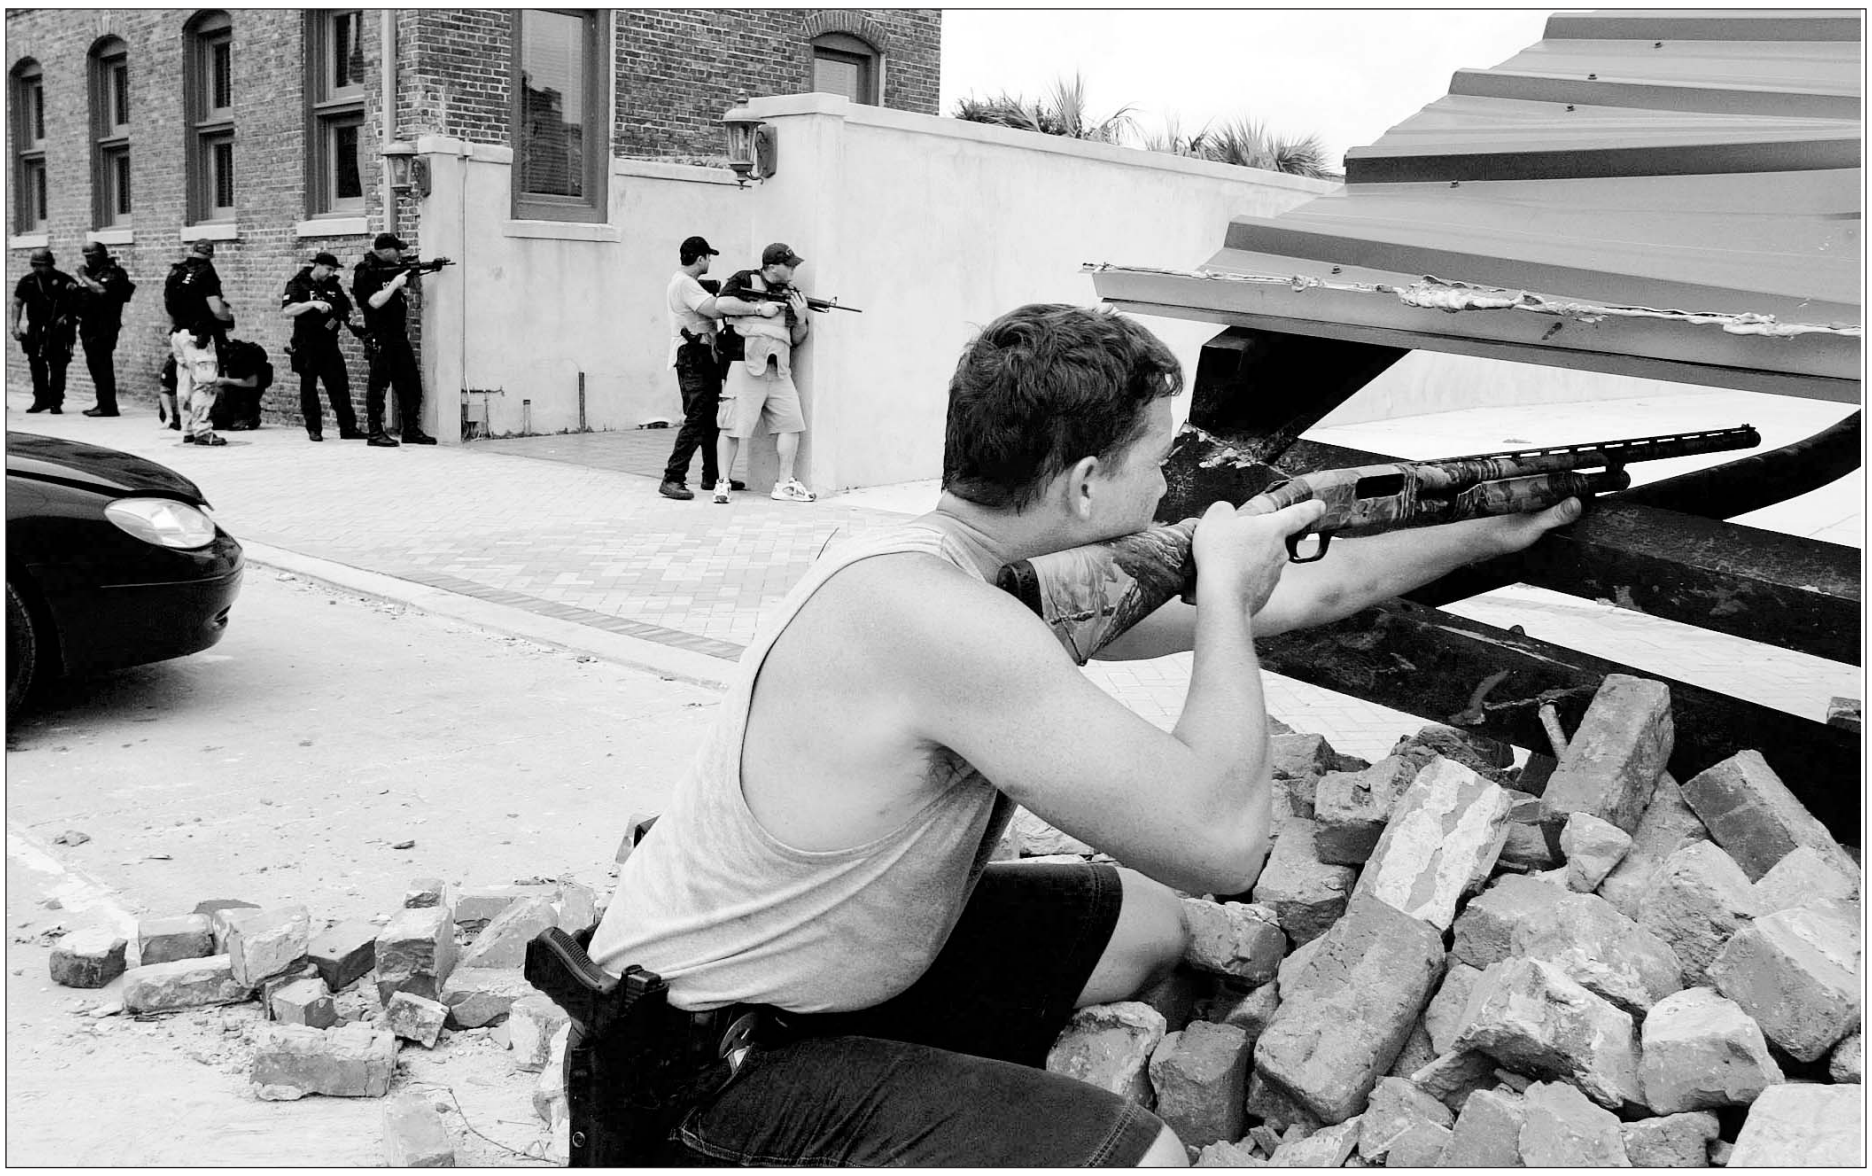
HOUSTON - As the first wave of buses began dropping off storm-weary evacuees from the Superdome at the Astrodome on Thursday, Texas officials were working frantically with federal, state and local officials to provide services that Hurricane Katrina swept away.



The bottom floor of the tidy, 9,000-square-foot facility was lined with thousands of cots, and a health-care clinic was up and running. Hot showers, clean clothes, bedding and phones to contact loved ones were waiting. The Social Security Administration was on site to help the retired and disabled collect their checks. And more services were still to come.

he biggest problem, Houston officials said, was coordinating with New Orleans officials to get the 23,000 evacuees to the Astrodome.

"Louisiana is very much overwhelmed," said Harris County Judge Robert Eckels, who runs the county responsible for overseeing operations at the Astrodome. "We really don't know all the things that are going on in Louisiana."

By late afternoon, more than 5,000 refugees had arrived. Scores more, who did not evacuate from the Superdome but made their way to the Astrodome for assistance, were sent to other shelters in the Houston area. Anticipating an overflow, the Red Cross opened shelters in San Antonio and Dallas. Each city will be able to house an additional 25,000 evacuees.

"We have had several thousand folks come into the Dome so far," Eckels said. "We have had a number of folks (come from) outside the Superdome. We've been working with the Red Cross. No one has been turned away."

STAFF PHOTOS BY ALEX BRANDON

CBD: New Orleans police officer Fred Fath, right, covers the perimeter as a SWAT team searches for looting suspects who shot at police earlier Thursday.

CRACKDOWN ON CHAOS

New Orleans police fought to take the city back on Thursday as officers and SWAT teams focused on looters while continuing the crucial work of rescuing the thousands still trapped in their homes, surrounded by floodwaters.

FRENCH QUARTER: New Orleans police SWAT officer Steven Rodrigue surveys a deserted corner in the French Quarter on Thursday.

New Orleans: Police Lt. Dwayne Schuermann tells a looting suspect that he's lucky to be alive after apprehending the man on Thursday.

New Orleans: NOPD officers look over a lineup of rifles outside Harrah's Casino before distributing them to various police districts in the city on Thursday.

DESPAIR IN THE STREETS

Katrina's aftermath led thousands to pin their hopes on the belief that buses would come to the Ernest N. Morial Convention Center and take them away from the heat, the smells and the looters. The buses never came.

STAFF PHOTO BY TED JACKSON

Convention Center: Katrina refugees doze in the Convention Center after thousands gathered inside and outside the building on Thursday.

Convention Center: After anxious storm victims rushed the evacuation buses outside the Superdome earlier in the week, one warns those outside the Convention Center not to do the same.

STAFF PHOTO BY BRETT DUKE

Staff photo by David Grunfeld

New Orleans: As anguished family and friends cry out, an ailing Dorothy Divic, 89, slumps in her wheelchair outside the Convention Center on Thursday. Those with her said Divic was dying.

STAFF PHOTO BY DAVID GRUNFELD

Convention Center: Holding whatever belongings they could carry, New Orleanians wait outside the Convention Center Thursday, their eyes peeled for the buses they hope will come.

KATRINA: THE STORM WE'VE ALWAYS FEARED

STAFF PHOTO BY JOHN MCCUSKER

New Orleans/Metairie: Water rushes into New Orleans through the break in the 17th Street Canal on Thursday.

DESTRUCTION BELOW

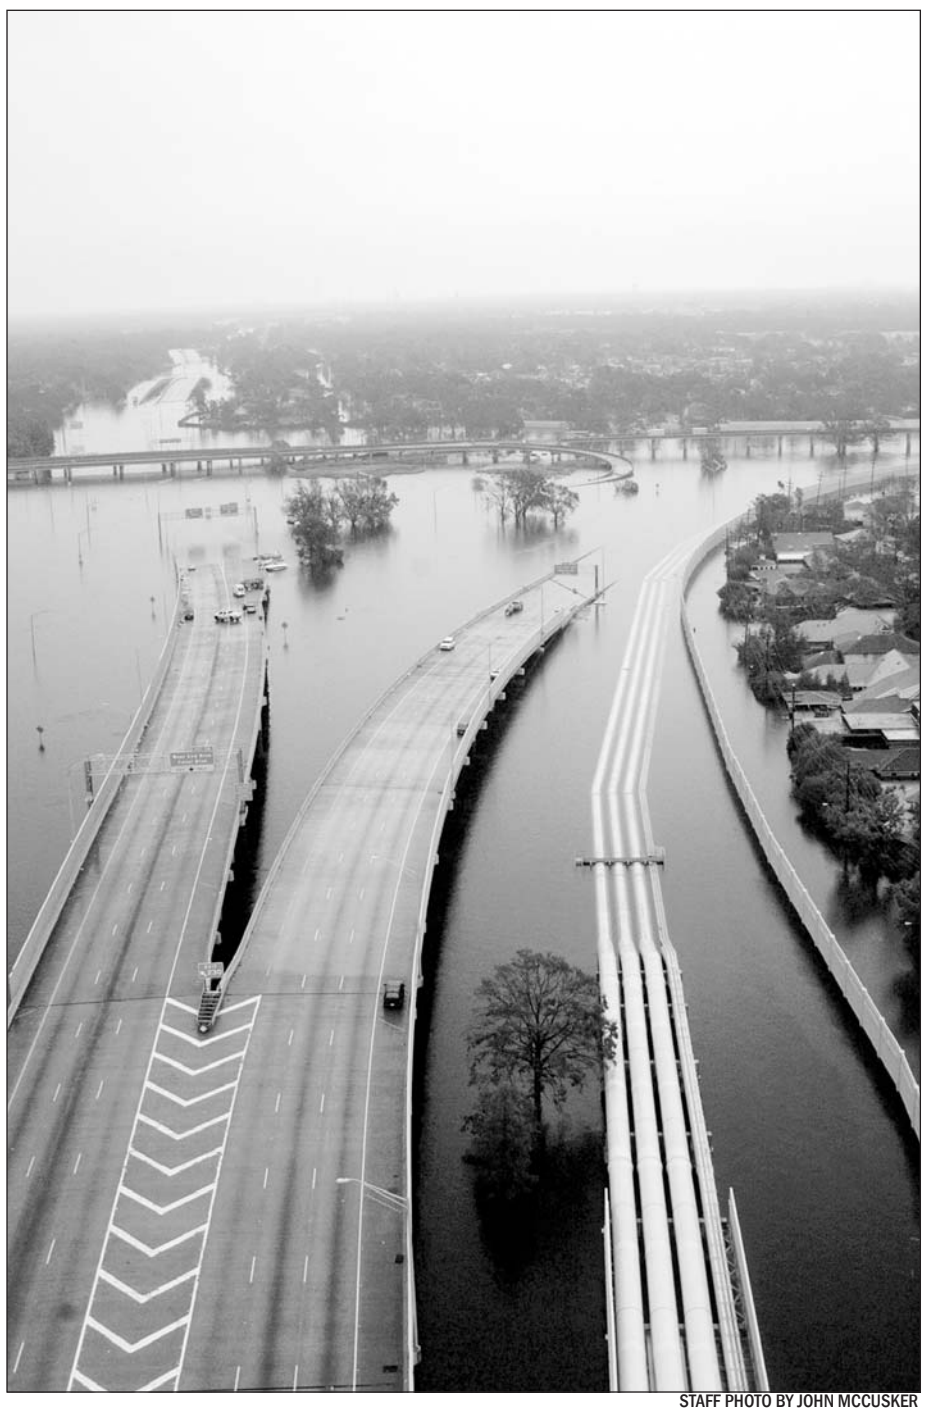
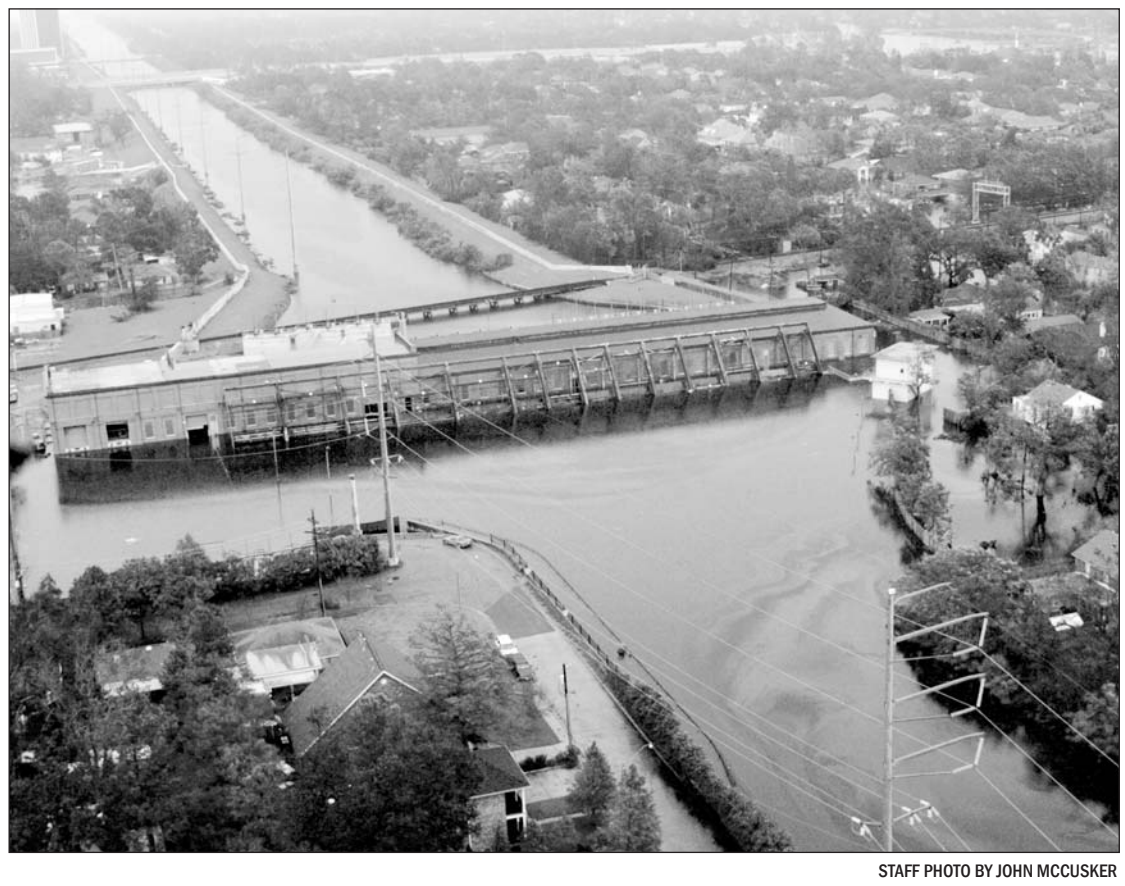
As grim as they are from ground level, the scenes of destruction wrought by Hurricane Katrina are even more staggering when viewed from above.



STAFF PHOTO BY RUSTY COSTANZA

New Orleans/Metairie: A helicopter moves into position as it prepares to drop a huge sandbag to try to stem to rush of floodwaters from the 17th Street Canal on Thursday.



STAFF PHOTO BY JOHN MCCUSKER

New Orleans: A rising Bayou St. John surrounds the homes along Moss Street on Thursday.

STAFF PHOTO BY JOHN MCCUSKER

New Orleans: The split of Interstates 10 and 610 are roads to nowhere on Thursday, thanks to Katrina's floodwaters.

STAFF PHOTO BY JOHN MCCUSKER

Metairie/New Orleans: The 17th Street Canal pumping station is surrounded by floodwaters on Thursday.

SPORTS

LSU to offer Saints use of stadium

Dome damage means teams won t play in N.O. this season

By Jeff Duncan and Mike Triplett
Staff writers

LSU athletic director Skip Bertman pledged to assist the Saints in their attempts to recover from the effects of Hurricane Katrina, including making Tiger Stadium available for home games.

Bertman said he has not spoken with Saints officials but acknowledged that university officials have been made aware of the team's interest in playing at least some of its home games at Tiger Stadium this season after Hurricane Katrina damaged parts of the Superdome roof and rendered the city uninhabitable indefinitely.

"We'd certainly look at that," Bertman said of hosting the Saints' games. "If that was in the best interest of the state that is what LSU does. If it's good for the state, it's good for LSU."

NFL commissioner Paul Tagliabue said Thursday it's unlikely the Saints will play any games in New Orleans this season and said the team probably will be forced to play home games at multiple sites because of the devastation from Katrina.

STAFF PHOTO BY TED JACKSON

SUPER DAMAGE: Hurricane Katrina blew most of the roof off of the Superdome, meaning the Saints will have to find another place to play home games, possibly at Tiger Stadium.

"At this point you have to proceed on the assumption ... that they may be unable to play in New Orleans at all for the entire season," Tagliabue said in an interview with CNBC. "If things evolve in a positive way, then that would be something that we could adjust to. But our assumption is that for planning purposes, we should assume it will be difficult, if not impossible, to play in New Orleans at all this year."

The NFL's first priority is to determine where the Saints will play their first home game against the New York Giants on Sept. 18.

The New Jersey Sports & Exposition Authority, which runs Giants Stadium, has offered to play host to the game. It would likely be played Monday, Sept. 19, because the New York Jets are scheduled to play Miami that Sunday at Giants Stadium.

Tagliabue said moving the game to New Jersey was one possibility. Future games, he said, could be played at another NFL stadium or at a non-NFL stadium.

The Saints reportedly are considering several options, including Baton Rouge, Shreveport, San Antonio, Houston, Dallas and Tuscaloosa, Ala. Team officials said this week they prefer to play games as close to New Orleans as possible, with Baton Rouge the presumed front-runner.

Tiger Stadium seated 91,600 for games last season. A renovation of the west side of the stadium is expected to add around 1,000 seats when it is completed in the next month or so.

It's unclear if the natural grass field at Tiger Stadium could endure the extra wear and tear.

The teams' schedules feature two weekends where both teams are slated to play at home: Sept. 15-16 and Nov. 5-6. The Saints play the Falcons Oct. 16, one day after LSU is scheduled to host Florida. The Saints play the Bears Nov. 6, the day after LSU will host Appalachian State.

The only NFL team with a natural grass surface that shares its stadium with a college team is the Tennessee Titans, which shares with Tennessee State. The Minnesota Vikings and the University of Minnesota share the Metrodome, which features a FieldTurf playing surface.

"We'll look into that," Bertman said. "I don't think there is anything we can't do."

The Saints will move into a hotel in San Antonio this weekend and practice in San Antonio in preparation for their regular-season opener at Carolina on Sept. 11.

NFL spokesman Greg Aiello said there are no plans to alter the NFL schedule as the league did in 2001 after the 9/11 terrorist attacks. That year, the NFL canceled all games scheduled for Week 2 and moved them to the end of the season.

The Saints' entire football operation unit has spent the week in San Jose, Calif., since evacuating New Orleans on Sunday afternoon ahead of the storm which ravaged the city Monday morning.

The Saints played their final preseason game Thursday night in Oakland.

Tagliabue, who announced that the NFL was donating $1 million to the recovery effort, said the disaster's impact reaches beyond the Saints, noting that dozens of players on other teams are from New Orleans and the Gulf Coast region.

"It's a tragic situation, obviously," Tagliabue said. "Like everyone else, we are stunned by the dimensions of this natural disaster."

Tagliabue said he expects football fans to welcome the Saints in similar fashion to the way the Giants and Jets were supported after 9/11.

"I'm sure the fans around our league are going to recognize them and help the people in the region by being responsive to what they see and hear in the NFL through the Saints," he said.

Gene Upshaw, the executive director of the NFL Players Association, issued a statement Thursday saying NFL players plan to pledge "unprecedented support" to the relief efforts. He did not immediately give details about the amount of the donation or where it would be directed.

"We have heard from many players who are personally affected by this disaster," Upshaw said. "We will continue to monitor and discuss ways in which we can support the relief effort."

Staff writer William Kalec contributed to this report.

Hornets will train in Colorado Springs

Team could play season in Baton Rouge

By Jimmy Smith
Staff writer

The Hornets will hold at least the first two weeks of this year's training camp at the Air Force Academy in Colorado Springs, Colo., general manager Allan Bristow said Thursday.

The team opens its preseason schedule Oct. 13 at Denver's Pepsi Center against the Denver Nuggets.

"As of right now, that's our only option," Bristow said from his vacation home in Marco Island, Fla. "We'll look for others. But right now that seems to be the best.

"We've divided training camp into two phases, the first being until Oct. 18 which is the conclusion of our third preseason game in Little Rock against Atlanta. After the 18th, we're waiting to see where we'll play our home games. We'll just have to wait and see what happens."

The Hornets were originally scheduled to begin training camp Oct. 4 at the team's practice facility, the Alario Center in Westwego.

Bristow said all of the team's players and employees have been accounted for and are safe, but that family members of several team employees are still unaccounted for.

"There's just no communication," Bristow said. "It's very tough."

Optimally, the Hornets would like to play regular-season games as close to the New Orleans market as they can, possibly in Baton Rouge, either at the Pete Maravich Assembly Center on the LSU campus or downtown at the Rivercenter, team officials said.

That arena is also managed by SMG, the same group that manages New Orleans Arena and the Superdome.

Team president Paul Mott, who evacuated to San Antonio, said from there Thursday that the situation in the storm-ravaged areas remains too fluid to firm up plans where the team will play during the early part of the regular season, which begins Nov. 2 when the Hornets are scheduled to travel to Cleveland.

"Two days before the levees broke," Mott said, "I felt that the clean up would just take a couple months and I was still entertaining the hope that we might have opening night (Nov. 5) in the (New Orleans Arena).

"But we're running a business. We've got to be able to make it work, and we're working hard to do that. The first priority is for us to be able to play in Louisiana. Right now, Baton Rouge is the most logical place. But there's a lot of work to be done."

Mott said he might travel to Baton Rouge in the next few days, along with several other Hornets' front office executives including business manager Sam Russo, to view the PMAC and the Rivercenter.

"No matter what happens," Mott said, "whether we're playing in New Orleans or Baton Rouge, or we're compelled to play elsewhere, we're committed to rebuilding the city. My hope is that if we can play in Baton Rouge, obviously it would be a whole lot easier. Who knows? The situation may stabilize and the clean up may go a lot quicker than everyone expects. There's so much work.

"But if we could get back in before the season is over that would be an emotional experience I'd love to have. It would speak to the spirit of New Orleanians helping New Orleanians."

Bristow said he has experienced hurricane devastation in the past and knows what the area's displaced citizens are feeling.

"Our hearts bleed," he said. "We're all watching this and bleeding as we see New Orleans suffer. Our hearts and prayers go out to those people that not only lost homes, but those people who are losing their lives.

"It's a very sad and grim situation. Certainly being involved in pro sports, that is usually the way to get people's minds off tragedies. We're not at that time yet. We're at a point in the process that that's the last thing we're thinking about or should be."

Elsewhere, the NBA and Major League Baseball have pledged to contribute $2 million for hurricane relief, while the Southeastern Conference has pledged to donate $1 million.

Also, the NBA will give $1 million to the American Red Cross and the NBA Players Association had said it will raise $1 million to aid the relief effort, according to The Associated Press, as will Major League Baseball and its players group.

"Major League Baseball wants to do its share to help those who are suffering from the devastating wreckage caused by Hurricane Katrina," baseball commissioner Bud Selig said in a statement. "I thank the players' association for joining us in making this initial contribution and I thank in advance our clubs, players, employees, business partners and fans who offer assistance in the days ahead."

Tulane season in jeopardy

School might not have a fall semester

By Benjamin Hochman
Staff writer

DALLAS - Tulane athletic director Rick Dickson said "it is a possibility" that Tulane won't play football this season.

With about 130 members of the Tulane football family evacuated to Dallas, school administrators are discussing contingency plans for the football team.

Hurricane Katrina damaged some of Tulane's campus and the Superdome, so Tulane football - and Tulane University - is without a home base. Dickson said there will be a decision "in the next three to four days" about where the team will play this year - and if the team will play this year.

"We realize the steps we have to go through - first and foremost, we need to be able to determine if our university is going to be operating this semester," Dickson said. "Right now, there is no way to determine that. I would anticipate that in the next 72 to 96 hours, they'll have to make a decision on that.

"The one thing we're cautious about doing is presuming anything at this point - because of the uncertainty. We're taking the position that all bets are off. Everything we thought was intact is not intact any longer. We have to rebuild every aspect, from scheduling to all that stuff."

Tulane's football team originally evacuated to Jackson, Miss., on Sunday but the weather forced a power outage at its base at Jackson State University, and ultimately sent Tulane out of town. A bus ride brought Tulane to Dallas late Tuesday night, where the Green Wave has practiced at Southern Methodist.

While the members of the Tulane family have dealt with the tragedies back home, they have also looked at football, said linebacker Antonio Mason, "as therapy."

But where would Tulane play? Dickson said Rice and the Houston, both fellow Conference USA members, have offered their facilities to the Green Wave. So has the Independence Bowl in Shreveport.

But Dickson will need to meet with Tulane president Scott Cowen to discuss whether Tulane will have a fall semester, and if the university will relocate to another city. Cowen, Dickson said, stayed on campus during the hurricane, and planned to evacuate on Thursday. Cowen is expected to fly to Houston, where Dickson and C-USA commissioner Britton Banowsky will meet with him today.

"We will try to mirror what our university does," Dickson said from the lobby of the DoubleTree Hotel, where the team is staying. "If our university sets up in Dallas or Houston, then we would integrate our student-athletes into that.

"The basic premise - they're students first, and we're trying to get them back into the status of being students. Their first day of classes was supposed to be today. Getting them back, if we can do that, then we'll figure out the rest, the athletic part."

Tulane's opener at Southern Mississippi, originally scheduled for Sunday, was rescheduled for Nov. 26. The Golden Eagles, whose home of Hattiesburg, Miss., was also damaged by the hurricane, have evacuated to the University of Memphis.

The next game scheduled for Tulane is Sept. against Mississippi State at the Superdome.

"There's a lot of unknown," Dickson said.

With the exception of women's soccer, all of the other Tulane fall athletes have evacuated to their parents' homes or homes of friends. The soccer team is participating in a tournament at Alabama-Birmingham, and the Wave expects to remain in Birmingham through next Wednesday.

The team is then expected to fly to San Diego, for a tournament beginning Sept. 9.

N.O. schools may be left out of fall sports

Rules say school has to be open to play

By Bryan Lazare
Staff writer

BATON ROUGE - Louisiana High School Athletic Association commissioner Tommy Henry, formulating a plan in the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina, said Thursday that he doesn't expect New Orleans school to participate in fall sports.

"I see us playing football with 32 teams in the playoffs, and I see the New Orleans schools left out," Henry said. "It's pretty strong when schools like Jesuit are knocked out.

"Schools like Bonnabel, Warren Easton and Brother Martin, that have been such a part of our association since I've been here, are not open. I hate to see a (state) volleyball tournament without Mount Carmel, Dominican, Ben Franklin, Sacred Heart."

Schools will determine whether or not their teams will be able to participate. Henry said that a school "must be operable for its athletic teams to play."

The LHSAA listed schools in 17 parishes, including all in the Metro New Orleans area, as storm-parish schools. In football, there are three situations that can occur.

First, two non-storm parish schools will play as normal.

Second, if a non-storm parish school is scheduled to play a storm-parish school, the home team will determine if the game will be played. If the storm-parish school is unable to play, it will be considered to have broken the contract, but there will be no penalty.

The game will be considered no contest, not a forfeit. Third, two storm-parish schools could play if able.

The 32 berths in each classification for the football playoffs will be determined by the power rankings. A team will not be awarded a forfeit victory if a storm-parish school is unable to play the game.

On Thursday, the LHSAA Executive Committee passed an amendment concerning the eligibility of misplaced students. According to the new rule, these students will be considered "homeless" students. Those students will be immediately eligible at another school in their home parish or in an adjacent parish.

The LHSAA championships for volleyball, swimming and football will be affected.

"The volleyball championships may still be able to be played in the Pontchartrain Center in Kenner," Henry said.

"After that, I don't know. Swimming can be held at LSU."

The 25th anniversary of the Nokia Sugar Bowl Prep Classic football championships will be not held in the Superdome.

"There's no way the Superdome will be ready," Henry said. "We'll look at LSU's Tiger Stadium. There will be a move to move it to Shreveport."

However, he said, playing games is not important considering what has occurred and is occurring in the New Orleans area.

"I realize that, when we experience a natural disaster like Hurricane Katrina, things that used to matter such as high school contests seem so trivial," Henry said. "It's very sad.

MONEY

"Baton Rouge is about to become the fastest-growing city in America in about an hour."

Arthur Sterbcow, president of Latter & Blum Inc. Realtors in New Orleans,

Evacuees swamp B.R. real estate market

Area sees housing boom in the hurricane's wake

By Keith Darce
Business writer

Baton Rouge has seen a flurry of real estate activity this week with thousands of Hurricane Katrina evacuees descending on the city.

Local realtors said Thursday that many families are buying homes in the Baton Rouge area because they realize that a return to the Big Easy is a big time away. And businesses displaced by the storm are snapping up office and warehouse space in the state's capital city because it may be years before they return home.

Some consumers with solid credit scores and large down payments are getting virtually paperless mortgages within days instead of the weeks.

Lynda Schlif of Realty Executives Integrity First Real Estate said that her office has been "swamped, swamped, swamped."

Schiff said her small company posted sales volume of about $15 million last year and she expects that volume to rise 50 percent this year because of Hurricane Katrina.

"Hollywood couldn't write a worst script,'' said Arthur Sterbcow, president of Latter & Blum Inc. Realtors in New Orleans, part of a conglomerate that includes C.J. Brown Realtors, Baton Rouge's largest real estate company. The Baton Rouge market -- just a fraction of New Orleans -- will be hard pressed to accommodate the surge of evacuees.

"Baton Rouge is about to become the fastest-growing city in America in about an hour," Sterbcow said from his temporary headquarters on Perkins Avenue in Baton Rouge. "This is the largest (relocation) operation in our company's history."

A week ago, Baton Rouge's population was 450,000. "I bet you it is 650,000 today,'' he said.

Algiers residents Jim and Donna Vance are among the evacuees coming to the city. On Thursday, they headed out to look at a house and Catholic high schools in Baton Rouge. They even made an offer on a home, but the property had already been sold.

"People are just going to have to act quick," said CJ Brown agent Dave Caraccioli.

Latter & Blum manages between 7,000 and 8,000 apartments in the metro Baton Rouge area, and Sterbcow, who watched on CNN Wednesday night as a "thug'' with a crowbar broke into Latter & Blum's downtown New Orleans with a crowbar, said that all of his rental units are leased.

Sterbcow has set up a relocation phone bank to handle the demand. His brokers and agents are helping New Orleans residents move to Houston, Atlanta and everywhere in-between.

He is convinced that New Orleans will return to its glory days, but that it may take residents and the nation 20 years to erase the psychological and economical impact Hurricane Katrina has created.

He also predicts, with other local Realtors agreeing, that Baton Rouge will become the fastest-growing city in the United States in the next year or two, surpassing the explosion of population and single-family home construction seen in Las Vegas.

But Sterbcow is determined to return to New Orleans.

"When the power is back on, I'll be sitting in my office at 800 Common St.,'' he said, downplaying any thought that the city will not be rebuilt, as some television talking heads have suggested.

One thing Baton Rouge has that New Orleans has always lacked is land, and Sterbcow expects a surge in single-family home construction and a real estate boom unimaginable to the area just five days ago.

Latter & Blum/C.J. Brown is not alone in being flooded with requests for space.

David McKey of Coldwell Banker Phelps & McKey Realtors Inc. of Baton Rouge said clients are buying both commercial and residential buildings.

"They don't have a choice, that's really the only alternative," McKey said.

McKey's staff fielded more than 300 to 350 calls in two days from New Orleanians seeking commercial and residential space.

"We've just had two in a row looking to buy, and they have no intention of ever returning to New Orleans," McKey said.

McKey said that he expects the Baton Rouge real estate market to bounce dramatically. "I think this is going to go on not for months but for years,'' he said.

Downtown N.O. hotels grow desperate to move guests

Coaches commandeered for other rescue efforts

By Rebecca Mowbray
Business writer

As the security situation in New Orleans deteriorates, downtown hotels are desperately trying to remove any remaining guests, but they are having trouble getting buses.

The Ritz-Carlton New Orleans has been trying to evacuate guests by motor coach, but the buses keep getting commandeered for other rescue efforts.

"What transportation is coming into the city is sometimes being diverted to other emergency situations," said Vivian Deuschl, vice president of public relations for the Ritz-Carlton Hotel Co. LLC. "All the people in the hotel are a priority. There's just so many situations there."

About 300 of the 1,200 employees and guests who weathered Hurricane Katrina at the Canal Street hotel remained there Thursday. The hotel is surrounded by about 4 feet of water, and supplies at the hotel are beginning to run low. "We have as much security as we possibly can," Deuschl said.

Inside the hotel, five doctors who were in town for a convention on HIV have turned the French Quarter Bar into an infirmary to assist guests with medical issues that have arisen during their stay. Earlier in the week, the doctors broke into a Walgreens drug store across the street, with Walgreen Co.'s permission, Deuschl said, to get medical supplies.

"We hope to get them out tonight. We have been trying to get them out sooner, but it's been challenging," he said. "It's an extremely difficult situation."

At the J.W. Marriott across the street, which like the Ritz is owned by Marriott International Inc., about 50 guests remained. Marriott hopes all guests can get out in the same convoy.

Another luxury hotel, the Windsor Court, is working with Louisiana State Police to bring buses and a freight truck of diesel fuel, medical supplies and food to the hotel today.

The truck also will be used to get guests out of the hotel so it can be used by emergency officials.

At other hotels, evacuation efforts have gotten desperate. At the Wyndham Canal Place, which housed 1,500 guests, employees and their families during the storm, guests were turned loose if they couldn't get out on their own.

"The hotel was completely evacuated at midday (Wednesday)," said Darcie Brossart, vice president of communications at Wyndham International. "For those who could drive out, they did. Everyone else went to shelters."

"There are probably a lot of the guests who are at the Superdome or other shelter areas," she said.

Other hotels were successful at getting guests out on buses.

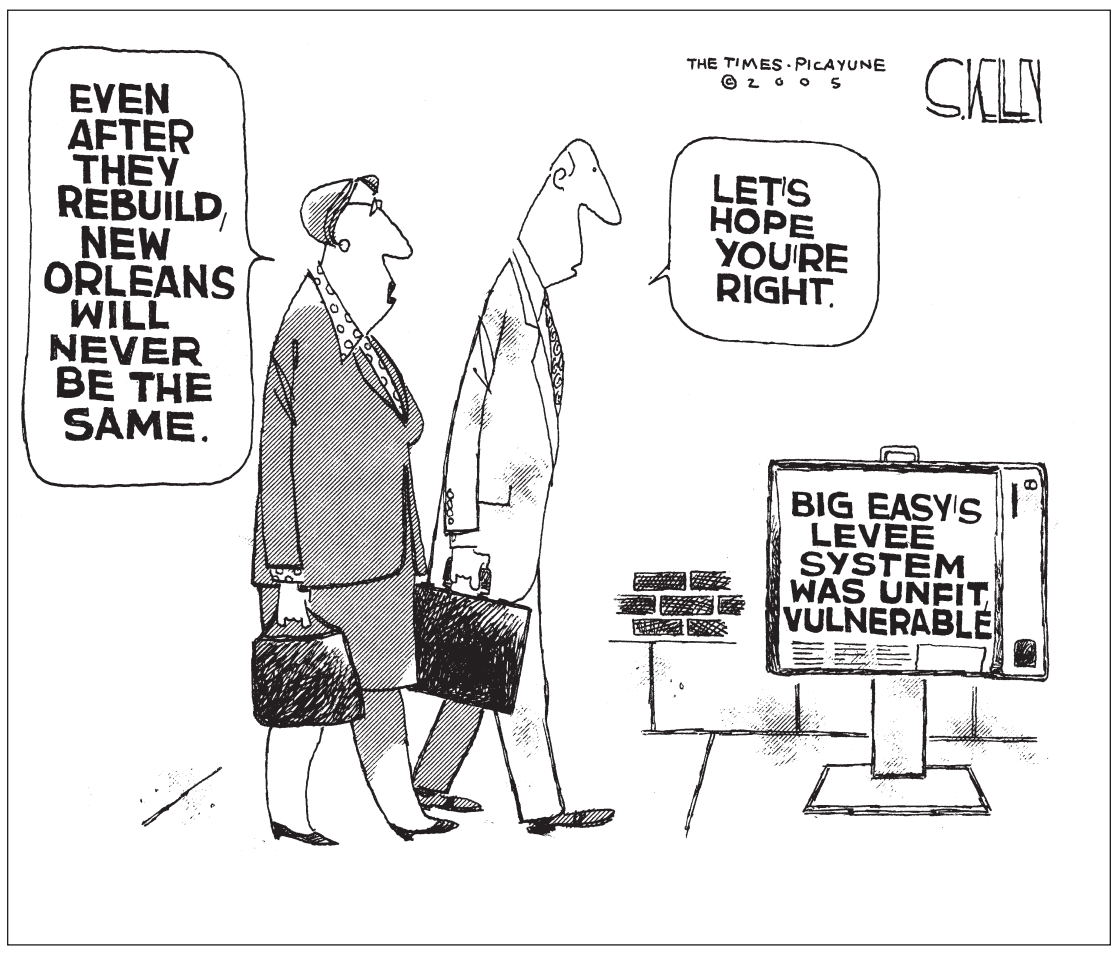
At the Sheraton New Orleans Hotel, which housed 1,000 guests during the storm, all guests who hadn't been able to get out on their own were evacuated to the Sheraton Park Central hotel in Dallas, according to a telephone recording at the New Orleans property. Hotel officials could not be reached at the hotel in Dallas.

The Hilton New Orleans Riverside, the city's largest hotel, also was successful in getting people out on Wednesday.

"Yesterday evening we did a planned evacuation of 1,600 team members and guests from our four downtown New Orleans properties," said Kendra Walker, vice president of brand communications at Hilton Hotels Corp.

They were taken to Baton Rouge, where they could catch a plane or be picked up by friends or family.

Those who weren't able to do that were transferred to Hilton hotels in Houston, Dallas, San Antonio and Austin, Texas.



Hilton has set up a hotline to help friends and family figure out to which Texas hotel guests were transferred. That number is 888-240-6152.

The 1,700-room Hilton Riverside was known to shelter as many as 5,000 guests during hurricanes, but Walker said many guests were able to get out on their own before the situation in New Orleans became desperate.

Walker said Hilton Hotels has donated $250,000 to the Red Cross, and the Conrad Hilton Foundation has donated $1 million to the Red Cross.

Business writer Becky Mowbray can be reached at beckymowbray@yahoo.com.

OUR OPINIONS

AN EDITORIAL

Yes, we are worth it.

Even as people from New Orleans desperately search for their family members and rescue workers patrol the region in boats, hack through roofs and try to pluck survivors out, some people in other parts of the country have begun to blame us, the victims. Our crime? Choosing to live in New Orleans.

Especially heartless were U.S. House Speaker Dennis Hastert and the writers of an editorial that appeared Wednesday in the Republican-American, a newspaper in Waterbury, Conn. Mr. Hastert was quoted by the Daily Herald of Arlington Heights, Ill., saying it makes no sense to rebuild New Orleans where it is. "It looks like a lot of that place could be bulldozed," he said.

The Republican-American's headline asks, "Is New Orleans worth reclaiming?"

The editorial depicts our city and our people as a drain on federal coffers, and if you read it you might get the impression that New Orleans has never contributed to the economic vitality of this country.

It maligns the city and our people as if we're nothing more than outstretched palms waiting for FEMA grants that only they fund.

How dare they?

After Mr. Hastert made his insensitive comments, his press secretary tried to spin them. The speaker didn't mean that there shouldn't be a New Orleans, the spokesperson said. He was just suggesting that as they rebuild, officials give serious thought to how future destruction could be prevented. That goes without saying. We're much more sophisticated now than we were when the city was founded in the 18th century. Of course our officials are going to rebuild in such a way that reduces the threat of future devastation.

At least President Bush realizes how valuable we are. He flew over the storm-ravaged areas of Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama on Wednesday afternoon and seems sincerely sorrowful for all the people whose lives have been irreversibly changed by this storm.

His promise to send aid, and lots of it, was encouraging. It's going to take a huge amount of money to rebuild New Orleans and a similarly large amount of assistance to sustain the hundreds of thousands of people who have been displaced.

Joe Riley knows it, too. As the mayor of Charleston, S.C., a coastal city that was torn apart by Hurricane Hugo in 1989, Mr. Riley not only is sympathetic to our plight, he defends our right, our need, to exist. When an interviewer for National Public Radio asked him, "Should there be a city where New Orleans is?" he said, "Of course, of course. Venice should always be Venice. And New Orleans always New Orleans. They'll make the levees bigger, and they'll make them stronger so this never happens again. But this city, so important to our country, of course it should always be there."

Surely the folks in Waterbury would want their city rebuilt if a natural disaster destroyed it, just as Rep. Hastert would demand that Chicago be given the same consideration. They ought to show compassion and respect for those of us down here who will be struggling for quite some time to piece together our lives.

President Bush is promising aid. The sooner we get it, the better. One thing is certain: We will rebuild. New Orleans is worth it. So are the people who call it home.

KATRINA: THE STORM WE'VE ALWAYS FEARED

DESPERATION AND DESTRUCTION

STAFF PHOTO BY TED JACKSON

CONVENTION CENTER: A mother holds her baby close as she begs for the outside world to bring her food and milk for her child. Thousands of people gathered in the Ernest N. Morial Convention Center Thursday, with no authorities or officials supervising them or providing food, water or any essentials.

Three days after Hurricane Katrina devastated the New Orleans area, the victims of the storm and those striving to help them are still reeling from the effects of the aftermath.

STAFF PHOTO BY ELLIS LUCIA

NEW ORLEANS: A fire rages in a building off Earhart Expressway while vehicles sit idle in floodwaters along the street Thursday.

NEW ORLEANS: A police officer holds a looting suspect at gunpoint after making an arrest Thursday.

STAFF PHOTO BY ALEX BRANDON

STAFF PHOTO BY ELLIS LUCIA

METAIRIE: Residents of Jefferson and Orleans parishes crowd the staging area along Interstate 10 near the Causeway Boulevard exit to wait for relief from local authorities.

Health aides to flood area

Biggest threat is stress, officials say

By John Pope
Staff writer

Nearly 500 federal public health specialists will be deployed throughout the storm-ravaged Gulf Coast region in an attempt to ward off a variety of food- and water-borne diseases, but the most serious health threat these areas face will be psychological problems brought on by stress, the head of the Centers of Disease Control and Prevention said Thursday.

Calling Hurricane Katrina "our own tsunami," CDC Director Julie Gerberding said the 24 20-member teams headed for the area will include experts in infectious diseases and environmental health.

They will join about 30 CDC workers already in Louisiana who are helping assess the situation, determine the care patients need and deliver basic materials such as antibiotics, tetanus vaccine and cots for field hospitals, agency spokesman Tom Skinner said.

The state Department of Health and Hospitals has asked CDC to send experts in environmental health, infectious diseases and immunizations, but they will not be needed for a few weeks because the top priority now is finding and rescuing people and getting them to medical care, spokeswoman Kristen Meyer said.

"We haven't seen a lot of diseases because the things that put people at risk are being in floodwater and cleaning up after floodwater," she said. "Most evacuees haven't had a chance to go back home."

To head off a possible outbreak of tetanus in Mississippi, the CDC has sent 8,000 doses of tetanus vaccine to Mississippi, Gerberding said.

Although federal health specialists will work with local personnel in treating a variety of food- and water-borne diseases such as hepatitis A, diarrhea and intestinal infections, the biggest -- and longest-lasting -- health-care concern probably will be psychological problems brought on by stress, Gerberding said in a telephone news conference.

"When you have no home, you have no money, and you have no job, . . . the long-term consequences are overwhelming," she said. "We will have mental-health experts at every location."

These specialists will treat not only patients but also caregivers "because they are affected by the damages and the families" they see, Gerberding said.

Among the CDC contingent will be people who have worked in refugee camps around the world, she said.

More information about hurricane-related health concerns is available at dhh.emergencynews.com.

One particular area of concern, she said, will be the possibility of a rise in West Nile virus infections as a result of the high amount of water that Katrina dumped on Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama -- water that could be breeding grounds for virus-carrying mosquitoes.

Although CDC arguably is the world's foremost public-health organization, Gerberding stressed that its team will be cooperating with state and local health-care personnel to "augment, not replace" them.

"We've got to coordinate surveillance of infections," she said.

Because Katrina was "more like a tsunami than a hurricane," Gerberding said the need for medical help in the devastated region will be vast -- so vast that qualified civilian doctors are being asked to join the CDC teams for what could be a protracted period.

"We're in a marathon, not a sprint," she said.

STAFF PHOTO BY ELLIS LUCIA

NEW ORLEANS: Toting plastic bags filled with their belongings, New Orleans residents head for the Superdome despite the floodwaters surrounding it Thursday.

Compelling coverage has human touch

Meterorlogist shocked by footage

By Dave Walker
TV columnist

For displaced New Orleans residents scanning for landmarks and wondering when the water would stop rising, WBRZ's around-the-clock broadcast, bolstered by the familiar face of Bruce Katz, has been as essential as bottled water.

Katz, the chief meteorologist at ABC affiliate WGNO-TV, has been broadcasting at WBRZ since Sunday when he evacuated to Baton Rouge to contribute to WGNO-WBRZ co-coverage that would be based from there.

The work of the combined news staffs had been carried by WGNO until Katrina flooded the blockhouse at the base of its nearly-new $7 million tower and transmitter.

It has been carried nonstop ever since, with WGNO anchors and reporters Michael Hill, Liz Reyes, Susan Roesgen, Meredith Mendez and others working side-by-side with WBRZ's staff.

WBRZ actually was an early career stop for Katz, a New Orleans native. For the past 11 years, he has worked for a station in his hometown that struggles to compete for viewers.

In fact, he's likely had many more viewers this week than he gets at home.

Katz's presentation intensity in times of crisis occasionally has been off the charts. Working shifts that total up to a dozen hours a day, Katz hasn't come up for air yet this storm, and for once it seems appropriate.

Katz was unapologetically apoplectic as the station played the first footage of looting in the city, which evidently began before Katrina's winds died down.

He vowed on the air to personally deliver the footage to New Orleans police. His narration of later plundering was even more heated.

Some of Katz's ire - not to mention his promise to hand over news footage to cops - would be met with disapproval in the corridors of manybroadcast journalism schools.

This time, Katz gets a hall pass.

His genuine anger and disappointment with the looting was so human and heartfelt, it surely reflected the gut reactions of every utterly helpless viewer who knows that TV footage of the post-Katrina plundering of New Orleans, already set on continuous loop by cable news networks, will do more long-term damage to the city than the wind and the water.

Katz reacted as anyone would. As I did.

"I don't know what I'm going home to," he said.

Monday at dusk, when still it appeared as though the city might've missed most of Katrina's worst, Katz was narrating the video feed as a helicopter shot captured a personal tragedy live in real time.

Interviewed in the WBRZ newsroom on Thursday, Katz said he immediately started looking for landmarks, but saw only canals.

Flooded streets, actually.

He then saw the old Celebration Station at Interstate 10 and Veterans Memorial Boulevard and got his bearings.

"Kirschman's to the right, Best Buy to the left," he said.

Talking and spotting, Katz realized that his house was just a few blocks from the intersection he'd identified.

That these were streets he travels every day.

In real time and on the air, he discovered that his house was probably beneath "six, eight, 10 feet of water," Katz said.

How many westward evacuees clinging to WBRZ's coverage came to the same stomach-hollowing realization at exactly the same time?

I know of at least one.

The tour continued. The camera closed in on uncontrolled fires, Superdome damage, the Fair Grounds' torn roof, blown-out skyscrapers, swamped malls, a ruined city.

It wasn't all terrible. Dispatched to New Orleans by both stations' corporate parent, Tribune Co., the chopper captured the first of many rooftop rescues.

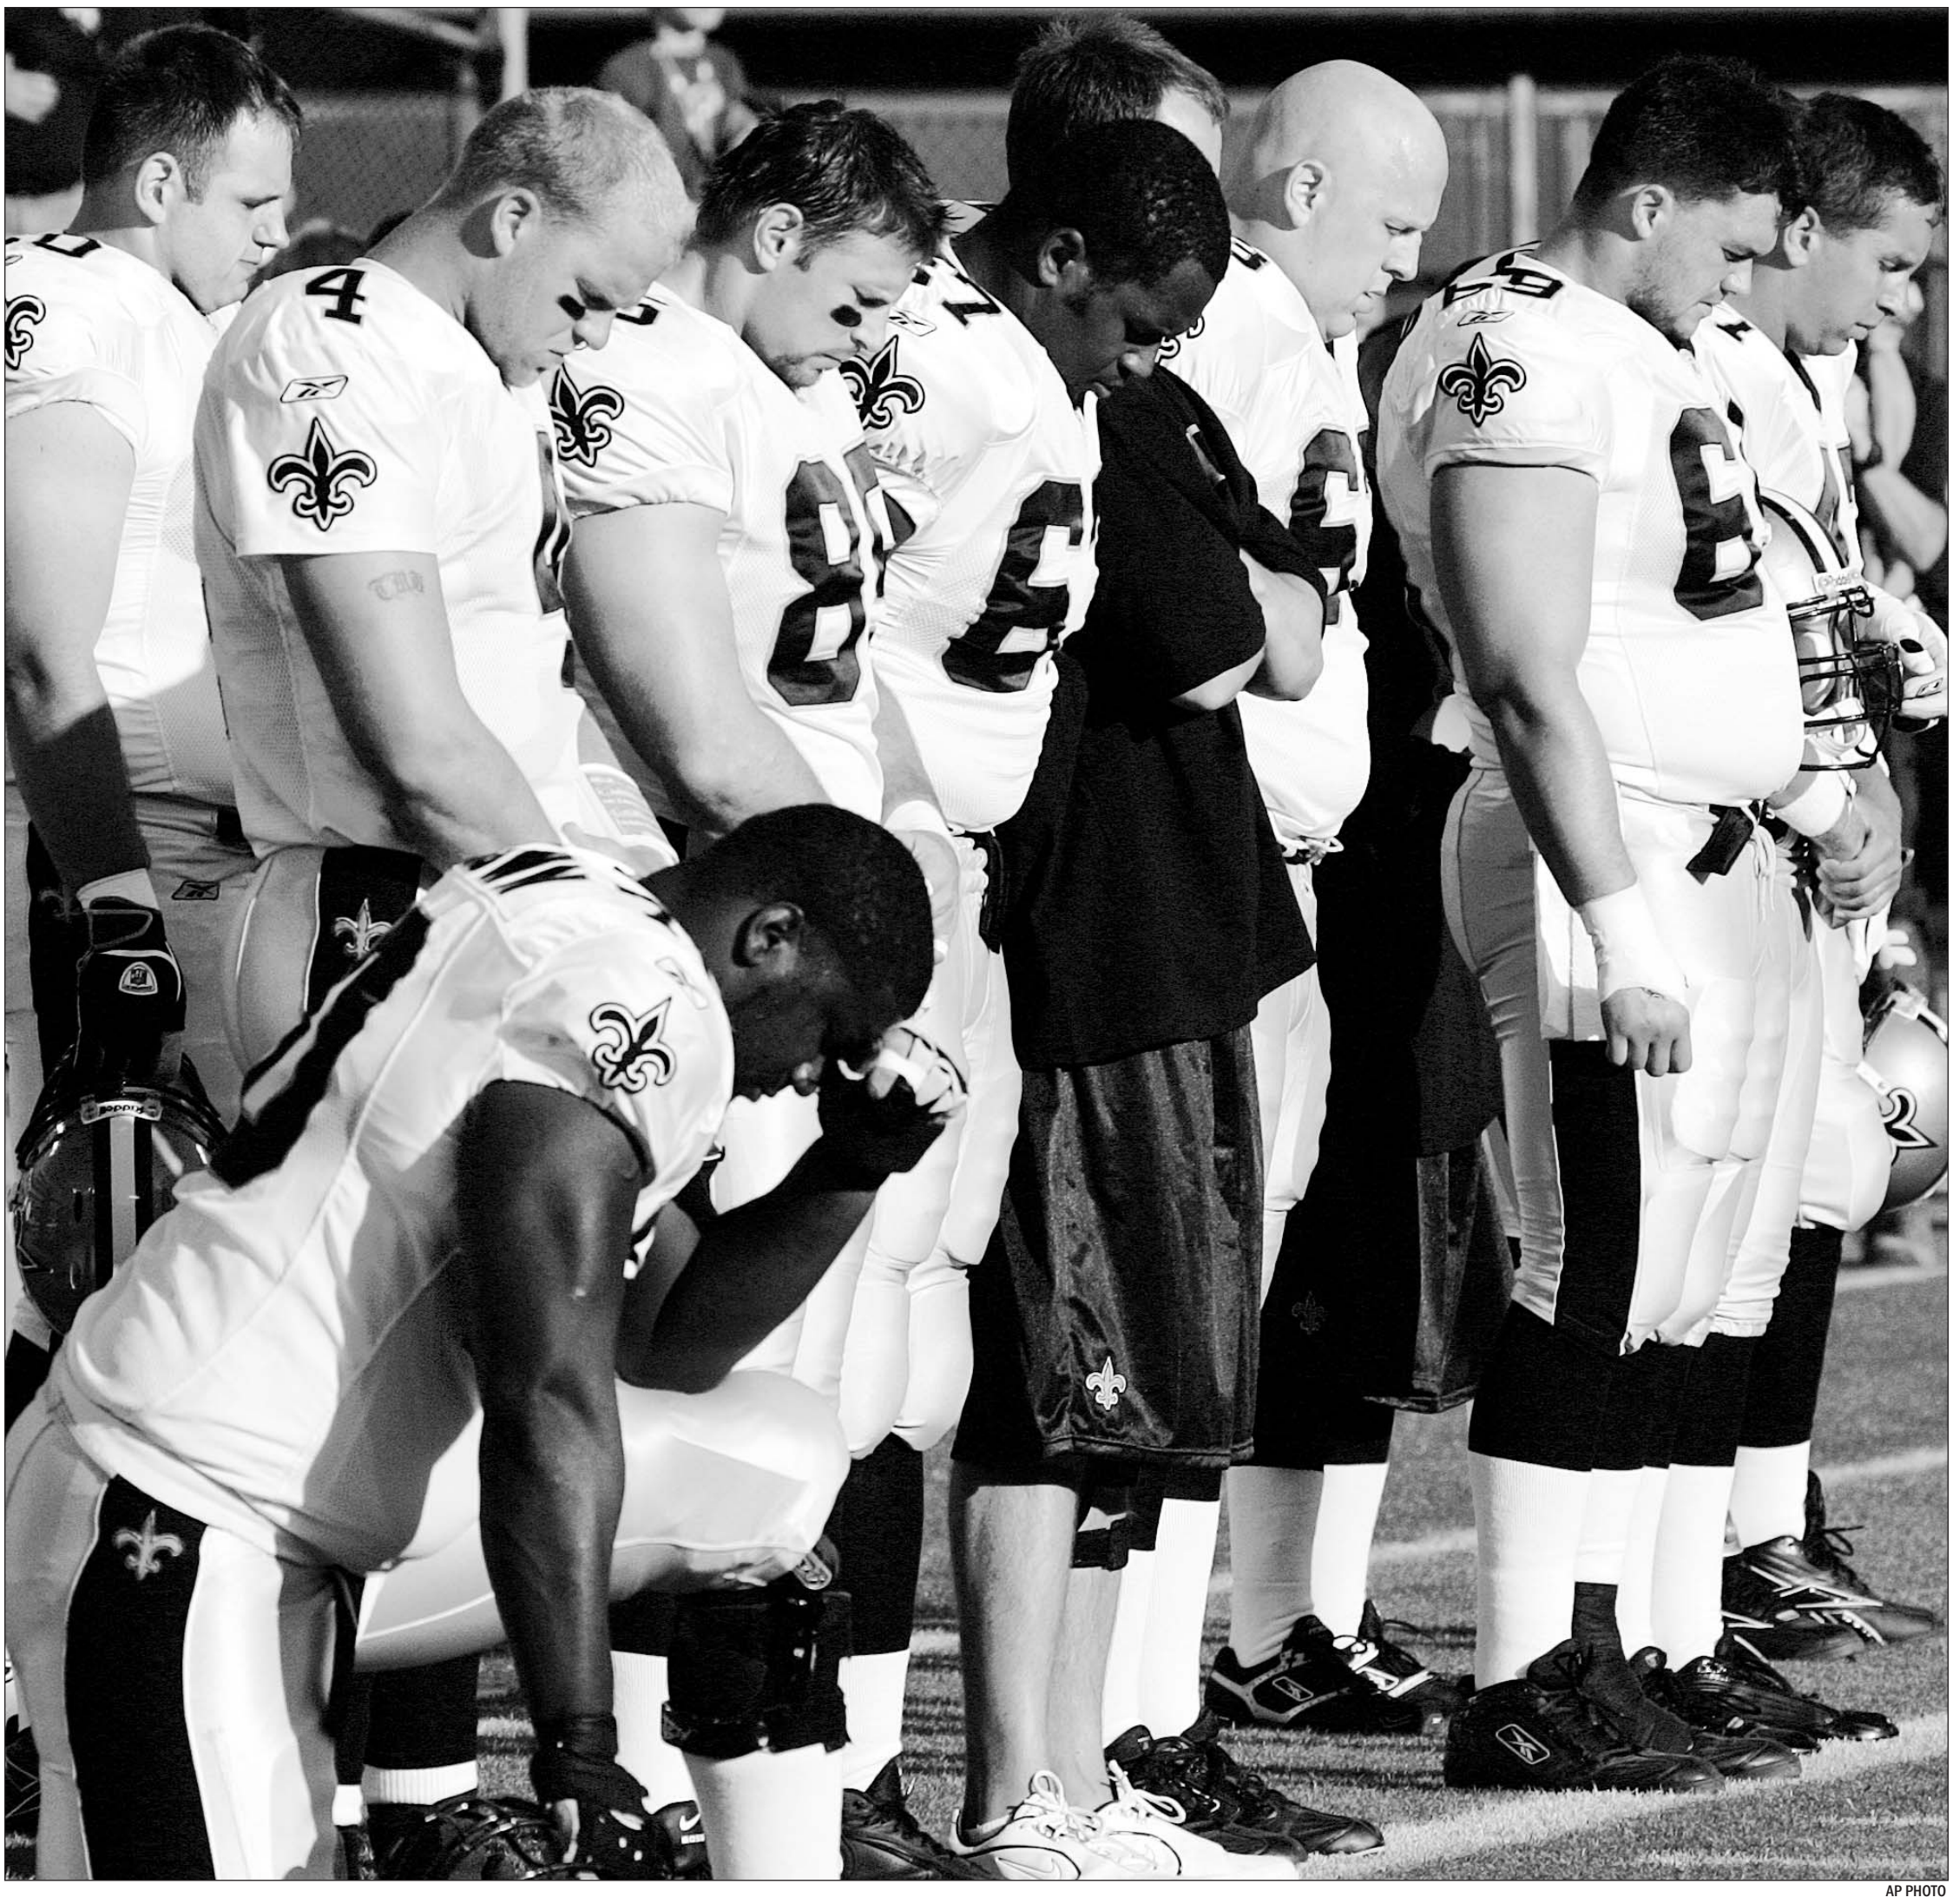
The sequence ended, and after an anchor-desk shift change, Katz joined other staffers in a meeting.

Larry Delia, WGNO's general manager, said he could tell then that Katz was reeling.

"After the meeting, I lost it," Katz said. "Cried my eyes out.

"Those images hit me. I just crashed."

Wednesday night, Katz and Hill and a few other WGNO staffers visited a Baton Rouge grocery store to load up on survival sundries.



The expressions of sympathy and appreciation they heard there - not to mention 1,000 questions asked from beyond the brink of desperation about specific New Orleans neighborhoods - was unlike anything Katz has ever experienced.

It was a 90-minute trip to the store to buy toothpaste.

"Every aisle, every two or three people, they were charging me," Katz said. "These people realize we're victims, too."

TV columnist Dave Walker can be reached at davewala@yahoo.com.

HURRICANE KATRINA AFTERMATH

AP PHOTO

HOME THOUGHTS: Before the Saints game at the Oakland Raiders, the Saints bow their heads in a moment of silence for the victims of Hurricane Katrina.

Saints play game with fans on their minds

Horn says game should not have gone on

By Mike Triplett
Staff Writer

OAKLAND, Calif. - Saints receiver Joe Horn said he wishes his team had not played this final preseason game, a 13-6 loss to the Raiders.

He said he would have rather been closer to home, trying to help out in any way he could. And in fact, early this morning, he said he plans to stop by the bank in San Antonio, rent a van, drive to Houston and help out in any way he can.

But as far as Thursday's game serving as the final tune-up for the Saints' regular season, Horn said he does see the value in that.

Don't get me wrong, Horn said. The games will mean something to me, because I know that they (the fans) need something to grab on to. There's still Saints fans out there. So playing against the Carolina Panthers next week will mean something to me.

It's going to feel like a real game. But when it's over, the aftermath, that's when it hurts. When you're riding on the bus to go on the plane, to fly back. But during the game, I'm going to play my heart out.

It might not have mattered much, but Thursday's game was shown on the jumbo screen at the Houston Astrodome, in front of some 11,000 New Orleans refugees.

Horn was one of several Saints starters that did not play on Thursday night, along with quarterback Aaron Brooks and tailback Deuce McAllister, among others - a fairly routine occurrence at this stage of the preseason.

But the Saints veteran spoke to them during a sideline interview, saying, I let them know that our hearts go out to them (the fans).

He said he hoped that it helped keep their minds off their suffering for an hour or two, but he wasn't so sure.

Several players said they enjoyed hearing about those misplaced fans after the game when Coach Jim Haslett told them about it.

They've got no place to live, no water, no food, and they are watching us in a football game, Haslett said. I think that says a lot to our football team. And maybe we can give them something the next couple months to cheer about.

Everybody is heartbroken, but we've got to fight through it. It's going to be a hard year. We're going to be like gypsies. We don't know where we're going to be living, where we're going to be playing. But you know what, we will deal with everything and we will be fine.

Haslett briefly reviewed Thursday's performance: Offensively, the Saints needed to score more points; penalties on the offensive line were a problem; the Saints ran the ball well and stopped the run better than they have all preseason (with the starting front seven in the game on defense); but the passing defense allowed a few big plays.

The Raiders took a 7-0 lead in the first quarter with a 27-yard touchdown pass from Kerry Collins to Randy Moss before their own starters called it a night. The Raiders threw for 308 yards total.

The Saints had to settle for two made field goals and one missed field goal by John Carney.

Quarterback Todd Bouman played the first half, completing 13 of 20 passes for 120 yards. Rookie Adrian McPherson took over in the second half, completing 7 of 21 passes for 83 yards. The Saints did not turn the ball over.

Saints receiver Michael Lewis, a New Orleans native with family still living in the city, admitted being distracted during Thursday's game. But he said the players were able to turn it on when they had to - perhaps the most valuable lesson learned in this game.

I think we can do it, Lewis said. But it's going to be a challenge.

LSU players having hard time thinking of football

By William Kalec
Staff writer

BATON ROUGE - Spell your name, the man behind the camera asks.

S-K-Y-L-E-R G-R-E-E-N, the LSU senior receiver said, eyes adjusting to the annoying fluorescent light.

This is for ESPN Gameday, Green is told. Tripping over this sensitive subject and the right way to ask someone whose family is stuck in their son's apartment for at least a week, the camera crew's questions are somewhat generic, but Green still provides some of the horrific details he has seen on the news or heard about. His tone is respectfully soft.

Suddenly, a crewmember says, let's forget about all that and asks about the season, perhaps not fully aware how winds in excess of 100 mph reduced Louisiana's Saturday passion to trivial games.

As this awkward exchange evolved in the foreground, the most revealing sound bite capturing how Hurricane Katrina figuratively washed away the painted barriers separating players from fans went unrecorded when someone asked Shyrone Carey, How everyone was?

I'm still trying to find out about my brother, the senior from New Orleans said, rushing out of LSU's indoor facility.

Stripped of their weekend armor, members of the LSU football team shared many of the same emotions after Katrina tore through New Orleans and the surrounding area. Green, like many with 504-area-code cell phones, learned about the limits of technology and was unable to contact friends from his Washington Place neighborhood in Avondale until Wednesday.

As soon as you get the phone ringing, you're excited because you're like, Oh, I'm going to get them. Green said. And then that lady picks up and says 'The Sprint PCS customer you are trying to reach is unavailable at this time.' It was pretty hectic for everyb ody trying to get to a loved one.

The water is slowly going down. His family is safe. But looters have left many of the shops Green and his family frequented unrecognizable. Landmarks poking through the flooded streets during news aerial shots led several evacuees from Kyle Williams wife's side of the family to realize their house - near the UNO Lakefront campus - was under water.

I don't think you can tell those guys anything, Williams said. I don't think you can say, 'Hey, I know how you feel.' Because you don't.

It's hard to imagine that that's happening and it's only 50 or 60 miles from us, Williams said, earlier. It's definitely surreal. I can't begin to imagine what it's like for those people that have been coming out by rescue on top of their homes because the rest of their home isn't there, anymore.

Tired of feeling helpless, Williams borrowed a trailer from trainer Jack Marucci and within a day filled it with juice, sports drinks, clothing and pillows as players emptied their apartments and made several good-will visits to shelters in Baton Rouge.

A lot of people just want to talk to you, Williams said. Share their story.

Someone told Williams he waited on his roof for three days before being rescued. Strength trainer Tommy Moffitt was introduced to a man who made shoes out of roof shingles. Others just stared with tired, blank faces - their lives spread out on blankets and air mattresses.

Football is obsolete, right now, in this state, Williams said.

Probably for the next couple of weeks, we don't need to talk about football. We need to take care of those people.

NOTES: LSU senior associate athletic director Dan Radakovich said the school is in the final stages of rescheduling the postponed home game against North Texas, and that announcement should be made today. Athletic director Skip Bertman said LSU and North Texas are working with five to six other programs, hoping to flip-flop dates since the Tigers and Mean Green do not share a common bye week.

Bertman said LSU intends to host Arizona State on Sept. 10, but that relocating the game to Tempe, Ariz., is a possibility depending on campus relief efforts because of Hurricane Katrina.

"Today, we're playing Arizona State. But everyday, something could happen," Bertman said. "We are going to do what is in the best interest of the state and if recovery processes are not complete or there are other issues for which the campus is needed for help, obviously that will take precedent over a football game."

KATRINA: THE STORM WE'VE ALWAYS FEARED

The Times-Picayune

50 CENTS 169TH YEAR NO. 226 SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 3, 2005 HURRICANE EDITION

FIRST WATER, NOW FIRE

Blazes turn parts of besieged city into an inferno

STAFF PHOTO BY ALEX BRANDON

NEW ORLEANS: A chemical plant in the 3400 block of Chartres Street burns after exploding Friday. Given the lack of firefighting resources in a city without water, a potentially greater threat was the fire that erupted in a low-rise sandwich shop nestled among hotels and office towers in the heart of the Central Business District, just yards from the sprawling Harrah's New Orleans Casino.

Bush stunned by condition of New Orleans

From staff and wire reports

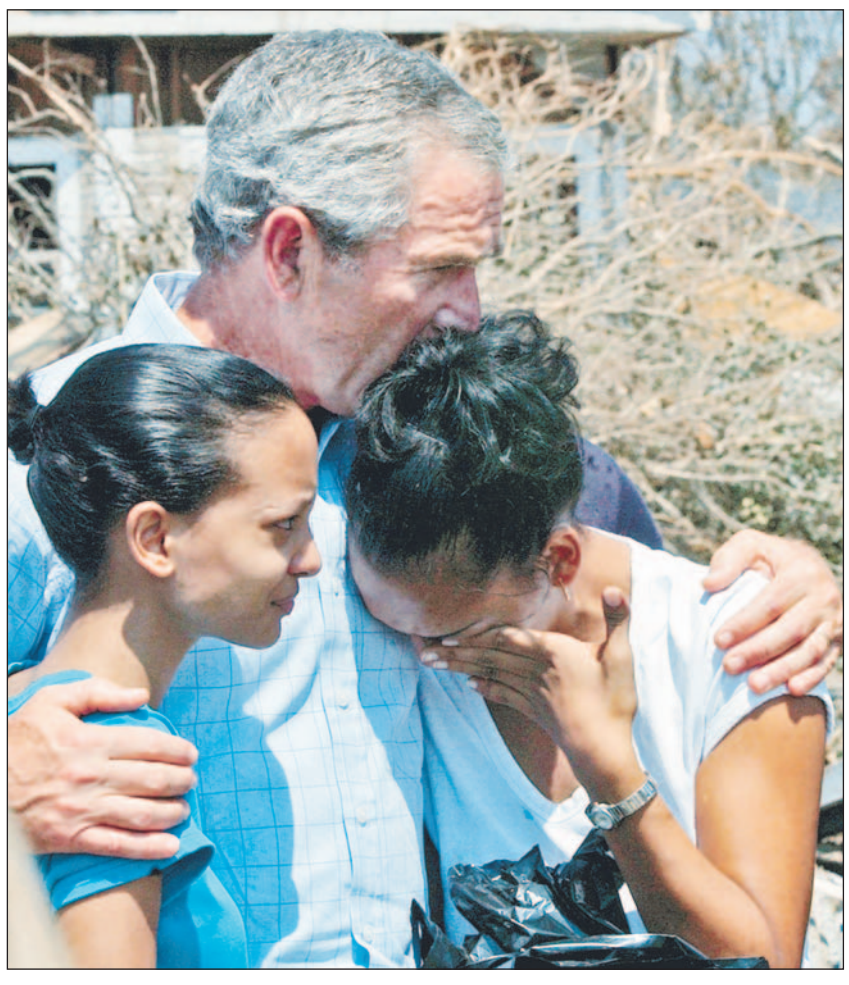
President Bush, who rarely admits failure, made no bones Friday about his disappointment with the federal relief effort along the Gulf Coast following Hurricane Katrina.

With an entourage that had swelled with Mississippi officials picked up during an earlier visit to Biloxi, Bush rode by helicopter to New Orleans Louis Armstrong International Airport at 2 p.m., where the two presidential choppers were met by a delegation of state officials that included U.S. Sens. Mary Landrieu and David Vitter, Gov. Kathleen Blanco, New Orleans Mayor Ray Nagin and Kenner Congressman Bobby Jindal.



The meeting, scheduled for 15 minutes, lasted an hour and was declared "productive" by Blanco.

"The president is starting to grasp the magnitude of the situation," said Landrieu, D-La. Sen. Trent Lott, R-Miss., said, "The president obviously was just stunned" by what he saw.

Nagin, Blanco and Bush then boarded the helicopter and flew over New Orleans.

In a Biloxi stop prior to the New Orleans visit, Bush said the damage was "worse than imaginable," and described the $10.5 billion aid package just approved by Congress as a small down payment for disaster relief.

See BUSH, page 3

AP PHOTO

MISSISSIPPI COAST: President Bush comforts Kim Bassier, left, and Bronwynne Bassier while touring storm-ravaged Biloxi on Friday. Bush flew over Louisiana but did not leave the Louis Armstrong International Airport out of security concerns.

More guns, buses, relief roll into city

By Jed Horne
Staff writer

New Orleans, or what's left of it, awoke Friday to discover that fire had been added to the array of pestilences - floodwaters, hunger, looting and mass death - that have beset the city since Hurricane Katrina's winds ripped it apart five days ago.

The plumes of smoke rising from locations on both sides of the river were offset by the belated arrival of long-promised National Guard units in a bid to further the evacuation and reverse the virtual anarchy that descended over the city as beleaguered and increasingly angry local officials begged for federal assistance.

On a daylong tour of New Orleans and the stricken Gulf Coast, President Bush conceded that the nation's disaster response had been a disappointment and vowed a redoubled relief effort.

"What is not working, we're going to make it right," he said after an initial landing in Mobile, Ala. His wife, Laura Bush, echoed the same theme in remarks during a visit to Lafayette.

There were continued signs of the efforts to restore order.

Guns pointed skyward in the back of troop transport vehicles, Friday's initial deployment of about 7,000

See KATRINA, page 2

Rise in West Nile infections feared

Health workers to flood Gulf Coast, N.O. area

By John Pope
Staff writer

Nearly 500 federal public health specialists will be deployed throughout the storm-ravaged Gulf Coast region in an attempt to ward off a variety of food- and water-borne diseases, but the most serious health threat these areas face will be psychological problems brought on by stress, the head of the Centers of Disease Control and Prevention said Thursday.

Calling Hurricane Katrina "our own tsunami," CDC Director Julie Gerberding said the 24 20-member teams headed for the area will include experts in infectious diseases and environmental health.

They will join about 30 CDC workers already in Louisiana who are helping assess the situation, determine the care patients need and deliver basic materials such as antibiotics, tetanus vaccine and cots for field hospitals, agency spokesman Tom Skinner said.

The state Department of Health and Hospitals has asked CDC to send experts in environmental health, infectious diseases and immunizations, but they will not be needed for a few weeks because the top priority now is finding and rescuing people and getting them to medical care, spokeswoman Kristen Meyer said.

"We haven't seen a lot of diseases because the things that put people at risk are being in floodwater and cleaning up after floodwater," she said. "Most evacuees haven't had a chance to go back home."

To head off a possible outbreak of tetanus in Mississippi, the CDC has sent 8,000 doses of tetanus vaccine to Mississippi, Gerberding said.

Although federal health specialists will work with local personnel in treating a variety of food- and water-borne diseases such as hepatitis A, diarrhea and intestinal infections, the biggest -- and longest-lasting -- health-care concern probably will be psychological problems brought on by stress, Gerberding said in a telephone news conference.

"When you have no home, you have no money, and you have no job, . . . the long-term consequences are overwhelming," she said. "We will have mental-health experts at every location."

These specialists will treat not only patients but also caregivers "because they are affected by the damages and the families" they see, Gerberding said.

Among the CDC contingent will be people who have worked in refugee camps around the world, she said.

More information about hurricane-related health concerns is available at dhh.emergencynews.com.

One particular area of concern, she said, will be the possibility of a rise in West Nile virus infections as a result of the high amount of water that Katrina dumped on Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama -- water that could be breeding grounds for virus-carrying mosquitoes.

Although CDC arguably is the world's foremost public-health organization, Gerberding stressed that its team will be cooperating with state and local health-care personnel to "augment, not replace" them.

"We've got to coordinate surveillance of infections," she said.

Because Katrina was "more like a tsunami than a hurricane," Gerberding said the need for medical help in the devastated region will be vast -- so vast that qualified civilian doctors are being asked to join the CDC teams for what could be a protracted period.

"We're in a marathon, not a sprint," she said.

Floodwater stops short of museum

NOMA's contents emerge safe from storm

By Dante Ramos and Doug MacCash
Staff Writers

The New Orleans Museum of Art survived Hurricane Katrina and its aftermath without significant damage.

But when Federal Emergency Management Agency representatives arrived in the area Wednesday, NOMA employees holed up inside the museum were left in a quandary:

FEMA wanted those evacuees to move to a safer location, but there was no way to secure the artwork inside.

Six security and maintenance employees remained on duty during the hurricane and were joined by 30 evacuees, including the families of some employees.

Harold Lyons, a security console operator who stayed on at the museum, said FEMA representatives were the first outsiders to show up at the museum in days.

They immediately tried to persuade staffers to leave the building. That would have left no one to protect the museum's contents, and no one inside the museum had the authority to give that order, Lyons said as he inspected the grounds.

Museum Director John Bullard was on vacation and assistant Director Jacquie Sullivan had taken a disabled brother to Gonzales.

"We can't just leave and turn out the lights on the say-so of someone we don't know," Lyons said.

The phones inside the museum had failed. Lyons asked a reporter to pass a message to Sullivan as soon as possible.

Interviewed by telephone, Sullivan said she had been in close contact with emergency management officials all day Wednesday. State Police had promised to take her back to the museum at 7 a.m. Thursday, she said.

City Park was littered with fallen trees, but evacuees' cars, clustered around the museum's walls, were mostly unscathed. The museum itself was spared any wind damage, and floodwater had not reached the building. Inside, the museum's generators whirred away, providing air conditioning to preserve the priceless artworks.

Sullivan said museum workers had taken down some pieces in the Sydney and Walda Besthoff Sculpture Garden before the storm.

ATTENTION
MACY*S
NEW ORLEANS EMPLOYEES

Please contact Macy*s offices by calling 1-800-444-8477 or by email at Neworleans.emergency@macys.com

We are anxious to hear that you are safe and how we can stay in contact with you.

Local banks stepping up to assist Katrina victims

ATM fees waived; credit rules changed

By Mary Judice
Business writer

BATON ROUGE -- New Orleans area banks worked Wednesday to bring branches outside New Orleans back into operation and announced financial packages to help customers in the areas affected by Hurricane Katrina.

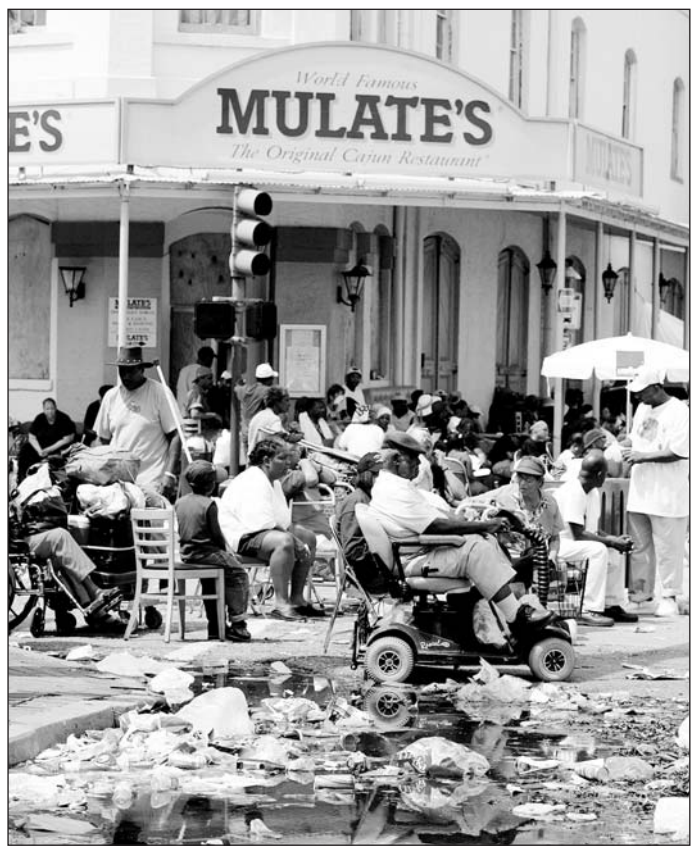
Chase Bank reopened branches in Baton Rouge and Houma as power was restored and rerouted to other centers its auto financing transactions that had been processed in the New Orleans area.

"We stopped collection efforts in the ZIP codes affected and set up financial relief packages,'' said Chris Spencer, Chase spokesman in Baton Rouge.

The bank will waive automated teller machine fees and offer free check processing as part of the package, he said. Also, Chase will work with customers to post transactions that were made in the days immediately before the storm.

On Wednesday, Chase had 28 of its 34 branches in Baton Rouge open for business, as well as its main branch in Houma, Spencer said.

He said the bank's safe deposit banks in the New Orleans area are on the first floor of branches, and the bank does not know the extent of damages of contents.



"The safe deposit boxes are water-resistant, not waterproof,'' he said.

Hibernia National Bank said Tuesday that its operations centers in Houston and Shreveport were being used as data back-up sites and for contingency planning for the New Orleans headquarters.

Regions Bank had 25 of its 29 branches in Baton Rouge in operation Wednesday but not all of the branches had functioning ATMs.

Michael Bannister, Regions spokesman in Baton Rouge, said the branches, which had been operated by Union Planters before Regions acquired it, were connected to a communications line that runs through New Orleans and processes transactions in Jackson, Miss. He said ATMs at 14 branches were not in operation but that the bank is rerouting the affected network lines.

Regions will waive its ATM fees for customers who use machines outside the bank's network, will defer some loan and credit card payments and increase credit limits. He said special rates will be offered on home equity loans and lines of credit.

STAFF PHOTO BY ALEX BRANDON

New Orleans: A hot, hungry crowd of storm victims gathers outside Mulate's restaurant, waiting for a fresh batch of food and water to be distributed by military troops from the nearby Ernest N. Morial Convention Center on Friday.

PAN-AMERICAN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

Pan-American ask all employees and policy holders to contact us toll free Monday – Friday, 8am-5pm, central time at
1-877-939-4550

Operators are available to take your calls and provide information in the wake of Hurricane Katrina.

We are extending a 60 day grace period on premium payments for residents of Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama and Florida.

NOTICE

to ALL POLICYHOLDERS of GENERAL STAR NATIONAL INSURANCE COMPANY
and
GENERAL STAR INDEMNITY COMPANY

We hope you have all safely weathered the storm, with as little disruption to your lives and businesses as possible. If you have suffered a loss that may be covered under your General Star insurance policy, however, we urge you to report the claim to your local agent so we can begin to assist you promptly.

If you can't reach your local agent, contact us directly at General Star.

DURING REGULAR BUSINESS HOURS
by telephone
800 624 5237 or 203 328 5700
or by fax
800 331 0601 or 203 328 5840

AFTER BUSINESS HOURS
by telephone
866 868 7069

GeneralStar
Beyond Security®

General Star Management Company, Stamford, Connecticut
© 2005 General Re Corporation A Berkshire Hathaway Company

IMPORTANT NOTICE TO
ST. PAUL TRAVELERS CUSTOMERS

WE'RE HERE TO HELP.

If you have suffered a loss, please call us as soon as your family and property are safe from further harm.

Our claim services representatives are standing by 24 hours a day, 7 days a week to take your claim.

For Travelers Home & Auto claims, please call
800.CLAIM33
(800.252.4633)

For Travelers Flood claims, please call
800.356.6663

For St. Paul Travelers and Travelers Business claims, please call 800.238.6225

For St. Paul Business claims, please call
800.STPAUL1
(800.787.2851)

St. Paul Travelers employees affected or displaced by the hurricane, please call the Employee Service Unit at 800.441.4378

TRAVELERS
travelers.com
The Travelers Indemnity Company
and its property casualty affiliates
One Tower Square, Hartford, CT 06183

ST PAUL TRAVELERS
stpaultravelers.com
St. Paul Fire and Marine Insurance Company
and its property casualty affiliates
385 Washington St., Saint Paul, MN 55102

HURRICANE KATRINA AFTERMATH

STAFF PHOTO BY KATHY ANDERSON

BELLE CHASSE: National Guard troops arrive at the Belle Chasse Naval Air Station. Soldiers went first to the Ernest N. Morial Convention Center, where they offloaded pallets of food and water, in some cases tossing the supplies at more than 15,000 seething refugees.

Bush: 'What is not working, we're going to make it right'

KATRINA, from page 1

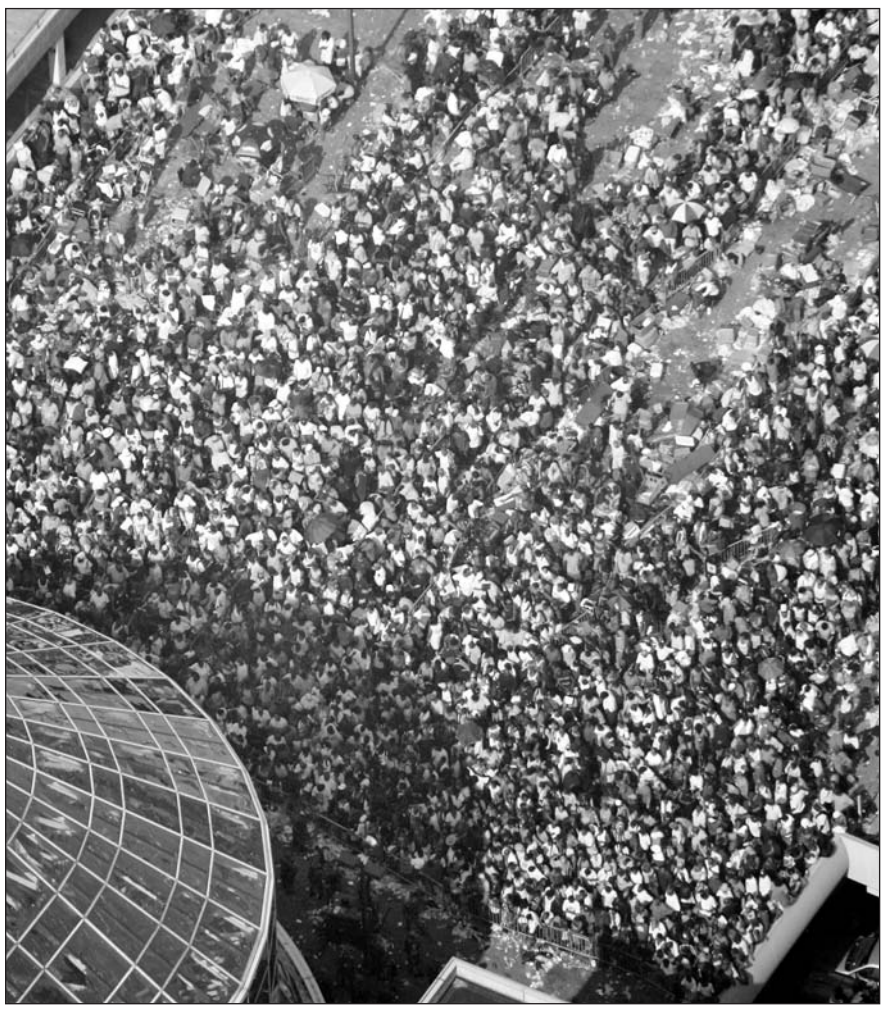
soldiers from all over the country first moved in on the Ernest N. Morial Convention Center, where they encountered a small city of angry and desperate refugees along a boulevard littered with now putrefying corpses.

Soldiers offloaded pallets of food and water, in some cases tossing the supplies at upwards of 15,000 refugees seething from their exposure to subhuman conditions brought on by lack of sustenance and sewerage.

A motorcade of 95 air-conditioned buses broke away from the troop transport vehicles they had been following and made for the Superdome, the city's shelter of last resort, to complete an evacuation that on Thursday had pared back a refugee population that peaked at about 25,000.

The show of force began to yield results, but not without incident. One unit in a five-bus caravan had reached Opelousas when it flipped on its side, killing one passenger and injuring 17 others.



Other convoys carried 4,200 people to airstrips for further evacuation out of the region, and by early evening the Superdome was expected to be empty, Brig. Maj. Gen. Mark Graham, deputy commander of the National Guard's Katrina Task Force, said late Friday afternoon. The Convention Center throng was reduced by 1,000, he said. In addition, a fleet of six small planes - soon to be expanded to a dozen - airlifted 438 patients from city hospitals.

The Coast Guard continued to ply flooded neighborhoods working alongside a private flotilla of several hundred boats to pluck survivors from rooftops, attics and highway ramps and bridges. By Friday, the tally of those rescued by the Coast Guard had topped 4,000, Capt. Sharon Richey said.

If New Orleans was the epicenter of misery and chaos, reports from more remote suburbs revealed that the death and looting was not limited to the region's big city.

With unofficial death toll estimates rising into the thousands, State Sen. Walter Boasso said at least 100 corpses had been collected in St. Bernard Parish, 25 having been tethered together to keep them from floating away.

"We've had people lying in water in the attic for days," Boasso said of the continuing rescue effort.

AP PHOTO

SUPERDOME: Thousands wait to be evacuated Friday outside the Superdome. A motorcade of 95 air-conditioned buses headed for the Superdome, the city's shelter of last resort, to complete an evacuation that on Thursday had pared back a refugee population that peaked at about 25,000.

Amos Cormier, chairman of the governing council in Plaquemines Parish, the finger of land that stretches downriver to the mouth of the Mississippi , arrived Friday in Baton Rouge seeking a long list of supplies, his top request a satellite phone. Other items urgently needed: 50 military police, 50 assault rifles, 50 sharpshooters, dynamite and at least 200 body bags.

Cormier said the lower half of the parish was entirely underwater and that virtual piracy had broken out as looters arrived by boat and began grabbing maritime supplies and even yachts and trawlers - "whatever they can take," Cormier said.

The dynamite would be used to blow holes in the marsh-side levees below Myrtle Grove, hastening drainage of floodwaters, said Cormier, who acknowledged that, as options go, dynamite is less than ideal. The Army Corps would prefer that the levees be breached by excavation to make their rebuilding more manageable. Cormier said that was fine with him -- "if they can get in" with the heavy equipment needed for the job.

Back in Orleans Parish, floodwaters continued to drain from the city into Lake Pontchartrain through breaches punched in the levee system, but the process, even after the now-defunct city pumps begin working, will take 36 to 80 days, authorities said, fine-tuning an initial estimate that the process would take up to two months. Johnny Bradberry, secretary of the state Department of Transportation Development, said the pumps may be working as early as Monday.

To keep high tides - or another hurricane -- from pushing the lake back into the city, Boh Brothers construction company raced Friday to complete installation of sheet metal piling below the Old Hammond Highway bridge over the 17th Street Canal. The waterway between Orleans and Jefferson parishes was the scene of the most spectacular and devastating failure of the city's flood protection system. The breach was attacked by dropping 3,000 pound sacks of sand - 200 of them - into the chasm eaten into the side of the canal by roiling water. Officials said the hole should be plugged by late Sunday or Monday.

Mayor Ray Nagin, meanwhile, predicted that electrical power in the city would not be restored for two to three months. Jefferson Parish also abandoned rosier projections and said residents should not plan to visit the parish Monday, even for the temporary check-up on their homes that had been announced in the immediate aftermath of Katrina's landfall.

Some of the fires that had sent smoke into the morning skies were still burning by late afternoon, and another appeared to have erupted and spread to several houses in the area of Notre Dame Seminary on Carrollton Avenue.

The first of the day's fires, announced by an explosion that rocked a wide area of the city, consumed a warehouse along the levee in the city's downriver Bywater area and spread to a second. State officials with the Department of Environmental Quality flew a helicopter over the building, formerly a storage depot for oil products, and determined that its emissions were not toxic, and fireboats appeared to have brought that conflagration under control by late afternoon.

Given the lack of firefighting resources in a city without water, the potentially greater threat was the fire that erupted in a low-rise sandwich shop nestled among hotels and office towers in the heart of the Central Business District, just yards from the sprawling Harrah's casino. Another fire of undetermined origin sent smoke rising into cloudless morning skies across the Mississippi River on the West Bank of suburban Jefferson Parish, which already has seen an entire shopping mall torched by looters.

The Mississippi River on Friday was opened to closely restricted navigation up to mile 235, the Coast Guard announced, good news for some 90 vessels that have been idled at its mouth. Some of them would be tankers bearing crude oil to refineries and a possible respite in gas prices that soared above $6 a gallon at some stations Friday.

Another statistic on the oil front suggested that the shortages, even with resumed tanker traffic, could be long-lasting. Katrina knocked 28 offshore oil platforms from their moorings; 30 more were lost altogether, industry officials said.

Other economic indicators were comparably grim. The loss attributable to the storm was set at $100 million by Risk Management Solutions and state officials with the Department of Labor were bracing for the worst as unemployment claims, usually at about 4,000 a week, soar to a projected 750,000 all told.

As they have all week, survivors of the holocaust on Friday continued to stagger into cities and towns all around the rim of Hurricane Katrina's arc of destruction, gazing back at their former lives in anger, sorrow and disbelief.

One among the thousands was Mark Perillat, a 49-year-old Bywater resident. After sending his wife and children to Lake Charles, he had stayed on in their home for three days, venturing out repeatedly into flooded neighborhoods by canoe to rescue trapped people and deliver them to overpasses, bridges - anywhere he could drop them. One canoe load, a couple in their 50s, had stood for three days in neck-deep water, he said.

As a cable television station rebroadcast the tearful and bitter Thursday night tirade in which Nagin lambasted federal officials for their lack of effective response and then burst into tears, Perillat cheered the mayor -- "that's my guy" - and then broke down himself.

"Weathering storms, getting people out of the water, that's okay," Perillat said after regaining his composure. "The worst thing is not being able to deal with this on a national level. The government let us down, the whole f----- city."

"If we can't respond faster than this to an event we saw coming across the Gulf for days, then why do we think we're prepared to respond to a nuclear or biological attack?"

NEWT GINGRICH, former House speaker

Even Republicans decrying president's response to crisis

AP PHOTO

LOUISIANA COAST: Marine One, carrying President Bush, flies over parts of Louisiana to tour Hurricane Katrina damage.

BUSH, from page 1

"It's as if the entire Gulf Coast were obliterated by the worst kind of weapon you can imagine," he said.

Bush began the day at the White House where he expressed unhappiness with the efforts so far to provide food and water to hurricane victims and to stop looting and lawlessness in New Orleans.

"The results are not acceptable," Bush said of the breakdown in security that had led to looting and of the failure to make timely delivery of food and medicine to tens of thousands of residents trapped in flooding after the storm.

The president's comments came after Nagin lashed out at federal officials, telling a local radio station "they don't have a clue what's going on down here."

Even Republicans were criticizing Bush and his administration for the sluggish relief effort. "I think it puts into question all of the Homeland Security and Northern Command planning for the last four years, because if we can't respond faster than this to an event we saw coming across the Gulf for days, then why do we think we're prepared to respond to a nuclear or biological attack?" said former House Speaker Newt Gingrich.

He urged Bush to name former New York Mayor Rudolph Giuliani as the White House point person for relief efforts. U.S. Rep. John Sweeney, a New York Republican, also suggested Giuliani, former Secretary of State Colin Powell or retired Gen. Tommy Franks to take charge of the relief efforts.

In Biloxi, Bush encountered two weeping women on a street where a house had collapsed and towering trees were stripped of their branches. "My son needs clothes," said Bronwynne Bassier, 23, clutching several trash bags. "I don't have anything."

"I understand that," Bush said. He kissed both women on their heads and walked with his arms around them, telling them they could get help from the Salvation Army. "Hang in there," he said.

Asked later how the richest country on earth could not meet the needs of its people, Bush said, "I am satisfied with the response. I am not satisfied with all the results."

Amid the lowest approval ratings of his presidency, Bush has other problems besides the hurricane: Gasoline prices have soared past $3 a gallon in some places, and support is ebbing for the war in Iraq.

The White House announced Bush had approved federal disaster aid for Texas and Arkansas, which also suffered hurricane damage. Bush urged people to donate money to the Red Cross and said he would sign the $10.5 billion in federal disaster relief later Friday.

"What is not working right, we're going to make it right," Bush said. Referring to rampant looting and crime in New Orleans, Bush said, "We are going to restore order in the city of New Orleans."

"The people of this country expect there to be law and order, and we're going to work hard to get it," the president said. "In order to make sure there's less violence, we've got to get food to people."

"We'll get on top of this situation," Bush said, "and we're going to help the people that need help."

Bush was accompanied by Homeland Security Department secretary Michael Chertoff. The department, which oversees the Federal Emergency Management Agency, has been accused of responding sluggishly to the deadly hurricane. On the plane ride to Alabama, Bush was briefed on plans for housing the tens of thousands of people displaced by the hurricane.

"There's a lot of aid surging toward those who've been affected. Millions of gallons of water. Millions of tons of food. We're making progress about pulling people out of the Superdome," the president said.

'They just can't ... keep on keepin' on'

Hospitals sick babies sent to Baton Rouge

By Jan Moller
Capital bureau

BATON ROUGE Twenty-eight critically ill infants have been evacuated to hospitals in Baton Rouge after four perilous days at flood-ravaged Charity and University hospitals, the head of Louisiana State University's public hospital system said Friday.

Shortly thereafter, however, an emergency evacuation of an estimated 350 patients that began Thursday morning was halted for the second time in about 24 hours because of what Donald Smithburg, head of LSU's Health Care Services Division, described as a problem with "civil disobedience."

He provided no further description of the problem.

University Hospital had been completely evacuated as of early Friday afternoon. But an estimated 100 patients remained at Charity Hospital, where they've survived without water or sewerage and with dwindling supplies of food, medicine and generator fuel since Hurricane Katrina struck, Smithburg said.

Smithburg, who has had intermittent radio contact with hospital officials since the storm hit, described a situation that grows more desperate with each hour.

"(The evacuation) has to happen today," Smithburg said.

In what Smithburg called one of "the most perverse decisions you can imagine in life," some doctors have been giving intravenous fluids to each other so that they can maintain enough energy to do their jobs.

Several patients have already died. An LSU spokesman said the hospital's 12-body morgue is overflowing and submerged in water. At least five bodies have been stacked in a stairwell outside the morgue.

Hospital officials have been calling for a full evacuation since early Tuesday, when floodwaters began to rise, but only a few ventilator patients had been taken to safety until a helicopter airlift was launched Thursday morning. And the exodus from the eighth floor helipad of Tulane University Medical Center was quickly halted because of security concerns, Smithburg said.

"We had to pull back because they (the helicopters) were taking shots," he said.

Smithburg said the evacuation restarted around 9:30 Friday morning with a mix of private choppers and "heavily armed" Chinook helicopters operated by the National Guard. But hours later, the evacuation again had to be halted because of security concerns. He did not know the exact nature of the threat, but said LSU has asked the State Police for more armed security.

Smithburg said LSU is in the process of setting up a 600-bed hospital in Baton Rouge to treat transferred patients and the flood of evacuees who are expected to need medical treatment. Until then, evacuees are being triaged in New Orleans and sent to existing hospitals in Louisiana and other states.

Smithburg said he hopes that once the evacuation is complete that the physicians and other staff at Charity and University hospitals will agree to help staff the new facility.

"I'm praying that those staff, after they get well-deserved rest, can be deployed to the needy institutions," he said.

He said that with every passing moment that patients don't get evacuated, "people will continue to die. Our heroic staff, they just can't be expected to keep on keeping on."

• • • • • •

Jan Moller can be reached at tpicbr@aol.com

HURRICANE KATRINA AFTERMATH

1,000 National Guard troops arrive

STAFF PHOTO BY ALEX BRANDON

NEW ORLEANS: National Guard troops patrol Poydras Street on Friday. Lt. Gen. Steven Blum, who is coordinating federal relief efforts on behalf of the National Guard, said 7,000 troops will be in place by tonight to help restore order.

'We're getting the troops in as fast as we can'

By Paul Purpura
Staff writer

About 1,000 National Guard soldiers and airmen arrived Friday at the Naval Air Station-Joint Reserve Base in Belle Chasse, which has become the staging area for National Guard troops assisting with recovery efforts in New Orleans in the wake of Hurricane Katrina.

About 1,000 troops had gone through the processing center between 4 a.m. and midafternoon at the Louisiana Air National Guard's 159th Fighter Wing hangar, officials said.

"We're getting the troops in as fast as we can,'' said Col. Mike Lopinto.

After the troops were processed, they were trucked or flown in by helicopter to "the zone,'' military jargon for dangerous areas, said Lt. Col. Pete Schneider of the Louisiana National Guard.

The 1,000 troops come from 15 states, including Arkansas, Texas, Ohio and South Carolina, and were dispersed to various areas around the city, said Army National Guard Col. Ron Stuckey.

"You name it, they're coming,'' he said.

Brig. Gen. Hunt Downer, an assistant adjutant for Louisiana National Guard, said their purpose is to do whatever is needed. "You name it and we'll do it.''

A lot of troops who have been streaming through the air station have been to Iraq and Afghanistan, officials said.

Downer said the joint effort involves Army National Guard, Air National Guard, Navy and Coast Guard. "It's an amazing experience for everyone,'' he said. "We're making history."

Lt. Col Ronald Turk, commanding officer of the Jersey Air National Guard's 108th Security Forces Squadron based at McGwire Air Force Base in New Jersey, said most of his troops specialize in law enforcement, serving as police officer in civilian life. Turk is second-in-command ATF's Nashville office.

He and his people said they were eager to help. "There's a lot of folks hurting right now and we're hoping to help,'' Turk said.

Chief Master Sgt. Vincent Morton of New Jersey said troops are prepared for whatever they might see.

Despite the images of violence and looting, he said, "the majority of folks here are good people. We're here to do a mission.''

The goal is to have 7,000 soldiers and airmen involved in law enforcement in the metro area.

"You will see a massive presence of troops on the ground here,'' Schneider said. "They're coming in, and we're kicking them out and it's not going to stop until we don't need anymore (personnel).''

If there is a unit we need we are going to go out and get civil engineers transportation and security.

Causeway to remain closed until evacuation lifted

Bridge will be good as new within days

By Meghan Gordon
St. Tammany bureau

Despite reports by local radio and the national press, the Lake Pontchartrain Causeway sustained no major damage from Katrina's storm surge, the bridge's general manager said in the first official report of its condition.

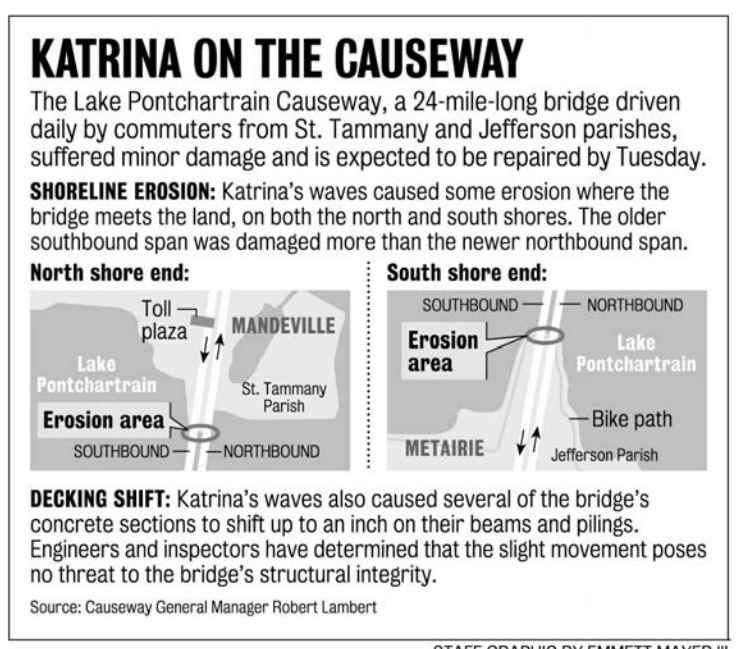
An extensive inspection of the 24-mile bridge between Metairie and Mandeville found two areas of erosion that are expected to be refurbished within days. With the Interstate 10 twin spans in shambles, the news of the Causeway's integrity provides a bright spot to the north shore, where much of the population depends on the sole remaining link to Jefferson and Orleans parishes.

"It's critical in so many ways long-term, but short-term, we are the only lifeline to bring in supplies to keep people on the south shore alive," Causeway General Manager Robert Lambert said.

The bridge's northbound lanes have been used since Tuesday for emergency vehicles shuttling rescuers and critical supplies to the south shore. The southbound lanes remain closed while Boh Bros. contractors repair two small segments of limestone and concrete that connect the ends of the bridge to the shoreline. Lambert said the contractors had the materials available immediately after inspections, and that work should be completed by Tuesday if not before.

Lambert said teams of engineers, including federal and state

Officials, inspected the bridge from boats and from the roadway. They found that several of the huge concrete slabs had shifted up to an inch on the crossbeams that connect to underwater pilings. Lambert said the spans' slight movement pose no threat to the bridge's structural integrity.



"They stopped and checked every inch of this bridge," he said. "There's no questions about the safety, the integrity of the Causeway." Divers also began inspecting the hundreds of underwater pilings Thursday to confirm engineers' conclusion that no large objects slammed into them during the storm.

Lambert said that even though both directions of the bridge would be passable in days, he will not open them to the public until officials in St. Tammany and Jefferson parishes allow evacuees back in.

"For people to come here right now just would be insane," he said after patrolling many flooded and wind-battered neighborhoods in Metairie and Kenner.

Lambert's announcement will buoy out-of-state evacuees from the north shore, who have been starved for information since most telephone communication came to a halt Monday. It also contradicts loosely attributed statements on local radio and national newspapers, such as The New York Times, that reported that parts of the 24-mile bridge were missing.

"Supposedly this one was the big one," Lambert said. "This bridge took it."

STAFF GRAPHIC BY EMMETT MAYER III

'This is the Red Sea - that's what we're trying to cross'

Trek seems endless for exhausted survivors

Waits, worry only add to the horror

By Brian Thevenot
Staff writer

Eighty-one-year-old Vivian Rillieux hobbled down Interstate 10 in a flower-print dress, a cane in her hand to steady her swollen ankles and a rag on her balding head to block the punishing sun.

All around her marched a sea of Hurricane Katrina refugees, some so dehydrated they could no longer sweat. The lucky ones pushed shopping carts with food and drinks. Others lacked shirts, or even shoes.

Below the elevated expressway lay a scene of devastation much like the one that nearly killed Rillieux in her eastern New Orleans home.

Rescue boats motored down Canal Street, where the water was nearly to the tops of the thoroughfare's iconic palms and streetlights. Ahead in the distance, people trudged through polluted waters on Poydras Street to get to the Superdome, while helicopters, including at one point Air Force One, circled overhead.

When Rillieux learned that almost no neighborhood in the city had escaped unscathed - even St. Charles Avenue had taken on water - she buried her head in her hands.

"The city is gone," she said.

"Betsy was nothing - nothing - compared to this," said Rillieux's husband, Ernest, 82.

The couple walked amid thousands of refugees who streamed to the elevated expressway, one of the only safe places in a drowning city.

Rillieux made her trek Wednesday, and the interstate has continued to fill up with increasingly desperate refugees, far outnumbering the amount of buses and supply trucks to feed and house them.

On Thursday and Friday, rescue workers had some success bringing food and water to the stranded masses lining the busy highway - now transformed, for thousands, into a lifeline of escape from rising waters.

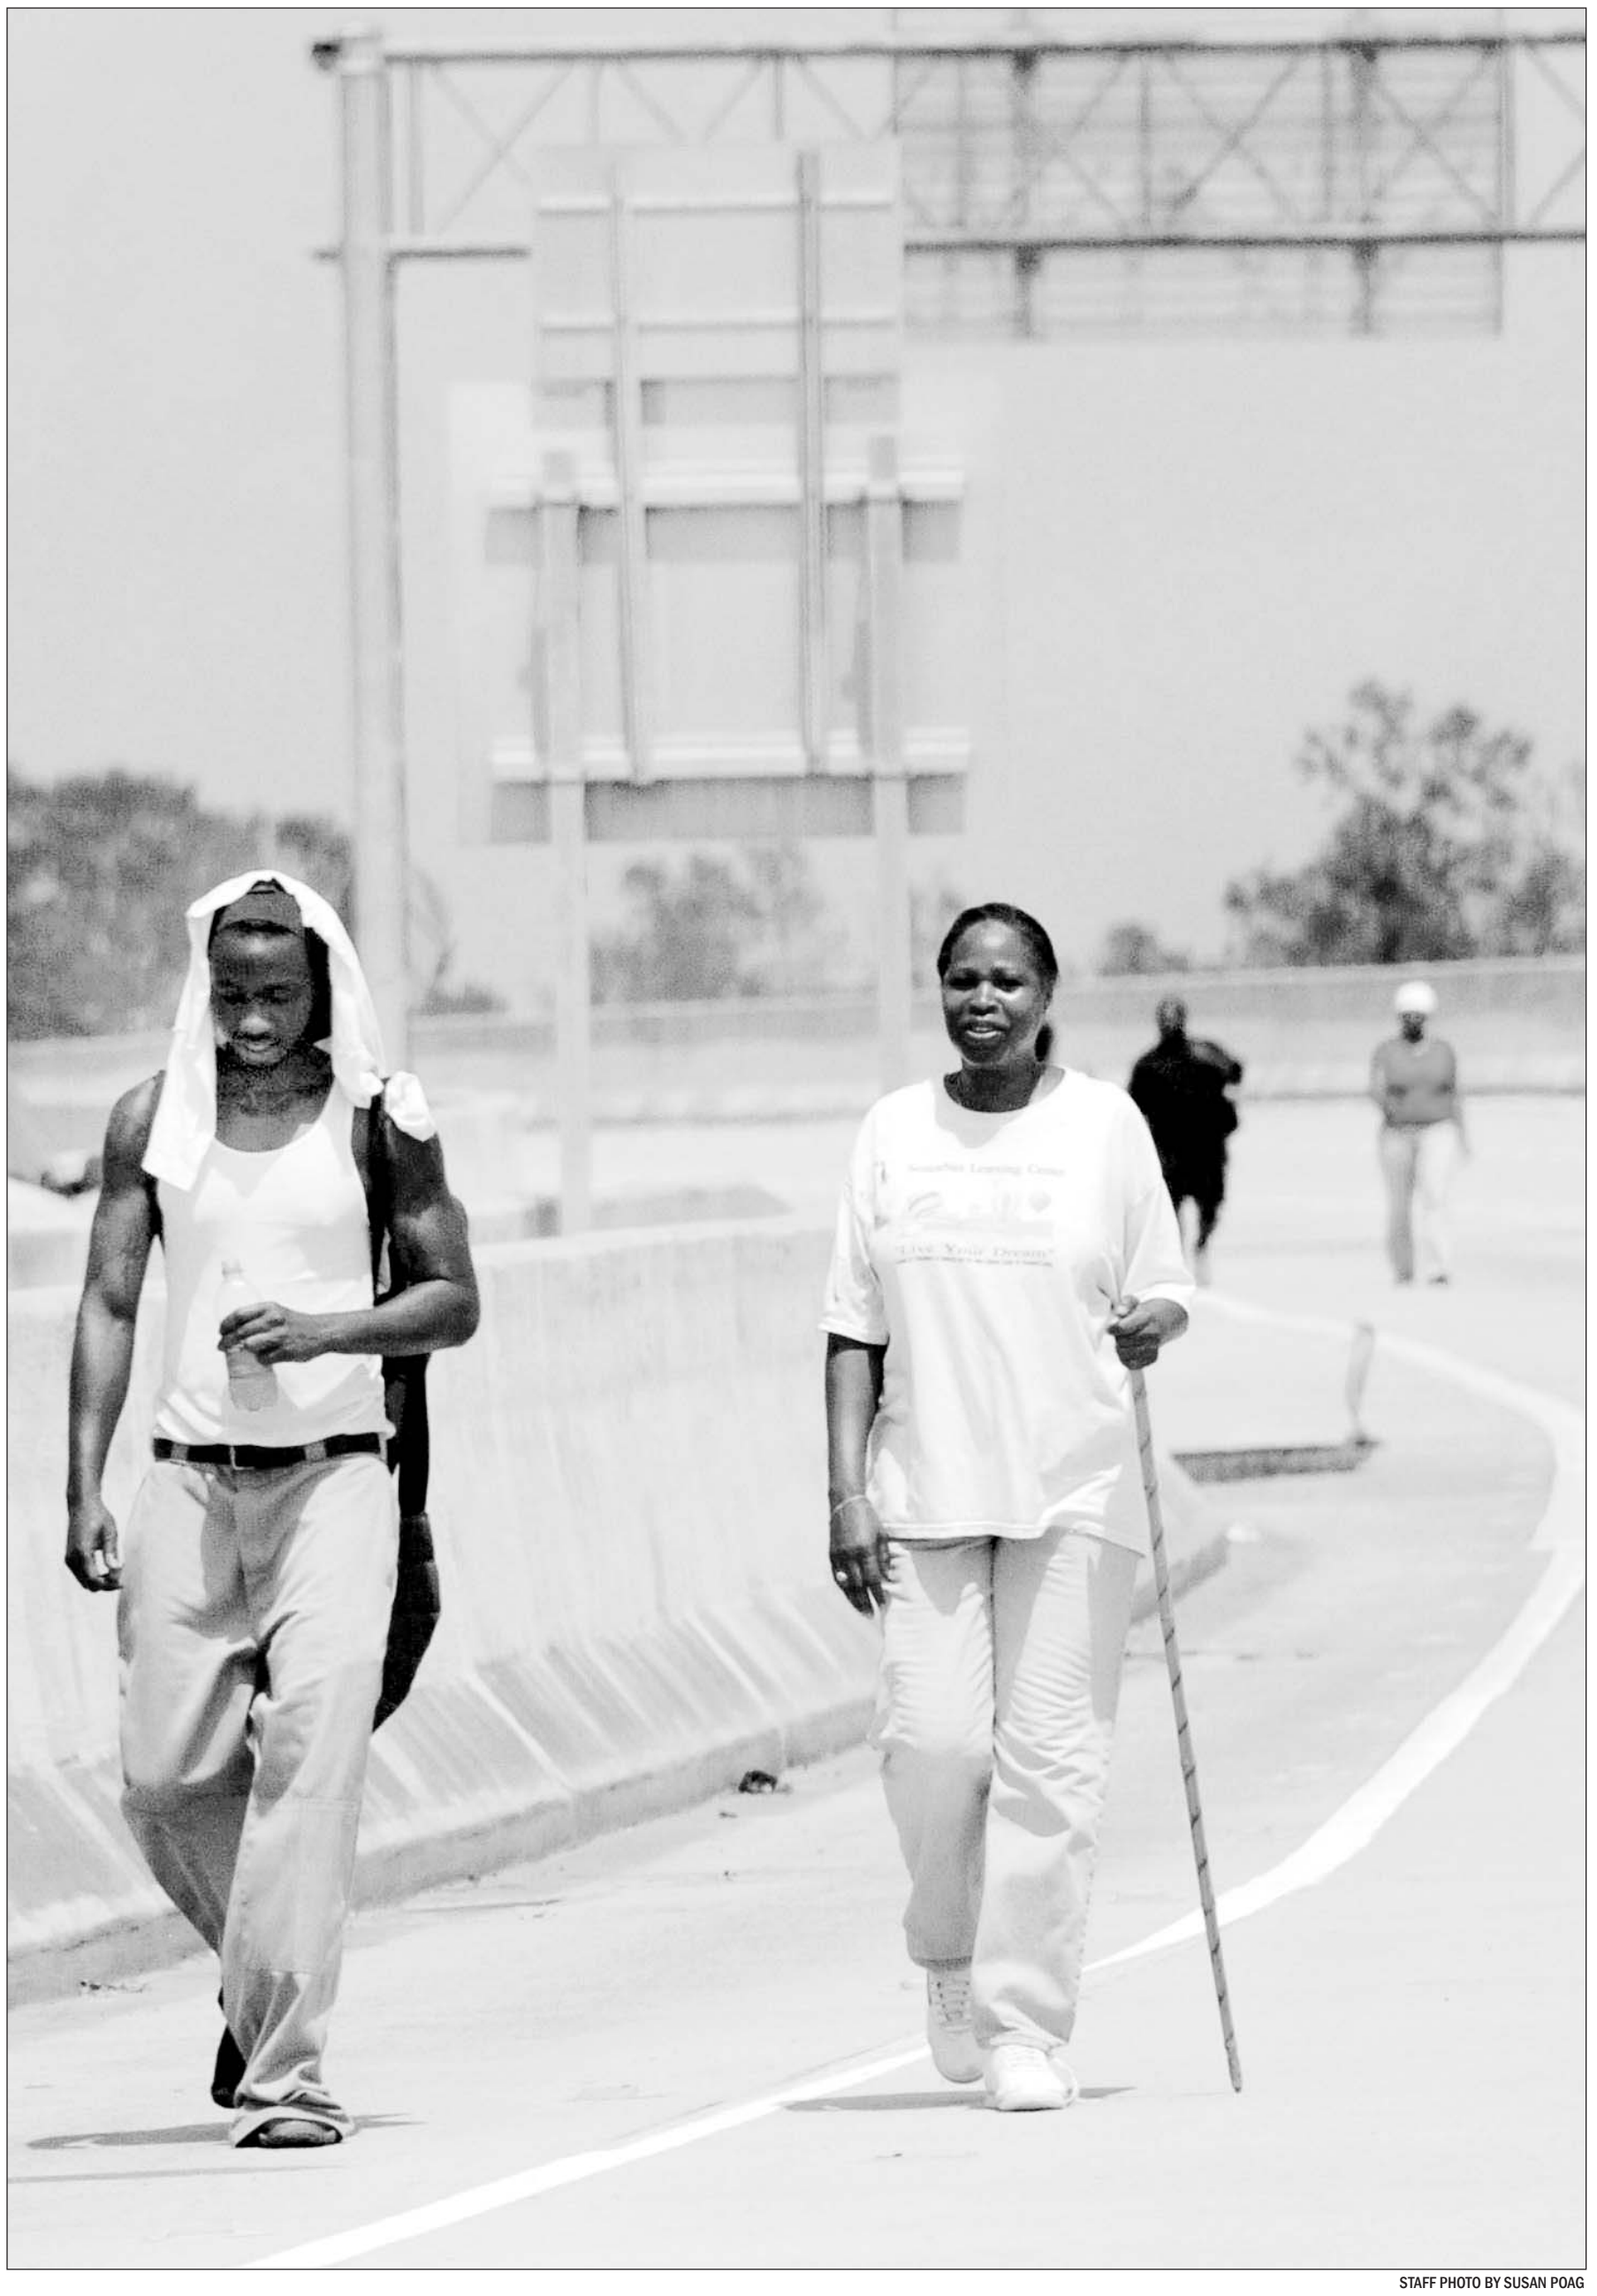
Further west Friday, on I-10 at Causeway, a similarly horrifying scene unfolded, according to broadcast reports, with just a few helicopters plucking mere handfuls of people from the huge crowds standing behind metal barriers. The aim was to bring buses to get them, but none had arrived, even five days after Katrina drowned their homes.

As Rillieux trudged down the highway, even the few rescue workers and volunteers on the elevated roadway had little or no food or water to offer.

What bothered the crowds more was the utter lack of basic information: No one could tell them where to go for help. Some considered the Superdome, which they had heard was a shelter, but abandoned that plan upon hearing the rumors of suicides, killings and piles of excrement overflowing in inoperable toilets, and a mass evacuation from that building.

The miles-long trail of suffering on the interstate underscored the biblical proportions of Hurricane Katrina.

"This is the Red Sea - that's what we're trying to cross," said Earl Miller, 57. "This is a mass exodus, like the Israelites fleeing Egypt."



One key difference: The flood victims could see no promised land. They wandered, dazed, toward the Dome, or the West Bank of Jefferson, or toward Metairie, desperately seeking someone to tell them where to seek help.

After being trapped for days in their homes by water, the thousands of survivors faced a second horror of uncertainly and unbearable toil, scraping for minute-to-minute survival. Still consumed with rescue efforts and quelling looting and violence, disorganized police, fire and rescue teams from all over the state offered little food or water and no plan for evacuating the flood victims.

A few yards in front of Miller, a family of 16, all wearing donated red T-shirts, marched west, asking periodically where they could find safe passage. They lived out of one shopping cart.

Grandmother Margie Houston, 57, walked alongside toddlers and teen-agers while nursing a knee that had endured three operations. Two days before the storm, she had been released from the hospital after a bout of pneumonia and heart palpitations. The family had walked for a day after spending two nights trapped by high water in the attic of their eastern New Orleans home.

"We slept on the interstate," said Errol Houston, 25. "We're just trying to make it. But we don't know what to do or where to go."

STAFF PHOTO BY SUSAN POAG

NEW ORLEANS/ALGIERS: Shelton Bruno walks with his mother, Janice Pierre, across the Crescent City Connection spanning the Mississippi River on Wednesday, The pair lives in the B.W. Cooper housing development in New Orleans and evacuated because of rising water. They were finding their way to a relative's house in Algiers.

Further east, a group of fire trucks parked on the highway under heavy guard from out-of-town police. They waited there for boats to return from a rescue mission that had pulled 130 people out of a building near Delgado Community College. The heard shots fired under the bridge, and officers in black flak jackets carrying M-16s and shotguns began crawling and ducking around vehicles, peeking up to scan the buildings below for a shooter. No one could tell if the officers had been targeted, or if the shots had hit anyone in the flooded area under the highway.

At the easternmost passable point on the highway, just before the I-10 high-rise, a large group of adults and children cooled themselves in the tainted waters covering the interstate.

Barbara Eurings, 34, had been at her sister's apartment in the St. Bernard public housing development when water rose to the second floor.

Standing on a fire escape waiting to be rescued, she saw a National Guard boat pick up seven people. One man in the middle of the boat seemed nervous, she said; he panicked and starting shaking the boat.

"He flipped over the boat," she said. "Four people drowned."

Back closer to the Dome, Kenneth Fuller, 42, pressed his body against a concrete barrier, seeking the tiny bit of shade it provided. Below him in the water on Claiborne Avenue, a woman screamed frantically at friends across the flooded street, telling them not to try to come join her.

"It's too deep! Don't try it! Too deep! Too deep!"

Despite the chaos around him, Fuller smiled and pronounced himself "blessed" - surprised at being alive after two days trapped in high waters in St. Bernard Parish. He had walked from the St. Claude Avenue bridge after being rescued by boat.

"I spent two days trapped in 20 feet of water," he said. "I feel like I want to cry, but I'm going to be strong. ... I'm blessed, truly blessed. God saved me."

Rillieux, like Fuller, maintained an astonishingly sunny - and thankful - disposition. Sitting on the curb, she gazed up at her neighbor, Mary Sterling, a member of the family that had floated the Rilleuxs in a plastic kiddie pool to relative safety in the second story of their home.

"If it wasn't for them, we would have drowned in that house," she said.

"They're a wonderful family. ... They kept saying, 'You need help? You want something to eat?' They're strangers, but it's like they're friends."

Mom, newborn are forced to leave husband behind

Two families escape ravages of Katrina

By JOSH PETER
Staff writer

HOUSTON -- One of the oddest sights of the week: The irrepressible look on the faces of Monika Renee Sheppard and her husband, Christopher.

Even in their floodwater-soaked clothes, the Orleans Parish couple expressed gratitude for surviving their dicey escape. Especially as Christopher carried their 16-month-old son, Jackson, apparently in perfect health despite the family's ordeal.

"We had a generator running until (Wednesday) morning,'' said Monika, 31, a classical singer at Loyola University and a cantor at St. Louis Cathedral.

That's when they broke out the family pirogue and, with Christopher pushing the wooden boat, the Sheppards traveled through the floodwaters for about a mile. That's when the U.S. Coast Guard spotted the family, picked them up and dropped them off at the Causeway, where buses were taking evacuees to the Astrodome.

"We were one of the first 200 people there and all of a sudden it's just like people just showed up from everywhere,'' Monika Sheppard said. "You would be in line to get on the bus and they would swarm around you like sharks, kicking and pushing everybody from the middle back. So the babies were getting crushed.''

Worried about their son, the Sheppards moved to the back of the line and waited 24 hours before finally getting onto a bus. The only reason they finally got on board was their son got sick and a medical official escorted them through the throng and onto a bus.

But the chaotic scene wasn't the most disturbing thing the Sheppards witnessed.

"Vandalism beyond your wildest dreams,'' Monika Sheppard said. "I mean, carts from the Quality Inn filled with alcohol and cigarettes, clothes, food, candy. It was just desperation.''

Bypassing offers from looters, Monika Sheppard said she bartered and scavenged for food as the family's supply ran low. She said she found a bottle of Hennessy cognac on the street and traded it for six bottles of water and a bag of chips.

"Then I scavenged,'' she said. "A lot of people who got rations opened it up and ate the candy but they didn't know how to prepare the meal, or couldn't read, or couldn't figure it.''

Shortly after arriving at the Astrodome, they were about to get a hot meal. But the Sheppards attributed their huge smiles to something else.

"We've still got him,'' Monika said, patting baby Jackson on the back.

On his way out of the Astrodome, Joshua Gleason bent over and picked up a wooden cross.

Worried about his fiancØe and their 3-day-old daughter, Gleason, 21, stuffed the wooden cross into the front right pocket of his shorts. He already had a gold crucifix around his neck and was counting on divine intervention. But at the moment, he headed out of the Astrodome in need of a cigarette.

Three-day old stubble covered a sunburned face framed with short blond hair; his blue eyes looked weary. A pack of beef jerky poked out of his left pocket.

Four days from his 21st birthday, Gleason described the horror of Hurricane Katrina as reports suggests his St. Bernard home, like most of the others in the parish, is under water - and possibly destroyed beyond repair.

Yet his home was of little concern as he searched in vain to find out where his newborn daughter was three days after his fiancØe, Tammy Stephens, had given birth at the St. Bernard Parish Prison, where the family had taken shelter.

Their exodus from New Orleans started Monday when the couple awoke to find about 18 inches of water outside their home. Within 24 hours, with the home submerged under about five feet of water, Gleason said he broke into a nearby house and took food and water before the family moved to an occupied house down the street.

Rescued by a boat, Gleason said, the family's odyssey continued when they were moved from shelters at Chalmette High School, the St. Bernard Parish Courthouse and, as water continued to rise, the prison.

It was inside a holding cell Tuesday night that Stephens gave birth to the couple's first child, a daughter. The memory made Gleason swell with anger.

"The conditions the baby was born in were disgusting,'' he said, describing blood that soaked several sheets and backed up the toilet after a doctor delivered he baby. "I was holding the IV, wiping my fiancØe's head down with a wet rag. I held her down when the doctor broke her water bag and put the baby in position (for delivery).

"She didn't have no epidural, they didn't have no pain medicine, nothing.''

Gleason said he was worried about the birth because Stephens suffers from epileptic seizures. But a day later, medical officials arrived and said they had to take Stephens and the newborn by helicopter to a hospital. Authorities said they had no room for Gleason because they also were transporting a man injured in a crane accident. And when Stephens objected to leaving without her fiancØ, Gleason said things got ugly.

"They told her if she didn't go that they were going to take the baby away,'' Gleason said. "They threatened her as much as they could to get her in there.''

Eventually, Stephens gave in and was taken to an undisclosed hospital.

Gleason ended up on a bus that took him to the Astrodome. There, his frustration only grew.

"I'm definitely aggravated that they can't tell me where my fiancØe is, or my baby," he said, adding that he's posted notes inside the Astrodome and asked friends and officials for information to no avail. "Nobody ain't seen her. Nobody's telling us really nothing because they don't know nothing.''

But when asked what he and his fiancØe had named their first child, a grin crept across Gleason's face.

The original plan was to name her Haley. But that changed after the hurricane hit New Orleans.

"My fiancØe wanted to name her Katrina because her water broke on the day of the hurricane and the day after the hurricane she had her," Gleason said. "I don't know if she's got it on the birth certificate yet, but that's what she told the doctor."

AP PHOTO

The floor of the Astrodome in Houston is covered Friday with cots and people who escaped from Hurricane Katrina. Texas opened two more giant centers for victims of Hurricane Katrina after refugees filled the Astrodome to capacity.

Texas is new home to many from N.O.

Reliant Center To handle overflow from Astrodome

By Tara Young
Staff writer

HOUSTON - As the second day of what will most likely be the largest emergency relocation effort in U.S. history came to an end Friday, Texas Gov. Rick Perry asked Texans and evacuees alike for their patience and understanding.

"Nobody said it's going to be easy," Perry said at the Reliant Center. "Nobody said it was going to be done overnight."

Friday afternoon Perry had joined forces with national, state and local officials to revamp the state's emergency relocation plan that will essentially make Houston a transfer hub for New Orleans refugees.

Changes were made after officials said they determined late Thursday that the Astrodome would only be able to house 15,000 residents, as opposed to the 25,000 it was expecting.

As a last resort measure, officials decided to open the Reliant Center, a convention facility, which is adjacent to the Astrodome, to shelter an additional 8,000 evacuees. Another 8,000 evacuees will be housed at the George R. Brown convention center downtown, officials said.

The Astrodome will now serve as dispatch site for future buses. On Friday, some buses already were being re-routed to shelters throughout Texas and other neighboring states as officials worked to prepare and open the two new sites in Houston.

At noon, there were more than 20 buses waiting to be processed into the site. So far, 22,000 evacuees have arrived at the Astrodome. Of that number, 15,000 have remained on site, another 4,000 have been sent to local shelters, while the remainder were waiting Friday at the site to be processed, officials said.

Late Friday afternoon, Perry said Corpus Christi and Austin had agreed to take 5,000 residents each. Smaller cities in the area also were gearing up to accept evacuees.

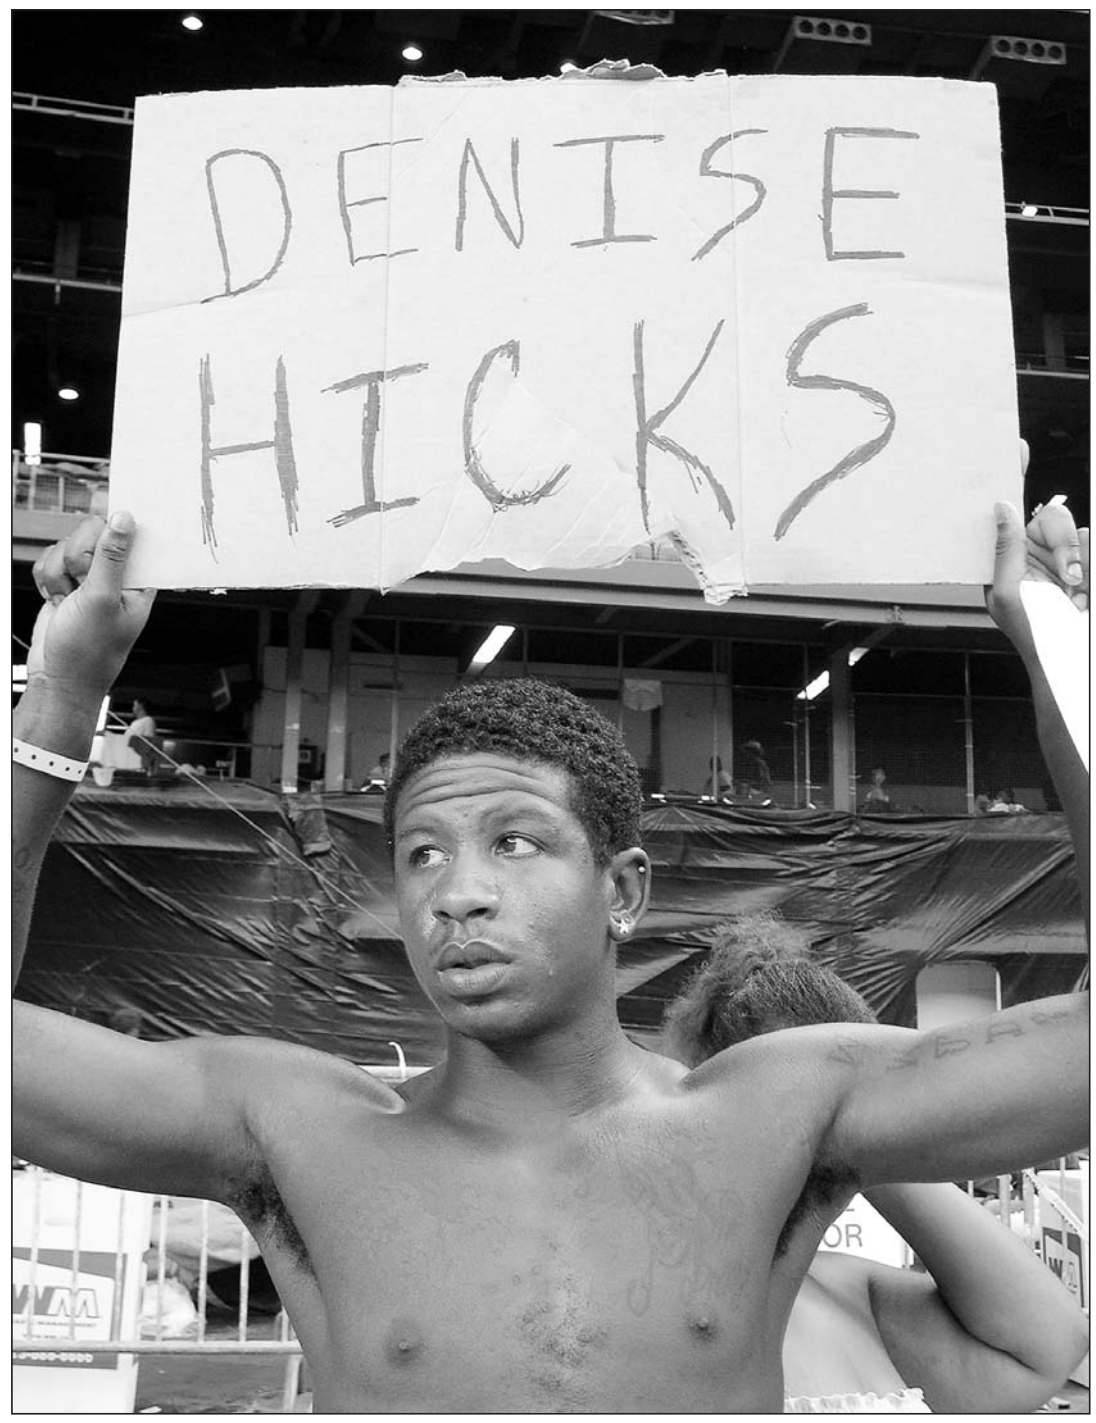
Michigan has agreed to take 10,000 New Orleans residents.

Other states including West Virginia, Arkansas and Oklahoma were preparing to accept the overflow, Perry said.

Officials reached out to other states after officials became saturated late Thursday and were forced to close the gates leading to the Astrodome to more than 30 buses after the fire marshal determined the building had reached capacity.

It was a move that prompted Houston Mayor Bill White to overrule the fire marshal and work harder to find more space for the Louisiana residents.

"You do what you have to do for people when they are in trouble," White said. "There was no emergency plan for the destruction of one of the largest cities immediately to our east."



Of the thousands of people who have been processed into the site, there have been two deaths, said Dr. Kenneth L. Mattox, of Baylor University, who is helping to run the emergency clinic.

The two people who died were older with pre-existing medical conditions, Mattox said.

Friday afternoon there were only 30 doctors on the site. Each physician was seeing about 100 to 150 patients an hour. "We are working this out as we go," Mattox said.

Harris County Judge Robert Eckels who is charged with running operations within the county said the problems being experienced are expected given the size of the operation.

"We talked before about hiccups along the way," Eckels said. "That (Thursday night's saturation) hiccup occurred for a couple of hours and those people are now in a shelter."

AP PHOTO

John Barber of New Orleans holds up a sign with his cousin's name on it as he walks around the Houston Astrodome on Friday. Barber was evacuated from the Superdome.

1 killed when last bus of Dome evacuees overturns

From staff reports

The last bus in a caravan of five buses evacuating people from hurricane-ravaged New Orleans overturned Friday afternoon on Interstate 49 in St. Landry Parish just outside Opelousas, killing one passenger and injuring 17 others, some critically, Louisiana State Police said.

The bus, with 50 people on board, was traveling north from Lafayette when it suddenly veered across the median and the southbound lanes, turning onto its right side of the Creswell Lane exit ramp, according to a state trooper following the procession.

What's left to hang onto? Each other

AP PHOTO

Troops help an injured woman near the Convention Center. An increased military presence has restored a measure of order and brought survivors a modicum of food and water.

Survivors band together as families forged by unforgettable event

By Trymaine D. Lee
Staff writer

Amid a city torn asunder by hunger and violence, and reports of exuberant desperados exploiting the tragedies heaped on their neighbors, some of the city's new homeless have kept each other alive the way New Orleanians often have: as family.

Without much assistance from city, state or federal governments, flood victims in some of the most dire circumstances have depended on each other for rescue, food, water and medicine.

Jerrolyn Robertson, 33; her father, Jack, 53; and 5-year-old daughter, Kayla, were rescued from the B.W. Cooper housing complex by a civilian in a fishing boat Tuesday. Now, like so many others, Jack Robertson said all they have left to hold onto is the hope of better days and a sense of tragic unity.

"We were in the projects for days, and no one else came to help us," he said. "We owe that man our life. We are in this together, all of us."

While heavily armed military men and women stood guard along a short stretch of the interstate, shirtless young men pulled case after case of bottled water from the back of a Kentwood Springs delivery truck left on a closed exit ramp leading to nothing but dark flood waters.

"Sometimes people will give you some of what they have," said Jerrolyn Robertson. "All my daughter has had to eat for two days is crackers. But at least she has eaten."

The three of them took refuge from a light afternoon rain Thursday in a white Chrysler abandoned on Interstate 10, joining hundreds of others who had trudged to the highway in hopes of getting picked up.

In other parts of town, knots of neighbors huddled together for safety and mutual comfort, hoping authorities would get control of the city soon and that relief of some form would arrive.

On the porch of Mary Castillo's two-story Uptown double, a group of New Orleanians ranging in age from 9 to 79 did their best to buoy one another's spirits. Most of the group were neighbors, sticking to their still-dry neighborhood. But two were evacuees. Castillo had found Roscoe Shaw, 79, and his wife, Marilyn, 76, awaiting a rescue bus at the Loyola Street post office.

Castillo was drawn to the pair because of their age and the angry red sunburn blooming on Marilyn's shoulders, arms and toes.

"When I saw her, I saw my deceased mother," she said. "I had to help."

Fearing that the elements would claim them before the bus did, Castillo gathered the couple into her car and brought them to her home.

Unfortunately, they were not yet out of danger. Marilyn, a diabetic, was out of insulin, and Roscoe relied on a blood thinner, which also had run out.

The group had foraged a bunch of ripe wild bananas from the yard across the street, and they collected the light rain in a clean trash can. In time, they planned to search the neighborhood for medication, but that was the extent of their plan. They seemed adamant that they were neither evacuating nor splitting up.

Parts of Old Metairie, Airline still under water

Jefferson getting better grip on security

By Matthew Brown and Michelle Krupa
Staff writers

Authorities appeared to gain the upper hand Friday on the rampant disorder that had plagued parts of Jefferson Parish since Hurricane Katrina after a sharp security crackdown coupled with dwindling numbers of people still in the parish.

Checkpoints manned by police armed with assault rifles and shotguns were widespread. Hundreds of New Orleans residents who sought refuge in the parish -- and were blamed by officials for much of the chaos -- were transferred to a staging area on Interstate 10 in Metairie until they could be transported out of the area.

The increasing stability, particularly on the West Bank, allowed stalled recovery efforts to finally begin moving forward. Entergy crews who had threatened to pull out were given added police protection, officials said. Emergency management officials set up their first food distribution centers four days after the storm.

The clearing of debris from clogged streets also began in earnest, prompting Parish President Aaron Broussard to say he would stay with plans to open the parish Monday at 6 a.m. In some areas of East Jefferson, however, that scenario remained in doubt as Parish Council Chairman Tom Capella said Monday was it was too soon for people to return.

Parish and state workers were constructing a mud and riprap levee on Airline Drive east of Causeway Boulevard and were laying sheet pilings north of the Hammond Highway bridge Friday to hold back floodwaters that poured out of Lake Pontchartrain through a levee breach at the 17th Street Canal in New Orleans, officials said.

That break flooded parts of Old Metairie and areas around Airline Drive, which rely on still-inoperable pumps at the 17th Street Canal to remove water from neighborhoods.

"I did a tour on Monday afternoon, and those areas were dry," Capella said. "Now parts of Old Metairie and Airline Highway look like a river."

Floodwaters up to 7 feet deep remained in areas of Old Metairie near the Orleans Parish line. And parish officials said even if residents can return they shouldn't cancel their out-of-town hotel rooms.

"Please extend them at least until the next weekend,'' Broussard said. "The horror story of this devastating hurricane is just beginning; when people return they will have no food, no water, no air conditioning and no place to buy things,'' he said.

Meanwhile, parish leaders worked from a makeshift headquarters in Baton Rouge, declaring that the patchwork force of police from Gretna, Harahan, Kenner, Westwego and the Sheriff's Office, along with sheriff's deputies from Georgia, had staved off the terrifying street violence that had taken hold of New Orleans.

"They've split this parish up and locked this parish down," Capella said. "We're doing everything we can to protect the homes of the people who have evacuated. Your home will not be looted."

But Councilman-at-large John Young, who rode out Katrina at East Jefferson General Hospital in Metairie, said a top Red Cross administrator told him Friday afternoon that the relief agency, on advice from the Department of Homeland Security, planned to hold off at least 24 hours on delivering aid to East Jefferson and to West Jefferson Medical Center in Marrero so that 30,000 National Guard troops could secure the storm-ravaged New Orleans area.

"We need to get them water and food," Young said, adding that hospital employees and their families were sharing resources with refugees and the infirm and that a number of dialysis patients died at Kenner Regional Medical Center in Katrina's aftermath.

Provisions also were needed at shelters at Bonnabel High School in Kenner, Worley Middle School in Westwego and C.T. Janet Elementary School in Marrero, he said, although it was unknown how many people had taken refuge at those sites. Both hospitals, despite low provisions, were operating Friday with electric power. Water service also had been restored to West Jefferson.

But some residents are working on moving out of the New Orleans region altogether. Keith Hill of Waggaman said his cousin and about 30 family members were preparing to resettle in Houston after evacuating there before the storm. His cousin's sister-in-law has already found a job as a nurse and another family member is looking for construction work.

"They have about eight kids they already enrolled in school because they don't know the duration of this," Hill said. "It could be six months."

"If they've got new jobs and their kids are going to school they've already got roots. What are they going to return to? They've already lost everything."

In Terrytown, the fire that threatened to destroy Oakwood Mall was brought under control Friday at 1:30 a.m.. Firefighters who had abandoned the blaze Thursday afternoon returned that evening after increased water pressure and renewed hope that the structure could be saved, said chief Bryan Adams of the Terrytown 5th District Volunteer Fire Department. About 10 stores inside the sprawling shopping center were completely lost.

Adams said the fire appeared to have been set by looters. Firefighters entering the building were "bumping into looters."

On Friday, as firefighters boxed up a jewelry store's merchandise, Councilman Chris Roberts predicted it would be many months before Oakwood can reopen - a sharp blow for the local economy. He estimated that 500 to 700 jobs could be temporarily lost and said it would drain millions of sales tax revenues from the parish.

For Adams, who had broken out in tears after calling his men back from the fire Thursday, it was a victory.

He said "my guys busted their tails. We decided we were not going to give up the shopping center to nobody."

Important Hurricane Katrina Insurance Claims Information for Liberty Mutual Customers

Liberty Mutual claims professionals are on duty 24 hours a day. If you sustain damage to home or auto, call 1-800-2-CLAIMS (1-800-225-2467) or visit www.libertymutualinsurance.com to report your claim.

To assist policyholders and help facilitate prompt claims service, our catastrophe teams also will be on-hand in the areas hardest hit by the storm.

Remember – if you lose power, keep circuit breakers turned off and electrical appliances, equipment, and computers unplugged until all power is restored to prevent further damage from a surge.

Liberty Mutual

"It is vitally important we get these students into a safe environment where learning can go on."

Meg Casper
State Department of Education spokeswoman

Schools swamped by displaced students

Properties across state have been sold, rented

By Steve Ritea and Coleman Warner
Staff writers

Many of the more than 135,000 school students displaced by Hurricane Katrina are swelling enrollments in other districts across the state and thenation as families rush to relocate from the ravaged New Orleans area.

Louisiana education officials said they couldn't begin to speculate on what will remain of public school districts in Orleans, Jefferson, St. Bernard and Plaquemines parishes.

"It is vitally important we get these students into a safe environment where learning can go on," said state Department of Education spokeswoman Meg Casper. "These kids need some stability."

Archdiocese of New Orleans officials said they are looking into opening satellite campuses to serve far-flung Catholic school students from New Orleans, as refugee families swamped Baton Rouge and Gonzales parochial schools with applications.

In communities across the state, real estate agents report selling and renting every property they've had listed. One Baton Rouge agent, asked about rental openings, said the closest available property she had is in Little Rock, Ark.

A spokeswoman for Lafayette public schools said 1,469 displaced students had enrolled in public schools there by Thursday evening after school staff visited several shelters, including a Red Cross shelter at the Cajun Dome.

In East Baton Rouge Parish, 300 students registered for classes in just four hours Thursday morning at one shelter, an official said.

Casper said the department has been fielding hundreds of calls from districts in other states as far away as Ohio and Wisconsin as they begin enrolling New Orleans-area students.

Meanwhile, state officials are struggling to quickly channel funding for those students into the myriad places where they'll soon be attending schools. Casper said some refugee students have already started classes in other districts.

Tai St. Julien, a spokeswoman for East Baton Rouge Parish Schools, said officials there are contacting churches, businesses and charities seeking donations of money or classroom space to handle the massive influx of students expected there.

Districts taking in refugee students reported calls from individuals or entire school systems across the nation pledging donations of school supplies, money and other types of support.

East Baton Rouge School Board President Patricia Haynes Smith said there are a variety of options for accommodating so many new students in a district that had 46,000 prior to Katrina. Evacuated students could attend school in the afternoon while others go to school in the morning, she said, or students could attend school on alternating days.

Smith also said a federal court agreed earlier this week to lift enrollment caps instituted several years ago by court order in the system's long-standing desegregation case.

Lafayette Schools spokeswoman Justine Sutley said simply notifying evacuated parents about where their children will be attending school could be an equally large challenge since "not everybody has a cell phone and not everybody has a stable location."

In Ascension Parish, assistant school superintendent Donald Songy said getting children to schools is of substantial concern since 42 of the district's school buses are being used in the evacuation effort in New Orleans.

Teachers from the New Orleans area are also relocating, with Lafayette taking in applications from 80 teachers and an assistant superintendent in Ascension Parish reporting a "stack" of applications from evacuated teachers. Cynthia Costello, a sixth-grade math teacher at New Orleans Charter Middle School, said she has been more focused on volunteer teaching assignments than locating another job. She traveled to the Astrodome in Houston, where she was unable to provide makeshift classes for evacuees because of "chaos" there.

At the same time, three officials from the turnaround firm tasked with righting Orleans Parish public schools' troubled finances managed to get inside district offices in Algiers on Thursday, aided by a police escort, to get backup tapes from the district's computerized payroll system.

Steve Alschuler, a spokesman for Alvarez & Marsal, said that information will be uploaded to a working computer so Orleans Parish schools can process payroll checks.

It is still unclear how that money will get to system workers, he said, since checks cannot be mailed and some banks are unable to process direct deposits.

Catholic schools in the Diocese of Baton Rouge, covering eight civil parishes, were scrambling Friday to process registrations from storm refugees. The schools, some of whom were still facing power outages caused by Katrina, were trying to give the families a warm welcome, though cautioning it will be difficult to absorb all of the Catholic school students who arrive.

"We're trying to not turn down anyone," said Sister Mary Michaeline, superintendent of the 32-school Catholic district, which served 16,000 students before the hurricane. How many it may ultimately serve is unknown.

The displaced students can begin attending Baton Rouge Catholic schools when they reopen Tuesday if their registration papers are complete, she said. The Baton Rouge parochial schools may employ some displaced teachers but "we want to find out how they're handling their salaries and contracts" in the New Orleans archdiocese system, Michaeline said.

Before the storm, the Archdiocese of New Orleans served more than 50,000 students in seven civil parishes, but some of the archdiocese's 108 schools in suburban areas where there was less destruction may be able to reopen quickly, said the Rev. William Maestri, schools superintendent.

Maestri said he hopes many of the New Orleans archdiocese's schools can reopen in January, and he stressed: "We are not giving up on Orleans Parish."

New Orleans and Baton Rouge Catholic school officials said they will work to ease the financial burden of school changes by families that have already paid tuition for the year, but it wasn't yet clear whether tuition already paid will be credited toward charges at the new schools.

Maestri said that, in addition to temporarily relying on Catholic schools in Baton Rouge and other cities to educate New Orleans students, the archdiocese may open "satellite campuses" of its own across Louisiana, as well as in other states. Details of the initiative had not been ironed out Friday, but Maestri will hold a meeting with principals and teachers from the New Orleans parochial schools at 10 a.m. Wednesday at the Catholic Life Center in Baton Rouge.

Ingrid Franc, 41, evacuated to Baton Rouge with her 11-year-old daughter. Franc, a resident of the Faubourg St. John neighborhood in New Orleans, said two different Catholic schools accepted the application. One of the schools was relieved when Franc informed them that her daughter would not attend, saying its sixth-grade openings had evaporated as new families streamed in.

Franc said her daughter had "a lot of trepidation" in attending a school where there are no familiar people, but the staff and other students at St. Thomas More Catholic School quickly put her at ease.

"They were terrific, very welcoming, smiling, organized," the mother said. "When she left, she had a smile on her face and said, 'I like it there.'"

Among other private schools in New Orleans, efforts are being made by members of the Independent Schools Association of the Southwest to collect details through e-mails on the whereabouts of displaced families, so that they can consider enrolling in other private schools with similar missions.

An effort by St. Martin's Episcopal School in Metairie to arrange for night-school classes at Episcopal High School in Baton Rouge was under way, although details haven't been announced.

"We recommend that, until St. Martin's is up and running again, our families enroll their children in an Episcopal school where you are currently residing," the St. Martin's Web site said. It reported that the Southwestern Association of Episcopal Schools, including schools in Shreveport, Monroe, Lake Charles, Lafayette and Baton Rouge, has urged its members to "make themselves available to all Episcopal school students from the New Orleans area, and has asked that they absorb as much of the cost of tuition as they possibly can."

Anyone interested in employment, registration or donations in East Baton Rouge Parish can call (225) 226-3764 or (225) 226-3406.

Volunteer Ascension, a group providing aide in that parish can be contacted at (225) 644-7655.

New Orleans school system employees can get more information about their jobs at (877) 771-5800.

SMOKE ON THE WATER

NEW ORLEANS: A ship lists to the port side against the levee in Algiers as smoke rises from a 9th Ward fire.

PHOTO BY TODD MELANCON

Victims can get relief from bills

Evacuees must decide which ones to pay

By Mary Judice and Gwen Filosa
Staff writers

Banks and financial institutions this week began announcing packages that allow customers in storm-affected areas to delay a variety of payments without penalty.

Lenders are offering moratoriums on house notes. Credit card companies are pledging to allow customers to postpone payments for two months or more without penalty, and the country's Big Three automakers said they will allow consumers to postpone car payments.

Fannie Mae, the federally chartered company that has helped millions of first-time home buyers acquire loans, is giving "mortgage relief" to borrowers in Mississippi, Louisiana, Alabama, Florida and other states facing hardship as a result of Hurricane Katrina. The agency will suspend mortgage payments for up to three months, reduce payments for up to 18 months or - in the most severe cases - create longer loan payback plans.

"What matters most to hurricane victims in those first few days after a storm hits is basic safety and survival, not concerns about making their next mortgage payment," said Pam Johnson, senior vice president at Fannie Mae.

The help comes as thousands of New Orleans area customers displaced by Hurricane Katrina struggle with questions about which bills to pay - and how to pay them - in a city where all financial institutions are shut down for the foreseeable future.

For some, the question is whether to continue making rent or mortgage payments on an uninhabitable dwelling. For others the issue is how to send payments when there is no postal service.

Freddie Mac also offered mortgage relief in locations declared "major disaster areas" by President Bush. "Our goal is to help families affected by Hurricane Katrina to keep their homes," the company's chairman, Richard Syron, said.

The state Attorney General's office is helping insure that storm victims are protected as well.

The office will contact the three credit reporting bureaus - Experian, Equifax and TransUnion - to inform them that state law prohibits them from reporting nonpayment of rent on the credit report of a storm victim. Nonpayment reports can lower an individual's credit score.

Other state agencies are also working to protect consumers.

The state Office of Financial Institutions has urged financial institutions to extend repayment terms on loans, restructure debt and reduce late fees on past due loan payments.

The banking department's web site, www.ofi.state.la.us will provide links to federal regulatory sites which will provide contact information for the affected financial institutions.

Sidney Seymour, chief examiner of the state Office of Financial Institutions, said there is no law providing forebearance on mortgage payments and it will be up to individual institutions to provide relief. There is no law providing protection from the fees and penalties imposed by credit card companies, either.

"There is no immunity for not paying your credit cards," said Alys

Cohen, a staff attorney for the National Consumer Law Center in Washington, D.C. "The rules have always been, if you don't pay you get in trouble."

Consumers should contact their credit card companies to see what relief will be offered.

Chris Spencer, spokesperson for Chase Bank, said consumers who have questions about credit card, mortgage or loan payments should contact a branch bank in the area where they have evacuated to.

"The branches are crowded around Baton Rouge,'' he said. Chase also has a branch bank across from the Astrodome in Houston, where busloands of evacuees have been taken.

He said the bank will soon announce a disaster loan program.

For those financing automobiles, the major automakers are beginning to announce relief programs.

General Motors said it will "work closely on a case-by-case basis with all its impacted customers in auto finance, insurance and mortgage units."

Car insurance company Geico announced it had "catastrophe teams" ready to help victims file claims. Like the Federal Emergency Management Agency, Geico and other companies offer online claim forms or toll-free numbers for customers to use.

More power to them: 6,000 utility workers are here

Airport, refineries are first to be restored

By Keith Darce
Business writer

The mammoth job of relighting metropolitan New Orleans was being accomplished one utility pole at a time Friday afternoon.

A crew of about 30 power utility workers from Kentucky spent the day restoring power to parts of Norco. They were among the more than 6,000 local and out-of-state utility workers spreading out across southeastern Louisiana in the wake of Hurricane Katrina.

Electricity was flowing again to some Jefferson Parish emergency facilities, Louis Armstrong International Airport in Kenner and to five oil refineries in the region, an important step toward restoring gasoline production at the plants that supply nearly 16 percent of the national fuel supply.

Most homes and businesses in New Orleans and surrounding suburbs don't have electricity services and won't for weeks, utility managers said.

Public officials and utility managers continued to urge evacuees to stay away from the area.

"People who left don't need to come here now," said Cleco Corp. spokeswoman Francesca Phoenix.

The Kentucky crew, on contract with Entergy Corp., began repairing a string of five utility poles along Apple Street holding a main power distribution line that feeds about 600 homes and businesses in Norco.

Several Entergy line workers assisted the crew.

Norco resident Lionel Perret served the workers a lunch of shrimp pasta and jambalaya in Styrofoam bowls from his home on Apple. Inside, his wife and daughter cooked more food taken from their powerless freezer before it spoiled.

The Kentucky workers said they were glad to be working in St. Charles and afraid of going into New Orleans without assurances that the lawless atmosphere that has reigned there for days has been stemmed.

With most telephone service still out in the area, the workers were isolated from their families back home who have been watching news reports about violence in the city.

"Our families want us to come home," said Shannon Gilbert of Corbin, Ken. But the workers said they will stay until the restoration effort is completed.

Crew members are working 16 to 17 hours a day and spending nights without electricity at an Airline Highway motel. They couldn't say when power would be restored to their motel.

"We go day by day," said Cody Mason, of Poplar Grove, Ken. "Hopefully we will have power today, at least for a hot shower."

A few blocks down Apple Street, Bobby Lodge was running a toaster, refrigerator and fan off an extension cord connected his neighbor's generator across the street.

"We're getting by," he said.

Lodge said he rode out the storm in his home after evacuating his family to Baton Rouge. He had stayed home for several other hurricanes, but next time he will evacuate. "I stayed for Andrew and some little ones. (Katrina) will be the last one," he said.

Katrina's power was frightening, Lodge said. "I could stand on my back porch and scream at the top of my lungs, and not hear myself."

Living without electricity is uncomfortable, Lodge said, but he was more bothered by soaring gasoline prices that had hit some gas stations in the area.

Lodge said he paid $4 a gallon for gas at a Shell gas station on Airline Highway between LaPlace and Reserve to fill his neighbor's generator.

His complaints to the store clerk about the high price were shrugged off, he said.

"I asked her how she felt about stealing from people, and she said she had no problem because they were only accepting cash," Lodge said.

• • • • • •

Contact Keith Darcé at nolapaperboy@cox.net.

St. Bernard rescue efforts continue

Plaquemines request to blow levee denied

By Susan Langenhenning and Ed Anderson
Staff writers

More than 10,000 people in St. Bernard Parish have been rescued since Tuesday, and the race is on to reach thousands more there and in neighboring Plaquemines parishes, home to some of Hurricane Katrina's worst flooding.

In Plaquemines Parish, Parish Council Chairman Amos Cormier sought permission Friday from the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers to dynamite the Mississippi River levee at Myrtle Grove to relieve flooding in the lower half the parish, a proposal quickly shot down by the Corps.

Cormier declined to estimate the number of people killed by the hurricane, but he requested the state provide the parish with 200 body bags.

"It seems like a good number to ask for,'' he said.

Rescuers also snagged more than 500 people off rooftops and levees, officials said. Three people were confirmed dead, and more deaths are expected. And at least more people need to be rescued as soon as possible, said Jesse St. Amant, director of the parish's emergency operations center.

Cormier also requested that 50 military police officers, 50 assault weapons and 50 sharpshooters be sent to the parish, where reports of looting of marine vessels are rampant.

The parish, from Buras south, is wiped out, officials said.

Cormier said marine vessels in the area that survived the storm are being looted, while others are being taken.

"We have looters coming in by boat,'' he said.

Cormier's request to dynamite the levee to relieve flooding was met with disapproval by the corps, which is responsible for levee maintenance and construction.

"We will have a crater over which we would have no control,'' said Brig. Gen. Robert Crear, of the corps. "Absolutely not.''

Meanwhile, in St. Bernard Parish, officials said the race was on to rescue many people still trapped in flooded homes and shelters.

"We have had people laying in water in their attics for days,'' said Sen. Walter Boasso, who represents the parish. "I need land transportation. I need to get a deuce and half.''

Since Tuesday, some 200 boats operated by the Department of Wildlife and Fisheries and private volunteers have been plucking stranded St. Bernard residents from their homes and bringing them to the Chalmette boat slip, where they wait in a warehouse until they can catch ferries to Algiers, Boasso said. From there, they have been transported to Algiers and then bused to shelters in DeRidder and Dallas, he said.

"We're constantly rescuing people," said Boasso, who visited St.

Bernard Thursday night. "People on the West Bank also are hearing about the buses, so we're helping them, too.''

He estimated that more than 10,000 people have been resued from St. Bernard, which has a population of about 66,000.

Chalmette Refining and the Creole Queen, which is docked on the river, are serving as bases for parish emergency operations, he said, adding that one floor of the refinery even had air conditioning.

"Our whole parish is on lock down. All entrances and exits are guarded," Boasso said, adding that residents who evacuated should not try to return. The state Department of Transportation and Development is trying to set up portable boat ramps so additional boats can assist in the recovery.

The senator, who owns Boasso America Corp., a liquid bulk shipping business, said privately owned barges and tug boats have been lined up to bring in additional supplies to St. Bernard and Plaquemines Parish, which he described as "completely devastated from Buras on down."

"We're getting ready to fly over to see where we can get the barges into (Plaquemines)."

Boasso said almost all businesses and homes in St. Bernard have been destroyed, including his own house. His company's 200 employees are "spread out all over the country," but he has set up essential personnel in Houston.

Geologist says Katrina ripped up La. coastline

Talks surface on how to save La. coast

By Mark Schleifstein
Staff writer

Louisiana coastal restoration officials began brainstorming with officials from the Army Corps of Engineers on Friday about how to protect the New Orleans area and other communities in southeastern Louisiana from another catastrophic hurricane and restore its coastal wetlands at the same time.

They're trying to quickly hammer together a plan that could be thrown into an expected supplemental congressional appropriation that's needed to pay the cost of Katrina rescue and recovery efforts, said Randy Hanchey, deputy secretary of the Louisiana Department of Natural Resources.

Sidney Coffee, coastal adviser to Gov. Kathleen Blanco, confirmed that the talks began Friday.

Late Friday, corps officials announced they are beginning to breach levees to drain water from Chalmette, flooded because of failures of levees along the Industrial Canal.

Backhoes mounted on marsh buggies and draglines mounted on barges will cut breaches in the levees, including one along the Mississippi River-Gulf Outlet between the Bayou Bienville and Bayou Dupree floodgates and another near the Caernarvon Freshwater Diversion Canal.

Breaches of two ring levees in Plaquemines Parish, one on each bank of the river, will soon follow, the corps announcement said.

Corps officials already have said that protecting New Orleans from a Category 5 storm would cost at least $2.5 billion. The proposed Morganza-to-Gulf hurricane protection levee being considered for authorization during this term of Congress, is estimated to cost $670 million, but would only protect parts of Terrebonne, Lafourche and Jefferson parishes from a Category 3 storm, just like the existing levees around the New Orleans area.

Congress also is considering a $1.2 billion proposal to begin restoring the coastline, a process estimated to eventually cost $15 billion.

"We're trying to put together a package recommending a comprehensive hurricane protection and costal restoration program that will provide a much higher level of protection, with the restoration of critical land features in the coastal zone that provide surge protection," Hanchey said.

"How this will be received, we just don't know," he said. "But you can't look at hurricane protection any more from the microeconomic, one-city point of view any more. If one is concerned about economic justification about a project like this, that question has been answered."

Hanchey said

the preliminary plan is to ask Congress to allow the corps to skip the preliminary cost-justification steps of these projects that often take as long as five to 10 years.

"We need to accelerate the way the funds are provided and move directly to design and construction," he said. "We need to be starting today."

State and federal officials have been delayed in determining how much damage the Category 4 Katrina has done to coastal areas because manpower, boats, planes and helicopters all have been pressed into service to rescue people in New Orleans.

A flight by Coffee and other coastal officials at dusk Thursday, however, indicated that as much as half of Plaquemines Parish was still underwater.

While it's still unclear whether the wetlands there have been destroyed, Coffee said the view was similar to maps drawn by the state to show what the coastline would look like in 2050 without a restoration program.

Asbury Sallenger, a coastal geologist with the U.S. Geological Survey's St. Petersburg, Fla., laboratory, has been able to fly photographic missions over the eastern Louisiana coastline and the coasts of Mississippi and Alabama during the past few days to measure Katrina's damage.

He said the Chandeleur Islands have been ripped asunder, and look worse than they did after Hurricane Georges in 1998 and Tropical Storm Isidore and Hurricane Ivan in 2002.

Meanwhile, state Department of Environmental Quality and the Louisiana Oil Spill Coordinator's Office are trying to determine the extent of a major oil spill at mile marker 22 on the Mississippi River near Venice.

DEQ spokesman Darren Mann said it's still unclear whether the oil is leaking from a pair of holding tanks that have been described as holding either 800,000 barrels of oil each or 2 million barrels of oil each, he said.

Coffee said there were a number of smaller oil spills near platforms all along southern Plaquemines Parish.

How much oil is in the water, and exactly where it comes from will have to wait until officials can get to the area by boat, he said.

Meanwhile, Louisiana Department of Health and Hospitals officials say floodwaters inside levees in St. Bernard and Jefferson parishes and New Orleans are a toxic mix of bacteria contamination and hazardous chemicals.

Exactly what chemicals might be in the water is not yet known, said Environmental Protection Agency Administrator Stephen Johnson in a phone interview from Washington.

"It's too early to speculate," Johnson said. "We haven't even gotten to the point where we're able to assess what's there or not there."

Emergency preparedness experts have long warned that floodwaters in New Orleans could be contaminated with everything from the household chemicals beneath kitchen and bathroom sinks to hazardous chemicals in businesses and factories to gasoline and diesel fuel leaking from underground storage tanks. Above-ground tanks also were expected to add to the mix as they floated free from their supports, breaking piping as floodwaters rose.

Contaminated water already is being pumped into Lake Pontchartrain, where it will make its way along the south shore, out the Chef Menteur and Rigolets passes and into the Gulf of Mexico. Equally contaminated floodwaters from St. Bernard Parish also will end up in coastal wetlands, all of which are home to the state's lucrative oyster industry and other fisheries.

Johnson said the Federal Drug Administration and Department of Health and Human Services will assist in making sure no contaminated seafood reaches the public in the months to come. The state Health Department also will assist in that effort.

Health Department spokesman Bob Johannessen said triage units treating evacuees haven't seen telltale rashes on legs or other bare skin that would result from exposure to toxic chemicals. He said bacteria in the water could have gotten into wounds, and the problems that might cause could take some time to show up.

Federal and state officials continue to search from the air for chemical and oil leaks, but a detailed inspection also has been delayed by the diversion of personnel to rescue efforts.

"Our first priority is to assist and make sure people are safe and we are actually saving lives," Johnson said.

"We have 69 watercraft on the scene and thus far, emergency response personnel have rescued 500 people," he said. The EPA also is providing 50 workers to conduct environmental assessments of construction sites for temporary housing that will be built during the next few weeks for displaced residents, he said.

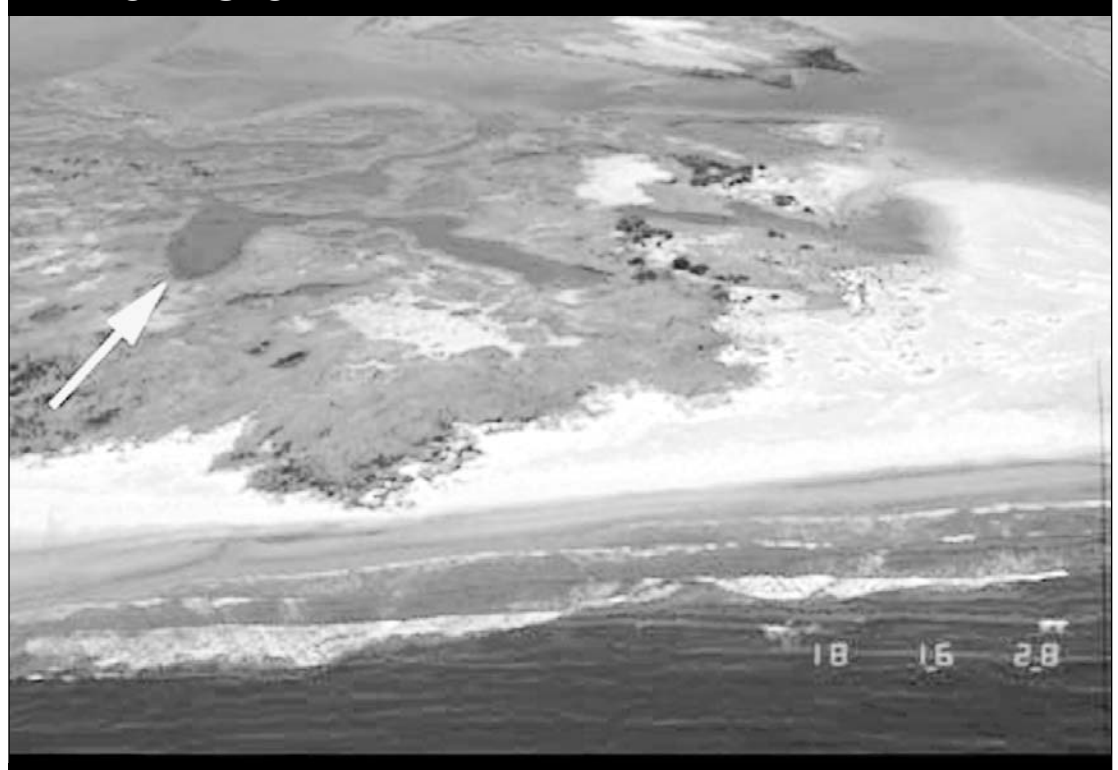
An EPA plane equipped with sensing instruments flew over a warehouse fire on a Mississippi River wharf in New Orleans Friday and found no evidence of toxic materials, Mann said.

The agency also is working with the corps in preparing a plan to deal with the vast quantity of storm debris left in Katrina's wake.

"We will be assessing the debris material to see if it is indeed hazardous," Johnson said.

Johnson said he was unaware of the unique problems that debris would present if it is infested with Formosan termites, but said that would be added to the list.

When South Carolina officials stored debris from Charleston's older neighborhoods in empty lots on the outskirt of town after Hurricane Hugo hit the Formosan termite-infested area, the termites were spread to new areas, officials there said.



Entomologist Kenneth Grace of the University of Hawaii said it's likely that floodwater may result in a reduction of termite nests in the New Orleans area, but that even long-standing stormwater won't kill all of the damaging insects. That's because their underground nests are likely to contain pockets of air, and they also have nests in the upper trunks of trees above the floodwaters.

And he warned that moving building debris around was likely to spread the insects to areas not yet infested, just like in Charleston.

• • • • • •

Mark Schleifstein can be reached at mersmia@cox.net

BEFORE STORM

AFTER STORM

NOAA PHOTO

CHANDELEUR ISLANDS: In this before-and-after view, the devastating erosion caused by Katrina can be seen 40 miles offshore.

Mortgage records may be drowned

By Greg Thomas
Real Estate writer

Thousands of lawyers in the metropolitan area have lost their files, their clients and their offices, but one of the biggest legal ramifications of Hurricane Katrina's flooding waters is the probable loss of real estate records dating back to the early 1800s.

The records, which include titles, mortgages, conveyances and liens, were stored in the now-flooded basement of City Hall on Poydras Street.

In 2002, employees of Register of Conveyances Gasper Schiro began the tedious process of entering the records into computers, a $700,000 process that could have been contracted out and accomplished quickly but was instead done slowly by his staff to save money.

It's unclear how much of the information has been digitized or whether the computerized information is stored safely. If either the original records or the digitalization is lost, it will be a major mess, said Southern University Law Center Professor Winston Riddick, who teaches real estate law.

While it will be a tedious process to fix, and it can be fixed, it will be a major headache that could take years. The records involved date back to 1827, with the earliest recorded by hand in Spanish and French.

According to the American Center of Real Estate Lawyers, or ACREL, the loss of the records could be devastating to the local real estate industry.

The process of restoring the information could be incredibly tedious and create havoc for homeowners who will be filing insurance claims, said Professor Riddick. While he expects insurance companies to honor claims by owners who have copies of their insurance policies, the potential for delays and other hassles is very real.

New Orleans real estate attorney Marx Sterbcow of Marx Sterbcow Law Group said Friday that the loss of the records, stored in the musty, moldy basement of City Hall, may be just the tip of the iceberg when it comes to storm-related problems for Louisiana attorneys, citing a memo e-mailed to Louisiana lawyers by Southern University Law Professor Michelle Ghetti.

"Many ACREL members have been in touch with us to express concerns for colleagues in the region. Members have been generous with offers of office space housing and other support," Ghetti said.

Real estate records aren't the only ones affected. Ghetti estimates that as many as 6,000, or two-thirds of the state's attorneys, have lost offices, files and other documents critical to civil and criminal legal cases. Several court buildings were flooded by Hurricane Katrina, including the basement in the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals and the Louisiana Supreme Court building.

For City Hall records, Sterbcow said, "it's the mortgages that's going to be ugly. To put it mildly, how are you going to be able to prove if you own a piece of property if your records are gone? How are you going to be able to prove you have a mortgage, or one is paid off?"

Records for the 24th Judicial District in Jefferson Parish are probably in much better shape than the records in Orleans Parish, Sterbcow said.

"Jefferson Parish sounds like they're going to be ok for mortgages and conveyances,'' he said.

SPORTS

Saints home opener at New York

Team, league still working to set rest of schedule

By Mike Triplett
Staff writer

SAN ANTONIO - The Saints will play their "home" opener at Giants Stadium in New Jersey on the weekend of Sept. 18, the NFL announced Friday.

The exact date and time of the game will be determined later, according to a statement by NFL commissioner Paul Tagliabue.

The location of the Saints' final seven home games also will be determined, according to Saints general manager Mickey Loomis and NFL spokesman Greg Aiello.

That first home game - a Sept. 18 date with the New York Giants - was the most pressing need. The Saints were not scheduled to play at home again until Oct. 2 against the Buffalo Bills.

Perhaps by then, Tiger Stadium in Baton Rouge will be more prepared to accommodate the Saints. LSU athletic director Skip Bertman said Friday he had not heard from the team or the league on that front. But he reiterated that the school is willing to do whatever it can.

Saints owner Tom Benson was not available for comment Friday, but he released a statement for the first time since Hurricane Katrina.

"Our main concern is with the people of Louisiana and the Gulf Coast region who have experienced the recent tragedy," said Benson, a native New Orleanian. "We are attempting to carry on in these difficult times and are looking out for the best interest of our coaches, staff, players and their families. My prayers are with each of those who have been adversely impacted."

Loomis said he would like to find a home base for the team, preferably as close to New Orleans as possible, rather than playing every game on the road this season.

The team is in the process of setting up a home base of operations in San Antonio and will resume practicing Monday in preparation for the season opener at Carolina on Sept. 11.

Loomis, Benson, Coach Jim Haslett and the league had been in discussions Friday before agreeing to the New Jersey site. They will continue to talk about future games, although no decision is expected imminently

Tagliabue said in his statement that "there are many reasons for this decision, including recognizing that the overwhelming priority for public and private resources in Louisiana and the Gulf Coast region in the weeks ahead must be the essential needs of the public and the restoration of the area's infrastructure

Tagliabue began his statement by saying, "Our nation has experienced an unprecedented natural disaster, and we join everyone now in focusing our attention on the massive relief and recovery needs of the Gulf Coast region."

The Saints and Giants might wind up playing on Monday, Sept. 19, because the New York Jets will play host to the Miami Dolphins in Giants Stadium on Sept. 18. The two New York teams share use of the stadium.

"We are in the process of working out the specific arrangements, including the day and kickoff time of the game and plans for television coverage," Tagliabue said. "Information on tickets will be announced by the Giants within a few days."

The commissioner's statement continued:

"We deeply appreciate the strong cooperation and leadership of Saints owner Tom Benson and the entire Saints organization in addressing the current extraordinary situation. We also appreciate the support of the

SAINTS, from page 15

Tulane gets OK to play

Plan for students saves semester, football season

By Benjamin Hochman
Staff writer

DALLAS - Tulane will play football this season.

Tulane University announced Friday it won't have a fall semester at its Uptown campus, but its students will be able to enroll for a semester in "nine of the leading higher education associations," according to a statement from Tulane president Scott Cowen, including the University of Houston and Rice.

Because of the announcement, Tulane athletic teams will be able to play sports this fall, including the football team, which is currently in Dallas.

"We're playing ball," said Scott Sidwell, Tulane's associate athletic director. "Now it's up to us to make it happen."

"We're playing ball. Now it's up to us to make it happen."
Scott Sidwell

Beginning late Thursday night, Athletic Director Rick Dickson and Conference USA commissioner Britton Banowsky began discussing contingency plans for Tulane, whose team was forced to leave New Orleans because of Hurricane Katrina. The Green Wave flew to Houston on Friday and met with Cowen.

"Until 4 p.m. on Friday," Dickson said, "we didn't know the answer if we could compete in our sports programs."

But a decision was made to get Tulane students in classrooms, and that meant football players, too.

"Our student-athletes are an integral part of this plan," Cowen said in the statement. "We want our athletes to carry the torch, face and name of Tulane University during this difficult time, and we have worked out an arrangement within the context of the plan described above. This is made possible once again with assistance and generosity from colleges and universities - those in Conference USA and those outside of the conference - who have generously offered to help keep our teams together by providing not only academic opportunities but also practice facilities, playing facilities and general support."

Dickson, who will remain in Houston for weekend, meetings, said "logistics have not even been tackled.

"The first priority between now and next week is to make a decision of where to place the team and to get them in class," he said.

The Wave's first game will be Sept. 17 against Mississippi State. It is to be determined whether the game, scheduled for New Orleans, will be played in Starkville, Miss., or in Tulane's future "home."

But the players just want to play.

See TULANE, page 15

Russell thrills Fats

AP PHOTO

LSU quarterback JaMarcus Russell, left, shakes hands with New Orleans music legend Fats Domino on Friday, days after Domino was rescued from his home. Domino checked in at the triage unit at the Pete Maravich Assembly Center and later was reunited with family members at Russell's apartment. Domino, 77, had been reported missing earlier in the week.

Churchill cancels Fair Grounds meet

Company vows to rebuild track

By Bob Fortus
Staff writer

Churchill Downs Inc. has canceled the upcoming scheduled Fair Grounds season, and the company plans to shift some New Orleans racing dates to Louisiana Downs for a short "unique meet,'' Churchill president and chief executive officer Tom Meeker said Friday.

"It is clear that we will not be operating a race meet in November at the Fair Grounds,'' Meeker said. The track was scheduled to open Thanksgiving Day.

But Meeker also said that Churchill isn't wavering from its long-term commitment to the Fair Grounds and New Orleans.

"I can tell you we are firmly committed to invest in that community, to do whatever it takes to get that community back on its feet,'' Meeker said.

Churchill is considering running 19 or 20 days in December at Louisiana Downs, Don Richardson, Churchill's senior vice president in charge of racing at all the company's tracks, told horsemen at Churchill Downs in a meeting Thursday morning. Many of those horsemen race at the Fair Grounds.

"If you run any longer than that, then you run head-and-head with Oaklawn (Park),'' Richardson told the horsemen. "We need to contact them (Oaklawn) and let them know what we're thinking about, and see if we can get from help from there, and I'm sure we'll be able to do that.''

Churchill's first priority is to locate its metro-area employees, he said. About 500 people work at the track and its 10 off-track betting outlets. The company has located about 30 percent of its employees. Meeker said employees can contact the company via a toll-free number (877) 244-5536 or the Internet (www.fairgroundsracecourse.com).

"We continue to be very concerned about our people,'' Meeker said.

Seven security employees and 12 firemen rode out Hurricane Katrina at the track. "They have done some extraordinary things protecting our property," Meeker said.

The employees, fearing violence in the area, asked to be evacuated and were taken out by helicopter Thursday, he said.

Water damage inside the grandstand was caused by rain, not flooding.

"The facility itself is above water," Meeker said. "It has been above water since the events occurred.''

The barn area and track were covered by four feet of water, he said, and the level has been dropping since Thursday. Damage to the OTBs isn't known, he said.

Before Hurricane Katrina hit, Churchill was anticipating a pre-tax loss for its Fair Grounds operation of $1.3 million for the last four months of the year - typically a slow period for the business, said Mike Miller, the company's chief financial officer. Miller didn't estimate the financial impact on the business from the hurricane, but said that he expects the Fair Grounds' insurance policy to cover the losses. It's a $200 million policy with a $500,000 deductible, Miller said.

Moving racing dates to Louisiana Downs and running a shorter season would have to be approved by the Louisiana State Racing Commission. By law, the Fair Grounds must run at least 80 dates to keep its racing license. But Meeker said that he expects no difficulty in getting waivers from the commission and the Legislature to deal with these special circumstances.

Churchill chief operating officer Andy Skehan told the horsemen: "Our objective in running a race meet there (Louisiana Downs) is not to make a penny. Any money left over at the end of the day we're going to contribute to whatever relief effort we can. We still have a lot of details to work out.

"The idea right now is run an abbreviated meet - and again, this is an objective, we still have a lot of work to do - but hopefully on the line of averaging daily purses of around $300,000."

"I'd go for that,'' said trainer Dallas Stewart, a New Orleans resident who has raced at the Fair Grounds for years. "I'd be there for that.''

The Breeders' Cup might contribute money for purses at the meeting, Skehan said.

Meeker said that the race meeting also would provide a chance for Fair Grounds employees to work. Details about the race meeting might be announced early next week, he said. He also said that the meeting might extend beyond December.

Meeker confirmed that purses during the last Fair Grounds season were underpaid - weren't as high as they should have been given the amount of the betting. Racing officials try to anticipate how much will be bet before scheduling races and determining their purses. The Fair Grounds would have had to do something this season to make up for last season's underpayment.

Meeker said that the underpayment had nothing to do with plans to race in December. Some horsemen have suggested that Churchill wants to pay out the excess purse money before the end of the year.

"There are all sorts of facts that we're working through right now,'' Meeker said. "But what we're trying to do is get the meet up and running. We're obviously not interested in shorting the horsemen. Quite

See FAIR GROUNDS, page 15

Shinn says Hornets won't leave in storm's wake

Some home games likely to be played in other cities

By Jimmy Smith
Staff writer

Amid speculation that the destruction caused by Hurricane Katrina will force the Hornets to relocate most of their home games this season - or perhaps even move out of town - owner George Shinn said Friday he remains committed to ravaged New Orleans.

"I can assure you we don't have any plans to use this as an excuse to leave or escape," Shinn said from his vacation home in Telford, Tenn. "That's not in the tea leaves. I promise you."

The NBA has apparently notified teams throughout the league that the Hornets likely will be displaced from flood-damaged New Orleans Arena for part or all of this season.

However it is hoped that a nearby city, such as Baton Rouge, could accommodate the team's home schedule, perhaps in the Pete Maravich Assembly Center on LSU's campus or downtown at the Rivercenter, a building managed by SMG, the same firm that manages New Orleans Arena.

NBA deputy commissioner Russ Granik said via e-mail Friday that the league's main concern is helping the city and its basketball franchise get back on its feet.

"Our primary focus right now is to assist in the relief efforts for the city," Granik wrote. "Secondly, we need to assist the Hornets in getting their organizational structure back together.

"They have staff all over the country, and we need to

See HORNETS, page 15

After decades of warnings, worst nightmare realized

By Bob Marshall
Staff writer

WATERTON, CANADA - They say the line between sublime and surreal, between ecstasy and horror can be sharp and sudden. Tuesday afternoon, I discovered how.

I had just emerged from a backpacking trip deep into the heart of Glacier National Park, a wilderness that leaves poets mute and photographers frustrated. I stood on the deck of a hotel in adjacent Waterton National Park, a place where the golden Canadian prairies sweep up to caress the shoulders of mountains that soar to snowy peaks glowing in the afternoon sun. The sun was a clear, robin's egg blue. The temperature was in the 70s. The air was dry. The vacationers around me were recounting wonders they saw on the surrounding lakes and trails. My eyes simply could not have settled on a more beautiful, peaceful scene.

Then I looked at the newspaper resting in my hands. The front page of the Calgary Herald was covered with a photograph of a city as familiar to me as my mother. It was covered in water. The headline said, "Hard Times in the Big Easy." It was unimaginably ugly.

See NIGHTMARE, page 15

Churchill pursues December 'unique meet'

FAIR GROUNDS, from page14

to the contrary, we're trying to do things to help the horsemen."

Meeker also expressed outrage at comments by U.S. House Speaker Dennis Hastert, who said of New Orleans, "It looks like a lot of that place could be bulldozed.''

Said Meeker: "I don't know the context, but I can tell you we are firmly committed with (business and government) to re-establish New Orleans to get that city back on their feet. If you look at the faces of the individuals that we've seen . I can't believe anybody at this point in time would have made a statement like that.

"We're going to stand side by side with members of the community, shoulder to shoulder with members of the business community, members of political community, to re-establish that community as an integral part of the economic fortunes of this country. The Fair Grounds will be there, and New Orleans will be there, but we've got a huge challenge facing us, not only as members of that community but members of the larger community of the country.

READY TO GIVE

AP PHOTO

Raiders fan James Thomas, left, wearing a Tim Brown Oakland jersey, and his wife, Heidi, prepare to donate blood at a drive sponsored by the Raiders and the Red Cross before Thursday's preseason game against the Saints.

We saw tragedy coming

NIGHTMARE, from page 14

There were seconds when my brain stopped. I lifted my eyes to the surrounding scene again. Beauty. Peace. I looked back at the newspaper. Obscenity. Horror. The paradox was too striking. The synapses misfired.

I looked again. Slowly, like a diver rising back to the surface, I reemerged into reality. The murmur of voices, of laughter. The cool breeze off the mountains. The golden sun on the prairies. That picture. How could hell intrude into paradise?

Certainly, we had heard there was a hurricane entering the Gulf of Mexico several days earlier. But they always enter the Gulf in August and September. They always rumble ashore somewhere in other states, or even in other parts of Louisiana. We always see the TV reports of people in turmoil, of lives wrecked. We feel terrible for them and guilty about feeling relieved they caught the bullet we dodged, again.

But the picture, the headlines, said the story was different now.

The newspaper was full of stories and pictures that showed the trauma caused by the hit. My city, the town famed across the world as The Big Easy, the city with the motto "laissez le bon temps rouler" - let the good times roll - was coming apart. A big city with a small-town feel, with a people proud of their unique laid-back culture, was yielding to chaos. The 300-year-old city that existed when I stepped into the wilderness a week earlier was disintegrating.

But could that be on such a gorgeous day, as I stood in such a stunningly beautiful place?

A tourist saw me shaking my head in disbelief. "Unbelievable, huh?"

No, I told him. No, it was all too believable. We knew this could happen. Alerting people to this possibility had been part of my job for 20 years. We knew well how we had steadily destroyed the continent's greatest wetlands ecosystem, how we had separated the rivers from its deltas with levees, how the nation had allowed 30,000 miles of oil, gas and shipping canals to be dredged across our natural defenses. We knew about the 100,000 poor people without means to evacuate, and we explained the catastrophic human and economic costs to the nation as well as the state if we didn't repair the decades of abuse. We spent years seeking help from a country that had other priorities.

Another tourist walked up. He tapped the picture. "Mother Nature can be ugly!" he said grimly.

I looked around again. Mother Nature looked beautiful. I remembered the recent days spent snug and secure in the heart of that wilderness, the sense of order that permeated the ecosystem I traveled through.

I looked back at the pictures. Mother Nature did, indeed, look like a cruel master. But I began to think again of the decades of abuse and neglect. It was all beginning to seem real, to make sense, and I wished I could still be surprised and shocked. I wished I could cross back over that thin line.

NBA looking at contingency plan

HORNETS, from page 14

assist them in getting the group organized. And finally, we will work with them to figure out a contingency plan of where to play their home games."

Hornets marketing director Tim McDougal and several staff members are working out of Houston's Toyota Center (McDougal is a former Rockets employee), and team president Paul Mott and a few front-office executives are ensconced in San Antonio, to where they had evacuated before the hurricane.

Mott plans to travel soon to Baton Rouge to scout possible venues for regular-season games.

On Thursday, Hornets general manager Allan Bristow said the team will hold the first three weeks of training camp at the Air Force Academy in Colorado Springs, Colo.

The (Portland) Oregonian speculated Friday that the Hornets could play some games in Las Vegas, which will play host to the 2007 All-Star Game.

Shinn conceded that the possibility of playing many games in New Orleans this year seems to be shrinking daily but said he believes the city will rebuild and be able to sustain his franchise.

"I'm an optimist," Shinn said. "I can see things turning around. But this craziness there right now is out of control. Right now, things have got to get straight."

Shinn said he has attempted to contact Mayor Ray Nagin and Police Chief Eddie Compass for first-hand information on the devastation but has been unsuccessful.

"We're in the process of evaluating everything we can," Shinn said. "We're going to work closely with the league and do what's best for it and our team. But we've got employees who've lost everything they have."

Ricard: We need this season

TULANE, from page14

"We need this season," Wave quarterback Lester Ricard said. "I think that will be the ultimate joy, to see us do well this season."

Said Wave linebacker Antonio Mason: "It's something that we want to do for New Orleans. A lot of people look at us as not only reps of Tulane, but of New Orleans. People can look at us and say, wow, look at that team - they're going on the road, going through all that adversity, and still getting the job done."

LSU still offering Tiger Stadium

See SAINTS, page 15

Giants and the New Jersey Sports and Exposition Authority in these efforts.

"With the support of Giants fans and others in the New Jersey/New York area, this Saints-Giants game will be presented with elements that will highlight and contribute to the national relief effort. The Saints and Giants will donate a portion of the gate proceeds from the game to Hurricane Katrina relief.

"The Saints represent Louisiana and New Orleans, and we will work closely with public officials there to maintain a focus on the region's needs and the role of the NFL and Saints in the recovery."

Although Baton Rouge is the presumed front-runner for the Saints' home games if the logistics can be worked out, San Antonio has made efforts to make the Alamodome available for Saints home games this season.

However, San Antonio mayor Phil Hardberger issued a statement Friday that put those efforts in perspective.

"I understand that there are a lot of people who are interested in whether or not the New Orleans Saints will be playing football in San Antonio. I am too," Hardberger said. "Right now, however, our primary focus is on making our city ready to welcome evacuees from Louisiana.

"For a lot of people, Hurricane Katrina has taken everything. It is one of the worst natural disasters we've ever faced, and the human toll is now only just beginning to be known. Our first responsibility must be to those who need our help.

"I think we all need to be focused on what's really important right now, and that is being ready to welcome into our city those who have lost so much."

• • • • • •

The San Antonio Express-News contributed to this report.

OUR OPINIONS

AN EDITORIAL

Not Acceptable

A day after a normally easy-going Mayor Ray Nagin blasted federal officials' seeming indifference to the plight of New Orleanians who are stranded and dying, President Bush stood on the lawn of the White House and conceded the point: The federal government did not move quickly enough or forcefully enough to help those people hit hardest by Hurricane Katrina. "The results are not acceptable," the president said before boarding a helicopter to go survey the storm's damage.

It's good to hear the president admit his administration's shortcomings, and it's even better to hear his promise to help all of us who are in need. But the sad truth remains that the federal government's slow start has already proved fatal to some of the most vulnerable people in the New Orleans area. Water has killed hundreds, if not thousands, of people. A lack of water to drink is exacting its toll on others.

"I don't want to see anybody do anymore goddamn press conferences," the mayor said during a WWL radio interview Thursday. "Put a moratorium on press conferences. Don't do another press conference until the resources are in this city."

The mayor had obviously become fed up with federal bureaucrats' use of future tense verbs. "Don't tell me 40,000 people are coming here," he said. "They're not here. It's too doggone late. Now get off your asses and do something, and let's fix the biggest goddamn crisis in the history of this country."

We applaud the mayor for giving voice to an entire city's frustration. How could the most powerful and technologically advanced nation in the history of the world have responded so feebly to this crisis?

The president's admission of his administration's mistakes will mean nothing unless the promised help is deployed immediately. Each life is precious, and there isn't a second chance to save a single one of them. No more talk of what's going to happen. We only want to hear what is being done. The lives of our people depend on it.

YOUR OPINIONS

Don't forget St. Bernard

St. Bernard Parish has been largely ignored by the media and the Federal Emergency Management Agency. St. Bernard, one of the hardest hit parishes in Louisiana, has been left to save itself. For days, my husband, who is with the Sheriff's Office, has been working under difficult conditions with no other help in sight.

They are living in a building where mud and human waste are on the floor. There are dead bodies floating across the parish; no one has time to collect them due to continuing rescue efforts. Food and water are running so low that they are being rationed. No one knows how much longer they can hold out.

The men and women who are serving this community by putting their lives on the line do not deserve this. These people are desperate. Those of us who have family in St. Bernard are getting desperate.

Judy Toups-Corley
St. Bernard

Feds should have responded faster

The U.S. government has taken twice the time it should have to respond to the needs of the people of the Gulf Coast. If President Bush lived on the Gulf, the area would have been swarming with troops by Wednesday morning. I am mad as hell. I cannot imagine what the folks in your area are feeling.

Good luck with the rebuild. Right, where you are now?

John R. Whatley
Santa Fe, N.M.

Less complaining, more leadership

It is amazing and shocking to see what is happening in that beautiful city there. My prayers are with you. However when this emergency is over I suggest that people ask some hard questions of their elected officials.

Everyone who didn't have their head in the sand knew that New Orleans was dangerously susceptible to a big storm. So where were the preparations and stockpiles that should have been present to aid the people in the immediate aftermath of a disaster?

In any other disaster that our cities have suffered there has always been a leader who would stand up and say this is what we are going to do, then do it. All Mayor Nagin can do is point the finger at the federal government for not doing enough. He needs to do more, in my opinion. Crying isn't going to save those who desperately need help.

John Robnett
Louisville, Ky.

Nation is on your side

The rest of us, the citizens of this country, love you all and are praying and sending in funds. Please know that all of you are beautiful, and the lack of federal response infuriates us. Please know that we love you.

Jeanne Weiss
Asuza, Calif.

We needed better planning

Re: "Yes, we are worth it," Our Opinions, Sept. 1

Your editorial is right on target.

As a native of Louisiana with some relatives that my family has not been able to locate, I think the lateness of support from city and state officials as well as the federal government is because the majority of these people are our poorest of the poor -- black and white.

New Orleans was already being labeled as the murder capital. Witnessing firsthand as people loot for food and other necessities did not help. The National Guard and FEMA should have been prepared and on the ground from day one.

There should have been better planning. The mayor and governor already knew these people had no way of getting out of New Orleans and should have provided those buses days earlier. They could have identified those areas, particularly the 9th Ward and all the public housing projects, and bused those people out.

Mary Thomas

HURRICANE KATRINA AFTERMATH

STAFF PHOTO BY ALEX BRANDON

New Orleans: A large crowd of storm victims gathers at a distribution point to pick up MREs Friday in a parking lot outside the Convention Center.

SWEET RELIEF

Four days after Hurricane Katrina made landfall, relief for the city's thousands of stranded storm victims finally arrived in the form of military troops, transport vehicles and fresh supplies of food and water.

STAFF PHOTO BY ALEX BRANDON

New Orleans: Velma Brosa gets a mouthful of food from Carla Weisshahn after troops distributed thousands of military meals ready to eat to the storm refugees gathered inside and outside the Ernest N. Morial Convention Center on Friday. Weisshahn, who hails from Neenah, Wis., was on vacation in New Orleans when Katrina struck.

STAFF PHOTO BY ALEX BRANDON

Convention Center: After getting some food and water Friday, Selma Valenti, 80, is comforted by Dr. Cris Mandry, a member of a New Orleans Police Department SWAT team. Valenti's brother, Robert Fisher Jr., has a heart condition and was examined by Mandry after the pair had to walk several blocks in the midday heat to get to the food distribution area.

AP PHOTO

Atlanta: Storm refugee Ruby Holmes, 81, of New Orleans clutches what's left of her belongings, including a Bible, while waiting to be carried off a C-17 military aircraft in Georgia on Friday.

SUNDAY

KATRINA: THE STORM WE'VE ALWAYS FEARED

The Times-Picayune

$1.50 169TH YEAR NO. 227 | SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 4, 2005 | HURRICANE EDITION

After five days, thousands of anguished storm victims finally have a reason for hope

HELP AT LAST

STAFF PHOTO BY ELIOT KAMENITZ

METAIRIE: Helicopters evacuate people in need of medical help as crowds of others displaced by Hurricane Katrina pile into buses near the intersection of Veterans Memorial and Causeway boulevards.

Amid chaos, a rare voice of strength

By Brian Thevenot
Staff writer

In front of the Convention Center on Saturday, amid a crowd of refugees weeping and trading stories of raped children and dead babies in freezers, an elderly woman in a yellow shirt lay near death, tremors coursing through her limbs.

A few minutes later, she stopped shaking.

And yet, in that hell, Anita Roach raised her voice to the heavens, belting out the gospel standards that had comforted her since childhood: through homelessness, through friendlessness, through the death of her son and through the flood that nearly killed her and her husband in their Lower 9th Ward home.

"When the storm
Of life is raging,
Stand by me, stand by me..."

Five days after Hurricane Katrina, as National Guardsmen and evacuation buses finally pulled onto Tchoupitoulas Street a block away, Roach stood out as a beacon of beauty and strength against a backdrop of death and despair. As she began to sing, a group of over-stressed National Guardsmen carted away the nearby woman's newly dead body to put it with many others. First they placed her body on the street corner, then carried it through an employee entrance guarded by machine guns and laid her to rest in a freezer.

STAFF PHOTO BY CHRIS GRANGER

NEW ORLEANS: Anita Roach, who used to live in the Lower 9th Ward, leads those around her in gospel songs. Hundreds of people were waiting for a bus to take them from the Ernest N. Morial Convention Center.

Roach never stopped singing, never stopped smiling, never stopped comforting a crowd of some of the last of Hurricane Katrina's victims to receive even a shred of assistance. She sang from her belly with a voice that could be heard down the block, drowning out cries for help and the rumble of National Guard trucks. One by one, family, friends and complete strangers joined her, clapping and singing as she led them as she had as choir director at New Jerusalem Missionary Baptist Church in Bridge City.

"When this world
Is tossing me
Like a ship on the raging sea
Thou who rulest the winds and water
Stand by me, stand by me "

See GOSPEL, page 8

Authorities regaining grip on city

From staff reports

Federal troops and relief convoys continued to pour into New Orleans on Saturday, even as buses evacuated additional thousands of debilitated refugees who endured the most horrific five days in the 287-year history of this once-elegant city.

But if relief was in sight, it was not yet at hand.

Thousands of men, women and children who fled impoverished neighborhoods flooded by Hurricane Katrina waited listlessly for relief at the threshold of death and despair at the Ernest N. Morial Convention Center.

They said they had been without food and water until Friday.

Corpses lay under blankets among them. One man in the shelter said he counted seven bodies as he waited over three days, and there were reports of violence.

Still, the evacuees asserted their dignity. Many made clear they resented the general characterization that those left behind in New Orleans were thugs and looters.

As another among them died Saturday, they eulogized the departed by singing the gospel music that

See KATRINA, page 4

INSIDE: Seeking help, finding death at Convention Center, page 5 ▪ Talk resurfaces of possible Saints move to San Antonio, page 6 ▪ St. Bernard rescuers find horrific sites, page 12

As calm settles over N.O., outrage grows in Washington

FEMA says storm overwhelmed agency

By John McQuaid
Washington bureau

STAFF PHOTO BY CHRIS GRANGER

National Guardsmen tend to an ailing woman Saturday who was waiting for a bus to take her out of New Orleans. She is believed to have later died. As the military arrived to try to restore order to the storm-ravaged city, politicians from both parties blasted FEMA for its response to the disaster.

WASHINGTON - A semblance of post-storm order has returned to ravaged New Orleans, but the political storm over the disaster is just beginning.

Political leaders, Republican and Democrat alike, have blasted the Federal Emergency Management Agency and its parent agency, the Department of Homeland Security, for allowing New Orleans to descend into a cauldron of suffering and anarchy for three days and nights last week after Hurricane Katrina passed.

President Bush, himself the target of criticism for the sluggish response, has pronounced the results "unacceptable."

Dozens of others have chimed in with criticisms and proposals. "If we can't respond faster than this to an event we saw coming across the Gulf for days, then why do we think we're prepared to respond to a nuclear or biological attack?" said former House Speaker Newt Gingrich, a Republican.

The Republican and Democratic leaders of the Senate Committee on Homeland Security and Government Affairs announced that they would launch an investigation into the disaster response. Sen. Mary Landrieu, D-La., called on Bush to go over the heads of those directing the emergency response and appoint a Cabinet-level official to take over. Rep. Mark Foley, R-Fla., called for splitting FEMA from Homeland Security.

FEMA officials pleaded no contest.

Bill Lokey, chief coordinator for FEMA, said agencies were simply overwhelmed by the scale of the challenge. "It's the nature of the disaster," he said. "This is far beyond anything we've ever done in this country. It's beyond our immediate capabilities for sure."

Lokey said rescue workers have been hampered by floodwaters and by the fact that many of the resources they needed were not available nearby and had to be brought in. And because the storm damage was spread across three states, FEMA's resources also have been spread out, he said.

Solid answers to the question of what went wrong may take years of study by blue-ribbon commissions and Congress to sort out. Emergency managers will be studying what happened for decades to come. But emergency managers and people who study disasters said several key problems allowed the situation to slip out of officials' hands and deteriorate.

Part of the problem is that the quick mobilization of massive human and material resources takes expert management from the top, as well as the coordination of dozens of different federal agencies. That would have enabled a quicker entry into the city by National Guardsmen to establish order, distribute food and get people out.

Emergency management plans are for the most part based on the assumption that the people involved will be relatively cooperative.

The eruption of violence, disorder and confusion in and around New Orleans caught many people by surprise. A simulation that emergency management officials ran last year of a catastrophic flood and hurricane hitting New Orleans did not address the possibility of widespread violence and disorder, said Madhu Beriwal, the president of EIM, the company based in Baton Rouge that ran the exercise, which brought together emergency managers from local, state and federal agencies. Beriwal said the violence issue was to be addressed at a later meeting.

"There is a truism among sociologists who study disasters that panic is not a problem," said Rutherford Platt, a disaster expert at the University of Massachusetts. "People are too well-informed about what to do and expect; even low-income people get a lot of information. There are Red Cross shelters, all these things we expect to take up the slack."

There was also no master plan specific to the New Orleans disaster. Officials attending last year's simulation - which included tabletop exercises on the response to a fictional Hurricane Pam that flooded the city - produced a document with many contingency plans, Beriwal said.

But the simulation was just an early stage of a multiyear effort to develop a comprehensive plan - one that had been delayed by the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks and competing priorities.

Homeland Security Secretary Donald Chertoff for the first time activated a more generic national response plan developed in the wake of the terrorist attacks that gives him authority over all agencies involved. But it clearly didn't work as it was supposed to.

"Certainly what happened was some degree of a lack of coordination between federal, state and local folks prior to the arrival of the hurricane and immediately afterward," said Suzanne Mencer, a former Department of Homeland Security official who worked with state and local agencies. "It's that coordination piece that is always the most difficult."

'I told them that the worst is yet to come'

Most officers working on adrenaline, little else

By Michael Perlstein
Staff writer

When gunshots panicked an already desperate crowd of evacuees inside the nearly pitch-black Ernest N. Morial Convention Center, several New Orleans police officers instinctively pulled their guns and ran toward the pops. Just as quickly, they realized their weapons were useless amid the clusters of bedraggled families.

But they weaved their way toward the muzzle flash anyway, Superintendent Eddie Compass said, shining flashlights, groping with their hands, guided toward the shooter by evacuees pulling on their pants legs. When they got a bead on the gunman, they rushed to disarm him, despite the chance of facing more deadly fire.

Throughout the inundated city, what remained of the New Orleans Police Department was transformed into a virtual militia operation, Compass and other commanders said, forcing officers to freelance without radios, supplies or clear orders. Dozens of officers turned in their badges or fled without a word. Some joined in with looters and marauders, plunging an already jittery situation into moments of complete societal breakdown.

"These events do two things: they show your strengths and they expose your weaknesses. We had both," Compass said.

But according to Compass, the majority of the 1,700-person force held its ground, figuring out ways to save lives and restore order, working to save the city despite, in many cases, becoming victims themselves.

"The bulk of this police department stood intact," Compass said in an interview, tears streaming down his face. "We fought the most unbelievable war imaginable and we survived . . . Some officers lost their houses and they're still out there. Some officers lost family members and they're still out there."

Like every other city, state and federal agency, the police department was almost instantly overwhelmed by Hurricane Katrina, Compass said. With the city plunged into a near-total communications blackout, the police radio system was reduced to walkie-talkies among small squads.

As much as possible, the squads began organizing themselves at key points around the city, Compass said. The SWAT team tried to quell looting, track down armed gangs and restore order. The vice squad took over the search-and-rescue boat patrols. District patrol officers set up satellite evacuation points as refugees began streaming out of flooded neighborhoods. Compass bounced between the City Hall emergency command post, the law enforcement staging area at Harrah's Casino and the field.

At one point, there was a rumor that Compass had fled to Baton Rouge. He said the bad information circulated because his car was seen heading to the Capitol, carrying his eight-months-pregnant wife when she went into distress.

"I've been rolling on calls, backing people up on the ground, fighting off people with my bare hands," he said.

Police protocol was tossed out the window. The force's usual show of crisp white and blue uniforms was largely supplanted by t-shirts, jeans, bandanas, hip-waders, shirts with the sleeves torn off. The department's polished and immaculately groomed spokesman, Capt. Marlon Defillo, armed himself with a pistol in one hand and an semi-automatic shotgun in the other.

STAFF PHOTO BY ALEX BRANDON

New Orleans Police Chief Eddie Compass briefs Capts. Jeff Winn, left, and Tony Canatella from the 6th District on Thursday. 'These events do two things: They show your strengths, and they expose your weaknesses. We had both,' Compass said.

More than a dozen 2nd District officers worked shifts at Napoleon and St. Charles avenues, where droves of people were funneled toward them in canoes, rescue boats and, in many cases, after wading through neck-high water, Lt. Eddie Selby said.

Other than a caravan of National Guard trucks that arrived for the mass evacuation of Memorial Medical Center on Wednesday, Selby said, his officers had no transportation for evacuees. To solve the budding crisis, officers commandeered any vehicles they could find to get people to the Superdome and Convention Center refuge points. A yellow De La Salle High school bus. An Audubon Zoo van. A flatbed truck donated by a volunteer.

On Friday, two lines formed at the pickup point: one for people in medical distress, another for evacuees heading to larger evacuation points. In a line of people headed for the convention center, a woman with a Wal-Mart cart pushed her way to the De La Salle bus. Through a bus window, she handed up a bag of tampons, boxes of crayons and pencils for her kids, and a brand-new looted 17-inch flat screen television.

The scene was orderly, the officers professional, but Selby said his people were "operating on pure adrenaline."

"We try to break them into 12-hour shifts, but then something happens and we have to call them back," Selby said. "A lot of us are working on three, four hours sleep. We moved about 1,000 people a day the first three days."

Officer Darryl Albert said a handful of volunteers have remained at the intersection throughout the crisis, setting up a cluster of chairs and couches in the street so they could catch moments of rest.

"You see those volunteers loading people up over there?" Albert asked. "Those people are there when we leave at night and here when we get here in the morning. That man doesn't have to be here. If people like that are going to be out here, there is no way I can leave."

Compass and other commanders said the officers grew increasingly frustrated as the days passed without any substantial backup. Officers were running around-the-clock on wide-eyed adrenaline, he said, but the lack of basic items like food, water and clean clothes began to take a toll.

"We were running low on everything," he said. "We fought a battle in knee-deep water with no radios. My people were getting shot at, walking into firefighters in the dark. I don't know what the feds were doing, what the military was doing, but every one of my deputy chiefs stayed. Every one of my commanders stayed."

Compass said he almost reached a personal breaking point when he couldn't find the right channels to secure two Blackhawk helicopters parked for several days at the Superdome heliport.

"I called (Jefferson Parish) Harry Lee and he had a Blackhawk on its way from Knoxville, Tennessee, within an hour."

As the city plunged deeper into crisis with each day, officers used common sense to alter their boundaries of legal behavior. What passed for looting on the day after the storm hit was accepted as lifesaving foraging by week's end. Some officers joined in grabbing supplies from breached stores, carrying off socks, T-shirts, food and other essentials.

With National Guard and other military troops now rolling into the city, the beleaguered NOPD is anticipating an infusion of food, water and generator power, along with badly needed reinforcements so officers can take a break.

But Capt. Timothy Bayard, the narcotics and vice commander now heading the boat rescue operation, said he has warned his officers that the work could be harder before it gets easier. Once rescuers pluck everyone from rooftops and attics, Bayard said, his mission will shift to coordinating the recovery of bodies.

"I have a lot of young officers and I told them that the worst is yet to come. Bodies are going to pop up out of nowhere. The stench will be overwhelming. Bloated bodies are going to pop like balloons. The skin's going to tear off as soon as you grab it. You're going to have nothing but bones in your hand. We'll have to kill dogs and cats because of rabies. Hell, they might find people they know. But you've got to keep going back in."

HURRICANE KATRINA AFTERMATH

STAFF PHOTOS BY CHRIS GRANGER

Corine Pursley expresses her gratitude to Sgt. 1st Class Mark Martin of the Arkansas National Guard as an evacuation bus pulls away from the Ernest N. Morial Convention Center on Saturday.

Nagin critical of Jeff Parish for turning away refugees

KATRINA, from page 1

sustained them in the midst of a living nightmare.

Army Brig. Gen. Mark Graham said he hopes his troops and other relief workers can move the remaining evacuees out of the convention center by today or Monday.

Authorities said they continue to gain control of a city gripped since Tuesday by rising lawlessness.

President Bush ordered 7,200 more paratroopers, Marines and other forces to the storm-ravaged area and made plans for a second visit Monday to Louisiana and the Mississippi Gulf Coast, which was demolished by Katrina on Aug. 29.

"We will complete the evacuation as quickly and safely as possible," Bush said in his regular Saturday morning radio address to the nation. "We will not let criminals prey on the vulnerable, and we will not allow bureaucracy to get in the way of saving lives."

He also signed a $10.5 billion aid package for the region.

As they closed in on the end of the evacuation, authorities said the death toll will likely be in the thousands, first from the floodwaters unleashed by Katrina, and later from the ordeal of heat, thirst and exhaustion that claimed the old and the weak. But they said developing an accurate number was still a lower priority than assisting survivors.

The count in Mississippi was at 147 and would probably increase, officials there said.

At any event, with evacuation gaining traction it was clear that a historic diaspora of New Orleans residents is under way.

The last three days have seen a forced, perhaps permanent, scattering of tens of thousands of New Orleanians - first among evacuees who fled the city before the storm and later those who survived it. The loss of so many will affect the character of the city in ways yet to be determined.

These refugees of Hurricane Katrina were so happy to see buses loaded and people leaving the city that they waved goodbye to everyone, whether they knew them or not, before boarding the bus themselves.

Authorities were loading evacuees on commercial airlines, buses and AMTRAK trains bound for destinations as far away as Michigan and Indiana.

But there were complaints that some refugees, hauled out of the city in desperate condition, were being refused safe haven in some places, including some that said they already were filled beyond capacity with storm victims. New Orleans City Council President Oliver Thomas blasted the city of Baton Rouge and other Louisiana communities for what he called a callous refusal to take in refugees from his devastated city.

"They don't want them," Thomas said, after bursting into the press room at the Emergency Operations Center in Baton Rouge. "They have put out the word all over the state: 'Those bad New Orleans people. You don't want them.' "

State Sen. Cleo Fields, D-Baton Rouge, said the state's Legislative Black Caucus would charter buses to pick up 5,000 residents stranded along Interstate 10. He said they would deliver them to the closed England Air Force Base in Shreveport and demand that they be sheltered.

Mayor Ray Nagin criticized Jefferson Parish for closing the door to exhausted refugees who trudged over the Crescent City Connection to escape the ruined city and reach high ground on the West Bank.

"We were taking in people from St. Bernard Parish. If we had a bottle of water, we shared it. Then when we were going to let people cross the bridge, they were met with frigging dogs and guns at the parish line," said Nagin during an aerial tour of the city.

"They said, 'We're going to protect Jefferson Parish assets.' Some people value homes, cars and jewelry more than human life. The only escape route was cut off. They turned them back at the parish line."

Meanwhile criminal justice officials said they had invented a temporary system for handling criminal suspects arrested in the post-Katrina chaos.

Officials transformed Union Passenger Terminal into a booking and detention center for those accused of terrorizing evacuees over the last four days.

State Attorney General Charles Foti said the state would open a temporary court system, although it surely faced daunting problems on matters like assembling juries and witnesses.

U.S. Attorney Jim Letten promised that federal authorities would bring charges, where possible, against suspects.

"Make no mistake about this: The federal criminal justice system is alive and well," he said. "The entire criminal justice system is alive and well."

HURRICANE KATRINA AFTERMATH

Seeking help in New Orleans, people instead find death, unrest

Rape, gunfire are reported at Convention Center

By Trymaine D. Lee
Staff writer

STAFF PHOTO BY CHRIS GRANGER

Arkansas National Guard soldiers help a woman with heat stroke Saturday. Witnesses reported several deaths outside the Convention Center.

By Friday afternoon the old man's body was beginning to decompose, sitting in the lawn chair where he died four days earlier outside the Ernest N. Morial Convention Center.

The pungent stench of death wafted from under the dingy blanket that draped his corpse. He had become all but invisible to a sea of the living that staggered from the curbs and into the streets not far from his body.

The small children - many suffering from heat rash and hunger -- who huddled with family on the sidewalk outside the Convention Center sat quietly and tearless by the sides or on the laps of helpless adults.

This is where flood survivors hoped they would find food, where they hoped to find water and the rumored evacuation buses that many people talked about but no one had ever seen until Saturday. All they'd found there was despair and more death. They'd survived killer winds and floods, but now many of the old and the sick were dying from what many believed was a lack of medicine and water.

Officials said the crowd outside the Convention Center had swelled to 25,000 people.

For four days there was no sign of law enforcement or city, state or federal officials, several of the displaced said. There was no updated evacuation schedule. And there was no food.

The young men were getting restless and angry. Evacuees said some of them were armed and most were willing to take extreme measures if somebody didn't do something to save them.

Many said they'd braved chin-high floodwaters to get to the Convention Center from neighborhoods such as Carrolton and Treme. They said they came from places where their neighbors had drowned and where entire families had vanished.

"We're being treated like animals," Donyell Porter, 25, said Friday. "Look around. Man, look at the bodies. And there's no way for us to leave. Brothers been stealing cars, but they can't make it over the bridge. ... It's not right. We're humans, too."

The old man was said to be the first of many to die at the center. By Wednesday an elderly woman was found dead, slumped in her wheelchair near a curb 20 feet from the Convention Center doors, said Bob Payne, 57, a retired journalist turned refugee. Payne said a teenage girl was the next to die, rumored to have been raped and her throat sliced open.

"They took her body and put it on the third floor in a walk-in freezer," Payne said. Payne said he had seen at least seven dead during the three days he spent sleeping on the ground outside the center.

"It was absolutely horrendous," Payne said, after being rescued by a reporter friend who he'd seen through the crowd. "I'd never seen anything like it. I couldn't believe that this was America I was seeing."

"Don't think the Army out here is the only ones with guns," said Mark Course, 29. "These young dudes got guns too, and if something don't change soon, something's going to happen."

He pointed toward a group of military police officers holding rifles and bottles of water. "Look at them. They got water so cold it'll freeze your tongue, but look at what we got: nothing or it's boiling hot."

Witnesses said a small riot broke out Wednesday when refugees saw rescuers in big trucks carting off white tourists by the dozens, leaving many black people to fend for themselves.

"You should have seen them gathering up white folks," said Kim Jackson, 39. "They had a big 18-wheeler with the National Guard walking alongside them. ... But they got us here like dogs."

Other acts of violence were reported.

New Orleans Police Chief Eddie Compass said someone opened fire inside the Convention Center early Thursday morning. Officers responded and were fired upon, but they couldn't return fire. It was dark, he said, and his men didn't want to risk shooting innocent people. Praising officers who he said "fought like dogs" in a war for the streets, Compass said cops followed the flash erupting from the gunmen's weapons and disarmed them without firing a shot.

Food rations and water arrived at Convention Center Boulevard on Friday after the National Guard and the media came. Until then there was none, so as early as Wednesday people started breaking into the Convention Center searching for food, Payne said. Through a side door, stepping over six bodies covered with sheets, Payne said, Samaritans pilfered canned beans and fruit, bottled water and cans of soup.

"All we got is us out here," Course said. "We know the looting is hurting us, but we're stranded out here. So we were taking everything we could and handing it out to people."

Families pooled their resources, sharing diapers and formula or food for the children if they had any.

"I had some things, but people out here really helped out a lot. We got together, and that's all that has gotten us by," said Kelly Billy, 22, of eastern New Orleans. Billy said she escaped her third-story home with her three small children -- ages 6 months to 3 years-- on an inflatable mattress using a broom as a paddle.

Payne said from what he witnessed, the initial wave of looting was purely for survival. But later small groups began making their way to the Gap and Saks Fifth Avenue, emerging with clothing and high-end handbags.

Compass said he realized that many of those breaking into local businesses were doing so for food and water, and that "the same knuckleheads they go to war with every day are the ones causing trouble for everybody else."

With extensive news coverage of looting and lawlessness in the city, many people stranded outside the Convention Center said they resent being criminalized under the most horrible of conditions.

"They think we're a bunch of crazed beasts just acting crazy," said Ray Bryant, 46. "But this is inhumane. How do they expect people to act?"

On Friday, Compass addressed the crowd with a megaphone, promising that buses out of town were on their way.

Payne and others said the promise was one of many that had trickled through the crowd throughout the week.

By Saturday, a fleet of buses finally rolled up to the Convention Center.

Thousands began pushing and dragging their belongings up the street to more than a dozen buses. The mood was more numb than jubilant.

Yolanda Sanders stood at a barricade clutching her cocker spaniel, Toto. She had been at the Convention Center for five days.

"I had faith that they'd come. I feel good that I know I can get to my family,'' she said. Sanders didn't know where they were taking her, but "anyplace is better than here," she said. "People are dying over there.''

Evacuees from the Superdome were shipped to the Astrodome in Houston, which by Saturday had been filled with 15,000 refugees. The doors to two additional centers in Houston were opened, accepting 10,000 additional survivors. Dallas and San Antonio also agreed to take in those in need. And refugee shelters were being established in other states.

Feelings of hope quickly returned to frustration as people continued to wait, throwing their arms in the air and cursing. A dead man lay on the sidewalk under a blanket with a stream of blood running down the pavement toward the gutter.

"We're hurting out here, man. We got to get help. All we want is someone to feel our pain, that's all,'' said Tasheka Johnson, 24.

• • • • • • • • • • • •

The Associated Press contributed to this report

City must overcome disaster, mayor says

Nagin: Response still isn't enough

By Doug MacCash
Staff writer

STAFF PHOTO BY BRETT DUKE

New Orleans Mayor Ray Nagin got a firsthand look at the damage caused by Hurricane Katrina from a helicopter Saturday. He said the response to the disaster remains inadequate. 'A bunch of people are the boss,' he said.

Viewed from the windows of a low-flying Blackhawk helicopter, the scope of Hurricane Katrina's destruction becomes clearer.

The Causeway is like a broken spine, large sections of roadway listing disconcertingly into the brown water of Lake Pontchartrain. The modest homes in the Lower 9th Ward have been uprooted and are crushed together in clots like bumper cars. Pyramid-shaped rooftops are all that can be seen of many suburban-style houses in the Lakeview neighborhood. And the expanses of small trees that line the coastal wetlands of eastern New Orleans have been bent to the ground and combed precisely in one direction that marks the path of last week's ferocious wind. Nothing is right.

New Orleans Mayor Ray Nagin knew that's what he would find when he conducted a helicopter survey Saturday of the city, a grim tour that graphically exposed members the national and local press to the destruction he's come to know well. The copter turned slow circles over the sky like a buzzard over the still-breached 17th St. Canal levee and twice paused in flight over New Orleanians who were still stranded. Nagin dropped water and a ready-to-eat meal to one of them.

Preparing for the flight, Nagin was in a more sedate mood than he was during an expletive-ridden television interview Thursday, when he railed against the plodding federal and state relief efforts, accused President Bush and Gov. Kathleen Blanco of posturing for political advantage at a time of acute need, and burst into tears -- not that the situation in the drowning, crippled city had much improved.

"When I woke up this morning," Nagin said, "I turned my radio off. I just couldn't digest any more bad news."

Bush was forgiving of Nagin's tirade when they met Friday, Nagin said. "He said, 'Look, I know you said lots of things. We could have done better. I can't argue. Let's deal with the future.' ... Mr. Bush was really, really concerned."

Blanco, too, understood his anger, Nagin said. "I told the president and her, 'I kind of lost it. But put yourselves in my shoes. If I said anything offensive, I apologize.' ... But then I immediately went on to tell them what I need."

Nagin may have mended his fences politically, but he said he still believes the situation is being poorly handled. "We're still fighting over authority," he said. "A bunch of people are the boss. The state and the federal government are doing a two-step dance. "I told the president, 'I'm into solutions. If the state government can't take responsibility, then you take it.' ... I think it's getting better, but the pace is still not sufficient.'"

Some observers have said that because the majority of storm evacuees are black, the lethargic disaster response has a racist component. But Nagin cast the color issue in another light. "I think it's more a class issue than race," he said. "The Superdome had mostly poor people in distress. The rich have resources the poor don't. The Convention Center was different. There the poor were mixed with people from hotels and predators. You had blacks, Hispanics, Asians. The predators in there didn't care. When those stories come out, like children raped, with their throats cut, then somebody's got to answer."

Nagin's ire began to rise anew as he recalled a foiled strategy to send able-bodied refugees over the Crescent City Connection to the high ground of the West Bank.

"We were taking in people from St. Bernard Parish," he said. "If we had a bottle of water, we shared it. Then when we were going to let people cross the bridge, they were met with frigging dogs and guns at the Gretna parish line. They said, 'We're going to protect Jefferson Parish assets.'

"Some people value homes, cars and jewelry more than human life. The only escape route was cut off. They turned them back at the parish line."

Nagin said that in order to cope with the always frustrating, sometimes overwhelming situation he has tried to "stay in the moment," dealing as best he can with each individual issue as it arises: a police officer's report that a large number of elderly people were stranded near Lee Circle; the sight of refugees continuing to gather on the city's raised highways. Nagin recalled with special dismay having recently been told that a New Orleans police officer committed suicide during the storm's aftermath.

"I asked my people to get in touch with the LSU department of psychiatry," he said. "The police are holding the situation together with Band-Aids. We have to let them get three to five days off."

As the Blackhawk coursed over the city, Nagin and the other passengers pointed out familiar landmarks made unfamiliar by the storm. The city was largely ruined. It would be as difficult to restart as the thousands of automobiles submerged in the murky water below. But Nagin insisted it must be restarted, no matter what.

"I think I'm here for a reason: to rebuild," he said. "New Orleans is the soul of the country. It's the place jazz comes from. It has Mardi Gras Indians that nobody else has. It's a place where a chef can take a piece of fish and make it into a masterpiece. We don't even think about not rebuilding Miami. We don't think about rebuilding Los Angeles, and they're on a fault line. We just do it. We don't talk about it. I don't want to talk about that foolishness."

HURRICANE KATRINA AFTERMATH

Saints may move to San Antonio

Senator urges Benson to delay his decision

By Robert Travis Scott
Capital bureau

New Orleans Saints owner Tom Benson is leaning strongly toward moving the Saints permanently to San Antonio following the devastation to the city and the Superdome by Hurricane Katrina, a state senator who has spoken with a top team official said Saturday.

Sen. Mike Michot, R-Lafayette, said he spoke with Saints' chief of administration Arnold Fielkow by phone Friday morning about Benson's potential plans.

Team officials could not be reached Saturday. The team had previously announced it was looking for a new home for the current season, and San Antonio was one of the options.

Michot said he was told that Benson has not made a final decision, but the owner is serious about moving once and for all to San Antonio. "We may lose them permanently," Michot said.

A possible move by the team is a "huge concern" among a few state officials who have become aware of it, but every significant political figure in the state is preoccupied with reacting to the storm aftermath.

State officials want to convince Benson to delay a decision so that the state can focus on the rescue and rehabilitation effort and later find a way to keep the Saints at home in New Orleans.

"This is like pouring salt into the wound," Michot said.

Michot said decency dictates that Benson should postpone any decision on a permanent move until state officials have had a chance to talk with him.

"Give us time," Michot said.

Another state official confirmed a similar conversation with Fielkow.

Michot is the vice chairman of the Senate Commerce Committee, a key committee for legislation related to state agreement with the Saints.

He said that in the long run the Saints might be better off staying in New Orleans because a revived city with national support could provide a better stadium.

ATTENTION

MACY*S
NEW ORLEANS
EMPLOYEES

Please contact Macy*s offices by calling 1-800-444-8477 or by email at Neworleans.emergency@macys.com

We are anxious to hear that you are safe and how we can stay in contact with you.

Some see opportunity in wake of tragedy

American Venice, super-levee among ideas to fix N.O.

By Bill Walsh and Jim Barnett
Washington bureau

WASHINGTON - House Speaker Dennis Hastert ignited a fury in Louisiana last week when he said much of flood-drenched New Orleans could be bulldozed in the wake of Hurricane Katrina.

Although he quickly backpedaled in the face of criticism, the powerful Illinois Republican gave voice to a growing sentiment that rebuilding a devastated New Orleans must involve more than raising levees and constructing new homes.

Even as survivors were being plucked from the waters coursing through the city's streets, policymakers, planners and engineers began floating ideas sure to give pause to proud New Orleanians, especially those with homes in low-lying areas. Among the suggestions: massive land-filling, government seizing private property and, yes, bulldozing of flood-prone neighborhoods.

"I don't think the rest of the country will get behind something that doesn't fundamentally change the design," said Joseph Suhayda, of Baton Rouge, the former southeast regional director of the Federal Emergency Management Agency, which is leading the recovery effort in the city.

"If you are going to get the financing for this and if you are going to encourage people to go back in, you have to have a guarantee that this will never happen again," he said.

What Suhayda imagines is a radical facelift of a quirky and sometimes haphazard urban landscape that many find endearing, but that also has left the city perilously vulnerable to flooding. Katrina showed that a single breach in the miles of levees surrounding New Orleans could swamp this city, which is 9 feet below sea level at places.

Suhayda envisions 25-foot high partitions compartmentalizing sections of the city the way boat hulls are divided to isolate leaks. If there is a breach in one, the others would stay dry.

His most novel idea is a towering new super-levee stretching 12 miles across New Orleans connecting levees at each end of the crescent-like bend in the Mississippi River. The area, capable of withstanding the strongest hurricanes on record, would provide a "community haven" for all residents, he said.

Suhayda's ideas are more radical than most. But for better or worse, Katrina's devastation has awakened a steely sense of realism that New Orleans, as it is, isn't viable.

"We must recognize that we can't sustain residential populations in certain areas," said former U.S. Rep. Billy Tauzin, R-Chackbay.

Not everyone is convinced that New Orleans needs a fundamental geographic overhaul. Former Louisiana Sen. John Breaux, D-La., said attention should focus instead on raising the levees. He pointed out that the strongest, highest barriers along the river held.

"You can't just fill in (with dirt) 20 feet high and then rebuild," Breaux said. "What is more practical is to strengthen the levee structure."

But others see a historic opportunity in the gruesome ravages of disaster, a clean slate on which smarter planning could bring about changes that have been long contemplated, if not always spoken aloud.

Levees built in the 1960s to withstand a storm surge 9 to 12 feet high could be reinforced to keep out a wall of water nearly twice that high. New levees could be added where neighborhoods now lie submerged. Stronger pumping stations could be strategically relocated and raised to higher ground so they don't flood when the rest of the city does.

Neighborhoods such as eastern New Orleans and Lakeview, which are well below sea level, could be raised to 10 feet above the water line, making them less susceptible to flooding. Homes submerged for days or weeks could be leveled and rebuilt to tougher building codes.

"Out of nostalgia, do you want to put a shotgun shack back there where it floods all the time or say, 'Is there a better way?'" said David Schulz, director of the Infrastructure Technology Institute at Northwestern University. "In a very perverse way, this represents a significant opportunity for New Orleans."

Schulz sees wide-scale redevelopment as a chance to raise New Orleans out of poverty and attract new business to the region. He suggested a new local communications system based on broadband wireless, rather than traditional phone and cable lines. He envisions running fiber-optic cables to support new "knowledge-based" businesses as an alternative to the tourism, port and petrochemical industries that have long sustained the local economy.

"Imagine a city 287 years old transformed using 21st century technology," he said.

Still others see an opportunity to get the private sector to shoulder some of the burden of redeveloping the city, a job that would otherwise fall to the taxpayers.

Because of New Orleans' proximity to the oil and gas wells in the Gulf of Mexico, Flowers said the industry may be willing to pay a tax if it meant the region would have a reliable metropolitan anchor.

"The oil and gas companies have a big stake in this because it's their infrastructure that gets exposed by the loss of the wetlands and when you don't have hurricane protection," said retired Gen. Robert Flowers, former chief of the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers.

The last large-scale urban redevelopment project in the United States was in New York after the World Trade Center bombings. While lower Manhattan bears little resemblance to New Orleans, some see an object lesson in New York City's experience. Residents could offer up their ideas for designs in public "listening sessions." Tauzin suggested an international competition for a new city design.

The flamboyant former lawmaker even had an idea of his own: "Why not an American Venice where we no longer fear water, but channel it in a way that isn't a threat," Tauzin said.

Any radical redevelopment carries an enormous price tag whose multi-billion-dollar dimensions can only be guessed at. It also begs gut-wrenching personal and political questions: Which neighborhoods should be flattened? What happens to the people whose homes are taken to make way for new levees or flood walls? Will the old-world charm of New Orleans be trampled in the name of progress?

There are practical questions, too. The widespread taking of property and significant land-filling are certain to trigger protests from homeowners intent on remaining where they are and environmentalists worried about the effects of disturbing wetlands.

The government's hand in seizing private property was strengthened in June by the U.S. Supreme Court when a narrow majority gave city officials in New London, Conn., power to take homes to make way for a waterfront redevelopment. Federal flood insurance rules may leave many homeowners in seriously flooded areas little choice but to walk away. FEMA won't rebuild a house if, in its judgment, it is more than 50 percent ruined.

The difficulty could come, experts say, in areas of the city that sustained manageable flooding but that stand in the path of a proposed new levee, pumping station or canal.

"Clearly there will be some contentious decisions to be made," Schulz said.

Already, some potential clashes can be seen forming the horizon between preservationists interested in New Orleans' historical structures, however flawed, and engineers intent on constructing a hurricane-proof city.

A day after levees breached and water from Lake Pontchartrain began pouring into the city, Richard Moe, president of the National Trust for Historic Preservation, issued a press release imploring donations to restore New Orleans' many historic gems.

Moe said that the stabilization and restoration of the city's "world famed historic landmarks and neighborhoods should be a global concern." Significantly, Moe made no mention of landfills or flood walls.

Fortunately, the best known of New Orleans' landmarks, the French Quarter, was among the regions of the city least hurt by the flooding. Its survival is being held up as Exhibit A among those who say that filling in low-lying areas of New Orleans is the only surefire way of guaranteeing the survival of New Orleans in the face of future, inevitable storms.

As the oldest section of New Orleans, the French Quarter has weathered innumerable fires and floods over the past three centuries. It stayed relatively dry in Katrina because, at three feet above sea level, it is among the highest points in the city.

OPEN LETTER TO BLUE CROSS AND BLUE SHIELD OF LOUISIANA MEMBERS IMPACTED BY HURRICANE KATRINA

Dear Blue Cross Customer:

We know you face many obstacles and want to help you gain access to the health care you need. Please contact us if you have difficulty in reaching your physician or pharmacy. We can help you locate another physician or pharmacy, get you a new ID card, or answer questions about your coverage. If you lost or left behind a prescribed medication, you can obtain early refills through special provisions we have in place. Of course, in any emergency, please go to the nearest hospital available to you.

(800) 599-2583

If you are a physician or provider experiencing difficulty in serving members because of Hurricane Katrina, please contact us at (800) 392-4076.

Give us a call, we are here to help. You can also reach us at www.bcbsla.com.

Sincerely,

Gery Barry
President and Chief Executive Officer

01MK1801 9/05

An independent licensee of the Blue Cross and Blue Shield Association.
Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Louisiana incorporated as Louisiana Health Service & Indemnity Company.

PAN-AMERICAN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

Pan-American ask all employees and policy holders to contact us toll free Monday – Friday, 8am-5pm, central time at

1-877-939-4550

Operators are available to take your calls and provide information in the wake of Hurricane Katrina.

We are extending a 60 day grace period on premium payments for residents of Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama and Florida.

NOTICE

to ALL POLICYHOLDERS of GENERAL STAR NATIONAL INSURANCE COMPANY
and
GENERAL STAR INDEMNITY COMPANY

We hope you have all safely weathered the storm, with as little disruption to your lives and businesses as possible. If you have suffered a loss that may be covered under your General Star insurance policy, however, we urge you to report the claim to your local agent so we can begin to assist you promptly.

If you can't reach your local agent, contact us directly at General Star.

DURING REGULAR BUSINESS HOURS
by telephone
800 624 5237 or 203 328 5700
or by fax
800 331 0601 or 203 328 5840

AFTER BUSINESS HOURS
by telephone
866 868 7069

GeneralStar
Beyond Security®

General Star Management Company, Stamford, Connecticut
© 2005 General Re Corporation A Berkshire Hathaway Company

HURRICANE KATRINA AFTERMATH

Louisiana death toll: 'A lot'

Numbers suspected to be in thousands, but nothing official

By Gwen Filosa
Staff writer

Federal and state officials acknowledged Saturday that the Louisiana death toll from Hurricane Katrina could be in the "thousands," but repeatedly said they had no official number insisting that the dead were not their priority as long as so many survivors remained trapped in the devastated region.

The count in Mississippi was at 147 and likely to rise, officials there said, while those in Louisiana remained grimly silent about any numbers.

"I know there are bodies up there," said U.S. Army Col. John Smart, when asked about how many estimated dead were at the Ernest N. Morial Convention Center in downtown New Orleans.

Smart, the chief of operations for the military effort in Louisiana, added, "That is not our mission."

Since Monday, when Katrina struck, officials from federal agencies and the governor's office have said it was not their job to count the dead. Federal Emergency Management Agency officials referred the question to the state and local officials including parish coroners. Gov. Kathleen Blanco's administration turned the question back to FEMA.

On Saturday, the bureaucratic vision changed: The federal Disaster Mortuary Operational Response Team will collect and count those whose lives were lost in the catastrophe, said Rear Adm. Craig Vanderwagen of the U.S. Public Health Unit. It is the same federal unit that dealt with the aftermath of the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks in New York, Washington, D.C., and Pennsylvania.

Vanderwagen said a starting figure of the dead could come today or Monday at the latest.

Asked for an estimate of the dead, Blanco said, "A lot."

It could be in the thousands, she quickly added, but "we don't know."

FEMA Director Mike Brown was visibly displeased with repeated requests for an estimated death toll. Brown not only bristled at the question, but told reporters it was "amazing" that the question was being pressed.

FEMA has established a makeshift morgue in St. Gabriel, where a dozen refrigerated trucks were on site Saturday and 16 were en route.

The disaster mortuary unit began work in the early 1980s, prompted by the National Funeral Directors Association as a solution to dealing with mass casualty crises. A "disaster portable morgue unit" includes the technology and equipment to provide victim identification and mortuary services.

The teams are made up of private citizens from various fields of expertise, who work with local authorities to recover, identify and process the dead. Teams include funeral directors, medical examiners, coroners, pathologists and dental assistants, among other specialists.

At Hibernia, we understand, because we live and work here, too.

Over the years, we've learned there's nothing more important than the businesses and the people we serve, our employees, and their communities. Therefore, Hibernia is devoted to helping anyone whose life or business has been affected by Hurricane Katrina. We understand that rebuilding is a top priority, and we want to prevent natural disasters from turning into economic ones. Hibernia is dedicated to giving you and your business the financial support necessary for getting on with life.

A note to our employees:
If you haven't yet contacted your manager, please do so as soon as possible. If you need further information, please call the employee emergency hotline.

HIBERNIA
*Where service matters.*SM

Click
Log on to Hibernia.com

Visit
Any Hibernia banking office

EQUAL HOUSING LENDER ©2005 Hibernia National Bank, Member FDIC. Normal credit qualifications apply.

TENET notice

ATTENTION TENET EMPLOYEES AND PATIENTS

In response to Hurricane Katrina, TENET HEALTHCARE CORPORATION in Dallas has launched TWO DISASTER ASSISTANCE CENTERS to help these Tenet hospitals:

Kenner Regional Medical Center in Kenner, La. | Lindy Boggs Medical Center in New Orleans

Meadowcrest Hospital in Gretna, La. | Memorial Medical Center in New Orleans

NorthShore Regional Medical Center in Slidell, La. | Gulf Coast Medical Center in Biloxi, Miss.

EMPLOYEE DISASTER ASSISTANCE CENTER

Tenet employees and their families in need of assistance or information are encouraged to call 1 (866) 631-8917 or email Employee-DR@tenethealth.com.

PATIENT INFORMATION HOTLINE

If you are a patient, or need information about a patient at a Tenet hospital, please call 1 (866) 888-3638 or email Patient-DR@tenethealth.com.

HURRICANE KATRINA AFTERMATH

STAFF PHOTO BY CHRIS GRANGER

Lines of people wind through the streets of the Warehouse District as they wait for a bus to take them out of the city. More than 50,000 people had been waiting for rescue for nearly a week at the Superdome and New Orleans Convention Center. Most were finally taken out by bus and helicopter on Saturday.

Black caucus wants England base to be shelter

Members plan to bus 5,000 to Alexandria

By Steve Ritea
Staff Writer

Outraged by the lack of available shelter space in the state, members of the Louisiana Legislative Black Caucus called upon officials to open the former England Air Force Base in the Alexandria area to those displaced by Hurricane Katrina.

State Sen. Cleo Fields, D-Baton Rouge, said members of the caucus planned to use private donated buses and other vehicles to pick up about 5,000 people left along Interstate 10 in New Orleans and transport them to the base Saturday afternoon and evening.

Asked what they would do with the people they picked up if the base is not opened, Fields responded: "We need to open it."

Fields estimated the base has about 800 empty rooms that could house all 5,000 people.

Some displaced residents would also be taken to a shelter in Monroe by about 25 church vans manned by Rep. Willie Hunter and Sen. Charles Jones, both D-Monroe, among others.

Residents need shelter in their own state of Louisiana, caucus members said, not far-flung states such as Utah and Minnesota.

Caucus Chairman Rep. Cedric Richmond, D-New Orleans, also called on the American Red Cross to provide further aid in Algiers, where he and New Orleans City Councilman Oliver Thomas delivered bottled water to residents Friday.

"They were shedding tears when we gave them their supplies . . .we didn't encounter one incident of hostility," Richmond said, rebuffing reports that many left behind in the city are dangerous and hostile. "I don't think members of the military need guns as much as they need tents."

U.S Army Col. John Smart said multiple available military bases are being considered for shelters, including England, but he had no immediate knowledge of that base being available today.

Several military bases in Arkansas are receiving citizens displaced by the storm, he said.

More than 100 children and infants separated from their parents during evacuations from Hurricane Katrina or while moving between shelters need help being reconnected with their parents, officials said.

Mike Keller, who works for the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children, said about 100 children were being transported to a shelter in Corpus Christi, Texas, where their pictures will be taken and posted on the Internet; connections will be made with parents who have reported losing their children.

Anyone trying to get information or report a missing child or parent can access the Internet at www.missingkids.com or call 1-800-THE-LOST.

Marketa Garner Gautreau, assistant secretary of the state Department of Social Services, said another 26 children separated from their parents are still in Louisiana.

Visiting one shelter housing those children this week, Gautreau said she "went in expecting the worst" but "they were laughing, they were playing with toys, people were holding them."

Bystander says song prevented possible rioting

GOSPEL, from page A-1

Song for broken souls

Roach had arrived at the Convention Center to find a chaotic scene, where the only food or water or booze came from looters and people desperate to survive. Each day brought several new promises of buses for evacuation, each prompting a futile migration to a pickup spot where buses didn't arrive.

Each night brought the terror of darkness, thuggery and mob rule. Several times a day, witnesses said, gunshots rang out, prompting stampedes that they said had killed at least one child. Others said a girl - age estimates ranged from 10 to 14 - had been raped in a bathroom, her throat cut. Untreated medical emergencies caused far more deaths, witnesses said. As in the rest of the flooded city, no one had started counting the dead while the living remain in imminent danger of adding to their ranks.

"New Orleans of all places," said Jesse Jones, 57, sitting a few feet from Roach. People's eyes light up when you say, 'New Orleans.' Everybody wants to come here and play, and now they forget about us. They just sent us food and water last night. I just can't believe this is happening in America."

Roach's husband, Salvatore Hall, said the infirm had no medical attention for days. "We've got people out here with oxygen tanks that have run out, and they are lying to them saying they haven't, so they won't panic," he said.

Still Roach sang. She prayed and laid her hands on the afflicted. She thanked God to be alive. She shared food, water, hope and comfort, and repeated the same line to the broken souls who sought her shoulder to cry on.

"He saved us from the water, sweetie," she told a weeping woman, a stranger who had come to her to bum a light for her cigarette. "He won't abandon us in the aftermath."

"Just please pray for my daughter," the woman sobbed. "I ain't seen her since Sunday."

Miraculous event

Roach had turned to singing and praying when she herself panicked in her attic at 2510 Tupelo St. in the Lower 9th Ward. When the flood first came, Roach and her husband had been sleeping.

"Then the Lord woke me up, and I stepped into the water. When I went into the kitchen, the refrigerator was already floating. We wanted to get into it and float on it, like a boat, but it didn't work."

The water had risen past the first story in a matter of minutes, then the second. When the couple got into the attic, it rose again to the height of their chests, forcing them onto the roof, where the wind drove the rain into their skin so hard it felt like a thousand tiny knives.

She cried out: "Lord! Wake up, Jesus! Wake up! Stop the wind and the rain, Jesus. You said in your word that you would give us what we need."

Then her husband cracked, weeping, hysterical. He could see no way out: He knew he could swim, but his wife couldn't, and the current might swallow him up even if he had a mind to abandon her, which he didn't.

The sight of her husband weeping brought strength back to Roach - someone had to be strong. Then he drew on her strength, and they concentrated on trying to help a neighbor.

They saw their neighbor Brenda Carter on her roof two houses away. Again, the situation seemed hopeless. What happened next Roach attributed to divine intervention, as it was entirely too incredible for simple luck.

The house between their two houses collapsed and floated across the street. Then Roach and Hall felt their house shift, as if headed for the same grim fate. It began listing and revolving, but it suddenly stopped.

When they looked up, their house was touching Carter's, and they could walk from roof to roof. They huddled together on Roach's roof, at last together in their fight for survival.

"It had to be God," Roach said. "Who else but a God could do something like that?"

The rescue boat arrived Tuesday night, when a whole new struggle for survival began.

Roach and Hall walked to the Poland Avenue side of the St. Claude Avenue bridge, a collection point for the thousands of people rescued from the flooded Lower 9th Ward and St. Bernard Parish. They found no help there, only empty promises of a National Guard truck to pick them up. They spent another whole day there before a civilian volunteer took them to the Convention Center. "Once they put us on the bridge, we had nothing. They were finished with us," she said.

'We still got hope'

Once at the Convention Center they heard more empty promises. No help materialized until Saturday morning when Arkansas Guardsmen brought meals and water and coordinated the mass evacuation on school buses from across the state.

Before that, the only respite had been a helicopter drop of food, which for Roach was a depressing sight. "They dropped food on us like we're animals or we have some kind of disease, not like they're serving it to us now," she said.

Roach's family and that of her husband had suffered their own medical perils. Hall's aunt, Geraldine Valera, 71, stood weeping at the street corner near Roach. On top of myriad health problems, she had fallen in the back of a National Guard truck. She winced in pain. "You can't even wash off your face in this place," she stammered. "There's fights every night, you're laying on the floor sleeping, not knowing when you're going to get trampled."

Her husband Calvin Brown, Hall's uncle, had none of the medicine he needed. "I've seen people die. I've been in World War II and Korea, and I've never suffered like this," he said. "I've got a son who's a captain in the Fire Department, and I'm sure he'd come get me if he knew I was here. But I don't know where he is."

The singing from Roach, her husband and the crowd that often joined in didn't magically cure such ills, but it did go a long way toward keeping up their spirits.

Jones sat a few feet away, with bleary, red eyes and a mind tortured by the death of a close friend who had collapsed in front of him. But the singing soothed him. And more: He said it had headed off a near riot. "We had some rioting going on the other night, but when she broke out in a spiritual song it just sent a wave of calm through the whole crowd," he said. "None of our preachers, none of our evangelists -

Paul Morton and all of them - have even come here to see this. And they've got buses, jets and everything. But we still got hope."

It made Roach feel better, too. "It makes me feel so good that I can do that for people," she said. "Like when God calmed the sea, that I can give somebody peace," she said.

Trial by fire, water

Although elementally at odds, fire and water have become unlikely partners in the destruction of New Orleans, with the stagnant floodwaters and lack of water pressure making it nearly impossible to do anything about the sporadic blazes that have cropped up in the city in Katrina's aftermath.

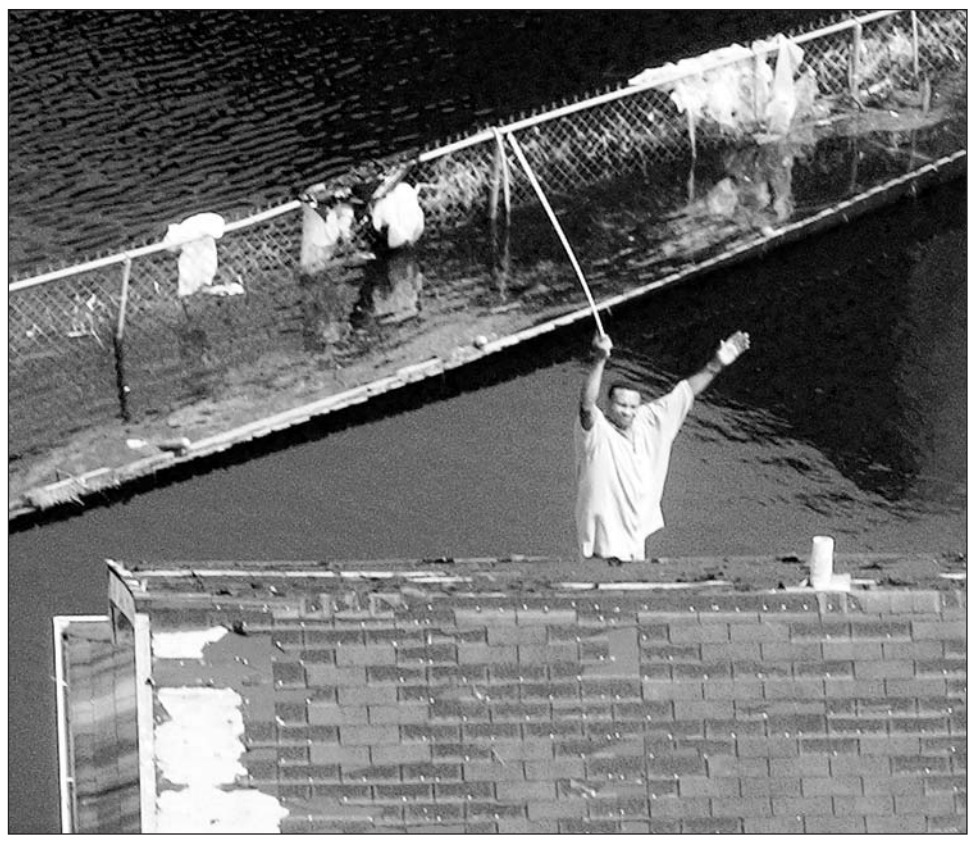
STAFF PHOTO BY JOHN McCUSKER

New Orleans: The smoke from several fires raging along the docks in the Faubourg Marigny obscures the bend in the Mississippi River on Saturday. The building to the right of the railroad tracks is the New Orleans Center for Creative Arts/Riverfront campus.



STAFF PHOTO BY JOHN McCUSKER

West End: Sailboats, tossed around by Katrina's winds and waves, lie in a heap at the New Orleans Yacht Club along the lakefront on Saturday.

STAFF PHOTO BY JOHN McCUSKER

New Orleans: Mausoleums jut from the floodwaters in Greenwood Cemetery on Saturday.

STAFF PHOTO BY BRETT DUKE

New Orleans: After floodwaters forced him to a rooftop, an unidentified man waves for help on Saturday.

STAFF PHOTO BY ELIOT KAMENITZ

Metairie: Vehicles park in the center of Airline Highway, the only dry spot on this stretch of the highway viewed Saturday from atop the Causeway Boulevard overpass.

"It was hard, but we made it. I just keep saying, 'Come on, we can do it. We can do it.' "

CELESTE HARRISON, eastern New Orleans resident

Refugees camp out on interstate

Women forever bonded after fleeing storm

By Meghan Gordon and Sheila Grissett
Staff writers

They slouched on both ends of a cot in the shoulder of Interstate 10, two women whose bodies were worn down and whose memories were etched with dozens of individual tragedies that they witnessed together in the days after swimming out of their flooded eastern New Orleans neighborhoods.

While helicopters dropped in and buses stacked up in the eastbound lanes behind them, Celeste Harrison, 44, and Charlene Williams, 42, sat still during the relatively orderly operation around them. Strangers before Katrina, the women said that they couldn't live another day without the other beside them.

Harrison and Williams were among the thousands who gathered on I-10, turning it into a refugee camp of anxious evacuees awaiting transport out of a flooded city.

Kidding each other about their unkempt hair and dreams of pedicures, the pair tried to push back the images of the unending journey out of their crumbling city. Just one of the memories could send someone spiraling down, but these women - like the near-hopeless refugees all around them near the Causeway Boulevard underpass at I-10 - carried with them countless troubling visions.

For Harrison and Williams, those included a paraplegic woman they couldn't drag from a roof, a father with a dead baby under each arm and a 2-week-old infant crushed when her mother lost grip of her during a stampede at the Ernest N. Morial Convention Center.

The women held each other up and prayed that they would board one of the buses Saturday.

Instead of dwelling on the psychologically scarring scenes of the previous six days, they hatched a plan to rebuild their lives together. Williams said she had no means to start over, but Harrison said she would take care of her new friend somehow - just like Williams said she had done to keep Harrison and other refugees moving when they wanted to give up.

"It was hard, but we made it," Harrison said, at times showing a hopeful smile. "I just keep saying, 'Come on, we can do it. We can do it.'"

By "made it," Harrison meant that they had survived long enough for the deliveries of food, water and dry clothes. They made it to the side of a highway where litter, mud and human waste surrounded them. They made it to the day that buses arrived frequently and refugees filed on without stampeding.

Ernest Smith, 10, made it to that moment, too. Speaking in a calm but urgent voice like that of someone many times his age, Smith said he had been watching out for his elderly grandparents, with whom he lived on Camp Street. He finally had food and water, but he wasn't sure he would make it out to hug his mother in Atlanta.

"I would tell her, 'I love you. Please come get me, and I don't want to be out here no more,'" Smith said.

About 50 yards away, Jerome Wise didn't know whether he would see his wife and six of his seven children again. Wise stayed behind at his house near Hayne Boulevard and Sheephead Street, near the New Orleans Lakefront Airport, because his 19-year-old son had to work a shift at McDonald's last weekend.

All Wise carried in his single bag was a portrait of his large family.

It showed Wise with a much fuller face and a broad smile. On Saturday morning, he paced with a grimace, telling in reverse the chronology of the past six days: two days along the highway, another at University of New Orleans and four days on the roof of his house.

"I can't go no more," he said, holding his palms up and out in a gesture many of the refugees used to express their dwindling hope. "Nobody wants us. Nobody wants to help New Orleans."

But by 1:15 p.m. Saturday, the final two helicopters whipped up the debris as medics in scrubs carried the last injured refugees inside, including an old man who appeared limp on a stretcher. The line to board buses had disappeared. Most passengers had no idea which of the many refugee camps across southeast Louisiana would be their new home.

All that remained was a layer of disposed items where commuters once sipped their lattes in traffic. Random pieces of refuse covered the pavement: a right yellow slipper, an upside-down baby carriage, an unopened can of Blue Runner navy beans.

ZERO TOLERANCE

STAFF PHOTO BY ALEX BRANDON

NEW ORLEANS: A man bleeds from his wounds after he was shot Saturday by a New Orleans SWAT team member when he ran from them with a gun on the Interstate 10 overpass near the Superdome. Police were patrolling because they had heard reports of looters using stolen Kentwood water trucks. Afterwards police escorted him to a medical bus to be treated.

Our sympathies to all of those who have suffered so much in this great catastrophe. The City of New Orleans and all affected areas will recover. We will be there to assist all of our clients and friends.

Correro Fishman Haygood Phelps Walmsley and Casteix LLP

NOTE: We have temporarily relocated our offices to Baton Rouge. We can be reached at our normal e-mail addresses or through our website, www.cfhlaw.com, or by telephone at (225) 214-7162. Our temporary office is located at Suite 200C, 7389 Florida Blvd., Baton Rouge, Louisiana 70806.

Associated Office Systems

Office Furnishings to meet a variety of budgets, available for expedited shipment.

We have relocated our New Orleans office by expanding our existing Baton Rouge office to serve our customers who have suffered the ravages of Hurricane Katrina.

Call 225-766-5558
Fax 225-766-1019

aos

Serving Greater New Orleans and Baton Rouge for over 30 years

Fireman's Fund.
We're here to help our customers recover from Hurricane Katrina.

If you are a Fireman's Fund policyholder and suffered damage from Hurricane Katrina, we want to speak to you as soon as possible. Fireman's Fund is deeply concerned about your safety and welfare. Responding to your needs is our top priority.

To assist us in responding to your needs, please call your independent insurance agent or contact us at:

1-888-FIREHAT
(1-888-347-3428)

Fireman's Fund®

A company of Allianz

©2005 Fireman's Fund Insurance Company, Novato, CA

HURRICANE KATRINA AFTERMATH

St. Bernard rescuers find horrific scenes

STAFF PHOTO BY JOHN McCUSKER

ST. BERNARD PARISH: Six days after Hurricane Katrina struck Louisiana, Chalmette is still under water.

'Stephen King couldn't write a script like this'

31 dead in nursing home; man found with dead family

By Paul Rioux and Manuel Torres
St. Bernard bureau

As the last of the stranded St. Bernard Parish residents were rescued and evacuated, parish officials on Saturday turned their attention to recovering bodies, draining water and contaminated muck from the area, and dealing with looters and other criminals who Sheriff Jack Stephens said would be shot if encountered by police.

Finally reaching areas that had been rendered inaccessible by as much as 12 feet of water, rescuers found horrific sites, including a nursing home where 31 residents were dead and a man who spent days in the attic with members of his family, all of whom were dead.

Parish officials estimated that more than 6,000 people had been evacuated from St. Bernard since rescue efforts began Tuesday. Several hundred remain in the parish, not all of them law-abiding, officials said.

Stephens said he has ordered his officers to use deadly force to deal with the looters.

"We are in an absolute shoot-to-kill mode," Stephens said Saturday to his team gathered aboard the commandeered Cajun Queen. "Anybody who presents a clear danger is to be shot."

By Saturday evening no shots had been fired.

Stephens estimated the death toll to be in the hundreds. Twenty-two bodies were found tied together in Violet, which along with the rest of St. Bernard was one of the areas hardest hit by Hurricane Katrina. Officials said the 22 victims apparently had tied themselves together in a desperate attempt to survive the storm.

While the sheriff fears the death toll will be high, he said the actual number of deaths may never be known because some bodies might have washed into canals and other bodies of water. Stephens said he personally had watched two bodies float away.

For every few people rescued, another one or two have been found dead, officials said. Rescuers reached St. Rita s nursing home in Poydras to find 31 dead in their beds. Another 50 were rescued alive from the home but were in poor condition. One rescue team found a man sticking out of an attic, hollering for help. Volunteer rescuer, Patrick Lannes of Arabi, said the man yelled to them, "You have got to get me out here; my whole family is dead in here with me. "

The St. Bernard Parish Sheriff s Office was handling the mayhem with little federal aid, though international aid arrived in the form of 47 Canadian search and rescue specialists Thursday, officials said.

Some state Wildlife and Fisheries officers also were helping with the rescue effort, and dozens of volunteers came to the parish in boats to do anything, from clearing off the river levees to delivering water and other supplies. But there were few National Guardsmen in the parish.

"We didn t have any goddamn help," Parish President Henry "Junior" Rodriguez said. "You would think if those assholes didn t get any communications from us that they could figure out that we needed help."

Despite being recently released from the hospital after a three-month

Stay following gallbladder surgery, Rodriguez has remained in the parish, as well as many other parish officials - most of them staying in the courthouse.

As the rescue effort wrapped up, other problems mounted.

An oil leak at the Murphy Oil refinery in Meraux was several inches deep on top of the floodwaters. Fumes from the leak were overwhelming, officials said. Refinery officials were attempting to find the source of the leak and fix it.

STAFF PHOTO BY ELLIS LUCIA

ST. BERNARD PARISH: Antoinette Campo of Ysclosky is evacuated to a ferry that would take her across the river to Algiers with her husband.

The smell of the oil mingled with the stench of the sewage-laden waters, which were receding about six inches to a foot a day. Sections of Judge Perez and St. Bernard highways were dry, but litter, debris and boats surrounded the businesses along them.

In back of the Lexington Place subdivision in Meraux, raging flood waters had lifted homes, foundation and all, and thrown them against neighboring homes.

And where the land was dry, insurgents took hold. In the sheriff s Verret substation, a group of what he called "known criminals" took hold until a helicopter flyby scared them off.

"This is a catastrophe of biblical proportions," Stephens said. "Stephen King couldn t write a script like this."

STAFF PHOTO BY AMANDA McCOY

ST. BERNARD PARISH: Dominique Jones, 12, cradles her brother Thomas, 2 months, at Algiers Point. They walked 2.5 miles from their house.

Horn's presence felt by evacuees

Saints receiver lifts spirits of displaced in Astrodome visit

By Josh Peter
Staff writer

HOUSTON - He arrived at the Astrodome without a shred of clothing or paraphernalia identifying himself as a member of the New Orleans Saints. Instead, he wore an orange-and-white basketball jersey with matching shorts and sneakers.

No matter.

Joe Horn, Pro Bowl receiver for the Saints, drew a crowd of fans as soon as he stepped into the indoor stadium serving as a shelter for 15,000 evacuees who fled Louisiana after Hurricane Katrina left 80 percent of the city under water.

"Mr. Horn. Mr. Horn,'' one man shouted as he ran down the concrete stairs from the floor where Horn stood signing autographs for children, their parents and the elderly. "That's my man!''

Armed with a Sharpie pen, Horn circulated up and down the rows of green canvas cots on metal frames. He cradled babies, tussled young children on the head, clasped hands and bumped fists with the adults. He autographed scraps of paper, T-shirts and the inside cover of pocket-sized bibles. And all the while, Horn offered words of encouragement.

"Thanks, Joe,'' said Brittany Lombard, 18, when Horn approached her and four of her family members sitting in the padded but worn-out seats of the 40-year-old Astrodome. "You're the only one.''

Although other celebrities and athletes have pledged money toward the relief effort, Horn was one of the first prominent athletes or celebrities to visit the thousands of displaced evacuees - many of them longtime Saints fans. Lombard watched as Horn walked away and greeted another cluster of people wearing the pink wristbands they're issued when they enter the temporary shelter.

"There have been other people sending money and stuff, but we haven't seen their faces,'' she said. "He's the only one that came in to see us.

"He's talking to us like another person, like he knows what we're going through. So he's making a difference right there. These kids need that. They wander around here like nobody cares about that. When they see him, it gives them something to believe in.''

During his three-hour tour of the Astrodome - former home of Houston's professional football and baseball teams - children shadowed Horn, parents approached, and the elderly waved from their cots. Horn, never short on words, kept up a steady chatter with countless people as he walked across the indoor floor covered with cots and evacuees.

An older woman approached and told Horn she'd been rooting for the Saints since they played in Tulane Stadium.

"Baby, I watch you. Saw when they made you pay $30,000,'' she said, frowning as she recalled the fine Horn had to pay the NFL after he celebrated a touchdown by pulling a cell phone out of the goalpost pylon and pretended to make a call. "That was stupid.''

"I ain't hurt nobody,'' Horn said.

"Hell, no.''

"But I hurt him when I got in the end zone four times.''

The woman cackled.

Later, Horn reconsidered the promise he'd made not to pull the same cell-phone stunt again.

"If I can make it to the end zone against the Panthers,'' he said, referring to the Saints' regular-season opening game Sept. 11 against the Carolina Panthers in Charlotte, N.C., "I might pull out another one. Just to call you all back here.''

With that, he left behind a wake of chuckles and moved on and greeted more smiling admirers - including those who knew Hurricane Katrina had ripped two holes in the Superdome roof and, coupled with devastation across the city that would require several months to clean up, would force the Saints to find another place to play home games.

For instance, the Saints will play their "home" opener in New Jersey against the New York Giants.

"Maybe you all will get a new stadium,'' one man said.

"That don't even matter,'' Horn replied. "Man, I'd play on dirt, and that's for real. I'm not just talking to talk.

"That stadium stuff don't matter to me. If all the fans can get where we're at, we can represent.''

Instead of heading back to Tupelo, Miss., to visit his family after Saints coach Jim Haslett gave play-

See HORN, page 14

IMPORTANT NOTICE TO
ST. PAUL TRAVELERS CUSTOMERS

WE'RE HERE TO HELP.

If you have suffered a loss, please call us as soon as your family and property are safe from further harm.

Our claim services representatives are standing by 24 hours a day, 7 days a week to take your claim.

For Travelers Home & Auto claims, please call
800.CLAIM33
(800.252.4633)

For Travelers Flood claims, please call
800.356.6663

For St. Paul Travelers and Travelers Business claims, please call 800.238.6225

For St. Paul Business claims, please call
800.STPAUL1
(800.787.2851)

St. Paul Travelers employees affected or displaced by the hurricane, please call the Employee Service Unit at 800.441.4378

TRAVELERS
travelers.com
The Travelers Indemnity Company
and its property casualty affiliates
One Tower Square, Hartford, CT 06183

ST PAUL TRAVELERS
stpaultravelers.com
St. Paul Fire and Marine Insurance Company
and its property casualty affiliates
385 Washington St., Saint Paul, MN 55102

Bush orders 7,200 troops to join area effort

That would bring number in Gulf region to 30,000

By Paul Purpura
West Bank bureau

President Bush ordered more than 7,200 additional active duty troops to the region Saturday, joining the swelling ranks of National Guard soldiers and airmen who are streaming in with supplies and guns.

"Many of our citizens simply are not getting the help they need, especially in New Orleans, and that is unacceptable," Bush said Saturday in his weekly address, a day after he visited New Orleans and the Mississippi Gulf Coast. "In America, we do not abandon our fellow citizens in their hour of need."

As of Saturday morning, almost 4,600 active duty troops were in the region, according to the U.S. Northern Command, which is overseeing the active duty military contribution to the disaster.

Members of the 82nd Airborne division, the 1st Cavalry Division and the First and Second Marine Expeditionary Forces were en route to join Joint Task Force Katrina, the active duty military group commanded by Louisiana native Lt. Gen. Russell Honore.

The active duty troops will join a growing number of National Guard soldiers and airmen already in the region, Gov. Kathleen Blanco said.

By law, active duty troops cannot conduct law enforcement operations in civilian populations. The security role - troops on the street helping police restore order -- is handled by the National Guard acting under orders from state governors, officials said.

Blanco said that in light of Bush's order, she has asked Maj. Gen. Bennett Landreneau, Louisiana's adjutant, to focus the state's National Guard on security.

Of Bush's order to send more active duty forces to the area, Blanco said, "this is welcome news."

"A secure environment is critical to continuing search and rescue operations and restoration of critical infrastructure," Blanco said. "These men and women are doing heroic work saving people and restoring order."

Forty states have sent National Guard soldiers and airmen to Louisiana as of Saturday, said Jack Harrison of the National Guard Bureau in Arlington, Va.

About 22,000 National Guard troops have been sent to Louisiana,

Mississippi and Alabama, and the number is expected to grow to 30,000 today, he said.

"It's an unprecedented response in our history," Harrison said.

Blanco said 12,000 National Guard troops are in Louisiana, including 5,000 from the state. Another 4,000 are expected by Monday, Blanco said.

"These men and women are doing heroic work saving people and restoring order," Blanco said.

Air National Guard aircraft had flown more than 720 missions into the region, delivering more than 3,600 tons of "life-saving supplies and equipment to the region" and then evacuating more than 11,000 people, Harrison said.

In a radio interview Friday, Kenner police Chief Nick Congemi likened the military airlift operation taking place at Louis Armstrong International Airport to what he saw as a soldier in Vietnam.

The Coast Guard, meanwhile, which is part of the Department of Homeland Security, has sent 23 helicopters and five airplanes to the region. Coast Guard aircrews rescued more than 3,660 people between Monday and Saturday morning, the agency said.

In New Orleans, National Guard personnel moved 20,000 people out of the Superdome and secured the convention center. "They did provide and are providing to those who are still there sufficient food and water to everyone," Harrison said.

• • • • • •

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

Paul Purpura can be reached at ppurpura@cox.net

OUR HEART GOES OUT TO THOSE AFFECTED BY HURRICANE KATRINA.

Policyholders of Encompass Insurance who have been affected by the recent hurricane, please call 1-800-588-7400 to report your loss, 24 hours a day, 7 days a week.

The people of Encompass would like to let you know that our thoughts are with you.

The Encompass Catastrophe Team is available for claims handling, information or other assistance at 1-800-340-3016. For more information, you can also call or visit your independent agent.

Rest assured, Encompass stands ready to help you during this difficult time.

ENCOMPASS® INSURANCE

Important Hurricane Katrina Insurance Claims Information for Liberty Mutual Customers

Liberty Mutual claims professionals are on duty 24 hours a day. If you sustain damage to home or auto, call 1-800-2-CLAIMS (1-800-225-2467) or visit www.libertymutualinsurance.com to report your claim.

To assist policyholders and help facilitate prompt claims service, our catastrophe teams also will be on-hand in the areas hardest hit by the storm.

Remember – if you lose power, keep circuit breakers turned off and electrical appliances, equipment, and computers unplugged until all power is restored to prevent further damage from a surge.

Liberty Mutual

HURRICANE KATRINA AFTERMATH

Mannings arrive, provide relief

Quarterbacks receive harrowing tales of misfortune, survival

By Jimmy Smith
Staff writer

BATON ROUGE - Peyton Manning stood stoically, arms folded, in a corner of the arena floor at Southern's F.G. Clark Activity Center on Saturday afternoon and listened intently.

Daniel Weber, a 53-year-old New Orleans evacuee from the Lower 9th Ward and a resident of the Red Cross shelter at F.G. Clark since Tuesday, was relaying his heart-wrenching tale. And Manning, the Indianapolis Colts quarterback who along with his brother, Eli, of the New York Giants accompanied an Air Tran 737 jet loaded with 31,000 pounds of supplies for the relief effort, drank in every syllable of the horror.

"I thought it was an explosion, but it was the water blowing the doors off the hinges," said Weber, who lived on Reyne Street, between Tennessee and Forstall, almost directly behind the Industrial Canal levee breach that inundated his neighborhood Monday morning as Hurricane Katrina battered the city.

Weber's wife of 23 years, Rosetta Marrero, 44, wheelchair-bound because of several strokes, was in the couple's bedroom, and Weber said he struggled to get to her for a move into the home's attic.

When that failed, he said, he broke out a window so that he could attempt to push his wife through the water onto the roof.

"I was pushing her up," Weber told Manning, "and it got real quiet. I said, 'What's wrong, baby?' She said, 'I'm saying my prayers.' I got real scared.

"That's when I grabbed her by her shirt. But the water took her away I jumped in after her but couldn't find her. I know she's probably dead. I wanted to die right then. I wanted to see God, stand there and tell him, 'Look what you did to me?' If I could die tomorrow, I'd get right in his face and ask him 'What did you do?'

"She wanted to go to the Superdome. I thought I'd be the one to go first. I thought I'd never be without her. I never thought about life without her. I was supposed to take care of her. I'm sorry. I'm sorry. I really am. I'm sorry."

Manning placed his hand on Weber's shoulder. Weber had survived 14 hours floating in the water, clinging to debris, before a rescue boat ferried him to dry ground. He was transported to the Red Cross shelter, where he met up with about 10 other family members.

"We're praying for you," Peyton told him. "Hang in there."

"Thank you," Weber told Manning, adding, "How's your Dad doing?"

"There's nothing I can say," Manning said. "He said he laid in the water for 14 hours and said he was ready to give up. I'm glad he didn't give up. He obviously needs to talk. He says all that, and then he sits down and says, 'How's your Dad doing?' I didn't know what to say to that."

Manning shook his head.

"That's an unbelievable story," he said. "That's the kind of thing nobody is hearing about. Just unbelievable."

Wearing gray and white Red Cross disaster relief vests, Peyton and Eli spent nearly an hour walking the gymnasium. Ordinarily it is the home to the Southern basketball team, but it is housing about 400 evacuees, most of them from the Lower 9th Ward and St. Bernard Parish.

The quarterbacks patiently listened to evacuees' stories, signed autographs, posed for pictures, and told each one with whom they came in contact that their thoughts and prayers were with them.

"This makes me feel I'm a special person," said Donald Wells, 54, who lived on Caffin Avenue between Tonti and Miro near St. Claude Avenue in the Lower 9th Ward. "If they're coming to see me, there's hope. (Rapper) Master P, he claims he's from New Orleans. He ain't been here, and he ain't spent one dime."

At mid-week, Peyton said, he and Eli decided to put together some sort of relief effort, wanting initially to head to their native New Orleans until Red Cross officials told them that many New Orleanians had been moved here into shelters.

Working with companies with which they had business relationships, such as Gatorade, the Mannings collected 300 cases of the sports drink and 300 cases of bottled water. The Mannings purchased baby formula, diapers, blankets and pillows that will be distributed to shelters throughout the Baton Rouge area.

"We talked to the Red Cross and asked where was the best place we could make an impact," Peyton said. "They said Baton Rouge was the most feasible place to come because that's where the people from New Orleans were coming to.

"They're calling them refugees. But that's not the right word. They're New Orleans citizens. They said morale was low right now. Basically, we said 'Eli and I are coming. How can we help?' "

"Obviously," Eli said, "we don't know what they've gone through and how it has impacted their life. They don't know how their life is going to be and their future and how their life will be from there. If we can just go out there and talk to them, give them supplies and see what they need and talk to them and help them feel better about their situation right now, that's all we can do."

We know it takes confidence to get back on your feet.

Regions is committed to helping rebuild our communities.

That's why Regions Bank is here to support you in this critical time. Regions Bank is accepting donations for disaster relief through the American Red Cross. Ask your branch representative how you can help. In addition, Regions Bank is offering a variety of financial resources to assist you, including:

- Deferred payments and discounts on some consumer and business loans. (Call 1-866-453-9892 to make arrangements.)
- The fee that Regions charges its customers to use other banks' ATMs will be waived in hurricane-affected areas.
- The fee for non-Regions customers to use Regions ATMs in hurricane-affected areas will also be waived.
- Credit card line increases and payment deferment. To learn more about this option, please call 1-800-362-6299, or 1-800-892-3219 if you are a business owner.
- Fees waived for retail customers on incoming and outgoing wire transfers (International wire transfers not included).
- Consumer Line of Credit and Home Equity Line increases‡
- Discount rate on new direct consumer installment loans‡

Everyday confidence. REGIONS BANK SM

1-800-REGIONS (1-800-734-4667)

EQUAL HOUSING LENDER © 2005 Regions Bank. Member FDIC. Union Planters Bank merged with Regions Bank as of June 29, 2005. Special services available to the residents of this city only. These special offers subject to change and may be withdrawn at any time. Services to non-customers may be subject to fees charged by other banks. Loans subject to credit approval. ‡Subject to credit approval.

'They need people, they need love'

HORN, from page 13

ers the weekend off, Horn made the two-hour drive from San Antonio - temporary home to the Saints - and arrived in Houston on Friday.

Initially, Horn talked about handing out $100 bills and bringing food, cots and other necessities for the evacuees. But by Saturday morning, he opted for what he decided was a more practical and meaningful plan.

"You can't bring something for every family member,'' he said. "At the time my heart was pouring out, so I wanted to give something. I wanted to go to a bank, come back and pass out $100 bills. But that's not what's happening right now.

"They need people, they need love. Whatever we're called - celebrities or role models - they need to see that. They need to see that. They need to feel me. They need to tell me stories that no one's heard about. Kids needed me to be around.''

Those kids formed a cluster around Horn as he walked across the floor of the indoor stadium and person after person approached.

"It's great to see you,'' one man said as he extended his hand.

"I had to do this,'' Horn said, shaking the man's hand. "I had to do this.''

"I appreciate that there, man. So how you've been?''

"I've been blessed.''

"That's good. That's good, man.''

"You all right?

"Oh, man.''

Horn heard the desperation in the man's voice.

"Try to make sure everybody stays together and take care of yourself,'' he said. "That's the most important part right now."

"You got that right. All right, Joe, you take care.''

After about three hours in the Astrodome, Horn made his exit - slowly. Outside the stadium, on the way to his car, he talked to Sidney Madison, who wore a gold-and-black Saints cap with the distinctive Fleur-de-lis. Madison, 59, said he was a season-ticket holder since 1988 and earlier in the week spent two days on his roof in New Orleans before being rescued.

"If I could've brought big boilers, I could have had a little crawfish boil out here on the grass,'' Horn said. "That would've been cool, wouldn't it?

"I'm going to call out to the city services and say, 'Why don't you all go and drop some of them and have a crawfish boil.' Mudbugs, baby."

"Mudbugs,'' Madison said. And as Horn walked off, the man added, "It's nice to see him. It lifts your spirits a little bit.''

Next Horn spotted six young men who looked to be in their late teens or early 20s. They were sitting on a concrete ramp, holding bananas and eating lunch that had been distributed to the evacuees.

Horn approached the young men.

"What's up fellas?''

"What's up?''

"You all right?'

"Yeah.''

"Good job, man. Much love. You all taking care of your brothers?''

"Yeah.''

"That's what it's all about. Man, all that other stuff is for the birds. You know what I'm saying. All these kids walking around here need somebody. Brothers left. Daddies left. You know what I'm saying.''

"Yeah.''

"That's what I'm going to be thinking about when I get back. Man, all you brothers take care of them little ones. You know what I'm saying?''

"Yeah.''

"Straight up. Straight up. We're going to rise again, man. Louisiana's going to be there. The water's going to go. We're going to get back up in there and do our thing. That's why you all got to be positive, man."

"Man, I'm just very happy,'' he said. "I'm very upbeat now. I feel better. Believe me, I feel a lot better."

But he also left vowing to make good on his pledge: to represent New Orleans no matter where the Saints were playing and to do everything he could to give the spirit of a distraught and displaced community a much-needed lift.

OUR OPINIONS

An open letter to the President

Dear Mr. President:

We heard you loud and clear Friday when you visited our devastated city and the Gulf Coast and said, "What is not working, we're going to make it right."

Please forgive us if we wait to see proof of your promise before believing you. But we have good reason for our skepticism.

Bienville built New Orleans where he built it for one main reason: It's accessible. The city between the Mississippi River and Lake Pontchartrain was easy to reach in 1718. How much easier it is to access in 2005 now that there are interstates and bridges, airports and helipads, cruise ships, barges, buses and diesel-powered trucks.

Despite the city's multiple points of entry, our nation's bureaucrats spent days after last week's hurricane wringing their hands, lamenting the fact that they could neither rescue the city's stranded victims nor bring them food, water and medical supplies.

Meanwhile there were journalists, including some who work for The Times-Picayune, going in and out of the city via the Crescent City Connection. On Thursday morning, that crew saw a caravan of 13 Wal-Mart tractor trailers headed into town to bring food, water and supplies to a dying city. Television reporters were doing live reports from downtown New Orleans streets. Harry Connick Jr. brought in some aid Thursday, and his efforts were the focus of a "Today" show story Friday morning.

Yet, the people trained to protect our nation, the people whose job it is to quickly bring in aid were absent. Those who should have been deploying troops were singing a sad song about how our city was impossible to reach.

We're angry, Mr. President, and we'll be angry long after our beloved city and surrounding parishes have been pumped dry. Our people deserved rescuing. Many who could have been were not. That's to the government's shame.

Mayor Ray Nagin did the right thing Sunday when he allowed those with no other alternative to seek shelter from the storm inside the Louisiana Superdome. We still don't know what the death toll is, but one thing is certain: Had the Superdome not been opened, the city's death toll would have been higher. The toll may even have been exponentially higher.

It was clear to us by late morning Monday that many people inside the Superdome would not be returning home. It should have been clear to our government, Mr. President. So why weren't they evacuated out of the city immediately? We learned seven years ago, when Hurricane Georges threatened, that the Dome isn't suitable as a long-term shelter. So what did state and national officials think would happen to tens of thousands of people trapped inside with no air conditioning, overflowing toilets and dwindling amounts of food, water and other essentials?

State Rep. Karen Carter was right Friday when she said the city didn't have but two urgent needs: "Buses! And gas!"

Every official at the Federal Emergency Management Agency should be fired, Director Michael Brown especially. In a nationally televised interview Thursday night, he said his agency hadn't known until that day that thousands of storm victims were stranded at the Ernest N. Morial Convention Center. He gave another nationally televised interview the next morning and said, "We've provided food to the people at the Convention Center so that they've gotten at least one, if not two meals, every single day."

Lies don't get more bald-faced than that, Mr. President. Yet, when you met with Mr. Brown Friday morning, you told him, "You're doing a heck of a job."

That's unbelievable.

There were thousands of people at the Convention Center because the riverfront is high ground. The fact that so many people had reached there on foot is proof that rescue vehicles could have gotten there, too.

We, who are from New Orleans, are no less American than those who live on the Great Plains or along the Atlantic Seaboard. We're no less important than those from the Pacific Northwest or Appalachia. Our people deserved to be rescued. No expense should have been spared. No excuses should have been voiced. Especially not one as preposterous as the claim that New Orleans couldn't be reached.

Mr. President, we sincerely hope you fulfill your promise to make our beloved communities work right once again. When you do, we will be the first to applaud.

MONEY

Restoring electricity will be daunting task

506,000 Entergy customers still without power

By Keith Darcé
Business writer

Restoring electricity to the hardest-hit areas of southeastern Louisiana likely will take more than a month, the state s largest power utility said Saturday.

The slow draining of floodwater from Orleans, St. Bernard and Plaquemines parishes will keep much of those areas in the dark for weeks longer than other parts of metropolitan New Orleans, Entergy spokesman Chanel Lagarde said.

Public security also must be restored in New Orleans before utility crews can move in and begin work, he said.

About 506,000 Entergy customers in southeastern Louisiana remained without power late Saturday afternoon, down from 800,000 at the height of the historically massive storm outage, Lagarde said. But most of the restoration work thus far has occurred in the Baton Rouge area.

On the north shore of Lake Pontchartrain, about 77,000 Cleco Corp. customers remained without power Saturday, down from 80,000, Cleco spokeswoman Susan Broussard said. Electricity was back on at most hospitals, city halls, police stations and fire stations.

Power also was flowing along the major retail business corridor of Louisiana 190 from downtown Covington to Interstate 12, she said.

Most of the utility s transmission system had been re-energized in St. Tammany, but a major transmission line between Madisonville and Bogalusa feeding Washington Parish remained down, Broussard said.

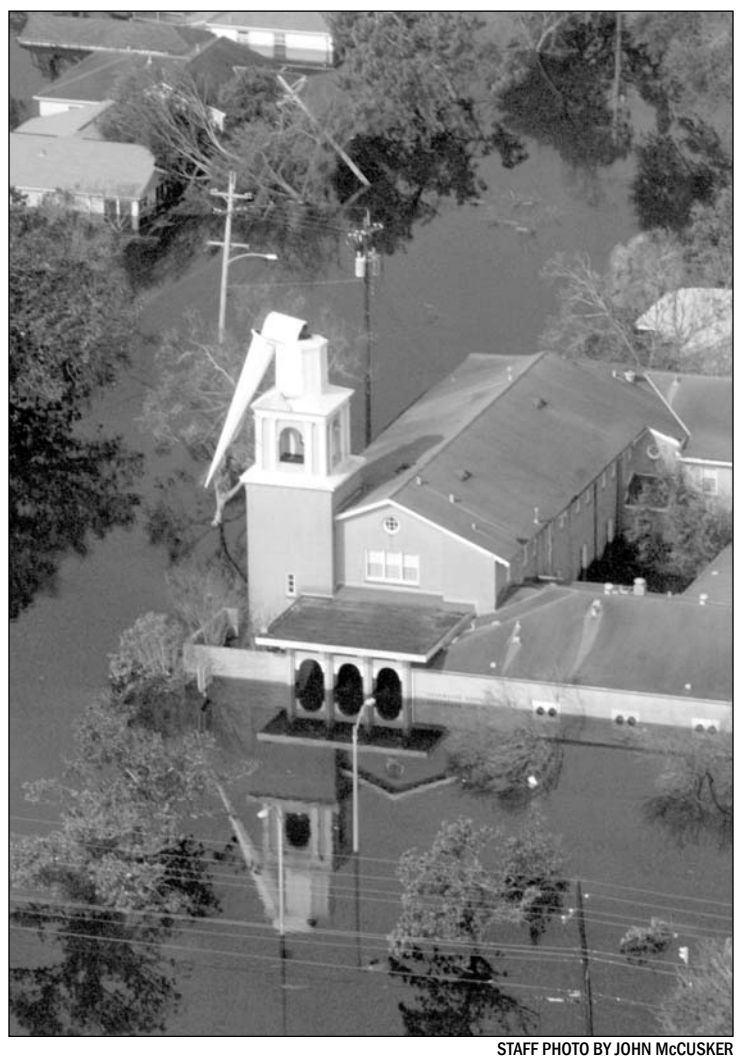
More than 10,000 utility line workers were in southeastern Louisiana on Saturday, up from 6,000 just a day earlier. And more help from out-of-state utilities was on the way, Lagarde said.

Work repairing the catastrophic damage inflicted on the local grid continued to gain traction, but the job remained daunting. Entergy crews restored power to 29,000 homes and businesses in Algiers on Friday, only to lose the services Friday night, said Public Service Commissioner James Field of Baton Rouge.



Meanwhile, some evacuees settling into temporary homes and apartments in Baton Rouge were told Friday by Entergy that it would take at least three weeks to turn on electricity in their new residences.

"That s unacceptable," Field said. "(Entergy) will have to have a very, very good explanation to explain that. A seven-day period would be reasonable."

Lagarde said late Saturday afternoon that new customers in Baton Rouge would be connected within five days.

• • • • • •

Contact Keith Darcé at nolapaperboy@cox.net.

STAFF PHOTO BY JOHN McCUSKER

Massive winds from Hurricane Katrina snapped power lines and ripped the steeple of this church in New Orleans, disrupting electricity to the city. Most homes and businesses in New Orleans and surrounding suburbs don't have electricity services and won't for weeks, utility managers said.

Gas stations either on empty or full

La. fuel prices hit record high

By Allen Powell and Mary Judice
Staff writers

Swathed in orange mesh vests with clip-on ties dangling from their shirt pockets, Angneak Cannon and Kimberly Converse were doing a fairly good impression of traffic cops at the Exxon gas station on the corner of Bluebonnet Road and Airline Highway Saturday morning.

Cannon, 24, had he standard police hand gestures down pat as she barked out orders to drivers waiting for gas in a line that started snaking around the station's main building at 7 a.m. Ruling the parking lot with an iron fist, Cannon disdainfully thwarted drivers attempting to circumvent the line, but still managed a humorous outlook on the whole situation.

"They coming with barrels and cans, anything. These people are crazy," Cannon said.

Cannon said there is no limit on how much gas drivers may purchase, but added, "Ain't no skipping and no fighting. Not today."

Hurricane Katrina has turned the process of finding gas in Baton Rouge into a demented scavenger hunt with signs along the streets dolefully proclaiming "NO GAS," and many station managers clueless about when the next shipment will arrive. Drivers searched for blocks to find pumps that were not draped in plastic bags, and some stations would only allow drivers five minutes to fill tanks.

On Perkins Road, a few miles away from Cannon's swamped station, drivers at Shell and Chevron stations were able to get their gas in roughly five to 10 minutes. Jan Soule, of Baton Rouge, said this was her first time having to fill up since Katrina hit, and she was surprised at the ease of the experience. Soule said she was only filling up her vehicle and didn't feel the need to hoard gas in gas cans.

On a quick ride through Baton Rouge along Perkins Road, Highland Drive, College Drive, Airline Highway and several other streets, more than 10 gas stations were without gasoline.

As spot shortages hit Baton Rouge area service stations and gasoline prices in Louisiana hit all time highs Friday, prices for gas for future delivery fell 23 cents a gallon on the New York Mercantile.

The loss of Gulf of Mexico oil production and much of the Gulf Coast refinery production in the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina exacerbated already tight supplies nationwide, causing gasoline shortages.

Mike Right, spokesman for the American Automobile Association in St. Louis, said shortages were being experienced in Baton Rogue, Jackson, Miss.; and some parts of Tennessee -- areas which received New Orleans evacuees.

In Baton Rouge, regular gasoline hit an all time high of $2.59 a gallon Friday, according to AAA, up more than 42 cents a gallon higher from a month ago. A year ago, motorists paid $1.79 a gallon for regular unleaded in the Baton Rouge market and an average $1.84 a gallon for diesel. As motorists elsewhere in the nation filled tanks for Labor Day travel, they paid more than $3 a gallon in some markets.

Right said he did not know if any stations had shut down in the Baton Rouge area Saturday because the organization could not get in touch with its survey team in the Louisiana market.

"Hopefully it is a temporary situation where they are out of product for a couple of hours,'' he said. "The oil companies are making a significant effort to keep the area supplied because of demand for fuel for emergency vehicles.''

One problem in the Baton Rouge market is the population explosion, Right said.

"Demand is up significantly from Friday of last week,'' he said. "It will be difficult to keep up.''

In areas directly affected by the storm, he said shortages were more widespread and of longer duration.

As of midday Saturday 79 percent of oil production in the Gulf of Mexico remained shut down and almost one-third of the manned platforms in the Gulf evacuated.

Yet gasoline supplies are expected to increase shortly.

Exxon Mobil has received approval from the Department of Energy for a loan of up to six million barrels of oil from the Strategic Petroleum Reserve to increase gasoline production at its second largest refinery in Baton Rouge.

The refinery also expects oil from the nation's only deep water oil port, Louisiana Offshore Oil Port which is located in the Gulf of Mexico below Grand Isle.

"The issue has been getting crude into the refinery,'' Mark Boudreaux, Exxon Mobil's media relations manager said Saturday from Dallas.

Boudreaux said the refinery had operated at reduced capacity during the storm but had never been shut down. "We are ramping up gasoline production now,'' he said. "This will help ease customer demands in regions hit hardest by Hurricane Katrina."

Boudreaux said Exxon is working to restore power to the pipeline and marine transportation system to get oil into the refinery and gasoline to consumers in the affected area and elsewhere.

There may be some price relief in sight. Oil futures fell for the second consecutive day Friday to close down 23 cents at $68.71 a barrel in New York Mercantile Exchange trading. Futures had soared to a high of $70 a barrel in trading Thursday.

The price drop for crude futures may have resulted from news that oil companies would bring additional supplies of gasoline from Europe. Bloomberg News reported that oil companies were importing 130 million gallons of gasoline.

Cannon said she and Converse typically work at an Exxon station on Essen Lane and Perkins Road, but said they were told Saturday that their store was one of six Exxon stations in Baton Rouge that will be closed because there is not enough gas to supply it.

Port may lose some cargo business

Long-diverted ships may stick to routes

By Jaquetta White
Business writer

The Port of New Orleans, already losing several million dollars daily because it remains unable to operate after Hurricane Katrina, probably will lose permanently some of the cargo business it once handled.

Vessels bound for New Orleans are being diverted to competing ports in Houston, Tampa, Fla., and Mobile, Ala. And the longer ships use those alternative routes, the less likely they are to return to New Orleans.

"Some of them will remain over there," said Anatoly Hochstein, director of the Ports and Waterways Institute in Arlington, Va. When the port is fully operational again, "at best it would be the same as before, more probably it will be worse."

A rule of thumb when dealing with cargo movement is that business tends to stay put unless there's a reason it has to move. That could be troubling for local ports as they try to regain their footing. Traffic they lose now to other Gulf Coast competitors might not come back.

The Coast Guard has opened some stretches of the Mississippi River to vessels with a draft, or depth, of no more than 35 feet, and priority is given to military ships and those carrying oil. But deeper-draft vessels will have to wait until the Coast Guard can conduct soundings to check for sunken barges or other impediments.

The port itself escaped major structural damage. Port President and CEO Gary LaGrange said in an assessment report that the roofs, outside walls and doors of several buildings and sheds were damaged. Included in those, he said, are the Julia Street Cruise Terminal, which has sections of its roof missing. The port's heavily used sheds at Governor Nichols Street and Esplanade Avenue also were damaged.

"Our wharves appear to be, for the most part, intact and able to conduct cargo operations," LaGrange wrote in the report.

Power, people needed

The gantry cranes at the Napoleon Avenue Container Terminal also were not damaged, said David Wagner, the port's chief operating officer, but they can't be operated without electricity.

However, with the situation in the city still uncertain, it's possible port facilities could be damaged in the wake of the storm. For example, fires were still raging Saturday along a stretch of old secondary wharves in the Bywater.

Another major issue for the port is trying to locate its employees, Wagner said.

"Physically, we're ready to operate. But getting electricity and people are the biggest issues," Wagner said. "It doesn't make sense to have a bunch of cargo in the wharf if you can't do anything with it."

The port has not said how much money is lost each day it doesn't operate. But a 2002 shipping accident that shut the Southwest Pass of the Mississippi River to maritime traffic for about a week cost the local economy about $3 million per day.

If the port can become operational within a couple of weeks, much of the cargo lost to other reports will return, Wagner said. But if service is suspended for months, "that's a different story," he said.

Some cargo will return to Louisiana no matter how long the suspension of services lasts, said Hochstein of the Ports and Waterways Institute.

"Petroleum and grain will immediately come back to New Orleans for obvious reasons," he said.

It would be difficult and costly to duplicate the massive grain elevators and petroleum terminals around the state, he said. But the container traffic is much more easily shifted and could be lost, Hochstein said.

The Port of New Orleans last year opened its Napoleon Avenue Container Terminal with the hope of gaining a larger share of the container market. Most containers enter and leave the country through the twin ports of Los Angeles and Long Beach, Calif.

East Jeff emerges mostly intact

By Sheila Grissett and Meghan Gordon
Staff writers

East Jefferson has escaped the unfathomable destruction that Katrina delivered to much of the New Orleans region, but the damage done to its pockets of urban forest and its utility infrastructure has changed the face of Lake Pontchartrain's south shore suburb.

It was impossible to tell Saturday just how much water had entered homes in the lowest-lying sections of Metairie and Kenner, because fallen power lines and thousands of toppled trees and utility polls blocked streets in dozens of neighborhoods.

The only significant east bank flooding that remained standing five days after the hurricane was in and around Old Metairie. It was blamed on water flowing into New Orleans from the 17th Street Canal breach, then entering Metairie along Airline Drive east of Labarre Road and at Northline.

Northline, a picture-postcard lovely street known for the canopy of giant oaks that shades its mansions, still held eight feet of water and wasn't accessible, said Robert Lambert, general manager of the Lake Pontchartrain Causeway Commission. He said that water was expected to recede when repairs to the canal breech are finished and Jefferson Parish is able to turn on its drainage pumps.

To the south and west, a stretch of heavily commercial Airline Drive was covered by estimated 20 feet of foul, black water at its lowest point beneath the railroad underpass at Airline Drive. Buildings on both sides were flooded, including Delta Petroleum.

But if instances of standing water were isolated, the results of hurricane winds and tree-related destruction were visible throughout Metairie and Kenner. The degree of damage varied block by block, house by house -- a few shingles here, part of a roof -- while wooden fences were lost everywhere. In the worst cases, trees had bashed homes, but that seemed to be the exception rather than the rule.

There was little evidence of cleanup by residents; in fact, few residents were sighted during a tour of East Jefferson. And there was no obvious evidence of looting. Perhaps would-be thieves were scared off by promises of retribution displayed by homeowners, one of which read, "You loot. We shoot." Or perhaps it was the major police presence, especially in Kenner, where officers in marked cruisers ran up and down the streets.

In Kenner, the storm blasted away the entire front of Nina's Hallmark Shop at Chateau Boulevard and West Esplanade Avenue, leaving rows of cuddly Beanie Babies sitting tidy and untouched on their front shelves just inches from the destruction.

It looked to Lambert and other observers as though some of the worst damage might have been caused by a tornado or two skipping about East Jefferson. A house on Teton Drive in the Woodlake subdivision in Kenner was heavily damaged, large portions of its roof and exterior walls ripped away. But houses on either side sat relatively undisturbed.

One resident of the subdivision said some homes on the lower-lying streets took enough water to destroy spas and hot tubs.

There were no large areas of obliteration spotted in any of the accessible areas toured Saturday, but there were pockets of major damage. The north end of Causeway Boulevard, for example, had been littered with trucks from a U-haul rental center. They had been picked up by the storm and dropped onto the road.

"After the storm passed, those trucks were completely blocking Causeway Boulevard," Lambert said. "The storm threw them like toys."

By Saturday, only a lone truck remained on its side in a Causeway turn lane, unusable anyway because of the numerous downed power lines and poles on nearby West Esplanade. West Esplanade, in fact, was blocked at several different spots throughout Kenner and Metairie.

Katrina's winds toppled a billboard into West Esplanade's drainage canal at Causeway, and further west, had so damaged the storefront of Robert's Fresh Market at Transcontinental that an old Winn-Dixie sign was the only thing legible on the front of the store.

"The cleanup will be massive, but the parish and Kenner have done a good job of clearing a lot of these major streets," Lambert said. "But I think people are going to have a hard time believing what they see when they get back."

Susan Laporte, who spent the day Katrina hit in a friend's Old Metairie home, may or may not return to Jefferson Parish during hurricane season if she ever gets away from this one. She stayed during the hurricane to be near her parents, but says she won't stay again.

"If we get Jefferson Parish up and running again and I stay here, I think I'd leave even for a (Category) 1 storm," she said, wiling away Saturday morning on a front porch swing. "There was a new scare every day, and I was really scared of looters."

She said she kept her boyfriend's pistol handy. But it wasn't necessary.

There's a shoe store on the corner with the window broken out (from the storm), and there's not a shoe missing," Laporte said. "And that's been pretty hard for my sister and me," she added with a laugh.

STAFF PHOTOS BY ELIOT KAMENITZ

Army medical personnel help provide cover for two elderly women as they wash themselves as they wait to be evacuated near the intersection of Veterans Memorial Boulevard and Causeway Boulevard

Celeste Harrison uses a box for shade as she waits with her new friend, Charlene Williams, to be evacuated by bus. They said they met while walking from Bullard Avenue in eastern New Orleans to Jefferson Parish.

Return plan set to go forward

Influx expected to clog traffic

By Matthew Brown
West Bank bureau

Even though streets are strewn with storm debris, some neighborhoods remain flooded and almost all homes lack electricity and drinking water, Jefferson Parish residents will be allowed to return Monday at 6 a.m., Parish President Aaron Broussard reiterated Saturday, despite widespread skepticism from state and other parish officials.

Parish officials will begin allowing residents entry, providing the driver of the car has identification showing a Jefferson address. Residents will be able to access their homes only via Airline Drive or Jefferson Highway in East Jefferson and U.S. 90 on the West Bank, Emergency Management Director Walter Maestri said.

Anyone not in the car queue at the parish line by 6 p.m. will be denied entry that day but may return the next day. The 12-hour window of entry applies Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday.

All residents are urged to leave the parish after taking care of their homes, parish officials said.

Residents are advised to bring a full tank of gasoline, food and drinking water, as well as a claw hammer and pliers to pull out carpet, disinfectant to prevent mold and materials to secure damaged windows and doors.

An estimated 350,000 of Jefferson's almost 500,000 residents fled before or immediately after Hurricane Katrina struck Monday, and thousands more are thought to have left as the week wore on.

With a massive influx of return traffic expected Monday, parish officials recommended residents carpool and be prepared to walk several blocks to their homes, as only major streets are being cleared of debris. Many side streets remain choked with downed tree limbs and power lines. Emergency management officials also warned women not to come alone for safety reasons.

On Thursday, the parish will reopen to anyone, regardless of residency, Broussard said.

Despite the open doors, Jefferson remains a site of destruction. Floodwater stands in the southwest portion of the University City subdivision of Kenner, at Transcontinental Drive and Kawanee Avenue in Metairie and in two parts of Old Metairie. Broussard said he has received criticism of his plan from other parish officials, law enforcement agencies and the state, but he has not wavered.

"We're under martial law. And there's only one marshal: Me," Broussard said. He said the Louisiana Emergency Assistance and Disaster Act of 1993 gives him full authority to override any objections from the Parish Council, and he said state officials have reluctantly agreed to the plan.

Asked about that Saturday, Gov. Kathleen Blanco said she wants "to work with Parish President Broussard. We want to make sure it doesn't hurt recovery efforts."

She strongly urged residents to have patience. "I know everyone wants to go clean their yards, check on their homes and get back to their normal lives."

Although the state may comply with Broussard's plan, some parish officials have openly disagreed with him. They contend Jefferson is not ready for its residents. Few businesses are open to sell such basics as food, water, ice and gasoline, and the only two aid distribution centers in operation have had hours-long lines. And with hospitals full to capacity or shut down all together, those who are sick or injured have few options.

"I realize people's houses are important to them, but personal safety comes first," Parish Councilman Chris Roberts said. "Yes, the parish president has made a decision to let people back, (but) I am recommending folks to reconsider coming back."

Roberts said that even if residents come back with full tanks of gasoline, they could use up much of that fuel during a 10- to 15-hour wait in traffic.

Broussard said he is working with the Sheriff's Office to set up traffic control at key intersections. But he acknowledged that many intersections would remain unstaffed, and he urged drivers to be cautious. With electricity service down in most of the parish, few traffic lights will be operating.

Kenner Police Chief Nick Congemi said he is concentrating on how to manage Monday's traffic. "We have major concerns, but it's his (Broussard's) decision to make," he said.

The Kenner Police Department already is stretched thin. "EMS and fire-EMS have refused to come out after dark. Police officers are the catch-all for everything," Congemi said.

On the West Bank, though, Westwego Mayor Robert Billiot said he is ready for residents to return.

Mark Smith, a spokesman for the Louisiana Department of Homeland Security, said he doesn't think it is safe for residents to go back, as "the floodwaters haven't subsided yet in parts of Jefferson."

Asked whether he thought it might slow the recovery effort, Smith said he thought it could hamper routes needed by emergency workers. "It's not a decision I agree with, but Broussard has the right to make that decision."

Charles Parker, 61, who rode out the storm at his Marrero home, agreed that people need to be allowed to return to check on their houses. With afternoon thunderstorms that "you could set your clock by" in south Louisiana, he said houses with holes in their roofs must be patched quickly so any rain damage doesn't get worse.

Yet after spending an hour in line waiting to get water from a relief center Saturday, Parker said having tens of thousands of additional people in a parish with limited municipal services will make the waiting far worse.

"It's going to be murder," Parker said.

Baker Donelson is pleased to announce the opening of a Baton Rouge office.

Our New Orleans and Mandeville attorneys can be contacted at:

One American Place
Suite 830
301 North Main Street
Baton Rouge, Louisiana 70825
Phone 225.381.7000

OR

901-526-2000

We expect our Mandeville office to re-open in the next several weeks.

BAKER DONELSON
BEARMAN, CALDWELL & BERKOWITZ, PC
Baker Donelson Delivers.

www.bakerdonelson.com

THIS IS AN ADVERTISEMENT. Roy Cheatwood is managing shareholder in the New Orleans office of Baker Donelson. Mr. Cheatwood is licensed to practice in Louisiana. FREE BACKGROUND MATERIAL IS AVAILABLE UPON REQUEST BY WRITING LAURA HINE AT 165 MADISON AVENUE, SUITE 2000, MEMPHIS, TN 38103. A decision on legal services is important, and should not be based solely on advertisement. No representation is made that the quality of the legal services to be performed is greater than the quality of the legal services performed by other lawyers.

©2005 Baker, Donelson, Bearman, Caldwell, & Berkowitz, PC

KATRINA: THE STORM WE'VE ALWAYS FEARED

The Times-Picayune

50 CENTS 169TH YEAR NO. 228 | MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 5, 2005 | HURRICANE EDITION

7th DAY OF HELL

A week of horror ends with more evacuations and uncertainty

STAFF PHOTO BY ALEX BRANDON

Agents with the U.S. Marshal's Service examine a makeshift grave Sunday at Jackson Avenue and Magazine Street in New Orleans. The inscription says, 'Here lies Vera. God help us.'

By Ron Thibodeaux and Gordon Russell
Staff writers

In a city in dire need of some divine intervention from the most catastrophic week in its history, the first post-Katrina Sunday in New Orleans was infused with the sounds of military helicopters and sporadic gunfire instead of lilting hymns and Gospel readings.

On the seventh day of this disaster of biblical proportions, the last evacuees from the fetid conditions of the Superdome and the Convention Center rested with New Orleans in the rearview mirror of the buses taking them to clean, safe havens far away.

In the city they finally left behind, churches were empty, bells did not peal, Sunday services were not held and the Saints, the football version, were said to be pondering their own evacuation, possibly a permanent one, to San Antonio, Texas.

Entergy workers made their first foray into New Orleans to begin the gargantuan task of assessing the damage to the city's electrical system. Their arrival was a glimmer of encouragement in the vista of despair that confronts those charged with rebuilding the city.

Meanwhile, in adjacent Jefferson Parish, authorities braced for a Labor Day invasion of evacuees expected to return for a first look at their homes.

Search and rescue operations continued and during the late afternoon, helicopters using Interstate 10 as a landing pad were pulling people from rooftops in Mid-City and other parts of town.

Law enforcement agencies fielded about 1,000 distress 911 calls Saturday from people still trapped in attics of buildings surrounded by water, State Police said Sunday.

For the city's police officers in particular, Sunday was the first day to get something like a breather after working around the clock for the past eight days.

"Today is the first day you will see a smile on some of the officers' faces," said NOPD Capt. Marlon Defillo, who was taking a break on the neutral ground of Loyola Avenue with Detective William Charbonnet. "This has been a tremendous challenge for members of the police department, but they've held their ground. They've given their hearts and souls."

New Orleans Police officers sent up a cheer at one point Sunday at a report that their colleagues had engaged in a shootout with an armed group on the Danziger Bridge in eastern New Orleans, with several of the suspected marauders - but none of the police officers - being hit. Deputy Police Chief W.J. Riley said police shot eight people, killing five or six of them.

See KATRINA, page A-4

'God sent us to get you'

Rescuers pluck residents from foul waters

By Michael Perlstein
Staff writer

Five Blackhawk helicopters flew in formation overhead. A Chinook plucked a trapped resident from a balcony. But 74-year-old Gloria Galway wasn't budging from her second-floor apartment in the B.W. Cooper public housing complex, despite six feet of water lapping at her building and a rescue boat ready to take her in.

"I got food, water, my two dogs and my Bible," Galway told the rescue team. "God will take care of me."

After pleading with Galway for five minutes, Hamilton "Ham" Peterson said, "I'm going in."

He trudged through the water, climbed to Galway's apartment and told her, "God sent us to get you."

Galway emerged with her dogs, purse and cane, joining hundreds of other New Orleans residents who were ferried from the homes and apartments Sunday, hemmed in for six days by disease infested water. The unprecedented search-and-rescue operation took on an increased urgency as police, soldiers, game wardens, and other volunteers met with occasional resistance and even gunfire. But most of the time, they found grateful victims.

An Army soldier said it looked and felt like war, except it is being fought from a flotilla of boats with drivers and volunteers from around the country.

Thrown together in the back of an Army Humvee at the operation's Poydras Street staging area, Peterson, a federal railroad inspector from Washington, D.C., Jenny Krall, a Charlotte, N.C. firefighter, and Texas game warden Luett McMahen, were jolted just before the Claiborne Avenue boat launch by a powerful front-end collision. Army driver Jerry Lance had just plowed into a car that was blocking traffic, pushing it 100 feet toward the water.

A group of cops and soldiers cleared the obstruction once and for all by flipping it to the side of the road.

From there, teams were divided into airboats, flat boats, Army pontoons and skiffs to fan out across the Uptown neighborhood. Each boat had a game warden and a driver, a police sharpshooter and one or two rescuers.

See RESCUE, page A-5

STAFF PHOTO BY CHRIS GRANGER

Multiple feet of floodwater remained in the 9th Ward in New Orleans on Sunday, making it particularly burdensome for Roosevelt Kyles to retrieve medicine he needs for his diabetes. It was the only thing he took from his home.

Body count in state morgue provides initial death toll

Forensic team faces challenge of identifying victims

By Laura Maggi
Staff Writer

BATON ROUGE - In the first announcement of what will undoubtedly be a growing tally of the people killed by Hurricane Katrina and its devastating aftermath, officials said Sunday that 59 bodies were in a state morgue and had been confirmed to have died from storm-related causes.

Health officials would not say how high they expected the death toll to go, but Gov. Kathleen Blanco and New Orleans Mayor Ray Nagin have both said repeatedly that they expect it to be in the thousands.

Local officials have said there are about 100 bodies at a wharf in St. Bernard Parish, but the state has not confirmed those deaths, said Louis Cataldie, medical director for emergency operations for the state Department of Health and Hospitals.

Cataldie said any death that investigators determine would not have occurred if not for Hurricane Katrina will be attributed to the storm. "If you are on a respirator at home and the electricity goes out, you are a hurricane death," he said.

But people whose deaths are classified as murder - even if it occurred during the storm or the chaotic following days - will not be identified as hurricane deaths. Local coroners will be brought in to investigate those deaths, said Cataldie.

People who had identification on them when they died - such as most hospitable patients - will be easy for state officials to identify and notify family members, he said. But others, such as bodies that have been fished out of the floodwaters, could prove to be more of a challenge.

Because dental records and other key medical information may also have been lost during the storm, the process could rely heavily on the more technologically sophisticated methods used by the Disaster Mortuary Operational Response Team, an agency brought in by the Federal Emergency Management Agency.

For example, the mortuary team, which is often known by its acronym DMORT, can take a hairbrush brought in by a family member to see if the DNA matches any of the unidentified bodies at the morgue.

The morgue, which will be run by the federal team, has been set up at St. Gabriel, a town near Baton Rouge. Three DMORT teams were brought in to deal with the aftermath of the hurricane, including various forensic experts, funeral directors, death investigators and coroners, said Todd Ellis, the leader of the local regional unit.

Local emergency workers will be charged with collecting dead bodies and bringing them to a collection point, where team members will collect preliminary information, such as any identification records, and gather personal effects.

"From that point, we as DMORT teams will treat each of these individuals with the highest level of dignity and respect that they all deserve," Ellis said.

The teams will begin collecting forensic information as soon as the bodies arrive at the morgue site, including fingerprinting and DNA sampling, he said.

Once the facility is up and running, it can identify - or at least attempt to identify - 144 bodies a day, Cataldie said.

Cataldie said 10 bodies being held by the state were those of people who died while at the Superdome, most from respiratory failure. Nine more died at a temporary hospital set up at Louis Armstrong International Airport. "There were a lot of sick folks who couldn't make a journey," he said.

Twenty-six bodies were in refrigeration trucks at the morgue facility in St. Gabriel on Sunday, while another 22 were at a collection point at the split of Interstate 10 and the I-610. Another 11 bodies were identified by the Jefferson Parish coroner as being caused by the storm, Cataldie said.

Laura Maggi can be reached at laura_maggi@yahoo.com or (225) 342-5590.

STAFF PHOTO BY CHRIS GRANGER

The body of Lower 9th Ward man lies near the chainlink fence as a rescue helicopter flies overhead.

Ministers of Houston offer words of hope

AP PHOTO

Doris Jackson of New Orleans sits outside the processing center at Reliant Arena, next to Houston's Astrodome. Jackson came from the Superdome on Thursday.

Religious leaders visit evacuees at shelters

Tara Young
Staff writer

HOUSTON - As she listened to the minister speak Sunday, Sharon Craig thought about six of her grandchildren, a daughter and a daughter-in law, all still missing since floodwaters engulfed the St. Bernard housing complex after Hurricane Katrina.

Craig, who is being sheltered at the Reliant Center, said a part of her family may be missing but she hasn't lost faith that they will be together again.

"God is good, and God is going to take care of it for me," Craig said.

Craig was one of many thousands of Louisiana evacuees at the Astrodome, the Reliant Center and the George R. Brown Convention Center who were visited Sunday by an ecumenical group of religious leaders seeking to encourage and minister to those displaced by the storm.

Other evacuees opted to walk or were transported to other locations by area churches to worship.

The Rev. William Lawson of Wheeler Avenue Baptist Church compared the hardships of the refugees to the trials of Job, the Bible figure who suffers much for seemingly no reason at all, but eventually is blessed many times over for keeping his faith in God.

"You didn't do anything to cause the suffering you're going through right now," Lawson said. "We want you to know that God hasn't forgotten you no more than he had forgotten Job."

Evacuees also heard from leaders within Houston's Catholic, Jewish and Muslim communities Sunday. Each repeated similar messages of hope.

At the Astrodome, the Rev. Michael Amesse, who evacuated from St. Jude Catholic Church on Rampart Street in New Orleans, looked out into the crowd of thousands and said the presence of local religious leaders has been a comfort to many.

Amesse, who was with Roman Catholic Archbishop Joseph A. Fiorenza, who represents the Houston area, said he's encountered several of his parishioners. Many ask for prayer, he said.

Rabbi David B. Rosen of the Beth Yeshurun Synagogue told the evacuees that although they may have lost everything in the storm, their worth didn't decrease.

Rosen illustrated his message by telling the story of how a crisp, clean $20 bill came to be crumpled and stomped in the dirt. People still wanted the cash, he said, because the value was still there.

"You will never lose your value. You are all worthy of love and respect," Rosen said. "God loves us and he's surrounded us this day with angels."

On Sunday, many of the residents were still sleeping or eating with their families when the leaders came to speak at the Astrodome. Others walked up to the stands to hear the ministers.

At the Reliant Center, Dorothy Lewis said she welcomed the impromptu service. Although she's lost everything, she said, God saved her family.

"I can't go to sleep for thanking him," said Lewis, a Carrollton resident. "I wake up in the morning thanking him."

CYAN MAGENTA YELLOW BLACK
NAME OF JOB HERE 0/00/00 PAGE APS6 AUTO

On behalf of the entire Pinnacle Properties family - from Casino Magic Biloxi to Boomtown New Orleans - we'd like to offer our sincere sympathy to our employees and their families, as well as the entire community.

Our prayers go out to all of you during this difficult time. It is more important now than ever to stick together as a community and support one another as best we can. Listed below are emergency numbers you can call for help.

---

Pinnacle Employee Communication

1.800.665.8738

Employee Assistance Hotline

1.800.865.1044

Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA)

1.800.621.FEMA

---

PINNACLE[SM]

ENTERTAINMENT

Casino Magic® Biloxi

BOOMTOWN CASINO® NEW ORLEANS

©2005 Pinnacle Entertainment, Inc. All rights reserved.

HURRICANE KATRINA AFTERMATH

New Orleans staggers to its feet for next step on long road

STAFF PHOTO BY ALEX BRANDON

NOPD narcotics officer Jayson Germann, left, with Hamilton Peterson from the Office of Inspector General, look through the B.W. Cooper housing development for people to evacuate Sunday with the help of game wardens from Texas Parks and Wildlife officials in airboats.

STAFF PHOTO BY JENNIFER ZDON

Refugees in the River Center get a prominent reminder of the date Sunday. In the confusion of the hurricane's aftermath, losing touch with the passage of time happened all to easily.

STAFF PHOTO BY ALEX BRANDON

A man trudges through waist-deep water Sunday near Tulane and Claiborne avenues.

KATRINA, from page A-1

Defillo said police morale had hit a low point around Wednesday or Thursday in terms of the stress on officers, who had to try to keep the city safe without a working communications system amid increasing anarchy . While it was harrowing, reports that hundreds of police officers abandoned ship are false, he said.

"There was a report that 60 percent of our officers bugged out and hadn't been seen since Monday night. It is totally untrue," Defillo said.

What happened, according to Defillo, was that the NOPD's communications system crashed in the wake of the storm, making it impossible for officers to contact one another.

"We had to work on the buddy system, two guys staying together," he said. Defillo acknowledged that "there were some people who bugged out" but he didn't have an estimate of their numbers.

Defillo himself was feeling better after shaving for the first time in a week and taking an impromptu bath in the green, leafy water of a backyard swimming pool. He was wearing a clean pair of acid-washed jeans and a polo shirt that he "found."

The scene was more intense in flood-ravaged St. Bernard Parish, where rescue efforts still lag behind those of New Orleans. Sheriff Jack Stephens authorized his haggard deputies to shoot to kill looters or anyone else who poses a threat.

Small gangs of heavily armed career criminals are roaming the parish's isolated eastern half and looting buildings, Stephens said.

"These are the same a------- who have been testing us for 20 years," Stephens told his SWAT team at a security briefing. "Today is the day they are going to listen to us or we're gonna take 'em out."

As National Guard troops and utility workers launched their patrols through the abandoned neighborhoods of New Orleans on Sunday morning, federal, state and local authorities intensified their finger-pointing at one another over the breakdowns in last week's rescue efforts.

U.S. Secretary of Homeland Security Michael Chertoff struggled on NBC's "Meet the Press" to explain why federal agencies were so slow to react to the crisis and sought to deflect at least part of the blame toward the evacuation plan confected by city and state officials.

Later in the same program, a ragged Jefferson Parish President Aaron Broussard broke down as he told the national audience how a colleague's elderly mother died in her home Friday after waiting four days for rescuers that never arrived.

With thousands of federal troops finally assisting in what had been an ineffective, disorganized operation, 19,000 people were removed from the Convention Center in less than 24 hours and the final evacuees from the Superdome boarded a bus for somewhere, anywhere.

Hundreds of people continued to mill around the outside of both facilities, arriving on foot in hopes of getting a ride out of town.

Col. Henry Whitehorn, superintendent of Louisiana State Police, estimated that 2,000 people, many of them with serious medical problems, were still housed inside the terminal at Louis Armstrong International Airport.

A busload of 160 people that the state Legislative Black Caucus arranged to deliver to Alexandria ended up at a shelter there, not in facilities at the former England Air Force Base as the lawmakers had intended.

Angry that thousands of Louisianians are being bused out of state because of an apparent lack of shelter space, the black caucus members had called on the federal government Saturday to make Louisiana's military installations available.

Jefferson Parish officials prepared Sunday for a huge influx of residents expected to return today to see what Katrina did to their homes. Hours after the storm hit, Broussard had decreed that evacuated Jefferson residents stay away only for a week to give parish authorities a fighting chance to get control of the destruction and bedlam there.

Many parish officials are skeptical about the decision to let residents return even this soon, but Broussard stood by his decision, saying residents need to see for themselves how bad things are so they can move on with their lives.

"I am the only elected official who is in favor of doing this, but people need to understand that they're not coming back to Wally Cleaver's neighborhood," he said Sunday. "I am doing this to jumpstart the economy, not the economy of Jefferson Parish. That is destroyed. I want to jumpstart the economies of the residents of Jefferson Parish, who need to find new jobs, new places to live."

Long lines are expected today at checkpoints where parish authorities will verify that returnees live in Jefferson Parish before letting them in.

The 1 million-plus number of homes and businesses that lost power in the area was down to 643,000, Public Service Commissioner Jimmy Field said. LSU researchers testing the floodwaters for contamination levels also reported that they had taken the first water samples from canals draining into Lake Pontchartrain and expect to have the results in about two days.

Entergy was able to send a 12-member assessment team, flanked by National Guardsmen, into the city to inspect storm damage.

"The main thing we were trying to find out is what needs to be done to restore power to the Central Business District," utility spokesman Chanel Lagarde said.

In St. Tammany Parish, Cleco reported it has restored power to 5,000 of its 80,000 customers, beginning with hospitals, other essential locations and sites along the parish's main traffic arteries.

In San Antonio, where New Orleans Saints owner Tom Benson had been conspicuously silent about the impact of Katrina on his football team's hometown and its residents, reports surfaced that the team's management is considering pulling out of the city and relocating, perhaps permanently, to San Antonio, where Benson has a business interests and a ranch outside of the city.

STAFF PHOTO BY ALEX BRANDON

NEW ORLEANS: Residents of the B.W. Cooper housing complex leave by airboat. Escorting them Sunday were game wardens from the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department. From left are Ashanti Solomon, 3; Kiane Lang, 2; Sherwood Shannon, 1, held by his aunt Cierra Solomon; and Georgette Shannon.

STAFF PHOTO BY CHRIS GRANGER

NEW ORLEANS; His belongings in a plastic bag, a resident is evacuated Sunday.

Family rescued at B.W. Cooper

RESCUE, from page A-1

The New Orleans police officers who worked the operation  most of them from the narcotics unit  had all shaved their head the night before, including two female detectives.

Of the shaved heads, Det. Darren Hartman said, "We figured we d do this to be comfortable and to boost our morale. This is our family now."

On the way to the Cooper development, better known as The Calliope, a few residents waved off the rescuers. Capt. Timothy Bayard, who is commanding the operation, said the orders were to pick up only those willing to go.

"If they want to die, there is nothing I can do,  Bayard said. "I can t fight them, they may tip the boat. But if I get an order later to pull them out by force, I ll do it."

"I told mama the police were gonna save us. But I wasn't gonna get in no helicopter."

7-YEAR-OLD ARTENIASHA GIBSON

A flatboat with Peterson, McMahen and a reporter met no resistance at 3508 Thalia St.

"How many do you have?" Peterson yelled to the woman leaning out of the second-story window.

"We have the two of us, four kids and grandma," 35-year-old Michelle Gibson yelled back.

One by one, Gibson and her husband walked the children downstairs, through the knee-deep water and into the boat.

"I told mama the police were gonna save us," 7-year-old Arteniasha said. "But I wasn t gonna get in no helicopter."

The group was ferried to waiting ambulances and military vehicles parked on the Claiborne overpass, ready to evacuate. A second boat followed with the girl s father and older sister.

Peterson, who once lived in New Orleans and now lives in Washington, said as soon as he saw the tragedy of Hurricane Katrina unfold on television, he knew he had to be part of the rescue effort.

Once he arrived, he slipped away from the paper and desk job they assigned him because he wanted to be on the front-lines. Part of his motivation, he said, was the loss of his father and mother-in-law on Flight 93 in the terrorist attacks of 9-11.

"It is all about family and the absence of family and the preciousness of family,  he said. "Whether it is the World Trade Center or this neighborhood, when I saw the mamas and babies suffering on TV, I knew I had to come and I knew I had to be on the ground helping people."

Peterson, who once served a stint as a Washington, D.C., cop, carried a revolver. But Calliope rescuers met no armed resistance Sunday. Just confounding pockets of resistance to being saved.

Bayard vowed the operation will continue until everybody is out. "Because the next operation will be pulling out bodies,  he said.

When Peterson helped deposit Galway next to the bus that will take her to a shelter, he helped her with her meager belongings. Then he handed her one last item he grabbed from a table as he rushed from her apartment: Galway s deteriorating paperback Bible.

"Bless you,  she said.

"No one's ever seen anything that could ever compare to this. I was command superintendent in Afghanistan two months after 9/11 and this is worse."

CHIEF MASTER SGT. RODNEY CHRISTA

At airport, life still uncertain as ever

They've escaped N.O., but still have long road ahead

By Steve Ritea
Staff writer

With the tattered American flag that helped save her life hanging off her frail shoulders, 78-year-old Shirley Williamson sat in a wheelchair outside gate D1 at Louis Armstrong International Airport on Sunday with no idea where her plane was headed.

As other victims of Hurricane Katrina lay on stretchers nearby, some screaming in pain, military medics rushed to attend to Williamson and others, grasping for syringes and gauze pads piled up on the countertop typically used by airline staff to assist travelers.

Outside the window, trams that usually deliver checked bags to airline cargo holds on Sunday carried patients on stretchers and families - many of whom have never been able to afford an airline ticket - to military transport planes headed for safer and more stable parts of the nation.

"I'm never flying through this airport again," said Air Force Capt.Terri Leitch, a nurse who has helped care for some of the thousands who have come through Armstrong since early last week and stood helplessly nearby as some have died.

As the medics attended to their patients, U.S. Department of Health and Human Services Secretary Mike Leavitt and Centers for Disease Control Director Julie L. Gerberding toured the terminal, getting a glimpse of the makeshift emergency room set up at the airport. The health officials are in New Orleans to begin determining the massive public health risks that lay ahead during the recovery from Hurricane Katrina.

"When you put standing water with insects and unsanitary conditions, it's a breeding ground for disease, and you have to stay ahead of that," Leavitt said.

Twenty-four CDC teams are in the region surveying health conditions at every shelter. Little if any disease prevention exists in the area because "the entire public health staff in New Orleans is gone," Gerberding said.

Once search and rescue operations are complete, the mental health of residents in the region must be addressed, especially among children, she said.

Gerberding acknowledged that there has been difficulty getting supplies to outlying areas, but said they are working to fix the problem. Two planes loaded with antibiotics and 37 pallets of other medical supplies are on their way to the region, she said.

Meanwhile, commercial and military planes and helicopters dropped off the recently rescued and took those suitable for longer flights to Dallas, Nashville, Shreveport and other cities with hospital and shelter space.

"No one's ever seen anything that could ever compare to this," said Chief Master Sgt. Rodney Christa, who is overseeing the massive operation. "I was command superintendent in Afghanistan two months after 9/11 and this is worse."

As he stood in a section of the terminal filled with military cots where his troops finally managed to get some rest, he described how rescuers were beginning to fan out into more remote areas of the region, where he feared there may be many more people in need of medical attention and evacuation.

"We don't know if this is a lull or not yet," Christa said.

Nonetheless, things had improved dramatically by Sunday at the airport with considerably fewer patients and evacuees in the terminal.

The stories the patients had to tell were heartbreaking.

Williamson, who lived alone in her North Rampart Street home for the past 35 years, described how she spent the past six days rationing herself to a single slice of raisin bread and one or two cookies as looters broke into every business nearby. She feared they would begin eyeing the homes on her street left vacant by those who fled the storm.

Although a few neighbors came to check on her before they evacuated, none offered to take her. "If they wanted me, they would have said it," she said.

During daylight hours, she avoided her front yard, fearing she would be attacked or draw attention to the fact that she was alone and vulnerable.

Shortly after Katrina hit, however, she had grabbed an American flag that had blown off its perch near a neighbor's door and onto her porch.

Each day, as the helicopters passed overheard, she waved the flag, hoping rescuers would spot it and save her. All week she waited, until Sunday, when they finally came. As she sat in her wheelchair with a warm meal in her lap, Williamson said she didn't know where she was headed but anywhere was better than where she had been.

Nearby, Larry Hampton described how six feet of water in his Central Business District home nearly drowned his fiancØe, Doreen Patton, who clung to a beach ball to stay afloat. Fearing that opening the door would let in more water, they stayed inside. Finally they realized that remaining in the house would mean certain death, and they got out.

The couple ended up outside the Ernest N. Morial Convention Center, where Hampton and Patton watched more than a dozen people die in the street until a helicopter took them to Armstrong.

Just as they were boarding a military transport plane that stacked patients three stretchers high and had seats for those who could walk, Hampton, Patton and Williamson learned their flight was headed for Shreveport, where they'd be assessed at a local shelter.

Watching as they were helped from the baggage tram to the back of the plane, American Airlines flight attendant Patty Sinclair recalled purchasing candy and food for evacuees she helped to board flights her airline and others were providing to Corpus Christi, Texas, and other locations.

Even as many moved in and out of the terminal quickly, others like Jessica Bingham, 21, were left waiting with her two-month-old son, Leonard, as her husband tried to make it to the airport from Marrero.

She recalled being rescued from her foster parents' flooded home in Metairie, only to be taken to a much worse place: a shelter in the gymnasium at Bonnabel High School.

There were no cots, she said, and after evacuees began urinating and defecating on the gym floor, she and her baby joined others lying outside on the pavement for two days as they tried to wave off mosquitoes. Her baby began to lose consciousness until emergency workers finally came by and took her to Armstrong, where fluids brought her baby back to consciousness.

"There's a million horrifying and heartbreaking stories here," said Air Force Col. Jerry Owen, as he shepherded one wave of evacuees onto the tarmac and watched the next batch start to arrive.

STAFF PHOTOS BY BRETT DUKE

ARMSTRONG AIRPORT: Refugees lie on the floor, ABOVE, of the Louis Armstrong International Airport on Sunday.

LEFT, Carts that usually carry baggage were put to work transporting refugees to an aircraft on Sunday.

Army Corps of Engineers shifts focus to dam canal at lake

17th Street levee work postponed

By Mark Schleifstein
Staff writer

The Army Corps of Engineers has shifted its efforts to damming the London Avenue canal's entrance to Lake Pontchartrain in New Orleans, after completing a dam across the 17th Street canal.

In a news release issued Sunday morning, the Corps said it discovered several intact "but potentially weakened sections" in the 17th Street canal levee, and that it has delayed completing the filling of the levee breach into Lakeview to move on to other work. The Corps didn't complete placement of the last piece of sheet piling because officials were not yet sure that water on the Lakeview side of the breach had dropped to the same level as the lake.

With the dam closure, the Corps said, the canal will be drained and the levee will be repaired permanently.

Five pumps ordered Saturday are to be delivered in pieces to a staging area in St. Rose, where they will be partially assembled and moved to the 17th Street and London Avenue canals for final assembly and startup.

Four more pumps loaned to the Corps by St. Charles Parish were deployed to the 17th Street canal, where they are being assembled.

The Corps is acquiring two large mobile generators to power pumps at pump station 6 on the 17th Street canal and at pump station 7 on the Orleans Avenue canal.

The Corps also is arranging the salvage of "two objects" found in the bar channel at the mouth of Southwest Pass on the Mississippi River, the main shipping entrance to the river.

The news release said the objects haven't been identified but are more than 40 feet beneath the surface. River traffic is being restricted to vessels with drafts of 35 feet or less.

The obstructions were found by a survey vessel of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, about a half-mile from the end of the Southwest Pass jetty.

• • • • • •

Mark Schleifstein can be reached at mersmia@cox.net

Jeff residents allowed in today

Returnees can expect to wait for hours

By Matt Scallan
East Jefferson bureau

Jefferson Parish officials geared up Sunday for a massive influx of returning residents who can expect to sit in long lines of cars at police checkpoints to ensure that nonresidents don't enter the parish.

Parish President Aaron Broussard announced his plan on Tuesday, the day after Hurricane Katrina laid waste to the New Orleans area, to let residents back in briefly and only to inspect their property beginning today at 6 a.m. And he has insisted on carrying out the plan, despite mounting opposition from law enforcement and utility companies.

Broussard said that residents must be allowed to see the devastation up close so they can move on with their lives somewhere else.

"I am the only elected official who is in favor of doing this, but people need to understand that they're not coming back to Wally Cleaver's neighborhood," he said Sunday.

"I am doing this to jump start the economy. Not the economy of Jefferson Parish; that is destroyed. I want to jump start the economies of the residents of Jefferson Parish, who need to find new jobs, new places to live" outside Jefferson.

Many residents who tried to get in Jefferson early were turned away at checkpoints on Airline Drive and on U.S. 90.

Meanwhile, utility companies are concerned that the flood of people returning today will block access routes for their fuel and supplies.

"Someone needs to rethink this," one utility company manager was heard saying to a parish official.

Sheriff Harry Lee was resigned to cooperating with the effort, but he told WDSU-TV that he doesn't think it's a good idea.

"There's no good law enforcement reason for doing this," he said.

Parish Councilman John Young said he has put aside his concerns about the matter.

"The decision has been made, and we're going to do everything in our power to make it work," he said.

Parish officials are urging residents who don't have to come back to stay where they are.

The rules of entry are such that those who try to return might face a hellish experience. Parish spokeswoman Angela Williams said residents must have enough fuel not only to drive in but to sit in line for hours and to drive out of the area to where fuel is available in outlying parishes.

All businesses are closed. Electric, gas, water and sewer service is unavailable in many areas of the parish.

"It's not going to be a pleasant place to stay," Williams said.

Under the Broussard plan, residents will be allowed to enter on Airline Drive and U.S. 90 today, Tuesday and Wednesday beginning at 6 a.m. At the parish line, they must show identification bearing a Jefferson Parish address. Anyone not in line by 6 p.m. will be denied entry on that day. A dawn-to-dusk curfew will be in effect. Parish officials said they were eliminating Jefferson Highway as an entry point. Business owners will be allowed in on Thursday.

In an emotional news conference Sunday, Broussard reflected on the efforts to stabilize Jefferson Parish after Katrina passed the area on Monday.

"The bureaucracy committed murder" by failing to mobilize quickly enough to the crisis, he said, adding that the mother of one of his department heads died in a St. Bernard Parish nursing home after residents there were promised aid for days.

"There was a plan in place for this disaster, but when it happened all we got was promises," he said.

GETTING BACK INTO JEFF PARISH

Points of entry: Airline Drive and U.S. 90

When: Today, Tuesday and Wednesday beginning at 6 a.m.

Anyone not in line by 6 p.m. will be denied entry on that day. A dawn-to-dusk curfew will be in effect.

Requirements: At the parish line, residents must show identification bearing a Jefferson Parish address.

AP PHOTO

Traffic headed toward New Orleans was backed up Sunday. Parish President Aaron Broussard plans to let anxious residents in to inspect the damage today.

TENET notice

ATTENTION TENET EMPLOYEES AND PATIENTS

In response to Hurricane Katrina, TENET HEALTHCARE CORPORATION in Dallas has launched

TWO DISASTER ASSISTANCE CENTERS to help these Tenet hospitals:

Kenner Regional Medical Center in Kenner, La. | Lindy Boggs Medical Center in New Orleans

Meadowcrest Hospital in Gretna, La. | Memorial Medical Center in New Orleans

NorthShore Regional Medical Center in Slidell, La. | Gulf Coast Medical Center in Biloxi, Miss.

EMPLOYEE DISASTER ASSISTANCE CENTER

Tenet employees and their families in need of assistance or information are encouraged to call 1 (866) 631-8917 or email Employee-DR@tenethealth.com.

PATIENT INFORMATION HOTLINE

If you are a patient, or need information about a patient at a Tenet hospital, please call 1 (866) 888-3638 or email Patient-DR@tenethealth.com.

STAFF PHOTO BY KATHY ANDERSON

FRENCH QUARTER: At Orleans Avenue and Bourbon Street, the Southern Decadence Parade rolls Sunday with fewer than 12 determined French Quarter residents. Foreground from left, Matt Menold, John Lambert, Robin Cates and an unidentified man lead the way.

MARCHING ON

Nearly a week after Hurricane Katrina wreaked havoc on New Orleans, remaining and evacuated residents continued to regroup Sunday, turning from the despair and losses they have suffered to the joi de vivre for which their city is well-known. They smiled, sang, cooked out, played games and even staged a somewhat less-populated parade.

STAFF PHOTO BY JENNIFER ZDON

BATON ROUGE: Derrineisham Farly, 9, hugs Janet Thorne, a kindergarten teacher from the Zachary area who came to the River Center to read children books and spend some one-on-one time with them.

NEW ORLEANS: A woman from the neighborhood brought a homemade proclamation to the 6th District police station, thanking officers for their efforts in the aftermath of the hurricane.

STAFF PHOTO BY ALEX BRANDON

STAFF PHOTO BY ALEX BRANDON

CENTRAL BUSINESS DISTRICT: From left, Tom Martin of Connecticut's South Windsor Police Department, and Doug Mycko of Aberta, Ala., grill burgers for rescue workers under the driveway of Harrah's New Orleans Casino on Sunday. Cabal Industries of New Orleans brought the grills and food to feed workers at the makeshift command post. To donate money or food for the workers, call (985) 828-0468.

STAFF PHOTO BY JENNIFER ZDON

BATON ROUGE: Refugees try out the hoops at the River Center. Refugees began to cope with their surroundings Sunday at the River Center, which is housing thousands of families who evacuated before and after Katrina struck.

"At this point, it's unclear how long we'll be working in New Orleans because of accessibility, security and flooding."

CHANEL LAGARDE, Entergy spokesman

Some St. Tammany hospitals get power

Entergy workers tackling city lines

By Charlie Chapple
Staff writer

A team of Entergy workers assembled near the West Bank toll booths of the Crescent City Connection and flanked by National Guardsmen entered New Orleans on Sunday morning for the first time since Katrina left the city powerless.

The 12-person assessment team went to several locations in the city to inspect storm damage and determine actions needed to restore service, Entergy spokesman Chanel Lagarde said.

"The main thing we were trying to find out is what needs to be done to restore power to the Central Business District," Lagarde said.

He would not disclose the specific work locations to ensure the safety of the work teams.

Entergy officials had been leery of sending any workers into New Orleans because of the recent violence in the city. With conditions apparently improving, together with protection from Guardsmen, the company felt secure enough to send the small assessment team into the city, Lagarde said.

But he added, "at this point, it's unclear how long we'll be working in New Orleans because of accessibility, security and flooding." There are still many areas of the city where crews need to work that are not accessible, Lagarde said, including areas that remain flooded. Security for the dozens of crews needed to work in the city remains a concern, he said.

Katrina knocked out power to 800,000 Entergy customers in southeastern Louisiana. As of Sunday, power had been restored to 320,000 customers. "Most of those were in the Baton Rouge area," Lagarde said. "But we've restored services to customers in all the parishes we're working."

The company has no estimates of when power can be restored to the remaining 380,000 customers, including 200,000 in New Orleans. It will take more time to return services in areas like St. Bernard Parish, where there is extensive flooding. "We can't start working in those places until the water recedes,'' he said.

In St. Tammany Parish, Cleco has restored power to 5,000 of its 80,000 customers across the southern half of the parish, spokeswoman Susan Broussard said. The company is concentrating on restoring power to hospitals and other essential locations, she said.

Places that have electricity include St. Tammany Parish Hospital in Covington, Lakeview Regional Medical Center near Mandeville, Louisiana Heart Hospital near Lacombe, the parish courthouse and jail in Covington and city halls and police stations in Covington, Mandeville and Madisonville, Broussard said. The parish government complex north of Mandeville will soon have power, she said.

The company has no estimate of when power will be completely restored in St. Tammany. But Broussard said the company expects power to return to North Shore Square mall, a staging site for Cleco crews, in seven to 10 day

STAFF PHOTO BY CHRIS GRANGER

Michael Stalbert of the 3rd District Task Force lifts wires and blows a whistle as Howart Johnston, right, steers his boat near Flood Street as they search for residents who might be remaining in their homes. The group had to stop several times and disentangle the boat from power lines.

Difficult decision separates family

Teen doesn't know if parents are alive

By Jeffrey Meitrodt
Staff Writer

BATON ROUGE - The last time Branden Rockwood saw his parents, they were arguing with a helicopter pilot about whether they could take with them their three dogs from the flooded house where they were staying in New Orleans.

It was an argument his parents lost. After the pilot refused to let the dogs on board, Rockwood's parents told their 16-year-old son that they were staying behind. He hasn't heard from them since. He has no idea whether they are alive.

"I didn't even get a chance to tell them goodbye," Rockwood said.

Rockwood was one of 14 children at a Baton Rouge shelter Sunday who were separated from their parents during the evacuation of New Orleans. The number had been higher, but on Sunday afternoon, a van full of seven children - all younger than six - headed for the airport in Lafayette for the short flight to San Antonio, where they were expected to be reunited with their families.

It was a tearful departure. The volunteers who had cared for the children for the past five days cried and blew kisses through the window as the van pulled out of the shelter's parking lot.

"That one's mine," said Jodi McKenzie, 23, a student at Louisiana State University who took care of Zaria Love, 3.

"I love you," McKenzie told Zaria, who cried as she waved goodbye to her temporary sitter. "It's going to be okay."

The seven children and their families were rescued by helicopter Wednesday from the roof of an apartment building in the 3200 block of Third Street in New Orleans. The children were taken first, and their parents followed within and an hour or two, officials said.

But in the chaos that surrounded their evacuation, the families were inadvertently split apart. The children were taken by ambulance to a shelter in Baton Rouge, while their parents and caretakers were flown to Kelly USA, an industrial park in San Antonio that is being used as a shelter for hurricane victims.

With the help of the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children - which posted the children's names and other information on its Web site - officials were able to reunite the families Sunday. They flew out of Lafayette because officials couldn't book a flight out of Baton Rouge.

The volunteers who cared for the children said they formed a bond with their charges.

"It's sad for me, but it's wonderful for them," McKenzie said with tears in her eyes.

State officials said they hope to reunite the remaining 14 children with their parents.

Rockwood said he knows where his parents are, and he fears the worst. On Tuesday or Wednesday night, Rockwood said, most of his 13 family members were evacuated from the roof of a two-story house in New Orleans.

Rockwood said the group - which includes his cousins and other relatives - moved to the house when waters engulfed their one-story homes on the same block. The families all lived near Bienville and North Rocheblave in Mid-City.

All but three of the family members were evacuated. Rockwood said his parents and his uncle decided to stay behind with their three dogs.

Rockwood said he tried to talk his parents into leaving, but they wouldn't budge. "They said they weren't taking dogs, so they were staying,'' Rockwood said.

Rockwood said he and his relatives spent four frightening days living on Interstate 10 with thousands of other evacuees until he was taken to the Baton Rouge shelter.

"We slept on cots, but if you got up to use the bathroom, someone would steal it," he said.

Rockwood and his 13-year-old sister, Ashley, were living at the Baton Rouge shelter with their 17-year-old cousin, Justin Lamare. They said they hope to be reunited with their surviving family members as soon as possible.

Until then, they have been sleeping on couches and playing with a dozen other children who can't find their parents. They also have been spending a lot of time watching the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina on television, hoping for a glimpse of their parents or one of their other family members.

These are the names and ages of the seven children who were reunited with their families Sunday:

- Zaria Love, 3.
- Tyreek Love, 14 months
- Darynael Williams, 5 months.
- Deamonte Love, 6.
- Degahney Carter, 2.
- Leewood Moore Jr., 2.
- Gabriella Janae Alexander, 2.

To see a list of the other children who are missing, visit the Web site operated by the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children to see if they recognize the children or have information on the whereabouts of their families. The Web site is missingkids.com, and the organization's toll free number is 1-800-THE-LOST.

Baker Donelson is pleased to announce the opening of a Baton Rouge office.

Our New Orleans and Mandeville attorneys can be contacted at:

One American Place
Suite 830
301 North Main Street
Baton Rouge, Louisiana 70825
Phone 225.381.7000

OR

901-526-2000

We expect our Mandeville office to re-open in the next several weeks.

BAKER DONELSON
BEARMAN, CALDWELL & BERKOWITZ, PC
Baker Donelson Delivers.

www.bakerdonelson.com

THIS IS AN ADVERTISEMENT. Roy Cheatwood is managing shareholder in the New Orleans office of Baker Donelson. Mr. Cheatwood is licensed to practice in Louisiana. FREE BACKGROUND MATERIAL IS AVAILABLE UPON REQUEST BY WRITING LAURA HINE AT 165 MADISON AVENUE, SUITE 2000, MEMPHIS, TN 38103. A decision on legal services is important, and should not be based solely on advertisement. No representation is made that the quality of the legal services to be performed is greater than the quality of the legal services performed by other lawyers.

©2005 Baker, Donelson, Bearman, Caldwell, & Berkowitz, PC

HURRICANE KATRINA AFTERMATH

"You save the people you can, and then you move on. But at the end of the day, you are haunted by visions of the people you couldn't help."

SHERIFF JACK STEPHENS

STAFF PHOTO BY SUSAN POAG

CHALMETTE: Patricia Bateman was stranded beside St. Bernard Highway on Sunday with her husband, daughter and 27 animals, including several belonging to relatives. Ferry evacuation was available for the people, but not for the pets.

Harrowing tales emerge from St. Bernard

Search teams still find people who remained

By Jan Moller and Paul Rioux
Staff writers

CHALMETTE - Terry Hendrix's family evacuated before Hurricane Katrina struck this close-knit community with a devastating blow, but Hendrix himself decided to try weathering the storm at his three-story house on Riverland Drive.

On Saturday afternoon, five days after the winds died down, Hendrix found himself at the parking lot of what used to be a BellSouth building, but which now has been taken over by firefighters giving decontamination showers to people rescued from their homes.

Although floodwaters have receded more than 15 feet and the pace of the evacuation has slowed considerably in St. Bernard Parish, search teams were still finding people who had remained in their homes.

"I've got 122,000 people in my district, and everybody's been affected (by Hurricane Katrina)," said state Sen. Walter Boasso, R-Chalmette, who has been helping coordinate rescue efforts.

Horrific stories continued to pour in from survivors,who were being rescued at a rate of about 20 per hour Sunday.

Arabi resident Patrick Lannes, who helped evacuate 17 people from the second floor of Arabi Elementary School, said he found them eating a raw turkey that had been sitting out for four days.

"One woman told her husband, 'Oh, honey, give him a Coke,'" he said. "They're eating rotting meat, and they offered me their last Coke like I was a guest just stopping by for dinner."

Fire Chief Thomas Stone said there have been 70 confirmed deaths in St. Bernard Parish so far. He said the final toll will be much higher, but he declined to give an estimate.

He said a military unit that specializes in handling mass casualties will recover the bodies.

"I don't want my people pulling out their own family and friends," he said.

Among the dead are 31 senior citizens who died at St. Rita's Nursing Home due to flooding, and another 22 people were discovered dead in a Violet subdivision, their bodies bound together., Sheriff Jack Stephens said.

But it is too soon to start an official count, Stephens said, while rescue efforts continue. "We are not in a body recovery mode yet," he said.

Search teams from as far away as Canada - the Vancouver province sent 47 rescuers who arrived Thursday - ride air boats through receding waters in a parish that's become a virtual ghost town except for the rescue workers. They conduct house-to-house searches for anyone who might still be alive. When they have finished searching a building, they leave a spray-painted marker to indicate whether anyone was found.

An "X" means the house was empty. A number indicates how many bodies were discovered. On one house, just a block from the Bell South building where evacuees are being taken for decontamination before being transported to the slip, a blue-painted "6" tells the gruesome tale of what became of those inside.

Those plucked from their homes emerged with harrowing tales. Hendrix, 55, said he retreated to a third-floor bathroom in his home during Katrina when the floodwaters rose to his second-story balcony. But shortly thereafter, winds from the storm began lifting the roof from his house. That forced him back to the second floor, where he spent several days in three feet of water.

Although he rode out the storm by himself, eventually the house became a gathering point for neighbors - 18 of whom shared the cramped quarters at one point, Hendrix said. "I was the highest point in the neighborhood," he said.

As several days passed with little or no federal assistance, state and local officials set up their own improvised search-and-rescue operations, with the Mississippi River serving as a lifeline to safety for residents who rode out Katrina.

People found wading through the floodwaters, which by Saturday had become nearly black in color and smelled like a mixture of sewage and rotten fish, are first taken to the BellSouth parking lot to shower under a blue tarp. After that school buses take them to "Camp Katrina" as the Chalmette slip has been dubbed by rescue workers. From there they are taken by ferry about five miles upriver to Algiers Point, where the U.S. Coast Guard shuttles them onto shelter-bound buses.

St. Bernard officials said that at some points last week the slip was home to as many as 3,000 evacuees at one time, but by Saturday afternoon the traffic had slowed to a trickle. Only a few local police and volunteers were there, surrounded by pallets of water and other basic necessities.

STAFF PHOTO BY SUSAN POAG

PLAQUEMINES PARISH: At the east bank landing for the Belle Chasse ferry, Plaquemines Parish deputies go to pick up some supplies for delivery to St. Bernard Parish. Plaquemines Parish had a surplus of donations Sunday.

The unprecedented mobilization of resources has forced local authorities to improvise.

Firefighters work from the BellSouth building, the parish council set up temporary quarters at the Exxon-Mobil Chalmette Refining, and the sheriff's office is operating from the Cajun Queen riverboat that's moored next to the Domino's sugar refinery in Arabi. The courthouse, where some parish officials are staying overnight, is littered with boats that were being used for rescue and transportation while the flooding was at its worst.

State Rep. Nita Hutter, R-Chalmette, said she was at the parish government building when the storm struck, but was forced to evacuate by boat Tuesday when conditions there became "intolerable."

And the local prison was turned into a makeshift medical center until the wounded and sick could be flown to safety, according to Boasso.

Stephens said the rescue operation at the slip likely saved many lives. "Had we not had this area to stage this, there would have been literally hundreds more people dead from exposure," he said.

Stephens said he faces more life-or-death decisionseach day than he did in his previous 20-plus years as sheriff.

"You save the people you can, and then you move on," he said. "But at the end of the day, you are haunted by visions of the people you couldn't help - the lady who grabbed my ankles and said, 'Sheriff, can you give me a bottle of water?' All I could tell her was, 'I'm sorry.'"

Illness and mental fatigue have prompted Sheriff Jack Stephens to grant leaves to 30 deputies, leaving him with a force of about 75, who have been working up to 20 hours a day. Three dozen firefighters were sent to Baton Rouge to rest Saturday, replaced by 30 East Baton Rouge firefighters.

Although the parish is desperate for reinforcements, Stephens has been turning away citizen volunteers, saying he doesn't want to risk a friendly fire incident as deputies begin removing the remaining residents by force if necessary.

Although Navy helicopters were shuttling medical evacuees from the Chalmette slip, local officials were angry Saturday at the slow pace of the federal government's relief efforts. "We never had any communication from anybody," said Parish President Henry P. Rodriguez. "Anything that has been done in St. Bernard has been done by local people.We never had any goddamned help."

At Algiers Point, the ferry landing was home to about a hundred people Saturday morning. They came from as far away as Caernarvon in lower St. Bernard, where the floods engulfed just about every home and those who stayed behind relied on neighbors for support - which sometimes brought surprising levels of comfort.

JoAnn Robin said she spent four days after Katrina camped out with 25 of her family members in the Mandeville Canal at Elevating Boats Inc., the company founded by former state Sen. Lynn Dean, R-Caernarvon.

Robin said she stayed at home in Caernarvon, where her block as Katrina blew through, but decided to evacuate a few miles west to Poydras, where they found shelter on the second floor of the Green Store. When the floodwaters there began to rise, the family got in boats and navigated their way to the elevated boats.

While her home and those of her neighbors sat in water up to their rooftops nearby, Elevated Boats had air-conditioning, a working television and radio and plenty to eat and drink courtesy of Dean and his family. "They treated us like royalty," Robin said.

Like many others, Robin said she planned to go back once the water is gone. "There's four generations that live on the same street together," on Deogracas Street. "We've never lived anywhere else."

It's that type of closeness that officialssay may hold the best hope for St. Bernard's rebirth.

Once floodwaters recede, the parish likely will hire a contractor to oversee clean-up efforts, Stephens said. After giving residents time to remove any salvageable possessions, crews would bulldoze condemned homes and rip drywall and carpeting from those that can be repaired. Storm debris would be hauled to temporary landfills along with ruined cars, which would be crushed after gasoline, oil and other engine fluids were removed, Stephens said.

"The key will be to get people from St. Bernard in as subcontractors and put them to work," he said. "It's the only way to start getting the economy going again."

Staff writer Marr Brown contributed to this report.

Crisis needs attention, not fly-bys

By Lolis Eric Elie
Staff columnist

Why are we still standing on ceremony?

President Bush finally arrived Friday on the ravaged Gulf Coast as a belated acknowledgement that his previous fly-by in an airplane on the way back to Washington was but the sickest of jokes.

Where did he go?

He went to Biloxi, a city hit hard by Hurricane Katrina, but certainly not the epicenter of the devastation.

What did he do first? The president of the United States of America stood in front of the television cameras and wasted time receiving a briefing, a recitation of facts that the rest of the country has known for days.

What did the governors of Mississippi and Alabama do before they briefed the president on the facts that everyone but Bush already knew?

They thanked him as if he has demonstrated something other than utter and callous incompetence.

Did Bush go to the Superdome or the Convention Center or any other places where the teeming masses were yearning to eat food and drink water and breathe fresh air?

No!

Where did he go in the days after the World Trade Center bombing?

To Ground Zero.

The Bush tour of Gulf Coast devastation seemed to possess little more gravitas than a ribbon cutting.

What is Congress doing in the midst of this crisis?

Well, to its credit, and at Bush's urging, it approved $10.5 billion as a down payment on disaster relief for the Gulf Coast.

What is on the congressional agenda next week? Hurricane Relief?

No.

Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist, R-Tenn., has pledged to move forward with a vote to permanently repeal the estate tax.

Where is the Louisiana Legislature?

Have lawmakers called a special session to redirect any nonessential expenditures to hurricane relief and recovery efforts?

If they have met, they have done so very secretly and very quietly.

How is the nation to understand the gravity of our crisis

if the state of Louisiana doesn't?

I have had dozens of e-mails from friends around the world asking what they can do. I didn't have a good answer. Several dozen fingers in the dike of our misery would do little to stem the tide.

But I have an answer now.

If you live in Louisiana, call your state representative.

Call your state senator. If you're an American living outside the state, call your congressman. Call your senators.

Tell them Americans are dying by the dozens.

Tell them Americans are being raped and robbed by the score.

Tell them it is time to act as if the nation is in crisis!

Tell them to get to ground zero on the Gulf Coast immediately because some crazy columnist claims to have absolute proof that Osama bin Laden blew up the levees!

IMPORTANT NOTICE TO
ST. PAUL TRAVELERS CUSTOMERS

WE'RE HERE TO HELP.

If you have suffered a loss, please call us as soon as your family and property are safe from further harm.

Our claim services representatives are standing by 24 hours a day, 7 days a week to take your claim.

For Travelers Home & Auto claims, please call
800.CLAIM33
(800.252.4633)

For Travelers Flood claims, please call
800.356.6663

For St. Paul Travelers and Travelers Business claims, please call 800.238.6225

For St. Paul Business claims, please call
800.STPAUL1
(800.787.2851)

St. Paul Travelers employees affected or displaced by the hurricane, please call the Employee Service Unit at 800.441.4378

TRAVELERS
travelers.com
The Travelers Indemnity Company
and its property casualty affiliates
One Tower Square, Hartford, CT 06183

ST PAUL TRAVELERS
stpaultravelers.com
St. Paul Fire and Marine Insurance Company
and its property casualty affiliates
385 Washington St., Saint Paul, MN 55102

Evacuee bus reaches shelter in Alexandria

Thousands being taken out of state

By Laura Maggi
Staff writer

A busload of people that the state Legislative Black Caucus wanted to deliver to the former England Air Force Base in Alexandria ended up at a shelter in that central Louisiana city, the Rev. Jesse Jackson said Sunday.

Angry that thousands of people are being taken out of state because of an apparent lack of shelter space in Louisiana, the black caucus members Saturday said the federal government should make available military installations that come equipped with amenities not available at places like Houston's Astrodome.

But Jackson said that when a busload of 160 people arrived in Alexandria it was already late at night and they decided to take them to a shelter instead. Caucus leaders later went to the air force base to talk with officials there about eventually moving people to the facility.

"The governor needs to make that broad-based appeal," to get people moved, Jackson said.

A U.S. Army representative said Saturday that military bases are being considered for use as shelters, including England.

16,000 National Guard troops come to N.O. area

By Kadee Krieger
Staff writer

By today, 16,000 National Guard soldiers and airmen will be conducting operations in Louisiana in response to Hurricane Katrina, including parishes surrounding New Orleans.

Brig. Gen. Michael P. Fleming of the Florida National Guard said the guardsmen, known as Task Force Pelican, are under orders to rescue and save the lives of those still in the city, and to secure law and order.

Task Force Pelican has distributed more than 620,000 bottles of water and 320,000 meals, and it evacuated 19,000 people from the Ernest Morial Convention Center on Saturday, he said.

Buses will continue to load evacuees at the center, but those who were stuck there have left, Fleming said. People are hearing there are buses there, but "those you see are new folks; everyone who was there before was evacuated," he said.

In the past 24 hours, the task force has worked with all other rescue operations including the U.S. Coast Guard and state Department of Wildlife and Fisheries to evacuate 3,000 people by air, he said. Of that total, the National Guard used helicopters to rescue 1,825, and 95 were critical medical patients.

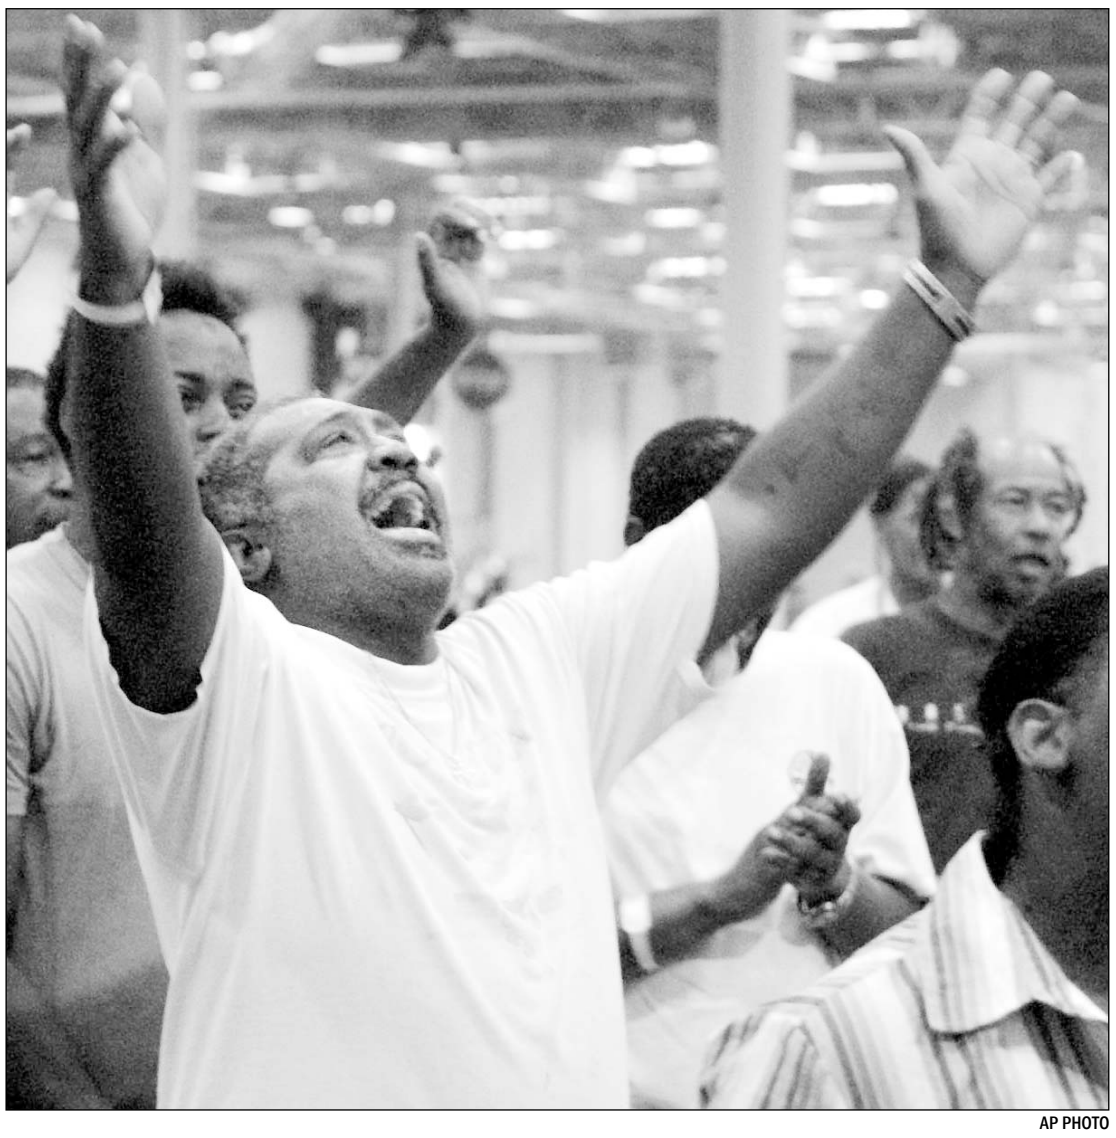
In addition to the task force members in New Orleans, units will be assigned to 12 other parishes. "These units will meet with parish leaders, and those authorities will know that they have their own military leadership team working with them," Fleming said.

Under the leadership of Maj. Gen. James Mason of the Kansas National Guard, units will be assigned to Jefferson, St. Bernard, St. Charles, St. John, Plaquemines, St. Tammany, Tangipahoa, Lafourche, Lafayette, Terrebonne, Washington and East Baton Rouge parishes.

Under federal law, active duty military personnel are prohibited from providing law enforcement. Fleming said the National Guard is reporting directly to Gov. Blanco for hurricane-response operations.

Leading Task Force Pelican is Maj. Gen. Bennett C. Landreneau.

OUR HEART GOES OUT TO THOSE AFFECTED BY HURRICANE KATRINA.



Policyholders of Encompass Insurance who have been affected by the recent hurricane, please call 1-800-588-7400 to report your loss, 24 hours a day, 7 days a week.

The people of Encompass would like to let you know that our thoughts are with you.

The Encompass Catastrophe Team is available for claims handling, information or other assistance at 1-800-340-3016. For more information, you can also call or visit your independent agent.

Rest assured, Encompass stands ready to help you during this difficult time.

ENCOMPASS® INSURANCE

AP PHOTO

SAN ANTONIO: New Orleans evacuees pray during a worship service at a shelter set up at KellyUSA, a former Air Force base near San Antonio.

San Antonio 'doing a tremendous job'

13,000 expected in shelters by Sunday

By Mike Triplett
Staff writer

SAN ANTONIO – The scene is both heartbreaking and heartwarming at the same time.

Nearly 10,000 refugees have come through here at KellyUSA, a former Air Force base in San Antonio, and the city expected 13,000 visitors at various shelters throughout the area by dawn Sunday.

They have traveled some 500 miles by bus or by plane, and endured God knows what over the past seven days.

But a city has reached out to them, striving to "make them feel like they're at home," according to the man running the show here at Building 1171, Peter Vrolyk, the local Mass Care coordinator for the Red Cross.

"They're doing a tremendous job out here. Tell everybody," said Velma Broomfield, who escaped the Calliope apartments on Wednesday, spent one night on an overpass, made it to the Superdome and eventually was flown here. "The people are so nice and they treat you so well."

Broomfield is with her sister, her sister's son and her granddaughter. She was separated from her daughter and her daughter's mother-in-law but hopes they wound up in Houston.

There are several areas set up here for information on missing persons. There are also several sets of phone banks that provide free local and long distance calls. There are a number of televisions, so people can keep contact with the outside world. And they can come and go as they please once they have been checked in and given a designated area and a wristband.

There are thousands of cots and sleeping areas in the air-conditioned facilities. There is a remarkable amount of medical treatment areas and workers on hand. There is a wealth of food and fresh clothing that has been donated. The refugees get three meals a day – sandwiches and spaghetti and chips and granola bars were on hand Saturday afternoon, along with plenty of water and sports drinks.

"This is like a high class hotel to me. You get this kind of treatment at a Hampton Inn. I don't have this at home. Poor people don't get this treatment," said Karen Winkler, who lived at the Noble Arms Independent Living Program for the mentally ill in Terrytown , before being helped to the Superdome last Sunday.

The conditions in the Superdome, she said, were frightening and disorganized, though she appreciated having a shelter for the storm.

Authorities told Katrina posed serious danger, official says

Washington knew that levees could break

By Mark Schleifstein
Staff writer

Dr. Max Mayfield, director of the National Hurricane Center, said Sunday that officials with the Federal Emergency Management Agency and the Department of Homeland Security, including FEMA Director Mike Brown and Homeland Security Secretary Michael Chertoff, listened in on electronic briefings given by his staff in advance of Hurricane Katrina slamming Louisiana and Mississippi and were advised of the storm's potential deadly effects.

Mayfield said the strength of the storm and the potential disaster it could bring were made clear during both the briefings and in formal advisories, which warned of a storm surge capable of overtopping levees in New Orleans and winds strong enough to blow out windows of high-rise buildings. He said the briefings included information on expected wind speed, storm surge, rainfall and the potential for tornadoes to accompany the storm as it came ashore.

"We were briefing them way before landfall," Mayfield said. "It's not like this was a surprise. We had in the advisories that the levee could be topped.

"I keep looking back to see if there was anything else we could have done, and I just don't know what it would be," he said.

Chertoff told reporters Saturday that government officials had not expected the damaging combination of a powerful hurricane levee breaches that flooded New Orleans.

Brown, Mayfield said, is a dedicated public servant.

"The question is why he couldn't shake loose the resources that were needed," he said.

Brown and Chertoff could not be reached for comment on Sunday afternoon.

In the days before Katrina hit, Mayfield said, his staff also briefed FEMA, which under the Department of Homeland Security, at FEMA's headquarters in Washington, D.C., its Region 6 office in Dallas and the Region 4 office in Atlanta about the potential effects of the storm.

He said all of those briefings were logged in the hurricane center's records. And Mayfield said his staff also participated in the five-day "Hurricane Pam" exercise sponsored by FEMA and the Louisiana Office of Homeland Security and Emergency Preparedness in July 2004 that assumed a similar storm would hit the city.

FEMA's own July 23, 2004, news release announcing the end of that exercise summed up the assumptions they used, which were eerily close to what Katrina delivered:

"Hurricane Pam brought sustained winds of 120 mph, up to 20 inches of rain in parts of southeast Louisiana and storm surge that topped levees in the New Orleans area. More than one million residents evacuated and Hurricane Pam destroyed 500,000-600,000 buildings. Emergency officials from 50 parish, state, federal and volunteer organizations faced this scenario during a five-day exercise held this week at the State Emergency Operations Center in Baton Rouge.

"The exercise used realistic weather and damage information developed by the National Weather Service, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, the LSU Hurricane Center and other state and federal agencies to help officials develop joint response plans for a catastrophic hurricane in Louisiana."

That plan assumed such a hurricane would result in the opening of 1,000 evacuee shelters that would have to be staffed for 100 days, and a search and rescue operation using 800 people. The storm would create 30 million tons of debris, including 237,000 cubic yards of household hazardous waste.

Mayfield said his concern now is that another named storm could hit either New Orleans or the Mississippi Gulf coast, as September is the most active month of the annual hurricane season.

"This is like the fourth inning in a nine-inning ballgame," he said. "We know that another one would cause extreme stress on the people who have been hurt by Katrina."

• • • • • •

Mark Schleifstein can be reached at mersmia@cox.net.

OUR OPINIONS

Please don't go, Mr. Benson

The people of the New Orleans area "battered, grieving and homeless" are in desperate need of something to hold onto. Something to ease their broken hearts and nourish their spirits.

Saints owner Tom Benson can give them that something. He can choose, and we fervently hope he will, to play this fall's home games at LSU's Tiger Stadium.

Saints fans are among the most loyal in the NFL. For 38 years, they have embraced this team whether it won or lost, and the losses almost always outnumbered the wins. Mr. Benson owns this team, and it is his business. But this is our team, too, at least in spirit.

What other fans would pack the Superdome year after year despite lackluster win/loss records? Don't these devoted people deserve that sort of dedication in return?

This metro area has suffered the worst natural catastrophe in the nation's history. People who were helpless to get out of the way of the storm died in our beloved Superdome. The Dome is wrecked, and it is a place known for misery right now. But it can be refurbished. Its rebuilding can be a hopeful sign to the hundreds of thousands of residents who have been scattered across the region by Hurricane Katrina - people who have lost not only loved ones and homes, but their entire community.

The Saints have been a source of that sense of community since the day they first walked on the field. They bring us together in a way nothing else does.

The NFL doesn't want the Saints to leave. As after the Sept. 11 attacks, when the New York Giants chose to stay in their ravaged city, the league sees the Saints as a balm for wounded souls.

Surely the players don't want to leave. Receiver Joe Horn spent three hours touring the Astrodome on Saturday, signing autographs for children and giving the 15,000 displaced storm survivors something to smile about.

And it is difficult to believe Mr. Benson would want to leave, despite reports to the contrary. He has talked in recent months about how much he loves New Orleans, about his desire to stay here, and we take him at his word.

Before Katrina, Saints fans wanted their team to stay. Now they need it to stay.

With much thanks

"Neighbor" is a casual kind of word. Most of the time we use it just to refer to someone who lives on our street or block, someone we greet in passing most of the time but also someone we'd call upon if there were an emergency, knowing full well that they would help.

We have an emergency. And thank God, we also have neighbors. They are in places like Dallas, Houston and San Antonio. They've never laid eyes on the men, women and children streaming out of the devastated New Orleans area. But they are opening their doors and their hearts to us.

"Thank you" can be a casual kind of phrase, too. We say it when someone hands us our receipt or allows us to merge into a lane of traffic. This week, though, it seems like those two little words can hardly carry the freight of gratitude that we feel. Our lives have been broken, and so have our hearts. But the kindness and generosity of people in our neighboring states still moves us deeply, even in our pain.

The many, many humanitarian acts can hardly be tallied. They are happening everywhere, from the insurance company that tracked down a Louisiana man to tell him that a Fort Worth attorney had found his lost wallet at a gas station line in Mississippi to a Dallas pharmacist with a house full of evacuees who spent her first day back from maternity leave trying to get prescriptions and insurance information for an elderly Slidell couple. Churches are organizing drives to gather water and food. The students of Bishop Lynch Catholic High School in Dallas began a school-wide drive on Friday before the administration had even decided how to respond. Their decisiveness speaks volumes. It's also exactly what's needed to address this national catastrophe.

The same spirit that moved Americans to stand in line for hours to donate blood after the Sept. 11 terrorist attack is alive and well and is moving people to tremendous deeds. We may be a little too tired and traumatized to fully express how much we appreciate every kind word, every helping hand, every donation, but we feel it nonetheless.

Some of us will truly become the neighbors of the people who are opening their arms to us. Some of us have nothing to go back to, no homes, no jobs, no places of worship, no schools. Our neighborhoods, such a keystone for New Orleanians, are under Lake Pontchartrain. But the fact that many people in the rest of the country are welcoming us is balm to aching souls.

The influx of new residents will change communities everywhere, and change is challenging for human beings. But Judy Porter, a religion teacher at Bishop Lynch, sees only the good in that. "It could make us better, kinder, nicer, a city of love and great food and jazz music," she said.

What can we say to such love but "thank you."

Many animals in foster care around the state

Pets may get rescued from homes

By Sandra Barbier
Staff writer

Humane groups and parish animal control agencies are hoping to stem the tide of what could become another heart-breaking aftereffect of Hurricane Katrina: the deaths of hundreds or thousands of pets left behind in houses and yards by owners expecting to be able to return to their homes in just a few days.

"We've received thousands of requests from all over the area, asking us to go in and look for their pets," said Paul Berry, an official with the Utah-based Best Friends Animal Society.

Berry, a former New Orleanian, and the society have been in the area assisting the Jefferson Parish Animal Shelter in housing some of the parish's stray dogs and cats.

The society has built an emergency shelter at the St. Francis Animal Sanctuary in Tylertown, Miss.

"We're at about 600 (animals) right now," Berry said. The society has taken in strays and rescued animals, but rescuing animals from homes will require a more coordinated effort, Berry said.

Public agencies' first priority is rescuing survivors, and "they need to search houses. Why not pull the pets out at the same time? If they make us wait until the water goes down, they're (pets are) all going to die and we have one more tragedy," he said.

In some cases that has been done, officials said.

Louisiana SPCA director Laura Maloney said New Orleans shelter workers follow other agencies and crews through neighborhoods and rescue pets, some locked in houses. At the owners' request, "we break in," she said.

The Jefferson Parish Animal Shelter has not received many calls about rescuing pets from homes, shelter director Bert Smith said. Whether they do "will depend on the kind of calls we get. We'll try to deal with any situation as best we can."

The shelter has been operating with a short staff and poor communications for several days, he said.

It evacuated 215 animals last Sunday to the Washington Parish Fairgrounds. The hurricane knocked out the area's water and electricity Monday. "We were sleeping in our cars," Smith said.

Shelter workers emptied the fairgrounds with the help of Best Friends, which took 130 of the animals, and individuals who volunteered to temporarily keep the rest, he said.

"We got back here Friday and were called to pick up pets at the I-10 and Causeway," where evacuees were waiting for buses to take them out of New Orleans, he said. "There were thousands and thousands of people and hundreds and hundreds of pets . . . They weren't letting them (evacuees) take their animals with them."

Smith said the human and animal misery and suffering overwhelmed shelter workers, who picked up 55 cats and dogs and a ferret. "It was back-breaking," he said. The animals were taken to Jefferson Parish's west bank animal shelter, which had water and electricity.

On Saturday, evacuees were moved to Louis Armstrong International Airport in Kenner, and could bring their pets. "They were allowing people to take pets. Thank God for that, or else who knows how many animals we would have running around and loose," Smith said.

However, officials would not let evacuees take aggressive dogs or dogs big enough to displace a human on the evacuation buses. "Those were apparently abandoned," Smith said. By Saturday afternoon, very few were still on the interstate, he said.

Smith said members of the American Veterinary Medical Association's disaster team helped treat evacuees' pets at the airport.

Also Saturday, the Jefferson Parish Sheriff's Office deputies reported animals stranded at the Petco store on Veterans Memorial Boulevard in Metairie.

Workers rescued birds, "pocket pets" such as hamsters and gerbils, and snakes and tarantulas. The store doesn't sell dogs or cats, he said.

With Jefferson residents being allowed to return to their homes today, Smith said, he expects many calls about strays and dog bites as homeowners are out trying to clean up. Best Friends will assist by taking about 100 more pets to the Mississippi facility.

Each will be photographed and their pictures posted at the group's Web site, www.bestfriends.org, along with an electronic form owners can fill out if they see their pet, Berry said. The organization will hold animals for up to three months, using a network among its 250,000 members nationwide to provide foster homes.

"Fifteen thousand of those have stepped up," to offer temporary homes, he said. The three months could be extended for up to three more months. If an animal is not claimed, it will be offered for adoption. The photo gallery should be available around Wednesday, Berry said.

French Quarter forges on with stubborn hearts

'We're not helpless,' says cleanup crowd

By Bruce Nolan
Staff writer

About 1 p.m. Sunday, the sixth day after the apocalypse of wind, fire and flood visited New Orleans, Nancy Hirst stepped out of Johnny White's Sports Bar and Grill in the French Quarter and trilled, "There's buses leaving from Harrah's in a little while, if anybody's interested."

None among the small crowd gathered outside in the empty street stirred.

Not bare-chested John Lambert, carrying a sign that read "Life goes on?"

Not a woman in black fishnet stockings who called herself Jelly Sandwich ("'cause Jam don't shake like that"). And not Diana Straydog, an Apache Indian in flip-flops smoking an 8-inch Monte Cristo cigar.

Overhead, the whine and thump of heavy military helicopters reverberated through the nearly empty streets of the French Quarter. They circled on distant missions or streamed low overhead. Once a fleet of seven streamed over the triple spires of St. Louis Cathedral in a deafening roar.

Armed police and sheriff's deputies from distant states patrolled Canal Street and walked through the French Quarter with sidearms and M-16 rifles.

But the Quarter remained a determined flicker of its old self.

Although largely depopulated, it was not empty. And what filled it up was what people have always filled it with, which is what is in their hearts.

At noon, the great bells of St. Louis Cathedral remained silent instead of tolling the hour as usual. The only sound filling the empty Place John Paul was the swish of Ty Watford's broom.

Watford, his companion, Ashley McCoy, and a few friends swept leaves and branches accumulated from Hurricane Katrina and dumped them in city trash barrels. The place looked parade-ground perfect.

"It's our neighborhood. We're not helpless," Watford said. "We can fix it ourselves. We don't have to wait for anybody."

Watford and McCoy rode out the hurricane two blocks away on Dumaine Street, and three days ago they began sweeping there, out of pride and a desire to kill the boredom.

"You should see where we live," Watford said. "Our street looks like nothing ever happened."

On Saturday, they swept St. Anne and St. Peters streets flanking Jackson Square; Sunday was for the Place John Paul.

While reports abounded of anarchy outside the Quarter, Watford said he and McCoy never felt unsafe. "Every time somebody passes by, they ask if we need something. The French Quarter is as safe now as it's ever been."

It was safe - even convivial - outside Johnny White's on the corner of Bourbon and Orleans, perhaps the only place in the Quarter serving, even if it was warm.

Ordinarily, during the Southern Decadence weekend, the Quarter would be packed with gay men and lesbians socializing in their annual celebration of gay culture.

But after Katrina, this would have to do: Lambert, with his son; Straydog with her cigar; and Jelly Sandwich, who said her "Central Business District name" is Jill Sandars.

In time, they would head a few blocks away and start the traditional Sunday decadence parade. As usual, the rules were bent.

Lambert, for one, spoke of having a girlfriend. "I guess you could say it's an excuse for people to come out and be whoever they are or whoever they want to be," he said. "There are so many dedicated people here, and they're not going to give up. You hear so many people outside saying they're not coming back.

"There's got to be at least as many who will."

ATTENTION

MACY*S
NEW ORLEANS
EMPLOYEES

Please contact Macy*s offices by calling 1-800-444-8477 or by email at Neworleans.emergency@macys.com

We are anxious to hear that you are safe and how we can stay in contact with you.

"The military are not police officers generally; their job is to fight a war. That's totally different from a police function unless people want to turn this country into other countries where you have the military running the police force, which you did in Central America."

JOHN BAKER
Constitutional law professor at Louisiana State University.

Military presence isn't martial law

True martial law little used in country

By Susan Finch
Staff writer

Martial law isn't a law at all.

But the term has been invoked over and over in the week since Hurricane Katrina struck to describe the enhanced authority assumed by public officials, restrictions on access to some public streets and the presence of armed federal soldiers roaming parts of the New Orleans area.

Some public officials do invoke extraordinary authority during emergencies, under a 12-year-old Louisiana law. But the presence of active-duty military personnel does not mean martial law has been declared.

The role of the active military thus far has been to help the Federal Emergency Management Agency with humanitarian work, search and rescue efforts, medical assistance and supply distribution  not to enforce civil law, a military spokesman said.

The National Guard is trying to enforce civil law in the hurricane zone. It was pressed into service by Gov. Kathleen Blanco.

A true state of martial law would also put the active military in a law enforcement role. That rarely happens. Martial law was declared during labor strikes in the early 20th century and during the Watts riots of 1965 in Los Angeles, said John Baker, constitutional law professor at Louisiana State University.

At all other times, the U.S. system of government is set up to give the states and their own police the primary responsibility to protect residents, with the federal government being called on only as a backup when a state is overwhelmed.

"If a governor will call and say, I no longer have the ability to secure my state, I need help, the president could invoke the Insurrection Act and the military could assist in law enforcement activities," said a U.S. Northern Command lawyer who spoke on the condition that he not be identified. "That is not what we are doing."

Baker said martial law is not a written law but has been recognized by the U.S. Supreme Court as a legal concept.

"It's a suspension of law, and the term goes way back and it's linked to what is called the law of necessity," doing what is necessary in extreme situations, Baker said. "The question is whether, quite apart from law, there is inherent power to those charged with order in the community to keep it from descending into chaos and insurrection."

What is written is the Louisiana Homeland Security and Emergency Assistance and Disaster Act of 1993. Under the law, the governor and some top parish officials, including Jefferson Parish President Aaron Broussard, have the right to commandeer private property if necessary to cope with an emergency. Specific officials may also suspend any law related to the conducting of official business or any rule previously issued by a state agency if complying would "prevent, hinder or delay necessary action" to mitigate the emergency, the state attorney general's office said last week.

The law also gives certain officials the right to compel evacuations, suspend alcohol and weapon sales and make provisions for emergency housing, the office said.

Mayors assume similar authority, although not the right to commandeer private property or arrange emergency housing, the office said.

Blanco invoked the 1993 law when she declared a state of emergency last week. Broussard himself has described Jefferson as being "under martial law, and there's only one marshal: Me."

Broussard has announced that Jefferson Parish is closed to all residents and visitors. Police have been staffing roadblocks on highways entering the parish. Despite widespread criticism from other public officials and utility companies, Broussard plans to let residents return Monday for a brief time but will order them out again until streets are clear, power is restored and the water supply made safe for drinking.

Baker said Louisiana must take care not to "fall into the notion that you look first and primarily to the military to run things.

"The military are not police officers generally; their job is to fight a war. That's totally different from a police function unless people want to turn this country into other countries where you have the military running the police force, which you did in Central America."

Important Hurricane Katrina Insurance Claims Information for Liberty Mutual Customers

Liberty Mutual claims professionals are on duty 24 hours a day. If you sustain damage to home or auto, call 1-800-2-CLAIMS (1-800-225-2467) or visit www.libertymutualinsurance.com to report your claim.

To assist policyholders and help facilitate prompt claims service, our catastrophe teams also will be on-hand in the areas hardest hit by the storm.

Remember – if you lose power, keep circuit breakers turned off and electrical appliances, equipment, and computers unplugged until all power is restored to prevent further damage from a surge.

Liberty Mutual.

HURRICANE KATRINA AFTERMATH

They've tried to describe it, using words such as "disaster" and "tragedy" and "calamity." But it seems like there are no words that can come close to adequately describing the devastation the past week has wrought on New Orleans. This time, you had to see it - etched on the faces of the trapped and the dying, or reflected in the seemingly unending floodwaters - to begin grasping the depths of what Hurricane Katrina has done to our city.

AUGUST 29

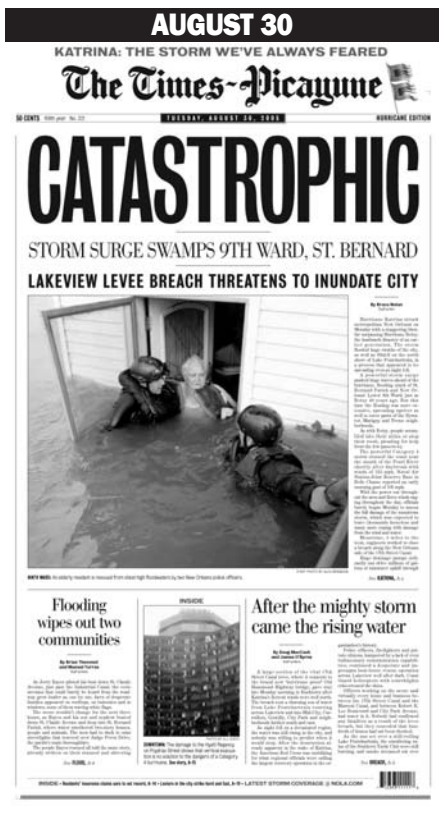
The Times-Picayune

GROUND ZERO



SUPERDOME BECOMES LAST RESORT FOR THOUSANDS UNABLE TO LEAVE

NEW ORLEANS BRACES FOR NIGHTMARE OF THE BIG ONE

At least 10,000 find refuge at the Superdome

COMPLETE COVERAGE

AUGUST 30

KATRINA: THE STORM WE'VE ALWAYS FEARED

The Times-Picayune

CATASTROPHIC

STORM SURGE SWAMPS 9TH WARD, ST. BERNARD

LAKEVIEW LEVEE BREACH THREATENS TO INUNDATE CITY

Flooding wipes out two communities

After the mighty storm came the rising water

AUGUST 31

KATRINA: THE STORM WE'VE ALWAYS FEARED

The Times-Picayune

UNDER WATER

LEVEE BREACH SWAMPS CITY FROM LAKE TO RIVER

Population urged to leave; years of cleanup ahead

Daylong efforts to repair levee fail

Flooding will only get worse

A WEEK OF HORROR

AUGUST 29

STAFF PHOTO BY JENNIFER ZDON

MONDAY: As it became apparent that Katrina was determined to hit New Orleans, there was a palpable tension in much of the metro area. But in a city that has endured more than its share of hurricanes, many got ready to ride it out - including Verma Levy of the Bywater neighborhood, above - despite predictions that this one might be The Big One. And then the rains came.

AUGUST 31

STAFF PHOTO BY RUSTY COSTANZE

WEDNESDAY: It wasn't going to stop. The water rose, and rose and rose, as a swollen Lake Pontchartrain poured into the city and surrounding parishes, including in Kenner in Jefferson Parish, above. In the worst-hit places, including St. Bernard Parish and parts of New Orleans, those who had boats began to flee. Those who didn't, sought higher ground, with the sober realization that the advice that had been repeated over and over since 1965's Hurricane Betsy - put a hatchet in the attic in case you have to hack your way out - was not an old wives' tale after all.

AUGUST 30

STAFF PHOTO BY TED JACKSON

TUESDAY: It looked at first like New Orleans, though battered, had dodged a bullet. That was before everyone realized the levee system had bowed to Katrina. As the water rose - from the 9th Ward, above, to Lakeview to eastern New Orleans - it became obvious that locals' worst fears were coming true: New Orleans was going under.

SEPTEMBER 1

STAFF PHOTO BY BRETT DUKE

THURSDAY: After days of panic and disbelief, and as those fleeing the high waters sought refuge in an already full Superdome, an exhausted New Orleans made a mistake: It began to hope. The water had stopped rising, because the water in the lake had leveled out with that in the city, and the worst appears to be over. But it wasn't. Not by a long shot.

HURRICANE KATRINA AFTERMATH

SEPTEMBER 1

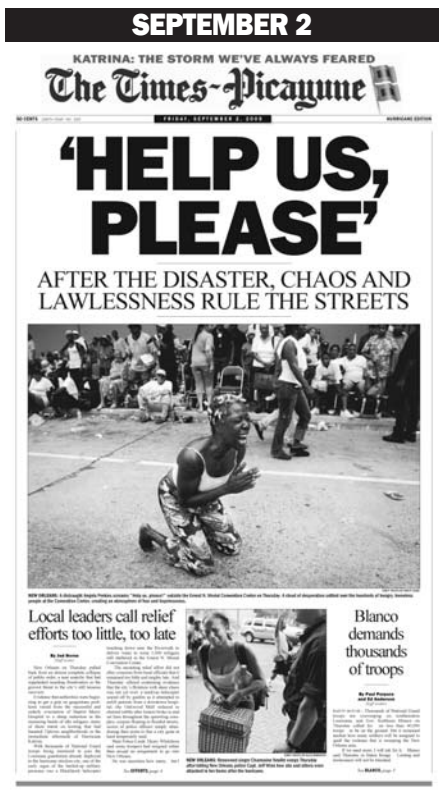
KATRINA: THE STORM WE'VE ALWAYS FEARED

The Times-Picayune

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 1, 2005 HURRICANE EDITION



HITTING BOTTOM

THE WATER HAS FINALLY STOPPED POURING IN BUT IT COULD BE OCTOBER BEFORE THE CITY DRIES OUT

Engineers punching holes in levee to speed draining

Nightmare in the 9th Ward all too real for one woman

SEPTEMBER 2

KATRINA: THE STORM WE'VE ALWAYS FEARED

The Times-Picayune

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 2, 2005 HURRICANE EDITION

'HELP US, PLEASE'

AFTER THE DISASTER, CHAOS AND LAWLESSNESS RULE THE STREETS

Local leaders call relief efforts too little, too late

Blanco demands thousands of troops

SEPTEMBER 3

KATRINA: THE STORM WE'VE ALWAYS FEARED

The Times-Picayune

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 3, 2005 HURRICANE EDITION

FIRST WATER, NOW FIRE

Blazes turn parts of besieged city into an inferno

Bush stunned by condition of New Orleans

More guns, buses, relief roll into city

SEPTEMBER 4

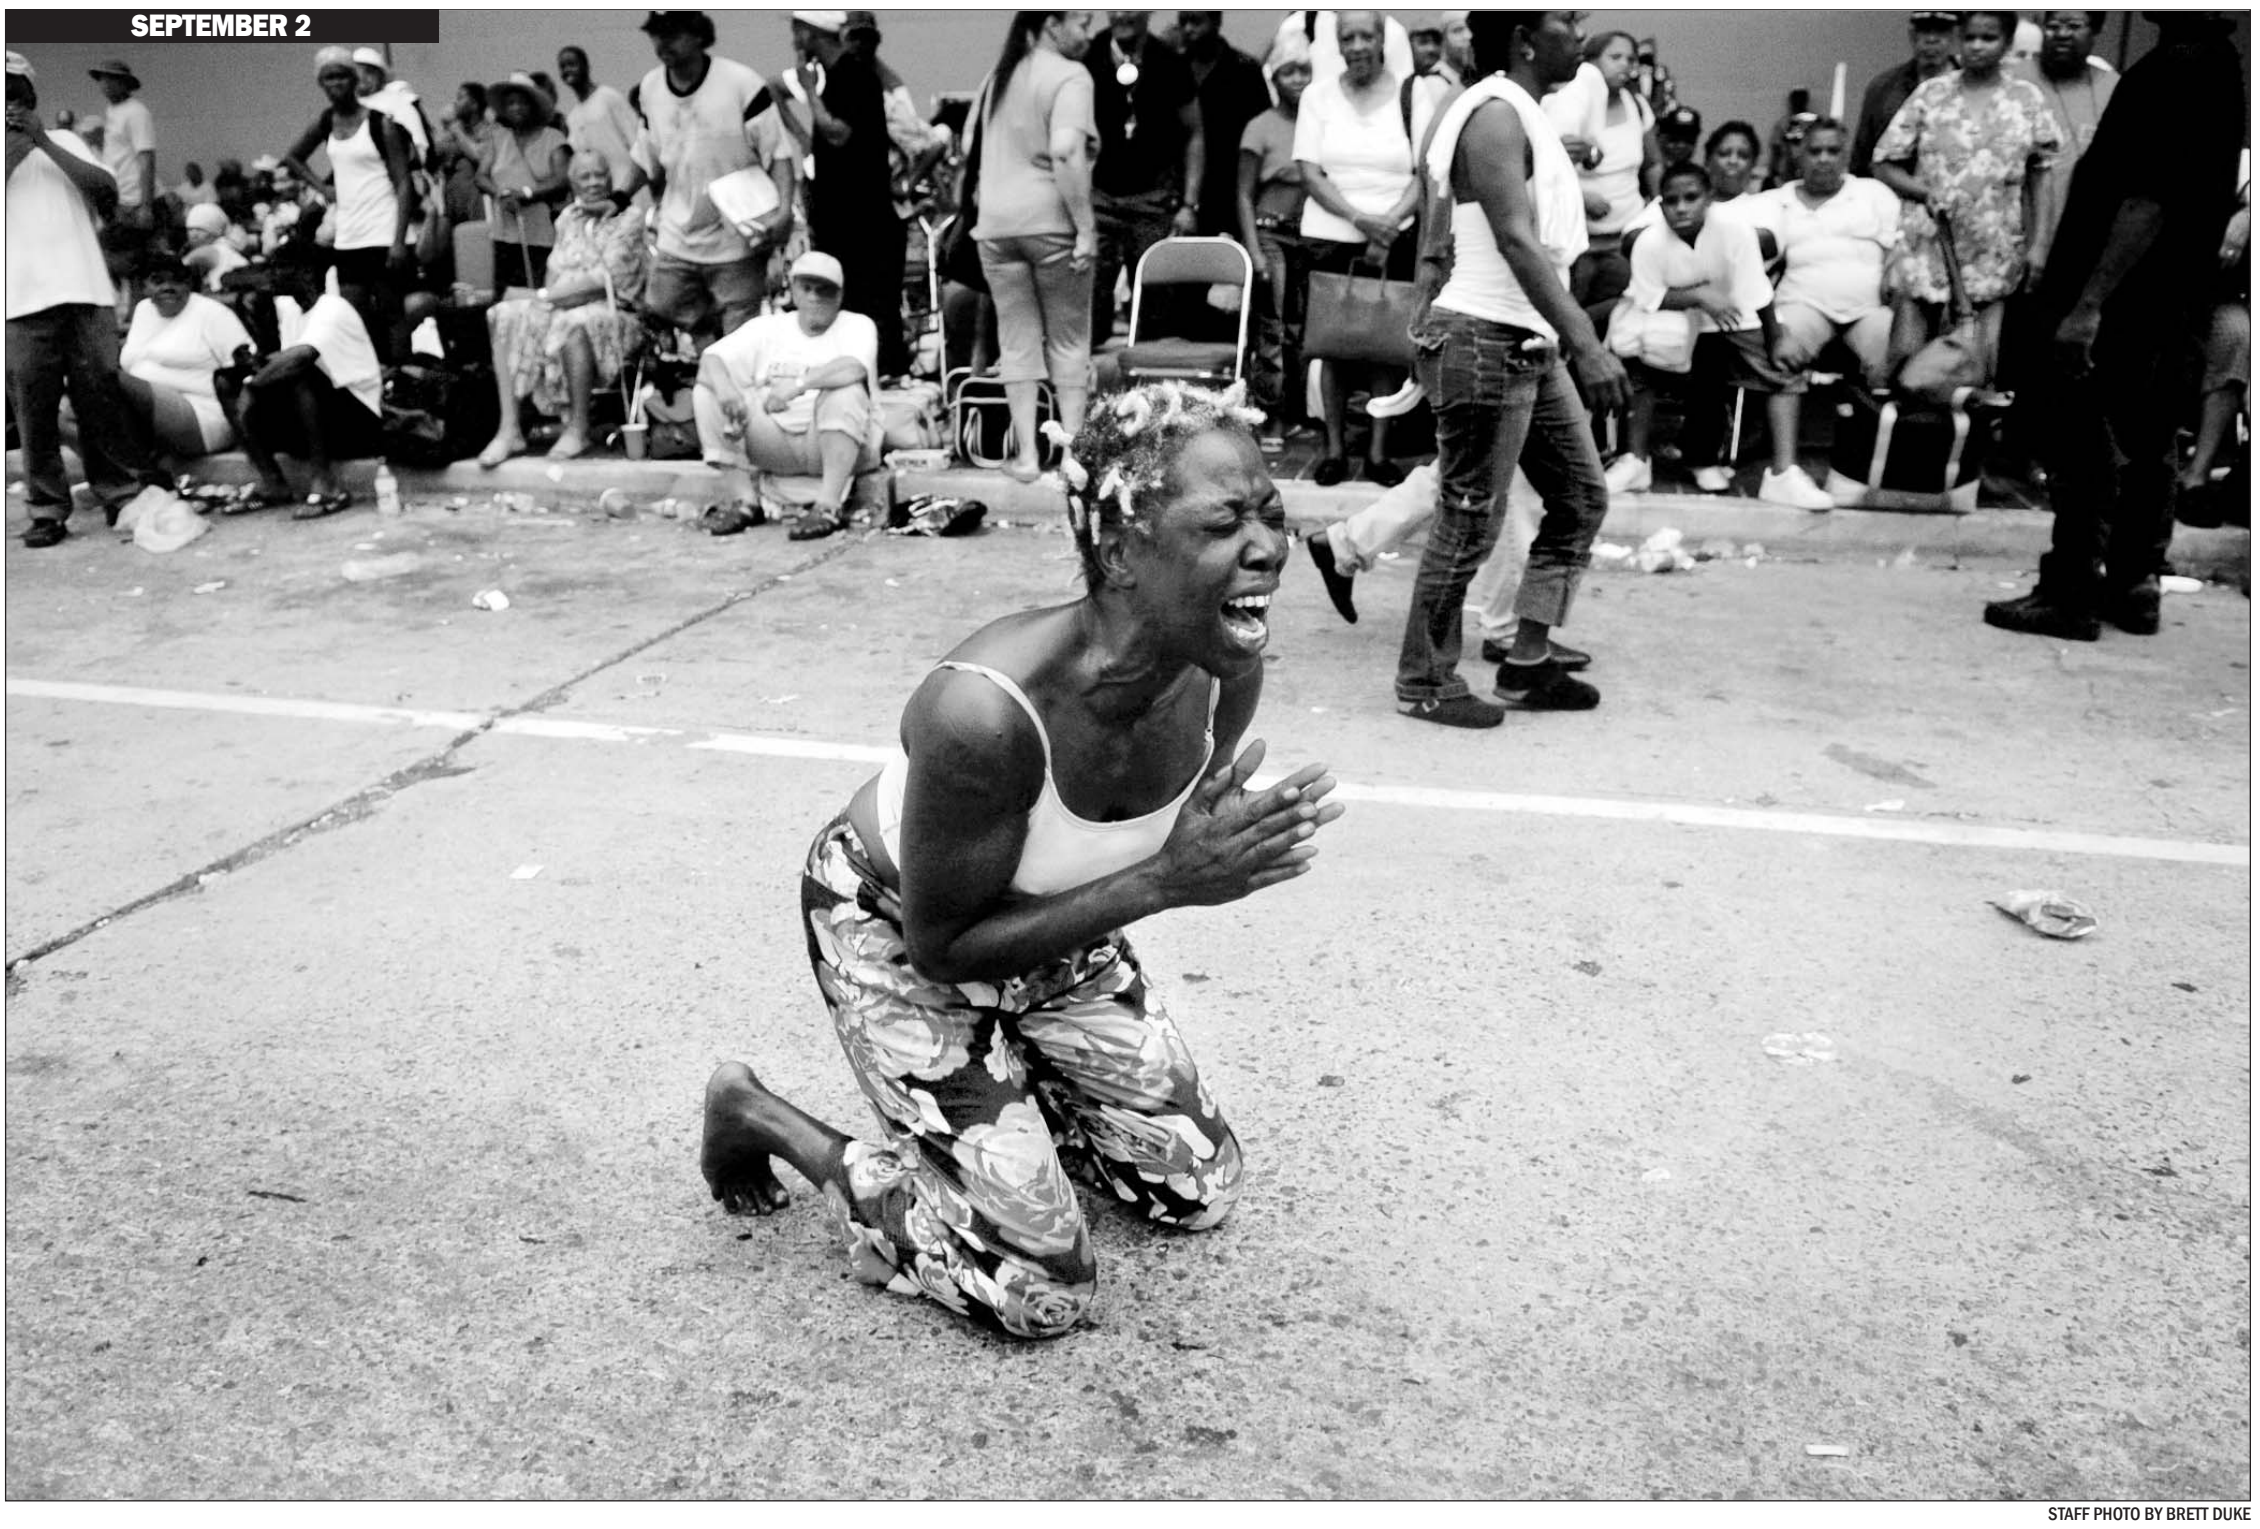
SUNDAY KATRINA: THE STORM WE'VE ALWAYS FEARED

The Times-Picayune



SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 4, 2005

After five days, thousands of anguished storm victims finally have a reason for hope

HELP AT LAST

Amid chaos, a rare voice of strength

Authorities regaining grip on city

FRIDAY: They were supposed to be taken to safety. They were supposed to be taken care of. But for those stranded at the Superdome, which had been declared the city's "shelter of last resort," and at the Ernest N. Morial Convention, nervousness gave way to fear that help might not come after all. With food and water running out, and living conditions unspeakable, Convention Center refugee Angela Jenkins spoke for everyone in the city: "Help us, please!"

STAFF PHOTO BY BRETT DUKE

SEPTEMBER 3

SATURDAY: The rampant looting, and reports of violence that followed, was bad enough. Now local buildings were burning, including a chemical plant in the 3400 block of Chartes Street. But there were signs of progress: National Guard troops began rolling into town, and President Bush toured the region, acknowledging that the federal response to the storm had been inadequate and vowing to do what needed to be done to regain control of the city.

STAFF PHOTO BY ALEX BRANDON

SEPTEMBER 4

SUNDAY: Finally, a week after it all began, it seemed New Orleans had turned a corner. Help had arrived. A growing number of National Guard troops were making their presence known and making a difference. And with the squalid Convention Center and Superdome mostly emptied, buses arrived to remove people stranded on Interstate 10 at Veterans Memorial and Causeway boulevards. At last, a smoldering and sodden city finally had reason to believe that the recovery process, and the grieving process, would soon be able to begin.

STAFF PHOTO BY ELIOT KAMENITZ

SPORTS

"We have many goals to accomplish, and one of them is to become a leader in the revitalization of New Orleans."

MICKEY LOOMIS, Saints general manager

STAFF PHOTO BY

BOLD READ IN: text face herean d heretext face herean d heretext face herean d heretext face herean d heretext face herean d heretext face herean d heretext face herean d heretext face herean d heretext face herean d heretext face herean d heretext face her

Saints set up shop in San Antonio

Site of home games remains undertermined

By Mike Triplett
Staff writer

SAN ANTONIO - The Saints announced Sunday night that they plan to set up their base of operations in San Antonio for the remainder of this season, regardless of where they ultimately decide to play their home games.

But both General Manager Mickey Loomis and Coach Jim Haslett said their preference is to play those home games in Baton Rouge, if possible, and that the team's commitment remains to New Orleans and the state of Louisiana.

"The first thing, and I believe the most important thing, is that although we are practicing here in San Antonio and we're trying to locate a place for our home games, we are still the New Orleans Saints, and our commitment to our city is stronger than ever," Loomis said.

Loomis and Haslett addressed the media during the team's first official press conference since arriving early Friday morning in San Antonio, where the team will begin practicing this afternoon for next Sunday's season opener at Carolina.

"We have many goals to accomplish, and one of them is to become a leader in the revitalization of New Orleans," Loomis said. "We want to be on the forefront of making our city stronger. Our team is representing the state of Louisiana and the city of New Orleans, and we'll take that responsibility seriously.

"We'll play this season with the same toughness, determination and resiliency of the people of New Orleans and we'll make them proud."

Loomis also announced that the team is forming the New Orleans Saints Hurricane Katrina Relief Fund, and that team owner Tom Benson and his wife, Gayle, will make the first donation.

The statement came in the wake of reports that Benson was strongly leaning toward moving the Saints' home games to San Antonio this season - and perhaps moving the team permanently to the town where he has longstanding business and personal ties.

There also were indications of dissent in the ranks of the organization about where the team should play its games.

When asked directly about those reports, Loomis reiterated his opening statement, saying, "That's the farthest thing from any of our minds."

"Again," Loomis said, "our commitment to New Orleans is stronger than ever. We recognize that we're representing Louisiana and we're representing the city of New Orleans. And I don't know how important a football game is, probably not very, but if we can uplift anyone, if we can make any of our fans feel good about themselves or about the state or about the city, with just the fact that we're out there, much less playing as hard as we're going to play, that's what's worthwhile to us."

San Antonio made sense as a base of operations because the city had hosted the Saints before - last season, when the team evacuated before Hurricane Ivan. Loomis said the team's first consideration was to move its operations to Houston, but that city was so heavily involved in relief efforts that the team did not want to be a burden.

Loomis said while the team's practice facility in Metairie was not damaged too badly, several of the players and members of the organization cannot return to their homes anytime soon. And they needed to address such issues as where to send their children to school.

Loomis estimated that maybe 400 or 500 people would relocate to San Antonio for the next few months.

But Loomis and Haslett said they would still prefer to play their home games in Baton Rouge - mostly because it is closer to the team's fan base.

The team and the NFL continue to consider several options for those home games, including Baton Rouge, San Antonio and the option of playing all of its road games at the site of the visiting teams' - like the Saints will do in Giants Stadium on the weekend of Sept. 18.

Haslett expressed disappointment with that decision, saying NFL commissioner Paul Tagliabue, "put us behind the 8-ball," but he said that concern pales in comparison to the larger issues of the day.

Haslett also said it might be easier to play the team's home games in San Antonio this year since the Saints would not have to travel every week. "But I don't know if you've ever seen our home record vs. our road record," he joked. "So if they think we're playing on the road every weekend, well probably win a lot more games."

Loomis said hopefully a decision on those home games will be made in the coming days, but there are many logistical issues that need to be worked out in any potential site.

Ultimately, the decision will be made by Tagliabue.

"No decisions have been made on where the Saints will play their remaining 2005 scheduled home games following their Week 2 game at Giants Stadium," NFL spokesman Greg Aiello said Sunday. "As Commissioner Tagliabue stated on Friday, the Saints represent Louisiana and New Orleans and we are going to work with public officials there and with Tom Benson to maintain a focus on the region's needs and the role of the Saints and NFL in the recovery."

Gov. Kathleen Blanco would like the Saints to play at least part of their season in Louisiana, said Bob Mann, communications director for the governor. He

See SAINTS, page 19

Benson, have FAITH in N.O.

By Peter Finney
Sports Columnist

Have "FAITH."

In the days before Hurricane Katrina, that was the message the Saints sent to the most loyal following in the NFL.

In our post-Katrina world, as I see it, FAITH is a message that should be embraced by Tom Benson, immediately. Not next week, not next month and definitely not next year.

So what should the owner of a franchise that has called New Orleans home for 38 years be telling us, at a time a devastated Big Easy floats in some sort of primeval ooze?

Tom Benson should tell us he will lead the charge to make our Superdome football-friendly again.

He should tell us it's his intention to keep the team there indefinitely.

He should tell us, as a resident of a city that gave him life, and prosperity, he has FAITH in the future of that city, FAITH that New Orleans will recover and become a living symbol of what FAITH can accomplish.

He should tell his season-ticket holders who already may have lost everything but FAITH, that the Saints will play as many, if not all, of their home games in LSU's Tiger Stadium, not in San Antonio's Alamodome.

When it comes to FAITH, Tom Benson finds himself in a unique position, keeping in mind NFL owners carry different levels of clout.

And, right now, as the owner of a team in a city drawing international focus, Tom Benson can become a Big Easy immortal by doing the right thing.

Which is?

Well, for someone who did business in San Antonio, it would be easy for Tom Benson to use Katrina as a kind of escape hatch to set up shop - permanently - in the home of the Alamo.

That would be a horrendous decision in this change-of-life time. In the wake of 9/11, Commissioner Paul Tagliabue made sure the NFL did everything possible to heal the wounds of terror. Now Tom Benson, with the commissioner's backing, should be finding a way for the New Orleans Saints, not the San Antonio Saints, to begin waving "We Have FAITH" banners.

Obviously, in this case, it's a one-man bottom line.

It's Tom Benson's team, Tom Benson's money, and Tom Benson's call.

In the pre-Katrina days, when he was beating the drums for a new stadium, Tom Benson did his best to trash the Superdome as obsolete, light years behind the state-of-the-art facilities springing up around the NFL.

Of course, he was trashing a facility good enough to hold six Super Bowls, one as recently as three years ago.

He was trashing a facility he inherited, debt free, one that allowed his franchise to keep its bottom line among the top half of a 32-team league.

As we speak, the Superdome, as a hurricane shelter, is experiencing its darkest days through no fault of its own.

In a way, it became the No. 1 whipping boy of the national media through no fault of its own.

I listened to one media idiot say, when evacuees were bused from the Superdome to Houston's Astrodome, "they were able to shower, something not available in the Superdome."

He forgot to mention a simple fact. New Orleans was without power. Without power and without water. If the Superdome had 50,000 showers, they would have been useless.

So, yes, the Superdome took a hit. That's exactly what would make this Tom Benson's finest hour.

Standing up, making a "restored Superdome" his top priority in the fight back from a force-of-nature catastrophe, he would have carved out a fitting tombstone.

"Here Lies Tom Benson. He Kept The Faith."

'This is our city. These are people that have supported us. We want to do whatever we can for them.

KEVIN HOUSER, long snapper

AP PHOTO

LET'S DO LUNCH: New Orleans Saints linebacker T.J. Slaughter, left, and Tiffany Cardenas, 18, of San Antonio, serve lunch to Hurricane Katrina evacuees at a shelter at KellyUSA, a former Air Force base.

Saints boost evacuees' spirits

McAllister, McAfee, Gleason, Houser visit shelters

By Mike Triplett
Staff writer

SAN ANTONIO - After a week of watching their city's devastation on television from afar, several Saints players finally were able to do something for the people of their town Sunday.

Seven players, along with General Manager Mickey Loomis and other team employees, spent Sunday morning at an evacuee shelter in San Antonio, mingling with people, serving lunches and signing autographs.

Safety Steve Gleason and his girlfriend, and long snapper Kevin Houser and his wife went shopping at Target with a list of items requested by six families they approached. The most popular items were clean underwear and hair brushes.

"You watch on TV and you see information about where to send a check and make a donation. And we did that, too. But coming here and being with them and being a part of it is just as important, if not more important," Houser said. "This is our city. These are people that have supported us. We want to do whatever we can for them. If coming out here, playing football with the kids, and talking to them is what it takes, we want to do that."

Wayne Gandy, Jamar Nesbit, Brian Young, Zach Hilton and T.J. Slaughter also spent a few hours at the Hurricane Relief Warehouse on the site of KellyUSA, a former Air Force base housing approximately 10,000 evacuees from New Orleans. Media relations staffers Greg Bensel, Nick Karl and Justin Macione and his wife also visited.

Most of the Saints players left to see their families over the three-day weekend - the team will not report to San Antonio until 6 p.m. today. Other players visited shelters in other areas, such as Deuce McAllister and Fred McAfee in Mississippi and Joe Horn in Houston.

Most of the players who stayed in San Antonio had been asking what they could do to help, so a trip to the shelter was hastily arranged.

There was some early frustration as the players were kept waiting outside while organizers tried to work out the logistics of their visit, for security reasons among others. First, some of the players' wives went in on their own. Then Gleason and Houser "snuck in," as well, figuring they didn't look like football players anyway, so they wouldn't cause much of a ruckus.

"It feels pretty good to finally be able to actually do something to help," said Gleason, who said some of the players wondered if there might be some angst against them because they are so well taken care of. But he said that wasn't the case. "They were excited to see us, glad we were just here talking to them."

Some evacuees hardly took notice of the Saints' arrival. Others were tremendously excited, like a woman who ran around with all seven autographs on her khaki shorts.

Teenagers Pernell Marshall and Selus Turner wanted to talk football with the players at length. They were glad to hear rookie quarterback Adrian McPherson made the final roster and think Aaron Brooks should play the first half of games with McPherson playing the second half.

They also wanted to hear the full list of roster cuts.

"That's my team, the Saints," Turner said. "Sometimes they mess up □"

"But then they rebound," Marshall added.

James Barnett, a native of Algiers who spent six days in the Superdome before being evacuated to San Antonio, was one of the first to rush up to the players and shake their hands.

"I love to see that," Barnett said. "It's unity, man. It lets us know we're all together here."

Barnett, who was separated from his wife and daughter a month before Hurricane Katrina hit, was one of many evacuees who praised the efforts of the San Antonio community and organizations such as the Red Cross, Salvation Army, United Way and FEMA.

"They're like angels from God," Barnett said. "It's like a brand new life."

One of the Saints' family members experienced that fresh start Sunday as well. Former ground superintendent Lester Vallet Sr., a longtime employee, was evacuated to San Antonio, and he was taken to the team hotel to be reunited with his son, Lester Vallet Jr., a grounds supervisor with the team.

Vallet Sr., 82, had been wearing a Saints T-shirt and a big Saints belt buckle given to him by former coach Bum Phillips, which were conversation starters. And once he let police know that he used to work for the team, they informed him the Saints were on their way and put them together.

Vallet Sr. is still apart from his wife, who was evacuated from their home on North Broad before he was. But he was looking forward to being reunited with his son.

Hornets' Brown 'blown away' by Slidell devastation

Relief effort will be announced soon, he says

By Jimmy Smith
Staff writer

Hornets forward P.J. Brown made it back to Slidell, the community he has called home for much of his professional life.

And he's still having difficulty describing exactly what he saw.

"It looks like someone dropped a bomb; it's unbelievable," Brown said Saturday night from Houston, where he traveled after riding out the storm in Lafayette with friends and family. "What the water did, the wind. In a lot of places it's like somebody built a house out of toothpicks and just blew it down.

"It's crazy."

Brown's wife, Dee, grew up in Slidell and played high school basketball at Salmen. The couple met while playing together at Louisiana Tech in Ruston.

So Brown is quite familiar with the area, its inhabitants and their unyielding spirit in the face of disaster.

But he wasn't prepared for the utter destruction he witnessed in parts of the community as he returned to check on his home in the Turtle Creek subdivision, and a new home that he was scheduled to move into in two weeks in Lakeshore Estates on the banks of Lake Pontchartrain.

The Turtle Creek dwelling practically was unscathed, just minor wind damage. The lake house was flooded by more than a foot of water on the first level.

"Oh man, I was just blown away," Brown said. "People who have lived there all of their lives are basically homeless. It was just unbelievable. That's all I can say. It was an unbelievable sight.

"But the one thing about those people: They haven't given up. They still have good spirits. They're upbeat. That was the most amazing thing. You could see despair on their faces. But they were still upbeat and positive. They're going through a tough time. But you couldn't tell it by the way they were talking. Those people haven't given up. And everybody else shouldn't, either."

It appeared by Brown's estimation those most affected by Hurricane Katrina's deadly path lived closest to the lake.

"There are still some neighborhoods that are OK," he said. "But by the lake, everything took a tremendous hit. All the neighborhoods there got water. If you were inland, you had a chance. There were a few areas there that survived (flood waters).

"But there's still a lot of wind damage and trees down. If you were by the water, though, you went under."

As he toured the area, friends and acquaintances that had stayed behind instead of fleeing told stories of rapid deterioration of conditions that nearly took their lives and tales of good fortune that saved others.

"People were barely escaping," Brown said. "The water came up so quick in some areas. One lady told me she was with a group of 50 people who gathered to take shelter in their church. They thought that was the best place for them to go.

"Then the water started rising. They all went up to the pulpit and the water level stopped right there. If it wasn't for that, 50 people would have passed.

"Another young lady I know, she and her young child were fighting for their lives when their neighbor came by in a boat and rescued them. She'd have been gone if it hadn't been for that."

Yet while Brown sees hope for his hometown, he is concerned for other nearby communities equally overwhelmed in Katrina's aftermath.

"All the people in rural areas, places like Chalmette, Folsom, Bogalusa, Waveland, Pass Christian ... those people got hit hard, too."

Brown, the Hornets' player representative, said the NBA Players Association soon will announce a major relief effort, one for which they wanted him to fly to New York for a press conference.

"I can't make it to New York," Brown said. "I've got too much going on to get to New York. But we're putting something together to raise money, try to get the 'Feed the Children' group to start canvassing down here, and I'll do whatever I can to personally reach out.

"Right now, I've got to get to work and clean up. It's just unbelievable. In your wildest nightmare, you couldn't dream up something like this."

Sports provide another means of relief

Games provide needed distraction

By John DeShazier
Sports Columnist

Now more than ever, the games should be played.

Not because there's any scientific evidence to support a claim that athletic events provide healing. But if people believe they're medicinal, then they are, even if they're more of a placebo than a prescription. Because, now more than ever, we are desperate for their ability to turn our attention away, if only temporarily, from what really hurts.

So play them because New Orleans and its surrounding areas need the distraction from reality. They need relief from a ringside view of death and destruction that has been so voluminous it has become numbing. Play them because somewhere, for someone, they may induce a smile even under these circumstances, a memory to reflect upon at some point in the future, when lives that have been turned inside out have had some semblance of order restored.

This isn't a plea to ignore what has happened along the Gulf Coast, the loss of life and property that citizens have experienced and witnessed, the looting and violence and lawlessness some have had to endure from others who somehow deduced firing guns and burning buildings were preferable to seeking food, water, shelter and a way out.

Everyone who lives in New Orleans and its surrounding areas has been scarred to varying degrees, some to levels that are unimaginable, depths from which they may never recover. And while the belief may be that those who were fortunate enough to be able to evacuate are the lucky ones, watching the destruction from a distance provides no comfort for those who have yet to contact family and friends, who really have no idea when they can return home, who don't yet know if there even is a home to return to.

There will be no forgetting this, now or ever, not with pictures burned into memory banks as if with a branding iron.

Not when the race to affix blame almost has overshadowed the tragedy that a city was 80 percent underwater, has begun to dwarf the fact that thousands of its citizens were trapped in inhumane conditions, has trumped the fact that there will be a time and place of reckoning for whatever errors were committed but now, while people are trying to make heads or tails of devastated lives, isn't that time or place.

But we need the games now, more than ever.

As distracted as Saints and Hornets players will be, and disjointed as their seasons will be as their governing bodies attempt to carve something resembling "normal" back into their routines, we need the relief that their effort will provide.

It's not food, water, clothes and lodging, though some players, their leagues and unions generously have contributed or pledged their time and money to the relief fund.

What it is, is a chance to draw their attention away from the pain. Temporarily, sure, because once the game ends everyone will have to return to whatever his or her life currently is comprised of, and few in the metro area have lives that ever will be the same. But a shot of adrenaline here and there, into an existence that has been ravaged by Hurricane Katrina, can be mighty potent.

So whenever and wherever possible, the games have to be played.

Lace 'em up, strap 'em, tie 'em up and start the timer.

The clock is ticking on the healing, and the games can play a vital part of it for people who might not have much else to cheer for today.

Loomis, Haslett say team's commited to N.O.

SAINTS, from page 17

said that Tim Coulon, the head of the Superdome Commission, is scheduled to meet Monday with officials from the Saints and the NFL to discuss how to make that happen, Mann said.

LSU officials are also behind the idea, although such an endeavor could be difficult. For starters, there is still a wealth of relief efforts taking place in Baton Rouge. And there are two weekends on the schedule this year when the Tigers would play at home Saturday, followed by a Sunday afternoon Saints game.

The Saints play the Falcons on Oct. 16, one day after LSU is scheduled to host Florida. The Saints play the Bears on Nov. 6, the day after LSU will host Appalachian State.

The Alamodome in San Antonio also has a few conflicting dates this year, though only one of them (the Dec. 15, 16 and 17 NCAA Volleyball Championships) seems to be an immovable event.

Still, city officials seem to be conflicting as to whether they want to bring the Saints games to town. Some have been working behind the scenes in that direction, including one city council member.

But recently elected mayor Phil Hardberger issued a statement earlier this week saying, "I understand that there are a lot of people who are interested in whether or not the New Orleans Saints will be playing football in San Antonio. I am too. Right now, however, our primary focus is on making our city ready to welcome evacuees from Louisiana."

When asked about the latest developments in a press conference Sunday afternoon, Hardberger reiterated, "I like football, but we've got more important things to address right now."

The Alamodome has not been used as a relief shelter, while other events continue to take place in the arena, which could seat 65,000 people for football games, though it is not an ideal NFL stadium.

San Antonio also has not made public efforts to lure the Saints permanently to their town, though that rumor swirled in May when Benson's attorney Stanley Rosenberg, a member of the team's board of directors, told the San Antonio Express-News that Benson was interested in moving the team after the 2005 season, possibly to San Antonio.

A week later, Benson dismissed the notion, saying, "Lawyers sometimes talk too much. I'm not looking at any markets."

Similar reports surfaced Saturday after Louisiana state Sen. Mike Michot, R-Lafayette, told The Times-Picayune that the Saints' executive vice president of administration, Arnold Fielkow, told him Benson was strongly leaning toward moving the Saints permanently to San Antonio.

Fielkow, reached by phone after arriving in San Antonio on Sunday, said the team's official word would come at the evening press conference.

Benson, a native New Orleanian, has not been available for comment this past week, but he issued the following statement Friday:

"Our main concern is with the people of Louisiana and the Gulf Coast region who have experienced the recent tragedy. We are attempting to carry on in these difficult times and are looking out for the best interest of our coaches, staff, players and their families. My prayers are with each of those who have been adversely impacted."

SAINTS SCHEDULE

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Sept. 11 | at Carolina | Noon |
| Sept. 18* | N.Y. Giants | Noon |
| Sept. 25 | at Minnesota | Noon |
| Oct. 2 | Buffalo | Noon |
| Oct. 9 | at Green Bay | Noon |
| Oct. 16 | Atlanta | Noon |
| Oct. 23 | at St. Louis | Noon |
| Oct. 30 | Miami | Noon |
| Nov. 6 | Chicago | Noon |
| Nov. 13 | BYE | |
| Nov. 20 | at New Eng. | Noon |
| Nov. 27 | at N.Y. Jets | 7:30 pm |
| Dec. 4 | Tampa Bay | Noon |
| Dec. 12 | at Atlanta | 8 pm |
| Dec. 18 | Carolina | Noon |
| Dec. 24 | Detroit | Noon |
| Jan. 1 | at Tampa Bay | Noon |

*Game will be rescheduled for either Sept. 19 or 20 and will be at Giants Stadium

Spadoni uses game as escape

Running back turned linebacker looks forward to first start

By Jim Kleinpeter
Staff writer

BATON ROUGE - Fortune was smiling on LSU linebacker Jason Spadoni, if only for a little while.

Last spring he was deep on the running back depth chart and was moved to linebacker. Two weeks ago the only player in front of him, E.J. Kuale, injured an ankle and Spadoni, with no real background on defense, found himself as the probable starter for the LSU season opener.

Any excitement Spadoni had was washed away when Hurricane Katrina struck. Spadoni is expected to start at weakside linebacker when, or if, LSU lines up, against Arizona State on Saturday. School officials are preparing as if there will be a game, but a final decision will come sometime this week, perhaps Tuesday.

All Spadoni could do was push those feelings into the background.

"It's all an Act of God. I can't control that," said the junior from Kenner who played at John Curtis. "Everyone is safe. That's all that matters to me.

"I was scheduled to start. We've got a whole bunch of other games I can play in. Hopefully, I'll start this week. I was excited about the opportunity to start and play, show everybody I have the ability to play. I'll use the extra week to prepare myself mentally, and sort everything out with my family."

Spadoni said he spends a lot of time thinking about his family, which is safe in Houston, and his home in Kenner near the Esplanade Mall. "I heard we got four feet of water," he said. He enjoys the opportunity to practice and forget for a couple of hours.

LSU coaches like the way he's progressed. Defensive coordinator Bo Pelini said Spadoni's athletic ability made him a natural fit, but that he has some intangibles that have furthered his development. Spadoni didn't play defense in high school and isn't sure if the last time was in elementary or middle school.

"He's coming along," Pelini said. "He's got good toughness and instincts. We feel he's just going to get better and better."

Spadoni has shown he can play more than just running back. He played in 11 games as a freshman, mostly on special teams. He sat out the 2003 season because of academic difficulties but returned to special teams play last season. He made the switch to linebacker during spring practice because Joseph Addai, Alley Broussard, Justin Vincent and Shyrone Carey figured to get more playing time at running back.

"He had a rocky transition at first, some ups and downs," middle linebacker Cameron Vaughn said. "Lately he's been up making huge strides. He's definitely learning, stepping up and doing a great job."

Spadoni said having played running back has helped him as a linebacker, especially on running plays. When the play starts, he knows where the back is going, because it's where he used to try to be.

"It's exactly the same but flip-flopped," he said. "I can anticipate where the back is going and try to get there first. The toughest part is picking up things like a backside pass route. It's tough to see the whole picture."

LSU NOTES

ASU OFFICIALS IN TOWN: LSU associate athletic director Herb Vincent said officials from Arizona State's athletic department were expected to be in Baton Rouge on Sunday, specifically to examine the team's hotel accommodations. Arizona State sports information director Mark Brand said that those who made the trip would examine the "whole picture."

"I don't know because I'm not with them," Brand said. "But I would think it would be looking at the overall security and welfare of the group that we would bring in there."

Arizona State officials would not issue a statement on their findings, Brand said.

TICKET INFO: Beginning today, the LSU Athletics Ticket Office will begin assisting season-ticket holders who have lost or misplaced LSU football tickets or parking passes because of Hurricane Katrina.

For tickets or parking passes to be replaced, the season-ticket holder of record must go in person to the LSU Athletics Ticket Office and present a valid photo ID. Fans are asked to understand that an ID is necessary to ensure the secure issuance of tickets and passes. Relatives or friends of the season-ticket holder of record may not serve as a representative of the ticket holder of record.

The LSU Athletics Ticket Office will be open from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. today, and the remaining weekdays this week from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Staff writer William Kalec contributed to this report.

Sanders visits Green Wave

By Benjamin Hochman
Staff writer

DALLAS - Football players born in Atlanta in the mid-1980s were predestined to worship Deion Sanders.

Growing up, Izzy Route played cornerback. He wore No. 21 Falcons jerseys. And now Route is a college football player for Tulane, returning kicks, too, like "Prime Time."

So when Sanders spoke to Tulane's football team Sunday, Route soaked in every syllable The Man said. And when Sanders left the DoubleTree Hotel, Route walked alongside the NFL cornerback, throwing questions his way like easy interceptions.

But the discussions weren't only about nickel packages and pass pursuit. Tulane's football players are dealing with the realities of Hurricane Katrina - and having to play ball knowing their homes could be ruined - so Sanders gave them more than just chalk talk. He gave them inspiration.

"He said, 'How are you going to respond when your time is called?'" Route said. "What are you going to do? How are you going to step up in the big situation when things really matter? How are you going to make an impact?"

"I just really wanted to motivate them to hang on, because they're going to come through this," said the Baltimore Ravens' Sanders, who was joined Sunday by former Dallas Cowboy Nate Newton. "It's truly touching because they're somebody I can identify with. I can identify with football players, I can identify with trials and tribulations. And I can identify with dilemmas - sometimes you don't see an end there, but you definitely can see your way through it."

Last week, Sanders challenged all professional athletes to donate at least $1,000 apiece - through payroll deductions - to benefit the hurricane victims. His goal is to raise $1.5 million to $3 million.

On Sunday, his goal was to raise hopes.

One goal down.

Tulane seeks temporary homes

By Benjamin Hochman and Fred Robinson
Staff writers

DALLAS - Tulane officials are considering the University of Houston and the University of Texas-Austin as temporary homes for its athletic program, according to Cynthia Cherrey, Tulane's vice president of student affairs.

While Tulane athletic director Rick Dickson said he would like to have all of the sports teams on one campus, administrators might have to split up the athletes. Tulane is hoping to have its football team in Houston, Cherrey said.

Dickson hopes to have a plan set by today. Cherrey said, "Nothing is certain right now, but we should know a bit more by Tuesday or Wednesday."

"The first goal is for us to get all the student-athletes into the academic arena. And second, we're trying to keep them together."

Dickson spent much of Sunday in Houston, where Tulane president Scott Cowen and his staff have set up offices at the Four Seasons Hotel. The football team is currently based in Dallas, where it has practiced at Southern Methodist University. The women's soccer team completed play in an Alabama-Birmingham tournament Sunday, and is expected to fly to San Diego for a tournament next weekend. Tulane's other sports teams are not intact.

Green Wave players left on the sidelines

Watching SMU-Baylor game tough for athletes

By Benjamin Hochman
Staff writer

DALLAS - The football team stood as one, hands on their weathered hearts. The stadium fell silent. The marching band played.

"When I hear the national anthem, you think - it's game time," Tulane safety Darren Sapp said. "It almost brings me to tears when you hear it and you can't be out there."

On Saturday night, Tulane's transplanted football team watched a football game. They sat in Section 211 of Southern Methodist's Ford Stadium, where SMU hosted Baylor. This weekend, Tulane was supposed to play its season opener at Southern Mississippi. Forced out of town by Hurricane Katrina, the team spent the weekend in Dallas, dealing with tussling emotions.

"You work so hard," said Sapp, a senior. "And now you're watching other people play."

The team tried to enjoy the game. Earlier, the football players infiltrated SMU's tailgating, bumping shoulders with Paris Hilton look-alikes with sunglasses as big as science goggles and Southern gentlemen with undone ties and cheap beer. There have been a lot of moments the past couple of days where Tulane players hid from CNN.

But practicing, shopping at Dillard's, playing pool and eating greasy burgers at Dave & Busters, and watching this game can only temporarily coat reality. Furthermore, they're all reminders of what they could be doing, if catastrophe hadn't altered their lives.

"I'm watching guys making plays and interceptions, breaking up passes and making tackles," said Sean Lucas, a senior safety, during the second quarter. "I would like to be out there. You really do. I kind of do want to leave the game.

"Watching SMU, they have home-field advantage. It looks like this season, we won't have home-field advantage - wherever we go. Our fans are just trying to make it now and live day-to-day."

It's not just the Tulane fans. The players have lost their homes, too.

Tight end Jerome Landry got a text message telling him his home in Chalmette was gone.

"We're going to go home to what? Where is home?" he said from the lobby of the DoubleTree Hotel, where Tulane is staying in Dallas. "This hotel is home. It hit me right there. That was the worst. But the more I thought about it, everything can be replaced. I was just ecstatic my family was safe."

By the weekend, every Tulane player had his family members accounted for, including receiver Kenneth Guidroz, who had not heard from his father.

But these are new emotions. One player griped that people tell them, "'We know what you're going through.' But they don't."

"What do we do now?" said Matt Forte', a running back from Slidell. "I don't know where the house is - if it's knocked down or flooded."

The team has bonded. Linebacker Anthony Cannon said he is spending time with players he never talked to before. At practice, Coach Chris Scelfo gives rousing speeches, telling the players they're representing a post-Katrina New Orleans.

"It's bringing everyone together," Cannon said. "There are teams across the nation where players may have quarrels with one another. But those things don't matter once you lose everything. Everyone is in the same situation."

Many Tulane players have lost their homes. And they don't know where their new homes will be. They have a football game in two weeks. Saturday afternoon therapy is a long ways away.

On Sunday afternoon, the same time Tulane was supposed to be playing Southern Miss, some of the team gathered for a meeting of the Fellowship of Christian Athletes. Lloyd Arnsmeyer, the executive director of the Dallas branch, looked the players in the eyes.

"You do have life," he pleaded. "And you do have each other."

Keep your mouse pointed to nola.com for the latest news from The Times-Picayune

nola.com

KATRINA: THE STORM WE'VE ALWAYS FEARED

The Times-Picayune

50 CENTS 169TH YEAR NO. 229 TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 6, 2005 HURRICANE EDITION

Thousands return to Jefferson; more rescued in St. Bernard

COMING HOME

STAFF PHOTOS BY RUSTY COSTANZA

KENNER: Jennifer Duplain, left, and Teresa Flannigan pause on Monday while cleaning floodwaters from the home of Lloyd and Lauren Landry in Kenner. Monday was the first day Jefferson Parish authorities let people back into the parish to view their homes.

METAIRIE: Mike Hollinger of Metairie on Monday sweeps water from the home he shares with his brother, Charlie. Their house had about a foot of water in it.

Return to Jefferson Parish brings surprises

Some areas spared; others devastated

By Matthew Brown
West Bank bureau

Maneuvering through streets clogged with splintered trees, soggy trash and pieces of wrecked houses, thousands of Jefferson Parish residents returned Monday to communities rendered almost unrecognizable by Hurricane Katrina, the worst natural disaster to hit the region in modern history.

What they found -- and what the remainder of the parish's half million residents will soon discover -- was damage that varied dramatically from one neighborhood to the next.

Entire blocks in Metairie were ravaged completely by floodwaters, while others remained high and dry. The storm's furious winds peeled roofs off homes in Marrero and flipped large trucks onto their sides in Gretna and Terrytown, but some residents in those communities were left with nothing more than a few broken branches littering the yard.

At one end of the spectrum, in the economically depressed Lincolnshire neighborhood of Marrero, was Martha Grinstead, who said Katrina had thrust her and her son into "a living hell." Floodwaters three feet deep ruined most of the family's belongings in their Rue St. Phillippe house. Wind ripped all the shingles off the roof, leaving it pocked with holes. Rainwater soaked the ceiling tiles and attic insulation until they grew heavy and collapsed, leaving the living room, kitchen and den covered in a grey-black soggy muck.

"It's a lost cause," Grinstead said. "I brought home a new generator, but I'm not opening it up for this. ... My family is looking for a home for me in Lake Charles."

See JEFFERSON, page A-5

FEMA logs homes where dead lie

By Bruce Nolan
Staff writer

Tens of thousands of residents of Jefferson Parish crept through miles-long traffic lines Monday for their first look at the homes they had not seen in a week. At the same time, rescuers pulled the last few survivors of Hurricane Katrina out of flooded St. Bernard Parish and marked the homes that entombed the dead.

The return to Jefferson Parish, even to retrieve a few personal items, was the region's first taste of normalcy after a week of historic privation and horror.

In St. Bernard, however, officials said they were still pulling people out of flooded homes.

Incredibly, many resisted rescue efforts and wanted to remain. Sheriff Jack Stephens said he ordered deputies to handcuff and "forcefully remove" holdouts.

Stephens said water was receding somewhat. Authorities said some pumping was under way, and some flood water drained away as surrounding waterways fell to normal levels.

As that work continued, teams from the Federal Emergency Management Agency used global positioning devices to log the homes they would have to revisit to collect bodies already spotted.

As the effort to alleviate human misery continued, state officials reported they had repaired the lethal breach in the 17th Street Canal that destroyed much of the city. They said they expected to turn next to two similar breaches several miles east in the London Avenue Canal.

Entergy officials said they had repaired damaged electrical substations serving the Ernest N. Morial Convention Center and much of the Central Business District. Their work bore the imminent promise of the return of lights and power to the heart of the city.

But they could not energize the system until buildings in the area were checked to be sure they could receive power safely, Entergy spokesman Chanel Lagarde said.

But as the engineering rescue inched forward, all around lay waste and devastation, and the certainty that the stagnant waters

See KATRINA, page A-4

HURRICANE KATRINA AFTERMATH

Father gets word out as residents come in

STAFF PHOTO BY JENNIFER ZDON

Courtney Marshall checks on Arthur Dumaine, 69, who was rescued from his Lakeview home Tuesday and taken to a nearby hospital. With nothing but his bathing suit, he then made his way to his son's house in Terrytown, where neighbors have been caring for him. Dumaine finally spoke to his family by cell phone Monday after days with no means to contact them.

69-year-old cut off after fleeing home

By Mark Waller
Staff writer

Arthur Dumaine sat shirtless on the front porch of his son's empty, powerless house in Terrytown Monday, still in shock after narrowly escaping the hurricane-spawned flood in New Orleans and unable to call family or friends to report that he was alive a week after the storm.

Meanwhile, in an evacuation shelter in El Campo, Texas, Dumaine's son Guy agonized over the fate of his father. Guy Dumaine, who has no history of blood pressure problems, experienced such profound stress that his pressure escalated, his nose bled, he coughed blood and he had to go to a hospital.

When officials allowed Jefferson Parish residents to return on Monday to check on their properties, the influx finally provided a chance for the father and son to connect.

Lynn Smith, who lives across Ridgefield Street in Terrytown, found her home mostly undamaged when she returned to clear out the rancid food in her refrigerator and gather documents, clothes and medicine. She also found the stranded 69-year-old man.

Arthur Dumaine had hung a sign from his son's mailbox that said, "Help, please, alone, 69 years, sick, need cell phone." Land lines and cell phones hadn't been working in the neighborhood.

Smith handed her cell phone to Dumaine, who was still wearing the swim shorts and sandals he had on when he made a harrowing escape from deep waters in his New Orleans house.

Dumaine finally could call out. And his family finally learned what happened to their father.

Dumaine tried to ride out the hurricane alone at his house in Lakeview, about a block from the 17th Street Canal levee that broke open and submerged much of New Orleans.

Dumaine said he didn't evacuate his house on Old Hammond Highway because he recently was treated for heart problems and felt too fragile to travel. But his ultimate exodus from the city was more taxing, physically and emotionally, than the evacuation traffic jams and desperate search for accommodations could ever have been.

"I said, 'I'm just going to take my chances,' like a damned fool," the retired lawyer said.

On the morning that Katrina raged, he said, he heard a tremendous cracking that he thinks was the canal floodwall succumbing to the storm surge. The first floor of his home filled up in minutes, forcing him upstairs with no food, water, supplies or openings to the outside, he said.

He was trapped there for 36 hours, until he decided he had to reach the roof so that rescuers could see him.

"I said, 'I can't last another day here, or I'll die,'" he said.

So he held his breath, dived into his flooded first floor, swam to a plate glass window, smashed it with an onyx ashtray and escaped his house, cutting his leg on the glass as he floated out.

Once outside, he climbed onto his roof, and rescuers in a private boat quickly spotted him, he said. They took him to the Coast Guard station on the Bucktown side of the ruptured canal. From there, he rode in a helicopter to Meadowcrest Hospital in Terrytown, not far from his son's home.

Dumaine stayed at the hospital until he had to leave Thursday because the hospital was evacuating, he said. With help from police, he reached his son's house. He found a key and went in, living on the food, water and companionship of neighbors who stayed for the storm.

But they could not offer phone service.

"My son evacuated," he said Monday. "I don't know where he's at. I just wanted to use the phone. I wanted to let my sons know I'm alive."

So Smith, part of the daytime-only infusion of Jefferson residents, handed him her cell phone, and Dumaine heard his son's voice for the first time in a week.

"God bless America, and God bless you," he said.

"I've got to come get you," Guy Dumaine told his father. "You can't stay there. Do you have food and water?"

Guy Dumaine, 37, said Monday that he was trying to figure out how to retrieve his father and bring him to Texas. Either he would drive back or see whether a relief agency would transfer his father to a shelter in Houston where the family can get him.

"I've been worried, so worried about him," Guy Dumaine said. "I thought he was dead, really. We begged him to leave" before the storm.

"To hear his voice," Guy said, "I thought it was a ghost."

"My son evacuated. I don't know where he's at. I just wanted to use the phone. I wanted to let my sons know I'm alive."

ARTHUR DUMAINE
Lakeview resident

"I've been worried, so worried about him. I thought he was dead, really. We begged him to leave. To hear his voice, I thought it was a ghost."

GUY DUMAINE
Arthur Dumaine's son

STAFF PHOTO BY SUSAN POAG

Jefferson Parish Sheriff's Office deputies, Harvey firefighters and officials from the parish coroner's office investigate the death of a man from carbon monoxide poisoning in Harvey on Monday. Officials said people staying at 2316 Alex Korman Blvd. had been using four generators inside the home. Six other people who were at the home were taken to West Jefferson Medical Center.

Carbon monoxide poisoning kills man

6 others in home in Harvey survive

By Matt Scallan
Staff writer

One man died and six people were severely poisoned with carbon monoxide from operating an electric generator inside a Harvey home, Jefferson Parish officials said Monday.

The identities of the victims were not available. The survivors were taken to West Jefferson Medical Center.

Robert Wilson, assistant chief of the Marrero-Ragusa Volunteer Fire Department, said he saw four generators in the home at 2316 Alex Korman Blvd., in the Woodmere subdivision.

Wilson said the dead man was in his 50s and, judging from the condition of the body, might have died as early as Friday.

Because carbon monoxide poisoning impairs mental functions, he said, the other occupants of the house might not have realized the man was dead.

Deano Bonano, deputy chief administrative assistant to Jefferson Parish President Aaron Broussard, said sheriff's deputies originally thought that all seven people in the home were dead. But emergency medical technicians found signs of life and sent the survivors to the hospital.

Parish officials said there have been several other deaths caused by carbon monoxide poisoning. Portable generators should never be placed inside a home or any other enclosed area, they said.

CYAN MAGENTA YELLOW BLACK
ENTERGY PG4 9/06/05 PAGE APS6 AUTO

KATRINA HAS TAKEN A TOLL.
SHE HASN'T TAKEN OUR SPIRIT.

In 1788, a fire burned the Saint Louis Cathedral to the ground. But it was built again. In 1834, the Cathedral collapsed from overuse. But it was built again. What a wonderful testament for the people of New Orleans today. Hurricane Katrina may have damaged a significant portion of our city. But she will never destroy the spirit of our people.

And that same spirit is alive with the employees of Entergy. As we assess the damage to our electric and gas distribution systems in the New Orleans area, we are saddened by this catastrophe. We are citizens of New Orleans, too. And, just like you, our spirit isn't broken. We will get through this. It will be a long and difficult process. But with the help of every employee, every business partner, and every neighbor, we can rebuild this great city. And we'll do it together.

www.entergy.com • 1-800-ENTERGY • ©2005 Entergy Corporation

Entergy®
THE POWER OF PEOPLE™

HURRICANE KATRINA AFTERMATH

'We just got to pray for one another'

KATRINA, from A-1

of Lake Pontchartain that captured parts of Orleans, St. Bernard, Jefferson, St. Tammany and Plaquemines parishes a week ago now embraced unnumbered thousands of rotting corpses bobbing in flooded attics, decomposing on rooftops or sunk in the darkness of their homes.

The retrieval, identification and burial of those thousands loomed as the next challenge facing authorities.

No one would attempt a reliable estimate of the dead. New Orleans Mayor Ray Nagin's estimate there may be 10,000 fatalities has gone unchallenged.

Army Lt. Gen. Russell Honore told ABC News aerial reconnaissance indicated fewer than 10,000 people remained in the city.

As engineers and relief workers labored at their tasks, President Bush made his second visit to Louisiana and Mississippi since Friday.

He toured a Baton Rouge refugee shelter with Gov. Kathleen Blanco, who seemed to keep her distance from Bush. She and other officials, like Nagin and Jefferson Parish President Aaron Broussard, have blistered the slow federal response to the Katrina disaster.

In an appearance at Bethany World Prayer Center, Bush promised state and local officials he would fix anything not going right. "This is just the beginning of a huge effort."

Bush ordered that flags at all U.S. facilities around the world be flown at half-mast until sunset today in mourning for Katrina's victims in Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama.

Not counting the tens of thousands who evacuated by car before the storm, the state Department of Social Services said 113,000 refugees were being cared for by Louisiana and eight other states.

Texas housed 53,000 people, more than any other state, including Louisiana, which was caring for about 50,000, the department said. The remainder were scattered as far as Utah and Arizona, the department said.

And Katrina kept killing.

Authorities found that carbon monoxide from a generator inside a home in Harvey's Woodmere subdivision killed a man and critically poisoned six others, who were rushed to a hospital.

Broussard's decision to allow residents to return to their homes Monday through Wednesday, if only for a quick assessment, remained controversial among relief officials.

Honore, the soldier in charge of Joint Task Force Katrina, the massive military relief effort for the metropolitan region, said the Jefferson visitation stressed the area's few working highways and complicated relief efforts, but not to the point that he would demand a stop to it.

The tens of thousands of homeowners threaded carefully past armed soldiers and local law enforcement officers at blacked-out intersections.

They re-entered dank and fetid homes smothered in the stench of mildew and rotting food. Store owners surveyed looted shelves and assessed the chance of re-opening.

In many places a sense of community was palpable.

As two friends greeted one another in a Metairie street, sharing an embrace and tears, a car approached them, slowed, and a stranger lowered his window to offer encouragement. "We just got to pray for one another."

Damage varied wildly in Jefferson. In Metairie and on the West Bank, thousands of homes were ruined by flood, while others remained high and dry.

"It's a lost cause," said Martha Grinstead, whose West Bank home in the Lincolnshire subdivision was soaked, its floors covered in soggy muck. She said her family was looking for a new home for her in Lake Charles.

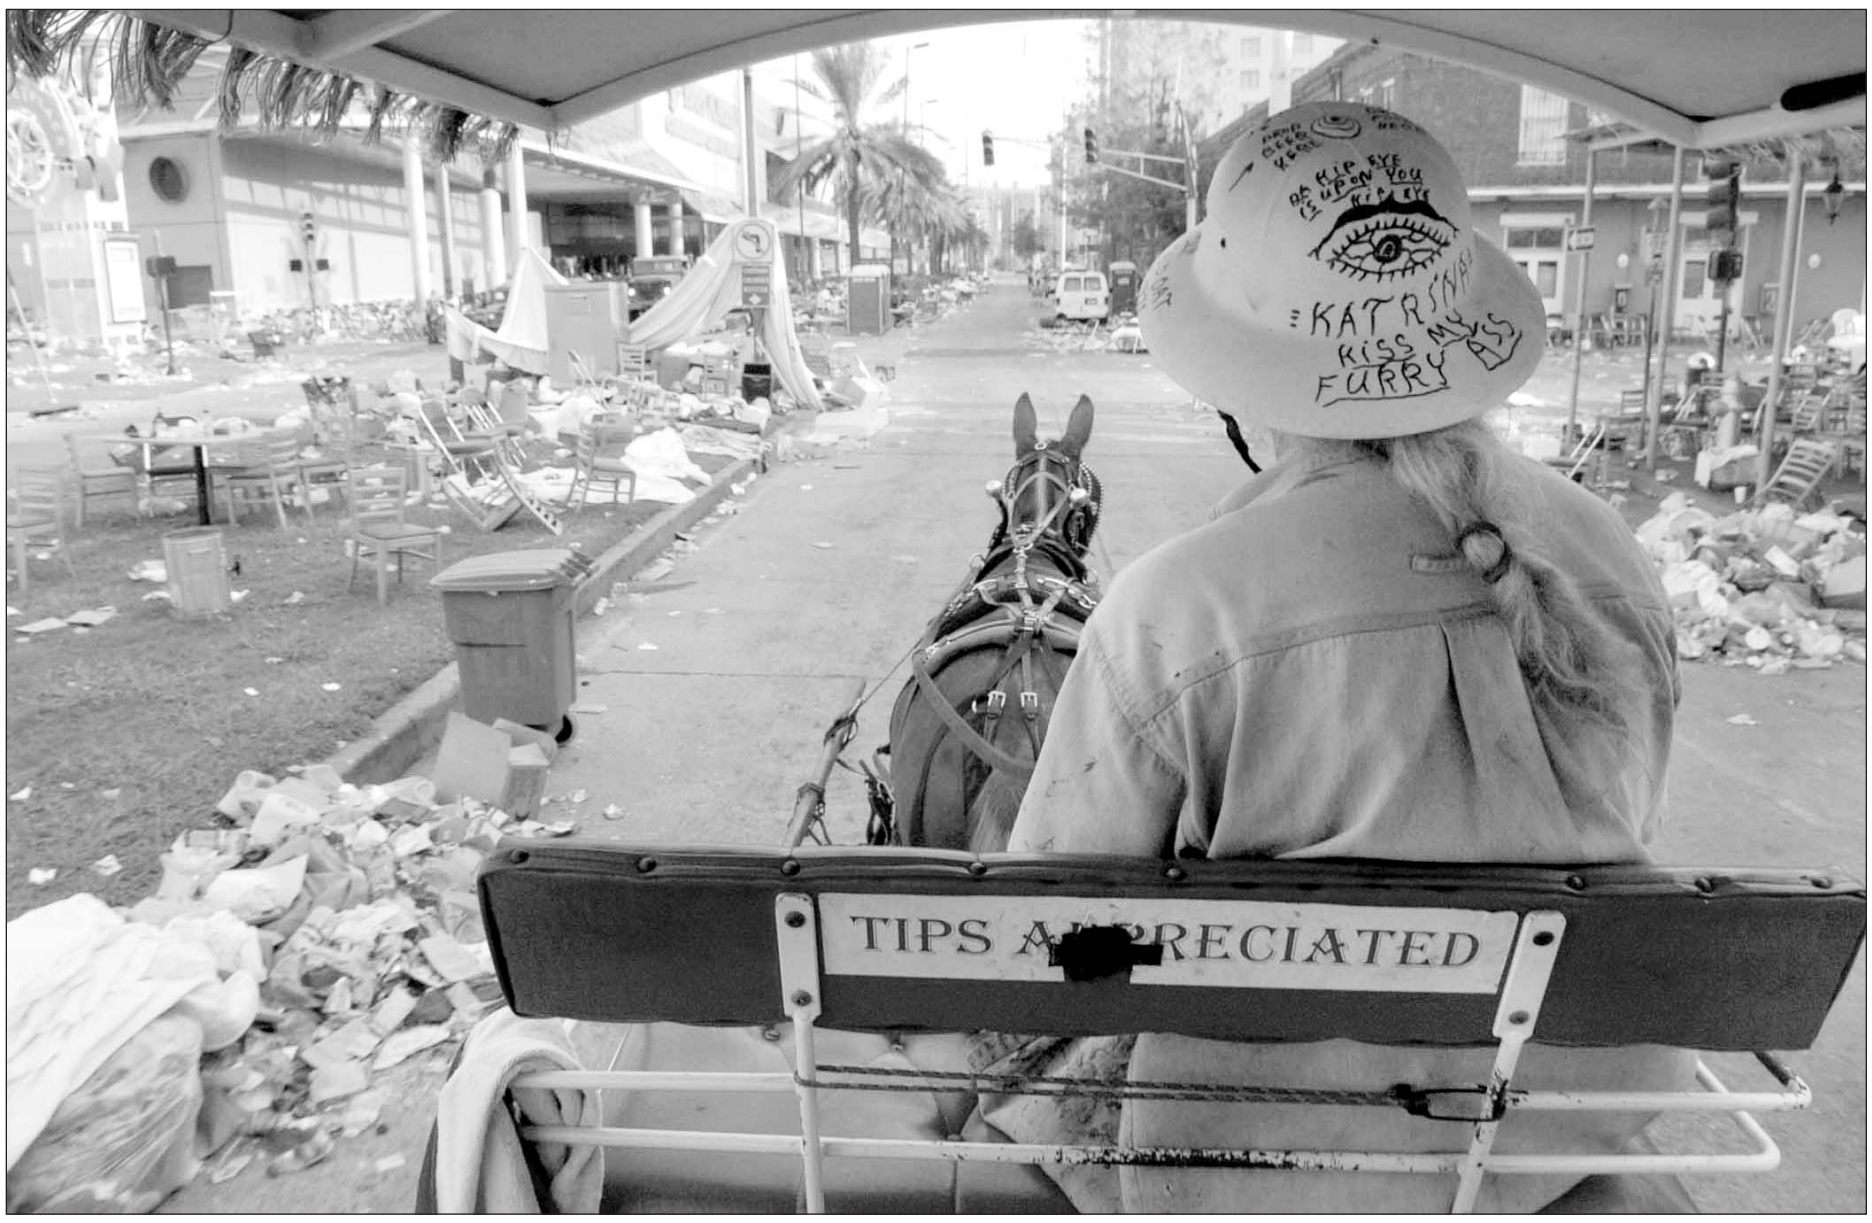
Yet nearby in Harvey, Lisa Coller mowed and raked her yard.

Each family surveyed its personal wreckage and made its own plans.

Wendy and Chris Clouatre pushed open the door of their Marrero home and gathered documents, toys, dolls, pictures and warm clothing for winter. They said they expected to be gone a long time.

"We'll move back here, fix it up and sell it," said Chris Clouatre. "It's heartbreaking, man."

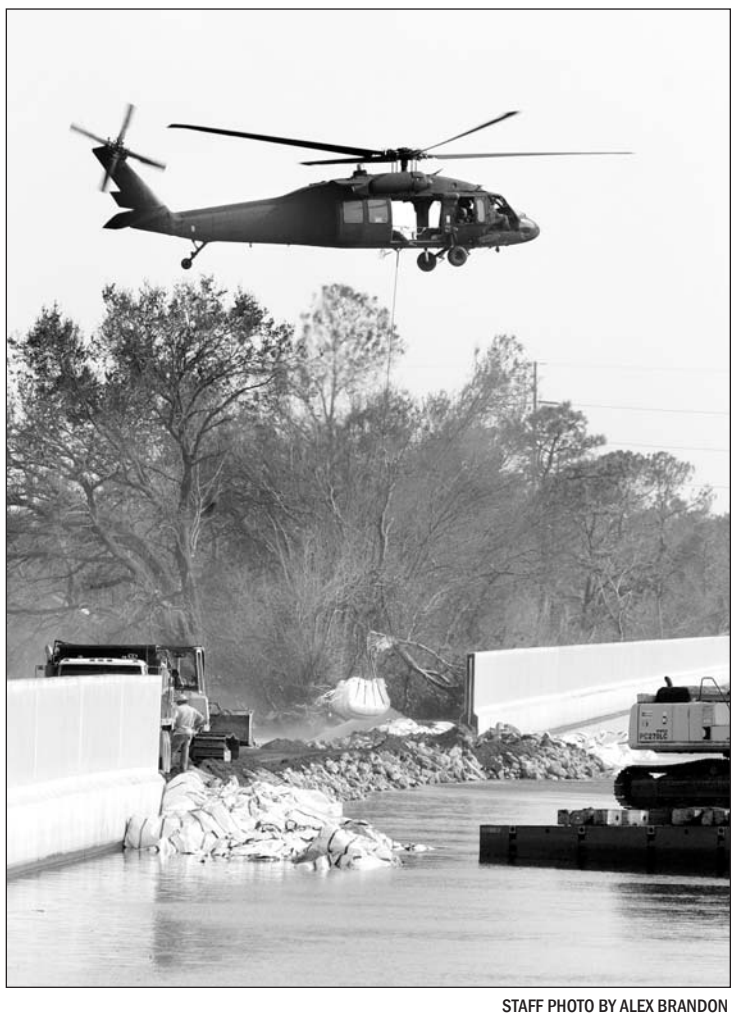
No such chance to visit was available to New Orleans homeowners, except those in relatively unaffected Algiers.



And while homeowners in hard-hit Slidell were not officially barred, St. Tammany Parish President Kevin Davis begged residents to stay out to give repair crews more time to clear streets and relieve pressure on sewerage systems and medical facilities.

His warning also acknowledged another elemental dimension of this natural disaster: Many homes, he warned, might harbor poisonous water moccasins.

Even so, power reappeared along the U.S. 190 commercial corridor in Covington and major retailers such as Wal-Mart, Lowe's and Home Depot began to reopen.



• • • • • • •

With reporting by Ed Anderson, Matt Brown, Gwen Filosa, Meghan Gordon, Sheila Grissett, Jeff Meitrodt, Matt Scallan and Mark Waller.

STAFF PHOTO BY DAVID GRUNFELD

CONVENTION BOULEVARD: David Richardson leads his mule, Satchmo, down Convention Boulevard in New Orleans looking for three mules that escaped during the storm a week ago.

STAFF PHOTO BY ALEX BRANDON

17TH STREET CANAL: A Blackhawk helicopter drops a sandbag at the breach in the 17th Street Canal levee on Monday. The break in the levee occurred after Hurricane Katrina hit.

STAFF PHOTO BY SUSAN POAG

MARRERO: Martha Grinstead, 60, returned to her home in Lincolnshire subdivision on Monday. The roof had leaked in many areas and wet insulation had fallen through, making the home uninhabitable. Grinstead's son, Carl Moten, 26, right, had stayed through the storm.

Urban survivalists create a community amid chaos

Life revolves around generators, ingenuity

By Michael Perlstein
Staff writer

The heroin junkie writhing in pain from his hurricane-forced withdrawal would have to wait. Ride Hamilton had a more pressing emergency: stitching up a guy's ear with fishing line and a sewing needle. Earlier, he was forced to evacuate another patient when her puncture wound became infected with gangrene.

Hamilton, whose Cheyenne Indian name is Two Fires, isn't a doctor, a medic or nurse. His credentials, for the past week anyway, consist of the Sioux Falls Fire Department shirt he got from a thrift store and the red cross he drew with a magic marker and taped to his car window.

"I thought I was just going to run supplies, but with my uniform, a lot of people have been asking for medical help," he said. "I'm just using common sense and what I've seen in the movies."

Hamilton, a French Quarter artist, is one of a small army of urban survivalists, citizen aid workers and self-made inventors spawned by Hurricane Katrina's devastation of New Orleans. They can be seen all over the dry parts of the city, creating makeshift living compounds, trolling for supplies and propping up the dazed, wet and wounded.

Determined to stick it out in a city without electricity and running water, they have commandeered backyard swimming pools for bathing, made trips to looted supermarkets to feed neighbors and siphoned gasoline to run generators. A few without generators have strung together stolen car batteries to provide a little light. Others, like Hamilton, have learned how to do a little of everything. Even practice medicine.

The site of Hamilton's aid and triage center is Johnny White's bar on Bourbon Street. The business has stayed open since the storm hit, and when Hamilton began dropping off supplies in his battered Ford Escort, word spread that it had become a community help center.

"The uniform gets me through all the checkpoints, so I'm usually able to get people what they need," he said. "Plus, I'm the only sober one here. That helps."

Another French Quarter bar, Molly's at the Market, also has become a big gathering spot. The booze is plentiful and happy hour is full of regulars. Other than the lack of air-conditioning, the only noticeable difference from normal times is owner Jim Monaghan doling out precious ice cubes one at a time.

"But the biggest thing we've done is open the doors every day," Monaghan said. "Just the fact that we're here has helped soothe some wounded souls."

Officials have discouraged staying in the drenched and battered city. Deputy Police Chief Warren Riley said Monday, "Anyone here, we'd like them to leave. We don't know who's the good-quality citizen and who's the criminal. It certainly would make it easier on us if they would leave."

But thousands of people are determined to stick it out by any means necessary.

Philip Melancon isn't just surviving, he's trying to keep up as much of his normal routine as possible. Yes, he's been forced to hand-wash his clothes in an ice chest of Purex and soap. And he's been using downed power lines in place of rope to patch the roof of the Walnut Street condominium complex he owns.

But on Monday morning, the professional musician was playing a rollicking boogie-woogie on his baby grand piano, delighting the Oklahoma National Guard troops stationed near his street. Earlier, he made one of his periodic grocery runs, giving most of the food to elderly neighbors who stayed behind.

"We shop at Whole Foods, and the prices are finally where they should be," he said. "We just walk in and take what we need. Everybody taking food there has been very polite, very orderly."

Similar scenes of New Orleanians banding together can be seen everywhere.

On Philip Street in the Lower Garden District, Earl Bass, 51, hit the jackpot when he was able to borrow a generator for half a day. He hooked it up to his freezer to make a supply of ice. But he also found time to sublet it to a neighbor, who needed to run an air compressor to fix the flat tires on his truck.

"This is a time of crisis. Everybody's got to help each other out," Bass said.

In the especially heart-crushing situation of 59-year-old C.N. Keene, an entire neighborhood came together to ease the loss of his wife. Vera, 65, was killed in a hit-and-run accident as she set off to forage at Jewel Food store. Keene went and covered her with a blanket at Magazine Street and Jackson Avenue, vowing never to return to the intersection.

And he didn't. Three days later, with Vera still shrouded where she had died, a man from the neighborhood assembled a burial team, Keene said. Vera was laid to rest, at least temporarily, in a nearby vacant lot. Most of those who attended the funeral service were strangers.

"All I know is that some guy named John did the ceremony," Keene said. "He told me everybody walking up and down the street stopped to pay their respects."

The death of his wife has enlisted Keene, against his will, in the city's community of hangers-on. He said he can't leave Vera's body until her daughter is able to retrieve it at the end of September.

"She gets released from prison on Sept. 25," he said. "She's somewhere in Texas. That means I'll have to stick it out until then."

STAFF PHOTO BY ELIOT KAMENITZ

METAIRIE: Armed with a broom and a pistol, Tony Maurin cleans up at St. Catherine of Siena Catholic Church, which hopes to hold a service on Sunday.

Residents can visit through Wednesday

JEFFERSON, from A-1

While Grinstead and others pondered if rebuilding was worth it, Lisa Coller of Harvey raked the yard, powered up her lawn mower, and cut the grass.

Coller had returned to the middle-class Woodmere subdivision to find nothing worse than a damaged shed and some debris on the lawn.

"I have to do something," she said, adding that she wanted to make her house "presentable."

Yet even Coller and others with little property damage found the parish they call home profoundly transformed.

Almost nowhere on Monday could parish residents turn for conveniences they once took as a matter of course: Few restaurants were open for lunch. There were no hardware stores for equipment needed for repairs. Few streetlights operated to control traffic on avenues once again busy with vehicles.

Scores of convenience stores had windows shattered and shelves stripped bare by looters desperate for food and water. Many home appliance sellers and other businesses were plundered by a greedier brand of thieves.

Also, most of the parish still did not have electrical power, and an order to boil water remained in effect after lines were heavily damaged.

Underscoring the changed human environment was a Harvey family's tragedy after they left a gas-powered generator running in their house overnight. Officials said a man in his 50s died of carbon monoxide poisoning, and six more were critically injured in the incident -- the third in the past week.

If you return, "do not run generators in your house," said Deano Bonano, deputy chief administrative officer for the parish.

Monday was the first day the public was allowed through security checkpoints at the parish line, and long lines of vehicles driven by evacuees had lined up Sunday night, anxious to see what fate awaited them. But earlier plans to limit entry to parish residents were suspended by the State Police. A widely predicted traffic backup of 12 to 15 hours never materialized, and traffic moved relatively smoothly.

"People actually got to see their homes, damaged or not, to the point where they could digest what their challenges were at the home site, so they could go on and make an intelligible decision about what to do next," said Parish President Aaron Broussard, who stuck with his Labor Day re-entry plan despite stinging criticism from other parish officials and state and federal relief coordinators.

The rebukes continued Monday, as Army Lt. Gen. Russel Honore, Joint Task Force Katrina commander, said that allowing Jefferson residents to return was complicating the ongoing search and rescue missions in Orleans, Plaquemines and St. Bernard parishes.

"We're still trying to find them (storm victims),'' he said. "If it (traffic) does escalate to the point where we can't continue doing search and rescue, we will bring that to the appropriate level of government to make a decision.''

Broussard has asked people to make their return visits through Wednesday, but then to leave as quickly as possible.

"I would urge people to assess the damage, pick up what they need and get out for three weeks, when Jefferson Parish becomes a place that you would want to stay," he said.

Traffic began backing up along Airline Highway on the East Bank and U.S. 90 on the West Bank Sunday morning, with many families opting to sleep in their cars in hopes of getting in the parish early.

Kevin LaVie of Metairie left Baton Rouge with his mother, Carol LaVie, and two sons Sunday at 12:30 a.m. and came to a stop in traffic at 2 a.m. on Airline Highway, where the family tried to get a few hours sleep until their vehicle started moving steadily by 7 a.m.

The family arrived at Carol LaVie's house on Fairfield Street in Metairie an hour later.

Inside, the stench of standing water was countered only by the intense humidity. The foot or two of water that had entered her home managed to open the refrigerator door, floating the vegetable crisper across her living room.

Out in the back yard, Carol LaVie surveyed the dark brown water and frogs in her swimming pool, noting that just before the storm it had been a perfect crystal blue.

Finally, the emotion of returning home caught up with her.

"It's OK, I got y'all," she said, her voice cracking and tears flowing as her son threw his arm over her shoulders. "My other son was killed in a plane crash when he was 34, so this is not the worst that can happen."

As the returning crowds leaned into the massive cleanup that will continue in coming days and weeks, the odor of bleach and other disinfectants mixed with the stench of mold and rotten food that had permeated the air in recent days.

Wendy and Chris Clouatre opened the door of their Marrero home to squishy rugs, a mildew smell and water lines a couple inches off the floor on their walls and furniture.

"It was really nice when we moved here," said Wendy Clouatre as she surveyed her now bubbled floors, which had been covered by a few inches of water before it receded from the neighborhood on Louis 1 Avenue. "It's all ruined. I don't even want to go through this anymore. I just wish I could just leave it like it is and go."

On Veterans Memorial Boulevard in Kenner, workers at Rouse's Supermarket began the undesirable task of disposing of the store's mass of spoiled food.

They wore surgical masks to try to filter out the overwhelming stench of rotting chicken and curdled milk, which was scooped up by an earth-moving machine and onto the back of a waiting dump truck bound for a landfill in Sorrento. General Manager Dave Daroca girded himself for a nasty cleanup -- not from the hurricane, but from local residents who had looted the store.

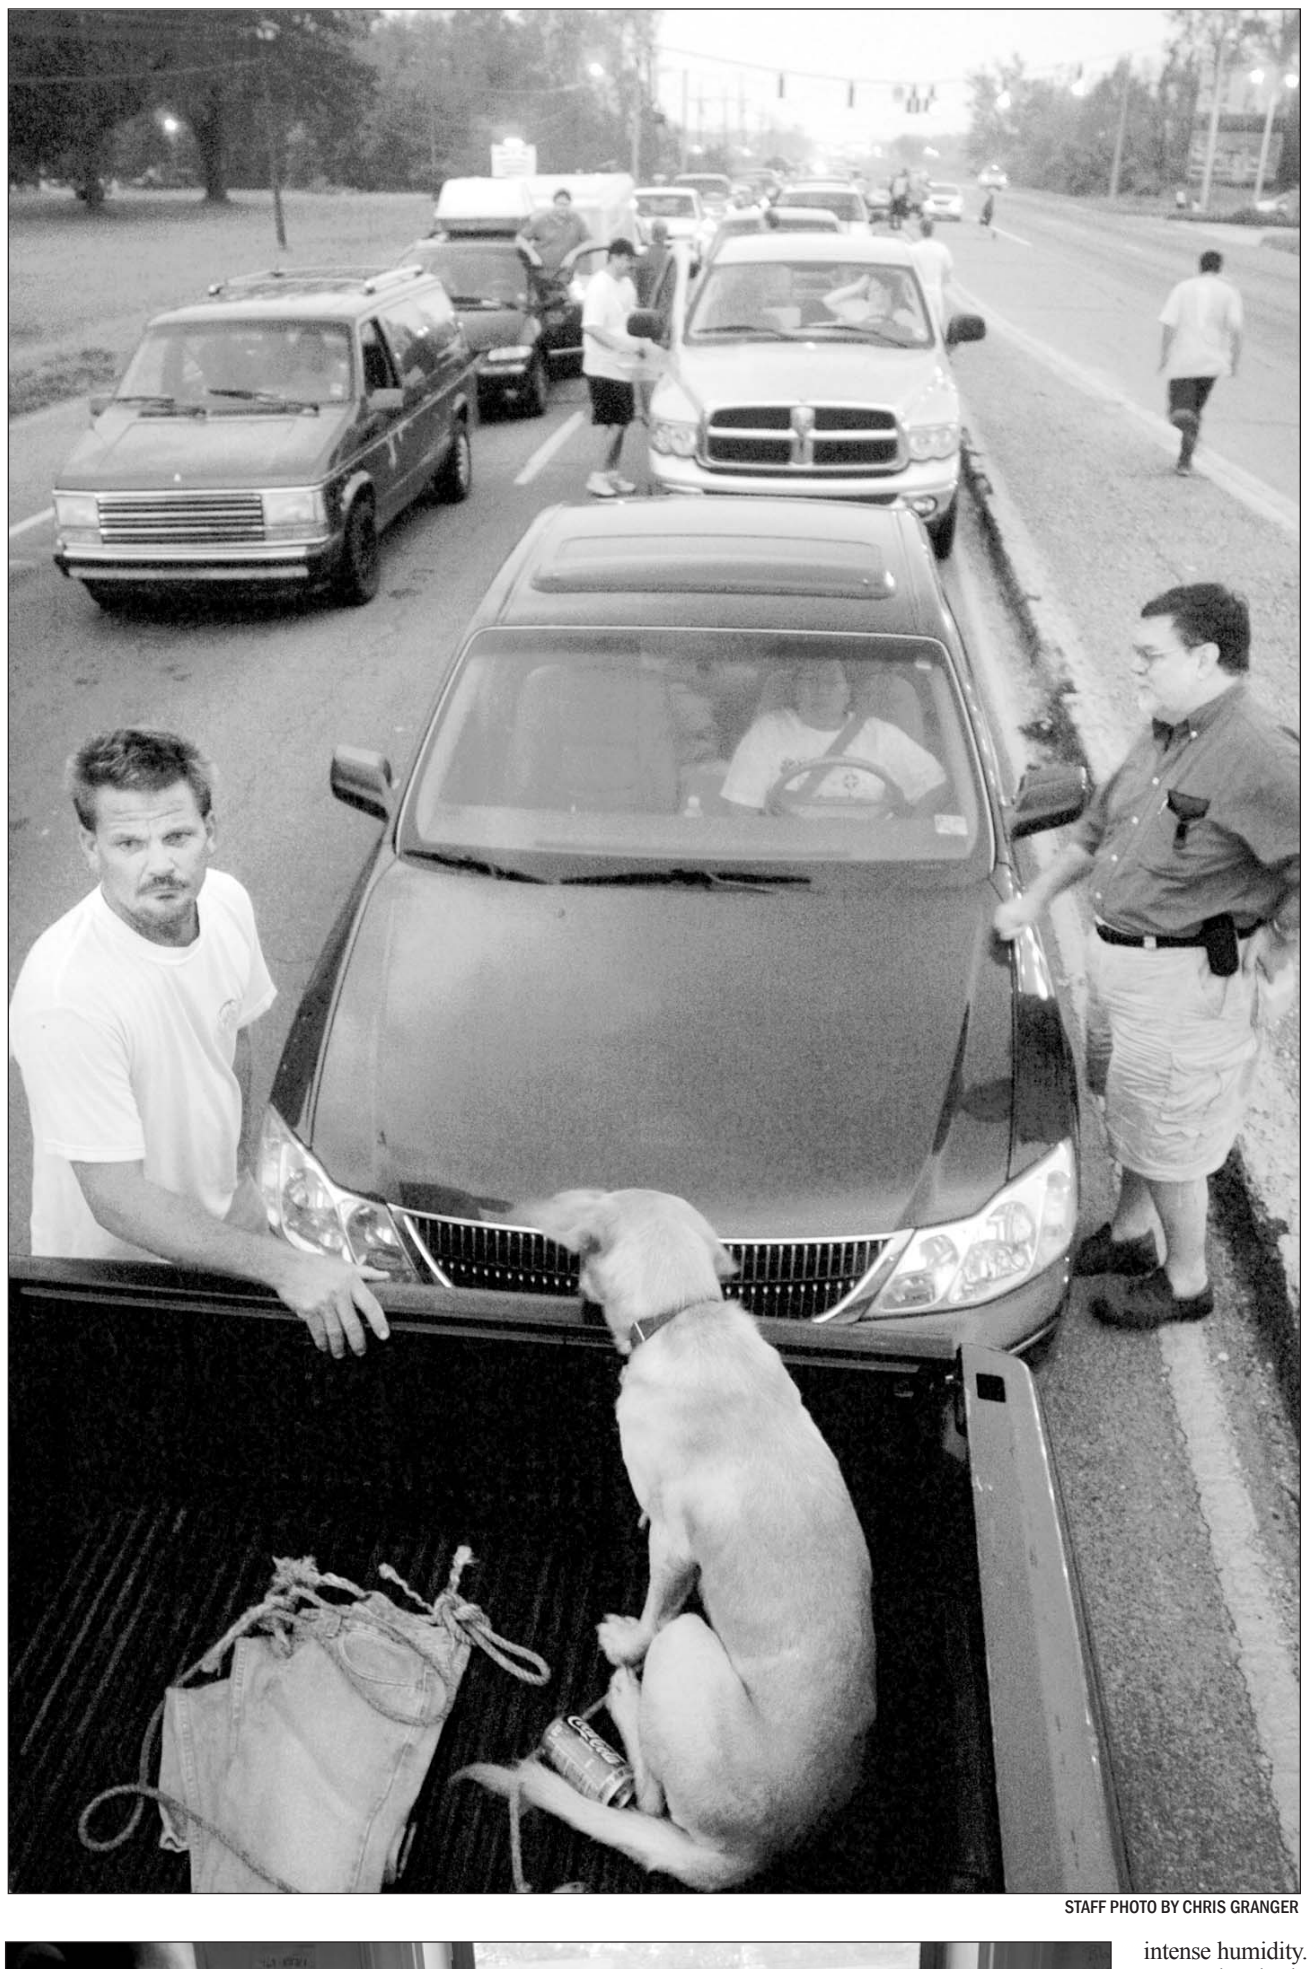
Shelves were bare beneath an aisle that said, "Baby Food, Diapers, Feminine Needs," and on the liquor shelves all that remained were a few types of booze no one apparently wanted: rye whiskey, vanilla vodka and vermouth.

"Tell me you need food or some necessities, and I can deal with the pain," Daroca said. "But you see people coming out with cases of beer."

Perhaps the luckiest business owners were the Radas, whose snowball stand, Big Will's Snowballs, survived not only Katrina's winds and waters, but also managed to keep its electricity.

Inside the Williams Boulevard stand, Tim Rada described how he's been filling coolers and bottles with tap water from St. Charles Parish that he says is safe and then freezing it to help make about 1,000 snowballs the business sold since reopening four days earlier.

"People come to the window, and they're so amazed to find us open, they can't even speak at first," said his wife, LaDean. "Then they're like, 'Give us anything.' "



Laurel Landry didn't have to reenter with the masses Monday. An ICU nurse, Landry had been tending to patients at East Jefferson General Hospital since the Saturday before Katrina hit. And when Landry was finally released from duty Monday, she returned to find the storm had battered her once lovely Woodlake Drive home.

The house flooded, the chimney was cracked, and mold was already creeping along walls and ceilings. Landry's face said it all -- shock, disbelief, sadness, exhaustion -- feelings seemingly shared by many.

"My house was so nice,'' Landry said in a hollow voice, her hands shaking so uncontrollably that it was hard for her to keep a grip on her cell phone.

• • • • • •

Mark Waller, Steve Ritea, Matt Scallan and Sheila Grissett contributed to this report.

STAFF PHOTO BY CHRIS GRANGER

STAFF PHOTO BY

ABOVE
METAIRIE: Gay Hanlon, right, carries some of her belongings as her sister, Adriann Wolfe, helps her during a visit to their father's home on Monday.

LEFT
LaPLACE: As the sun rises on Monday on Airline Highway in LaPlace, Donnie Ray Wigstrom, left, and his dog, Pretty Boy, are among those waiting, in a line that stretches on for miles, for a chance to go to their Jefferson Parish homes and gather a few belongings. People spent all night Sunday in their cars, waiting to get back.

STAFF PHOTO BY CHRIS GRANGER

KENNER: Children from New Orleans who are living in a refugee camp in Kenner on Monday visit a snowball stand that stayed open all week to serve emergency officials and to give some hope to uprooted New Orleanians.

Jeff President Broussard says 'hell doesn't look so bad'

Tragedy not the first for parish president

By Matt Scallan
East Jefferson bureau

Bleary-eyed and stubble-faced, Jefferson Parish President Aaron Broussard nonetheless talked a mile a minute to returning residents Monday, urging them to drive slowly and painting a grim picture of what life would be like if they stayed at their homes.

"Please don't lose your patience," he said to motorists waiting in line to enter the parish for the first time since Hurricane Katrina struck a week earlier. "There are so many bad things that can happen if you lose your patience."

Broussard, a career politician and normally one of the smoothest elected officials in the New Orleans area, had been up since 4 a.m. honing the points he wanted to make to the heavy traffic that would begin two hours later. There are places worse than hell, he told reporters in the basement of Jefferson's emergency operations center: Orleans and St. Bernard parishes first, then Jefferson.

"From here, hell doesn't look so bad," he said.

Unlike many people in parish government, Broussard has been in the lower depths of hell before. He was mayor of Kenner when a catastrophic flood washed over southeast Louisiana on May 8, 1995. On July 9, 1982, just eight days after Broussard was sworn in as mayor, Pan American World Airways Flight 759 stumbled on takeoff from New Orleans International Airport and smashed into an east Kenner neighborhood, killing 154 people, including eight on the ground.

"We were picking up bodies out of the trees, and it was very kind to call them bodies," he said. "I've been to this rodeo before."

It's not a place he wants to be. Seven straight days of hurricane stress left him weary to the bone, frustrated by what he said is resistance from people who tell him he can't do the things he needs to do.

"I feel like a salmon swimming upstream, but I'm going to get there," he said.

He said he asks himself the same questions he asked himself in 1982, when he was first thrust into the role of rebuilder in chief for his community: "How can I do this without killing myself?"

Later in the day, he pushed aside the question.

"Ten days after the Pan Am crash, we had cleaned up the site and buried the bodies," he said. "I want to return this parish into a place that people will recognize in three weeks. I know that's ambitious, but I'm going to do everything I can to make that happen."

To make it happen, Broussard has railed against what he calls the Federal Emergency Management Agency's slow mobilization in the post-Katrina wasteland of Jefferson Parish. On national television, he broke down in tears Sunday on NBC's "Meet the Press" and later said "the bureaucracy has murdered people."

For now, he said, he sees the world as made up of either ducks or eagles.

"A duck doesn't do anything but paddle around and quack. An eagle soars. I've got a lot of eagles around me, but there are an awful lot of ducks, too," he said.

He bucked the advice of virtually all of his advisers and other lawmakers when he allowed residents to return to Jefferson beginning Monday, although only long enough to see the damage to their homes and leave again.

Critics said the plan inconvenienced and slowed emergency workers who were still searching for hurricane victims and trying to restore power to Jefferson. But Broussard insisted that residents see for themselves the devastation, to convince them to find new jobs and register their children for school elsewhere.

The experience has been so wrenching for Broussard, who has held one office or another for the past 31 years, that he ponders whether he should run for re-election in 2007, he said. What if another disaster strikes and he has to do this again?

Then, however, he dismissed thoughts of retirement, saying he was just wondering aloud in a time of enormous stress.

"I'm not going to talk about what's going to happen in 2‰ years," he said. "Wait 'til this is over. It's only the first quarter.

"No one interviews (New Orleans Saints quarterback) Aaron Brooks in the first quarter and asks what he's going to do."

Energy companies begin powering up

Some parts of Jeff already have electricity

By Lynne Jensen
Staff writer

Electricity has been restored to some areas of Jefferson Parish, but Orleans, St. Bernard and Plaquemines parishes remained in the dark Monday.

Portions of Orleans Parish, including the Central Business District and the Crescent City Connection, have "energized'' substations prepared to distribute power as soon as buildings in the area are ready to accept it, Entergy spokesman Chanel Lagarde said Monday.

That could soon mean the lighting of the Crescent City Classic, a rainbow of hope for New Orleans, which was plunged into darkness more than a week ago when Hurricane Katrina brought the city to its knees.

As for areas north of Lake Pontchartrain, Cleco said Monday that about 8,600 St. Tammany Parish customers and Washington Parish were on their way to having their power restored, with Franklinton already online.

Parts of East Jefferson and Kenner have had their power restored, and the entire parish should be up and running in two to four weeks, Lagarde said.

No one in New Orleans had power Monday, but "we are making good progress," said Entergy's manager of engineering, Danny Taylor, surveying the city from the back seat of a helicopter - one of many hovering like mosquito hawks over flood-soaked neighborhoods.

Entergy's first priority is answering the New Orleans Sewerage & Water Board's goal of restoring pumping capacity in the Lakeview area, where floodwaters were still licking rooftops Monday, Taylor said. With that accomplished, water will begin to flow into the 17th Street Canal and then into Lake Pontchartrain, he said.

Sen. Mary Landrieu, D-La., said water was being pumped out of Lakeview on Monday through a 36-inch pipe at the 17th Street Canal.

Bucktown and nearby neighborhoods should have power "some time next week," Lagarde said. "They can expect to see crews working and power being restored."

Power starts at the generating plants, Lagarde said. And "there's enough electricity being generated in southeastern Louisiana to meet the needs of customers" in that area, he said.

Once Entergy's transmission grids are up and connected to the plants and distribution lines are clear of vegetation, substations will begin to distribute power to homes and businesses, Taylor said.

Hospitals, police and fire departments are priorities, Lagarde said.

It will take several months to restore power to all of Orleans, St. Bernard and lower Plaquemines parishes "because those areas are inaccessible at this time," Lagarde said.

Entergy has restored power to 340,000 of its 800,000 customers, he said.

Staff photo by Eliot Kamenitz

A traffic light destroyed by the winds from Hurricane Katrina rests on the corner of Causeway Boulevard and West Esplanade Avenue as workers from WYE Electric, a Monroe company, install a new light.

In the next two weeks, Cleco plans to restore power to 80 percent of about 80,000 customers it serves in sections of St. Tammany and Washington parishes, Cleco spokesman Robbyn Cooper said Monday.

Lawrence St. Blanc, a staff member of the Louisiana Public Service Commission, said power might be restored as soon as today to the Ernest N. Morial Convention Center in New Orleans.

"If we have any luck, we may have that baby up tomorrow,'' he said.

The ice trucks cometh to the relief of many

For those in their homes, the cubes are 'like gold'

By Matthew Brown
Staff writer

"Y'all have ice? We want ice!"

The call came from the second-floor landing of a Marrero apartment building, its brick facade crumbled into the parking lot, where truck driver Wayne "Slim" Christen and four others had taken up residence after Hurricane Katrina.

A week after the storm turned their neighborhood into a ghost town, a week in which the temperature topped 90 degrees day after brutal day, Christen and his friends ranked ice right up there with food and water: an essential, a necessity.

"You've got to have it," Christen said.

The body can last only a few days without water, slightly longer with no food. Theoretically, it could function in perpetuity without ice.

But storm victims - suffering under the hot Louisiana sun, the sweltering nights with no air conditioning and only the hope of a breeze - know better.

In the words of Algiers resident Nicholas Beninate, "Ice is like gold."

Water keeps you alive, Beninate explained, but ice keeps you sane.

"Ice by itself, ice in water - anything cold," he said. "It gives you a burst of energy. Inside the houses at night, it's 105 degrees. Ice is the thing."

In Katrina's immediate aftermath, ice was almost impossible to find across much of the metropolitan area. Before the storm even hit, most bags of ice had been snatched up by people hoping to keep their perishable food cold until the power came back. The little that was left was plundered by looters or by authorities who requisitioned supplies from grocery stores and other outlets.

Recently, it has rolled in by the truckload, to the point where some areas now are overflowing with ice.

Ice-filled tractor trailers lined up in a Belle Chasse parking lot - far in excess of what Plaquemines Parish Sheriff Jiff Hingle said is needed for the small numbers of residents still in his parish. He said a single ice machine delivered by state Sen. Craig Romero, R-New Iberia, probably would have been sufficient to meet his needs.

But in neighboring St. Bernard Parish, largely cut off from the world for most of the last week, Maj. Jimmy Pohlmann of the Sheriff's Office said there was no ice at all for the past week. The first ice arrived Sunday, when a relief contingent crossed the Mississippi River on a ferry and forded 3-foot deep floodwaters to deliver two trailers of ice. The contingent delivered only one trailer each of food and water.

Even in parishes where ice is suddenly plentiful, however, getting to it can be a problem. In Jefferson Parish, the Federal Emergency Management Agency set up a single distribution center for ice on each side of the river, at the Transit Facility at Saints and David drives in Metairie and at the Alario Center in Westwego. For those without vehicles - or the fuel to power them - those distribution sites might as well be on the moon. Some people hitch-hike to the sites. Others carpool or try to convince those with cars to pick them up some ice for them.

Beninate, a short-order cook at an Italian restaurant before Katrina struck, said he got his first 10-pound bag of ice six days after the storm hit. As he rode his bike home with the bag sitting in his basket, people began running after him shouting, "Where'd you get the ice?"

For Christen and his four friends at the Marrero apartment building, the mood appears to swing according to the contents of the coolers on which they prop their feet. When they've got ice - and their beers, sodas and waters are cold - the friends are all smiles and laughs. When the ice runs out, they are glum and depressed.

In the first few days after the storm, police largely turned a blind eye or even supervised looting for basics such as food and water. Christen and his friend Bryan Bowden, at the Timberlane Apartments in Marrero, said they got their supplies from the nearby Breaux's Market on LaPalco Boulevard.

Christen said he was grabbing a bag of ice at a Walgreens when his supply was cut short, as police started cracking down.

"We were getting food and water and ice," he said. "Things we needed. The cop came in and said he was going to arrest us. I said to the cop, 'Are you going to arrest us for taking a bag of ice?'"

Their supply cut off, the Timberlane crowd had to wait several more days until a friend drove to Vacherie, in St. James Parish, to get more ice.

The friend bought them two bags. But by the time he arrived, it had melted to one, Christen said, and that was gone by the end of the night.

Over the weekend, they hit the jackpot: six bags, 10 pounds each. It was from a relief group that set up shop at a decrepit shopping center on Ames Boulevard for a few hours.

They filled up two coolers with ice to spare, cranked up some country music on a portable stereo, chilled some drinks and acted like they were on top of the world.

"You sure you don't want something? Beer? Coke? Kentwood water?" Christen asked a visitor. "I've finally got ice and I'm not jealous with it. I'll share with anybody."

Bush, Blanco spar over military, visit

Blanco says Army brought attitude, but not resources

By Bill Walsh
Robert Travis Scott
and Jan Moller
Staff writers

BATON ROUGE - Even as teams of engineers worked to patch ruptured levees in New Orleans, a political breach opened between Gov. Kathleen Blanco and President Bush over who is in charge of the post-Hurricane Katrina recovery effort.

One flashpoint came over the weekend, when Blanco said she rebuffed an attempt by the White House to seize control of the mounting military presence in Louisiana, including thousands of state National Guard forces under her authority. Then Bush made an unusual return visit to the state Monday, just days after surveying the damage - a trip that members of Blanco's staff said caught them by surprise and caused a certain level of consternation.

"We had no idea the president was coming," said Blanco's communications director, Robert Mann, adding that the governor was forced to cancel a trip to visit evacuees in Houston so she could meet with Bush.

The high-level tug-of-war came as recriminations mounted over the pace of the response to the devastation, particularly in the New Orleans area, where survivors were still being rescued Monday from floodwaters a week after the storm hit land.

In the face of fierce criticism, the White House launched a public relations counteroffensive over the weekend to deflect blame, some of which bounced to state and local officials. The effort, The New York Times reported, was being orchestrated by Bush's political director, Karl Rove, and communications director, Dan Bartlett.

In an interview Monday, Bartlett said there was no coordinated strategy to shift blame to Louisiana officials.

"Quite the contrary," he said. "There was a spirit of cooperation in the room today" when Bush and Blanco met.

In the game of political maneuvering for control between Blanco, a Democrat, and Bush, a Republican, the biggest chess pieces are the 13,268 National Guard troops from 29 states under the governor's command - with another 7,845 on the way - and the 7,000 active-duty troops who began arriving Monday under command of the regular Army and the president.

On Monday, two parallel command structures were in place. Major Gen. Bennett Landreneau, head of the Louisiana National Guard, had control of all of the guard forces massed in the state. U.S. Army Lt. Gen. Russel Honore was in charge of the active-duty forces, including soldiers from the 82nd Airborne division and the 1st Calvary.

Blanco said that when the plain-spoken, cigar-chomping Honore showed up in New Orleans late last week, she thought that her worries about a lack of federal troops and resource were over. Honore quickly became a media darling and the take-charge face of the federal government in New Orleans, barking out orders to surprised National Guards members who aren't even under his control. Blanco said she liked Honore's style, but was surprised that he arrived with only a few aides in tow.

"He didn't bring any resources," Blanco said. "I just kind of expected, based on my conversations with the White House, that we could be getting a surge of equipment, and we did not."

Friday night, the White House moved to take charge of all the troops in Louisiana. At home, Blanco received a memorandum of understanding from the White House asking her to cede control of the National Guard. According to her staff, Blanco was asked to sign and return the document right away. Blanco consulted with her legal counsel, Terry Ryder, and then refused the request.

"They wanted to take over my National Guard," Blanco said in an interview. "A governor has to have the final say on what's going to happen."

Bartlett said the request was made for efficiency's sake to streamline the chain of command and improve the efficiency of the recovery. He dismissed suggestions that it was done because Blanco is a Democrat.

"We were in the same discussions with (Republican Mississippi Gov.) Haley Barbour," Bartlett said. "This was not about politics."

In what some saw as a not-so-subtle snub, Blanco over the weekend hired a former Clinton administration disaster response chief, James Lee Witt, as an adviser.

The parallel command structure in Louisiana isn't without precedent. After Hurricane Andrew in 1992, federal troops dispatched to Florida to help in the relief and recovery effort were kept under federal control. The governor, meanwhile, retained authority over the National Guard forces. The only major glitch, according to an official from the Florida National Guard, was when the 82nd Airborne Division from Ft. Bragg, N.C., showed up with weapons. Under federal law, only state forces have policing authority, so the weapons were sent back to the base and the soldiers were given humanitarian and relief duties.

When it comes to domestic security, state forces generally take the lead. At a G-8 summit last year in Georgia, state authorities were given control over federal forces, according to John Goheen, a spokesman for the National Guard.

"The reason is that Guard commanders generally have a better working relationship with local authorities," Goheen said. "Guard forces can also perform law enforcement functions. That mission was seen as a harbinger of the future."

Despite the dust-up between Blanco and Bush over command of the boots on the ground, top military commanders at both the state and federal level said they were satisfied with the separate forces.

Landreneau called the military command "very integrated" and said there was no advantage to putting all troops under his control. Adm. Timothy Keating, commander of active-duty forces in North America, agreed. "From our perspective," he said Monday, "it would not have provided an advantage over the current situation."

Brig. Gen. Mike Fleming of the Florida National Guard, who oversaw rescue and recovery efforts through four hurricanes last year, has been called into Louisiana as an adviser. Fleming said the twin command is workable if adequately coordinated. He said some important personal ties bind the separate state and federal military commands: Honore, known as the Ragin' Cajun, is a Louisiana native and has known Landreneau for years. Honore's son serves in Iraq for the Louisiana National Guard, which is under Landreneau's command.

While the military chiefs may have been in step, the political leaders clearly weren't.

Early Monday morning, Blanco was in Baton Rouge preparing to fly to Houston to meet with thousands of Louisiana refugees when she received news that Bush was on his way. Blanco Chief of Staff Andy Kopplin called the White House and got word from Bush Chief of Staff Andrew Card that the president was planning to return to Louisiana in a few hours to follow up on his Friday visit.

The White House notified the media Sunday about the trip. But Blanco aide Bob Mann said Blanco was assured Sunday by the Federal Emergency Management Agency that Bush was not coming. FEMA spokeswoman Nicol Andrews said agency Director Michael Brown knew about the Bush visit but that many lower-level officials didn't, and that was probably why the Blanco administration wasn't notified.

Bartlett said "there was outreach" to the governor's office, "e-mails sent, messages left."

"We apologize if there was any confusion," he said.

A Bush visit to Louisiana at a time when Blanco was out of the state would have been a major embarrassment for the governor. It could also have sent the message that Bush, who has been criticized for not moving quickly enough to help Louisiana, was in charge on the ground.

Blanco abruptly canceled the trip to Houston. Bush downplayed suggestions of a state-federal spat.

During a visit to the Bethany World Church in Baton Rouge, which was doubling a shelter for evacuees, Bush said, "Laura and I have come back down to Louisiana ... to let the good people of this region know there's a lot of work to be done, and we're going to continue working with the local and state people to get it done."

CYAN MAGENTA YELLOW BLACK
BOOMTOWNPG7 9/06/05 PAGE APS6 AUTO

On behalf of the entire Pinnacle Properties family - from Casino Magic Biloxi to Boomtown New Orleans - we'd like to offer our sincere sympathy to our employees and their families, as well as the entire community.

Our prayers go out to all of you during this difficult time. It is more important now than ever to stick together as a community and support one another as best we can. Listed below are emergency numbers you can call for help.

---

Pinnacle Employee Communication

1.800.665.8738

Employee Assistance Hotline

1.800.865.1044

Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA)

1.800.621.FEMA

---

PINNACLE[SM]
ENTERTAINMENT

Casino Magic® Biloxi

BOOMTOWN CASINO® NEW ORLEANS

©2005 Pinnacle Entertainment, Inc. All rights reserved.

HURRICANE KATRINA AFTERMATH

Katrina's body count could reach 10,000

Bodies found piled in freezer at Convention Center

Brian Thevenot
Staff writer

Arkansas National Guardsman Mikel Brooks stepped through the food service entrance of the Ernest N. Morial Convention Center Monday, flipped on the light at the end of his machine gun, and started pointing out bodies.

"Don't step in that blood - it's contaminated," he said. "That one with his arm sticking up in the air, he's an old man."

Then he shined the light on the smaller human figure under the white sheet next to the elderly man.

"That's a kid," he said. "There's another one in the freezer, a 7-year-old with her throat cut."

He moved on, walking quickly through the darkness, pulling his camouflage shirt to his face to screen out the overwhelming odor.

"There's an old woman," he said, pointing to a wheelchair covered by a sheet. "I escorted her in myself. And that old man got bludgeoned to death," he said of the body lying on the floor next to the wheelchair.

Brooks and several other Guardsmen said they had seen between 30 and 40 more bodies in the Convention Center's freezer. "It's not on, but at least you can shut the door," said fellow Guardsman Phillip Thompson.

The scene of rotting bodies inside the Convention Center reflected those in thousands of businesses, schools, homes and shelters across the metropolitan area. The official death count from Hurricane Katrina in Louisiana was 71 as of Monday evening, but that included only those bodies that had been brought to a make-shift morgue in St. Gabriel.

Nearly a full week after Hurricane Katrina, a rescue force the size of an invading army had not yet begun the task of retrieving the bodies Sunday. What's more, officials appeared to have no plan.

Daniel Martinez, a spokesman for FEMA working on Interstate 10 in eastern New Orleans, said plans for body recovery "are not being released yet."

Dozens of rescue workers questioned Monday said they knew of no protocol or collection points for bodies; none said they had retrieved even one of the many corpses seen floating in neighborhoods around the city as they searched for survivors.

Scores of rescue workers this week repeated the same mantra, over and over: We can't worry about the dead; we're still trying to save the living.

But as rescue teams across the city said they had checked nearly every house for survivors, the enormity of the death that lay in Hurricane Katrina's wake came into sharp focus even as the plans for taking care of the dead remained murky.

Mayor Ray Nagin, addressing the potential body count for the storm for the first time, said the storm may have claimed more than 10,000 lives.

In a news conference Monday morning, Deputy Chief Warren Riley said his department was "not responsible for recovery."

"We don't have a body count, but I can tell you it's growing. It's growing," he said.

As the rescue missions covered more and more ground but yielded fewer survivors, New Orleans Police Deputy Chief Steve Nicholas said that the time has come to start dealing with the dead.

"I know we're still rescuing people, but I think it's time we start pulling out the bodies," he said.

The highest concentration of casualties from Hurricane Katrina likely will come in the Lower 9th Ward, St. Bernard Parish, areas first inundated on Aug. 29 with floodwaters that engulfed second story homes in minutes. New Orleans also will likely see mass casualties, New Orleans Police Capt. Timothy Bayard said.

"We're going see a lot more bodies out of New Orleans East than we anticipated," he said.

In just one subdivision, Sherwood Forest, survivors who showed up to the Convention Center on Monday said police told them roughly 90 people in the subdivision had died.

In St. Bernard, 22 bodies were found lashed together. Officials surmised the drowning victims had tried to stay together to keep themselves from being washed away in the storm.

Lt. Governor Mitch Landrieu said "more than a thousand" people had died in St. Bernard. "When the death toll comes out, it's going to be a jolt for everybody," he said. "I'll be surprised if the casualties in St. Bernard are less than a thousand."

Even Uptown near the river, one of the few spots of dry land, a body lay in front of a white wooden shotgun double at 4732 Laurel St. The body of an older woman lay under a gray blanket, pinned down at the corners by brick and slate, adorned with a plastic-wrapped flower bouquet. Above her, a yellow cardboard sign quoting John 3:16 had been taped to the window.

Alcede Jackson
Rest in Peace
In the loving arms of Jesus

Given the length of time many had been dead, and in the water, some of the bodies already might be unrecognizable, and some may never be recovered.

Many trapped by flood waters in shelters found their own ways of dealing with those who died in their midst.

Near an elementary school at Poland and St. Claude avenues, Dwight and Wilber Rhodes, two brothers, said they had tried to save a middle-aged man and woman at the Convention Center who appeared to have drowned.

"We performed CPR on them, but they were already dead," Dwight Rhodes said. "So we took the food out of the freezer and put the bodies in."

Of the four bodies that lay just inside the food service entrance of the Convention Center, the woman in the wheelchair rattled Brooks the most. When he found her two days before among the sea of suffering in front of the Convention Center where one of the last refugee camps evacuated, her husband sat next to her. He had only one concern when Brooks and some of his comrades carted her away.

"Bring me back my wheelchair," he recalled the man telling him.

One of the bodies, they said, was a girl they estimated to be 5 years old. Though they could not confirm it, they had heard she was gang-raped.

"There was an old lady that said the little girl had been raped by two or three guys, and that she had told another unit. But they said they couldn't do anything about it with all the people there," Brooks said. "I would have put him in cuffs, stuck him in the freezer and left him there."

Brooks and his unit came to New Orleans not long after serving a year of combat duty in Iraq, taking on gunfire and bombs, while losing comrades with regularity. Still, the scene at the Convention Center, where they conducted an evacuation this week, left him shell-shocked.

"I ain't got the stomach for it, even after what I saw in Iraq," said Brooks, referring to the freezer where the bulk of the bodies sat decomposing. "In Iraq, it's one-on-one. It's war. It's fair. Here, it's just crazy. It's anarchy. When you get down to killing and raping people in the streets for food and water □ And this is America. This is just 300 miles south of where I live."

Staff photo by Alex Brandon

CONVENTION CENTER: ATF Senior Special Agent Dave Millen of the Special Response Team walks past one of many bodies found inside the Ernest N. Morial Convention Center on Monday. Millen, along with the New Orleans Police Department SWAT team, searched the building for anyone left following the mass evacuation of refugees.

Barge may have caused breach in floodwall

Corps trying to find reasons for collapse

By John McQuaid
Washington bureau

WASHINGTON - A loose barge may have caused a large breach in the east side of the Industrial Canal floodwall that accelerated Hurricane Katrina's rising floodwaters in the Lower Ninth Ward and St. Bernard Parish, Army Corps of Engineers project manager Al Naomi said Monday.

Naomi said the barge was found on the land side of the floodwall, leading corps officials to believe it could have crashed through the wall and sent a huge amount of water - which was already pouring over the top of the wall - into the neighborhoods immediately downriver.

"We have some pictures that show this very large barge inside the protected area. It had to go through the breach," Naomi said. "The opening is a little bit wider than the barge itself. One would think it's the barge that did it."

If it did strike the floodwall, Naomi said, the barge would have "precipitated a tremendous collapse" that would have quickly flooded the Lower Ninth Ward and then St. Bernard Parish. The breach is "ultimately in my opinion what got (St. Bernard) Parish flooded," Naomi said.

There are two large breaks in the floodwall, said Ivor Van Heerden, deputy director of the Louisiana State University Hurricane Center, who did an aerial survey of flood damage Sunday. The larger of the two, possibly caused by the barge, is about 800 feet long. The second is 500 feet.

The areas adjacent to the Industrial Canal were among the first to flood Monday morning. Katrina's storm surge pumped water from the east into a V-shaped area between St. Bernard and eastern New Orleans hurricane protection levees, then funneled it up the Gulf Intracoastal Waterway into the Industrial Canal.

There the water spilled over the levee, flooding eastern New Orleans, and overtopping the Industrial Canal walls before the floodwall was breached, Naomi said. The Corps got a report from the Industrial Canal's lock master before dawn that water was pouring over both sides of the waterway. Reports from people in the area at the time indicate that the flood waters rose very quickly starting around 8 a.m.

Naomi also said it's too soon to tell how the 17th Street Canal and London Avenue Canal levees were breached, causing the catastrophic flooding in New Orleans.

Corps officials have said the levees - concrete walls rising out of a low concrete and earthen base - probably collapsed after water flowed over them and scoured the interior side, weakening the structure.

But some data indicate Katrina's storm surge may have been too low in that part of Lake Pontchartrain to overtop the levees, researchers say.

Van Heerden said that preliminary data indicated the storm surge along the west side of Lake Pontchartrain and along the causeway reached about 8.5 feet. The levee heights in the canals are about 14 feet.

Joannes Westerink, a hydrologic engineer at the University of Notre Dame who is working on a computer model of Katrina's flooding of New Orleans, agreed the storm surge in the lake was weaker than expected and may not have been high enough to top the levees.

"I would doubt it too," Westerink said of the overtopping scenario. He said that typically a storm surge has wave action on top of it that accounts for 2 feet, then wave crests can reach higher, although waves tend to be small in a canal.

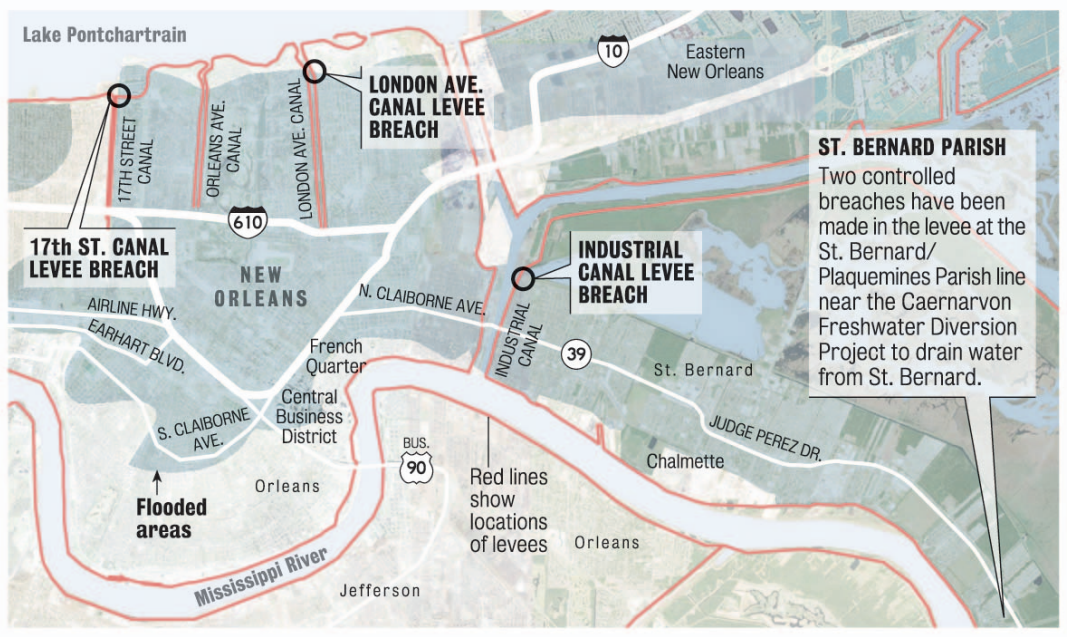
"A very wild guess, I'd say you've got a couple of feet over the surge, so that's 11 feet. That would not be enough to top it," he said.

Westerink cautioned that he didn't know enough about the specifics of the storm surge in that area, wind velocities or other factors to be definitive.

Naomi said Corps officials believe Katrina's winds, coming from the north as the eye moved east of New Orleans, probably caused a buildup of surge along the lakefront and in the canals not recorded at gauges in the center or west of the lake. Then as the hurricane moved north and the winds shifted to the west, they put pressure on the levee walls and led to the collapse. The breaches occurred on the eastern sides of both the 17th Street and London Avenue canals.

There was some evidence of scouring on the eastern side of the 17th Street canal breach, he said, one factor in the Corps theory that the levees were topped.

But Naomi said no one knows what caused the levees to fail and that it might have been a structural flaw.



"I don't think it is necessarily a design issue. There's miles and miles of other floodwall that did not collapse," he said. "There may be some localized issue maybe in a foundation that caused the problem, (something) that we were not aware of. There will be an autopsy. We may find one reason for one canal, another reason for another canal. Just because they both broke doesn't mean it was the same reason. It could be three or four different reasons that all produced the same result."

Naomi said that there were small pontoon barges in the 17th Street canal to the north of the Hammond Highway Bridge. They are still unaccounted for. There were no barges in the London Avenue canal. He discounted the possibility that one or more of them could have caused the 17th Street canal breach.

"The barges were used mainly as a platform for workers to stand on," he said. "Some of them are not much bigger than a couple of desks put together. It would depend on the velocity . . . But it would be very difficult for those barges to get to that location. It's possible, but I don't think so."

Leonardo Ramirez, a construction worker and Metairie resident who lives on the Jefferson Parish side of the levee near the breached area, said that he thought he heard a barge hitting the levee early Monday, although he did not see it happen. "At quarter to six in the morning, we heard a huge bang, and then we heard another," he said. "It was so loud. It scared us."

NEW ORLEANS LEVEE REPAIRS CONTINUE

17th STREET CANAL

Monday: Workers removed part of a makeshift dam and activated drainage pumps for the first time, pumping a small flow of water – about 100 cubic feet per second – out of the canal. Contractors have filled in the breach to about 2 feet above sea level and will build it up 2 feet more.

Next on the list: The Army Corps of Engineers will inspect the rest of the canal for other weakened levees. Then it can remove the dam between the canal and Lake Pontchartrain.

In the next week: After the dam is gone, officials can pump the water from the city back out through the canal. But first, they need to fix any damage to the pumps the water might have caused. To help with water removal, engineers are bringing in additional pumps and generators.

INDUSTRIAL CANAL

The corps said that a large breach in the canal floodwall probably was caused by a loose barge that was found in the Lower 9th Ward. Engineers are moving equipment in and plan to begin filling that and other gaps soon.

LONDON AVENUE CANAL

Workers are still dropping rocks and sandbags to dam the end of the canal. Once sealed, repair work can begin on two breaches along the canal's walls.

Sources: New York Times, google.com, globalsecurity.org, staff research

NEW YORK TIMES AND STAFF GRAPHIC

STAFF PHOTO BY SCOTT THRELKELD

RELIANT CENTER: Former President Clinton talks with Lyshettia Reed of New Orleans at the Reliant Center, a shelter for thousands of New Orleans evacuees. Clinton and former President Bush met with the evacuees.

The stars are out at the Astrodome

Celebrities visit with evacuees at sports complex

By Tara Young
Staff writer

HOUSTON - A star-struck Phyllicia Winchester stood behind the barricades with her family as talk show host Oprah Winfrey and her entourage left the Reliant Astrodome on Monday afternoon.

A few minutes before, the 16-year-old spied Jada Pinkett Smith. The Rev. Jesse Jackson had just left the building. And at one point Monday, she was close enough to touch U.S. Sen. Hilary Rodham Clinton, D-New York, who was in town visiting storm survivors with her husband, former President Bill Clinton.

She hadn't seen Macy Gray but heard the singer was on the grounds volunteering, and Dr. Phil McGraw held an impromptu talk show at the dome Sunday, she said.

The visits have been a welcome diversion for Winchester, a high school junior, who is afraid of what she'll find when she and her family returns to her home in Harvey this week to survey storm damage.

On Monday, a virtual who's who of political, social and pop culture idols flooded the Reliant Park Complex, which houses the Astrodome, the Reliant Center and the Reliant Arena, where more than 20,000 New Orleans area residents are being sheltered.

The day started with a security sweep and a bomb-sniffing dog at the Reliant Center, where Clinton and another former president, George Bush, announced the Bush-Clinton Katrina Fund to assist hurricane victims. The two compared the fund to the tsunami relief effort they spearheaded earlier this year.

Their entourage included Hilary Clinton, Barbara Bush, U.S. Sen. Barak Obama, D-Illinois, and former New Orleans Mayor Marc Morial, president of the National Urban League.

It was sensory overload for Karen Wilson of Treme on Monday morning when Morial entered the cavernous hall where she and thousands more residents were staying. She clung to Morial like a long-lost friend.

When President Clinton entered the room, Wilson said she was moved to tears.

"They hugged me! Both of them," said Wilson, smiling. "I was just amazed. It made me feel happy. It made me feel good."

Some, like Wilson, a hug or a simple touch from the celebrities was enough. Others, like 7th Ward resident Linda Jeffers, forced visiting celebrities and politicians to listen to stories about missing relatives, slow emergency response and their fears of never being able to return home.

Jeffers, who is known in the dome by the straw hat she wears, made it a point Monday to get Jackson's attention as he stepped on the ground floor with state Sen. Cleo Fields, D-Baton Rouge.

Before touring the facility, Jackson and Fields said they were concerned about Louisiana residents being shipped away to states outside of the South. The two spoke about establishing "tent cities," opening up cabins and lands at Louisiana state parks for evacuees and, lastly, creating temporary residential areas at closed military installations, such as England Air Force Base in Alexandria.

Jeffers, who heard relocation offers to Michigan, Minnesota, Kansas and West Virginia on Monday, said she wanted to make sure that Jackson would fight to bring Louisiana residents home.

"They are sending us to places that we know not of," said Jeffers, who cornered Fields until he provided his contact information. "Who do we know in Kansas?"

Jackson, however, was all but forgotten when Oprah Winfrey arrived at the dome.

By far, Winfrey received the day's warmest reception by evacuees, who were kept at bay by the Houston police officers who escorted her around the dome. But the security officers did not keep Winfrey from reaching out and touching several evacuees during her visit.

"She said my daughter was the prettiest storm survivor there is," said Karen Matthews, hugging her daughter, Kaytrell.

Matthews said Winfrey also asked about Kaytrell's father, who hasn't been seen since the storm.

Matthews said that seeing people like Winfrey gives her hope. "It makes me feel overjoyed to know that people care," she said.

Winchester agreed, adding that she was thrilled to meet Jada Pinkett Smith on Monday at the Astrodome.

"She didn't come down here with her nose up in the air," Winchester said of her favorite actress, who is married to actor Wil Smith. "She was hugging and touching. She was signing autographs. It was breathtaking."

STAFF PHOTO BY SCOTT THRELKELD

RELIANT CENTER: Karmen Blanco, daughter of Gov. Kathleen Blanco, hugs Chelone Jones, 7, who just got a new set of clothes. 'It's amazing what local communities can do once they are given the resources to help,' Blanco said of the Texas hosts.

Makeshift morgue has grim task

Workers set to handle 140 bodies a day

By John Pope
Staff writer

ST. GABRIEL - Down a shell road in this town near Baton Rouge, the left side of a nondescript warehouse has become the headquarters for one of the most solemn tasks related to Hurricane Katrina: identifying the dead.

Standing on easy-to-clean, black plastic sheeting designed to reduce the risk of contamination, dozens of federal and state experts expect to spend months using such tools as fingerprints, DNA technology and dental X-rays to examine about 140 bodies a day in an around-the-clock process.

"It'll be a dignified, respectful process. It goes A to Z; we don't leave anything out," said Stephen E. Allen Sr., emergency operations officer with the federal Department of Homeland Security. He spoke Monday at a news conference at the morgue while workers, wearing polo shirts and khakis, lined up outside.

Because so many bodies are being pulled from polluted water, each will have to be decontaminated before being examined by epidemiologists, pathologists, dental experts and FBI fingerprint specialists, who will work under a succession of white canopies that look as if they could have come from funeral homes. After the bodies are identified, each victim will be made available for burial.

"The function of this facility is to care for the victims and provide solace to their families," said Dr. Louis Cataldie, medical director of emergency operations for the state Department of Health and Hospitals.

But families will not be allowed at the site. It will be closed to outsiders once the first bodies start arriving, possibly as early as Monday night. A separate plan is being devised for contacting relatives.

Although officials said the work probably will take months, Cataldie, the commander of the operation, declined to speculate how many bodies will be brought to the center. The only count so far, released Sunday, was 59.

"I don't speculate and will not speculate," he said. "I don't want people to be alarmed. I don't want inflated numbers. My gosh, it's horrible enough."

Earlier Monday, New Orleans Mayor Ray Nagin estimated that the death toll could reach 10,000.

Identifying recovered bodies will be made somewhat easier because the storm did not destroy records from the Louisiana State University School of Dentistry, Cataldie said.

Morgue personnel will deal only with hurricane-related deaths, which he described as deaths that "would not have occurred had there not been a hurricane."

In addition to drowning victims, he said that category could include hospital patients on ventilators that stopped when the electricity failed.

Among those working with the morgue here will be Orleans Parish coroner Frank Minyard, who said he has set up a temporary office at the Interstate 10/Interstate 610 split that will be a collection point for bodies recovered south of New Orleans.

Autopsies will be performed only in cases in which a crime is suspected, he said.

Baker Donelson is pleased to announce the opening of a Baton Rouge office.

Our New Orleans and Mandeville attorneys can be contacted at:

One American Place
Suite 830
301 North Main Street
Baton Rouge, Louisiana 70825
Phone 225.381.7000

OR

901-526-2000

We expect our Mandeville office to re-open in the next several weeks.

BAKER DONELSON
BEARMAN, CALDWELL & BERKOWITZ, PC
Baker Donelson Delivers.

www.bakerdonelson.com

THIS IS AN ADVERTISEMENT. Roy Cheatwood is managing shareholder in the New Orleans office of Baker Donelson. Mr. Cheatwood is licensed to practice in Louisiana. FREE BACKGROUND MATERIAL IS AVAILABLE UPON REQUEST BY WRITING LAURA HINE AT 165 MADISON AVENUE, SUITE 2000, MEMPHIS, TN 38103. A decision on legal services is important, and should not be based solely on advertisement. No representation is made that the quality of the legal services to be performed is greater than the quality of the legal services performed by other lawyers.

©2005 Baker, Donelson, Bearman, Caldwell, & Berkowitz, PC

La. ambassadors say hello, y'all

Dear America,

I suppose we should introduce ourselves: We're South Louisiana.

We have arrived on your doorstep on short notice and we apologize for that, but we never were much for waiting around for invitations. We're not much on formalities like that.

And we might be staying around your town for a while, enrolling in your schools and looking for jobs, so we wanted to tell you a few things about us. We know you didn't ask for this and neither did we, so we're just going to have to make the best of it.

First of all, we thank you. For your money, your water, your food, your prayers, your boats and buses and the men and women of your National Guards, fire departments, hospitals and everyone else who has come to our rescue.

We're a fiercely proud and independent people, and we don't cotton much to outside interference, but we're not ashamed to accept help when we need it. And right now, we need it.

By Chris Rose
Columnist

Just don't get carried away. For instance, once we get around to fishing again, don't try to tell us what kind of lures work best in your waters.

We're not going to listen. We're stubborn that way.

You probably already know that we talk funny and listen to strange music and eat things you'd probably hire an exterminator to get out of your yard.

We dance even if there's no radio. We drink at funerals. We talk too much and laugh too loud and live too large and, frankly, we're suspicious of others who don't.

But we'll try not to judge you while we're in your town.

Everybody loves their home, we know that. But we love South Louisiana with a ferocity that borders on the pathological. Sometimes we bury our dead in LSU sweatshirts.

Often we don't make sense. You may wonder why, for instance - if we could only carry one small bag of belongings with us on our journey to your state - why in God's name did we bring a pair of shrimp boots?

We can't really explain that. It is what it is.

You've probably heard that many of us stayed behind. As bad as it is, many of us cannot fathom a life outside of our border, out in that place we call Elsewhere.

The only way you could understand that is if you have been there, and so many of you have. So you realize that when you strip away all the craziness and bars and parades and music and architecture and all that hooey, really, the best thing about where we come from is us.

We are what made this place a national treasure. We're good people. And don't be afraid to ask us how to pronounce our names. It happens all the time.

When you meet us now and you look into our eyes, you will see the saddest story ever told. Our hearts are broken into a thousand pieces.

But don't pity us. We're gonna make it. We're resilient. After all, we've been rooting for the Saints for 35 years. That's got to count for something.

OK, maybe something else you should know is that we make jokes at inappropriate times.

But what the hell.

And one more thing: In our part of the country, we're used to having visitors. It's our way of life.

So when all this is over and we move back home, we will repay to you the hospitality and generosity of spirit you offer to us in this season of our despair.

That is our promise. That is our faith.

Chris Rose can be reached at noroses@bellsouth.net.

AP PHOTO

Slidell was one of the areas hardest hit by Hurricane Katrina a week ago. Slidell resident Tim Beck makes his way across debris from his home while looking for his motorcycle on Monday. Other portions of St. Tammany Parish, less devastated, are expected to make a quicker recovery.

Tammany stores, restaurants reopen

Residents team up to speed recovery on north shore

By Meghan Gordon and Chris Kirkham
St. Tammany bureau

Despite whole neighborhoods covered in debris and mud caked where receding waters dropped it, small reminders of life before Hurricane Katrina have emerged in St. Tammany Parish, to the appreciation of people who lost nothing more than electricity and people trying to save the few belongings they have left.

Big-box stores such as Lowe's, Home Depot and Wal-Mart opened several locations in the parish and pledged to extend store hours. Traffic in some main corridors flowed with ease as streetlights returned. And a few gas stations and restaurants reopened their doors a week after the storm.

"They're polite, courteous. I can't say enough about Slidell."

At the Waffle House near Covington, don't count on ordering hash browns "smothered" and "chunked" with a half-dozen toppings. Just being able to order the basics - waffles, eggs, grits and burgers - has given residents a short break from "meals ready to eat" in shelters and the camp food they cook up in their carports and back yards.

Mandeville resident Joey Drouant, who had just finished a meal with some friends, joked that "it was nice eating something that wasn't my wife's cooking."

With timelines for restoring electricity and phone service still uncertain Monday, citizens have pitched in to help their neighborhoods start to return to normal. The new garbage hauler in some neighborhoods has become the good Samaritan who uses his own truck to haul away the putrid remains of returning evacuees' fridges. Instead of calling the tree-cutting services swamped with power company work, residents have pooled their chain saws and gasoline to clear entire blocks.

"It's a surreal experience. In the beginning we just thought, 'Oh my God, this might just do us in,'" Law said. "We're hoping that we can light the phoenix, rise from the ashes and create a greater community."

JAMIE LAW
Sunshine Garden Health
Food store owner

Most of the businesses have been coming back to life along the U.S. 190 corridor in Covington, which was one of the first areas where CLECO crews restored power. As more and more gas stations open, the six-hour lines residents saw Thursday and Friday have dwindled to waits of 15 to 20 minutes.

Supplies have flooded into the parish, including chain stores with renewed supplies, charities and people looking to make a buck who have backed up their stuffed panel trucks to passing traffic. Some of their homemade signs bear the proof of price gouging, as several prices are crossed out, each one replaced by a higher number.

Lines at Lowe's south of Covington are now short or nonexistent, as Wal-Mart and Home Depot have taken in more customers. The most popular items at Lowe's and Wal-Mart on Monday were box fans, gasoline containers and shop vacuums, which all appeared to cost the same as they did before the storm.

The day after the storm hit, Herb Williams and his family waited for three hours at Lowe's before giving up and heading to Lafayette for supplies. But on Monday, their trip lasted only 20 minutes as they stocked up on window air conditioners for the house.

"The customers have been wonderful - good attitudes and some of them have lost everything," said Linda Wilder of Jacksonville, Fla., who allowed a few people at a time into the Lowe's on Gause Boulevard in Slidell.

The Papa John's franchise near the Rouses Supermarket off U.S. 190 opened its doors Monday morning to a bustling crowd of customers. The store was operating with a shoestring crew, but one manager said he hoped to have delivery service available soon.

Jamie Law, owner of Sunshine Garden Health Food store in downtown Covington, kept the organic grocery open to anyone who didn't mind her doing a bit of cleaning on the side. When she returned to her store, which had roof damage from a fallen tree, she remembered feeling despair.

"It's a surreal experience. In the beginning we just thought, 'Oh my God, this might just do us in,'" Law said. "We're hoping that we can light the phoenix, rise from the ashes and create a greater community."

Many Covington and Mandeville residents have found that the greatest solace throughout the week of cleanup has been meeting neighbors they hardly said hello to before the storm.

"I think the people of St. Tammany Parish are taking the cleanup into their own hands," said Diane Hudson, who lives in the Meadowbrook subdivision in Mandeville. "We think we'll get moving again pretty quickly."

And yet despite all the progress in the battered parish, nothing could console some residents who continued trying to comprehend the magnitude of their losses.

"I don't think it will ever get normal," said Terry Norvell, 52, who stood crying outside her flooded Palm Lake home in Slidell. "I've never seen anything this bad before in 28 years here."

At Hibernia,
we understand,
because we live and
work here, too.

Over the years, we've learned there's nothing more important than the businesses and the people we serve, our employees, and their communities. Therefore, Hibernia is devoted to helping anyone whose life or business has been affected by Hurricane Katrina. We understand that rebuilding is a top priority, and we want to prevent natural disasters from turning into economic ones. Hibernia is dedicated to giving you and your business the financial support necessary for getting on with life.

A note to our employees:
If you haven't yet contacted your manager, please do so as soon as possible. If you need further information, please call the employee emergency hotline.

HIBERNIA
Where service matters.SM

Click
Log on to Hibernia.com

Visit
Any Hibernia banking office

EQUAL HOUSING LENDER
©2005 Hibernia National Bank, Member FDIC. Normal credit qualifications apply.

HURRICANE KATRINA AFTERMATH

Violet family tells harrowing tale of survival

'Stench of death' filled St. Bernard Parish

By Chris Kirkham
St. Tammany bureau

As Merlin Ruiz gathered the last of his family's belongings from their muddied 14-foot flat boat at the edge of Salt Bayou south of Slidell, the look of resignation on his face could only hint at the harrowing four-day escape he and others had been forced to make from flood-torn St. Bernard Parish.

A few packs of tuna fish and cases of bottled water crammed into a plastic bag were the only remnants of a Violet home inundated by floodwaters and a waterside camp devastated by powerful winds. Arriving in St. Tammany Parish Saturday morning was a welcome conclusion to a journey from a place filled with what Ruiz called "the stench of death."

His family's odyssey, which he recounted from a shelter in Slidell, began Aug. 28, hours before Katrina's strongest winds ripped through St. Bernard Parish. Realizing they would not be safe in their one-story home and lacking the money to evacuate, Ruiz, his wife, Sharon, and their daughter, Triniti, made their way in a pickup truck to meet a friend at a food processing warehouse near the old Kaiser aluminum plant at the Chalmette slip. Inside the warehouse, about 50 people endured the heart of the storm the next morning, which ripped apart the roof and gutted the walls of the building.

"Buildings all around us were being peeled like there was a can opener," Sharon Ruiz said.

As flood waters began racing into the warehouse, the family scrambled to safety on a piece of heavy-duty foam from a massive freezer at the complex. Gathering what they could of generators and frozen meals from the warehouse, the family floated for more than five hours on the makeshift raft until the water rose high enough for them to float to a stash of flat boats near the warehouse.

From there, Merlin Ruiz and others drove, paddled and swam to secure a series of boats that would provide the only pipeline for getting out of the submerged parish. Ruiz drove his truck, which was on higher ground, a few miles down the Mississippi River levee to get a larger boat from his friend Wayne Landry. Because fences still blocked travel along the levee, Ruiz used bolt cutters to break through.

With the armada of flat boats and larger boats with more deck space, Ruiz and at least 15 others completed a daring series of rescues in Chalmette as the winds still raged into the night. Thedevastating sights throughout the city - a dead woman floating in a ditch, babies left dead on rooftops - only heightened the urgency of their task.

"It's heart-wrenching that we couldn't get everybody," Merlin Ruiz said. "You do it for a day and you swear you don't want to go back out. It's terrible, and I know they're still out there."

After bringing more than 200 people to the relative safety of bigger boats or the St. Bernard Parish Courthouse, the Ruiz family on Tuesday took the larger boat, filled with meals from the food warehouse, to investigate their hometown of Violet.

Flooding was just as severe, with water even inching up to second-story rooftops. The caravan of boats from Chalmette continued rescuing people from rooftops and attics in Violet, taking them to a friend's house on the river levee.

But despite delivering food and water, pandemonium soon set in and the friend's house became overrun by citizens-turned-looters and other desperate people. The smell of dead fish, animals and presumably, people, turned the air foul, the family said, and the word from the few St. Bernard Sheriff's deputies they saw was to get out as fast as possible.

"They said you were going to die from the disease in the water if you stayed," Triniti Ruiz said. "It smelled so bad you couldn't walk out of the cabins of your boat or you'd suffocate."

Conditions on the canals in Violet devolved quickly.

"If you went somewhere without a gun, there was a possibility you weren't coming back,'' Triniti Ruiz said.

The boat caravan, now numbering five vessels, some with as many as 10 families aboard, decided to leave Violet and head to Bayou Lacombe on the north shore of Lake Pontchartrain. Rumors had spread that no help was coming, but that a preacher from Jackson, Miss., was going to be in Lacombe to take people to safety.

Having eaten only meager portions of tuna fish and bottled water, not knowing how long they would be trapped in St. Bernard Parish, the Ruiz family and others decided to brave the trip by going through the canals of Violet to the Mississippi River Gulf Outlet to the Intracoastal Waterway, into the Rigolets and, finally, into Lake Pontchartrain. Because of the extensive flooding, everything looked like one body of water, making it difficult to navigate the series of bayous and inlets.

Even Merlin Ruiz's years of experience in the bayous was put to a stern test. "If you didn't know where the bayou was, you would really tear your boat up," he said.

The family had to ditch the larger boat near the entrance to the Rigolets channel as shallow waters and low bridges obstructed the path.

After the two-day trip from Violet, the convoy arrived at Bayou Lacombe, where sheriff's deputies said they had never heard about a Mississippi man helping flood victims. The caravan relocated to Salt Bayou off Rigolets Avenue south of Slidell, where some of families met up with relatives and others were sent to different shelters.

The Ruiz family had to leave their three dogs, Beauregard, Chico and Angel, inside the boat. When the family returned Sunday to check on the boat, the dogs were gone.

Ruiz's son is serving in the Marines in Iraq, but they were able to contact his fiancØe, who was rescued from St. Bernard and taken to Houston. They hoped to leave Louisiana by early Monday morning - possibly to never return.

"I'm going to salvage what I can of my house, sell it off and I think I'm going back to Texas for good," Merlin said. "With these hurricanes, there's too much loss, too many people you can lose."

Living rescued, dead retrieved in St. Bernard

Clearing away muck may take months

By Manuel Torres
St. Bernard bureau

With Hurricane Katrina's pestilent waters still covering large parts of St. Bernard Parish, emergency crews on Monday continued the grueling work of searching for the living -- all the while marking the corners where the dead lay.

Rescuers were still finding survivors inside their homes, where they had been trapped --many with little or no water and food -- since up to 20 feet of water gushed in Aug. 29.

"Some of them did not want to leave," said Col. Richard Baumy of the St. Bernard Sheriff's Office.

Sheriff Jack Stephens has ordered deputies to "forcefully remove" anybody resisting the parish's mandatory evacuation order, handcuffing hardy survivors if needed. Officials have said the soup of stale water, chemicals and decomposing bodies flowing in the parish poses a serious health risk and no residents will be allowed back in until further notice.

Meanwhile, Federal Emergency Management Agency crews continued the somber task of identifying the location of bodies to be recovered once the waters recede.

"Once the water goes down, we'll know how many bodies we have,"

Baumy said.

The FEMA crews are marking the sites of corpses using global positioning system technology. There's no official count of the dead, which officials estimate may reach into the hundreds. So far officials have reported 31 people found dead at St. Rita's Nursing Home in Poydras and 22 other bodies found tied together in Violet. Officials believe they bound themselves by rope in a desperate effort to survive the storm.

But the main task remains finding survivors.

Estimates of the total number of people evacuated from St. Bernard since the storm range from 5,000 to more than 7,000, about a tenth of the parish's population. But officials said most survivors have already been found and taken out of the parish.

With the flow of St. Bernard refugees slowing to a trickle, the parish stopped using large gas-guzzling ferry boats and turned to smaller U.S. Coast Guard patrol vessels to carry the rescued from "Camp Katrina," a makeshift shelter at the St. Bernard Port slip, to the Algiers Point ferry landing.

The water continued to recede, much of it draining through natural channels and some of it being pumped out. But officials said it will take weeks and possibly months, to clear the layer of muck - in some places several inches thick - left behind.

It was unclear Monday whether waters have receded enough to allow cleanup crews to reach an oil leak at the Murphy Oil refinery in Meraux that has spread into parts of east Chalmette. The Department of Environmental Quality identified the source of the leak at a tank inside Murphy Oil's 125,000-barrel-a-day refinery. State officials said the company is aware of the leak and will be responsible for cleanup.

State Rep. Nita Hutter, R-Chalmette, said the oil must be cleaned up before the parish can turn on the pumps to drain that area of Chalmette. Otherwise, he said, the pumps could be ruined.

Hutter and other parish representatives met with U.S. Corps of Engineers officials Monday to press for "other actions" to drain water still trapped by St. Bernard's levees at levels surpassing 5 feet in the northern parts of the parish.

Hutter said she could not discuss details on the options being discussed. Parish officials last week said they were asking the Corps to open a gap in the Lake Borgne Basin levee to help drain the water. Hutter said that remains among several options being debated, and that Corps officials plan to visit St. Bernard on Wednesday as they evaluate the parish's proposals.

"Everything is on the table," said Hutter, whose one-story home in Chalmette took enough water to reach the rain gutters.

TENET

notice

ATTENTION TENET EMPLOYEES AND PATIENTS

In response to Hurricane Katrina, TENET HEALTHCARE CORPORATION in Dallas has launched

TWO DISASTER ASSISTANCE CENTERS to help these Tenet hospitals:

Kenner Regional Medical Center in Kenner, La. | Lindy Boggs Medical Center in New Orleans

Meadowcrest Hospital in Gretna, La. | Memorial Medical Center in New Orleans

NorthShore Regional Medical Center in Slidell, La. | Gulf Coast Medical Center in Biloxi, Miss.

EMPLOYEE DISASTER ASSISTANCE CENTER

Tenet employees and their families in need of assistance or information are encouraged to call 1 (866) 631-8917 or email Employee-DR@tenethealth.com.

PATIENT INFORMATION HOTLINE

If you are a patient, or need information about a patient at a Tenet hospital, please call 1 (866) 888-3638 or email Patient-DR@tenethealth.com.

HURRICANE KATRINA AFTERMATH

"I've never even thought about the alternative of rebuilding. I've seen places like Pensacola and Destin devastated by hurricanes, and a few years later they were back. A lot of people go through adversity, and they put it away and move forward. New Orleans is a great town, and it needs to survive."

PATRICK QUINN, Astor Crown Plaza Hotel hotel manager

Hotels look forward to rebuilding process

But tourists not likely to return soon

By Keith Darcé
Business writer

From a second-story balcony overlooking a wrecked Canal Street, Patrick Quinn and the last of his senior hotel managers laid out their plan for reopening the Astor Crown Plaza Hotel.

First, they will bring in a bigger generator to get lights and air conditioning working in the 512-room, four-star property at 739 Canal St.

Then they will bring a crew into the city to clean the hotel, and they will line up vendors to deliver supplies.

Finally, and perhaps most critical, they must get fresh water flowing through the hotel's plumbing. But there is no way of knowing when the city will restore water service.

"One of the toughest things for us will be that there will be some things beyond our control," Quinn said.

If everything works as planned, the Astor could be housing soldiers and federal emergency workers within weeks, he said.

"It's going to be hell, but we'll just take it one step at a time," said Bruce Perone, the hotel's food and beverage director.

It was perhaps surreal to have discussions late Saturday night about revitalizing a hotel when the mere survival of people still trapped in New Orleans was in question nearly a week after Hurricane Katrina.

But Quinn's optimism offered evidence that at least some of the city's leading business people are determined to return and lead an economic resurrection.

Every half hour or so, a truck passed along the neutral ground of Canal Street below the balcony carrying four heavily armed soldiers. Just before midnight, gunfire erupted a block and a half up the street from the hotel when a security truck focused a spotlight on a building. Overhead, helicopters buzzed over the French Quarter, illuminating the deserted streets below. The only other sound came from humming generators feeding electricity to the handful of downtown hotels still occupied.

Even insects seemed to have abandoned the city.

The night sky was filled with a canopy of stars normally made invisible by the city's glare.

But amid the grim reality gripping New Orleans, Quinn and his managers could see the seeds of rebirth.

Quinn, one of the most successful hoteliers in the city, opened a string of high-end properties over the last 16 years that fed off a booming tourism and convention business.

But tourists and conventioneers likely won't be returning anytime soon.

"One of the biggest issues six months and a year from now will be getting the customers to come back," Quinn said.

"Conventions are going to be terrified of booking here during hurricane season," Astor General Manager Peter Ambrose said.

So Quinn is turning his entrepreneurial sights on what likely will be the city's biggest industry for the coming years: reconstruction.

Despite the massive challenges, he held out hope his businesses and his hometown.

"I've never even thought about the alternative of rebuilding," he said. "I've seen places like Pensacola and Destin devastated by hurricanes, and a few years later they were back.

"A lot of people go through adversity, and they put it away and move forward," he said. "New Orleans is a great town, and it needs to survive."

Quinn might be focused on the future, but the remnants of his staff at the Astor won't soon forget the last seven harrowing days.

Ambrose and Perone saw the forecasts promising a menacing storm aiming for New Orleans, and they heeded the warnings.

The managers started preparing Friday. They filled dozens of garbage cans with 2,000 gallons of water. They made 8,000 pounds of ice and stuffed it into kitchen freezers. They increased their stockpiles of food. And they collected medical supplies.

They didn't want any guests, but they knew they would come.

By Sunday night, nearly 2,000 were hunkered down at the Astor. Many simply showed up at the front door, desperate for safe lodging.

The guests included 20 people in wheelchairs, an elderly man with a feeding tube, a woman who gave birth by Caesarian section the night before the storm hit, and a 400-pound man with a bad heart who was confined to his room.

As conditions in the hotel deteriorated last week, the staff recruited guests to help cook and clean. A minister in the group organized daily prayer services.

Once the storm moved through, managers started moving guests out, an evacuation that took days.

"We saved a lot of people's lives, I swear to God," Perone said.

He and Ambrose said they won't leave the Astor unless authorities force them out.

"This is our livelihood. This is what we do," Perone said. "We came here to protect our futures."

• • • • • •

Staff writer Keith Darcé can be reached at nolapaperboy@cox.net.

Area churches ready to provide shelter, food

By Kadee Krieger
Staff writer

Churches surrounding the New Orleans area for 250 miles are standing by to provide beds and warm meals to the thousands displaced by Hurricane Katrina, NAACP President Bruce Gordon said.

The NAACP is working with Federal Emergency Management Agency to transport evacuees from shelters to church facilities from Shreveport to North Carolina, Gordon said Sunday at the state Office of Emergency Preparedness.

He said the churches are prepared to provide shelter for as long as 60 days. "We asked the churches how many they could take, how many beds do they have? We will work with FEMA to move that number," Gordon said. "We are prepared to move."

The NAACP, working initially through the National Baptist Convention, has lined up churches in Shreveport and Houston and smaller cities throughout the Southeast region to North Carolina, he said.

The churches are not offering permanent placement, but a respite from the cramped and crowded quarters in massive shelters, including the Astrodome in Houston. The housing that the churches will provide will at least offer more comfortable conditions, Gordon said.

"It seems now that while the transportation puzzle is not completely solved, the housing resources situation is more challenging," Gordon said.

He said although the NAACP began its efforts by working with the Baptist delegation, it is hoping all denominations will help provide housing for evacuees.

"The benchmark for recovery should be 9/11. This disaster is no less significant, no less dramatic than that event."

BRUCE GORDON
NAACP President

Any church that has available shelter or facilities should contact the NAACP's 24-hour hotline at 1-866-997-2227 or visit www.naacp.org on the Internet, he said.

Gordon also called for a separate victims' relief fund to be set up by the federal government, similar to what was created after the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks.

"The benchmark for recovery should be 9/11. This disaster is no less significant, no less dramatic than that event," he said. "This may not have been an act of terrorism, but it was a natural disaster's form of terrorist. We must put all our resources into rebuilding these communities."

"The citizens of New York did not have to carry the burden" of rebuilding, and nor should New Orleans and Gulf Coast communities, Gordon said.

"This is our worst nightmare for a community," he said. "But the people from New Orleans love where they live and they will rebuild. From New Orleans to Biloxi, the people born and raised in this region will have the opportunity to contribute to that effort."

CONVENTION CENTER SEARCH

STAFF PHOTO BY ALEX BRANDON

Members of the New Orleans Police Department SWAT team, left, and two teams from the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms descend an escalator during a search of the Convention Center on Monday. They were looking for anyone who was still in the building after Hurricane Katrina.

We know it takes confidence to get back on your feet.

Regions is committed to helping rebuild our communities.

That's why Regions Bank is here to support you in this critical time. Regions Bank is accepting donations for disaster relief through the American Red Cross. Ask your branch representative how you can help. In addition, Regions Bank is offering a variety of financial resources to assist you, including:

- Deferred payments and discounts on some consumer and business loans. (Call 1-866-453-9892 to make arrangements.)
- The fee that Regions charges its customers to use other banks' ATMs will be waived in hurricane-affected areas.
- The fee for non-Regions customers to use Regions ATMs in hurricane-affected areas will also be waived.
- Credit card line increases and payment deferment. To learn more about this option, please call 1-800-362-6299, or 1-800-892-3219 if you are a business owner.
- Fees waived for retail customers on incoming and outgoing wire transfers (International wire transfers not included).
- Consumer Line of Credit and Home Equity Line increases‡
- Discount rate on new direct consumer installment loans‡

Everyday confidence. REGIONS BANK SM

1-800-REGIONS (1-800-734-4667)

EQUAL HOUSING LENDER © 2005 Regions Bank. Member FDIC. Union Planters Bank merged with Regions Bank as of June 29, 2005. Special services available to the residents of this city only. These special offers subject to change and may be withdrawn at any time. Services to non-customers may be subject to fees charged by other banks. Loans subject to credit approval. ‡Subject to credit approval.

Algiers has apparently avoided water damage

By Richard Meek
Staff Writer

Algiers was largely spared from Hurricane Katrina and subsequent floodwaters, but

New Orleans City Councilman Jacquelyn Brechtel Clarkson said other parts of her district did not fare so well, noting that water was still standing in parts of Faubourg Marigny, St John, Treme and the Bywater.

Clarkson, in Baton Rouge on Sunday, said many city workers died after the storm, unwilling to leave their jobs. "We lost a lot of city workers. The workers would not leave and we had to save some from a 25-foot wall of water," she said.

She lauded Mayor Ray Nagin's efforts over the past week.

He is "the greatest hero in all of this," she said. "He and his team of city workers -- police, firefighters, Sewerage and Water Board -- are all heroes. He organized his team and kept them focused on target. They saved most of our city's people."

For five days, Clarkson rotated between City Hall and a makeshift command center she and Nagin manned at the Hyatt Regency. Her adventures included sprinting up 23 flights of stairs to escape a band of gun-toting individuals who were trying to enter the Hyatt.

"It was most heartbreaking to see this beautiful city, a major port of the American economy with strategic oil reserves for the entire Northeast, and wonder where the hell was the world," Jackson said, as she fought back tears. "They showed up for 9/11 but where were they (for New Orleans)?"

Clarkson said she spent much of the first few days following the storm trying to save lives.

"I didn't leave because I was trying to put people who were desperate with people who had resources to help," Clarkson said.

In Algiers, she said, the sewerage system is operational and police and National Guard patrols have established security. Clarkson said that Algiers did not take on water, and that she did not see any homes that were completely destroyed, although many suffered wind damage. She added that the community has running water and safe drinking water.

But she fell short of encouraging people to return.

"We cannot afford to divert resources from people who are still being saved from rooftops," Clarkson said. "But I want the people to know that the people of Algiers are fortunate."

Clarkson said the scariest moment came when individuals began storming the doors of the Hyatt, believing there was food and water inside; Clarkson said there was little of either.

"The mayor grabbed my arm and had me run up 23 flights of steps (from the fourth floor)," she said. "Of course, he got there 10 minutes before me."

Clarkson said she will continue rescue operations from her Algiers headquarters and begin to plan what promises to be a long recovery. She said anyone needing emergency and rescue help only should call her at 392-2092.

"I never imagined this would happen," Clarkson said.

MONEY

Oil production inches up as Gulf rig damage assessed

Platforms battered south of Grand Isle

By Mary Judice
Business writer

Energy companies on Monday continued to inspect and repair almost 900 oil and gas platforms that were in the path of Hurricane Katrina when it roared through the Gulf of Mexico a week before, shutting down oil and gas operations and leaving platforms toppled or listing.

Regulators on Monday reported a slight increase in the amount of oil and gas being pumped in the country's largest oil- and gas-producing region. Some companies that reported little or no damage said they could not resume pumping because power had not been restored to pipelines that transport oil and gas ashore.

Some areas of the Gulf off southwest Louisiana and Texas were relatively untouched, while companies reported platforms listing in areas south of Grand Isle.

The Minerals Management Service, which regulates oil and gas operations offshore, estimates almost 350,000 barrels of oil per day is flowing from Gulf platforms, which normally produce 1.5 million barrels daily.

Natural gas production is also cut back. The Minerals Management Service estimates only 42 percent of the gas that normally flows is being produced.

But production is rebounding. The agency said that since Sunday, oil production has increased 5 percent and gas production 2 percent.

The estimates are based on reports by 67 companies, which represent about 63 percent of the companies operating in the Gulf.

ExxonMobil's operations south of Grand Isle suffered damage, said Mark Boudreaux, media manager in Dallas, and the company is evaluating a temporary move of its Gulf support base from Grand Isle to Port Fourchon. He said the majority of the equipment is stable.

The company shut in wells eastward along the Louisiana coast, Boudreaux said, and is bringing wells in Mobile Bay, which produce primarily gas, back into operation.

On Monday, Exxon was producing two-thirds of its normal oil and gas yield.

Shell Oil did not release figures but said some of its deepwater platforms, which produce significant amounts oil and gas, are running in the western Gulf.

In the eastern Gulf, where the storm ripped through, progress is slower. The company is still evaluating damage at its deepwater Mars, Ursa and Cognac platforms and at its west Delta field. At other platforms, the company is inspecting and repairing damage to platforms and onshore processing facilities.

Boudreaux said Exxon's Baton Rouge refinery is running at maximum capacity, refining 500,000 barrels of oil per day into gasoline and other products. Exxon's Chalmette refinery remains shut because of flooding, he said.

BP said most of its damage was in the shallow waters of the Gulf. The company's signature Holstein Spar was back in production Monday, said spokeswoman Annie Smith, but 10 platforms in shallow waters offshore southeast Louisiana were toppled or listing.

The only place the company was affected was south of Grand Isle where the storm went over, she said. "All of the deepwater came through fine."

However, the company still has a significant amount of production shut in, she said, because power has not been restored to the pipeline system.

Hotel is a microcosm of evacuee experience

It shows difference between the haves and the have-nots

By Greg Thomas
Real estate writer

Alfanao Tony of Meraux stood at the counter of the Baton Rouge Hampton Inn wearing a starched white shirt. His eyes filled with tears as he explained that anonymous donors from Baton Rouge had paid his hotel room bill for five nights now.

The financial help has been critical for an 86-year-old man who has no home, nowhere else to go and wants to avoid shelters.

"I'll sleep in my car before I go to a shelter," Tony said. "At my age, I couldn't take that."

The scene at Baton Rouge area hotels illustrates the socio-economic gap among Hurricane Katrina evacuees. Some are being put up in hotels by the companies they work for. Their jobs are secure, and they will eventually operate out of temporary offices in Baton Rouge.

Others, like Tony, have limited means and are struggling on their own to find shelter in a market where housing is increasingly scarce. They don't know when they can go home, when the money will run out or where they will go when it does.

Tony spent two nights on the fourth floor of his apartment building awaiting rescue after the storm.

He had $1,000 in his pocket when he headed toward Mystic, Texas, but he found no rooms and eventually made his way to the Hampton Inn, where "the staff have been just wonderful."

He's down to less than $200 and doesn't know what will happen after that.

Anna Dennis of Kenner had nine family members crammed into two rooms at the Hampton Inn. They, too, were running out of money, but were given a break on room charges.

Her husband, Warren, was at the local Hilton Garden Inn with his adoptive father, Wilbert Denies, 83. Denies has been a foster parent for decades and three of Warren's adopted brothers were staying with them: two teenagers and a 41-year-old man with an emotional disorder. "He just doesn't talk, and hasn't since he was a child," Anna Dennis said.

Warren Dennis has been hitting the road early every morning to find an apartment, but to no avail.

The one lead they had on an apartment got them excited, but when they went to meet the leasing agent they found a man with a truck unloading his furniture, saying the apartment was his.

"I've been trying to keep my breakdowns to every other day,'" Anna Dennis said.

The Dennis family has been to FEMA and the Red Cross and is trying every avenue they can think of to find housing. Meanwhile, Anna Dennis sent her two daughters, Alyssia, 6, and Alexandria, 5, to live with an aunt in Texas. The daily phone calls always are emotional, with the daughters crying to be back with their mother and father.

But Anna Dennis doesn't know when that will happen.

"I've got to have my daughters back, but I just didn't want them to see all of us going through this," she said.

Many Realtors in the Baton Rouge area were inundated with calls for apartments or rental space of any kind, but most families found that large businesses had already snapped up most of the inventory.

URS, an engineering firm, did just that. The company lined up 28 apartments for its critical employees. One of those units is going to information technology manager David Scripter, his wife Cheryl and their three young children.

The Scripter's Lakeview home is under water and feared totally destroyed. Cheryl Scripter said she felt bad - and a little guilty - for the people who are still in New Orleans and the hundreds more who can't find a place to stay in the Baton Rouge area.

Celeste Nillen-Cade, a teacher St. Robert Bellarmine School, is among those hunting for housing in Baton Rouge. Nillen-Cade was driving around town with the ashes of her husband in the trunk of her car. He died of a heart attack last month.

Along with her stepdaughter, she was crammed into a one-bedroom apartment with an expanded step-family, eleven altogether, many sleeping on the kitchen floor.

She headed to the Embassy Suites, where her brother works, to use the hotel computer to find housing.

"I'm thinking about Oklahoma City. I have my teacher's certificate, and if things can't work out here, I don't think I'll come back," Nillen-Cade said.

Kathie Jacobs, vice president of sales and marketing for Hampton Inn Hotels & Suites of New Orleans, which operates five hotels in metro New Orleans, was walking the lobby of the Baton Rouge hotel Sunday, checking on the customers she has grown to know by first name. She said the company is working hard to get the Elmwood Hampton Inn up and running, with hopes of moving back in as soon as power and water is restored. They were feeding Baton Rouge guests free hot dogs and other easy-to-prepare foods.

Jacobs was upset that many Baton Rouge residents were expressing their anger at "the New Orleans invasion."

But she also pointed out the generosity of the community. Some area residents have been coming to the front desk anonymously and offering to pay at least one room night for a New Orleans family. Others have been dropping off diapers, formula and other necessities

And employees of Hilton Corp. were calling and putting room nights for New Orleans evacuees on their credit cards.

"They just call up and say, 'I want to sponsor a family,'" Jacobs said.

Christoper Perry, a concierge at the Hampton Inn on Convention Center Boulevard, went through the survival ordeal of other city folks, including spending two nights on his roof before being rescued. He's helping out at the Hampton Inn and eager to get back to clean up the city and get things up and running.

"I just want to get home and help out," Perry said.

TOXIC GROCERIES

STAFF PHOTO BY CHRIS GRANGER

Employees with Bryon E. Talbot Contractors of Thibodaux dump spoiled food, estimated to be worth thousands of dollars, into a trash bin on Monday. The food was from Rouses Supermarket in Metairie, which was also looted after Hurricane Katrina hit.

City's historical documents in peril

Salvage specialists were turned away

By Greg Thomas
Real estate writer

Specialists working for the New Orleans Notorial Archives have been stymied in trying to enter the city and rescue some of the most historic documents in the city's history, from original land grants to slave sale records and title records.

Federal troops have refused to let them through checkpoints into the city.

The Notorial Archives hired Munters Corp., a Swedish document-salvage firm that freezes and then freeze-dries records to slowly remove moisture from them. But Munters' refrigerated trucks were turned away by uniformed troops as they tried to enter the city, said Stephen Bruno, custodian of the archives.

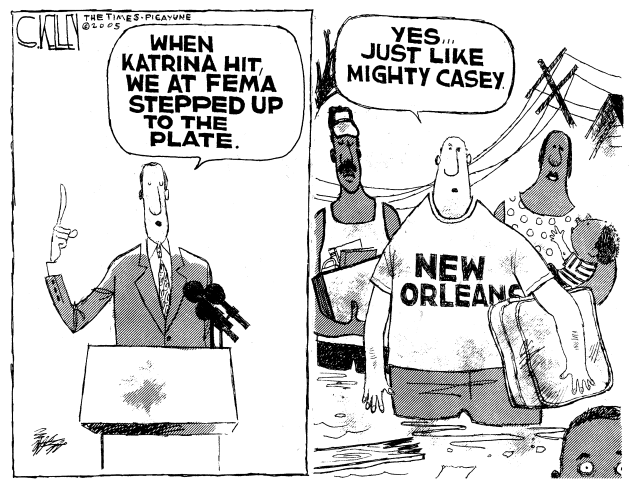
The trucks were headed to the Civil District Courthouse on Poydras Street, where many of the city's real estate documents are housed, and to the Amoco building at 1340 Poydras St., which houses historic documents such as a letter from Jean Lafitte to Washington demanding for his expenditures during the Battle of New Orleans.

Eddy Pokluda, head of national sales for Munters in Dallas, said the company tried to get one person in to make an assessment of the damage but was turned away, even though days earlier they had arranged with New Orleans Police Department to have an escort into the city.

"I don't think people realize the importance of these records. It's imperative we get in there and see if these can be saved,'' Pokluda said.

"These records are a historic treasure trove (that) would go to the Vatican or Smithsonian and be under armed guards and in vaults," Bruno said. "This is extremely frustrating.''

"Of course, the most important thing is the people and the bodies, but now we're really considered about the records,'' he said.



Most governments have digitized their real estate records, and Bruno was just about to hire a firm to transfer many of the documents in the archive to the computer.

But at the Notorial Archives, most abstractors still do hand searches of the 12 million stored documents.

"We're still in the horse-and-buggy days," Bruno said.

Bruno was quick to point out that homeowners shouldn't worry about others making claim to their properties. Further, "there won't be any (real estate) transactions until this problem is solved. Sure, a lot of people are going to want to sell and a lot of speculators are going to want to buy." But without access to the records by abstractors, "It isn't going to happen,'' Bruno said.

OUR OPINIONS

Chief Justice Rehnquist

Supreme Court Chief Justice William Rehnquist's death adds more confusion to an already unsettled political scene. Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, the court's key swing vote, announced her retirement earlier this summer. Hearings on John Roberts, President Bush's nominee to replace her, were at hand when Hurricane Katrina roared onto the Gulf Coast and caused death and havoc in New Orleans.

However unusual the circumstances, Justice Rehnquist's legacy is not in question. While his colleagues respected his sense of humor and his orderly management of the court's affairs, most Americans will remember him for pushing the nation's highest court in a more conservative direction -- and particularly for his efforts to limit federal power.

The authority of the federal government relative to that of the states and the private sector grew immensely during the New Deal and the civil rights movement, and Mr. Rehnquist sought in his legal work to reverse that trend. Early in his career, he criticized efforts to forbid racial discrimination, particularly in situations in which the federal government enforced such measures over the objections of states. His arguments back then, critics have long contended, provided legal cover for attempts to curtail African-Americans' fundamental liberties.

Despite its sketchy heritage, the concept of states' rights has come to look more and more attractive as a way toward a compromise solution to some of the most contentious social issues that now divide the country. Justice Rehnquist himself seems to have endorsed this use of his views. The conservative son of straitlaced Wisconsinites sided against federal law enforcement in a recent case involving a California law allowing the use of marijuana for medical use. (However, Justice Rehnquist was in the minority.)

The revival of federalism as a legal concept has also been incorporated into public discourse. The view that as much power and responsibility as possible should be devolved from Washington to state and local governments is now political boilerplate.

But Hurricane Katrina is a graphic depiction of the limits of this idea. Federalism surely doesn't mean that a poor community should be left to its own devices when stricken by a calamity, and it doesn't excuse the lousy, lamentable response of the federal government to New Orleans' crisis over the past week.

The existence of two simultaneous Supreme Court vacancies is a rare event, one that could well divert attention from the catastrophe that is still unfolding on the Gulf Coast. For a number of news organizations, the chief justice's death turned news about Katrina's aftermath into a secondary story. This is a worrisome sign. Gov. Kathleen Blanco, Mayor Ray Nagin and other elected leaders -- along with anyone else who cares about the fate of New Orleans and the rest of the state -- must keep pressing for relief, no matter how contentious the battle over Chief Justice Rehnquist's replacement.

OTHER OPINIONS

Excerpts from the national discussion on Hurricane Katrina and its aftermath

After days of withering criticism from white and black Americans, from conservatives as well as liberals, from Republicans and Democrats, the president finally felt compelled to act, however feebly. (The chorus of criticism from nearly all quarters demanding that the president do something tells me that the nation as a whole is so much better than this administration.)

Mr. Bush flew south on Friday and proved (as if more proof were needed) that he didn't get it. Instead of urgently focusing on the people who were stranded, hungry, sick and dying, he engaged in small talk, reminiscing at one point about the days when he used to party in New Orleans, and mentioning that Trent Lott had lost one of his houses but that it would be replaced with "a fantastic house -- and I'm looking forward to sitting on the porch."

Mr. Bush's performance last week will rank as one of the worst ever by a president during a dire national emergency. What we witnessed, as clearly as the overwhelming agony of the city of New Orleans, was the dangerous incompetence and the staggering indifference to human suffering of the president and his administration.

-- Bob Herbert, in The New York Times

SPORTS

Saints hold first practice in San Antonio

Team officials still determining 'home' sites

By Mike Triplett
Staff writer

SAN ANTONIO - The Saints officially began their San Antonio residency Monday with an afternoon practice under a blazing sun at the city school district's Spring Sports Complex.

This is home for the next four months, now that the team has decided to set up its base of operations here for the season, allowing players and members of the organization to move their families and put their kids in school if they so choose.

Practice was a little sloppy, players and Coach Jim Haslett admitted, but they said the effort was good after a three-day weekend. The Saints said they were eager to get back into a routine, even if this will be a season like no other.

The Saints still do not know where they will play their final seven home games. But they do know the season-opener is at Carolina on Sunday.

"We're pretty excited to get the season started," quarterback Aaron Brooks said. "We know it was a tragic thing happening, but at the same time, we know that this week is the week that we have to prepare to get ready for the game.

"I think the fans want to see us go out and get prepared for this game against Carolina more than anything."

Players learned Sunday night and Monday morning that they would be spending the season in San Antonio. It didn't come as much of a surprise since there were few other realistic options.

A few players expressed a desire to play their home games here, too, so they wouldn't have to travel every weekend. Most said they wanted to play as close to their fan base as possible.

And they all said they didn't want to feel sorry for themselves after seeing up close for the first time this past weekend what the residents of their city and the Gulf Coast have endured.

"Other than us staying here for a while, I don't see myself as a victim," said receiver Donte Stallworth, one of several Saints who planned to visit area evacuee shelters Monday night and Tuesday morning. "Other people lost everything, they don't know where they're going to get that next meal, their next drink of water. That's what's going to keep me focused. I'm not going to worry about my situation as much.

"I was talking to my brother and I told him that's motivation for me. The people of New Orleans are looking at us."

San Antonio and Baton Rouge still seem like the most likely candidates for the Saints' final seven home games - they will play their first scheduled home game against the New York Giants at Giants Stadium on Monday night, Sept. 19.

Haslett and General Manager Mickey Loomis said they would prefer to play in Baton Rouge during a Sunday night press conference.

But sentiment appears to be mixed at the upper levels of the organization.

After reports surfaced and a source inside the organization indicated that team owner Tom Benson was pushing hard for San Antonio - possibly beyond this season - the team announced its firm commitment to New Orleans in the press conference.

"Although we are practicing here in San Antonio and we're trying to locate a place for our home games, we are still the New Orleans Saints, and our commitment to our city is stronger than ever," Loomis said, also announcing the formation of the New Orleans Saints Hurricane Katrina Relief Fund. "We have many goals to accomplish, and one of them is to become a leader in the revitalization of New Orleans. We want to be on the forefront of making our city stronger. Our team is representing the state of Louisiana and the city of New Orleans, and we'll take that responsibility seriously."

Benson walked past reporters during Monday's practice and declined comment, but he said that he was "about up to here right now," raising his hand to his neck.

Benson, a New Orleans native with longstanding business and personal ties to San Antonio, has not commented about the team's future in the past week. He said he might be ready to comment within a few days.

Benson's brother Larry, who lives in San Antonio, where he is involved with the family's auto dealership business, said Benson's spirits have been "pretty good, surprisingly." But he said he had no indication of Benson's plans for the teams.

Benson has been in touch with NFL commissioner Paul Tagliabue, and also plans to meet with him in the near future. Tagliabue will ultimately make the decision.

LSU chancellor Sean O'Keefe said the Saints made preliminary contact with a member of the university's Board of Supervisors on Sunday. But he said he was not sure if the school would be able to accommodate the Saints.

"It depends on the terms and conditions," O'Keefe said. "We still don't know what the parameters are. I can't tell you whether I approve or object to anything. Preliminary discussions just started, first contact has been made. What we'll agree to do is share a cup of coffee, start talking and we'll see where the discussion goes."

Publicly, San Antonio is not campaigning for the Saints games, but some officials are working behind the scenes to try and make it happen.

Family stories

Reunited father and son, Lester Vallet Sr. and Jr., were at Monday's practice and happily announced that they located Lester Sr.'s wife in Lafayette. The current and former members of the Saints' facilities staff were reunited when members of the team visited the KellyUSA shelter in San Antonio on Sunday, where Lester Sr. had been evacuated. Lester Sr. has been staying at the team hotel but will leave to pick up his wife in Lafayette today.

Saints receiver Michael Lewis, a native New Orleanian, visited his family members this past weekend but could not convince his grandparents to leave their home in River Ridge, where they have no power. But he did give them the keys to his home in LaPlace, and they agreed to spend their nights there.

Mississippi native Fred McAfee was thrilled and stunned to see his 5-year-old niece, Jaihana, being rescued from her New Orleans home on ABC's Nightline, along with her mother and grandparents. McAfee said he immediately called his brother, who was in Philadelphia, Miss., as did another family member. McAfee said his brother had been worried sick about his family, with whom he has been reunited.

ATTENTION
MACY*S
NEW ORLEANS
EMPLOYEES

Please contact Macy*s offices by calling 1-800-444-8477 or by email at Neworleans.emergency@macys.com

We are anxious to hear that you are safe and how we can stay in contact with you.

Saints part of MNF doubleheader

N.O. to kick off 'home' opener at New York at 6 p.m.

By Mike Triplett
Staff writer

SAN ANTONIO - The Saints will lead off an unprecedented "Monday Night Football" doubleheader against the New York Giants on Sept. 19, the NFL announced Monday.

The game was originally scheduled to be played in New Orleans on Sept. 18 but was moved to Giants Stadium in the wake of Hurricane Katrina's destruction. The game also was moved to Monday night because the New York Jets are hosting the Miami Dolphins in Giants Stadium on that Sunday.

The NFL plans to use the Monday night showcase to highlight the national hurricane relief effort, Commissioner Paul Tagliabue said in a statement.

The Saints' game will kick off at 6:30 p.m and be televised nationally on ABC until 8 p.m.

At that time, the regularly scheduled Monday night game between the Dallas Cowboys and Washington Redskins will be shown on ABC, while the remainder of the Saints-Giants game will be switched to ESPN - except in New York, Louisiana and selected hurricane-affected areas, where the Saints game will continue on ABC.

Fund-raising efforts will be intertwined with the broadcasts of both games.

"We appreciate the leadership of ABC and ESPN in helping us turn this particular Monday night into far more than a prime-time football doubleheader, making it part of the overall Gulf Coast relief effort," Tagliabue said in the statement. "The New Orleans Saints know the importance of rising to help meet the Gulf Coast's extraordinary challenges, and we salute them, too."

The Saints were neither excited nor openly critical about the league's decision to play their "home game" in New York's home stadium. Coach Jim Haslett offhandedly remarked that the commissioner "put us behind the 8-ball." By the end of this month, the team will have traveled to Oakland, Carolina, New York and Minnesota in consecutive weeks, while also moving its entire operation to San Antonio.

"But everything that's gone on with the city and with this football team the last two weeks, that's probably one of the least of our concerns is playing on the road an extra game," Haslett said. "We actually play pretty good on the road."

Information on ticket sales is expected to be announced by the Giants in the near future.

The Saints will still get the home team's share of the revenue from the game, though some exact details will still be worked out in the financial department. Both teams plan to donate a share of the revenue to relief efforts.

Our sympathies to all of those who have suffered so much in this great catastrophe. The City of New Orleans and all affected areas will recover. We will be there to assist all of our clients and friends.

Correro Fishman Haygood
Phelps Walmsley and Casteix LLP

NOTE: We have temporarily relocated our offices to Baton Rouge. We can be reached at our normal e-mail addresses or through our website, www.cfhlaw.com, or by telephone at (225) 214-7162. Our temporary office is located at Suite 200C, 7389 Florida Blvd., Baton Rouge, Louisiana 70806.

Benson has responsibility to N.O.

By John DeShazier
Sports Columnist

Timing is everything.

Apparently Tom Benson is lousy at it. And NFL commissioner Paul Tagliabue should tell him so, and strongly suggest to the owner of the Saints that he has a responsibility in the wake of Hurricane Katrina.

Tell him his job is to lift the spirits of New Orleanians the best way he can. Tell him he'll get the new stadium he covets and a Super Bowl, but the only words that should originate from his mouth are ones lamenting the loss of life and property. Tell him his franchise will support the only city it ever has called home, that it's the least he can do for a ravaged region which, during times of feast and famine, faithfully has supported his team.

Instead, you hear that Benson might be interested in making the Saints a Texas team.

If true, under ordinary conditions that would be a slight. If true, under current conditions, it's about as callous an idea that ever has been thought, let alone mouthed.

If true, what it means is this: At a time when New Orleans needs each one of its able-bodied and deep-pocketed citizens to stand and show the world they believe in the city, and will do their part in resuscitating the economy that helped make them prosperous, Benson might be more interested in walking away.

Benson never has been bashful about using San Antonio as a relocation prospect, which gives the rumor credence. And, most rumors have some foundation in fact. They might morph a little during the retelling, but there is truth lying somewhere amid the shifting.

The best thing Benson could have done was to say early on that he had New Orleans' back. Instead, he left the door open to rumors.

Yes, Benson is a businessman. He's not running a charity. He is, and should be, concerned about whether the people will return, whether an economy that wasn't rosy to begin with just grew a lot more thorns than petals.

But to suggest he owes nothing to a region that has shown its commitment hundreds of times over through its willingness to buy tickets and attend games even during times the only reason to attend was to commiserate with fellow gluttons for bad football, would be ludicrous.

New Orleans and the Gulf Coast have been too good to him to have this kind of news rear its head while they tread water for survival, literally and figuratively.

Instead, he publicly should be expressing compassion for all that has been destroyed, and looking to a brighter future, one that'll include the new facility he has lobbied so

See DESHAZIER, page A-x

IMPORTANT NOTICE TO
ST. PAUL TRAVELERS CUSTOMERS

WE'RE HERE TO HELP.

If you have suffered a loss, please call us as soon as your family and property are safe from further harm.

Our claim services representatives are standing by 24 hours a day, 7 days a week to take your claim.

For Travelers Home & Auto claims, please call
800.CLAIM33
(800.252.4633)

For Travelers Flood claims, please call
800.356.6663

For St. Paul Travelers and Travelers Business claims, please call 800.238.6225

For St. Paul Business claims, please call
800.STPAUL1
(800.787.2851)

St. Paul Travelers employees affected or displaced by the hurricane, please call the Employee Service Unit at 800.441.4378

TRAVELERS
travelers.com
The Travelers Indemnity Company
and its property casualty affiliates
One Tower Square, Hartford, CT 06183

ST PAUL TRAVELERS
stpaultravelers.com
St. Paul Fire and Marine Insurance Company
and its property casualty affiliates
385 Washington St., Saint Paul, MN 55102

Tigers set to play 'home' opener at Arizona State

Logistical concerns cause game to be moved to Tempe

By William Kalec
Staff writer

BATON ROUGE - Les Miles will make his technical "home" opener, two times zones and a different kind of heat away from Tiger Stadium.

After insisting all week that LSU would do whatever it could to keep this Saturday's contest against No. 20 Arizona State in the familiar muggy confines of Tiger Stadium, logistical concerns created by Hurricane Katrina forced the game to be moved to Sun Devil Stadium in Tempe, Ariz.

For the past week, several LSU athletic facilities have been transformed into medical centers and shelters for evacuees of Hurricane Katrina. That coupled with the lack of hotel space for Arizona State players, game and conference official, plus the ESPN crew, were factors in the switch.

Original tickets issued for the Arizona State-LSU game at Tiger Stadium are valid for exchange and admittance at Sun Devil Stadium on Saturday, but those wishing to do so must contact the LSU ticket office -- (225) 578-2184 or (800) 960-8587 -- by 2 p.m. Wednesday.

After Arizona State covers the cost of hosting the event, proceeds will be donated to relief effort funds. Both schools signed a home-and-home agreement for 2005 and 2008. Though this year's game is being moved, the Sun Devils will keep their 2008 home game but are committed to make a return trip to Baton Rouge in the future, LSU athletic director Skip Bertman said.

"No athletic director would want his football coach to open up on the road with a top 20 team and lose home-field advantage," Bertman said. "Chancellor (Sean O'Keefe) and a group of athletic department people worked for a long time trying to solve every problem. But in the end there were some concerns that we just couldn't control."

AP PHOTO

LSU linebacker Ali Highsmith, right, signs an LSU schedule poster for Rikki Bell, 11, of New Orleans, left, at the River Center in Baton Rouge on Wednesday. LSU has moved Saturday's game against Arizona State from Tiger Stadium to Tempe, Ariz.

LSU is scheduled to begin its actual home campaign Sept. 24 against No. 3 Tennessee -- the latest Tiger Stadium opener since 1977 -- but that is contingent on a steady, positive progression of events across North Stadium Drive.

"It's hard to tell," O'Keefe said, about the Tennessee game. "At this juncture though, all the signs, all the trends are moving in the right direction."

Alternative regional sites were considered for this Saturday's contest.

"We thought of everything," Bertman said. "From going to the University of Mississippi, which is vacant this Saturday, to Shreveport. But there were reasons why we decided on this trip and they are pretty solid. I don't think anything would have been better than this trip."

Moving the game, however, takes away a major payday from LSU, which like most Division I-A athletic programs relies on football profits to support its non-revenue sports. LSU is still in discussions with several Sun Belt Conference schools to maneuver dates so that it may host North Texas on Oct. 29 after last week's postponement.

"There is no question the budget works out to seven games," Bertman said. "There is no question about it."

Bertman said it's possible the athletic department could make up some of that difference should Tiger Stadium host some or all of the New Orleans Saints' seven home games, but O'Keefe earlier stated that the franchise only made contact with the university Sunday and that talks are preliminary.

After a week of uncertainty, several LSU players expressed relief in final knowing the site of their opener.

"Every time I watched -- at least an SEC game -- I'm like, 'WE'RE SUPPOSED TO BE PLAYING THIS WEEKEND!" LSU wide receiver Skyler Green said. "So it's going to be an exciting game. I think if we go and have a lot of our fan base, it will be a good game."

Tiger Stadium's renovation to be ready for Vols

By Jim Kleinpeter
Staff writer

BATON ROUGE - LSU officials are confident that all seats in Tiger Stadium's renovated west upper deck will be available for the Sept. 24 game with Tennessee despite construction delays caused by Hurricane Katrina.

The $60 million project suffered only "minimal damage" during the hurricane but the aftermath has drawn away workers from that project and the football operations center. But Herb Vincent, LSU's associate athletic director for internal affairs, said every ticket holder should have a seat when the No. 3 Vols come to town, unless the game is moved.

"The impact affected us not physically but more from a work force standpoint," Vincent said. "We have all the confidence in the world that by Sept. 24 we'll have a full house."

That was the date originally targeted during preseason for the new capacity in the 81-year-old stadium, somewhere between 92,300 and 92,400. About 1,500-2,000 seats were not going to be ready for the first two scheduled games against North Texas and Arizona State. But the North Texas game is in the process of being rescheduled and the Arizona State game has been moved to the Fiesta Bowl in Tempe, Ariz., because LSU is being used as an evacuation site for medical refugees from New Orleans. The possibility exists that the Tennessee game could be moved but that game is still more than two weeks away.

Gen. Ron Richard, CEO of Tiger Athletic Foundation, which is financing the project, said he was pleased that the stadium came through the hurricane with only some minor water damage. The day after Katrina struck, the massive cranes working on the project were back up and some of the Yates Construction workers and subcontractor crews returned to work, but many of the workers were from areas hit hardest by the storm.

"Worked slowed down and it was justifiable," Richard said. "A lot of the subcontractors and people who work for Yates live in Mississippi, Slidell, New Orleans, Houma and Thibodaux.

"There's been a general slowdown because some of these companies are no longer in existence and some of these people are still searching for loved ones. Some have returned and some have not. The good news is we've seen an increase in the work force."

Richard said the pace has picked up and that more than half of the work force is back on the job. The final section of treads and risers has been fitted into place so from the outside the deck looks complete. Work is continuing on the club level and press box. Large sheets of visqueen seal the back of the club section where next season large glass windows will provide club members with a panoramic view to the west and the Mississippi River.

"The upper deck looks good," Richard said. "The upper concourse has some work to be done in the restroom and concession area, and that's all done by subcontractors. The plumbing, the electrical, the sprinkler system. . . The complexity of this is huge and to shut it down and build it up again is difficult."

Richard said one of the restrooms in the upper concourse still needs some work.

School officials have said all along that work would continue through the season and that the project probably would not be complete until after the season. The club section will be without carpet and other finishing touches.

"We're setting up a time schedule and relooking at it from tomorrow all the way up to the Tennessee game," he said.

Work on the football operations center has also been delayed by the loss of workers, but the first floor is functional.

The team has moved into the locker room and the training room and weight room are up and running. Before the hurricane, coaches were scheduled to move into their second floor offices Friday, but Vincent said he wasn't sure if that was still scheduled to happen.

OUR HEART GOES OUT TO THOSE AFFECTED
BY HURRICANE KATRINA.

Policyholders of Encompass Insurance who have been affected by the recent hurricane, please call 1-800-588-7400 to report your loss,
24 hours a day, 7 days a week.

The people of Encompass would like to let you know that our thoughts are with you.

The Encompass Catastrophe Team is available for claims handling, information or other assistance at 1-800-340-3016. For more information, you can also call or visit your independent agent.

Rest assured, Encompass stands ready to help you during this difficult time.

ENCOMPASS®
INSURANCE

River schools try to fix schedules

By Lori Lyons
River Parishes bureau

Just west of the areas hardest hit by Hurricane Katrina, life slowly is returning to normal.

Electricity is back on, phones are starting to ring, displaced people are returning to their homes. But the surest sign that life goes on is the fact that high school football will be played in the River Parishes on Friday.

St. James will host Terrebonne at 7 p.m. Friday, and Lutcher will play at St. Amant at the same time.

"We know it's not the most important thing," St. James coach Rick Gaille said. "But it does give some sign that normalcy for everybody could be right around the corner."

As of Monday, no other River Parish school had scheduled games for Friday night. Riverside coach Mickey Roussel was trying. Lutcher, East St. John and Riverside practiced. "We tried," Lutcher coach Tim Detillier said.

Throughout the River Parishes, officials were trying to get life back to normal and school administrators were working to reopen schools.

Meanwhile, coaches were trying to salvage their seasons. Most were busy working the phones, trying to find opponents for dates that once were set aside for schools from Jefferson and Orleans parishes, which likely will not have seasons.

"I know what we've got this week," Detillier said. "We'll talk about next week next week."

St. James Parish schools were to reopen today. St. Charles parish teachers are to report Monday and plans are to reopen schools sometime next week. St. John the Baptist Parish also has set a tentative start date of Sept. 12.

Detillier held a brief practice Monday with approximately 80 percent of his players in attendance. Roussel said he was missing six players.

"Some kids still don't have power," Detillier said. "Some just didn't know. We're just trying to return to some normalcy."

At East St. John, a telephone chain was put together Sunday night and a team meeting was held Monday morning.

"We had a couple missing," Coach Larry Dauterive said. Among them was 6-foot-6, 315-pound offensive lineman Jamarr Thompson, who played Friday night for Evangel Christian Academy in Shreveport.

"They evacuated and were told that a church in Shreveport was taking in people," Dauterive said. "It happened to be Evangel's church. But he came to my house last night. He's back."

As of Monday, Dauterive had five games on his schedule, including one against St. James next week. He also plans to play East Ascension in Gonzales and Assumption. He also can play West Monroe in Monroe if Assumption will agree to move its game back a week. But Dauterive has no idea about the status of West Jefferson and Ehret, both located on the West Bank of Jefferson Parish.

"We just want to get on the field," Dauterive said. "We're going to have practice every day at 9 a.m. We need to get our stamina back."

West St. John coach Laury Dupont also wants to get his team back to work. But the facility is still without power after the school's transformer blew during the storm. Dupont was planning to make a trip from his home in Thibodaux to Edgard today to assess damage to his facilities, and he was meeting with his coaching staff today following a meeting of parish principals and supervisors.

"We're going to try to play," Dupont said. "I would like to try to play. I can't say we will. But if there is any way possible, we will."

The good news for the Rams is that their schedule remains largely intact. All of their district opponents are located to the northwest and escaped Katrina's wrath.

Hahnville coach Lou Valdin was scrambling Monday morning, his first day back in the office since the storm. He scheduled a meeting for 4 p.m. Thursday and, in the meantime, attempted to fill his schedule.

"I know I've got three games - East St. John, Destrehan and Assumption," Valdin said. "I don't know what the deal is with West Jefferson or Ehret. I'm scrambling for games. But a lot of teams have already rescheduled."

"The Hahnville Tigers will have a season," Valdin said. "We may be road warriors, but we'll be playing. Right now, it's not about winning and losing. It's about playing."

SPORTS

Saints VP: team should stay

Fielkow source of off-the-record comments

By Mike Triplett
Staff writer

"I was further concerned during our meeting that a question existed as to whether refunds would be provided to season ticket holders unable to attend games this season. This matter has since been clarified and we will announce shortly our club's refund policy which will unequivocally provide our fans the ability to receive refunds if unable to attend games."

ARNOLD FIELKOW, the Saints' executive vice president

SAN ANTONIO - Arnold Fielkow, the Saints' executive vice president of administration, issued a statement to the Times-Picayune on Monday to explain the intent of off-the-record statements he made to the newspaper, as well as a handful of other media outlets on Saturday.

Fielkow's statements, which he said were made with "much personal frustration" following a meeting with the team's top executives earlier that day, expressed concern that team owner Tom Benson was leaning toward playing all of the Saints' home games in San Antonio this year.

Fielkow, who feels strongly that the team should play as many games as logistically possible in Baton Rouge, said that he now believes the organization will indeed attempt to play several games at LSU's Tiger Stadium, if possible.

He also said that it is the "collective hope of our organization that Saints will return to New Orleans as soon as possible."

Fielkow said it was personally important to him to explain his position and hopefully put this issue behind him and the team, so they can move forward.

"I personally have just a great passion for our community and would like Saints football to be there for a long time," said Fielkow, who is in charge of the team's business operations, a consuming task that could be spread between Louisiana and San Antonio, which the Saints have made their base of operations for the rest of the season.

Most of Fielkow's statements Saturday were either attributed to a "source inside the organization" or used as background information. He was specifically identified by Sen. Mike Michot, R-Lafayette, as having told the senator that Benson was leaning strongly toward moving the Saints permanently toward San Antonio.

Fielkow was also identified by name Monday on the website profootballtalk.com as having made similar statements to WDSU-TV's Fletcher Mackel.

Fielkow was cited as the source who told the TV station that the Saints did not intend to offer refunds to season-ticket holders this year. However, Fielkow said Monday that the ticket matter has "since been clarified" and that fans will in fact "unequivocally" be able to receive refunds if unable to attend games.

After reports about Fielkow's statements surfaced on Saturday, Saints general manager Mickey Loomis stated a strong commitment to New Orleans and Louisiana during a Sunday evening press conference, saying a potential permanent move is "the farthest thing from any of our minds."

"We are still the New Orleans Saints," Loomis said, "and our commitment to our city is stronger than ever."

Following is Fielkow's statement, in its entirety:

"There have been several published reports regarding some statements attributed to me last week involving the Saints' move of its training base to San Antonio. I would like to clarify these statements and provide some background to them.

"These statements were made last Friday with much personal frustration following an organizational meeting held earlier that day. I participated in this meeting via conference call and left the meeting concerned that some wrong decisions may be made. The last week has been a trying time for our community, including everyone within the Saints organization, as we watched the terrible catastrophe which had befallen a city which my family and I love very much. I know how much the New Orleans Saints mean to our great city, state and region and it was important that right decisions be made in this time of crisis.

"During our meeting, I expressed a strong opinion that Saints home games, following the Giants game, should if logistically possible be played in Baton Rouge. This position was based upon the fact that it would be an uplifting item for our fan base, similar in many ways to how the New York Yankees became a sense of pride for our whole country after 9/11. We are working with the league and hope to announce shortly the location of our 2005 home games beginning in October. We are reviewing all options in conjunction with the league and are hopeful of playing several games in Baton Rouge this season. Further announcements on this subject will be forthcoming.

"It is the collective hope of our organization that Saints football will return to New Orleans as soon as possible and, as expressed by GM Mickey Loomis yesterday, that the Saints, both this year and in the future, can play a leading role in the rebuilding and revitalization of our community. This hope is shared by everyone within the Saints organization, including ownership, players, coaches and staff.

"I was further concerned during our meeting that a question existed as to whether refunds would be provided to season ticket holders unable to attend games this season. This matter has since been clarified and we will announce shortly our club's refund policy which will unequivocally provide our fans the ability to receive refunds if unable to attend games.

"The Saints will be playing this season for our great fans in New Orleans, the state of Louisiana and the entire Gulf South region. We hope the club's success will spread some joy to a fan base which has been devastated over the past week.

"These were the reference points for my statements last week. We all look forward to the start of a successful season this Sunday as we have much work to do over the next several months. We look forward to making 2005 a special season for all of our great fans."

Benson wrong for considering move

DESHAZIER, from page 14

hard for and, from Tagliabue, the promise of a Super Bowl to aid in the recovery.

New stadium? Yes, because while there may be restoration in store for the Superdome, there simply is a stench and stigma attached to her now that cannot be washed away.

The horror stories emanating from citizens that were housed inside the grand facility during Katrina, when it was used as a shelter, are the kind that will waft around inside the building forever. A patched roof and paint job won't do when, according to reports, rape and murder and mistreatment was a common, toxic mix.

But it reeks that in the shadow of catastrophe and atrocity, the possibility that one of the few pleasantries that still can be grasped might pack and go even if it is being discussed.

This isn't at all the time for that.

But for Benson, timing rarely seems to be a strong point.

Hornets in search of place to play their 'home' games

President: Team committed to N.O. long term

By Jimmy Smith
Staff writer

"We have a community to help rebuild, an identity there, and a city that appreciates us. The feeling is mutual. We're fortunate to have a hometown that cares about us. "

PAUL MOTT, Hornets president

BATON ROUGE - Two members of the Hornets' front office will make their way to Baton Rouge from Houston today to begin scouting possible locations for the team to play "home" games this season.

Team president Paul Mott said Sam Russo and Steve Martin will begin discussions with LSU and local officials about the availability of the Pete Maravich Assembly Center or the River Center. The River Center is managed by SMG, the group that also runs New Orleans Arena, the club's permanent home.

In the face of uncertainty regarding the future of the city's other professional franchise, the Saints, Mott reassured citizens Monday that Hornets owner George Shinn's primary objective is to stay and play in New Orleans for the long term.

"George has made that very clear," Mott said. "We have a community to help rebuild, an identity there, and a city that appreciates us. The feeling is mutual. We're fortunate to have a hometown that cares about us.

"If we can stay in the state this season, and help the community get back on its feet, it works all the way around."

There have been rumors of a potential Hornets relocation to Las Vegas, perhaps permanently, though that doesn't make financial sense for the NBA. The league eventually could place an expansion franchise there with a conservative price tag of a half-billion dollars, which would be split equally among the 30 NBA owners.

Las Vegas will host the 2007 NBA All-Star Game.

Officials in Oklahoma City and San Diego also have offered arenas to the Hornets, displaced for at least the beginning of the regular season by damage from Hurricane Katrina.

Mott said the Hornets also will look into the possibilities of playing games in Bossier City, where the team has an exhibition game scheduled Oct. 25 against the Miami Heat, or the Cajundome in Lafayette, where the team played an exhibition game last year.

Monroe or Hammond are other in-state possibilities.

"I can't speak for the league," Mott said Monday from Houston, where he has joined marketing director Tim McDougal and others working out of temporary quarters at the Houston Rockets' Toyota Center. "But my guess is the league wants us to find a suitable, temporary solution that allows us to properly conduct the NBA season and do it in a way that doesn't kill our business. They, as we, would like to re-establish business in New Orleans when we get back on our feet."

Mott said no direct contact has been made with LSU officials, but expects Russo, the team's business manager, and Martin will do that after they arrive.

"We're hoping that in a relatively short time, the picture will become clearer," Mott said. "Perhaps by next week."

Tulane, La. Tech work on logistics

Green Wave will practice in Ruston

By Benjamin Hochman and Fred Robinson
Staff writers

DALLAS - The Tulane football team will practice and attend classes at Louisiana Tech this semester, a source close to the situation has confirmed.

The rest of Tulane's athletic teams will be split onto four other campuses - Rice, Southern Methodist, Texas Tech and Texas A&M, where the men's basketball team will call home.

The Tulane athletic headquarters - including the office of Athletic Director Rick Dickson - will be in Dallas, where the football team is currently practicing at SMU.

Tulane will not hold classes this semester, because of damage done by Hurricane Katrina.

On Monday afternoon, Tulane coach Chris Scelfo, Associate Athletic Director Scott Sidwell and Director of Football Operations Dennis Polian visited the Louisiana Tech.

The football team will play its home games, however, down the road in Shreveport at the Independence Bowl.

"That would be logical," Dickson said on Monday.

"We're offering (Tulane) the stadium free of charge," said Ken Antee, the chief administration officer for the city of Shreveport. "We'll put the games on for them from an operating standpoint - ticketing, security, EMS. We can seat 50,000, and have the capability to add another 2,000 seats. The good thing is you can get 25,000 in there and it looks full."

Louisiana Tech's Joe Aillet Stadum is only available for three of Tulane's six scheduled "home" games. The Independence Bowl does not have any college games scheduled during this season.

Antee is confident in the facility, saying, "We spent $35 million renovating Independence Bowl Stadium that was completed four years ago. Everything from the ground up; everything except the seats is brand new."

Antee said to "put on" a game in the past cost the city $15,000 to $20,000.

"But we'll get it back through the concessions contract," he said. "We're not looking at making money off of this, we want to help in any way we can."

Louisiana Tech has not begun classes. The school is on the quarter system and classes begin Sept. 12.

And, the school has an approximately 600-bed dormitory available.

The Green Wave's first game was postponed, so the next game on its schedule in Sept. 17, when it hosts Mississippi State. Dickson said playing the game in Starkville, Miss., is "a last consideration."

LSU's Miles to announce Starting QB Thursday

By William Kalec
Staff writer

BATON ROUGE - Apparently, Les Miles is a Thursday kinda guy.

With most state media outlets and a sprinkling of national correspondents present at the coach's inaugural weekly Monday press conference, Miles deferred another three days on announcing whether JaMarcus Russell or Matt Flynn will be LSU's starting quarterback. When asked whether he already knew which player would line up under center Saturday night in Tempe, Ariz., Miles let out a coy smile but refused to reveal his hand.

Other position battles seem to be temporarily solved. Redshirt freshman Brett Helms beat out incumbent Will Arnold at left guard, according to an updated depth chart. Sophomore Chevis Jackson held off competition from senior Mario Stevenson and will start at right cornerback.

FOND MEMORIES: While disappointed not to be in Tiger Stadium this weekend, senior receiver Skyler Green wasn't too upset over the switch out to Arizona. Back in 2003, Green recorded his first collegiate punt return for a touchdown in Tucson during a blowout of Arizona. After the return, Green high-fived a couple of Tiger fans leaning over the rail of their end zone seats and was penalized 15 yards for unsportsmanlike conduct.

"I won't be high-fiving anybody," Green joked.

HEALTH UPDATE: Miles said linebacker E.J. Kuale, who injured his ankle in mid-August, probably will not be available against the Sun Devils. Curtis product Jason Spadoni will start in his place.

Game on: SLU to host Alcorn State

All games but Tulane on as planned

By Tammy Nunez
Staff writer

"About 15 of my players lost homes. They've been through so much in the last week."

DENNIS ROLAND, Southeastern Louisiana coach

Though many parts of the north shore are projected to be without electricity Saturday night, there will be a tower of lights shining down on Strawberry Stadium at Southeastern Louisiana University. The Lions' football game against Alcorn State will be played as scheduled at 6:30 p.m., according to Coach Dennis Roland.

There are details to be worked out, such as lining up security and gate officials, but Roland said Monday that the university is ready to host the game and should proceed with the remainder of its schedule as planned, with the exception of the Tulane game. The Tulane game was scheduled for Oct. 1 at Tad Gormley Stadium, but the location likely will change, Roland said.

But for now, the season is on, whether the team is ready or not. The Lions missed a week of practice and its season opener Sept. 1 against Jacksonville. The team still is reeling from the emotional fallout from Hurricane Katrina.

"About 15 of my players lost homes," Roland said. "They've been through so much in the last week."

It has been a harrowing week. Roland, who is undergoing chemotherapy for non-Hodgkin's lymphoma, tried to get treatment, but he and the full waiting room of patients were turned away from their chemo because of a lack of medication. He will try again Wednesday.

"I feel bad for the people who were scheduled to get their treatment last week," Roland said.

Keithshone Dantzler, a freshman linebacker from Brother Martin, almost didn't make it back to campus. Dantzler traveled to New Orleans before the storm hit to check on relatives and lost contact with his ride back to Hammond - so he was left behind. Later in the week, he had to be pulled from a rooftop by a rescue helicopter and waded through waist-deep flood waters to reach a hospital.

"I was just amazed he made it back," teammate Hutch Gonzales said.

Gonzales, a senior receiver, huddled in a church an eighth of a mile down the road from his house in Covington as Katrina battered his home -within viewing distance from the church's front doors. His house faired OK, but teammate Craig Louque returned to his home to find a bare frame.

Still, about 95 percent of the team returned for Sunday's 4 p.m. meeting. The school regained electricity Thursday and began preparations for hosting Alcorn State.

"If there was something our team could go out and do and help people, we'd do it, but there's nothing else we can do. We know there are a lot of people hurting," Roland said. "But maybe if we can play, we can give people a chance to have a distraction and maybe give them some pride."

Gonzales said missing another game would have severely set back the new faces in the program.

"I think a lot of people (on our team) were thinking about the Alcorn State game," Gonzales said. "Being able to have it is really important because we have some players who have very little experience, especially Trey (Willie, the new quarterback). He's been in games before, but he hasn't been able to really pick up four quarters of the speed of the (game)."

Then there is a deeper benefit to playing Saturday, Gonzales said. Football has become an escape.

"I'm ecstatic," Gonzales said. "I was miserable not being able to play last week. □ (But Sunday) we heard those pads popping and it was like normal football again."

PGA's Gibson dishes relief

By Brian Allee-Walsh
Staff writer

Local PGA Tour golfer Kelly Gibson is trying to help out in the relief effort.

He joined the Coast Guard at relief kitchens in Metairie and visited the site of the breach in the 17th Street Canal that spilled water from Lake Pontchartrain into Orleans Parish.

Unable to use a cell phone, Gibson conveyed this message via text message.

"I am at a Coast Guard area where the canal broke □ It just rained all over my stuff □ I slept in a car where it was 90 degrees at 2 a.m. □ I met the commander of the Coast Guard □ We are being guarded by (soldiers) carrying M-16 rifles □ We're trying to feed 300 workers and military personnel by the end of the day □ Please help me raise awareness for the relief fund. It is beyond belief the destruction over here.''

Gibson's last text message arrived at 5:56 a.m. Monday.

SPORTS

"This week has been hell for me. I tried to stay focused on football, but outside of practice, my head was everywhere."

JOHN DOUCETTE, University of Memphis senior tight end

AP PHOTO

Memphis' DeAngel Williams fumbles the ball Monday as he is tackled by Mississippi's Kelvin Robinson, right, in Memphis.

Doucette a winner in Memphis

Tight end's family arrives in town escaping catastrophe

By Ted Lewis
Staff Writer

MEMPHIS, TENN. - University of Memphis senior tight end John Doucette didn't cry at the end of the Tigers' tough 10-6 season-opening loss to Ole Miss in Memphis on Monday.

He'd already shed his tears Saturday. Tears of joy.

That was when Doucette's 5-year-old nephew, Hasharon Lindzey, called out, "Hey, Big John," letting him know that his family had completed a harrowing journey from the rooftop of their home in New Orleans, to two days of horror in the Superdome, to a late-night escape, and finally to Memphis where they arrived with no money and only some donated clothes.

"That's when I finally broke down," the St. Augustine graduate said. "It lifted my heart right out of my body."

Doucette's parents and five others, including his pregnant sister Yoshe Mitchell, rode out Hurricane Katrina on Monday night in their home near Elysian Fields, but when the water started rising Tuesday, they had to be rescued, only to be taken to the Superdome.

"My mama said all they could do was get in a corner and try to protect the women and children," Doucette said. "It was like living in the cave days."

Somehow, Doucette's father got his family out Thursday night, found a car and made it to Crowley, where other family members had taken shelter.

They decided to join Doucette in Memphis the next day.

"This week has been hell for me," said Doucette, who had one catch for 11 yards Monday. "I tried to stay focused on football, but outside of practice, my head was everywhere.

"People were calling me telling me everything was going to be OK. But they weren't the ones I wanted to hear from."

Doucette's family, now living with him, was at the game Monday.

Today, they try to sort out what to do with their lives - relocate to Memphis or wait until they can return to New Orleans.

"We don't know what the house is like or anything," Doucette said. "I think they're going to stay here with me."

Doucette, along with two other New Orleanians, noseguard LaVale Washington from St. Augustine and linebacker Mike Snyder from John Curtis, served as Memphis' captains Monday.

"That meant a lot to us," Doucette said. "This was a special day for me.

"The only thing that would have made it better would have been winning."

Wilson's World

Across the field Monday, Ole Miss running backs coach Frank Wilson was celebrating, and not just the fact that he had been on the winning side his first game as a college coach.

Fifty-six members of Wilson's family made their way last week to Oxford, Miss., where they are settling in until they can return to New Orleans.

Some of them were in attendance Monday,

"There's light at the end of the tunnel," said Wilson, the former O. Perry Walker coach and athletic director for Orleans Parish public schools before he joined first-year coach Ed Oregeron's staff in January. "After all we had been through this week, it was great to lose myself in the moment."

Wilson credited the Ole Miss family for taking in many of his family members, some in houses, some in apartments. About half of them are children who will begin school next week.

"It was a lot of work getting them settled and then getting ready for the game," said Wilson, who lost his home in Slidell in the hurricane. "But when I was at work, I just concentrated on that and tried to forget everything else.

"It was so disheartening to see things at home. But I just prayed and went on working."

Wilson wasn't the only Ole Miss coach whose family evacuated to Oxford. Seven members of Orgeron's family spent the week in Oxford before purchasing generators Saturday and returning to Lafourche Parish.

Driving to the Heisman

For much of the summer Jennifer Rodrigues has been the toast of the sports information directors' world.

Her NASCAR-themed promotional campaign for Memphis running back DeAngelo Williams has gained favorable attention from many major media outlets.

But this week, Rodrigues, a Slidell native, had to split her concentration between getting things ready for the ESPN-televised game and worrying about the whereabouts of her grandparents, Milton and Ruth Chauffe. They were last heard from Tuesday from their home in Jefferson near Ochsner Hospital.

"It's been a hard week," Rodrigues said. "Until Wednesday we didn't know about my other grandfather and my uncle and aunt.

"Finding out about them took a load off."

Rodrigues' parents, Milton and Laura Chauffe, evacuated to Memphis before Katrina hit. They returned to Slidell on Friday to find their home in Kingspoint, the one in which Rodrigues grew up, had taken at least five feet of water.

"Everything has been so stressful," Rodrigues said. "I focused on my job, but sometimes it hit me that this was just a football game and there were people I loved that I couldn't find."

After the game, Rodrigues said she was as drained as she had been in her life.

"I'm done for today though," she said. "Now I can concentrate on my family."

Cheering to keep from crying

For the first time in six years, Ronnie and Barbara Wimprine of River Ridge weren't planning on attending a Memphis home game, son Danny having graduated after last season with a host of school passing records.

But Hurricane Katrina has had a way of changing things for just about everyone.

The Wimprines have spent the past week there after being diverted from Calgary, Alberta, where Danny, who prepped at John Curtis is now in the Canadian Football League.

So Monday, they were tailgating with hordes of other Tigers fans, both sporting booster shirts given to them because they wanted to be appropriately dressed.

"If we couldn't go home, there's no better place to go to than here," Ronnie Wimprine said. "We've made so many friends here over the years because of Danny.

"Coming out here today helps us forget things for a while, although you do get tired telling your story over and over again."

For Barbara Wimprine, it has been an emotionally wrenching week, even though they know their home is relatively unscathed.

"I've had my moments," she said. "I start thinking about friends we know who have lost so much, and it's all boo-boo.

"The other day I ran into some people from Slidell in the grocery store, and we all just started crying together."

Making the time more bearable for Barbara Wimprine is that Memphis is a second home. Daughter Joanne lives here.

"I can't count the people we've heard from this week," she said. "You can't walk five feet out here today without somebody wanting to hug you.

"It's wonderful to know you have friends."

The Wimprines won't stay in Memphis for long.

Ronnie is the owner of Elmwood Construction, which specializes in insurance repair, and he has spent the past week gathering generators, building supplies, extra gas and a truck to take to take back to Jefferson Parish on Thursday so that he can get his crew of 16 to work as soon as possible. Barbara Wimprine is his bookkeeper.

"First we've got to help everyone get their homes squared away," he said. "And then as soon as the power is up, we'll start on jobs.

"This is what I do for a living. The policemen, firemen, medical people and so forth have their jobs to do and this is mine."

Home away from home

Conference USA commissioner Britton Banowsky spent much of last week helping Tulane and Southern Miss make living arrangements in Dallas and Memphis.

"It was wonderful to be able to make a difference by lending a helping hand," he said. "We were able to rally support for Tulane and Southern Miss and we felt like it was really appreciated.

AP PHOTO

Memphis' Maurice Avery, right, and Mississippi defenders Trumanine McBride, bottom, and Jamarca Snaford fight for a pass during the second quarter Monday at Liberty Bowl Stadium in Memphis.

"It was really phenomenal to see it happen. Everybody offered to do whatever they could do."

Banowsky admitted there were times when it seemed like keeping the Tulane football season alive, plus the Green Wave's other fall sports, seemed almost impossible.

"There were moments when it didn't look like we could go forward," he said. "But the deeper we got into it, it became clearer that it was more important to go forward because it represented so many of the things we need right now.

"The Tulane student-athletes are remarkable."

Moving on

Other than the three New Orleanians serving as captains and a moment of silence before the game, there was no recognition of Katrina's effects on the teams and in Ole Miss' case the affected state.

That was quite a contrast from the scene in Starkville, Miss., on Saturday, where Mississippi State and Murray State teams walked onto the field before the game and lined up on sidelines before Bulldogs athletic director Larry Templeton and Coach Sylvester Croom addressed the crowd via a taped message on the scoreboard video screen.

Also, while the Tulane players attended last Saturday's SMU-Baylor game in Dallas, the Southern Miss players and staff, who are staying in Memphis through this week, opted to watch the game from a hotel ballroom.

"They've been going though two-a-days again," Banowsky said.

"Their coaches decided they didn't need to be out baking in the sun any more than necessary."

MUDDY MISSISSIPPI

Anna Smith looks behind at what's left of her family's Vista Drive home in Pass Christian on Monday while sitting near a marking that shows the rubble has been searched for bodies. Smith said she plans to go back to school at Milsaps College in Jackson, which, she said, will be filled with many transfer students from Tulane University. TOP, A mud-caked flag dries in the sun Monday outside the remains of a Pass Christian, Miss., school that was leveled by the storm.

Katrina dealt some of its most vicious blows along the Mississippi Gulf Coast, leaving those who survived the storm to marvel at its terrible power while trying to pick up the pieces of their shattered lives. Photos by Michael DeMocker, Staff photographer

An overturned car, a tattered flag and a wheelchair from a nearby nursing home are scattered along Second Street in Pass Christian on Monday.

Tiffany Jones, 8, a native of Morocco who was adopted as an infant, allows herself a small smile after finding an angel figurine among the ruins of her family's West Beach Boulevard in Pass Christian on Monday. The house, the only real home she has ever known, was obliterated.

A boat sits wedged in tree outside a Biloxi, Miss., home on Pearl Street on Monday.

KATRINA: THE STORM WE'VE ALWAYS FEARED

The Times-Picayune

50 CENTS 169TH YEAR NO. 230 WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 7, 2005 HURRICANE EDITION

DISEASE, FIRE THREATEN CITY

Toxic floodwaters latest danger; remaining residents told to leave

STAFF PHOTO BY TED JACKSON

NEW ORLEANS: Clinging to his puppy, this resident of a burning home on Columbia Street in New Orleans walks away as smoke and water fill the air on Tuesday. See story, A-9.

St. Bernard, N.O. schools to close for rest of year

La. schools chief offers grim outlook

Laura Maggi
Staff Writer

BATON ROUGE -- Students likely will not be able to attend public school in Orleans or St. Bernard parishes for the rest of the school year, state schools Superintendent Cecil Picard said Tuesday.

Other school districts, such as those in Jefferson, Plaquemines, St. Charles and St. Tammany parishes and the city of Bogalusa, can be up and running in either weeks or months, he said at a briefing at the state Office of Emergency Preparedness.

About 135,000 public school students in four parishes - Orleans, Jefferson, St. Bernard and Plaquemines - were displaced by Hurricane Katrina, along with 52,000 private and parochial school students, according to the state Department of Education. These students will be required to attend school, for at

See SCHOOLS, page A-5

Nagin says water receding

STAFF PHOTO BY ELLIS LUCIA

17TH STREET CANAL: Water is pumped into the 17th Street Canal from neighborhoods on the Orleans Parish side of the levee breach on Tuesday. Officials closed the break in the levee on Monday.

By Bruce Nolan
Staff writer

Mayor Ray Nagin on Tuesday ordered all remaining New Orleans residents out of the city to escape sporadic fires and the growing threat of disease from standing water contaminated by toxic chemicals and rotting corpses.

Meanwhile, an Army Corps of Engineers official said it could take 80 days to pump out the billions of gallons of water that Hurricane Katrina poured into the New Orleans area Aug. 29.

Low-lying Chalmette might be the last to emerge, while eastern New Orleans will take about 24 days to dry out, said the corps' Dan Kitchens at the Louisiana emergency operations center in Baton Rouge.

The water level in most parts of Orleans Parish has receded 6 inches to a foot, Nagin said after a helicopter fly-over Tuesday morning. That means that some submerged areas, such as the lakefront campus of the University of New Orleans, have drained substantially, he said.

The corps said two or three of the city's 148 drainage pumps were online, supplemented by dozens of smaller pumps brought into the city.

According to CNN.com, Nagin issued a statement in which he told all law enforcement officers "to compel the evacuation of all persons ... regardless of whether such persons are on private property or do not desire to leave." The report said the order did not apply to Algiers.

See KATRINA, page A-4

HURRICANE KATRINA AFTERMATH

"By the time people come back, we'll have Belle Chasse cleaned up so they won't even know we had a storm. Rotten food in refrigerators will be their biggest problem."

BENNY ROUSSELLE, parish president

Holes blown in levees to let water flow out

STAFF PHOTO BY DAVID GRUNFELD

Floodwaters caused by Hurricane Katrina left a coffin on the Mississippi River levee near Port Sulphur.

STAFF PHOTO BY TED JACKSON

Mary Bourgeois hugs her friend Mike Kramer in the sanctuary of St. Patrick's Church in Port Sulphur. Eleven people rode out the storm in the choir loft of the 19th century building.

Plaquemines death toll hasn't grown

By Paul Rioux and Manuel Torres
St. Bernard/Plaquemines bureau

Dozens of National Guard soldiers wearing hip-waders slogged through oily floodwaters Tuesday in villages along the Mississippi River in Plaquemines Parish searching for Hurricane Katrina's dead.

Battling the heat and pervasive stench from the sewage-contaminated waters, the soldiers spray-painted a green zero on house after house to indicate no bodies were found inside.

As rescue efforts shifted to recovery, parish officials were encouraged that the number of dead had not budged since three bodies were found Monday.

Parish President Benny Rousselle said he expects the death toll in Plaquemines will be much lower than the hundreds or even thousands of fatalities feared in neighboring Orleans and St. Bernard parishes.

"We were the first parish to call for a mandatory evacuation, and the people took it seriously,'' said Rousselle, who ordered residents to pack up and leave 48 hours before the Category 4 hurricane churned ashore. "That translates directly to fewer fatalities.''

Property damage was another matter, though, as officials said more than 70 percent of the parish was inundated by 10 to 20 feet of water. Most of the devastation is in the southern portion of the parish, where officials said they have to wait until the waters recede to discover what land the Gulf of Mexico may have reclaimed.

Belle Chasse sustained relatively minor wind damage, with shingles or pieces of siding missing from some homes and an occasional downed tree or utility pole.

But the damage gets progressively worse as Louisiana 23 winds down toward the Gulf of Mexico.

A drive south along the four-lane highway Tuesday, a lovely road trip on any other sunny day, resembled a gradual descent into deeper levels of hell.

At orchards and nurseries around Naomi and Myrtle Grove, many structures covering the plants were blown away and spoiled fruit lined the road. Some homes were missing roofs.

A few miles down, more than a dozen barges were beached atop the Mississippi River levee. Nearby, the storm washed away a section of the highway's southbound lanes. But Katrina's full rage was not evident until Port Sulphur, where all but a handful of structures suffered severe damage. The storm pounded through a portion of the parish's western levee there, and the surge deposited about six homes on the highway, one straddled on top of a vehicle.

Trees were covered with clothes, plastic bags and children's toys. A kitchen stove reached 15 feet, marking how high the water got. The sight was a macabre reminder of the littered trees along parade routes during Carnival. Several cars were overturned or on their side.

Spilled oil floated on the water everywhere, soiling everything.

Only St. Patrick's Catholic Church seemed to have escaped the storm practically untouched, with not even its windows broken. But the rectory and other nearby buildings were severely damaged.

In the southern portion of town, a bulldozer pushed debris to the side of the road. A few hundred yards farther, the highway disappeared under a dark soup of dirty water, muck and oil.

Parish employee Angelo Laimia, standing on the airboat that ferried him to restore drainage pumps, said the picture was much the same downriver in Empire, Boothville and all the way to Venice, the parish's southernmost community.

"All the buildings are flattened out,'' Laimia said. "Boats everywhere.''

Photos taken by parish officials who flew over the area, and posted at the parish's Web site (www.plaqueminesparish.com), showed several large structures flooded but still standing in the fishing villages. Most homes appeared to be either destroyed or displaced.

The images showed the Buras water tower collapsed over a government office. Two large boats rested on the road at the foot of the Empire high-rise bridge.

But amid the despair, signs of a more ordinary time remained. Along a farm south of Myrtle Grove, a hand-painted sign pleaded to the emergency response vehicles passing by: "Slow please. Elk will spook.'' Around Cedar Grove, a Plaquemines sheriff's deputy used his patrol car to corral an emu off the road. The birds are known for their quick temper, and asked whether he was trying to fetch it, the officer was unequivocal. "Hell no. That thing could cut my a-- off,'' he said.

It remains unclear when parish residents will be able to re-enter the parish to resume their lives. Rousselle said he wants to wait until the sewer system is repaired and grocery stores are restocked, possibly sometime next week.

"By the time people come back, we'll have Belle Chasse cleaned up so they won't even know we had a storm,'' he said. "Rotten food in refrigerators will be their biggest problem.''

But it may be several months or longer before residents can return to the east bank or areas on the west bank south of west Pointe a la Hache, he said.

Parish officials are encouraging residents in those areas to look for jobs where they are living now.

Parish crews have been working their way downriver, blowing holes in the levees to let floodwaters drain and repairing the damage before high tide to prevent water from flowing back into the parish.

Rousselle said authorities evacuated 200 to 300 residents who tried to ride out the storm in the parish, which has a population of 27,000.

"We believe we have evacuated everyone who stayed,'' Rouselle said. "Now we're looking for the ones who didn't make it.''

Two of the three bodies recovered so far were found at Pointe a la Hache; the other was in Empire, said Maj. John Marie of the Sheriff's Office. He said the dead were loaded onto a refrigerated truck and taken to the Jefferson Parish morgue.

Plaquemines Parish School Board member Paul Lemaire feared a friend who had never evacuated during previous storms would be found among the dead. And so he was overjoyed when he saw the man fixing a flat tire punctured by debris on Louisiana 23.

"He said he decided to leave at the last minute because he had a bad feeling about this one,'' he said.

Lemaire, 42, said his house in Port Sulphur had been swept away and replaced by a neighbor's home resting on his foundation.

An employee at the parish's wastewater plant, Lemaire didn't hesitate when asked whether he planned to rebuild his home.

"I was born here, I was raised here, and I'm going to die here,'' he said. "This is home.''

Indiana businessman brings 50 to new home

Slidell, Pearl River residents offered jobs

By Paul Bartels
St. Tammany bureau

Almost 50 Slidell and Pearl River area residents made homeless by Hurricane Katrina's devastation were evacuated during the weekend on two big tour buses with the promise of a new start in the Midwest.

The promise - guaranteed jobs and free apartments for up to six months - was made by Ed Blinn, a Marion, Ind., businessman who owns three used car lots and almost 100 apartments.

Some 47 people who had been staying in five crowded, squalid school gymnasiums took him up on the offer and boarded the buses Blinn hired to journey down the nation's midsection and back.

They arrived at their new home, temporary or otherwise, late Monday afternoon, and Blinn put them all up at a local hotel, he said in a telephone interview.

With his help and that of Red Cross volunteers and social service agencies, the displaced people are settling into some of his vacant apartments and others - and into their new lives.

So why did Blinn, 39, safe and sound with his family 900 miles away, take it upon himself to embark upon this mission of mercy?

Blinn was aware from the numerous televised news accounts of the devastation and the plight of many thousands of men, women and children driven from their homes in the New Orleans area.

But he also has a friend in Slidell, Roper Construction Co. owner Jimmy Roper. He's the uncle of Dr. Mike Roper, a close friend of Blinn's. For each of the past few years, the Blinns and Ropers have gone hunting together in South Dakota.

"I have a friend in Slidell, so that's why I decided to go," he said. "Hell, we're like family."

Blinn also was impatient with the slow pace of a hurricane relief effort that city officials and others in the Marion area were talking about to help the stricken area far to the south.

That group met late Friday and spent a lot of time talking without coming to a firm decision on what to do, he said.

"I just felt that with the bureaucracy, it wasn't going to get done," he said. "They said their next meeting was Tuesday and I knew I could make it happen, or thought I could and so I did."

Accompanied by his 14-year-old son, Evan, Blinn hired a driver for each of the two buses capable of holding 30 to 35 passengers. The buses left Marion on Saturday at about 8 p.m. and arrived in Slidell at midafternoon Sunday.

They then went shelter by shelter to John Slidell Park, three schools the names of which he couldn't remember and ultimately to Creekside Junior High School near Pearl River.

At each stop, he told those stranded at the sweltering facilities about his proposal and his six-month "guarantee" of jobs and a place to live rent-free, and gave them 20 minutes or so to make up their minds.

Not surprisingly, despite their desperate situations, many didn't want to leave behind what had been their home for many years.

However, travelers ultimately included a family of three who initially wanted to stay, then changed their minds and chased down one of the buses after it began driving off and jumped on, Blinn said.

"I would have liked to stay a little longer and get a few more people," he said. "I could've spent another day."

But time was running out, the rescue group was informed of an 8 p.m. curfew, "and these people were weary enough" and faced a long drive back to Indiana.

Blinn said he didn't know how many of his temporary charges eventually would decide to return to Louisiana or to stay in their new homes.

"I don't know if any of them will (want to return)," he said. "But if they do, I'll help them get back. We're friends now."

KATRINA HAS TAKEN A TOLL.
SHE HASN'T TAKEN OUR SPIRIT.

In 1788, a fire burned the Saint Louis Cathedral to the ground. But it was built again. In 1834, the Cathedral collapsed from overuse. But it was built again. What a wonderful testament for the people of New Orleans today. Hurricane Katrina may have damaged a significant portion of our city. But she will never destroy the spirit of our people.

And that same spirit is alive with the employees of Entergy. As we assess the damage to our electric and gas distribution systems in the New Orleans area, we are saddened by this catastrophe. We are citizens of New Orleans, too. And, just like you, our spirit isn't broken. We will get through this. It will be a long and difficult process. But with the help of every employee, every business partner, and every neighbor, we can rebuild this great city. And we'll do it together.

www.entergy.com • 1-800-ENTERGY • ©2005 Entergy Corporation

Entergy®
THE POWER OF PEOPLE™

Power restored to parts of CBD, Warehouse District

KATRINA, from A-1

Nagin's evacuation order apparently could sweep several hundred hardy residents out of the French Quarter.

Although nearly empty, the Quarter remained high and dry - and home to pockets of insouciant die-hards who have supported each other in a defiant celebration of the city's determined, carefree spirit.

But in a short meeting with reporters on the steps of City Hall, Nagin said the city is increasingly unsafe, its crumpled public safety systems unable to protect its residents.

Another major fire broke out Tuesday, gutting a mansion in the Lower Garden District. Authorities fought it the only way possible: Helicopters ferried huge buckets of water overhead and doused it from above.

Oil spills

More than fire threatened the city, however. Foul water presented a growing danger.

Mike McDaniel, the state secretary of environmental quality, told CNN floodwaters had swirled through wrecked sewerage plants and were fouled by natural gas and petrochemical leaks all over south Louisiana.

"I think one of the things people want us to do is play the blame game."

President Bush

He said crews found an oil spill of 68,000 barrels at a Bass Enterprise storage depot in Venice, and another of 10,000 barrels from the Murphy Oil facility in Chalmette.

"Everywhere we look there's a spill. It all adds up," he said. "There's almost a solid sheen over the area right now."

Besides the petrochemicals and human waste, officials said, the water was surely polluted by a variety of other pollutants, including pesticides and a catalogue of industrial solvents.

And there was another dreadful component: the bodies of uncounted dead humans and animals that rescuers have seen in a week of frantic life-saving efforts, but pushed aside to do higher priority work.

Officials said they did not know whether ejecting billions of gallons of foul pollutants would trigger a massive environmental disaster in the state's wetlands.

City Council may meet

Against that deteriorating backdrop, New Orleans City Council President Oliver Thomas said he hoped to call the first post-Katrina council meeting, perhaps Thursday at Louis Armstrong International Airport.

And as the water levels began to fall, utility crews continued repairs to the area's damaged electrical grid.

Stores and gas stations in Covington and other parts of St. Tammany opened one by one, either powered by generators or as repairs reached them.

Power returning

Parts of the Central Business District and the Warehouse District had power Tuesday, said Dan Packer, president and chief executive officer of Entergy New Orleans.

He said he hoped to have the entire CBD up in a few days. Authorities worked to get hotels up and running to house hundreds of workers who will be faced with the daunting task of helping rebuild the city.

Algiers could have power by Thursday, Packer said.

Bell South said it had restored telephone service to about half of 1.7 million customers knocked out by Katrina, but that it will be most of the month - longer in New Orleans - before service is fully restored to most areas.

Joe Chandler, a BellSouth spokesman, said he was "not going to guess."

"It depends on when the flood waters leave and crews can get back in."

Work crews will begin repairing the Interstate 10 bridges between New Orleans and Slidell as soon as next week, said Gordon Nelson, assistant secretary of operations for the state Department of Transportation and Development.

Eastbound lanes of the twin spans might be open for two-way traffic in four to six weeks, he said.

Schools scrambling

Educators struggled to restore their systems as well.

The state Department of Education said public schools in St. Bernard Parish, which was completely flooded, will be closed for the remainder of the year. The same is feared for most of New Orleans.

In St. Tammany, educators were hoping to open for classes Oct. 3, said Superintendent Gayle Sloan.

Six of nine schools in Plaquemines Parish may open this year.

Jefferson Parish officials were still checking their 84 schools Tuesday. Twenty-four were determined to be useable or had sustained "isolated" damage, the system said. Six were badly damaged ,and 54 remained to be checked.

The Archdiocese of New Orleans said it hoped to have its schools open by January, using existing schools and temporary or satellite campuses out of the city, the Rev. William Maestri said.

Bush to seek aid package

In Washington, President Bush said he intends to seek $40 billion for the next phase of hurricane relief, not only for New Orleans, but also for the Mississippi and Alabama Gulf Coasts, where Katrina demolished cities including Gulfport, Biloxi and Pascagoula.

Senate Minority Leader Harry Reid, D-Nev., said the total bill may surpass $150 billion.

Bush resisted demands for an inquiry into what went wrong in federal relief in first few days after Katrina hit. He said it was more important to focus on human rescue for now.

"I think one of the things people want us to do is play the blame game," he said.

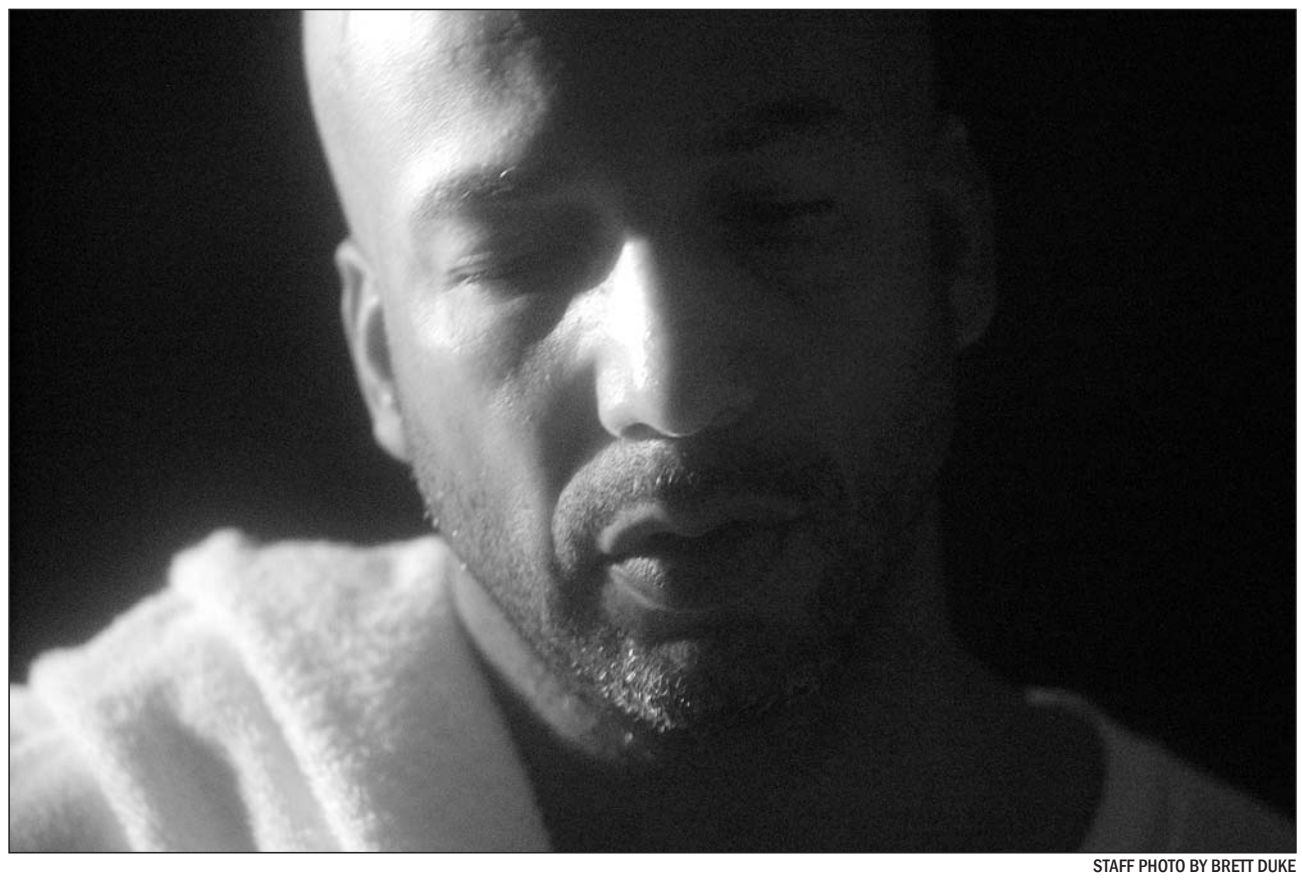
He said it is important to understand what went wrong to improve federal, state and local coordination in the event of a terrorist attack.

Bush said Vice President Dick Cheney would visit the disaster area Thursday to assess relief efforts and cut any red tape keeping rescuers from survivors.

With the worst of last week's horrifying days of despair and looting apparently behind New Orleans' police officers, officials began withdrawing them from the city for rest. Many are psychologically traumatized by stress and exhaustion, Police Superintendent Eddie Compass said. Many will be sent to Atlanta and Las Vegas for city-paid "rest and relaxation."

•••••

Staff writers Paul Bartels, Jeff Duncan, Gwen Filosa and Jan Moller and The Associated Press contributed to this report.



STAFF PHOTO BY ELLIS LUCIA

A barge bearing sandbags moves down the 17th Street Canal on Tuesday as the effort to shore up the newly constructed containment wall continues.

"I welcome the criticism. My question to them is, 'Where were you? Where the hell were you?' "

NEW ORLEANS MAYOR RAY NAGIN

STAFF PHOTO BY BRETT DUKE

MAYOR NAGIN STAYS OPTIMISTIC & DEFIANT

N.O. mayor begs remaining residents to leave the city

By Jeff Duncan
Staff writer

Every day seems to bring another catastrophe for New Orleans Mayor Ray Nagin.

Eight days after Hurricane Katrina and ensuing floods devastated the city, Nagin said he doesn't recognize the town he's called home for 49 years.

Its streets are flooded. Its buildings are burning. Almost all of its 480,000 residents are evacuated or dead.

"I remember when the sounds of New Orleans were jazz and people laughing and having a good time," the mayor said while addressing reporters during a press briefing Tuesday at City Hall. "Now the sounds of New Orleans are helicopters and Army vehicles. It's almost surreal."

But even while ordering a mandatory evacuation of all "nonessential" residents because of health and safety concerns, the mayor saw reason for hope. With helicopters whirring overhead and floodwaters lapping at the steps only a few feet away, Nagin said he's more optimistic than ever that New Orleans will recover.

"We will build a better New Orleans," Nagin said. "My message to the people of New Orleans is, 'Hang in there. This is something that has happened for a temporary period of time. We've secured the city, and you're in a better place while we start to build the new New Orleans.' "

Still, Nagin said, the recovery will have to wait. Widespread gas leaks and fires, contaminated floodwater and disease-bearing mosquitoes have rendered the city unsafe.

He begged the city's remaining residents to leave, estimating that 5,000 to 10,000 people are still trying to hold on and make ends meet in the city.

"I understand people want to stay in their homes," Nagin said. "But it's a very volatile situation in the city. □ It's not the food and the water; it's the conditions."

Wearing a golf shirt commemorating the USS Iwo Jima aircraft carrier given to him by Army Lt. General Russel Honore, the Army commander overseeing the military rescue and recovery operations, Nagin addressed reporters shortly after making a helicopter flyover to survey the flooded and hurricane-ravaged city.

He and city officials detailed a list of positive news.

Pumps No. 1 and No. 5 have resumed operation, and breaches in the levees at the 17th Street and Florida Avenue canals have been fully repaired. Water in the city is starting to recede, he said. Parts of the city are now dry that previously were underwater. He mentioned the Lakefront Campus at the University of New Orleans as an example.

Crime has declined dramatically since thousands of National Guard and active-duty federal troops arrived in the city late last week. Deputy Police Chief Warren Riley said there were 20 arrests in New Orleans last night and 150 arrests this week for various offenses.

Parts of the Central Business District and Warehouse District have power, said Dan Packer, president and CEO of Entergy New Orleans. He said he hoped to have the entire CBD lit up in the next couple of days. Algiers could have power in the next 36 hours, Packer said.

Search and rescue missions will continue indefinitely. Capt. Timothy Bayard of the New Orleans Police Department said all 60 of his boats were on missions Tuesday morning in the parish's flooded areas of Lakeview, Gentilly, eastern New Orleans, the Ninth Ward and Mid-City.

Even though rescue boats have covered more than 75 percent of the city's flooded areas, according to Riley, Bayard estimated thousands are still residing in their homes despite the high waters. Still, city officials said the boat trips will continue as long as there are residents in need.

"There are some New Orleanians out there holding onto life with their last breath," Nagin said. "I'm not going to allow, as best I can, another person to die in the city."

Nagin also remained defiant, rebuffing recent criticism from federal authorities and media representatives who have tried to shift the blame for the slow response for support to the local and state levels.

"I welcome that," he said. "I welcome the criticism. My question to them is, 'Where were you? Where the hell were you?' "

Nagin said he witnessed the storm's devastation firsthand and toured the Ernest N. Morial Convention Center and Superdome, where people were living in what he called "subhuman" conditions.

"I saw babies dying and old people so bad off they screamed, 'Just let me lay down and die.'

"(The critics) can talk that. Bring it on. I'm ready for it."

The final death count could rise to 10,000 before the final bodies are recovered, Nagin said. He said the disaster claimed lives in three phases: the initial impact of Hurricane Katrina and its destructive winds, the massive flooding after the levees broke, and the deplorable conditions that followed.

"The Convention Center was a totally different animal," Nagin said.

Officials have confirmed that 59 people died in the hurricane and its aftermath. Many of the bodies were recovered in the Convention Center, where thousands of evacuees fought starvation and dehydration, and were victims of violent crimes while waiting days for transport. Nagin said many of the victims were tourists or out-of-town workers.

"They (somehow) got caught up in that madness," he said. "When the final story is written, it will be the worst national disaster in the history of this country."

•••••

Jeff Duncan can be reached at jduncan@timespicayune.com or (504) 826-3405.

Stressed N.O. police get time off

They get paid trips to Atlanta, Vegas

By Brett Anderson
Staff writer

Attempting to ease the stress that led to the suicides of two New Orleans police officers last week, city officials have been making a concerted effort to tend to the mental health of rescue and law enforcement workers who struggled to save lives and establish order in the city ravaged by Hurricane Katrina.

As many as 150 city workers who battled not only the storm's wrath, but intense heat, no electricity, contaminated flood water, spotty phone service and no running water for more than a week since the storm's landfall will receive expenses-paid trips to Las Vegas or Atlanta.

Boosting morale is particularly urgent for the Police Department, which also has been hit by a number of officer resignations over the past several days, city officials said.

"One of our roles is trying to be of help to officers and their families," said Howard Osofsky, chairman of the Department of Psychiatry at LSU Health Sciences Center, who is leading an effort to address the mental needs of the department. "From what I've seen in general, the Police Department has held together pretty well. But they've been through a lot."

"From what I've seen in general, the Police Department has held together pretty well. But they've been through a lot."

HOWARD OSOFSKY
chairman of the Department of Psychiatry at LSU Health Sciences Center

Deputy Police Chief Warren J. Riley said Katrina wreaked just as much havoc on the personal lives of his officers as it did on residents. The minds of many are clouded with the knowledge that their homes have been badly damaged or ruined, he said. Some have lost loved ones or don't know their whereabouts. And that was before the suicides of Paul Accardo, a department spokesman, and patrol officer Lawrence Celestine.

Suffice it to say that everyone could use some time off, Riley said.

Charles Parent, superintendent of the increasingly busy New Orleans Fire Department, said he is requiring his units to return to headquarters between fires for rest and reinforcements.

At a press conference in front of City Hall on Tuesday, Mayor Ray Nagin thanked Las Vegas Mayor Oscar B. Goodman and Atlanta Mayor Shirley Franklin for mobilizing quickly to roll out the red carpets in their cities for New Orleans emergency workers in need of rest.

"We called them, and within 24 hours we had a network in place," said Nagin, who added that Southwest Airlines provided planes to fly personnel on all-expenses-paid trips.

Nagin said workers visiting Las Vegas are being offered free restaurant meals, tickets to shows and hotel rooms, along with $200.

Atlanta evacuees are getting similar treatment, including a $100 daily stipend.

Riley said that 150 New Orleans police officers are now taking time off in one form or another. All personnel are given full medical and physical examinations before they're cleared for vacation, Nagin said.

The mayor added that doctors even "gave me a physical and checked my crazy butt out."

Riley said his department, though reduced in numbers, is stronger than before.

"We have control of our city," he said. "Morale is beginning to build."

Picard: Other districts may be back in weeks

SCHOOLS, from A-1

least part of the year, outside of their home districts.

"We're going to have to really take a hard look at complete reconstruction of the Orleans Parish school system," Picard said.

But Interim Superintendent Ora Watson said earlier in the day that she hopes that at least a few schools in Algiers could be opened this school year to accommodate families that might return to the area, which has not been flooded.

"When they bring children back to the West Bank, they will need schools," she said at a meeting with other Orleans Parish officials. Watson noted that some parts of Uptown also are dry and that families returning there will need schools for their children.

Picard said that there are about eight schools in Algiers that were not substantially damaged by the storm, but added that he did not expect even those schools would be ready by year's end. If people return to the West Bank, a small school district of maybe 7,000 or 8,000 students could be set up to accommodate those children sometime after January, he said.

Even getting to that point will depend on how quickly the area can be made habitable, Picard said. He noted that the state must deem the area safe - including ensuring that there is no environmental contamination from the floodwaters - and basic amenities like electricity and water must be available.

While Picard's department can funnel state education dollars for students in Orleans, without residents to pay property taxes there will not be enough local money to cover the cost of the children's education, he said.

Districts in Louisiana that will be taking in storm-displaced students and those outside the state are being asked to enroll them as quickly as possible, Picard said.

In some places, that will mean setting up special schools specifically for children who have been evacuated, such as at the Lamar Dixon Exposition Center in Gonzales, Picard said.

In the town of Zachary in East Baton Rouge Parish, which has a separate school district, Picard said he has authorized the superintendent to rent a former retail building that can be used to accommodate the relocated children.

The state still is pondering whether displaced students will have to comply with the state's standardized tests requirements, such as passing the LEAP exam, or other requirements imposed by federal law. Picard said that he expects to get waivers of certain federal requirements for students who are not being educated in their home parishes.

STAFF PHOTOS BY KATHY ANDERSON

BATON ROUGE: Alexis Keppel, 6, of Chalmette raises her hand in her first-grade classroom at Our Lady of Mercy School in Baton Rouge. At right is her cousin, Emily Gloe. About 200 children from New Orleans started school at Our Lady of Mercy on Tuesday.

ABOVE: Caroline St. Paul, 8, of Pass Christian walks with her assigned buddy, Shelby Toups, during recess Tuesday at Our Lady of Mercy School. Both girls are in the third grade.

LEFT: Courtney Palermo, right, hugs St. Dominic School teacher Kristin Coster in front of Our Lady of Mercy School in Baton Rouge. Coster taught second grade in New Orleans and one of her pupils was Palermo's son. Both women were trying to enroll their children at Our Lady of Mercy on Tuesday.

B.R. schools bracing for surge of students

Throngs of evacuees seeking to enroll kids

Lynne Jensen and Steve Ritea
Staff writers

It was the first day of school all over again for Alexis Keppel of Chalmette, 6, who three weeks ago started school close to home and on Monday joined a class of first-graders at Our Lady of Mercy in Baton Rouge.

"She already cried once; now she's crying a second time," said her father, Dr. Frederick "Rick" Keppel, as he watched his child walk away sporting yet another new Catholic school uniform this school year.

Keppel and his wife are among scores of parents seeking school placements for their children after evacuating the New Orleans area. Like so many other families, they are staying with relatives in Baton Rouge and wondering when they can return home.

Alexis, one of about 200 students from the New Orleans metro area who have been accepted at the Marquette Avenue elementary school, was smiling by the time 10 o'clock recess rolled around.

But frustrated parents of other displaced students lined up outside Principal Carolyn Guidry's office wondering whether their children will remain on a waiting list or be allowed entry at the school, which now has an enrollment of about 1,030 students.

"We're behind the 8-ball," said Courtney Palermo, who arrived at the school Tuesday morning hoping to enroll her sons Peyton, a fifth-grader, and Cal, a second-grader.

The Palermos evacuated to Little Rock, Ark., to stay with family, and they are getting a late start with school enrollment after arriving recently in Baton Rouge.

They had tried to call friends and relatives close to home "but we couldn't communicate with anybody," Palermo said.

Satellites planned

It was a day of hugs, kisses and reunion outside the school Tuesday.

Palermo ran into Kristin Coster, who had been Cal's second-grade teacher at St. Dominic School in Lakeview. Coster was hoping to enroll daughters Hannah, 9, and Brooke, 6, in Our Lady of Mercy.

Another St. Dominic school parent, Kelly O'Connor, arrived at the school in borrowed clothes to see whether her fourth-grader, Seamus, had moved up on the waiting list.

"I get to a point where I think I'm going to break down, and then I just say: Go forward," O'Connor said.

O'Connor said she is eager to hear results of a meeting scheduled by the Rev. William Maestri, superintendent of Catholic schools in the Archdiocese of New Orleans, with principals, administrators, faculty and support staff today at 10 a.m. at the Catholic Life Center auditorium, 1800 S. Acadian Thruway in Baton Rouge.

Maestri said his office is considering establishing satellite, transitional and alternative Catholic campuses in the Baton Rouge area while hoping to return students to their regular school sites in January 2006.

Administrators and teachers are being asked to contact the archdiocese hotline at 1(888)366-5024.

But some New Orleans schools are not waiting on the results of the meeting.

Brother Martin High School announced plans Monday to open a night school at Catholic High School's Baton Rouge campus beginning Sept. 19. It will remain open until students can return to the Gentilly campus.

The Brother Martin staff in Baton Rouge can be reached at (225)383-0397.

To accommodate the large number of Jesuit High school students who have settled in the Houston area, Strake Jesuit High, the Jesuit high school closest to New Orleans, is creating an afternoon session to begin Sept. 13.

Enrollments surging

Displaced public school students faced the same stressful search for schools this week, although the crush of displaced students may be delayed somewhat while area school districts process applications.

At Dutchtown Primary School in Geismar, parents flowed in to the central office to register their children in the Ascension Parish public school, where the district already was bursting at the seams before Katrina.

One of the fastest-growing districts in the state, Ascension already had increased enrollment by 1,000 students this year. By the end of this week, assistant Superintendent Donald Songy said, he expects another 1,000 students - most of them evacuees - to have enrolled, bringing the district's total to 17,000.

Officials anticipate at least 150 of the displaced students will be taught at a local church.

At Dutchtown, Principal Elizabeth Stafford said the student-to-teacher ratio increased from 20:1 before Katrina to 26:1 after. Before long, she added, it probably will go higher.

Asked when the district might cut off enrollment, she replied: "I don't see our parish doing that, even if we have to wall off sections of the hallway; we're going to educate these children."

Once the district gets a solid headcount, more teachers will be hired.

State officials have pledged more money to the districts taking in new students.

Facing uncertainty

One of the displaced children, Nelson Tran of Harvey, who was originally enrolled at Woodland West Elementary there, sat on the floor of guidance counselor Kerry Songy's office playing with a toy dump truck as his father, Khanh, enrolled him in kindergarten at Dutchtown.

Songy said she already has begun counseling displaced students, talking to them about their feelings in small groups and letting them know that it's OK to cry and be angry - the emotional releases necessary to heal people large and small in times of tragedy.

"Surprisingly, most of the parents we've been meeting are coming in with a sense of humor, and they're very cooperative, wonderful people," she said. "They, of course, are worried about what to do next and are still a little in shock, coming in with an idea of taking it one day at a time, and they're very appreciative of anything we can do for them."

A few, she said, have been too overcome by emotion to fill out the necessary forms and have needed help.

As soon as her younger sister, Temika, finished enrolling at Dutchtown Elementary, Kimberly Isidore and her mother were headed down the street to Dutchtown High School to enroll her.

A member of the ROTC and dance team at L.W. Higgins High in Marrero, the junior had been in school there for about two weeks before the storm.

The Trans and the Isidores said they're still uncertain what they will do once the New Orleans region becomes inhabitable again.

"I've talked to some people who are true New Orleans people who just want to get back and want to rebuild," Songy said. "Others are not so sure."

HURRICANE KATRINA AFTERMATH

Wealthy Old Metairie awash in filthy water

Pricey neighborhood was left unprotected

By Michelle Krupa
West Bank bureau

Water lapped at the front doors of million-dollar mansions and rippled across the hoods of BMWs and Mercedes sedans in Old Metairie on Tuesday as a handful of homeowners in one of Jefferson Parish's toniest areas returned to gauge damage from Hurricane Katrina and from a levee breach that turned their neighborhood into a putrid swamp.

"Usually you just get the low-lying areas," that flood, Councilman-at-large John Young said, as he paddled a flat-bottomed boat down Northline. "These people, this might be the highest-priced street in the state.'

That price tag, which often pays for a few inches of elevation to protect against flooding, however, did not save dozens of homes from destruction as limbs from oaks, crape myrtles and cypresses lay across the watery road and gashed through many roofs along Northline and Stella and Iona streets.

Most residents evacuated this hamlet before the storm hit or got out soon after. Dotting the landscape were orange Xs sprayed-painted on doors and windows by National Guard troops in recent days to indicate that no dead had been found inside. And most residents had not returned Tuesday, possibly because of the difficulty navigating the 4-foot-deep oil slicked water, strewn with downed power lines, floating trash cans and upended trees.

At the end of Northline, a scruffy man leaned over a second-floor balcony watching dragonflies zip across the still water.

"I came here from Jackson, Miss., to help my mother and father. They're 80-something years old," said Henry Handelman, 55. "They got out on a helicopter (last) Tuesday, but I'm going to walk out of here."

Handelman said he stopped in Old Metairie to check on his parents as he headed to Tallahassee, Fla., to volunteer for the Red Cross's Katrina volunteer relief effort. He stayed with them until a medevac team whisked them out of the house, then on to Austin, Texas, last week. But Handleman said he intended to remain in his childhood home until the waters receded.

STAFF PHOTO BY RUSTY COSTANZA

OLD METAIRIE: Ray Rathle paddles a flatboat away from Henry Handelman's parents' Old Metairie house, where Handelman refused the chance to leave Tuesday. "I'm doing some soul-searching here," said Handelman, of Jackson, Miss. "When I rebuild this house, I'm going to put it on stilts just like Grand Isle. It's going to be the silliest looking thing out here."

STAFF PHOTO BY ELLIS LUCIA

OLD METAIRIE: In the 300 block of Arlington in Old Metairie, homeowners move ruined carpet and rug onto a boat. Old Metairie, known for its towering oaks and million-dollar mansions, was devastated by a 5-foot-deep flood from a breach at the 17th Street Canal.

"I'm doing some soul-searching here," he said. "When I rebuild this house, I'm going to put it on stilts just like Grand Isle. It's going to be the silliest looking thing out here."

"We will rebuild," Handleman said.

Just down the road, the makeshift levee of sand and riprap erected in four days last week by Jefferson workers and contractors stood strong across Airline Highway, dividing the roughly 5-foot-deep flood that extended into Jefferson and Orleans parishes as far as the eye could see.

The levee was build swiftly to protect East Jefferson from Lake Pontchartrain waters that spilled through a breach at the 17th Street Canal last Tuesday, though it could not keep the flood out of Old Metairie or neighborhoods, near Airline Highway east of Causeway.

The Army Corps of Engineers continued its work Tuesday, dropping 3,000- pound sandbags and laying tons of dirt on the Orleans Parish side. A small pump pulled lime-green water from the neighborhoods swamped by the levee breach and spewed it back into the canal near the lake. But Corps and New Orleans officials did not give the go-ahead Tuesday to switch on the enormous 17th Street Canal pumps that would drain water from the flooded parts of Jefferson, according to Walter Maestri, the parish's emergency management director.

Maestri said he did not know when federal or city leaders would allow pumping to start. "We tried to get a hold of the city, and the city's basically in exile right now,'' he said.

Meanwhile Jefferson imported small pumps to move the floodwater through the West Metairie Canal, but Maestri said they were inadequate to provide relief to submerged parts of the parish.

As workers continued to fill the breach, Kenny Rodriguez, 67, of Metairie ventured to his home near Hammond Highway after waiting in his car for 4‰ hours to re-enter the parish, the second day Jefferson officials allowed residents to return briefly to survey the damage. Rodriguez said the scene, minus the lakefront restaurants of Sid-Mar's and Brunings that were reduced to rubble by Katrina's winds, "brings me goose bumps.''

Asked whether he intended to rebuild his house and his family's nearby seafood market, Rodriguez replied, "Oh yeah, they got to.''

Already back in business Tuesday was Drago's, the Fat City oyster house. Though none of the 140 sacks of oysters that were in the restaurant's refrigerator before the storm survived the recent electricity loss, its owners used propane to heat 1,300 meals of pasta, chicken and sausage since Monday for relief workers and returning neighbors.

Tommy Cvitanovich, who runs a restaurant with his parents, said the donation was the least his family could do after a storm that ravaged so many restaurants, especially in New Orleans, but left his with only temporary loss of power and water.

Back in the nearly dark kitchen, Joe Shine said whipping up grilled chicken and pasta with alfredo sauce was his therapy after weathering such a dangerous storm at his Metairie home.

"I feel great to be back at work,'' he said. "It occupies my time so I don't have to worry about everything else.''

Fireman's Fund.
We're here to help
our customers recover from Hurricane Katrina.

If you are a Fireman's Fund policyholder and suffered damage from Hurricane Katrina, we want to speak to you as soon as possible. Fireman's Fund is deeply concerned about your safety and welfare. Responding to your needs is our top priority.

To assist us in responding to your needs, please call your independent insurance agent or contact us at:

1-888-FIREHAT
(1-888-347-3428)

Fireman's Fund®

A company of Allianz

©2005 Fireman's Fund Insurance Company, Novato, CA

Poorest nations among the first to offer help

By Bruce Alpert
Washington bureau

WASHINGTON - Offers of help for Hurricane Katrina victims are coming from all over the world, including some of the poorest nations, governments that strongly oppose the United States and even Cuban President Fidel Castro.

Among the 94 nations offering to help are poverty-stricken Bangladesh, war-ravaged Afghanistan, communist Cuba and Saudi Arabia, a strategic military ally often opposed to U.S. policies in the Middle East.

In the Saudi newspaper Al-Riyad, Dr. Muhammad al-Quwayz writes that "no one denies the United States killed thousands and destroyed countries in our Islamic world, Africa and Asia, it has oppressed and carried out unjust deeds in a provocative manner." But he said, "Its injustice should not prevent us from adopting a fair stand on the Katrina tragedy for it is a catastrophe in every sense of the word and calls for cooperation not gloating," according to a translation provided by the BBC.

The State Department said that Saudi officials made what it described as a generous contribution to the American Red Cross.

Other pledges through Tuesday include four ships from Canada with 1,000 soldiers to aid evacuations; 45 tons of military meals from Germany's air force; $1 million from Bangladesh; $100,000 from Afghanistan; and even $25,000 from Sri Lanka, which said through a spokesman it is trying to reciprocate for American assistance after December's tsunami.

The Germans also are offering high-speed pumps to help remove water from New Orleans and other flooded communities. The Netherlands, which, like New Orleans, lies mostly below sea level, promises the help of its top experts to draw up plans to safeguard the city from future large-scale flooding.

"The American people can take great heart from the fact that when we need help, when we need assistance, the world is answering the call," said Sean McCormack, assistant secretary of state for public affairs.

Castro, the Cuban dictator, has upgraded his offer of 1,000 doctors to at least 1,500 and expressed impatience that he hasn't gotten a response from the U.S. government, according to Cuban press reports.

McCormack said the United States is evaluating all offers and would decide its response based on identified needs and not on whether the United States has good relations with the would-be donors..

The outpouring of support is reminiscent of offers of assistance after the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks.

Canada's ambassador to the United States, Frank McKenna, said his country is ready to do whatever is requested, in addition to the four planes and military personnel already provided.

Thailand Foreign Minister Kantathi Suphamongkon said his country is sending 60 doctors and nurses, along with rice. He called it a "gesture of the heart," recalling the help his country received after the deadly tsunami last December.

The largest donation so far appears to be the $28 million from oil-rich Qatar, but U.S. officials seem most moved by the $25,000 from Sri Lanka, given that country's struggles to recover from the deadly tsunami.

Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice pledged Tuesday to do "everything we can" to help find foreigners who were on the Gulf Coast during Katrina.

For the thousands affected by Hurricane Katrina, our hearts are open. So are our doors.

We are open. And we've been open expanded hours through the long weekend to provide special services to customers and our community. Even employees who have been displaced themselves are showing up at their nearest branches to help.

You have more access to cash. Our ATM network is up and has been up throughout the storm and its aftermath at most locations.

We're helping now. If you have access to a phone, you can call one of the numbers below toll free, day or night. Or visit ChaseNow.com for special links detailing consumer loan and payment deferral programs, fee abatements, and other special services.

If you are the customer of another bank that has been closed, visit us. We may be able to help you with government check cashing as well as other services.

We're giving now. In addition, all 2,500 Chase and Bank One branches are accepting cash and check donations to the American Red Cross specifically for hurricane relief. JPMorgan Chase & Co. and its employees will donate up to $3 million to the American Red Cross specifically for hurricane relief. We'll do whatever it takes to help bring the lives of our customers and employees in Louisiana and other impacted states back to normal. We're all in this together.

Affected customers can call (877) 226-5663 toll free or visit ChaseNow.com.

CHASE

A special note to JPMorgan, Chase, and Bank One employees:

JPMorgan Chase is reaching out to all employees impacted by Hurricane Katrina to learn if they are safe or need assistance. If you, or a friend or family member is a JPMorgan, Chase or Bank One employee, and haven't already called in, please call the Hurricane Support Line at 866-475-7623.

©2005 JPMorgan Chase Bank N.A. Member FDIC.

'05 40 ft. Travel Trailer
like new; 2 BR; wash/dry;
self contained;
will deliver in 48 hrs;
$28,500. 1-888-282-6191

Clerical / Medical Collector
Will Subsidize Commute
Send Resume to
1012 S. Acadian Thruway,
Baton Rouge 70806

To all Independent Dealers who deliver Times-Picayune home delivery or single copy newspapers
If you would like to contact a member of The Times-Picayune Circulation Department, e-mail Phil Ehrhardt at tpphile@bellsouth.net or call 985-850-1180 or 985-850-1181.
The Times-Picayune

NOTICE

to ALL POLICYHOLDERS of GENERAL STAR NATIONAL INSURANCE COMPANY
and
GENERAL STAR INDEMNITY COMPANY

We hope you have all safely weathered the storm, with as little disruption to your lives and businesses as possible. If you have suffered a loss that may be covered under your General Star insurance policy, however, we urge you to report the claim to your local agent so we can begin to assist you promptly.

If you can't reach your local agent, contact us directly at General Star.

DURING REGULAR BUSINESS HOURS
by telephone
800 624 5237 or 203 328 5700
or by fax
800 331 0601 or 203 328 5840

AFTER BUSINESS HOURS
by telephone
866 868 7069

GeneralStar
Beyond Security®

General Star Management Company, Stamford, Connecticut
© 2005 General Re Corporation A Berkshire Hathaway Company

"Seventy percent of the roof is leaking. Evacuees broke into the suites, commissary areas and into offices looking for food."

DOUG THORNTON, regional vice president for SMG

STAFF PHOTO BY BRETT DUKE

A man carries belongings through rising waters to the Superdome on Aug. 30. A primary shelter in the days after Hurricane Katrina, the Dome may have suffered $400 million in damage, the chairman of the Superdome Commission said Tuesday.

Dome closed for year, could be scrapped

Damage study to help decide facility's fate

By Ed Anderson
Capital bureau

BATON ROUGE - With electrical problems and some floodwaters still standing in the Superdome, state officials Tuesday said the future of the building has not been determined.

But they did say this: Damage to the structure could hit $400 million, and it's unlikely the facility could be used for at least a year.

Superdome Commission Chairman Tim Coulon said the Dome will hire engineers and other consultants to assess the structural stability of the stadium. That will be done in the next few weeks, Coulon said.

Besides flooding, the Dome lost part of its roof as more than 20,000 evacuees huddled there in the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina.

"We have to do a damage assessment first,'' Coulon said. "It is premature to write the Dome off. But there has been substantial damage.''

Although a precise figure will not be available for weeks, damage may total $400 million, Coulon said.

"There is still some standing water in some areas in the Dome,'' he said. "Some water has gotten into the new scoreboards. . . . I don't see the Dome being used at all for at least a year."

Coulon refused to say whether he or state officials prefer to demolish the Dome or try to renovate it. The engineering study and assessment will help determine the course, he said.

Doug Thornton, a regional vice president for SMG, the company that manages the Dome and the nearby New Orleans Arena for the state, said the Dome's interior was trashed during the evacuation and must be decontaminated before engineers look at the structure.

"It may take us two to three weeks to get it cleaned up,'' Thornton said. He said it may take another 45 days to determine how sound the structure is.

"Seventy percent of the roof is leaking,'' Thornton said. "Evacuees broke into the suites, commissary areas and into offices looking for food,'' he said.

Thornton said the arena fared better.

Water has soaked some of the facility's carpeting, tiles and other areas, but he said it is possible the arena, which plays host to the New Orleans Hornets and several concerts each year, could be back in operation "in the first quarter of 2006."

Coulon said the Dome - new or renovated - will be part of a redeveloped and revitalized New Orleans.

"It will be part of an entertainment-sports complex which will be a major component'' of a rebuilt New Orleans, he said.

But, he added, compared to flooded streets and homes, homeless residents and possibly thousands of deaths, the stadium is "a second- or third-tier item.''

In a related matter, New Orleans Saints owner Tom Benson said Tuesday that to "the extent circumstances allow,'' he would like to keep the team in Louisiana this season and play its home games at Tiger Stadium in Baton Rouge.

STATE FARM
is here to help.

In the aftermath of Hurrican Katrina, State Farm® understands the devastating toll of this catastrophe.

And we're here to help.

Whether you're at home or have been displaced and can't reach your State Farm agent, if you're a State Farm customer who needs to file a claim, you can reach us.

- Contact any State Farm Agent near your current location.
- Call 1-800-SF-CLAIM (1-800-732-5246) to reach our catastrophe operators; or
- Visit statefarm.com® to initiate your claim online.

LIKE A GOOD NEIGHBOR STATE FARM IS THERE.®

Providing Insurance and Financial Services

State Farm Insurance Companies • Home Offices: Bloomington, IL

Federal agents start post-storm arrests

Algiers man accused of shooting at copter

By Gwen Filosa
Staff writer

Federal agents arrested a young Algiers man early Tuesday after agents said he shot at a military rescue helicopter, U.S. Attorney Jim Letten said.

The arrest marked the first federal action against the lawlessness that preyed upon New Orleans in the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina.

Wendell L. Bailey, 20, was arrested outside the building from which, federal prosecutors said, he had fired a .22-caliber handgun at the helicopter, which was flying in darkness.

A criminal complaint filed against Bailey on Tuesday accuses him of the federal crimes of trying to damage an aircraft and being a felon in possession of a handgun. If convicted on both charges, Bailey could be sentenced to 30 years in prison.

Letten held Bailey's case up as the first federal arrest and promised more would come.

"He will be prosecuted very aggressively, federally," Letten said at the Emergency Operations Center in Baton Rouge, flanked by U.S. Attorney David Dugas of Baton Rouge and by officials of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms & Explosives.

Special ATF agents patrolling Algiers saw gunfire coming from an apartment window.

U.S. District Judge Sarah Vance, of the Eastern District, signed the arrest warrant. Bailey was booked at the temporary detention center set up by state officials in the storm-torn downtown of New Orleans, and is due in federal court in Baton Rouge today.

Special ATF agents patrolling Algiers saw gunfire coming from an apartment window.

Two young men then walked out of the building and were heard chatting about shooting at a helicopter. "They won't be back now," one of them said, according to an affidavit filed in U.S. District Court on Tuesday.

Inside the apartment, ATF special agents found a .22-caliber Rohm revolver and a .32-caliber Smith & Wesson revolver hidden beneath a mattress -- along with a box of 9 mm ammunition.

Letten said that under federal law, Bailey's home address cannot be released. He said he did not have the specific address at which ATF nabbed Bailey. The second young man who was with Bailey was interviewed by ATF agents but was not arrested.

Bailey has prior convictions for dealing marijuana and cocaine, Letten said. Bailey admitted to ATF agents that he was a felon on probation and he told them where the firearms were, Letten's office said.

At the time of the shooting, Letten said, a number of civil and military aircraft were in the air helping with evacuation, search and rescue, and delivering supplies.

State Attorney General Charles Foti Jr., the former criminal sheriff in Orleans Parish, plans to open up a second detention center in New Orleans, likely using an existing facility that was built to be a jail, Letten said.

Fires, smoke envelop parts of New Orleans

STAFF PHOTO BY ALEX BRANDON

NEW ORLEANS: Rubble is all that's left of several structures on Tuesday after a large fire cut a path through St. Andrew Street.

Finding a glimmer of hope

By Chris Rose
Columnist

The first time you see it . . . I don't know. Where are the words?

I got to town Monday afternoon. I braced myself, not knowing how it would make me feel, not knowing how much it would make me hurt.

I found out that I am one of the lucky ones. High ground. With that comes gratitude and wonder and guilt. The Higher Powers have handed me my house and all my stuff and now what? What is there?

I live Uptown, where all the fancy-pants houses are and they're all still here. Amid the devastation, they never looked so beautiful. They never looked more like hope. This swath of land is where this city will begin its recovery.

There are still homes and schools, playgrounds, stores, bars and restaurants. Not so many trees, I'm afraid. We'll have to do something about that.

The Circle K near my house was looted, but there are still ample supplies of cigarettes and booze. They just took what they needed. The hardware store and Perlis - the preppy clothing store - same thing.

Someone kicked in the window at Shoefty, a high-end shoe boutique, and what good a pair of Manolo Blahnik stilettos is going to do you right now, I don't know.

Idiots.

I myself was escorted out of the local Winn-Dixie by narcotics officers from Rusk County, Texas.

I told them I thought it was OK to take what we need. "And what do you need?" the supervisor asked me. I reached into my bag and held up a bottle of mouthwash.

I told him I will come back to this Winn-Dixie one day and pay for this bottle, and I will. I swear it.

Right by the entrance to the store, there is a huge pile of unsold newspapers stacked up from the last day they were delivered, Sunday, Aug. 28.

The Times-Picayune headline screams: KATRINA TAKES AIM.

Ain't that the truth? Funny, though: The people you see here - and there are many who stayed behind - they never speak her name. She is the woman who done us wrong.

I had the strangest dream last night, and this is true: I dreamt I was reading an ad in the paper for a hurricane-relief benefit concert at Zephyr Stadium and the headliner act was Katrina and the Waves.

They had that peppy monster hit back in the '80s, "Walking on Sunshine," the one they play on Claritin ads on TV and that almost seems funny in light of what happened.

Almost.

Riding my bike, I searched out my favorite places, my comfort zones. I found that Tipitina's is still there and that counts for something. Miss Mae's and Dick & Jenny's, ditto.

Domilise's po-boy shop is intact, although the sign fell and shattered, but the truth is, that sign needed to be replaced a long time ago.

I saw a dead guy on the front porch of a shotgun double on a working-class street and the only sound was wind chimes.

Everybody here has a dead guy story now. Everybody here will always be different.

I passed by the Valence Street Baptist Church and the fa□ade was ripped away and I walked in and stared at the altar amid broken stained glass and strewn Bibles and I got down on my knees and said thank you but why? why? why? and I'm not even anything close to Baptist. It just seemed like a place to take shelter from the storm in my head.

The rockers on my neighbor's front porch are undisturbed, like nothing ever happened. At my other neighbor's house - the ones who never take out their trash - a million kitchen bags are still piled in the mound that's always there and I never thought I'd be happy to see garbage, but I am.

Because it reminds me of my home. I haven't been down in the kill zone yet. I haven't seen the waters. I haven't been where all hope, life and property are lost.

I have only seen what I have seen and we took the hit and it is still here. This is where we'll make our start. This is where we'll make our stand.

And when everything gets back to normal - whenever that may be - I'm going to do what I've been putting off for a very long time and I'm going to walk next door and tell my neighbors that they really do need to start taking out their trash.

• • • • • •

Columnist Chris Rose can be reached at noroses@bellsouth.net.

Helicopters being used to fight blazes

By James Varney
Staff writer

Fires erupted Tuesday around New Orleans, casting a smoky pall over a city with a security situation clearly improved but still clotted with corpses and pockets of residents scavenging in a ruined landscape.

Embattled firefighters, shorthanded and dealing with low- or non-existent water pressure, relied on helicopters to battle fires burning at times simultaneously in various parts of the city. In the early morning, crews struggled to contain blazes in the 7th Ward near McDonogh No. 35 Senior High School, and another farther uptown in a neighborhood behind Trinity Church.

As the day progressed, a third broke out in Gentilly and a fourth in Bywater.

Police said a fifth fire burned in eastern New Orleans. No injuries were reported.

The copters made endless trips over the flaming landscape to the Mississippi River, where they dipped giant 2,000-gallon bags into the river and then carried them to the fire.

Each trip took about two minutes, but, handicapped by bad visibility and wind, it was difficult to pinpoint the long, white streams of water.

Consequently, firefighters said they were unable to extinguish fires quickly, and could only hope to contain them.

In addition, firefighters drove tankers that had been filled on the West Bank. Crews were reluctant to draft the filthy, standing water in the city for fear of spreading contaminants, authorities said. With each new fire, one or two vehicles are either stranded in water or knocked out of commission, their engines befouled by the bad water, New Orleans Fire Superintendent Charles Parent said.

The helicopters have been used in fighting wildfires, but on the urban level combining them with tankers was a novel tactic.

"We're writing the book as we go along," Parent said. He believes some of the fires may be attributable to arson, but that the more likely culprit is "human error."

Meanwhile, in staging areas throughout the city where the floodwaters showed signs of receding, crews from throughout the country began the grisly task of recovering bloated bodies.

"The bodies are floating in the East," New Orleans Police Department Deputy Superintendent Lonnie Swain said after a boat trip to that still isolated section of the city. "I didn't see that many personally, but the units I've talked to that have been working out there today tell me there's been quite a few of them."

NOPD Capt. Timothy Bayard, commander of the force's ad hoc marine units, declined to give specific numbers but reiterated his prediction that the body count would be, "in the thousands."

Immediately after Hurricane Katrina blew through, police scuba divers took to the waters in the search for survivors and the dead but became so violently ill that the tactic has been abandoned.

"We're facing some serious decon issues," said Jack Wise, a battalion chief with the Los Angeles City Fire Department, who has joined in the relief effort.

"Let me tell you how good it is first," Wise went on, stressing that the rescue of the living continued. Indeed, late Tuesday afternoon, on the downriver side of the canal, an airboat brought out a family of seven, including three children, one in diapers.

But Wise conceded the task is increasingly grim and that New Orleans is rapidly approaching a tipping point between rescuing the living, and merely recovering the dead.

"They're not floating everywhere, but, yes, they're there and we've gotten about 50 today," he said, noting his 14 boats had surveyed only small grids so far.

With New Orleans Mayor Ray Nagin insisting on a total evacuation of the city, some residents reported increased pressure from soldiers to pack up and get out, and security checkpoints began to proliferate as military teams asserted themselves in the face of lingering pockets of resistance.

"Why leave?" a bicyclist asked as he poked through refuse along Convention Center Boulevard looking for unopened bottles of water. A Drug Enforcement Agency team on Elysian Fields Avenue encountered two young men who explained their continuing presence in the city very simply: They "live here."

"No one lives in this city anymore," one of the heavily armed agents shot back.

Some of those who do, continue to prey upon survivors, police said. Although incidents of looting and lawlessness decline each day, there are still pockets of criminals spreading terror.

NOPD officers said they were concentrating operations in eastern New Orleans late Tuesday, where the 7th District has set up shop at the Crystal Palace banquet hall and is relying on aerial intelligence from federal teams and interviews with evacuees to identify trouble spots.

NOPD Superintendent Eddie Compass, a CNN camera team in tow, appeared Tuesday at the force's fluid staging area at the Harrah's Casino and said the situation in the city was unquestionably better.

"It's been heartbreaking, this tore us up," he said when asked about New Orleans' ordeal since Katrina. "We need more but we're getting more and it feels good to have help, thank God. Now I've got to get a hepatitis shot."

STAFF PHOTO BY JENNIFER ZDON

NEW ORLEANS: Two days after flames razed six homes at the corner of Upperline and Camp streets, a fire still burns on Tuesday.

NEW ORLEANS: A helicopter drops water on a large fire on St. Andrew Street that consumed several structures on Tuesday. Using 2,000-gallon bags, helicopters dipped water from the Mississippi River to fight the fires because there still is no water pressure in the city.

STAFF PHOTO BY ALEX BRANDON

Bush pledges probe in wake of Katrina response

He works on aid, schooling, shelter

By Bruce Alpert
Washington bureau

WASHINGTON - President Bush and congressional leaders promised Tuesday to investigate why the initial federal response to the devastation of Hurricane Katrina was, by wide agreement, slow and inadequate.

Bush, who is readying a $40 billion aid package to supplement the $10.5 billion approved by Congress last week, also met with Education Secretary Margaret Spellings to discuss ways to help school districts around the country that are taking in thousands of students displaced from their own schools by the hurricane.

"We must try to restore some sense of structure and normalcy to their lives as quickly as possible," Spellings said. "And that includes helping schools accommodate these new students, who will need books, clothes and other supplies."

Bush said now is not the time "for the blame game," but at some future date, he would personally oversee an investigation into how Katrina rescue efforts were handled by federal, state and local officials.

Bush said he is working with his Cabinet to develop a comprehensive plan for both immediate and long-term housing for the estimated 1 million people displaced by Katrina and to ensure that people can collect their Social Security checks and other benefits no matter where they are living.

He is sending Vice President Dick Cheney to the Gulf Coast region Thursday to evaluate recovery efforts.

Brian Richardson, spokesman for Sen. Mary Landrieu, D-La., said the nine-member Louisiana delegation is working together on legislation to spell out that people can collect Medicare, or Medicaid benefits, even if they don't have the normal paperwork required to qualify, and that schools can accept children even if they don't have a permanent address.

Richardson also said the Louisiana delegation wants to make sure more stringent requirements to gain bankruptcy protection don't go into effect in October, as scheduled, for those affected by the hurricane.

Sen. David Vitter, R-La., said Louisiana lawmakers also are looking for ways to ensure that Louisiana gets the financial aid it needs for upgrading New Orleans levees, for providing more financing for flood control and hurricane protection and for efforts to ease the loss of coastline and wetlands that make southern Louisiana so vulnerable to serious flooding from storms.

Congressional leaders vowed to work across party lines to help hurricane victims, and Senate Minority Leader Harry Reid, D-Nev., suggested the cost easily could reach $150 billion.

He called on the Senate to cancel plans to take up legislation to repeal the estate tax, and Republican leaders pulled it from the agenda.

House Speaker Dennis Hastert, R-Ill., who angered Louisiana officials by suggesting last week that it didn't make sense to rebuild New Orleans before pulling back from the statement, said he is committed to a "bipartisan, bicameral" approach to the serious challenges facing New Orleans and other devastated communities.

But there was still plenty of partisan wrangling.

House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif., said she asked Bush, during his meeting with congressional leaders, to fire Michael Brown, the embattled chief of the Federal Emergency Management Agency. "The president thanked me for my suggestion," Pelosi said afterwards.

Asked by a reporter whether Brown is still doing a "heck of a job," as the president said last week, White House spokesman Scott McClellan said: "There are people working round-the-clock with FEMA - the secretary, the FEMA director, and many others. And we've got to do everything we can in support of their efforts to make sure people are getting what they need."

Jefferson Parish President Aaron Broussard, a Democrat, said he wants wholesale changes.

"Take whatever idiot they have at the top of whatever agency and give me a better idiot. Give me a caring idiot. Give me a sensitive idiot. Just don't give me the same idiot," Broussard said on CBS Tuesday.

On a separate issue, President Bush said he agreed with the Rev. Jesse Jackson that those displaced by the hurricane should not be called refugees.

"The people we're talking about are not refugees," Bush said Tuesday to a group of representatives for community and faith-based organizations. "They are Americans, and they need the help and love and compassion of our fellow citizens."

IMPORTANT NOTICE TO
ST. PAUL TRAVELERS CUSTOMERS

WE'RE HERE TO HELP.

If you have suffered a loss, please call us as soon as your family and property are safe from further harm.

Our claim services representatives are standing by 24 hours a day, 7 days a week to take your claim.

For Travelers Home & Auto claims, please call
800.CLAIM33
(800.252.4633)

For Travelers Flood claims, please call
800.356.6663

For St. Paul Travelers and Travelers Business claims, please call 800.238.6225

For St. Paul Business claims, please call
800.STPAUL1
(800.787.2851)

St. Paul Travelers employees affected or displaced by the hurricane, please call the Employee Service Unit at 800.441.4378

TRAVELERS
travelers.com
The Travelers Indemnity Company
and its property casualty affiliates
One Tower Square, Hartford, CT 06183

ST PAUL TRAVELERS
stpaultravelers.com
St. Paul Fire and Marine Insurance Company
and its property casualty affiliates
385 Washington St., Saint Paul, MN 55102

Threat of disease grows by the day

N.O. lucky so far, health official says

By James Varney
Staff writer

Predictions of medical doom have already descended on New Orleans in the wake of Hurricane Katrina, but so far the dreaded diseases commonly associated with primitive sanitary conditions have yet to make themselves known, experts said.

"I haven't seen any evidence that anyone is infected at this time," said Dr. Jullette Saussy, the director of EMS operations for the city.

Indeed, fears that outbreaks of cholera, chigella or salmonella will decimate the surviving population are common with natural disasters. They ran rampant after Hurricane Mitch in Central America in 1998 and after the tsunami that swamped the Indian Ocean rim last year. In both those cases, thankfully, widespread deaths did not result from post-disaster illnesses.

That said, Saussy said it would be foolish for New Orleans to ignore the danger.

"It is going to be a growing and ongoing concern," she said.

With bloated corpses drifting through the mulch-colored water that still stands in vast swaths of the city, the likelihood that residents who need to wade through the vile stew will get sick skyrockets. In addition, the city's usually hardy mosquito population is anticipated to boom with uncountable new breeding grounds forming in the water.

And as if those factors weren't enough, the city reeks, an aroma of excrement, trash and decomposition that assaults the nostrils even when flying above the devastation in a helicopter. The city's best hope, Saussy said, was to remove potential victims.

"First of all, we need to get the people out of here, then we can remove the water and the bodies," she said.

That process continued Monday, with military helicopters and state assets like school buses taking evacuees to points north and west beyond the floodwaters or Louis Armstrong International Airport.

At times it seemed as if New Orleans had disturbed a swarm of choppers, as Blackhawks, Chinooks and other military machines hovered over precise points in the city, suspended against the skyline as if on wires.

Down by the Convention Center, flights rolled one after the other, taking the last strands of evacuees to safety. Those helicopters also carried sick patients, with Saussy and her crews sometimes carrying elderly residents with oxygen bottles and other medical apparatus into the bellies of the helicopters.

That operation is a federal one, and while Saussy and her colleagues had nothing but high praise for the current military effort, she struggled to control her rage when asked about the timing and scope of the federal effort since the storm.

"I am beyond frustrated. I simply can't talk about it."

Similarly, she said she had not met with any Centers for Disease Control and Prevention or other federal health officials, although they are reported setting up shop in New Orleans. That coordination, as well as public knowledge of what must be done, will have to improve if the city hopes to dodge health problems. Residents who fear they are sick have few options.

"Currently the city has no medical facilities open," she said, adding there were no temporary tents or other sites where residents could get tested.

"What people have to do is get out."

FOCUSING ON DISEASE PREVENTION

Volunteer doctors are moving into the Gulf Coast region to care for the sick and try to prevent some of the predictable diseases that occur days after flooding.

Risks monitored by medical professionals after a flood:

- Contamination of drinking water can cause diarrhea and lead to dehydration
- Contact with polluted water may include wound infections, dermatitis, conjunctivitis, ear, nose and throat infections
- Standing water increases the risk of mosquito-borne diseases like West Nile virus

Source: Centers for Disease Control and Prevention

AP GRAPHIC

OUR HEART GOES OUT TO THOSE AFFECTED BY HURRICANE KATRINA.

Policyholders of Encompass Insurance who have been affected by the recent hurricane, please call 1-800-588-7400 to report your loss, 24 hours a day, 7 days a week.

The people of Encompass would like to let you know that our thoughts are with you.

The Encompass Catastrophe Team is available for claims handling, information or other assistance at 1-800-340-3016. For more information, you can also call or visit your independent agent.

Rest assured, Encompass stands ready to help you during this difficult time.

ENCOMPASS® INSURANCE

We're part of this community, too.

So we've come together to help people reconnect and rebuild.

To make it convenient for our customers and associates to contribute to Hurricane Katrina relief efforts, all 3,800 Wal-Mart and SAM'S CLUB® locations have established collection centers to accept financial donations. We've also set up links for donations on www.walmartfacts.com. Everything collected will go to relief organizations like the American Red Cross and The Salvation Army, so please contribute today.

THE SALVATION ARMY 1-800-SAL-ARMY

American Red Cross 1-800-HELP-NOW

And to help those who need to search for loved ones or send them information, every Wal-Mart store and SAM'S CLUB location has established an emergency contact service. Anyone in need can post messages about their situation or search for news of family and friends affected by the hurricane. This service is also available on www.walmartfacts.com, which also lists additional services we're providing at area stores.

Whether you need to get help or want to give help, Wal-Mart and SAM'S CLUB are committed to providing support as we continue working to reconnect and rebuild our communities.

WAL★MART SAM'S CLUB

We're all in this together.

SPORTS

SPLIT DECISION?

Saints face logistical obstacles in both Baton Rouge and San Antonio

By Mike Triplett
Staff writer

SAN ANTONIO - With the tides shifting between Baton Rouge and San Antonio every day, the best bet is that the Saints probably will play some of their home games at both places this season.

There are hurdles that need to be overcome in both cities - particularly in an overcrowded Baton Rouge, which already is stretched with its hurricane relief efforts. But Baton Rouge also appears to be the favored destination of the NFL, of certain members of the Saints' organization and of public opinion.

On Tuesday, Saints owner Tom Benson pledged his support of playing games in Baton Rouge as well - in the wake of several reports that he was pushing hard for all the games to be played in San Antonio.

"The entire New Orleans Saints organization would like to extend its prayers and best wishes to all of our fans throughout Louisiana and the Gulf South region," Benson said in a statement issued after a conference call between Saints and NFL officials. "We are currently working with the NFL and expect to be in a position shortly to announce the sites for our remaining 2005 home schedule.

"I have expressed my desire to the NFL to play games in Baton Rouge, La., to the extent circumstances allow."

That last part is the key, however, as logistics may prove difficult in Baton Rouge. For one thing, hotel rooms are in short supply, in addition to the kind of security and emergency forces necessary for an NFL game.

And although LSU and Louisiana government officials have supported the idea of the Saints playing in their home state, there are still financial concerns that need to be met.

LSU does not need to profit from the games, but the budget is an issue.

"We'll do everything we can to be good Louisiana citizens, extend a great invitation," LSU athletic director Skip Bertman said. "But we can't ask LSU fans, who subsidize the athletic department, to subsidize any Saints activity. I'm talking about maintenance, expenses that kind of thing. Some amount of money has to be paid.

"We think it would be good if the Saints stayed here. □ We'll do whatever it takes, except spend money."

Bertman said most of the details will need to be worked out by politicians and that so far nobody from the LSU athletic department has spoken with anyone from the Saints. But a source familiar with the discussions said LSU is working out some "deal points," such as financial feasibility, who would provide security and who would be in charge of ticketing. The discussions were characterized as preliminary.

Speaking of ticket sales, Benson put to rest some concerns about season-ticket refunds in his statement.

"Saints ticket holders unable to attend games, wherever played, should also be assured that they will be permitted to request refunds. Specifics of the refund policy will be publicized in the upcoming days," Benson said.

He concluded his statement by saying, "The New Orleans Saints look forward to the start of the NFL regular season this Sunday and to having the club be a source of pride and joy in these difficult days. As we move forward together, the Saints look forward to serving as a leader in the rebuilding and revitalization of our great community. Towards this effort, the Saints have established the 'New Orleans Saints Hurricane Katrina Relief Fund.' Further information for those individuals/companies interested in contributing will be announced shortly."

State's concerns

Some state and team officials have been openly concerned in recent days about Benson's plans for the Saints, both short term and long term. But those fears have seemingly been eased somewhat.

Sen. David Vitter said in a statement Tuesday that he "had a very good, reassuring conversation with Tom Benson about the need for all of us to join together in rebuilding Greater New Orleans, including its jobs and business base. In that conversation, Mr. Benson assured me of two things:

"1. He is eager to maximize the number of Saints home games that could be played in Tiger Stadium consistent with first meeting the medical, housing, and other needs of evacuees in the region.

"2. He is eager for the Saints to return to New Orleans as soon as possible and for his organization to be part of our rebuilding effort and long-term future."

The Saints' executive vice president of administration, Arnold Fielkow, also told The Times-Picayune on Monday night that he believes the team is making a commitment to Louisiana.

Fielkow, who had expressed concerns to several media outlets that Benson was leaning strongly toward playing games in San Antonio, said the team is "hopeful of playing several games in Baton Rouge this season" and that "it is the collective hope of our organization that Saints football will return to New Orleans as soon as possible."

NFL spokesman Joe Browne also expressed the league's support for playing games in Baton Rouge, saying he hopes the Saints eventually will be able to play home games there, according to The Associated Press.

Where the Saints will play their home games ultimately is the decision of NFL commissioner Paul Tagliabue.

The Saints were not thrilled with the commissioner's decision to move their first home game to the home site of the visiting team, the New York Giants, on Monday, Sept. 19 - though the team understands it will be used as a primetime showcase for the league's hurricane relief efforts.

The Saints have not been given any assurances that they will avoid playing games at the site of other visiting teams this year.

That leaves San Antonio as the most feasible site, at least early on - and the favorite choice of the Saints, for reasons that have nothing to do with the owner's desire to move his franchise to the Alamo City.

The Saints are headquartered here, and many players, coaches and staff members will move their families here for the next four months. Playing home games in San Antonio's Alamodome would mean less travel and perhaps even a larger available ticket sales base than in Baton Rouge.

Several players and Coach Jim Haslett admitted this week that they would like to play at least some of their home games in San Antonio.

Said Haslett: "I would like to have them here because we are practicing here, but I think we owe it to the fans of New Orleans, the Gulf Coast, all the people in Baton Rouge, all the way up to Lafayette and Shreveport □ to play a couple games back in Baton Rouge, if we can."

Mum on move

The city of San Antonio is not officially campaigning for the Saints' home games, in an effort to not appear opportunistic in the wake of a tragedy. Mayor Phil Hardberger has said more than once that the city's concentration is on helping the more than 10,000 evacuees now sheltered here.

But behind the scenes, San Antonio officials reportedly have been seeking corporate sponsors and trying to put together an incentives package for the Saints, including guaranteed sellouts in the 65,000-seat Alamodome, which hosted the Saints and Vikings in a 2001 preseason game.

Alamodome director Mike Abington said there have been official and unofficial contacts with the Saints over the past week and that he is preparing to make the stadium available if the Saints and the NFL make the request.

"It's hard to say (what will happen). They have not given us any firm commitment. We have made a commitment to them that we will accommodate them should they need us in any way they can," Abington said. "It's quite an operation to put on an NFL game, especially on short notice, but we're working on all the details right now in anticipation of knowing something. Kind of like waiting for a baby to be born."

Abington, a Louisiana native from the Shreveport area, said while the town would love to host NFL games, he is not making a sales pitch and he "won't allow myself to lose sight of why all this is happening."

Benson's interest in moving his team permanently to San Antonio - where he has longstanding personal and professional ties and keeps a second home - has long been rumored. Those rumors have heated up in recent days, with reports of sources saying he wants to move the team there for good next season.

But sources have been saying both on and off the record in recent days that they don't believe Benson has made such a decision - especially with so much uncertainty surrounding his native New Orleans.

The fear that New Orleans may not be ready to host the Saints or financially able to afford them is legitimate. And the Superdome may never again host an NFL game.

But then again, perhaps federal relief could aid in rebuilding the city and the Dome, which also served - albeit tragically - as a relief shelter.

Any discussions of Benson moving the team would be too preliminary at this point. Even if he wanted to move his team to San Antonio, it would take approval of 24 of the 32 league owners, and the proximity to the Houston and Dallas markets would become an issue.

Tulane exploring several options

By Benjamin Hochman and Fred Robinson
Staff writers

DALLAS - Chris Scelfo calls it "Tulane Tech."

Beginning Monday, that's where the coach's football players will attend class and practice. After a whirlwind of conference calls, 11th-hour maneuvers and numerous Advils, Tulane administrators pieced together an unprecedented arrangement for the football team - sending it to Louisiana Tech - and the other athletic teams - dividing the teams onto four Texas campuses for at least the fall semester.

The football players, currently in Dallas, are expected to travel to Ruston on Thursday to register for classes, and then return to Dallas that night for practices Friday morning. The Wave will remain at the DoubleTree Hotel through the weekend and travel to Ruston on Monday - the same day classes start at Louisiana Tech - and will begin classes one day later.

As to where Tulane will play, Scelfo said Tuesday afternoon, "We've got it done," in reference to nearby Shreveport's Independence Bowl Stadium, which the city has offered free of charge. Scelfo said the team might try to play one game at Louisiana Tech's Aillet Stadium to show gratitude to the school.

But Tulane athletic director Rick Dickson said he won't know for sure until today. Dickson said Tuesday's goal was to coordinate all other Tulane athletes into hubs of Dallas and Houston before sending them to four other schools - Texas Tech, Rice, Southern Methodist and Texas A&M. On Tuesday afternoon, Dickson began addressing the home stadium issues. Tulane's first game is Sept. 17, when it will host Mississippi State.

Dickson said the city of Mobile has offered Ladd-Peebles Stadium. And Dickson said Florida State athletic director Dave Hart called him and pointed out possible arrangements for Tulane to play some of its games on the Seminoles' campus.

Dickson said it is possible all of the team's games won't be played in the same stadium.

MONEY

Convention industry out of work

Center won't reopen until March 31 at best

By Rebecca Mowbray
Business writer

New Orleans will not hold any citywide conventions until the end of March at the earliest because of damage to the Ernest N. Morial Convention Center, the building that is considered the engine of the New Orleans tourism industry.

"We have canceled all conventions utilizing the Convention Center through the end of this year, and we expect in the next day or so to cancel those through March 31," said Stephen Perry, president of the New Orleans Metropolitan Convention and Visitors Bureau. "The Convention Center has severe damage."

Hurricane Katrina damaged the facility's roof, allowing water to leak into the building. And after so many people gathered there last week looking for refuge in the aftermath of the storm, the inside of the building is "not inhabitable" for meetings and all the surfaces need to be replaced, Perry said. Electricity has been restored to the building, but there is no air conditioning or water.

Center officials estimate it will cost in the "high tens of millions" to repair the building. Perry said he is working with Louisiana's congressional delegation to get federal funding to repair the building because it is such a key economic driver and will help restore employment in the region.

"We expect to have it back online next year, better than ever, if we get federal assistance," Perry said. Earlier this year, officials had hired a consultant to consider ways to freshen up the center.

There is no word on whether the Phase IV expansion of the Convention Center will go forward. The addition is supposed to expand the facility by nearly 50 percent, to 1.6 million square feet, making it the fourth largest in the country. After being mired in litigation for 20 months, the contract to build Phase IV was signed in August.

"There has been literally zero discussion on that. Until we get through this week, that's on the back burner," Perry said.

Meanwhile, the Greater New Orleans Hotel and Lodging Association is trying to survey damage at New Orleans hotels and is hoping to have power restored at hotels before other buildings. The idea is that the hotels can house emergency management crews, construction workers and electricity technicians and keep hospitality workers employed, Perry said.

For now, New Orleans will be out of service during the prime convention months of the year. Some of the largest conventions scheduled to be held in New Orleans in the coming months are being rescheduled.

"We have received about 40 inquiries from meetings that were scheduled to take place in New Orleans," said Erika Yowell, spokeswoman for the Las Vegas Convention and Visitors Authority.

The LVCVA is sharing leads with other private convention centers and hotels with large amounts of meeting space in Las Vegas to try to nail down the business. In the meantime, Las Vegas has confirmed bookings for meetings of the National Association of Convenience Stores, the Distribution Business Management Association and the Association for Career and Technical Education, Yowell said.

Other large groups that had been scheduled to meet in New Orleans will go to other cities.

The American Society for Microbiology, which was scheduled to meet in New Orleans in September, will instead meet in Washington, D.C., in December, according to the group's Web site.

The National Business Aviation Association, whose 2001 convention in New Orleans had to be rescheduled because of the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks, will meet in Orlando, Fla., instead of New Orleans because of Hurricane Katrina.

"We are planning to go back whenever the city is able to accommodate our event," Vice President Dan Hubbard said.

The Dallas Convention and Visitors Bureau is working with "about a dozen major conventions" that had been scheduled to come to New Orleans. To create more openings in its convention calendar, Dallas is trying to move conventions on its calendar up a few days or back a few days.

But the Dallas CVB, led by Phillip Jones, former secretary of Culture, Recreation and Tourism for Louisiana, has offered to swap years with New Orleans for groups that meet in both cities. For example, if a group was scheduled to meet in December 2005 in New Orleans and December 2007 in Dallas, Dallas would take this year's meeting to give New Orleans time to rebuild.

Perry said the convention business will be painfully slow in coming months because New Orleans doesn't want to bring convention customers back until the city is able to receive them. But he is optimistic the convention business will rebound stronger than ever because the Convention Center and downtown hotels will be updated as part of the rebuilding process, and he is encouraged because convention groups have indicated they want to return, despite the risk of hurricanes and the violent images they saw on television in the wake of the storm.

"They are telling us, 'When you are back up, we cannot wait to come back to New Orleans and put our meeting there and help you,' " Perry said.

Jones said he believes that groups will respond in different ways to what they've seen on television. "I think it will have a negative impact on some groups, and others will want to support New Orleans in the same way that many groups wanted to meet in New York after 9/11," he said.

Jones said he thinks New Orleans can bounce back but that it will be important for the convention and visitors bureau to send out signals that the city is safe and will re-open.

"The core of the historic district of New Orleans, which serves as the cornerstone to the tourism industry, is intact, so you can rebuild around that. The question is, how soon?" Jones said. "People need to be reassured that the tourism industry will rebuild in New Orleans and in Louisiana, and when the rebuilding is complete, New Orleans will remain one of the top tourism destinations in the country."

For now, that may be tough. The convention bureau's building in New Orleans was damaged by the storm and is now occupied by the Colorado National Guard. Convention staffers are spread between Lt. Gov. Mitch Landrieu's office in Baton Rouge and in cities around the country. Fortunately, the convention bureau was able to retrieve its computer database Tuesday to begin reaching out to convention customers.

NO MEETINGS FOR A WHILE

With the Ernest N. Morial Convention Center shuttered, New Orleans, the fifth-largest convention city in the United States, will be without much of that business for at least a few months.

MAJOR NEW ORLEANS CONVENTIONS FORCED TO CANCEL OR RELOCATE:

| Name | Planned dates | Planned attendance |
|---|---|---|
| American Society for Microbiology | Sept. 19-23 | 16,000 |
| Specialty Graphic Imaging Association | Sept. 26-Oct. 1 | 11,250 |
| AARP | Sept. 28-Oct. 1 | 20,000 |
| Sweet Adelines International | Oct. 4-8 | 10,000 |
| American Society of Anesthesiologists | Oct. 22-26 | 16,000 |
| Natl. Association of Convenience Stores | Oct. 29-31 | 23,000 |

Source: Tradeshow Week, New Orleans Convention and Visitors Bureau

NEW YORK TIMES GRAPHIC

Hibernia likely won't be acquired today

Capital One already put off deal once

Mary Judice
Business writer

The delayed acquisition by Capital One Financial Corp. of Hibernia Corp. is scheduled to close today, but on Tuesday speculation remained whether the new deadline will be met.

Capital One, which had planned to buy Hibernia on Sept. 1 for $5.35 billion, delayed the closing for a week after Hurricane Katrina took out the bank company's operations center in New Orleans and flooded branches in the metropolitan area. Many branches have been shuttered for more than a week.

In a joint announcement the day before the deal was scheduled to close last week, the two parties said they "had mutually agreed" to reschedule the planned closing to today "as a result of the devastation and disruption caused by Hurricane Katrina."

The announcement sparked heavy trading in both stocks as traders reported that they began to have doubts about the deal. Hibernia shares fell much of the week but Capital One shares gyrated.

Capital One did not return a call Tuesday and a Hibernia spokesperson said no announcement was planned.

Hibernia president Herb Boydstun said Monday he could not comment on the delay announced a week ago.

"There is a contract that both sides are called on to do certain things," he said. "I don't think it is appropriate for me to talk about this transaction."

He said the two banks would issue a press release laying out what they would do to rebuild the bank.

On Monday, Boydstun said the bank had reopened 47 branches and was reopening four to five branches every day or two.

Hibernia is one of the largest businesses in New Orleans. It owns the Hibernia National Bank, which has branches in Louisiana and Texas that hold more than $22 billion worth of loans and other assets.

Analysts said Capital One faces more risk in buying Hibernia as a result of the storm. Hibernia likely will suffer significant short-term damage, including loss of deposits, the inability of customers to pay small business loans and mortgages and actual damage to bank property.

Ed Groshans, banking analyst at Fox Pitt Kelton in New York, said he thinks there is a 50-50 chance the deal will close today.

"They will close the deal but not tomorrow," he said Tuesday. Groshans said the signing will take place in a week or two because of the logistics of getting the parties together at this time.

He said he thinks shareholders will not be affected, so long as the deal takes place today or soon at the previously announced terms.

For each share of Hibernia stock, shareholders are to receive an amount equal to $15.35 in cash plus 0.2261 of a share of Capital One stock based on an average of the stock price for the 5 days prior to the closing. That means each Hibernia share would be worth about $33.72, based on the math, if the deal closes today.

Hibernia stock has been trading below that level. On Tuesday it closed at $31.40.

Normally, before such a merger, the two prices would be very close. Because the prices have not been close, that has created speculation that the deal will be postponed again or renegotiated.

However, some have pointed out that the gap has narrowed, which implies the professional traders started to think the deal would be done today. Hibernia stock was up 84 cents Tuesday while Capital One's was down $1.54 to $80.50.

"I don't think the long-term finances have changed so they could renegotiate," Groshans said.

While he said "there will be pain getting the infrastructure of the bank in New Orleans up and running," Hibernia will benefit from the revitalization of the community and the rebuilding by its customers and it will recoup losses with insurance settlements and payments from the Federal Emergency Management Agency.

Capital One of McLean, Va., has said that 54 percent of Hibernia shareholders had chosen to receive Capital One common stock, 33 percent had asked for cash and 13 percent did not make a valid election. The maximum amount of cash Capital One will pay is $2.38 billion.

To BP Employees Impacted by Hurricane Katrina

Thankfully, we have been in contact with all of you. Please stay in touch with us so that we may provide you with details about BP's Humanitarian Assistance Program.

A variety of help is available to you including the following:

- Supplies such as food, water and generators
- Interest-free loans for expenses
- Temporary lodging
- Daily per diem while in temporary living quarters
- Car rental or rental reimbursement
- Cash for basic family needs
- Expenses for child, elder or pet care

BP Employees, please call BP's toll-free 24-hour assistance hotline

1-866-850-7768

to access this network of available resources.

bp

OUR OPINIONS

No time for turf wars

People at all levels of government will have to answer for what they did and didn't do in the days before and after Hurricane Katrina. The Federal Emergency Management Agency has earned scorching criticism for its day-late-and-billions-short response to the ghastly crisis in New Orleans. And maybe it was only a matter of time before officials at FEMA and its parent organization, the U.S. Department of Homeland Security, began looking for others to blame.

Homeland Security Secretary Michael Chertoff recently maintained that the hurricane destroyed state and local governments' ability to respond to emergencies, and he blamed that breakdown for the calamity that has overtaken New Orleans. Other federal officials say Gov. Kathleen Blanco's reluctance to share command of the state's National Guard troops with Washington has hampered the rescue effort by sowing confusion about who is in charge.

But accusing other government agencies of protecting turf is an awfully convenient dodge, a way of running from the stink of death that enveloped parts of the city over the past week. And if Blanco is gun-shy about giving more power over New Orleans' recovery to the likes of FEMA Director Michael Brown, whose previous employer was the International Arabian Horse Association, can anyone fault her?

Let's be clear: Officials in New Orleans and elsewhere in Louisiana are hardly blameless in this tragedy. Official preparations for the storm centered on an evacuation plan designed to hasten the flow of private vehicles out of the city. This system worked well, and many more lives would have been lost without it. But as is now obvious, the plan did not take sufficient account of those who would not or could not evacuate on their own.

No federal presence was evident as the storm in the Gulf gathered strength and chugged toward us. If Blanco and Mayor Ray Nagin thought in the days before landfall that the federal government wasn't pulling its weight, they should have said so loudly and frankly.

In Louisiana, public officials constantly tiptoe around one another's fragile egos and delicate sensibilities. Once New Orleans was in ruins, of course, Nagin called upon the Bush administration to stop holding press conferences and start saving lives. On national television Sunday, Jefferson Parish President Aaron Broussard accused FEMA of turning back Wal-Mart trucks containing drinking water and nixing the Coast Guard's plans to provide diesel fuel. Broussard went so far as to accuse the federal bureaucracy of murder.

None of this means Louisiana can handle the post-hurricane crisis alone. Quite the contrary; the tragedy of Katrina would be too much for any one state to bear, much less a state as poor and vulnerable as ours. FEMA and other federal agencies responded quickly and effectively to past catastrophes, and this one should have been no different.

For that reason, it was a relief when Blanco hired James Lee Witt, who enhanced FEMA's reputation when he headed the agency during the Clinton administration, to advise her on the reconstruction process. No one will benefit if the local, state and federal agencies responsible for responding to disasters end up tripping over each other. Clear lines of command might well speed up the recovery, and putting someone of Witt's expertise in charge of the process ought to help.

Inevitably, there already have been calls in Congress for an independent commission to examine the relief effort. Such a study might help emergency-management agencies in the future figure out how not to respond to a catastrophic hurricane.

But an independent commission won't address what ought to be everyone's immediate priority: getting New Orleanians to safety and getting the reconstruction under way. New Orleans needs the unified, able, dynamic leadership that FEMA officials so far have been unable to offer. The need for a cooperative spirit among leaders of the metro area has been talked about for years. That has happened in fits and starts in the past. Now, though, everyone has to come together to work for the good of the entire community.

"Anybody who would just sit there and hid like that has to be a little off."

HOWARD JOHNSTON, boat driver

STAFF PHOTO BY JENNIFER ZDON

While Deputy Paul Chavez, left, and others from the Sheriff's Department in Albuquerque, N.M., patrol her neighborhood Tuesday, Uptown resident Sheila Mossop contemplates whether she should leave her home at the corner of Upperline and Camp streets. The home is next door to six homes that burned two days ago. 'I can't say how it burned because I fear for my life,' said Mossop, who didn't want to leave her two puppies.

Rescuers finding it hard to bring residents to safety

Many prefer to stay in flooded homes

By Brian Thevenot
Staff writer

Roosevelt Kyles came out of the front door of his flooded lower 9th Ward home, a Ziplock back full of medicine in his mouth and a dingy shirt in his hand, trying to keep both out of the chest-high water.

Kyles already had turned down two offers to take him to safety, the first time ignoring the teary pleas of his wife, who left without him. Across the street from his home, a bloated body floated near three homes that had gas leaks bubbling up through the floodwaters.

Kyles tried to turn down yet another offer Sunday, negotiating with volunteer rescue workers to give him water instead of a ride to safety. He had run out of water and couldn't take the many medicines he needed to survive.

Volunteer worker Paul Washburn, 23, who had come in Saturday from Colorado, gave him an ultimatum: No water, unless you get in this boat.

"This is your final opportunity," Washburn said from the bow of one of the two boats on a rescue mission.

"OK. Let me get my pants,'' Kyles finally relented, before disappearing back into the house.

After heaving him onto the boat, Washburn grilled him about his many health conditions and recent surgeries and handed him bottles of warm Gatorade and water to drink. Kyles at one point seemed annoyed at the questions.

"Don't preach at me, man. I took my medicines a while ago,'' Kyles said.

The rescue operations that continued in the lower 9th Ward took a grim and bizarre turn this week as volunteer boats slowly navigated polluted waters listening intently for screams over the roar of passing helicopters. Some victims, like Kyles, didn't want to be saved at all, apparently in the belief that they could survive until the floodwaters receded.

"It's not going to be a week - that water won't go down for a month,'' Washburn had shouted to Kyles through his screened porch.

Just before picking up Kyles, the team of two rescue boats had seen another man in a wrecked tan apartment complex.

"We're coming to get you! Wait there!" yelled New Orleans Police Officer Mike Stalbert of the 3rd District Taskforce.

"I don't want to go," the man yelled back, before disappearing behind the graffiti-covered second-story walls, refusing to listen to any more of the rescuers' pleas.

The scene baffled one of the boat's drivers, Howard Johnston of Baton Rouge.

"Anybody who would just sit there and hid like that has to be a little off," he said.

Yet refusals of rescue efforts have not been at all uncommon.

Whether out of shell shock, mental disease or a desire to protect what's left of their property, many trapped flood victims have refused help, rescue workers have reported.

Cut off from the flood of worldwide media reports about Hurricane Katrina, many also seem to believe the waters would recede and their lives go back to normal.

State not facing bankruptcy, officials say

But bond rating firms cast wary eye on government debt

By Robert Travis Scott
Capital bureau

BATON ROUGE - Louisiana's government faces enormous financial challenges as a result of Hurricane Katrina, but the state will be able to pay its bills and is not facing bankruptcy, top state officials say.

Parishes and other local governments in the storm-damaged areas are under even greater financial stress, but the state is prepared to help where necessary, state Treasurer John Kennedy said.

With estimated damages that could top $22 billion, Katrina is the worst storm ever to hit the United States, according to the New York bond rating firm Standard & Poor's, which has placed the state, local governments and several agencies in the area on CreditWatch, indicating they may have problems in making future debt payments.

Katrina ravaged several wealthy parishes previously populated by more than a million people and thousands of businesses that paid sales and income taxes and fees contributing to the annual state budget. No state official has predicted how much of the economy can be restored or how soon that could happen, drawing into question how the state budget might have to be altered to keep it balanced, as required by law.

STAFF PHOTO BY ALEX BRANDON

Commissioner of Administration Jerry Luke LeBlanc said Tuesday that the statewide financial impact of Hurricane Katrina - and its ensuing flooding and fires, such as the one at Gov. Nichols Wharf that left part of it a smoldering heap - is largely unknown, making it impossible to predict what measures will have to be taken to keep the Louisiana's accounts in order.

"The state is going to meet its obligations," said Jerry Luke LeBlanc, who as commissioner of administration acts as the governor's budget chief. As for bankruptcy, "we're not even close," he said.

Still, LeBlanc said, the impact on the state's tax and revenue base is unknown, making it impossible to predict what measures will have to be taken to keep the state's accounts in order.

"The breadth and scope of this is larger than anything that anyone has ever dealt with," LeBlanc said. "The costs are going to be staggering."

State officials already have spoken with Wall Street bond rating agencies to discuss the state's ability to pay debts, and economists are trying to get a sense of what the impact might be, he said.

Greg Albrecht, an economist with the state's Legislative Fiscal Office, is attempting to estimate that impact. He is trying to figure how many people are now unemployed, not all of whom will get jobless benefits.

"It's not just how many people, but for how long," Albrecht said.

Once Jefferson Parish has its lights back on and people begin to repopulate, it will become a staging area for Orleans businesses and citizens to remake the city, he said.

"I don't think the state's just going to fall over the edge," Albrecht said. "I think the bounce-back will be quicker than we might think at first."

When devastating hurricanes have struck other states, those economies eventually were boosted by money and jobs generated by federal aid, insurance compensation and the process of rebuilding, both LeBlanc and Kennedy said.

"In all those cases, the economic and revenue picture exceeded the levels prior to the incident," LeBlanc said.

STATE OF SHOCK

STAFF PHOTO BY RUSTY COSTANZA

ORLEANS-JEFFERSON LINE: More than a week after Hurricane Katrina hammered the region, standing water covers a deserted Airline Drive at the Jefferson-Orleans parish line.

Everywhere you looked in southeast Louisiana, from Orleans to Jefferson to St. Tammany to Plaquemines, the scene was largely the same Tuesday: devastation. Amid it all, however, were scattered signs of progress, signs that the worst might be behind us, even if the pain of it all is still unbearably fresh.

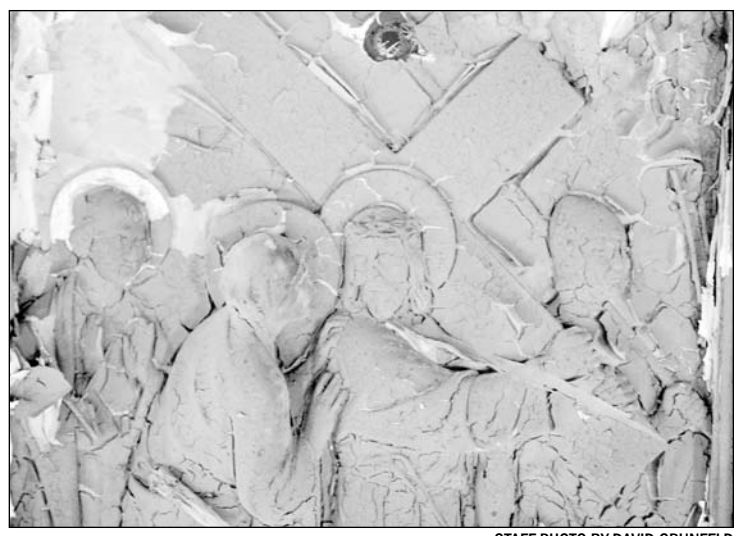
STAFF PHOTO BY MICHAEL DeMOCKER

ST. TAMMANY PARISH: Slidell resident Linda Noggerath scans what little remains of her Lakeview Drive home. She and her husband, Richard, had owned the home since 1970.

JEFFERSON PARISH: The shattered façade of the Galleria in Metairie looms over Interstate 10.



STAFF PHOTO BY JENNIFER ZDON

STAFF PHOTO BY JENNIFER ZDON

ORLEANS PARISH: Rescue operations continued Tuesday for man and beast alike. Members of the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals have been scouring New Orleans for pets left behind in the mass evacuation. Among them are Allison Cardona, above, shown carrying a pair of cats at an Uptown New Orleans boat launch area near Napoleon and St. Charles avenues.

STAFF PHOTO BY DAVID GRUNFELD

PLAQUEMINES PARISH: A Station of the Cross, in which Christ carries his cross on the way to his crucifixion - and eventual resurrection - strains to be seen through a layer of caked-on mud at St. Patrick's Catholic Church in Port Sulphur.

CYAN MAGENTA YELLOW BLACK
HOUMA COURIER EXXON SPOT COLOR 09/07/05 PAGE 16

Notice to ExxonMobil and Chalmette Refining employees affected by Hurricane Katrina.

Our deepest sympathies are extended to our employees and to all those from the communities along the Gulf Coast who lost family and friends and whose lives have been severely disrupted as a result of Hurricane Katrina.

In the aftermath of the storm, we know that many of our employees in the affected areas have lost their homes and property. We are anxious to make contact to ensure that you and your families are safe and to discuss any Company assistance you may need.

We therefore request that all of our employees affected by Hurricane Katrina contact the Company as soon as they are able to do so. If you have not already done so, you should contact your supervisor or the Employee Assistance Line at 1-877-294-8617.

For more information please go to exxonmobil.com.

ExxonMobil

HURRICANE KATRINA AFTERMATH

2,500 still sleeping in airport

Takeoffs balloon to 3,800 a day

By Matt Scallan
Kenner bureau

More than 500 people rode out Hurricane Katrina at Louis Armstrong International Airport, but the number quickly rose to 5,000 in the storm's aftermath as evacuees showed up at a shelter where food and water were scarce, airport officials said Tuesday.

Eight days after the storm, more than 2,500 people are still sleeping at the airport, although most of them now are not evacuees but uniformed military or law enforcement personnel.

The number of takeoffs and landings has jumped from the pre-storm average of 700 per day to as many as 3,800. Most of those are helicopters. Planes and buses filled with refugees also are moving out.

Now a relief and staging center, the terminal a week ago was jammed with tired, hungry and frustrated refugees - and only 11 Jefferson Parish sheriff's deputies to keep order.

Many of the refugees were injured, and more than 20 died, despite the efforts of a Federal Emergency Management Agency medical team that set up an emergency room in the Delta Air Lines terminal lobby and sent the sickest patients out the door first to hospitals elsewhere. The rest were frustrated, thirsty and hungry, according to airport employees who rode out the storm.

"The rescue helicopters were bringing people in, but the buses were dropping off people, too, and a lot of folks just showed up because we were high and dry," airport spokeswoman Michelle Duffourc said.

The result was bedlam. The cream-colored terminal floors were caked with black mud, and the evacuees were stressed and angry as they awaited transport out of the New Orleans area by plane or bus.

Aviation Director Roy Williams said FEMA failed when it prematurely halted "mercy flights" by airlines that flew donated supplies into Armstrong and flew refugees out. Williams said FEMA stopped flights by American, Southwest, Northwest and United airlines on Thursday, four days after the storm, when it was ramping up its own evacuation effort.

"I think their response was far short of adequate," Williams said, adding that some refugees were forced to stay in the fetid conditions longer than necessary.

FEMA spokesman David Passey said he had not heard the allegation before and would have to investigate before he could respond.

Williams said FEMA still is not telling him how many flights will be coming to the airport.

"I've heard that there is a conference call every day to talk about this, but I'm not on it and no one I talk to is on it. You would think they would ask someone for an estimate of how many more aircraft we can get on the field, or how many people are in the terminal, but it's like they're managing this by remote control."

Williams said the airport's heroes include Joseph Taylor, manager of CA One/Pampy's, Armstrong's food and beverage concessionaire. With a dozen employees and relatives, Taylor cooked up food and served it during the harrowing days after Katrina struck Aug. 29.

"It's part of his job description, but when things got bad no one would have blamed him if he had pulled his people out," Williams said.

Other heroes among the 50 or so airport-related staffers who rode out the storm were the sheriff's deputies who managed to keep order despite long hours under chaotic conditions, Williams said.

The airport's future is in flux. Passenger traffic from commercial flights pays Armstrong's bills, but those flights are out of the question for the time being. The airport has outstanding loans of $200 million, which are paid by airline landing fees and rents, and passenger-derived revenue from parking and concessions.

Williams said the airport is eligible for federal grants that could help it pay its operating costs of about $50 million a year.

Before Katrina, airport officials had hoped to break the 10 million passenger mark during 2005. It did so for the 12-month period ending in August.

The last time that happened was in August 2001, a few days before the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks.

Utility workers look for gas leaks

Service could be cut for repairs

By Keith Darcé
Business writer

About 130 Entergy Corp. utility workers spent Tuesday scouring dry parts of New Orleans for potentially dangerous natural gas leaks in homes and businesses, using high-tech devices to sniff out the fuel.

The company warned that parts of the city with gas might lose service as crews repair damaged lines.

That could be a burden to people who have stayed in New Orleans. For many, gas was the only utility service still working more than a week after Hurricane Katrina, and the fuel may be their only means for cooking food and boiling water.

Though various people have attributed fires in the city to gas leaks, Entergy regional gas operations manager Rusty Burroughs said there's no evidence so far that gas leaks caused any of the major blazes.

"They appear to be mostly arsons," he said.

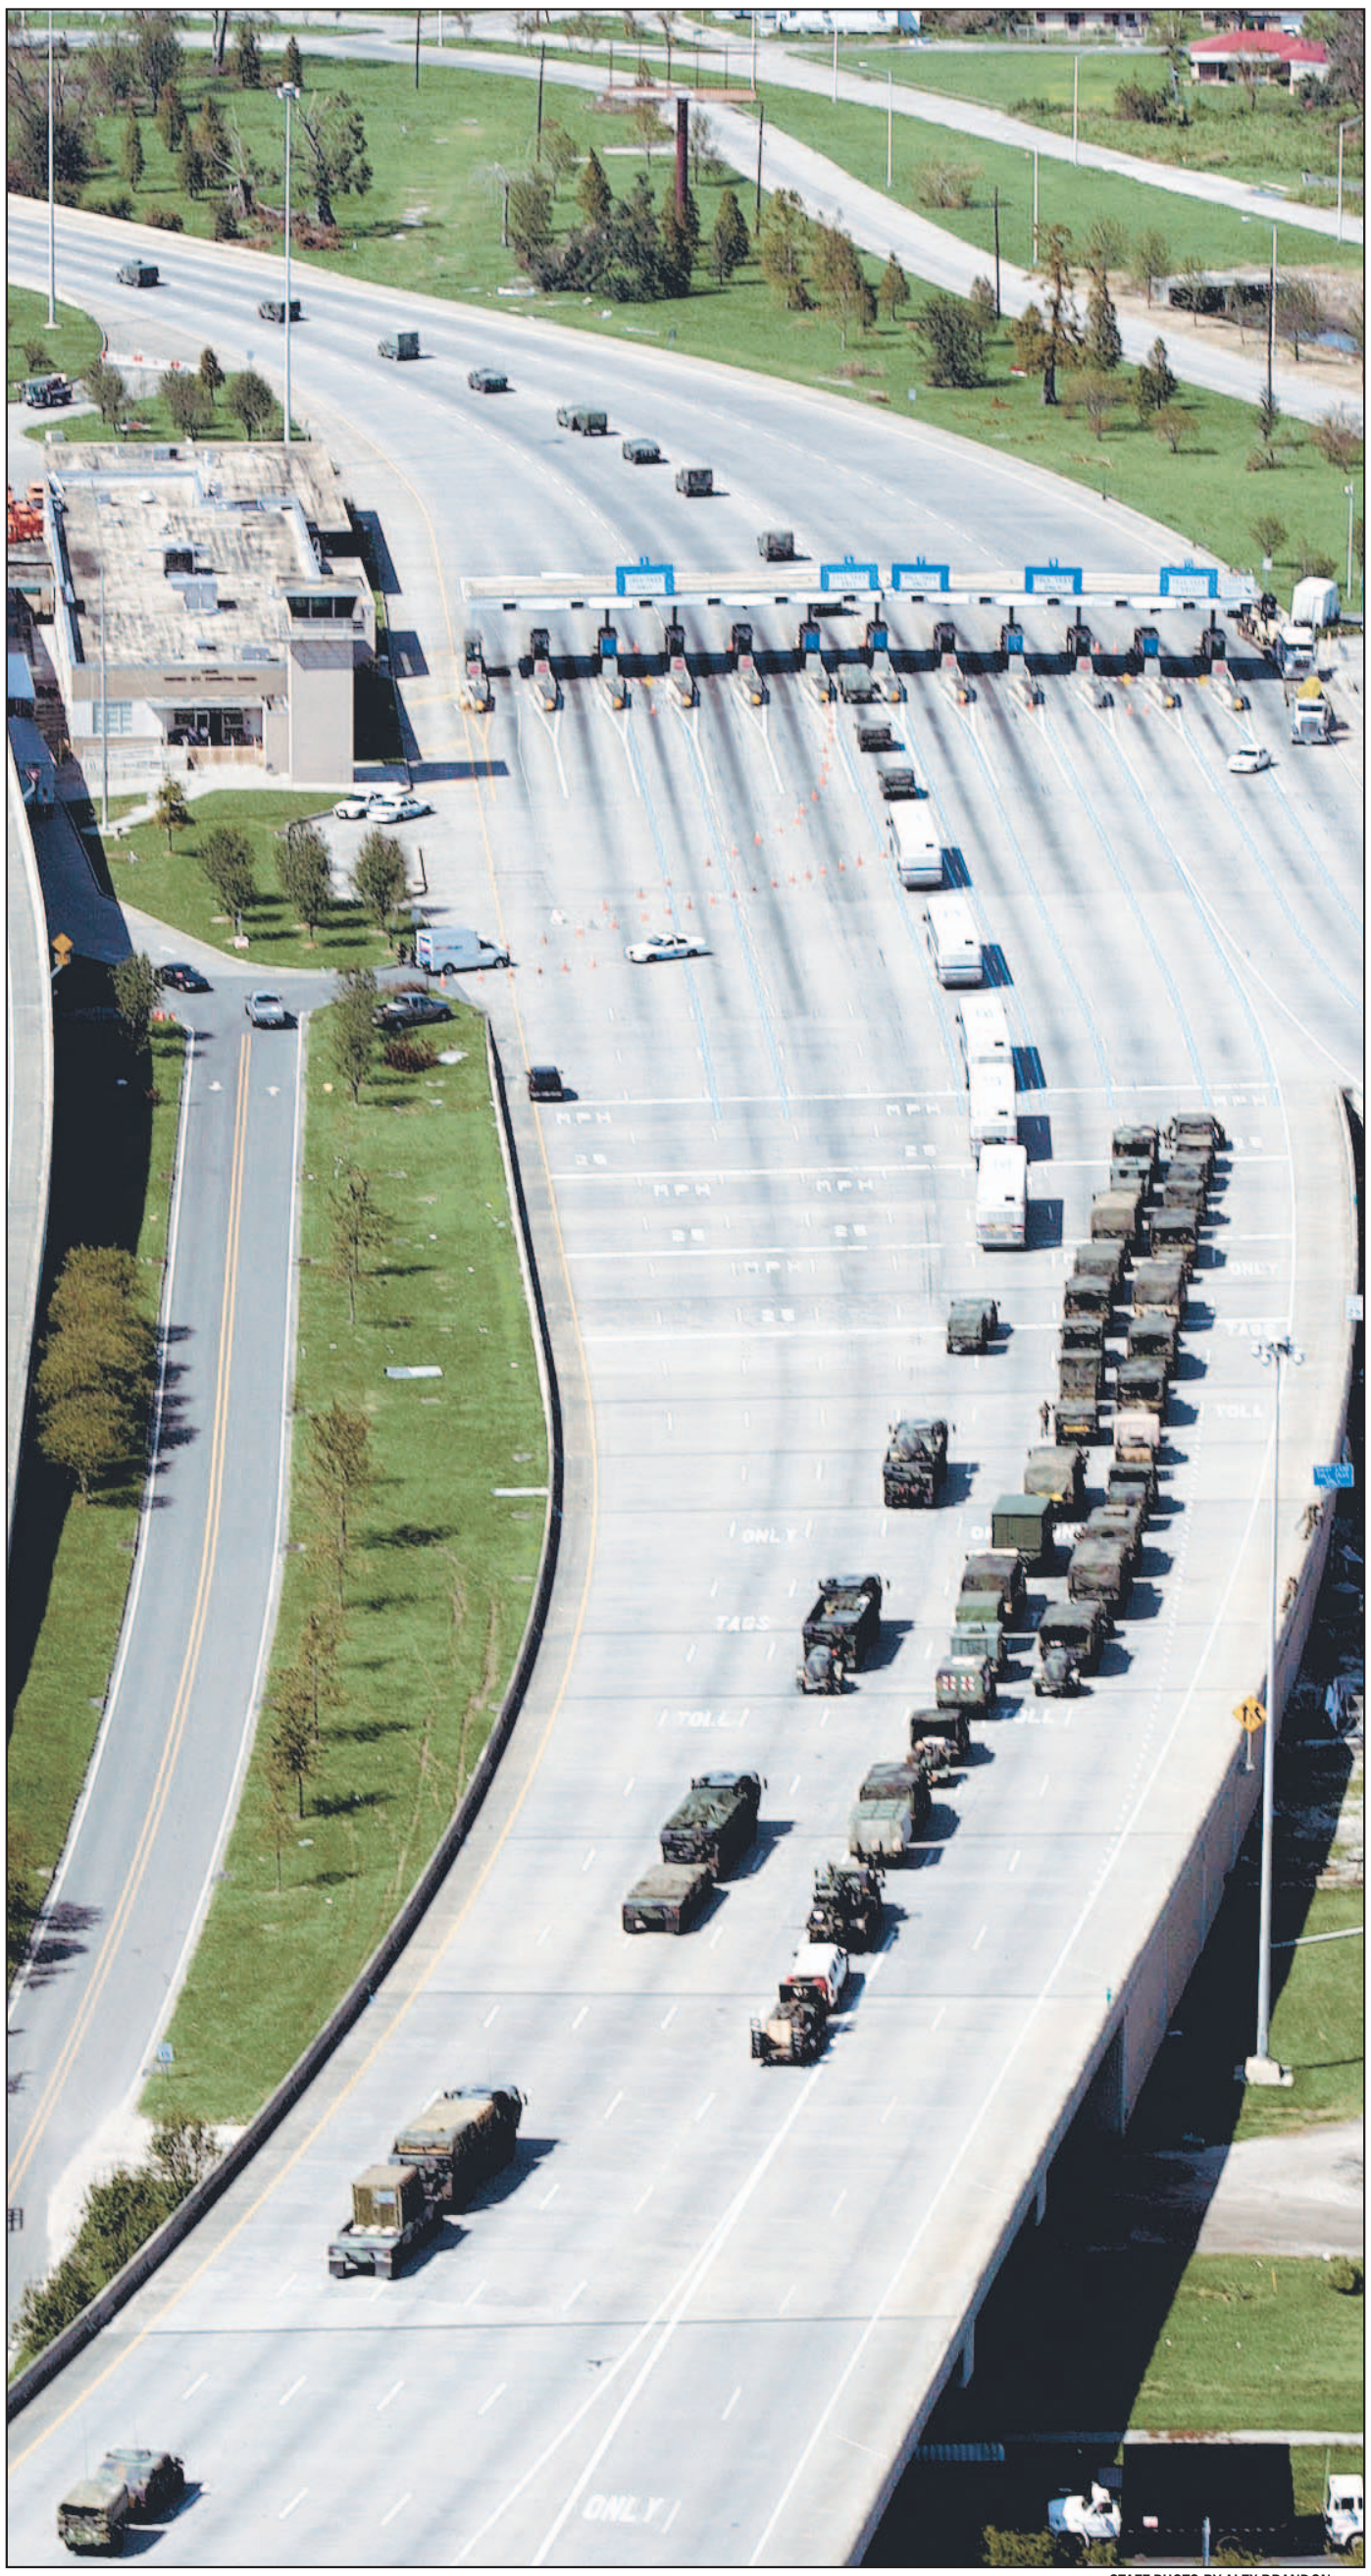
While workers looked for gas leaks, thousands of power line workers continued to fix toppled utility poles, restring wires and restore electricity to more homes and businesses in the region.

About 475,000 utility customers remained in the dark in southeastern Louisiana late Tuesday afternoon, according to Entergy and Cleco Corp. Entergy supplies electricity to parishes south of Lake Pontchartrain, and Cleco supplies power parts of St. Tammany and Washington parishes north of the lake.

After working in Algiers, the gas utility crews began moving Tuesday into the French Quarter, the Central Business District and parts of Uptown between St. Charles Avenue and the Mississippi River, Burroughs said.

The crews carried flame ionization units to detect trace amounts of methane, the main component of natural gas, and combustible gas indicators to measure whether gas leaks are large enough to explode.

The crews worked during daylight in areas being patrolled by security forces, Burroughs said. "They are in areas where they generally feel safe," he said.



Entergy cut off gas service to all of the Lower 9th Ward and eastern New Orleans on Sunday because of the likelihood of widespread leaks in the areas due to serious storm damage and flooding.

Entergy workers also planned to cut gas service to smaller areas of the city, in part to maintain the flow of gas to pumps moving floodwaters out of New Orleans, Burroughs said. Generators that produce electricity for the pumps are fueled by gas.

In the coming days, workers will begin moving toward Mid-City and the lakefront, using military Humvees and boats to explore flooded neighborhoods, Burroughs said.

Anyone discovering a gas leak in the city should report it to Entergy by calling 1 (800) 368-3749.

PAYING KATRINA'S TOLL

STAFF PHOTO BY ALEX BRANDON

Army trucks line up at the toll plaza of the Crescent City Connection on Tuesday.

Residents find strength, loves ones

By Lolis Eric Elie

Although we hadn't heard from Clothilde Martha Crowley Nichols for several days, we should not conclude that she was ever lost.

When I wrote about her a few days ago, what I knew was this: Nichols had abruptly ended her phone call with her granddaughter, JoNell Kennedy. It was during the early stages of Hurricane Katrina, and the storm had broken a window in Nichols' home. She couldn't talk because she had to bandage the hand her son had injured in his efforts to repair that window.

The indomitable spirit of that woman was responsible for her decision to remain in her Gentilly home, even while her relatives begged her to evacuate with them. That spirit has yet to be vanquished.

Monday, I had a brief conversation with Kennedy, who assured me that her grandmother was safe. "She actually told us she was never lost," Kennedy said.

Though Nichols might object to the term, she was rescued and is now alive and well in Orange, Texas.

In that same column I wrote about my cousin, George Thompson III, who felt that the Riverbend area was flood-proof.

Whether the neighborhood is flood-proof or not, his house on Hillary Street protected him. It neither shook nor took on water, he told me Saturday.

Late last week, he started walking toward downtown, hitched a ride, and ultimately was bused from the Convention Center to Monroe.

When we talked, he was more interested in telling me about the disrespectful treatment he and other evacuees suffered at the hands of state troopers than he was in telling me the story of his escape from hell. I took that as a good sign.

The stories of both Nichols and Thompson deserve a more expansive telling.

Their tales deserve a place alongside that of Lula Elzy, who at this time last week was looking for more than half a dozen relatives, almost all of whom have since been found.

"In the last two days, we went on to (a Web site) and put my nephew's name on it and told them we were looking for him," Elzy said. "Then he called me from Dallas. Then my niece called and told me she and my mother were in Houston, and two of my nephews were with them. My sister Sherry was in San Antonio, although they all left the Superdome at the same time."

Elzy is still missing one sister, Lynette Elzy, 42, who was last heard from right before the storm.

I am still in search of Lee Oliver Bates, a carpenter and friend who, when last I saw him, was supposed to be on his way to one of the hotels in the city. When last I talked to him, it was Monday afternoon, and he was crammed into the Superdome with everyone else.

I worry about him. His health is not the best. But I gain strength from the fact that even at this late date, loved ones are still being found. Families are still being reunited.

Columnist Lolis Eric Elie can be reached at elietp@gmail.com

STORM SCENES

STAFF PHOTO BY RUSTY COSTANZA

New Orleans Saints owner Tom Benson announced on Tuesday that season ticket holders would be given a refund if desired. Still, some may remain faithful.

STAFF PHOTO BY TED JACKSON

With a landscape transformed by Katrina as the backdrop, the untouched "Port Sulphur" sign may be the only way to be sure of the location.

STAFF PHOTO BY JENNIFER ZDON

Long lines form as claimants wait to see Allstate Insurance representatives on Tuesday.

An insurance office in a field. A boat speeding down Morrison Avenue. A helicopter fighting a fire. Until last week, each of these scenes would have seemed improbable. But by now the apocalypse wrought by Katrina has made these sad sights seem almost expected.

STAFF PHOTO BY ALEX BRANDON

STAFF PHOTO BY DAVID GRUNFELD

A Chinook helicopter drops water on a burning house on Kelerec Street.

SPORTS

SPLIT DECISION?

Saints face logistical obstacles in both Baton Rouge and San Antonio

AP PHOTOS

Saints wide receiver Michael Lewis, right, signs the T-shirt of 2-year-old Cyrus Reaux, center, as he is held by his older brother Brian Reaux at a shelter in San Antonio on Tuesday.

By Mike Triplett
Staff writer

SAN ANTONIO - With the tides shifting between Baton Rouge and San Antonio every day, the best bet is that the Saints probably will play some of their home games at both places this season.

There are hurdles that need to be overcome in both cities - particularly in an overcrowded Baton Rouge, which already is stretched with its hurricane relief efforts. But Baton Rouge also appears to be the favored destination of the NFL, of certain members of the Saints' organization and of public opinion.

On Tuesday, Saints owner Tom Benson pledged his support of playing games in Baton Rouge as well - in the wake of several reports that he was pushing hard for all the games to be played in San Antonio.

"The entire New Orleans Saints organization would like to extend its prayers and best wishes to all of our fans throughout Louisiana and the Gulf South region," Benson said in a statement issued after a conference call between Saints and NFL officials. "We are currently working with the NFL and expect to be in a position shortly to announce the sites for our remaining 2005 home schedule.

"I have expressed my desire to the NFL to play games in Baton Rouge, La., to the extent circumstances allow."

That last part is the key, however, as logistics may prove difficult in Baton Rouge. For one thing, hotel rooms are in short supply, in addition to the kind of security and emergency forces necessary for an NFL game.

And although LSU and Louisiana government officials have supported the idea of the Saints playing in their home state, there are still financial concerns that need to be met.

LSU does not need to profit from the games, but the budget is an issue.

"We'll do everything we can to be good Louisiana citizens, extend a great invitation," LSU athletic director Skip Bertman said. "But we can't ask LSU fans, who subsidize the athletic department, to subsidize any Saints activity. I'm talking about maintenance, expenses that kind of thing. Some amount of money has to be paid.

"We think it would be good if the Saints stayed here. □ We'll do whatever it takes, except spend money."

Bertman said most of the details will need to be worked out by politicians and that so far nobody from the LSU athletic department has spoken with anyone from the Saints. But a source familiar with the discussions said LSU is working out some "deal points," such as financial feasibility, who would provide security and who would be in charge of ticketing. The discussions were characterized as preliminary.

Speaking of ticket sales, Benson put to rest some concerns about season-ticket refunds in his statement.

"Saints ticket holders unable to attend games, wherever played, should also be assured that they will be permitted to request refunds. Specifics of the refund policy will be publicized in the upcoming days," Benson said.

He concluded his statement by saying, "The New Orleans Saints look forward to the start of the NFL regular season this Sunday and to having the club be a source of pride and joy in these difficult days. As we move forward together, the Saints look forward to serving as a leader in the rebuilding and revitalization of our great community. Towards this effort, the Saints have established the 'New Orleans Saints Hurricane Katrina Relief Fund.' Further information for those individuals/companies interested in contributing will be announced shortly."

State's concerns

Some state and team officials have been openly concerned in recent days about Benson's plans for the Saints, both short term and long term. But those fears have seemingly been eased somewhat.

Sen. David Vitter said in a statement Tuesday that he "had a very good, reassuring conversation with Tom Benson about the need for all of us to join together in rebuilding Greater New Orleans, including its jobs and business base. In that conversation, Mr. Benson assured me of two things:

"1. He is eager to maximize the number of Saints home games that could be played in Tiger Stadium consistent with first meeting the medical, housing, and other needs of evacuees in the region.

"2. He is eager for the Saints to return to New Orleans as soon as possible and for his organization to be part of our rebuilding effort and long-term future."

The Saints' executive vice president of administration, Arnold Fielkow, also told The Times-Picayune on Monday night that he believes the team is making a commitment to Louisiana.

Fielkow, who had expressed concerns to several media outlets that Benson was leaning strongly toward playing games in San Antonio, said the team is "hopeful of playing several games in Baton Rouge this season" and that "it is the collective hope of our organization that Saints football will return to New Orleans as soon as possible."

NFL spokesman Joe Browne also expressed the league's support for playing games in Baton Rouge, saying he hopes the Saints eventually will be able to play home games there, according to The Associated Press.

Where the Saints will play their home games ultimately is the decision of NFL commissioner Paul Tagliabue.

The Saints were not thrilled with the commissioner's decision to move their first home game to the home site of the visiting team, the New York Giants, on Monday, Sept. 19 - though the team understands it will be used as a prime-time showcase for the league's hurricane relief efforts.

The Saints have not been given any assurances that they will avoid playing games at the site of other visiting teams this year.

That leaves San Antonio as the most feasible site, at least early on - and the favorite choice of the Saints, for reasons that have nothing to do with the owner's desire to move his franchise to the Alamo City.

The Saints are headquartered here, and many players, coaches and staff members will move their families here for the next four months. Playing home games in San Antonio's Alamodome would mean less travel and perhaps even a larger available ticket sales base than in Baton Rouge.

Several players and Coach Jim Haslett admitted this week that they would like to play at least some of their home games in San Antonio.

Said Haslett: "I would like to have them here because we are practicing here, but I think we owe it to the fans of New Orleans, the Gulf Coast, all the people in Baton Rouge, all the way up to Lafayette and Shreveport □ to play a couple games back in Baton Rouge, if we can."

Mum on move

The city of San Antonio is not officially campaigning for the Saints' home games, in an effort to not appear opportunistic in the wake of a tragedy. Mayor Phil Hardberger has said more than once that the city's concentration is on helping the more than 10,000 evacuees now sheltered here.

Saints owner Tom Benson, left, greets Lester Vallet Sr., right, a former employee, and Lester Vallet Jr., a current employee, at the Saints' temporary headquarters in San Antonio on Tuesday.

But behind the scenes, San Antonio officials reportedly have been seeking corporate sponsors and trying to put together an incentives package for the Saints, including guaranteed sellouts in the 65,000-seat Alamodome, which hosted the Saints and Vikings in a 2001 preseason game.

Alamodome director Mike Abington said there have been official and unofficial contacts with the Saints over the past week and that he is preparing to make the stadium available if the Saints and the NFL make the request.

"It's hard to say (what will happen). They have not given us any firm commitment. We have made a commitment to them that we will accommodate them should they need us in any way they can," Abington said. "It's quite an operation to put on an NFL game, especially on short notice, but we're working on all the details right now in anticipation of knowing something. Kind of like waiting for a baby to be born."

Abington, a Louisiana native from the Shreveport area, said while the town would love to host NFL games, he is not making a sales pitch and he "won't allow myself to lose sight of why all this is happening."

Benson's interest in moving his team permanently to San Antonio - where he has longstanding personal and professional ties and keeps a second home - has long been rumored. Those rumors have heated up in recent days, with reports of sources saying he wants to move the team there for good next season.

But sources have been saying both on and off the record in recent days that they don't believe Benson has made such a decision - especially with so much uncertainty surrounding his native New Orleans.

The fear that New Orleans may not be ready to host the Saints or financially able to afford them is legitimate. And the Superdome may never again host an NFL game.

But then again, perhaps federal relief could aid in rebuilding the city and the Dome, which also served - albeit tragically - as a relief shelter.

Any discussions of Benson moving the team would be too preliminary at this point. Even if he wanted to move his team to San Antonio, it would take approval of 24 of the 32 league owners, and the proximity to the Houston and Dallas markets would become an issue.

Hornets could play home games at PMAC

Team officials looking to meet with those at LSU concerning deal

By Jimmy Smith
Staff writer

BATON ROUGE - There seems to be very few scheduling conflicts that would prevent the Hornets from playing home games in LSU's Pete Maravich Assembly Center this season.

LSU has yet to release its 2005-06 men's and women's basketball schedules, but in comparing the Tigers' nearly finalized schedules with the Hornets' schedule, there are just 10 dates, of 41 home games, in which the Hornets would be unable to use the PMAC, either because of LSU men's or women's basketball games or gymnastics meets.

The Hornets are seeking other "home" venues in the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina, which has left their home facility, New Orleans Arena, damaged, in addition to the vast destruction of the city's infrastructure.

"We pretty much have our schedule set," said Herb Vincent, LSU's associate athletic director for internal affairs. "I don't know if it's finalized."

The Tigers are scheduled to open their season in mid-November.

According to LSU's tentative team schedules, there would be just one possible date conflict in November, when the Hornets are scheduled to play six home games.

There's just one conflict in December (out of six Hornets' home dates), two in January, when the Hornets play eight home games; four in February (seven home games), one in March (nine home games) and one in April (five home games).

Hornets officials Sam Russo and Steve Martin traveled to Baton Rouge on Tuesday from the team's temporary headquarters in Houston to meet with officials of the downtown Rivercenter arena, a building managed by SMG, the same company that runs New Orleans Arena.

Russo and Martin, who could not be reached for comment Tuesday, are also planning to schedule a meeting with LSU officials to discuss the possibility of playing in the PMAC.

The NBA informed teams last week that it's likely the Hornets could play some, or all, of their regular-season home schedule away from New Orleans this season.

Vincent said Tuesday he was unaware whether a meeting between the Hornets and the university had been scheduled.

"We'll try to accommodate them," Vincent said. "I guess the position we're taking is we're willing to listen to whatever terms any of these teams or entities have.

"If LSU can serve a role by solving these problems, we'll certainly do it. We certainly want to be cooperative. But it would be speculative right now to guess at what any organization wants. We have some issues here ourselves. We're not seeking out anybody. We're just waiting to hear from them."

AP PHOTO

Tulane's Christian Okoye, left, Taurean Brown, center, and Chris Bordelon, right, arrive at the team's hotel in Dallas after practice Tuesday. The Green Wave will move to Louisiana Tech's campus.

Wave football team to be based at Louisiana Tech

Home games set for Independence Stadium; other options abound

By Benjamin Hochman and Fred Robinson
Staff writers

DALLAS - Chris Scelfo calls it "Tulane Tech."

Beginning Monday, that's where the coach's football players will attend class and practice. After a whirlwind of conference calls, 11th-hour maneuvers and numerous Advils, Tulane administrators pieced together an unprecedented arrangement for the football team - sending it to Louisiana Tech - and the other athletic teams - dividing the teams onto four Texas campuses for at least the fall semester.

The football players, currently in Dallas, are expected to travel to Ruston on Thursday to register for classes, and then return to Dallas that night for practices Friday morning. The Wave will remain at the DoubleTree Hotel through the weekend and travel to Ruston on Monday - the same day classes start at Louisiana Tech - and will begin classes one day later.

As to where Tulane will play, Scelfo said Tuesday afternoon, "We've got it done," in reference to nearby Shreveport's Independence Bowl Stadium, which the city has offered free of charge. Scelfo said the team might try to play one game at Louisiana Tech's Aillet Stadium to show gratitude to the school.

But Tulane athletic director Rick Dickson said he won't know for sure until today. Dickson said Tuesday's goal was to coordinate all other Tulane athletes into hubs of Dallas and Houston before sending them to four other schools - Texas Tech, Rice, Southern Methodist and Texas A&M. On Tuesday afternoon, Dickson began addressing the home stadium issues. Tulane's first game is Sept. 17, when it will host Mississippi State.

Dickson said the city of Mobile has offered Ladd-Peebles Stadium. And Dickson said Florida State athletic director Dave Hart called him and pointed out possible arrangements for Tulane to play some of its games on the Seminoles' campus.

"(Hart) said, 'Tallahassee would love to have you, and we'd rally around you,' " Dickson said. "Any of those kinds of things we'll at least consider.

"Convenience-wise, finding one home venue would be great. But this isn't just about convenience. We've got to make it work. I've got to give consideration to places that are going to advantage us as much as possible."

Dickson said it is possible all of the team's games won't be played in the same stadium.

"If we're able to create some kind of a venue for our own fans, that's a priority. For all of our programs to operate, now that our traditional ways of generating revenue and support are stripped away, I've got to come up with the next best ways to generate revenue and support."

Tulane volleyball and soccer will be at Texas A&M and will play their fall home games on the College Station campus. The men's basketball and women's swimming and diving teams will also attend classes on that campus, 78 Tulane student-athletes in all.

Bill Byrne, the Texas A&M athletic director, said his school can accommodate the men's basketball team to play its home games on campus.

Tulane's women's basketball team, along with Tulane baseball, will be at Texas Tech. Athletic Director Gerald Myers said, "The baseball team could play here at the same facility. I think the same thing could be done with women's basketball. We're willing to do that. We would work to accommodate the women's team to play games here in December. I don't know the conflicts. But we'll work that out. For example, on a Saturday game, we could play a doubleheader. We could play on a Sunday. We can work it out."

Tulane's men's and women's tennis teams will compete and attend classes at Rice in Houston, and the men's and women's golf teams will do the same at Southern Methodist in Dallas.

But the move of the football team and its 88 student athletes has been the most trying and complex for Dickson and his staff.

"We're happy to help out. All of us in Louisiana have to work together to get through this disaster," Louisiana Tech athletic director Jim Oakes said. "This is just a small part. I think a bigger deal is being made of (what Tech is doing) than what it really is. I think it's going to be very interesting with the two football teams."

Tulane's football team will be housed at Caruthers Dormitory, which has about 300 rooms. The former student dorm had been closed down and was scheduled for demolition - the bulldozers were ready, Oakes said. The school repaired the building's air conditioning system and took in evacuees from the hurricane.

"It's not plush, but it's livable," Oakes said. The athletic director said Scelfo was happy with the accommodations on his visit to the campus Monday.

The Thomas Assembly Center, the school's basketball arena, which houses all of Louisiana Tech's athletic department's personnel (except for football), has two big banquet rooms and the Hall of Fame room. One side of the Waggoner Room will be used as the locker room for Tulane's football team, and the other side will be used for equipment and storage. Dressing rooms in the arena will be used as shower facilities for the players.

The Hall of Fame room will be used for the coaches' offices.

Tulane will use the two weight rooms, the one inside the Thomas Assembly Center and the Karl Malone weight room at the football fieldhouse. The training room inside the Thomas Assembly Center also will be turned over to Tulane.

Tulane will use two practice facilities. The main practice field at the Jim Mize Track and Field Complex has two fields. Across the street, a field that is used for soccer also will be available for Tulane when Tech is using the main practice field.

"What Louisiana Tech's doing for us," Scelfo said, "is unbelievable."

LSU's Whitworth ready to give people a show

Tackle hasn't missed a start, and he won't stop now

By Jim Kleinpeter
Staff writer

BATON ROUGE - When it comes to handling pain, LSU's Andrew Whitworth has few equals.

The 6-foot-7, 325-pound senior offensive tackle is right in the mix when several other 300-pound plus bodies collide, then collapse in a heap, with him often on the bottom. There are blindside hits, players rolling up the back of his legs and a constant steady pounding of bodies. Still, he hasn't missed a starting assignment or a practice in four years, and once the Tigers' season starts, he will be on a quest to become the first Tiger to play in 50 games.

But Whitworth, like all Louisianans, is suffering a different type of pain these days, one shared by people throughout the state, the region and the nation. Dislocated fingers and turf burns the size of bumper stickers are nothing compared to the pain in his gut right now from watching Hurricane Katrina's aftermath. He will be carrying that pain Saturday when the No. 5-ranked Tigers play Arizona State (1-0) in what has become LSU's season opener.

"(It's) definitely (a pain like no other), it affects you so closely," Whitworth said. "All the guys on the team, to hear a guy say he hasn't been able to talk to his mom in two days or he can't get a hold of his brothers or sisters, it affects you everywhere.

"It's a completely different feeling. It's your homeland that was torn up, something you represent day in day out. Your first reaction is sadness and anger and a lot of guys were worried. It's hard to watch the TV."

Just as he pulls on his uniform for every practice and game -- 39 consecutively -- Whitworth has faced his pain head on. Like many Tigers, he volunteered last week, visiting with evacuees, playing with their children and packing an 18-wheeler full of supplies. With a game looming this week, he feels extremely partial to carrying the banner for the state and its people.

"We've got to go out there and put this on our backs and give these people something to be proud of," he said. "I think there's no doubt that a lot of people from this area, a lot of people from this state, follow college football and follow LSU most importantly, and I think there's no way we can say that we're not going out there with this on our minds, and this being an inspiration for us to have a chance to make this state proud of something. From all of the people I've talked to that have been through this, they can't wait for some sense of normalcy."

There's been nothing normal about Whitworth's durability, but maybe there is something in the water at West Monroe. That's where Whitworth and former Tiger teammate Rodney Reed both starred. Reed finished his career with a school record 48 straight starts. Between the competition for playing time, injuries and early entry into the NFL, that's a stratospheric number, one Whitworth will break if he starts every game this season.

The closest he came to missing a start was at Ole Miss in 2003 in one of the mot important games that national championship season. With the SEC West Division title at stake, Whitworth got food poisoning the night before the game and needed intravenous fluids right before the game and at halftime. But he played every snap of LSU's 17-14 victory.

Whitworth said he's not sure what the secret is.

"That's always been me," he said. "I want to practice and play and be out there. I'm stubborn, whether it's good or bad I don't like to ever admit being defeated. That's my style. I've been blessed with good luck."

Said defensive tackle Kyle Williams: "I hate to say luck because the guy has been so durable. He's so tough, he's been able to play through pain and a lot of things guys wouldn't be able to. Food poisoning, dislocated fingers, it all mounts up. Everybody gets those over the course of four years. The guys who are able to start 39 games in a row are the guys able to turn away from that and say, 'Hey, we've got a football game to play and we're not as good when I'm not in there.' Andrew has done that. His toughness has been unbelievable."

Sun Devils in dark preparing for Tigers

New staff, postponed opener has ASU searching

By William Kalec
Staff writer

BATON ROUGE - It's hard to study what you can't see.

Despite playing in front what is sure to be the most cordial "home crowd" in the history of LSU football, Arizona State's coaching staff hasn't been completely void of hardships in preparation for Saturday. Because the LSU-North Texas opener was postponed due to Hurricane Katrina, Sun Devils coach Dirk Koetter is without a template from which to game plan.

"That's where the Internet comes in handy," Koetter said. "We kind of have to go on what we get. You are never quite sure. We have to weigh all the factors out and study the film that best resembles what they are going to do."

Finding defensive tape of Bo Pelini's schemes from Oklahoma and Nebraska shouldn't be a problem, but deciding whether to dissect offensive film from Coach Les Miles' Oklahoma State teams or previous LSU teams directed under rehired offensive coordinator Jimbo Fisher isn't as clear cut.

Back in the end of June, Miles was asked describe the level of autonomy given to each assistant coach.

"All the freedom guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States," he said, maintaining a poker face fit for cable television.

"You can do a lot of scouting," Koetter said. "We have a lot of film from Oklahoma State last year. The problem is, LSU's coach doesn't have either one of his coordinators from last year. I don't think studying LSU film or Oklahoma State film is the best thing to do."

LATER KICKOFF: The start of the LSU-Arizona State game has been moved up 30 minutes from 7:45 p.m. to 8:15 p.m. ESPN is still broadcasting the game nationally.

FULL OF FATS: LSU quarterback JaMarcus Russell has been bombarded with interview requests from local, national and international media about housing Fats Domino after the famous singer/musician escaped his 9th Ward residence and evacuated to Baton Rouge.

"I've had guys as far as London, England, get in touch with our people to get in touch with Fats Domino," Russell said.

Russell went on to say that the interviewer from England was difficult to understand because of his accent, comparing him to Steve Irwin, the Crocodile Hunter.

TAKE TWO: After shutting down production for a week because of power outages and other factors related to Hurricane Katrina, The Les Miles Show returns to Walk-On's Bar and Bistreaux this Wednesday at 7 p.m.

TICKET SITUATION: Within the next 48 hours, LSU athletic officials plan to make an announcement about purchased, unused tickets for this Saturday's game against Arizona State that was moved from Tiger Stadium to Sun Devil Stadium.

For those able to travel, original game tickets can be exchanged for seats in Tempe, Ariz., although ticket-holders must first contact the LSU athletic ticket office by 2 p.m. today to register.

AP PHOTO

Oklahoma running back Adrian Peterson, a Heisman Trophy candidate as a freshman last season, came out of the Sooners' surprising loss to TCU last week with an ankle injury.

First games provided good glimpse

By Peter Finney
Sports Columnist

Because of Katrina, in the world of college football, there are some things we don't know.

We don't know if Tulane would have upset Southern Miss.

And we don't know if Les Miles would have launched his career as the football boss of the LSU Tigers with a victory over North Texas.

Despite Katrina, here's what we do know.

Oklahoma will not win the national championship.

If Tennessee does, the Vols will have to play a lot better than they did against Alabama-Birmingham.

The Louisville Cardinals, blessed with the kind of regular-season schedule to run the table and play for No. 1, learned the perils of having a target on their backs.

Boise State, coming off a perfect season with visions of a BCS bowl down the line, learned a little about life in the SEC from the Georgia Bulldogs.

Notre Dame fans learned life may be better than expected under rookie coach Charlie Weis.

Florida fans, still trying to put Steve Spurrier in their rear-view mirror, learned the new man in town, Urban Meyer, may be just the guy to make them forget with the second coming of Fun-n-Gun.

Meanwhile, at such big-time addresses as Southern Cal, Texas and Ohio State, the Trojans, Longhorns and Buckeyes came out of the gate firing impressive salvos against an outmanned enemy.

First question: What happened to the Sooners?

It wasn't that the Okies, carrying a No. 7 preseason rating, lost to TCU, 17-10. It was that they lost at home for the first time in four years. Four Sooners turnovers paved the way for the Horned Frogs' biggest upset in 44 years, going back to a 1961 win over No. 1 Texas.

To make matters worse, running back Adrian Peterson, Heisman Trophy runner-up last season as a freshman, came out of the loss with an ankle injury.

Tennessee?

Unlucky for Oklahoma, a 17-10 final was fortunate at home for the Vols, rated as high as No. 2 and a double-digit favorite to spank visiting UAB.

It wasn't until an incomplete pass into the end zone in the final minutes that the home crowd could exhale. Think about it. This was pretty much the UAB club Tulane upset, 59-55, last season in Tad Gormley Stadium behind QB Lester Ricard's 417 passing yards and a school-record six TDs.

Louisville?

Here was another double-digit favorite that went into Lexington and was left to sweat out a 31-24 win. For a half, Kentucky Wildcats faithful suffered through what they expected. The Cardinals had taken a 28-7 lead and seemed to be on their way to a runaway. That's when the Wildcats' defense, in the hands of former LSU coach Mike Archer, turned tiger and held Louisville without a second-half TD for only the second time since Bobby Petrino arrived three years ago.

UK quarterback Andre Woodson coughed up the football on his way to a tying score, and the Cards ran out the final minutes. This is a Louisville team that averaged nearly 50 points a game last year in its final season as a member of Conference USA. It is a Louisville team in its first year as a member of the Big East that will be favored in its final 10 games.

At season's end, it could be an 11-0 Louisville team demanding a spot in the BCS championship game.

Notre Dame?

Let's say this: Weis, offensive coordinator on three New England Super Bowl champions, did nothing to tarnish his reputation being part of Bill Belichick's brain. In his Golden Dome debut, Weis' Fighting Irish went into Pittsburgh and ran up 502 yards in a 42-21 upset over a club ranked No. 23. Can it last? We'll soon find out. The Irish play Michigan on Saturday.

Ordinarily, you might say Notre Dame-Michigan in Ann Arbor would be the game of the week, but not in this case. Not when two candidates for No. 1, Texas and Ohio State, are playing Saturday in Columbus, Ohio.

If Mack Brown's Longhorns prevail in Columbus, they'd become a warm choice to return to the Rose Bowl, this time to play for the BCS title.

UNO basketball teams to attend, play at Texas-Tyler

Site of 'home' games yet to be determined

By Ted Lewis
Staff writer

UNO may be closed for the semester, but the Privateers will still play basketball this season.

The school's men's and women's teams will be housed and attend classes at the University of Texas-Tyler. The Privateers will play a full schedule beginning in November, although the site of home games is yet to be determined.

"The fact that there will be basketball teams playing with 'New Orleans,' on their shirts is very important," UNO men's coach Monte Towe said Tuesday. "We are proud to represent a great city that may be destroyed, but is going to bounce back. Showing that spirit is what UNO and the people of New Orleans are all about."

Towe and women's coach Amy Champion have been bringing in their players from scattered locations this week. Some will begin classes at UT-Tyler today.

"It's progress," Towe said. "We've gotten our teams together and also they will be able to go to school. That's the best situation we could hope for right now. We had to get some sense of normalcy back."

UT-Tyler is a school of 6,000 located about 90 miles east of Dallas, which competes in Division III.

The connection with UNO comes from assistant athletic director Kathy Keene, whose brother, Chris Bizot, is the school's tennis coach.

"We are extremely gratified by the kindness shown us by UT-Tyler in our time of need," UNO athletic director Jim Miller was quoted in a release from UT-Tyler. "This unfortunate event should convince all college athletics administrators of the truth in the passage, 'except by the grace of God go I.'

"It could happen to any of us."

Towe said all of his players had committed to coming to Tyler, but the process had not been easy.

"It was like recruiting them all over again," he said. "There were some long, serious discussions. These young men are hurting and they're worried about the possessions they had to leave behind in Privateer Place. These are young kids and something of this magnitude has been really tough on them because I can't answer all of their questions."

Two of UNO's men's players, Bo McCalebb and James Parlow, are from New Orleans. Towe said both players' families were safe, but he was sure they had lost their homes and that his own home, near the Lakefront, probably was still underwater.

"That's the least of my worries," said Towe, who with his wife, P.D., was in St. Augustine, Fla., attending a fund-raising event when Katrina stuck. "That will take care of itself in time. We've got players who don't have homes anymore."

What disturbed Towe was the reported contacting of some of his players, most prominently McCalebb, by "intermediaries" from other schools inquiring if they were interested in transferring.

McCalebb, a junior guard, was sixth in the country in scoring last year with 22.6 points per game.

"I'm not going to get into the specifics," Towe said. "But it did happen and that's something we don't need happening right now. No. 1, he was already enrolled in school. If we weren't going to have a season, that would different. But this was wrong."

Towe said he understood that Lakefront Arena did not suffer major damage despite its location, but he did not know if any home games could be played there this year.

"We might stay here, we might use the Pontchartrain Center or we might use a combination of places," Towe said. "This is something you take one day at a time. Right now the important thing is we're here together right now."

The UNO men are scheduled to open their season Nov. 19 at home against Belhaven College. The women open that same day at Centenary.

"It's going to be a challenge," Towe said. "But I am a believer that the cup is always half full. It's a unique opportunity to showcase the ability of our team under adverse conditions. If we can hold up, we can still accomplish our goals for the year."

NOTE:

The UNO volleyball season has been canceled. The Privateers were 4-0 under first-year coach Dana Launey. The status of other Privateer sports has yet to be determined.

GNOSF has daunting task ahead

Cicero: It will take 'major commitment' to bring back Dome

By Ted Lewis
Staff writer

Sports should be a major part of the rebuilding of New Orleans, but it will be a daunting task, Greater New Orleans Sports Foundation president Jay Cicero said Tuesday.

"There is so much of the infrastructure that made New Orleans a first-rate sports venue that will have to be rebuilt," Cicero said. "And we're not just talking about the Superdome.

"The hotels, restaurants and other amenities that will have to be there as well, not to mention the financial support. It's a little overwhelming to think about."

Cicero's group has served as the host committee for the Super Bowls and Final Fours that used to make regular appearances on the New Orleans sports calendar.

The Sports Foundation also has lured several major events to the area such as the 1992 Olympic Track & Field Trials, which were held at Tad Gormley Stadium and the recently completed AAU Junior Olympics that brought more than 10,000 competitors to the area.

New Orleans Arena already has been picked as the site of an NCAA men's basketball sub-regional in 2007 and a women's basketball regional in 2008.

The Sports Foundation is not associated with the Sugar Bowl, but it also would have a difficult time maintaining its place in the national championship rotation if only because of the financial obligations involved. The future of the Bayou Classic between Grambling and Southern also is up in the air.

Already the Sugar Bowl was faced with the task of increasing its payout to $18 million per team, a 36 percent increase, under the new contract that begins with the 2006 season while losing some revenue sources to Fox, which takes over the TV rights for the Sugar Bowl plus the Orange Bowl and Fiesta Bowl starting next year.

Efforts to reach Sugar Bowl executive director Paul Hoolahan and other bowl officials have been unsuccessful.

Cicero said the first task would be determining how much of a priority rebuilding the Superdome would be. State officials are saying the facility is unusable for at least a year and could take $400 million to refurbish.

"We've got to restore housing and jobs," Cicero said. "Certainly the Superdome is an icon. But it's going to take a major commitment to bring it back."

As for the Sugar Bowl's immediate future, both the Peach Bowl and Alamo Bowl have made offers to host the game this season.

"We just want to do whatever we can to help," said Alamo Bowl executive director Derrick Fox. "College football will not let the Sugar Bowl die."

However, Fox said that after this season several bowls could be eyeing the Sugar Bowl's place in the BCS rotation.

One likely strong suitor is the Cotton Bowl, which already has a relationship with Fox TV and could move from its aging facility to the new Dallas Cowboys Stadium in 2009.

"That's part of the world we live in," said Fiesta Bowl executive director John Junker. "It's far too early and the circumstances are far too tragic to even talk about it at this stage."

However, the commissioners from 11 BCS conferences are sure to discuss the issue when they meet Sept. 18 in Chicago.

SEC commissioner Mike Slive also said it was premature to discuss the future of the Sugar Bowl.

"Right now our concern has to be helping the people of New Orleans and surrounding states put their lives back together," he said. "There will be time later to talk about the Sugar Bowl."

KATRINA: THE STORM WE'VE ALWAYS FEARED

The Times-Picayune

50 CENTS 169TH YEAR NO. 231 THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 8, 2005 HURRICANE EDITION

CLEAR OUT OR ELSE

STAFF PHOTO BY ALEX BRANDON

A Black Hawk helicopter rescues people in the B.W. Cooper housing development Wednesday in New Orleans as one man returns to his apartment. Police and soldiers dispersed across the city, coaxing remaining residents to evacuate, and officers suggested they soon would force them out. 'We have thousands of people who want to voluntarily evacuate at this time,' NOPD Superintendent Eddie Compass said. 'Once they're all out, then we'll concentrate our forces on mandatory evacuation.'

Flow of crises ebbs for police

By James Varney
Staff writer

With fewer fires and fewer arrests, New Orleans seemed surprisingly calm Wednesday, about as normal as a city overwhelmed by dead bodies, filthy floodwater, smashed glass and heavily armed military patrols could be.

"Right now New Orleans may be the single safest city in the United States," New Orleans Police Superintendent Eddie Compass declared, expressing a view not necessarily embraced by many of the estimated 10,000 people still living in the shattered city. "Right now, we're getting back to normalcy."

As evidence, Compass noted that there had been only three arrests overnight, a light crime-fighting evening by any standard and one that barely swelled the population of 171 inmates at New Orleans' makeshift jail in the Amtrak station.

The NOPD and the thousands of out-of-town soldiers and law enforcement officials may face a sterner test today when officials are expected to shift Mayor Ray Nagin's mandatory evacuation order into a higher gear.

Compass promised to use the "minimum force necessary" to remove residents, and privately many top

See CRISES, page 4

STAFF PHOTO BY CHRIS GRANGER

Gareth Stubbs naps next to a cache of weapons he and two neighbors collected to help them defend Algiers Point from looters.

MAKESHIFT MILITIA GUARDS ALGIERS POINT

They're armed to the teeth but haven't fired a shot

By Susan Langenhennig
West Bank bureau

Just after dusk on Tuesday night, with the rumble of helicopters and airplanes still overhead, Gareth Stubbs took his spot in a rocking chair on the balcony of an Algiers Point house, a shotgun, bottle of bug spray and a can of Pringles at his feet.

It was night No. 9 of his vigil, the balcony turned into a makeshift watch tower, with five borrowed shotguns, a pistol, a flare gun, an old AK-47 and loads of ammunition strategically placed next to the blankets and pillows where Stubbs, Vinnie Pervel and Gregg Harris have slept every night since Hurricane Katrina slammed into Southeast Louisiana.

In the bedroom off the balcony, its lace curtains blowing through the open windows,

See MILITIA, page 2

Evacuations mandatory in New Orleans

By Bruce Nolan
Staff writer

Police and soldiers armed with M-16 rifles fanned out across the remaining high ground of a wrecked and flooded city Wednesday, ordering the last holdouts to evacuate in no-nonsense terms that promised consequences if they didn't.

The orders, delivered through screen doors and on stoops, flowed from Mayor Ray Nagin's Tuesday decision to clear the devastated city because of its multiple threats to safety -- from fire, polluted water and natural gas leaks.

Many holdouts told officers they were reluctant to leave, either because they feared refugee shelters, they did not want to leave their belongings or they believed they were safe where they were.

Officers indicated the time was nearly at hand when they would force citizens out, Police Superintendent Eddie Compass said.

He indicated officers and troopers were making one easy pass through the city, then would return meaning business.

"We have thousands of people who want to voluntarily evacuate at this time," Compass said. "Once they're all out, then we'll concentrate our forces on

See KATRINA, page 5

INSIDE: Hurricane disbands city's musicians, page 6 ▪ Five dead from polluted waters, page 6 ▪ Anatomy of a disaster, page 10 ▪ Dome, arena repairs could cost at least $400 million, page 12

HURRICANE KATRINA AFTERMATH

Civic-minded gunmen patrol Algiers neighborhood

STAFF PHOTOS BY CHRIS GRANGER

Gareth Stubbs, who has been helping to keep watch over his Algiers Point neighborhood since Hurricane Katrina hammered the area last week, gets some company on his vigil as Cody, a miniature schnauzer, checks things out on the second-story balcony.

MILITIA, from page 1

Pervel's 74-year-old mother pulled her rosary from her pocket, a shotgun resting near the antique cherry wood bed and the .38-caliber pistol her son gave her nearby. "Oh dear, what would Father John think," Jennie Pervel laughed as she fingered the beads.

Vinnie Pervel and Harris, who own the 1871 Victorian house on Pelican Street, rigged a car battery to two floodlights and aimed them into the deserted road below. With the floodlights off, the home's gas lanterns formed golden hallows on the porch, the only illumination other than the periodic sweep of searchlights from the military helicopters buzzing overhead.

It's been a terrifying nine days for the four, scrambling for food, water and gasoline for their generator and an arsenal of weapons they feared they would need if complete lawlessness broke out in the historic neighborhood of renovated 19th century homes. The neighborhood having survived the storm without flood damage, Pervel and Harris, both former presidents of the Algiers Point Association, worried that looters and others seeking high ground would invade the community.

Yet they have not had to fire a shot.

And that's a good thing for them. They were not sure if any of the borrowed weapons even worked.

But their fears were based on actual experiences. The day after the hurricane, Pervel was carjacked as he tried to check on his other properties in the neighborhood. Two guys clubbed him on the head with a sledgehammer, grabbed his keys and stole his van, which he had filled with hurricane supplies, a full tank of fuel and his credit cards.

The next afternoon, as Pervel and his mother, Harris and Stubbs stood on their porch, a gunfight between armed neighbors and "looters" erupted on the corner of Pelican and Valette streets, half a block away. The neighbors, whom Pervel would not identify, shot two of the men. "We screamed to Mrs. P., 'Hit the deck,' and she did," Harris said.

As night approaches on Tuesday, the neighborhood remains dark and powerless, but the city lights in the background show parts of downtown New Orleans are coming back to life. The timed-exposure photo shows military helicopters as they leave streaks of light across the sky.

"We just couldn't comprehend it, a gun battle in front of your house," said Stubbs, a native of Wales, who lives across the street from Pervel and Harris but has stayed since the storm with them at their "Fort Pelican." "You would walk outside, and your knees were wobbly and your lips would go dry."

After the violence, the men decided they needed protection. Other residents who had stayed during the storm were armed and taking turns checking on neighbors, some of them elderly, who remained in their houses. It was decided that everyone would keep an eye on his block, sharing essential supplies. Pervel, Harris and Stubbs joined them, keeping watch on Pelican and nearby streets.

"There's about 20 or 30 guys in addition to us. We know all of them and where they are," Harris said. "People armed themselves so quickly, rallying together. I think it's why the neighborhood survived."

But Pervel, Harris and Stubbs had a problem. They were without weapons other than a 40-year-old shotgun with no shells. Pervel, who had stayed in contact with many evacuated neighbors through the NOLA.com Web site and by his still-working telephone, got permission from residents to retrieve their guns and supplies from nearby houses.

"I never thought I'd be going into my neighbor's house and taking their guns. We wrote down what gun came from what house so we can return them when they get back," he said.

One neighbor used his dog, T-Bone, as a lookout, chaining him at night to a fire hydrant on a corner. The dog barked if anyone approached, Stubbs said.

The first few nights after the hurricane, Stubbs said they heard gunfire popping all around and saw people walking with flashlights through the streets. A tree had fallen at their corner, spilling a recycling bin full of cans. At the sound of a can rustling, the balcony watch group would flip the switch to the car battery, flooding the street in light, blinding whoever was below.

"We angled the lights so they wouldn't see us on the balcony," said Stubbs, rocking in the chair, smoking a cigarette.

With the area dry and mostly evacuated, they saw only one New Orleans police officer in the first four days after the storm. "We kept hearing on the radio, 'The military is coming, the military is coming, troops on the ground,' and we kept thinking, 'Where are they?'" Stubbs said. "We really felt alone."

During the day, Pervel's phone rang constantly, with residents calling from Texas, Mississippi, Florida, asking him to check on their homes, feed their pets. The men also made daily visits to deliver food and water to elderly neighbors. "I asked this one 84-year-old lady if she'd eaten, and she told me all she had was a can of Vienna sausages," Harris said. "I wanted to cry when I heard that."

By Tuesday, they'd checked on human beings as well scores of cats and dogs, a parrot, pet rats, two mice and a guinea pig.

"There are several guys in the neighborhood. They had this little task force. They knew everyone who stayed and where we were," said a resident who would only give her first name, Betty. "If it hadn't been to all those guys, making a statement to the looters, I don't know what would have happened.

"Our great fear was fire. If one started, it would have spread so quickly throughout the neighborhood," she said. On Tuesday, she made rounds through the neighborhood, feeding cats and dogs left stranded on the streets.

By Sunday night, tension in the neighborhood had started to release, Harris and Stubbs said, as more and more military vehicles were spotted patrolling the streets. "We really all breathed for the first time when we saw an armored personnel carrier come through," Harris said.

On Tuesday night, two Humvees crept down the road, flashing their lights at the balcony as Pervel lay down on his blanket, removed his glasses and rubbed his eyes. With the military on patrol, maybe the balcony watch group could finally get some sleep.

• • • • • •

Susan Langenhennig can be reached at suzgranger@hotmail.com

TIMES LIKE THESE CALL FOR A BANK LIKE THE WHITNEY

Founded in 1883, Whitney National Bank is the oldest continuously chartered bank headquartered in Louisiana. Generations of customers have counted on The Whitney through numerous devastating hurricanes. Our strong capital reserves, branch offices located across the entire Gulf Coast, and a detailed disaster recovery plan uniquely enable us to help our customers who have been impacted by Hurricane Katrina.

- Evacuated clients can conduct business at any operating Whitney branch . See www.whitneybank.com for a complete list of open branches.
- Clients may call Whitney's toll-free customer service line at 1-877-611-9448 to speak with a Whitney Banker.
- Whitney's BillPay service is operational at www.whitneybank.com. Consumer clients not currently using our online bill payment service can sign up by clicking the Personal BillPay link on www.whitneybank.com.
- Whitney's fees for using non-Whitney ATMs have been waived.
- Checks, deposits, and other transactions, including Automated Clearing House (ACH) files used by some business clients to pay their employees, are being processed through our Houston processing center.

Please visit www.whitneybank.com for updated information and other ways Whitney Bankers are assisting our clients and communities to recover from the storm.

It takes a Whitney Banker.

WHITNEY®

MEMBER FDIC

HURRICANE KATRINA AFTERMATH

Mandatory evacuations will be the next challenge

CRISES, from page 1

officers predicted the process would be achieved without violence. The possibility that those who remain behind could wind up padding the frightening death toll from the storm means remaining in the city is not an option, the superintendent said.

But those residents who want to remain -- and officials acknowledge there are many -- are apprehensive about the evacuation even as they prepare for it.

"My house survived the storm and then this morning these Blackhawk helicopters came down and blew out all my windows," said Elisa Miller, 32, of the city's Faubourg Marigny section. "All I can assume is they want to scare us into leaving, because they sure weren't coming to rescue me."

Miller said she would leave today now that police have told her she can get out on a bus with her dog.

Here and there the holdouts who had hoped to ride out the hurricane and the recovery were packing crates and getting ready to leave. So far, they said, officials moving through their neighborhoods have been kind and professional, while hinting that a later block-to-block search would have a harsher tone.

Search and rescue teams combing the city are leaving behind a new kind of graffiti, a giant, spray-painted "X" with the open sections showing the unit that made the search, the date, and the number of people believed to be living in the marked building. The overwhelming majority of houses show "0" in the bottom open section, but here and there are notations such as "8 in place" or "3 in place," indicating another visit will be necessary.

What was not necessary Wednesday was a return to the firefighting headaches that came earlier this week. While scattered fires did break out, and helicopters hovered above some neighborhoods dangling balloons laden with river water, officials said the count was far below what they have seen.

Since Hurricane Katrina, firefighters have battled 57 major fires in the city, New Orleans Fire Superintendent Charles Parent said. With the addition of 300 firefighters from New York City and 500 more from Illinois, Parent said the city is adequately staffed and using a New Orleans driver so the out-of-town units don't get lost.

Firefighters are not the only infusion to city services. Scores of police units, representing forces from Connecticut to California and from Michigan to Texas, are rolling on the city streets. The influx grew so great that the NOPD had to call a halt to the process, Deputy Superintendent Warren Riley said. Now, by assigning the newcomers to specific districts, the city has a handle on who is working where, he said.

That marks an enormous improvement from the two biggest handicaps the NOPD faced after Katrina: communications and mobility.

"The 7th District lost every vehicle it had; the 3rd and the 5th districts lost half their vehicles," Riley said.

On the communications front, a small piece of glass -- one of the billions of particles Katrina sent spinning around the city -- punctured the radiator in the department's main communications machinery atop the Entergy Tower. For most of last week, with death and destruction spreading, all law enforcement officials were forced to use the same channel run through Jefferson Parish equipment, creating a walkie-talkie cacophony. Finally, on Friday evening, an emergency repair team from Florida climbed the stairway to the top of the Entergy Tower, identified the problem and fixed it.

Officers are now able to hit trouble spots quickly and with overwhelming firepower. Indeed, when reports came out early Wednesday that cell phone equipment repairers in Algiers were being shot at, NOPD SWAT teams and National Guardsmen raced across the bridge, swarmed over four buildings near the old Fisher public housing development, and quickly arrested two men.

But for all that capability -- Riley estimated police can now handle 25 to 30 simultaneous emergencies when on a normal day the NOPD would be stretched by four -- officers warned that New Orleans remains a dangerous, deeply wounded place.

"It might look good -- well, better -- visually, but underneath it's not," NOPD spokesman Capt. Marlon Defillo said.

STAFF PHOTO BY DAVID GRUNFELD

Louisiana State Police officer Danny Flynn tries to persuade Rita Moragne to leave the Upperline Street home in which she was born 87 years ago. Moragne decided Wednesday to remain at least one more day, but agreed to pack her bag.

Rescuers face fight from those who won't leave

Nagin authorizes the use of force

By Brett Anderson and Jeff Duncan
Staff writers

Rescue personnel of all stripes fanned across New Orleans today to continue rescuing trapped citizens and try to persuade stubborn holdouts to vacate the flood-ravaged city. The mandatory evacuation order issued by Mayor Ray Nagin on Tuesday emboldens personnel to use force if necessary to clear the city of its remaining population.

"We're getting to the point where this environment is not safe. We're getting to the point where there are bodies floating on the water," said Captain Marlon Defillo, the New Orleans Police Department's chief spokesman. "If we need to use force to get people out, we will."

That action could come as early as today, when officials are expected ratchet up the pressure.

"I'm not going to wrestle with someone for 15 minutes trying to force them to get in the boat," said Eddie Compass, superintendent of the New Orleans Police Department. "I could be rescuing someone else in that 15 minutes. But there will come a time when we will have to use force."

Search-and-rescue missions will continue indefinitely. Capt. Timothy Bayard of the New Orleans Police Department, the officer coordinating the massive evacuation effort, said all 60 of his boats were on missions Tuesday and Wednesday in the parish's flooded areas of Lakeview, Gentilly, New Orleans East, the Ninth Ward and Mid-City. That didn't include the scores of volunteers who have arrived in the city in recent days with personal watercraft.

Rescue workers also are using commando trucks and military transport vehicles to evacuate residents from neighborhoods where water is waste deep or lower. Other teams are canvassing dry parts of the city on foot.

Though rescue boats have covered more than 60 percent of the city's flooded areas, Warren Riley, NOPD's deputy superintendent, estimated thousands are still in their homes in the high-water neighborhoods.

Many residents are refusing to abandon their pets. Others simply do not want to desert their homes.

"This is a poor city," Bayard said. "For many of these people, their home is all they've got. They don't want to turn that loose."

Soldiers in Humvees and military transport vehicles, boat-towing wildlife officers and law enforcement from across the country joined state and local police in convoys heading east on Interstate 10 toward the region's most severely flood-damaged areas.

By mid-afternoon, a line of parked Texas Parks & Wildlife trucks, each hitched to an empty boat trailer, lined the ramp connecting Interstates 610 and 10 east. Just below, rescue personnel and media representatives ignored or appeared unaware of the corpse wrapped in a garbage bag lying at the top of the Franklin Avenue on-ramp, which served as a boat launch for evacuation missions throughout the day.

"I'm a New Orleans clichØ," said Don Vavasseur, who was boat-rescued from the second floor of his mother-in-law's house at 4775 Franklin Ave. in Gentilly. "I stayed for Camille, I stayed for Betsy. You live in New Orleans, it's something you deal with."

The first dry land Vavasseur set foot on in over a week was littered with empty water bottles and gas cans and at least two filled body bags. Yet he seemed buoyant to have survived so well for so long on a large supply of food, water and Sterno in a partially submerged house. "The water on my street got to 12 feet," he said. Yet he considered turning his rescuers away when they arrived.

"I was making grits in the morning," said Vavasseur, 48. "I cooked red beans and rice last night."

Rita Maragne has lived at 526 Upperline St. for 87 years and she's not about to leave now. She told the California Highway Patrol officers that stopped by her house Wednesday that she has nowhere to go and doesn't want to abandon her dog, Pip, a Pomeranian.

"To hell with the mayor," Maragne said as tears welled in her eyes. "I'm not going to drink the damn water. Why do I gotta leave? I don't have nowhere to go."

The officers did their best to convince Maragne but she refused to budge.

"We're going to come check on your tomorrow, but after that you're kinda on your own," Capt. Jeffrey Lynn said. "We're not going to be back with food and water after that."

Maragne said she prefers it that way. She's the only person on her block still around. She has no phone and no electricity.

"I'm fine," Maragne said. "I've got plenty of food and water. I've got gas for the stove. I just want to be left alone."

Hurricane Katrina blew part of the roof and gutters off her double shotgun house. Otherwise, the house was unscathed. The floodwaters never reached her block, which sits on high ground a block or two from the Mississippi River levee.

"The house is the least of my worries now," Maragne said, turning one last time to a reporter to ask, "Do you really think they'll make me go?"

Rescue workers are using various means to coax the holdouts to leave. They basically pestered Mitch Stinnett and his wife, Candace, to evacuate.

The couple was prepared to weather the storm and its aftermath at their Mid-City home, at 3920 Banks St.

The day before the storm hit, they bought two months supply of water and food. They also had healthy supplies of kerosene, propane and charcoal for their grill, Mitch Stinnett said.

With 4 feet of water surrounding their home, they needed the extra supplies and rations. They used a canoe to make daily trips to the Sav-A-Center on Carrollton Avenue to pick up supplies and visit their neighbors.

"We were fine," Stinnett said. "People live in swamps all the time. This is no different."

Like so many others, the Stinnetts felt obligated to care for their two dogs, Wu, a black pure-bred German shepherd, and Lafitte, a black lab. They also were watching two more dogs and seven cats that neighbors had left behind.

But once rescue workers discovered them holed up in their home two days ago, they constantly hounded them with visits. Stinnett said a helicopter hovered over their house as many as eight times a day.

The worst part of the hurricane has been the helicopters," Stinnett said. "Our dogs were scared to death. We finally just decided we'd had enough and got out of there."

The Stinnetts were picked up by a convoy of rescue workers at the end of their block. The group consisted of a hodgepodge of armed officers from various agencies in California, New Jersey, Arkansas, Louisiana and Kentucky. In all, the convoy included three armored vehicles and 32 men and women, including 12 National Guardsmen from the 179th infantry division, based in Oklahoma.

For some of the men, this was their fifth trip into the swamped neighborhoods. One worker estimated that 50 percent to 75 percent of the people refuse to leave.

"One guy said, "I've got five gallons of water. I'm straight,'" said the worker. "These are just die-hard New Orleans folks. They don't know how serious this is."

Back on dry land, Florence McCarthy chose to ride out the storm to protect her possessions and those of her boyfriend, Albert Dale Donaldson. McCarthy was in the backyard of her Lower Garden District home when a squad of California Highway Patrol officers, accompanied by Louisiana State Trooper Ronald Sander, asked her and Donaldson to evacuate.

Neither felt they had a choice in the matter.

"They have the guns," said Donaldson. "I've just got a little pistol. They gave us two minutes to pack our bags."

McCarthy and Donaldson were ordered onto a military transport vehicle already half-full with fellow travelers. Sander said the evacuees would be taken by military transport vehicles to the Convention Center and then airlifted to the Louis Armstrong Airport.

McCarthy would have preferred to stay home.

"I'm most scared of other people," she said upon hearing she'd be going to the Convention Center. "I don't want to be alone with other people without protection."

The scene at Felicity and Prytania streets was subtly surreal, as at least a dozen citizens from the surrounding square block filed past CNN's Christiane Amanpour to board a military truck. California Highway Patrolman Don Oxley said partial power had returned to the area. Some residents were even offering his officers cold drinks.

Daniel Johnson walked right through the scene on his way to his girlfriend's, whom he said lives a few blocks away.

"I could live here a month I've got so much food," Johnson told Oxley.

"The problem is, the mayor of your town has said you have to leave," Oxley said.

Johnson argued that he would only have to wait a few days for the water to drop enough in the Central Business District for him to drive out in his own car, which is parked in a ramp by Charity Hospital. Oxley gently told Johnson to find his girlfriend and pack to leave.

Oxley said he had yet to encounter a citizen who needed to be forcefully evacuated, but he acknowledged the sensitivity of the situation.

"There's no easy way to tell someone that they've got to get out of their house," Oxley said. "This is the land of the free, you know."

HURRICANE KATRINA AFTERMATH

Demos call Bush 'oblivious'

KATRINA, from page 1

mandatory evacuation."

Meanwhile, scattered fires continued to burn in a city tormented by plagues of flame as well as flood.

Since Hurricane Katrina struck Aug. 29, the city has suffered 57 major fires in nine days, Fire Superintendent Charles Parent said. Many burned unchecked or were fought by helicopters dropping buckets of water from the Mississippi River.

The city is now reinforced with firefighters from New York City and Illinois, Parent said.

But the civil disorder of the first few days after the storm has been quelled, Compass said.

Backed by thousands of active duty soldiers and civilian law enforcements from around the country, "New Orleans may be the single safest city in the United States," Compass said.

He reported only three arrests since Tuesday night.

Police and federal forces are moving more swiftly and with greater coordination.

Early Wednesday, National Guardsmen and the police department's SWAT team swarmed the Algiers Fischer Housing Development, where someone fired on nearby technicians trying to restore cell phone service. Two men were arrested.

Efforts to drain the city continued. Army Corps of Engineers officials reported the 17th St. Canal Pumping Station is running at about 20 percent capacity. More portable pumps were arriving to supplement their work.

STAFF PHOTO BY DAVID GRUNFELD

New Mexico Army National Guardsmen Saul Velez, left, and Anthony Broussard check a mobile home for hurricane victims Wednesday during a sweep of Plaquemines Parish. Port Sulphur and most of the parish were completely destroyed.

Infections kill five

Still, nine days after the powerful storm stuck the Gulf Coast, Katrina continued to take a few more lives.

Four people in Mississippi and one person in Texas died of bacterial infections probably picked up in the storm's polluted floodwater, health authorities said.

They died of Vibrio vulnificus infections, produced by a bacterium that can enter through open wounds. The infection is most dangerous to the chronically ill and those with weak immune systems, health authorities said.

"There will be some more deaths associated with Vibrio vulnificus in the affected areas," said Tom Skinner, a spokesman for the federal Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

Yet overall, authorities seemed to downplay the overall disease potential posed by floods that percolated flooded sewage treatment plants and dumpsters, and which almost certainly contained thousands of corpses.

State epidemiologist Raoult Ratard said the health effect of all the water swirling about New Orleans for more than a week is uncertain.

Ratard said he doubted doctors would see many more digestive diseases related to the hurricane because their incubation periods are no longer than three days. Hepatitis A remains a possibility, although it is too soon to tell because it takes 30 days to develop after initial exposure.

Treatment for Hepatitis A is available, but the state's supply of that vaccine is short, he said.

Outlying areas struggling

Outside of New Orleans, state Rep. Nita Hutter, R-Chalmette, said St. Bernard Parish, which flooded from border to border, likely will remain closed for at least three weeks even though much water has drained away. She said communication in St. Bernard is "almost nonexistent."

And St. Tammany President Kevin Davis asked residents who have not yet returned to stay away a few more days.

Thousands of people rode out the storm in St. Tammany or have returned since. But an estimated 60,000 residents are still away, he said.

"Please try to hold on and give us just a couple of more days," he said. He feared congestion from returning traffic might slow utility crews that are making repairs.

Cleco said it had restored power to about a quarter of its customers in St. Tammany and Washington parishes.

Residents of Grand Isle are returning to a spit of land without gasoline, power or running water. The low-lying barrier island apparently suffered no major erosion, but homes and businesses were devastated.

Recovery efforts have been stymied almost completely by damage to the single bridge linking the island to the mainland. The bridge is open to cars and light trucks but not to heavy equipment required for repairs, Mayor David Carmadelle said.

A barge carrying 450,000 gallons of water was to arrive at the island Wednesday, he said.

Jefferson Parish officials said they thought Jefferson was just two or three weeks from re-establishing a commercial pulse. They said they envisioned Jefferson becoming the base from which New Orleans will be built, a function currently served by Baton Rouge.

Jefferson Parish educators set Oct. 3 as a target date for opening some schools, perhaps on a "platooning" system in which relatively undamaged buildings host separate waves of early-morning and late-afternoon students.

Bridges, museums damaged

While educators struggled to recover their systems, transportation authorities began to get a sense of Katrina's damage to scores of bridges carrying highways over South Louisiana's watery landscape.

The U.S. 90 bridge over the East Pearl River is open only to emergency vehicles, said Gordon Nelson, assistant secretary for the state Department of Transportation and Development.

The Rigolets bridge a few miles west is stuck and can't be opened for boats, he said.

In addition, the Bayou Liberty bridge between Thompson Road and Bayou Liberty Road west of Slidell is closed, he said.

Storm damage varied widely at cultural institutions around the area.

"We're learning that the destruction was even greater than we thought," said Ed Able, president of the American Association of Museums in Washington. He said museum officials were to meet in Baton Rouge to discuss museum security.

Most of the animals at the Audubon Zoo survived. But there were losses when a generator that aerated water failed at the Aquarium of the Americas, said John Hewitt IV, director of husbandry and a senior vice president at the Audubon Nature Institute.

Most of the animals in the giant shark tank and the Caribbean reef tank were lost, he said. Sea otters, penguins, a giant anaconda and a white alligator were apparently saved.

A 45-foot metal sculpture, "Virlane Tower," by Kenneth Snelson and valued at $500,000 was reduced to "a twisted mess in the lagoon," Able said.

Bush assailed

In Washington, two top Democrats assailed President Bush's handling of the post-Katrina response. Senate Minority Leader Harry Reid, D-Nev., demanded to know whether Bush's Texas vacation impeded relief efforts.

U.S. Rep Nancy Pelosi, D-Cal., the House Minority Leader, said Bush was "oblivious, in denial."

GOP congressional leaders met privately, reportedly to consider an unusual joint House-Senate investigation into why the government's response to Katrina was days late.

The White House is asking lawmakers to approve another $51.8 billion in relief for Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama. Congress is expected to approve the package as early as today to keep the flow of relief uninterrupted.

• • • • • •

With reporting by Ed Anderson, Meghan Gordon, Laura Maggi, John Pope, Manuel Torres, Jim Varney and the Associated Press

Confusion surrounds case of man accused of shooting at copter

By Susan Finch
Staff writer

BATON ROUGE -- Jurisdictional questions left in Hurricane Katrina's wake postponed most action Wednesday in the case of a 21-year-old man arrested Tuesday in Algiers for allegedly shooting at a relief helicopter.

Wendell L. Bailey was ordered returned to his cell at the West Baton Rouge Parish Prison after Magistrate Christine Noland of the U.S. District Court for the Middle District of Louisiana read him the charges he faces and declared, after learning he has no money, that he qualifies for free legal help.

Bailey told the magistrate that he was a $10-an-hour liquor store employee from January through March and then worked for Sears before being jailed from April until August, when he was released on parole.

Bailey, currently on probation, has felony convictions for marijuana distribution and possession of cocaine, federal officials said.

At the urging of Virginia Schlueter, federal public defender for the Eastern District of Louisiana court, Noland agreed to delay further proceedings on Bailey's case at least until Monday while officials decide whether the law requires his case be handled by the federal court in New Orleans, which has been temporarily closed because of the storm.

From a procedural standpoint, Bailey's case is unusual. Wednesday's hearing was set to be heard at the Houma annex of the New Orleans-based U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana.

The hearing, however, was moved to Baton Rouge after the U.S. Marshals Service expressed security concerns about the Houma facility, according to Assistant U.S. Attorney Michael Magner of New Orleans.

"We did not go to Houma because the Marshals Service did not believe they could provide security for inmates and the court there," Magner said, adding that the Houma facility was designed as a venue for civil cases only.

If the Marshals Service can secure the Houma building to handle criminal cases, Bailey's hearing will resume there Monday, Magner said.

Meanwhile, he added, a bill introduced by U.S. Sen. David Vitter, R- La., that could be acted on soon would allow a quick fix for the jurisdictional problem that delayed the Bailey case.

Vitter's bill would allow federal courts, in the event of an emergency declared by their chief judges, to handle criminal case pretrial proceedings in another jurisdiction, Magner said.

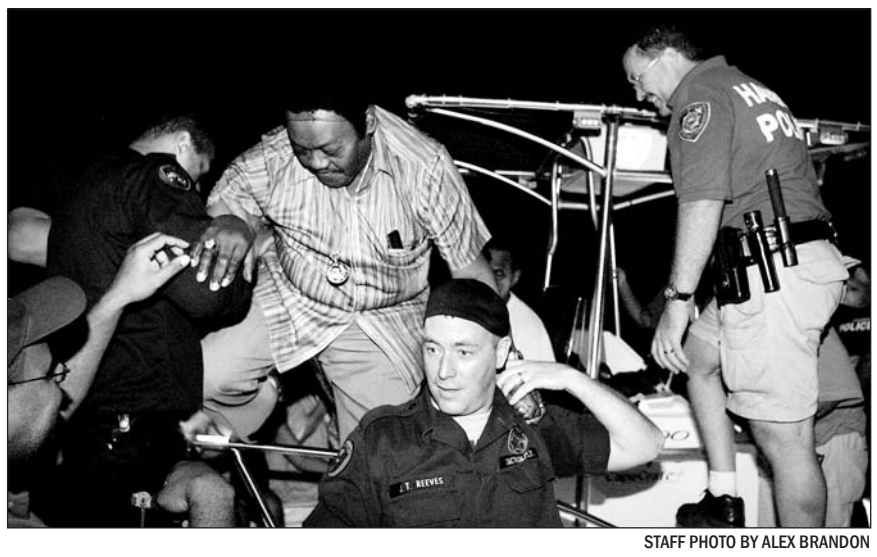
At Hibernia,
we understand,
because we live and
work here, too.

Over the years, we've learned there's nothing more important than the businesses and the people we serve, our employees, and their communities. Therefore, Hibernia is devoted to helping anyone whose life or business has been affected by Hurricane Katrina. We understand that rebuilding is a top priority, and we want to prevent natural disasters from turning into economic ones. Hibernia is dedicated to giving you and your business the financial support necessary for getting on with life.

A note to our employees:
If you haven't yet contacted your manager, please do so as soon as possible. If you need further information, please call the employee emergency hotline.

HIBERNIA
Where service matters.SM

Click
Log on to Hibernia.com



Visit
Any Hibernia banking office

EQUAL HOUSING LENDER
©2005 Hibernia National Bank, Member FDIC. Normal credit qualifications apply.

Katrina disbands N.O. music community

Venues damaged, performers exiled

By Keith Spera
Music writer

STAFF PHOTO BY ALEX BRANDON

Musician Fats Domino, center, gets a hand from Trevor Reeves, an officer with the New Orleans Police Department SWAT team, at the St. Claude Bridge near Domino's Lower 9th Ward home on Aug. 29. As floodwater surged the Rock 'n' Roll Hall of Fame inductee's memorabilia-filled home, he was finally rescued by boat.

It is one of many tragedies within the greater Hurricane Katrina tragedy: The exodus and disruption of New Orleans' fabled music community, possibly for a very long time.

Marquee acts based in New Orleans - such as the Neville Brothers, Better Than Ezra, Cowboy Mouth, the Radiators and Nicholas Payton - will continue to make money on the road, even if their hometown is uninhabitable. Major touring acts can return once the New Orleans Arena and other large venues are repaired.

But the working musicians who populate the neighborhood clubs, second-line parades and jazz brunches are more vulnerable financially; many often live gig to gig. Katrina's floodwater has swept away cheap housing along with club and convention jobs.

And New Orleans will be unplugged for months, not weeks. Preservation Hall's Web site says the venerable jazz club, open since 1961, is closed "indefinitely," even though the French Quarter sustained considerably less damage than other areas of the city.

Musicians must find work, and assistance, elsewhere. For now, the backbone of New Orleans' close-knit music community is shattered and scattered. How it will reassemble in Katrina's aftermath is anyone's guess.

Will brass bands ever march again through the historic Treme community, which was inundated?

Will Vaughan's, the ramshackle little jazz joint in the devastated Bywater neighborhood, ever resume its Thursday night barbecue with Kermit Ruffins?

Will the street musicians that once populated the French Quarter ever return?

And will the Neville Brothers, New Orleans' first family of funk, ever call the city home again?

Aaron Neville, who appeared alongside Harry Connick Jr. and Wynton Marsalis for a hastily organized Sept. 1 storm relief telethon, is resettling in Nashville, Tenn., with his brother Art. Sibling Cyril is in Austin, son Ivan in Los Angeles.

Aaron Neville has heard reports of bodies floating in his eastern New Orleans neighborhood. He can't imagine when he might return.

"Right now, it doesn't even look possible," Neville said Tuesday. "They've got to clean that place with a fine-toothed comb. People walking through that water are getting sick. And I don't know if I want to go back, because it could happen again. If they don't build it back above sea level, it's still vulnerable."

Wounds and woes

Two days after Katrina passed, Tipitina's, the city's flagship music club, largely was unscathed on its swath of high, dry ground along the Mississippi River. A few blocks away, the only damage to Art Neville's meticulously restored home was to the wooden fence that surrounds it.

But many others weren't so lucky.

Iconic jazz clarinetist Pete Fountain lost homes in New Orleans and Bay St. Louis, Miss., as well as Casino Magic, which had become his primary venue. Fountain rode out the storm in a Mississippi Day's Inn, and he has since sought shelter in Winnsboro.

Singer Charmaine Neville, Aaron Neville's niece and the featured Monday night act at jazz bistro Snug Harbor, survived a brutal attack by marauders. As floodwater surged into Rock 'n' Roll Hall of Fame inductee Fats Domino's memorabilia-filled home in the lower 9th Ward, he finally was rescued by boat.

Guitar legend Clarence "Gatemouth" Brown, 81, already battling emphysema, lung cancer and blocked arteries, now has additional woes: His home on a Slidell bayou was destroyed. A photo depicted his trademark black Cadillac parked in a pile of debris, including a sodden guitar case. Brown escaped to Texas before the storm hit.

In the short term, other regions will reap the rewards of this musical diaspora. Trumpeters Irvin Mayfield and Ruffins, and singer/songwriter Theresa Andersson landed in Baton Rouge. Rhythm and blues pianist Eddie Bo was in Paris when Katrina struck, and he is now staying in Lafayette. Clarinetist Michael White retreated to Houston.

Keyboardist Jon Cleary is in California, preparing for a tour with Bonnie Raitt. Guitarists Eric Lindell and Chris Mule, saxophonist Tim Green and sousaphonist Kirk Joseph joined forces for an impromptu gig recently in Hermosa Beach, Calif.

Benefits planned

Several individuals and organizations are staging benefits to assist displaced New Orleans musicians.

Proprietors of the Howlin' Wolf club in the Warehouse District are organizing benefits with club owners in Dallas, Houston and Austin, Texas. Preservation Hall also has established the New Orleans Musicians Hurricane Relief fund through its Web site, www.preservationhall.com.

In Houston, a new organization called NOAH, New Orleans and Houston, has set itself up as an "employment and relocation aid" for musicians. Houston pianist Paul English has invited New Orleans musicians to fill in for his standing gig at the Magnolia Hotel.

John "Papa" Gros, leader of the hard-working funk band Papa Grows Funk - the sort of dependable, instantly accessible band that populated New Orleans clubs pre-Katrina - is optimistic that he and his fellow musicians one day will return.

Gros concluded a month-long Japanese tour just before Katrina struck. Instead of orchestrating a triumphant homecoming at the ramshackle Maple Leaf bar, home for his band's weekly Monday night gig, he resettled in Lake Charles, where his kids are now enrolled in school. His band mates are in Dallas, Montgomery, Ala., and Lutcher.

But they will reconvene this week on the West Coast for a tour. He says Papa Grows Funk will tour as much as possible in the coming months and establish weekly residencies in Houston, Lafayette and Baton Rouge.

"We have New Orleans musicians in all these places, and they all need work," Gros said. "If I can put money in their pockets and play some New Orleans music, that's what I can do."

'New Orleans is in us'

Gros is only marking time until he can return to New Orleans.

"Hell, yes, the city will come back," Gros said. "It's New Orleans. No matter how bad it is, the pride that New Orleanians take in the city is so strong. As long as politicians don't steal the money for the rehabilitation, the city will come back.

"(The revitalization) will start in the neighborhoods. Neighbors helping neighbors again. The neighborhood bars, the neighborhood groceries, will come back. People who live in Uptown take pride in Uptown. Treme takes pride in Treme. Mid-City takes pride in Mid-City. It's their pride, their life. That's all they know.

"And I can't wait for the songs that will come out of this."

How many musicians eventually return once New Orleans is back on its feet will determine the future character of the city's music.

Harry Connick Jr. has praised his fellow New Orleanians' "freakishly strong" spirit. And even if the Nevilles and hundreds of their peers live in exile, Aaron Neville is confident they will maintain some sense of community and continuity.

"New Orleans is in us," Neville said. "That's all we know. We might be relocated somewhere else, but New Orleans is always in our hearts and souls and minds.

"Especially the music."

• • • • • •

Music writer Keith Spera can be reached at keithspera@yahoo.com.

Five deaths linked to tainted water

By John Pope
Staff writer

Five people died from a disease related to Hurricane Katrina, succumbing to a bacterium that can enter the body through open wounds after a slog through polluted water, federal authorities announced Wednesday.

Four of the deaths from complications of Vibrio vulnificus infections were reported in Mississippi, and the fifth occurred in Texas, said Tom Skinner of the federal Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

He predicted more such deaths are likely in the New Orleans area.

The infection, which also can result from eating contaminated oysters, is one of several possible diseases that can result from spending time in foul water. People with chronic illnesses such as diabetes or weakened immune systems are at greater risk of complications.

State epidemiologist Raoult Ratard discouraged anyone from eating oysters harvested in Louisiana until tainted waters have been cleared from the area.

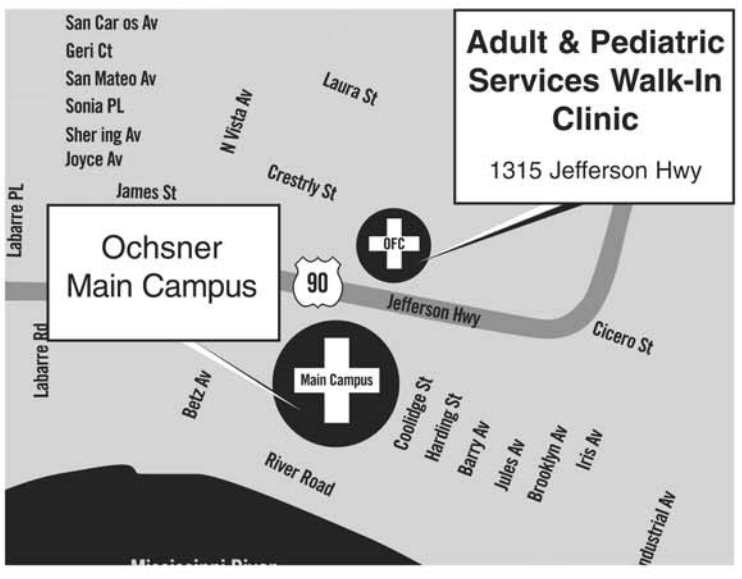
Although the diseases can be treated easily, people can help ward off problems by drying off, cleaning up and paying attention to open wounds exposed to the water, said Dr. Robert Tauxe, chief of the CDC's food-borne and digestive diseases branch.

"The water is a stinking mess," he said. "You don't want to be around it."

Although the micro-organism that killed the five storm victims comes from the same family as the bacterium that can cause cholera, medical experts were quick to point out Wednesday that it is not cholera.

Tests have shown that the water swirling through the New Orleans area carries the E. coli bacterium because of sewage in the water, but Tauxe said it is the strain that everyone carries, not the one that can cause disease.

Consequently, it shouldn't be a threat to people who have safe drinking water, he said.



Ochsner today:
Still open and operating

Ochsner's main campus hospital functioned effectively all through the hurricane providing essential care to our adult and pediatric patients. Now, as the recovery continues, Ochsner has intensified its efforts to ensure that your healthcare continues uninterrupted.

As an Ochsner patient, you should know that:

- Your medical records are accessible electronically from any Ochsner clinic
- Ochsner hospital is fully operational, including surgery and other major procedures
- The Emergency Department is open and accepting walk-ins
- A new adult and pediatric services primary care walk-in clinic for New Orleans residents has opened at the Ochsner for Children Ambulatory Care Center on Jefferson Highway
- Ochsner clinics in Baton Rouge and on the North Shore are open and adding doctors and more services to accommodate our patients
- Ochsner clinics in Kenner (2120 Driftwood Blvd.), Metairie (2005 Veterans Blvd.), and on the West Bank/Lapalco (4225 Lapalco Blvd.) will open on Monday, September 12

If you are not presently an Ochsner patient, Ochsner is open for you, too, with convenient neighborhood clinics and the advantage of Ochsner's expertise and exceptional capabilities in caring.

Adult & Pediatric Services Walk-In Clinic at Ochsner for Children Ambulatory Care Center
1315 Jefferson Highway
Across from the main campus

Offering pediatrics, internal medicine, obstetrics and cardiology services.
Monday - Friday, 10am - 5pm

If you or a family member needs medical assistance or an appointment, call 1-504-842-3155.

Ochsner
www.ochsner.org
1-504-842-3155

OCHSNER ACCEPTS ALL MAJOR HEALTH PLANS.

OUR GOOD HANDS® ARE HERE TO HELP.

The people of Allstate would like to express their concern for those affected by Hurricane Katrina and let you know that their thoughts are with you.

The Allstate Catastrophe Team is working diligently to get our Mobile Response Units to the most heavily impacted areas as quickly and safely as we can.

Nothing is more important than your personal safety. So please follow the advice of local authorities and know that we are standing by ready to help.

ALLSTATE'S CATASTROPHE HOTLINE: 1-800-54-STORM

Allstate®
You're in good hands.

Allstate Insurance Company, Allstate Property and Casualty Insurance Company and Allstate Indemnity Company: Northbrook, IL. ©2005 Allstate Insurance Company.

CYAN MAGENTA YELLOW BLACK
HOUMA COURIER WINN DIXIE 9/8/05 PAGE 8

This message is intended for WINN-DIXIE associates displaced by Hurricane Katrina.

Winn-Dixie wants to be sure that all of our associates affected by the recent devastating hurricane are safe in the aftermath of the storm. If possible, please call your Store Director to let us know you're alright.

If you are unable to reach your Store Director, go to the nearest open Winn-Dixie store or call this special toll-free hotline for Winn-Dixie Associates affected by Hurricane Katrina:

(866) 750-1373

For temporary housing assistance call:

(866) 547-4782

Together we will overcome this obstacle, and rebuild our lives and a community that is stronger than ever.

Jeff president asks for help rebuilding

Tattered U.S. flag is symbol of community

By Michelle Krupa
West Bank bureau

Jefferson Parish President Aaron Broussard handed a tattered American flag to the nation's security czar Wednesday and asked him to devote every possible resource to reestablishing a "sustainable living condition" in the suburban community within a month of Hurricane Katrina's landfall.

Broussard also asked Homeland Security Secretary Michael Chertoff to "build radio towers that are fortresses" so storm victims stuck in their homes and refugees stranded outside their neighborhoods can get up-to-the-minute information anywhere in the nation. And he pushed the need for ramped-up federal efforts to combat coastal erosion to low-lying areas to protect greater New Orleans against another catastrophic hurricane.

In recounting the private session of about 25 parish and federal officials, Broussard said he eschewed Chertoff's request to tour wind- and flood-ravaged Jefferson neighborhoods Wednesday. By the time he arrived for a 5 p.m. meeting at the parish's Emergency Operations Center in Marrero, Chertoff would have witnessed the worst of Katrina's massacre during earlier visits to Orleans and St. Bernard parishes, Broussard said.

"Jefferson Parish would have seemed like a cakewalk," he said.

Broussard also related in detail a chronology that started Aug. 26 with a parishwide evacuation order and ending with Jefferson in a tangle of downed trees, smashed buildings and as much as 15 feet of water in some east bank areas after the Aug. 30 breach in the 17th Street Canal, according to the parish president and other local officials who attended the meeting. Broussard said it will take 21 days to remove the water from Old Metairie and neighborhoods around Airline Highway.

Chertoff asked for numbers of residents who may have perished in Katrina, those who evacuated and those who stayed to weather the storm in their homes. Broussard said he did not know such details yet, adding that officials have not begun to search for the dead, those attending the meeting said.

Broussard also said that in the days before the hurricane, he asked for medical personnel from across the country to head to Louisiana to provide support for local doctors, nurses and pharmacists. Finally on Wednesday, 200 medical professionals arrived from Maryland after that state's governor volunteered their services.

STAFF PHOTO BY RUSTY COSTANZA

Gary Cohn uses his work van Wednesday to distribute food, water and ice to those who couldn't get the necessities on their own. He has delivered four or five vanloads a day to about 400 residents in Metairie and Bucktown since the storm hit.

To begin the 40-minute meeting, Broussard handed to Chertoff a ragged flag he found Wednesday during a quick trip to Plaquemines Parish and asked the national security chief to present it to President Bush. "This flag represents the greater New Orleans area," Broussard said he told Chertoff. "We are ripped. We are torn. We are shredded. But we're still Americans. Send us all you can and restore this community like you would restore this flag."

Broussard also announced Wednesday the creation of Operation Life-Line Depot, a parish effort to open neighborhood elementary schools to local residents to get food, water, hygiene products and possibly to distribute textbooks to students who could not evacuate. Jefferson's public schools hope to re-open in early October, the district superintendent has said.

Elsewhere Wednesday in Jefferson, residents returned to their homes to survey damage as armed National Guard soldiers, most from Missouri, patrolled major intersections and about 100 New York City police fanned out to join forces with thousands of local sheriff's deputies and municipal police to maintain order.

Some residents arrived in pickups or with U-Haul trucks to cart out mattresses, chests of drawers, linens and keepsakes that Katrina spared. But others turned their front-door keys to return home for good despite a lack of electricity, water and sewerage services and a request from parish officials for everyone to get out by 6 p.m. today.

Provisions also were in short supply, with most grocery stores and restaurants boarded up or locked. But one gas station near Lapalco and Woodmere boulevards catered to a steady row of about 50 cars at the bargain-basement price of $2.38 per gallon, and many of those idling in line said they wanted to stay in Jefferson to help rebuild as quickly as possible.

In Jean Lafitte, Taddese Tewelde proudly opened the doors to the Piggly Wiggly across from Town Hall on Louisiana 45 as electricity flashed on in the hamlet's northern areas after noon. Though his frozen foods, meats and produce spoiled when Katrina knocked out power last week, Tewelde sold snacks, cleaning supplies, soda, cakes and paper goods at pre-storm prices. His beer and cigarette cache was stolen when he evacuated to Baton Rouge last week.

Over-the-counter medications were shelved behind yellow police tape so they would not be pilfered. Tewelde, who is a pharmacist, said he expected to start selling prescription drugs again today or Friday, though lack of a phone line meant he would not be able to process insurance claims. And because Federal Emergency Management Agency workers had not gotten to Lafitte by Wednesday, Tewelde expected that residents would not have medication vouchers for his pharmacy to submit for reimbursement, he said.

"I will have to charge full price," he said, adding that he would be torn between providing medicine to neighbors in his tiny community and operating his business at a potentially devastating loss.

Further down the bayou, Tracy LaBella said he'd be shopping at the food mart in coming weeks. He didn't care that power and telephone service still was out at his home on the Barataria banks near the Intracoastal Canal, or that officials planned to enforce a dusk-to-dawn curfew starting Friday morning.

But LaBella had rigged a generator to run his air conditioner and planned to house three adults and three kids at the property while he rebuilds his home.

Despite the inconveniences, life seemed to be getting back to normal, as 12-year-old Trey Brewer, who lives with his mother and LaBella, showed off a prize that Katrina probably deposited in the coastal waters.

"Hey!" Trey shouted. "I caught a soft-shell turtle!"

"Yeah, he survived the hurricane," LaBella replied. "Let him go."

JEFFERSON PARISH TRASH DISPOSAL

FOOD WASTE
Jefferson Parish residents may take food waste to these locations:

East Jefferson: Lakeside Shopping Center, Metairie; Clearview Mall, Metairie; Elmwood Center, Elmwood; The Esplanade mall, Kenner

West Jefferson: Belle Promenade mall, Marrero; Oakwood Mall, Gretna

SEPARATING YOUR TRASH
Parish officials ask that residents separate household garbage and storm debris into seven categories:

- Regular household garbage in garbage cans or heavy-duty trash bags.
- Clean wood and tree debris.
- Roofing material.
- Carpeting, furniture, etc.
- Metal debris.
- Appliances such as stoves, air conditioners and refrigerators.
- Hazardous household waste, such as pesticides, paints, solvents and auto fluids.

JEFFERSON PARISH LANDFILL
The parish landfill, 5800 U.S. 90 West, Waggaman, is open Mondays through Saturdays from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

- Only Jefferson Parish residents are allowed to dump there; proof of residency is required. There is no charge for them to dump household garbage or storm debris.
- Businesses and contractors will be charged $28 per ton until further notice.

STAFF GRAPHIC

Attention Louisiana Retired Teachers!

TRSL Teachers' Retirement System of Louisiana

If you are a TRSL retiree living in one of the ZIP CODES affected by Hurricane Katrina that begin with the numbers:

369, 393, 394, 395, 396, 700, 701, 704

Contact us for information about your benefit check!

Teachers' Retirement System of Louisiana
8401 United Plaza Boulevard, Suite 300
Baton Rouge, LA 70809-7017
Phone: 225-925-6446
or
1-877-ASK-TRSL (1-877-275-8775)
to leave a message for a return call.

We have extended office hours during this time to meet your needs.

www.trsl.org We're here to help you!

Jeff plans to be regional recovery base

Some schools may open Oct. 3

By Mark Waller
East Jefferson bureau

BATON ROUGE -- Jefferson Parish government and school officials Wednesday began promoting their damaged but hardly devastated parish as the future core of recovery for the entire New Orleans area.

In many respects, Baton Rouge is serving that role for the moment, and the capital is where the Jefferson School Board held an emergency meeting, in the building where the state Board of Elementary and Secondary Education normally convenes. But the officials described Jefferson as being as close as two or three weeks away from flickering back to life.

Parish Council Chairman Tom Capella said the government will get the parish running quickly, so Jefferson can help in the rebuilding of its harder-hit neighbors in Orleans, St. Bernard and Plaquemines parishes.

"We are fully committed in Jefferson Parish to rebuilding our community," Parish Council member Chris Roberts said. "I think Jefferson Parish has an opportunity to grow."

Jefferson schools Superintendent Diane Roussel said she thinks the parish soon will be the hub of redevelopment for the New Orleans region.

"The word today is much more encouraging than before," Roussel said of the damage in Jefferson. "Folks, we'll be up and running shortly."

"In every challenge," she said, "there is an opportunity."

Schools to reopen soon

The School Board approved a resolution setting Oct. 3 as the target date to reopen some schools. That came after members heard a preliminary report of damage to the parish's 84 public schools, which before Katrina served 50,000 students, employed 7,000 people and had a budget of $330 million.

The target puts Jefferson well ahead of some school systems in Katrina's path. State Superintendent Cecil Picard said Tuesday that Orleans and St. Bernard schools may not be able to reopen at all during the 2005-06 academic year.

Some reports had Jefferson schools not opening until January, but board members strongly refuted that scenario.

Jefferson officials said more than 40 schools are in good condition, 11 have minor damage that can be fixed quickly and nine have serious damage that will take more time to fix. Roof damage appeared to be the most common problem.

Because some schools will not be able to reopen soon, and because the student population likely will fluctuate wildly in the coming months, Roussel and some board members suggested the practice of "platooning," under which different sets of students attend a school in different shifts.

Jefferson used that system during its population boom in the 1960s and 1970s, when school construction didn't keep pace with growth. But enrollment has declined considerably in the past 20 years.

Stemming the losses

In addition to their eagerness to begin serving as the next base of recovery, some Jefferson officials said restarting school soon could stem permanent losses of students and families who evacuated the storm strike zone and now are settling, at least temporarily, into schools in other cities and states.

Board member Etta Licciardi, who evacuated to Arlington, Texas, for a week, said Texas communities see evacuees as potential new residents, so the Louisiana schools must act soon.

"Those people want our kids," Licciardi said. "They want to keep our kids. They want to keep our teachers."

But board member Judy Colgan said open schools in themselves are not enough to get Jefferson back on its feet. She said businesses need to reopen and put employees back to work.

"The economy is what's going to drive the return of residents," Colgan said. She urged businesses to move as fast as possible.

The Jefferson school system has enough money reserved in its $24 million fund balance to continue paying employees at least for the rest of this month, officials said.

"We've always called it a rainy day balance," Chief Financial Officer Raylyn Stevens said. "I believe this is it."

But as long as the parish is mostly closed for business, she said, the school system cannot collect revenue from its most important local source: sales taxes. That's a loss of about $12 million per month.

That realization led board President Ray St. Pierre and Vice President Martin Marino to suggest that state and federal financial help might be promptly needed.

Roussel said she was planning to travel to Washington to give a speech today before the Senate Committee on Health, Education, Labor and Pensions about the needs facing Southeast Louisiana schools.

STATE FARM
is here to help.

In the aftermath of Hurrican Katrina, State Farm® understands the devastating toll of this catastrophe.

And we're here to help.

Whether you're at home or have been displaced and can't reach your State Farm agent, if you're a State Farm customer who needs to file a claim, you can reach us.

- Contact any State Farm Agent near your current location.
- Call 1-800-SF-CLAIM (1-800-732-5246) to reach our catastrophe operators; or
- Visit statefarm.com® to initiate your claim online.

LIKE A GOOD NEIGHBOR STATE FARM IS THERE.®

Providing Insurance and Financial Services

State Farm Insurance Companies • Home Offices: Bloomington, IL

Alarm sounded too late after storm

Slow response left city in lurch

By John McQuaid
Staff writer

Hurricane Katrina devastated New Orleans with a double blow when it made landfall Aug. 29. First, storm surge waters from the east rapidly swamped St. Bernard Parish and eastern New Orleans before the eye of the storm had passed the city about 9 a.m. Within hours, surge waters collapsed city canal floodwalls and began to "fill the bowl," while top officials continued to operate for a full day under the mistaken belief that the danger had passed.

A rough reconstruction of the flooding based on anecdotal accounts, interviews and computer modeling shows that the huge scale of the overlapping floods - one fast, one slow - should have been clear to some officials by mid-afternoon Monday, when city representatives confirmed that the 17th Street Canal floodwall had been breached.

At that point areas to the east were submerged from the earlier flooding, trapping thousands, while gradually rising waters stretched from the Lakefront across to Mid-City and almost to the Central Business District.

Federal officials have referred to the levee breaches as a separate and much later event from the flooding to the east, and said that they were unaware of the gravity of the problem until Tuesday, suggesting valuable response time was lost.

"It was midday Tuesday that I became aware of the fact that there was no possibility of plugging the (17th Street Canal) gap and that essentially the lake was going to start to drain into the city. I think that second catastrophe really caught everybody by surprise," Homeland Security Secretary Michael Chertoff said Sunday, adding that he thought the breach had occurred Monday night or Tuesday morning. By that time, flooding from at least one of the two breached canals already had been under way all day Monday, evidence shows.

Even on Tuesday, as still-rising waters covered most of New Orleans, FEMA official Bill Lokey sounded a reassuring note in a Baton Rouge briefing.

"I don't want to alarm everybody that, you know, New Orleans is filling up like a bowl," Lokey said. "That's just not happening."

Once a levee or floodwall is breached by a hurricane storm surge, engineers say, it often widens and cannot quickly be sealed. Storm surge waters in Lake Pontchartrain may take a day or more to subside, so they keep pouring into the city - most of which lies below sea level - until the levels inside and outside the levee are equal.

Experts familiar with the hurricane risks in the New Orleans area said they were stunned that no one had conveyed the information about the breaches or made clear to upper-level officials the grave risk they posed, or made an effort to warn residents about the threat after storm winds subsided Monday afternoon.

"I'm shocked. I don't understand why the response wasn't instantaneous," said Louisiana State University geology professor Greg Stone, who studies coastal storm surge dynamics.

"They should have been monitoring this and informed people all the way to the top, (and) then they should have warned people," said Ivor Van Heerden, who uses computer models at the LSU Hurricane Center to study storm surges and provided officials in the Louisiana Office of Emergency Preparedness headquarters with data indicating the potential for flooding that could result from Katrina.

The storm approached the coast early Monday, the easterly winds from its northern quadrant pumping a rising surge into the marshy Lake Borgne area east of St. Bernard. There, two hurricane levees come together into a large V-shape. Storm surge researchers say that point acts as a giant funnel: Water pouring into the confined area rises up - perhaps as much as 20 feet in this case - and is funneled between the levees all the way into New Orleans.

The water likely topped the levees along the north side adjacent to eastern New Orleans, which average only 14 or 15 feet, according to the Army Corps of Engineers' New Orleans project manager Al Naomi.

STAFF PHOTO BY RUSTY COSTANZA

A helicopter ferries a sandbag Thursday to fill the breach in the 17th Street Canal. A reconstruction of the flooding of New Orleans suggests that the extent of the problem should have been apparent to officials by mid-afternoon Monday.

The surge reached the Industrial Canal before dawn and quickly overflowed on both sides, the canal lockmaster reported to the Corps. At some point not long afterward, Corps officials believe a barge broke loose and crashed through the floodwall, opening a breach that accelerated flooding into the Lower Ninth Ward and St. Bernard Parish.

The floodwaters moved quickly.

By around 8 a.m., authorities reported rising water on both sides of the Industrial Canal, in St. Bernard and eastern New Orleans. The Coast Guard reported sighting residents on rooftops in the Upper Ninth Ward. "Water is inundating everywhere," in St. Bernard, Parish Council Chairman Joey DiFatta said.

At 9 a.m., there was 6 to 8 feet of water in the Lower 9th Ward, state officials said. Less than two hours later, most of St. Bernard was a lake 10 feet deep. "We know people were up in the attics hollering for help," state Sen. Walter Boasso, R-Arabi, said that morning. By 11 a.m., water was covering Interstate 10 at a low point near the high-rise over the Industrial Canal.

Sometime Monday morning, the 17th Street Canal levee burst when storm surge waters pressed against it and possibly topped it, Corps officials said. Col. Richard P. Wagenaar, the corps's site commander at 17th Street, told The Washington Post that a police officer called him Monday morning to tell him about it. He told the Post he couldn't get to the site.

Naomi said he thinks the breach occurred in the mid- or late-morning after the hurricane's eye had passed east of the city. By that time, north winds would have pushed storm surge water in Lake Pontchartrain south against the hurricane levees and into the canals. Then the wind shifted to the west.

"As I remember it the worst of the storm had passed when we got word the floodwall had collapsed," he said. "It could have been when we were experiencing westerly winds in the aftermath of the storm, which would have been pushing water against it."

Naomi and other Corps officials say they think the water in the canal topped the levee on the Orleans Parish side, weakening its structure on the interior side and causing its collapse. However, Van Heerden said he does not believe the water was high enough in the lake to top the 14-foot wall and that the pressure caused a "catastrophic structural failure."

It's unclear when floodwalls in the London Avenue canal were breached, but Naomi said it may have been about the same time.

Once the floodwalls failed, water - then at about 8 feet or higher in the lake - began to pour into New Orleans from the west, beginning the full-scale nightmare emergency managers and other officials most feared. At 10 a.m., reporters from The Times-Picayune saw water rising over I-10 where it dips beneath the railway trestle south and east of the canal.

Naomi said that he thinks Corps officials had communicated the information about the breaches to the Baton Rouge Office of Emergency Preparedness

"It was disseminated. It went to our OEP in Baton Rouge, to the state, FEMA, the Corps," Naomi said. "The people in the field knew it. The people here (in Corps offices) in Louisiana and Mississippi knew it. I don't know how communication worked in those agencies."

Officials at the OEP could not be reached for comment. New Orleans officials were also aware of the 17th Street Canal breach and publicly confirmed it at 2 p.m. Around the same time, The Times-Picayune reported 4 feet of water in one Lakeview neighborhood.

An hour later, Terry Ebbert, head of New Orleans' emergency operations, listed Treme and Lakeview as among the areas hardest hit by the flooding. Ebbert said there would be casualties because many people were calling emergency workers saying they were trapped on rooftops, in trees and attics. In some cases, he said, authorities lost contact with people pleading for help.

As the day wore on, the flood crept east and south and made its way across the city, penetrating neighborhood after neighborhood.

At 3 p.m. Times-Picayune reporters found it was knee-deep under the Jefferson Davis overpass near Xavier University. A Mid-City couple stranded there said their home was surrounded by 5 feet of water. An hour later, the I-10 dip under the railroad overpass was under 15 feet of water.

George Saucier, the CEO of Lindy Boggs Medical Center south of City Park, told The Times-Picayune that water from the 17th Street breach had flowed into Bayou St. John and overflowed its banks, then followed streets like sluices on its way south, where it was starting to flood the hospital's basement.

By late afternoon, people stranded on I-10 near the Industrial Canal could see residents on rooftops stretching across Lower 9th Ward.

As night fell Monday, many outside of New Orleans breathed a sigh of relief believing the city had been largely spared the worse. But thousands were stranded from the Lower Ninth Ward, across St. Bernard and south to the east bank of Plaquemines Parish. And waters continued to rise overnight throughout central New Orleans. By dawn, they stretched all the way from east to west and into Uptown, and were coursing through the Central Business District. As TV helicopters flew over the city and beamed out pictures of the flooding, the extent of the catastrophe was clear.

That flooding would complicate evacuation efforts in New Orleans for days.

Special Hurricane Katrina update for Humana customers, members, providers, agents and brokers.

The damage sustained by the communities and residents of the Gulf Coast is beyond a disaster - it is a terrible human tragedy. Humana is committed to helping our customers and partners in the affected areas recover as quickly as possible.

Effective August 28, 2005, for all individuals or businesses from the affected areas that have Commercial or Medicare plans, Humana will provide a one-month grace period for the payment of premiums.

For affected Humana members, we are implementing the following policies:

- To guide you in finding a provider for necessary medical care, you can call 1-866-427-7478 or 920-337-5090 to reach one of our customer service associates, or use our Physician Finder Plus at www.humana.com.
- If your prescription medication was lost or damaged, you can get necessary refills at the nearest pharmacy. If possible, you should continue to use the pharmacy or pharmacy chain you have used in the past. If your normal pharmacy or pharmacy chain is not available near you, we encourage you to use Wal-Mart, CVS, Rite-Aid, H-E-B or Walgreens if such stores are operating in your area.

The affected areas include:

Louisiana parishes:
Assumption
Jefferson
Lafourche
Livingston
Orleans
Plaquemines
St. Bernard
St. Charles
St. Helena
St. James
St. John the Baptist
St. Mary
St. Tammany
Tangipahoa
Terrebonne
Washington

Mississippi counties:
Amite
Forrest
George
Greene
Hancock
Harrison
Jackson
Lamar
Marion
Pearl River
Perry
Pike
Stone
Walthall
Wilkinson

Alabama counties:
Mobile
Washington
Baldwin

We are committed to providing uninterrupted coverage and service to our members at this critical time, and we will continue to review these policies and update them as necessary.

HUMANA®
Guidance when you need it most

Hard-core holdouts hunker down in surreal city

By Chris Rose
Columnist

They're telling the people they have to go. They're going door to door with rifles now.

They came to our little hovel on Laurel Street Uptown - a dozen heavily-armed members of the California National Guard - they pounded on our door and wanted to know who we were.

We told them we were the newspaper, the Big City Daily. I admit, it doesn't look like the newsrooms you see on TV. I suppose if we wore shirts, we'd look more professional.

The Guard moved on, next door, next block.

They're telling people they have to go.

It won't be easy. The people who stayed here have weathered ten days of unfathomable stench and fear and if they haven't left yet, it seems unlikely that they're going to be willing now.

In a strange way, life just goes on for the remaining. In the dark and fetid Winn-Dixie on Tchoupitoulas, an old woman I passed in the pet food aisle was wearing a house frock and puffy slippers, and she just looked at me as she pushed her cart by and said: "How you doin', baby?"

Like it's just another afternoon making groceries.

I love the way strangers call you baby in this town.

Outside the store, there's an old guy who parks his old groaning car by the front door from sunup to sundown. There are extension cords running from his trunk into the store, which still has power - don't ask me how; I have no idea - and he watches TV in his front seat and drinks juice.

That is what he does, all day, every day.

At this point, I just can't see this guy leaving. I don't imagine he has anyplace else in the world but this.

A young guy walked up and said to him: "I hear you can charge your cell phone here?" and the old guy said "Yes, indeedy," and walked him into the store and showed him a plug that still had juice.

And life goes on. Down on St. Claude Avenue, a tribe of survivors has blossomed at Kajun's Pub where, incredibly, they have cold beer and cigarettes and a stereo playing Elvis and you'd think everything was in standard operating procedure but it is not: The Saturday night karaoke has been indefinitely suspended.

The people here have a touch of Mad Max syndrome; they're using an old blue Cadillac for errands and when parts fall off of it - and many parts have fallen off - they just throw them in the trunk.

Melvin, a bar owner from down the block, had the thing up for sale for $895, but he'll probably take best offer now.

Melvin's Bar and Kajun's Pub have pooled their inventories to stay in business.

"We've blended our fortunes together," said Renee dePnthieux, a bartender at Melvin's. "We carried everything we could down here, and we'll make the accounting later. What else are you gonna do? In case you haven't heard, Budweiser ain't delivering."

A guy with a long goatee and multiple tattoos was covering a couple of aluminum foil pans of lasagna and carrying them up to the roof to cook them in the sun on the hot slate shingles.

Joann Guidos, the proprietor at Kajun's, called out for a game of bourre and they all dumped their money on a table and sat down and let the cards and liquor flow.

A National Guard truck pulled up and asked if they were ready to leave yet. Two guys standing out on the sidewalk in the company of pit bulls said: "Hell no."

DePonthiux said: "We're the last fort on the edge of the wilderness. My family's been in exile for 300 years; this ain't shit."

I just don't see these people leaving.

Uptown, on what was once a shady street, a tribe is living in a beautiful home owned by a guy named Peanut. There is a seaplane in his driveway, a bass boat in the front yard and generators running the power.

Let's just say they were prepared.

All the men wear pistols in visible holsters. They've got the only manicured lawn in the city. What else is there to do all afternoon, really?

Christine Paternostro is a member of this tribe and she is an out-of-work hair stylist from Supercuts in a city where no one shaves or bathes. Not many prospects for her at this point.

"Everyone will need a haircut when this is over," I offered.

While members of this tribe stood talking on their street, a woman came running out of the house, yelling: "Y'all, come quick. We on WWL! We on WWL!"

Everyone ran in the house and watched a segment about how people are surviving in the city. And these guys are doing just that. (Although I think the airplane in the driveway is a little over the top.)

As I was leaving, the WWL woman said to me: "Are you staying for dinner?"

I was not, but I asked what they were having. "Tuna steaks," she said. "Grilled."

If and when they rebuild this city and we all get to come home, I want to live near people like this. I just can't imagine them ever leaving.

They make me wonder if I ever could.

• • • • • •

To contact Chris Rose, e-mail noroses@bellsouth.net, or call (504) 352-2535.

Times-Picayune expanded Web edition available on nola.com

nola.com

BEAR WITNESS TO ONE OF NATURE'S GREATEST FORCES.

The power of hope.

Volunteer worker gives comfort and hope.

Our hearts go out to them. Our thoughts are with them. But what they really need, is our donations. That's why Entergy has established a fund to help those who were impacted by Hurricane Katrina. The fund, called the Power of Hope, will be used to help disaster victims rebuild their lives in the aftermath of the storm. Entergy Corporation has started the fund with a corporate contribution of $1 million.

As Entergy continues the largest power restoration in our company's history, we are equally concerned about reaching out to help our neighbors restore their lives. Together, we can rebuild and put this storm behind us. Because the power of Katrina is no match for the power of hope.

POWER of HOPE FUND
Katrina Disaster Aid

Entergy
THE POWER OF PEOPLE™

Tax-deductible contributions can be sent to:

The Power of Hope Fund
Foundation for the Mid South
134 East Amite Street
Jackson, MS 39201

Contributions will also be accepted at www.powerofhope.com

www.entergy.com • 1-800-ENTERGY • ©2005 Entergy Corporation

HURRICANE KATRINA AFTERMATH

80 percent of Dome's roof compromised

Superdome, Arena appear repairable

By Ed Anderson
Capital bureau

BATON ROUGE - A "preliminary investigation'' of the Superdome and nearby New Orleans Arena indicates that both facilities "can be rehabilitated" from the damage caused by Hurricane Katrina, but it will cost at least $400 million, state officials told U.S. Sen. David Vitter, R-La., Wednesday.

The damage estimate was included in a letter to Vitter signed by Superdome Commission Chairman Tim Coulon; Dome Counsel Larry Roedel; and Doug Thornton, regional vice president of SMG, the corporation that manages the stadium and arena for the state.

Thornton did not break down the estimate, but said most of the damage was at the Superdome, which served as a shelter of last resort for more than 20,000 residents during the storm while sustaining roof and water damage.

Thornton said he hopes to have a decontamination team in the buildings in two to three weeks so engineers, architects and other experts can make a more intensive inspection of the state-owned structures.

Thornton said he should have an assessment of the Superdome within 45 to 60 days and a recommendation on whether it should be repaired, renovated or rebuilt.

"While our preliminary investigation leads us to believe these facilities can be rehabilitated, there is always the possibility that the Superdome may require full replacement,'' the letter said.

The officials asked Vitter to seek "federal assistance to rehabilitate both facilities.'' Superdome officials told Vitter that the money is needed to remove waste, including medical waste, human waste, trash and debris, from the Dome, which had two inches of water on its playing surface.

"It is premature to make any determination about the outcome of the building," Thornton said in a news conference called to refute national news stories that the state has decided to raze the Superdome.

He called the 30-year-old Superdome "an icon in the New Orleans area,'' the site of the Republican National Convention in 1988, a papal visit in 1987, six Super Bowl games and two NCAA Final Four basketball tournaments.

He said if the Arena can be repaired quickly, it is possible it could be back in use in the first quarter of next year, in time for the New Orleans Voodoo's Arena Football League season and other events.

Thornton said that there is about $600 million worth of insurance on the Dome for wind and flood damage and that, with federal recovery money, those dollars could cover the costs of repairs or reconstruction.

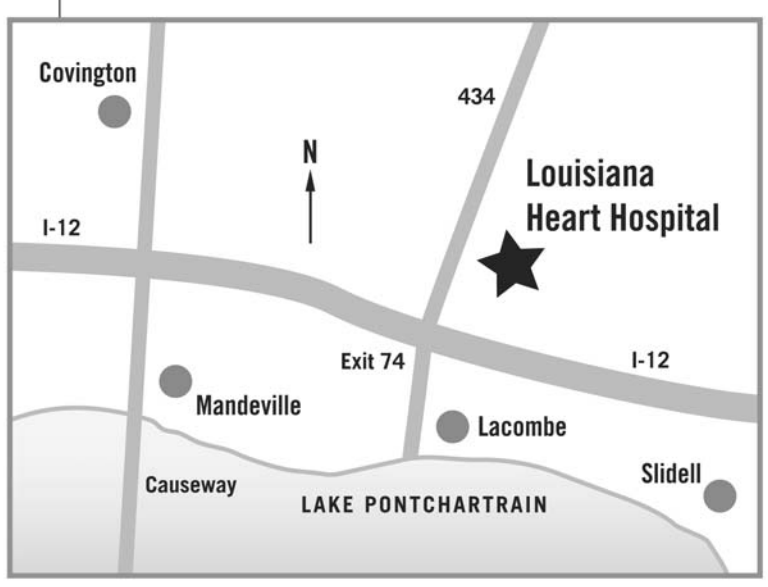
He said the Dome and the Arena could qualify for federal disaster assistance because the two buildings were used to house up to 24,000 evacuees and National Guard troops for almost a week.

The letter to Vitter outlined these damages: 80 percent of the Superdome's roof "has been compromised," causing severe water damage to a very significant portion of the facility.

- A large portion of the electrical distribution, mechanical, lighting, audio, video and other electronic systems suffered water damage.
- A large portion of the heating and air-conditioning system was damaged.
- "Major water damage to the playing surface'' and ground level electrical boxes on the Superdome floor.
- "Contamination and rupture'' of plumbing and sewer systems, including broken and overflowing toilets.
- Significant vandalism and damage to all interior spaces such as luxury suites, administrative office areas, commissaries and kitchens as a result of the evacuee population housed at the facility.
- Damage to exterior lighting systems and the exterior skin of the stadium due to high winds.

STAFF PHOTO BY JOHN McCUSKER

Repairing the Superdome and the nearby New Orleans Arena will cost at least $400 million, state officials estimated. Most of the damage was at the Superdome, which sustained roof and water damage while sheltering more than 20,000 residents.



Our Doors Never Closed. Our Specialists Never Left.
We Stayed for Your Emergency Care.

Despite the fury of Katrina, Louisiana Heart Hospital in Lacombe remains open, ready to help our community. Treating broken bodies. Lifting sinking spirits.

- Less than 24 hours after the storm, our surgeons used emergency generators for open-heart surgery
- We're treating large numbers of orthopedic injuries and an increasing number of cardiac patients

Thanks to our physicians and staff for staying on the job through the hurricane. Many lost their homes, but they put patients first. That's our commitment at Louisiana Heart Hospital.

Take Exit 74 on I-12. We are north of the interstate on Louisiana Highway 434.

LOUISIANA SM
HEART HOSPITAL

(985) 690-7500
www.louisianahearthospital.com

OUR HEART GOES OUT TO THOSE AFFECTED BY HURRICANE KATRINA.

Policyholders of Encompass Insurance who have been affected by the recent hurricane, please call 1-800-588-7400 to report your loss, 24 hours a day, 7 days a week.

The people of Encompass would like to let you know that our thoughts are with you.

The Encompass Catastrophe Team is available for claims handling, information or other assistance at 1-800-340-3016. For more information, you can also call or visit your independent agent.

Rest assured, Encompass stands ready to help you during this difficult time.

ENCOMPASS®
INSURANCE

Hurricane may force special legislative session

Lawmakers expected to meet early next year

By Ed Anderson
Capital bureau

BATON ROUGE - A special legislative session will have to be called to deal with mounting legal and fiscal woes caused by Hurricane Katrina, leading Louisiana lawmakers said Wednesday.

House Speaker Joe Salter, D-Florien, and Senate President Don Hines, D-Bunkie, told reporters that the session probably will be held early next year, unless circumstances require an earlier meeting.

Hines said the session will focus on budgetary matters, changes in state laws dealing with legal and court matters, and possibly even changing state election laws to extend absentee voting rights to evacuation centers in Houston, Dallas, San Antonio and other cities where thousands of Louisiana citizens are living.

Salter said Gov. Kathleen Blanco has not signaled when such a session might be called, but he said it probably will have to wait until state officials have a better handle on the effect the storm will have on state finances.

"It may be difficult to get good information before then," Salter said.

"It is going to be devastating" on the state treasury, Hines said. "I don't think we have to worry about a surplus."

Hines said it is unclear how much the state and local governments will lose in sales taxes, property taxes and other revenue sources.

"There are no revenues at all" coming from the New Orleans area, he said. "We just know we are taking in a lot less than we are spending."

"It is going to be devastating. I don't think we have to worry about a surplus."
DON HINES,
La. Senate President

Many of the expenses the state is incurring can be reimbursed by the Federal Emergency Management Agency, officials said. Blanco has already asked for a 100 percent reimbursement of most costs and losses, aides said.

"We have a rainy day fund" of $255 million that can be tapped for emergencies, Hines said. "And it is raining now."

He said there was talk weeks ago of calling lawmakers into special session in January to tap an expected surplus from increasing gasoline prices to give teachers a pay raise, but that is no longer expected to happen.

"I don't see how we can spend $140 million on a pay raise when we are now dealing with people's lives," he said.

"I could have had equipment in here the day after the storm, but this bridge is holding us up. We could do a lot. Eighty percent of my work can't get done without this bridge."

GRAND ISLE MAYOR DAVID J. CAMARDELLE

STAFF PHOTOS BY ELIOT KAMENITZ

Without the use of Grand Isle's key bridge, which was weakened by the hurricane, the debris-strewn town has been unable to begin its recovery in earnest. 'You can't live without water,' Mayor David Camardelle said.

Grand Isle suffers bottleneck effect

Only bridge to town unsafe for recovery vehicles

By Meghan Gordon
Staff writer

Located at the tip of Louisiana, Grand Isle was among the first places to feel the power of Katrina's tidal surge, which wiped away many structures in the coastal community. Yet more than a week later, it remains virtually untouched by restoration efforts.

The only bridge to the state's only inhabited barrier island was weakened by the storm. Though residents have driven cars and four-wheelers over it to tally their losses, Department of Transportation and Development engineers deemed the span unsafe for vehicles weighing more than 10 to 12 tons.

The delay in getting heavy equipment and supplies to the island has clearly gotten to Mayor David J. Camardelle, who rattled off an account of his weeklong journey through the bureaucracy of transportation departments, power crews and contractors as he gave a tour to U.S. Rep. Charlie Melancon, D-Napoleonville, and a Federal Emergency Management Agency representative on Tuesday.

"I could have had equipment in here the day after the storm, but this bridge is holding us up," Camardelle said. "We could do a lot. Eighty percent of my work can't get done without this bridge."

ABOVE, Workers try to build a temporary roof in the area where Carmardelle's Seafood stood. The storm snapped the town's pipeline, and many residents who rode out the storm or returned need water. Firetrucks made several trips across the fragile causeway Monday to deliver 30,000 gallons; a barge delivery was expected.

LEFT, U.S. Rep. Charlie Melancon, D-Napoleonville, uses a satellite phone amid the rubble as he tours Grand Isle on Tuesday. Communication has been difficult on the island, and town officials have been making twice-daily drives 40 miles up the bayou to make calls.

Camardelle said he has worked tirelessly to line up contractors, barges and equipment, but one hitch or another has foiled his plans. He said state Transportation Secretary Ray Bradbury told him to expect a five-week wait for state crews to arrive to help. His remaining hope is that the Louisiana National Guard can provide assistance.

Without securing the bridge, town officials can't haul in water needed by the seven residents who rode out the storm and many of the other 1,200 residents who have returned to live primitively without gas, water or electricity. He also had to turn away tractor-trailers that offered to haul off debris.

The hurricane snapped the town's water pipeline. Fire trucks made several trips across the fragile causeway Monday to deliver 30,000 gallons of water, and town officials ordered 450,000 more gallons to be delivered by barge this morning.

"These people could live. You can burn a Coleman lantern. I seen my mother do that in '65, but you can't live without water," Camardelle said, referring to the year Hurricane Betsy slammed into the island.

Lack of communication is also a problem. Town officials started making twice-daily drives 40 miles up the bayou when their cell phones and satellite phones stopped working.

"It was eating us up on the fuel," he said. "This is killing me."

Also frustrated by the storm's aftermath were Butch and Susan Gaspard, who cleaned what they could around their shattered businesses Tuesday.

Their marina and Sun Dollar Motel, typically packed during the island's tourist season and the annual Tarpon Rodeo, were ripped up and flooded on the first floor. Butch Gaspard estimated his losses at more than $700,000 - far more than what he had insured.

"We didn't know where to start cleaning up," he said, surrounded by shattered wood, metal and other debris. "We've got to get back in business - that's all we know."

Susan Gaspard, 51, said she doesn't want her two grandchildren to see the storm's damage just yet. She enrolled them in Cut Off schools to return them to some sort of normal routine.

"We always got warned that we would have a big storm, but I never actually thought I'd see Grand Isle like this," she said. "As of a week ago, our life that we had has been totally rerouted and we're trying to live a different life right now."

Melancon, who spent the day on the island trying to brainstorm a quick fix for the bridge, put the island's damage in context.

"I was expecting nothing left, considering the strength of the storm," he said. "If that eye had been 5, 10 miles over to the west, I don't think you'd have anything left standing. But even if it was a total wipeout, you're going to find the kind of people that will come right back here. They're just ready to get in. They need the wherewithal and the financial ability to do it."

Melancon's trip to the island came a day after he and the state's congressional delegation met briefly with President Bush in Baton Rouge. Melancon said the group tried to make clear to the president how crucial efforts to restore the disappearing coastline are for southeastern Louisiana. He said one of his colleagues pointed out that Katrina's tidal surge would likely have been far less destructive had the state been protected by a healthier coast.

"He said, 'Do you understand what we've been trying to tell the people in Washington about coastal preservation?'" Melancon said. "Whether we made our point or not, I don't know, but he got a briefing on it."

After initial frustration, Blanco praises relief effort

18,000 federal troops deployed

By Jan Moller
Capital bureau

Gov. Kathleen Blanco, who last week criticized the federal government's relief efforts after Hurricane Katrina, toured New Orleans on Wednesday with federal and state military commanders and pronounced herself pleased with the state of the relief effort.

"I think we have stability. I think the aid is at an appropriate level," Blanco said. "We see a very strong federal effort."

Blanco repeated her initial frustrations with the federal government and defended the speed at which she requested aid from President Bush.

Primarily, though, the governor focused on the positive aspects of the relief efforts. She met with doctors, volunteers and evacuees outside the New Orleans Convention Center and thanked police and rescue workers who have been operating out of Harrah's New Orleans Casino since last week. At the Convention Center, which became an international symbol of suffering last week, the few remaining evacuees, who were outnumbered by rescue workers and journalists, received hugs and expressions of support from the governor.

More than 18,000 federal troops from all branches of the military are now deployed in areas hit by Katrina, the vast majority in Louisiana, a military spokesman said. They are helping with what remains of the search-and-rescue efforts, setting up medical clinics and delivering food and water. They are joined in Louisiana by nearly 43,000 National Guard troops from around the country as well as state and local authorities.

Federal troops began arriving en masse on Sunday, nearly a week after the storm struck and six days after flooding put 80 percent of New Orleans under water. With floodwaters starting to recede downtown, Blanco said the scene is far better than the one she witnessed last week. "I came when downtown was full of water. It's good to be on dry ground," she said.

The governor repeated her initial frustrations with the pace of federal relief efforts. "We wanted everything yesterday," she said. And she brushed off suggestions that she did not act quickly enough in asking President Bush to send federal troops. Blanco said she first made such a request in a telephone conversation with the president on the morning of Aug. 28, moments before Mayor Ray Nagin ordered a mandatory evacuation of New Orleans.

"I told him we would need all the help we could get," she said. But she said she did not give the president a "checklist" of the resources needed, she said.

Bob Mann, Blanco's communications director, said the governor also tried to contact Bush two days later, to ask for more help. Three days after that, Blanco received a written request from the Bush administration asking that the entire military relief effort be federalized under the command of Lt. Gen. Russel Honore, who heads Joint Task Force Katrina. Blanc rejected that request and opted to keep the current arrangement in which federal troops report to Honore and guard troops are under the command of Maj. Gen. Bennett Landreneau, who leads the Louisiana National Guard.

Blanco and military officials took pains Wednesday to show that the arrangement is working well, and that there is no discord between the two commands. Before touring the city, Blanco, Lanreneau and Lt. Gov. Mitch Landrieu attended a closed-door briefing by Honore on the USS Iwo-Jima, where federal troops are based.

"We are a unified command" of state, local and federal officials, Blanco said.

Lt. Gen. Russel Honore, who commands Joint Task Force Katrina, said his troops will not participate in civilian law-enforcement activities, including the forced evacuation ordered by Mayor Ray Nagin, and will continue to provide food and water to anyone who needs it. "We're here to save lives -- if we have to give them food and water that's what we'll do," Honore said.

Blanco said she hopes the federal troops will remain after the search-and-rescue operations are over and the city's rebuilding process begins. The governor said her staff is working on a proposed "relocation package" -- details of which were not revealed -- that would give people incentives to keep their businesses in New Orleans. The package could include tax breaks, low-interest loans or possibly cash assistance for certain small businesses that promise to rebuild in New Orleans.

• • • • • •

Jan Moller can be reached at tpicbr@aol.com

SPORTS

Saints home games still up for grabs as San Antonio officials make push

SITE UNSEEN

By Mike Triplett
Staff writer

SAN ANTONIO - While the site of seven Saints home games is being discussed, the NFL did provide one certainty Wednesday - the Saints will not play any of their three divisional home games at the site of the visiting team - meaning they won't make two trips to Carolina, Atlanta or Tampa Bay this season.

But the league still has not ruled out the possibility that the Saints might play other games in the home stadium of the visiting team - as is the case with the Sept. 19 game at the New York Giants.

The Saints' next scheduled home game is against the Buffalo Bills on Oct. 2. A trip to Buffalo on that weekend would be particularly undesirable after consecutive trips to Oakland, Carolina, New York and Minnesota. A decision on that Oct. 2 game is expected soon.

The NFL's preference is to play the Saints' home games in Baton Rouge, and the league has been in contact with Louisiana officials to determine if and when the state will be able to accommodate an NFL game.

"It's just a question of, 'At what point is it feasible?'" NFL spokesman Greg Aiello said of playing in Tiger Stadium. "But we are certainly interested."

The truth be told, most of the Saints' players, coaches and management would prefer to play as many home games as possible in San Antonio this year, now that they are living and working in the Alamo City.

Most of them also see the importance of playing at least some games in Baton Rouge, where they could be more available to their displaced fan base and perhaps help boost morale in Southeast Louisiana.

But the most pressing concern for the Saints is that they get to play all of their home games in some combination of those two cities.

"I think this football team needs to play here. This is where we're practicing; we need to be here," Saints coach Jim Haslett said after Wednesday's practice. "Or Baton Rouge, one of the two. Besides that, to me, I think there should be no other decisions to make."

Haslett said he is not upset with the amount of time the league is taking to make the decision.

"I was on a conference call with the commissioner yesterday, and I understand what they're trying to get done," said Haslett, who explained that the main reason he and his players would prefer to play in San Antonio is to have a chance to be closer to their families without traveling every weekend. "They would like to be around their families one day a week, because you don't see them at all. So more than anything, I think that's the most important thing to them."

Saints receiver Joe Horn was one of several players who echoed the same sentiment, also adding that he would like to play at least some games at LSU's Tiger Stadium.

City leaders in San Antonio, meanwhile, have become even more vocal in their desire to host the Saints for as many games as possible.

Mayor Phil Hardberger has not actively or openly pursued the idea - stating that the city is focused on its hurricane relief efforts - but discussions between the Saints and city officials have been ongoing.

Alamodome director Mike Abington said the 65,000-seat stadium will be ready and available if the Saints and the NFL give the word.

Assistant city manager Roland Lozano also told the San Antonio Express-News that discussions are ongoing with the Saints.

San Antonio businessman Red McCombs - the former owner of the Minnesota Vikings - took things one step further, telling the Express-News that, "every effort needs to be made to tie the Saints up for this season - including having people stand in front of the dome singing, 'When the Saints Come Marching In.'"

City councilman Chip Haass has been one of the most vocal proponents for bringing Saints games to San Antonio. He said Wednesday he has gotten some negative feedback for seeming opportunistic, but he said the city council as a whole has made the city's relief efforts the No. 1 concern.

San Antonio is caring for roughly 25,000 evacuees in shelters, and an estimated 250,000 people have evacuated to Texas to stay with friends or relatives or in hotels.

Haass said he would be "all for" the Saints playing their home games in Baton Rouge if that can be worked out. But he said it would be "tough for me to swallow" if the Saints were forced to play all of their games on the road or in New York or Los Angeles because San Antonio couldn't step up.

Fellow councilman Richard Perez has not been active in efforts to lure the Saints. But he agreed, saying, "We are the eighth largest city in the country. We have a stadium that's ready to go and a population that's been clamoring for football for a long time."

Haass said the proposition of bringing Saints games to San Antonio is twofold.

"One, in a greedy way, it puts San Antonio in a primetime position to show the NFL what we can do. And two, it helps us aid in the relief effort," Haass said. "It gets dangerous because there are things for us to gain out of this. It gets tricky."

Haass said he believes that at least one game will be played in San Antonio as a reward for the city accommodating the Saints this season. Saints general manager Mickey Loomis has also said he believes the city deserves to host at least one game.

Haass has been drumming up support in the corporate community, but he said that "hasn't taken much effort on my part." He said one person offered to buy 10,000 tickets but wanted half of the proceeds to go to relief efforts.

Obviously, the underlying theme in all this is that San Antonio might attract the Saints permanently. Saints owner Tom Benson, a New Orleans native, has longstanding personal and professional ties to San Antonio, where he keeps a second home.

And rumors of Benson wanting to move his team here in 2006 were floating long before Hurricane Katrina hit.

Even if Benson wants to move to San Antonio - as some reports have suggested - it would not be a simple procedure.

For one, San Antonio would need to decide it wants an NFL team and can afford one.

Although the Alamo City ranks eighth in the U.S. in population, the total metropolitan area ranks 30th - five spots ahead of New Orleans in the 2000 census. San Antonio is home to four Fortune 500 companies.

"I think it would all depend on what the deal is for the city," Perez said of a potential NFL franchise. "If it's fair and if it's not a detriment to the city, I think they would embrace it.□

For fans' sake, Tagliabue needs to take control

By John DeShazier
Sports Columnist

Make it work.

That's the only plea Saints fans make to NFL commissioner Paul Tagliabue, who will determine where the Saints will play their home games this season. He already has fumbled by determining that the regular-season home opener for New Orleans will be played in East Rutherford, N.J., which probably isn't called home by very many Saints fans.

Make it work in Baton Rouge the best that it possibly can be made to work there, because Saints fans need access to their team, and because they need to be able to feel that they can wrap their arms around it. That can't happen with New Orleans playing in San Antonio, East Rutherford or anywhere else right now.

"I have expressed my desire to the NFL to play games in Baton Rouge, Louisiana, to the extent circumstances allow," Saints owner Tom Benson said in a statement Tuesday.

Circumstances are sticky, but it can happen if the parties work hard enough.

The terms, on LSU's behalf, are on the table. The university will allow the Saints to play at Tiger Stadium, but can't or won't produce the cash to make it happen, having already asked its base to loosen its purses to pay for several other, much-needed improvements to the school's athletic facilities.

"We'll do everything we can to be good Louisiana citizens, extend a great invitation," Athletic Director Skip Bertman said. "But we can't ask LSU fans □ to subsidize any Saints activity.

"We think it would be good if the Saints stayed here. We'll do whatever it takes, except spend money."

We can argue that in addition to offering use of the facility, LSU should go even further, or deduce that the school already has been more than helpful by simply offering use of its facility, no strings attached, no profit sought.

But that's wasted breath and time.

What isn't, is hoping that the league will find a way to make it work, will find a way to allow the Saints to play the majority of their seven remaining home games in front of people who can drive in and out on game day, who need to shower them with love in person instead of through a television.

There are 31 NFL owners not named Tom Benson, 31 other millionaires who also call Tagliabue their boss whether they mean it or not, which means there are 31 other revenue sources to tap into to help make it work.

Granted, those men didn't become millionaires by giving away money. But the Saints need their help like never before to pull this off, and if they're not sensitive to the needs of a fraternity brother, his franchise, its fans and a region that has been ravaged by Hurricane Katrina, then you have to wonder what crisis within their ranks can move them to action.

We hear, and understand, that Saints players want to play at least some games in San Antonio, which graciously has opened its doors to allow the Saints to operate from there, and that playing in Baton Rouge will be a logistical nightmare on Saints weekends. We should not, though, let those be overriding factors.

Yes, we want players to be happy and comfortable so they can better concentrate and play. And we don't want Baton Rouge to become a parking lot, or the lack of hotel space to put the area under too much stress. Its seams are already stretched to the point of tearing because of the New Orleanians who have relocated there, temporarily or permanently.

But the fact is these are extreme circumstances. Few have the luxury of being comfortable. As has been the case with citizens who escaped Katrina and currently are bunking at the homes of friends or relatives, we all have to squeeze together, pack in tighter, work together, learn to function without all the amenities we've grown accustomed to having on demand.

There's more space available in San Antonio, less of a headache trying to get game-day operations on track. But San Antonio and the Alamodome aren't home for the Saints, or as close to it as are Baton Rouge and Tiger Stadium.

Tagliabue is a smart man. He knows that.

Let's hope he also knows it'd be best for the franchise to be the Baton Rouge Saints rather than the San Antonio Saints. He's the man that can pull all the strings to make it work, and he should do it. Now.

MONEY

Trump keeps lips sealed on Poydras

But he says he is committed to project

By Greg Thomas
Real estate writer

As the city of New Orleans trembles in the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina, Florida developers said Wednesday that one thing is certain: the $200 million Trump International Hotel & Tower will be built on Poydras Street.

"We're in this with you guys,'' Donald Trump Jr. said Wednesday. "But our sentiment right now is that it's inappropriate to talk business (at a time) with such a great loss of life,'' he said.

But Trump said that The Trump Group is committed to the project and that when the time is ripe - when rescues are complete and when the city is in more of a recovery mode - they will willingly talk about their developing plans.

"Of course we're still interested. We'll talk when it's appropriate, when it's beneficial to work ourselves back into the game," Trump said.

"Yes, it's a go,'' development partner Frederick Levin said. "It's just a question of when.''

Levin's brother Clifford Mowe and partner Robert Rinke, doing business as Poydras LLC, said The Trump Group showed no reservations about moving forward, but stressed that the timetable is now uncertain.

"There's no doubt about'' the one-million-square-foot project, which will include retail, hotel and condominium space, Mowe said.

The development, which will be constructed on an empty parking lot between Camp and Magazine streets, would be one of the largest new high-rise construction projects in the city in more than 25 years.

"It's going to be a delay before the project can be marketed,'' Mowe said. "But the city is going to come back stronger than ever,'' and Mowe's team plans to play a major role in its reconstruction.

Mowe concurred with others that the city's primary tourism areas - the French Quarter, Warehouse District and Central Business District - are still basically intact.

The developers had planned to begin marketing the property within the next few months and start construction before the end of the year.

But Mowe said Wednesday that the marketing effort could be pushed back as much as a year, meaning that construction could be delayed until the fall of 2006.

"The priority is still saving people,'' Mowe said, adding that "until we know better about the infrastructure of the Central Business District, a more accurate timetable can't be established on building Trump International Hotel and Tower.

"Hopefully, the city will come back and come back quickly," he said.

Both Levin brothers and Mowe acknowledged they recognized that their announcement will be an important part of rebuilding the city psychologically and economically.

Frederick Levin's law firm had donated $125,000 to relief efforts for the city.

"We still love New Orleans, and the Trump international Hotel and Tower will become a reality,'' he insisted.

Though being called a hotel, the project will actually be a condominium project, with more than 400 rooms set aside as "condotel" units that buyers own but allow to be operated as hotel rooms when vacant. On the upper floors, 250 more units will be sold as traditional condos governed and eventually owned by a condo association.

The project will include 650,000 to 850,000 square feet of living space and more than 200,000 square feet of parking.

Mowe said the project will also include 60,000 to 80,000 square feet of retail space, although no tenants have been lined up yet.

More importantly, the project will provide well-paying construction jobs for a city that is virtually empty and where many people have lost their jobs because of the storm.

Hibernia price cut in renegotiation

Shareholders to lose about $350 million

By Mary Judice
Business writer

With the New Orleans economy roughed up by Hurricane Katrina, Capital One Financial Corp. on Wednesday said it would delay buying Hibernia Corp. for a second time and would pay 9 percent less for it.

The renegotiation means Katrina cost Hibernia shareholders about $350 million; Capital One said it intends to pay about $5 billon for Hibernia, down from the $5.35 billion originally set in March. The new deal means Hibernia shareholders stand to get about $30.49 a share, down from $33.

The transaction had been delayed six days because of Katrina and was scheduled to close Wednesday. But on Wednesday, both parties announced the renegotiation. They said they now expect the deal to close in the fourth quarter.

"What we worked out was very reasonable, and shareholders on both sides are well-served by the merger continuing," said Herb Boydstun, Hibernia president and chief executive.

Speculation about whether the sale would close had sparked heavy trading in Hibernia options and gyration in its share price during the past week.

"While no one can predict the impact of Katrina with certainty, I remain convinced of the strategic value of this transaction and believe that Hibernia is well-positioned to grow and generate significant shareholder value over time," said Richard Fairbank, chairman and chief executive of Capital One.

Capital One is a credit card company based in McLean, Va. Hibernia, based in New Orleans, owns Hibernia National Bank, which has more than $22 billion worth of loans and other assets in Louisiana and Texas.

The new deal calls for Hibernia shareholders to get an amount equal to $13.95 in cash plus the value of 0.2055 of a share of Capital One. That translates to an amount equal to $30.49, based on the closing price of Capital One stock Tuesday of $80.50, the price used in the announcement. The offer is down from the original, which called for $15.35 in cash plus 0.2261 of a share of Capital One.

If the deal had closed Wednesday under the original terms, each share would have been worth about $33.72.

Shareholders can elect to take stock or cash, based on availability.

In their announcement, Capital One and Hibernia said they had assessed damage to Hibernia's facilities, its loan portfolio and its future business prospects. The companies said they had each run a range of scenarios "to account for the considerable uncertainty in the aftermath of Katrina.''

Hibernia initially had 107 branches closed and said Wednesday that 47 have been reopened. Of the 60 branches yet to be reopened, 21 appear to have significant damage. The bank holding company said 5 percent of its deposits are attributable to these branches.

Boydstun said 16 of the closed branches are in areas where severe flooding has occurred. "We will look at each office and how that part of the city redevelops,'' he said, in determining whether to reopen or rebuild those branches.

The renegotiated transaction is subject to shareholder approval.

The companies said "the impact of hurricane-related actions and events will be disregarded in determining whether closing conditions are satisfied."

Stephen Schulz, banking analyst at Keefe Bruyette & Woods Inc. in New York, said the disclaimer "has given assurance or taken out some of the risk the deal will not close."

Schulz said both sides benefit from the renegotiated terms. Capital One shareholders can have the satisfaction that the company has assessed the damage, and Hibernia shareholders get "some confidence of the commitment to making the deal happen."

Analyst Ed Groshans of Fox Pitt Kelton in New York said the delay allows Capital One to assess the loan portfolio, given the uncertainty that the loan customers will face in the next six to 12 months, and to come up with a better valuation of Hibernia.

"This deal is going to close,'' he said. Hibernia shareholders strongly supported the first transaction, and "they will vote for this also."

"Despite the lower price, this still is a good deal for them," he said.

Defense contractors try to gather their troops

By Keith Darcé
Business writer

Major defense contractors in southeastern Louisiana, which employ nearly 10,000 workers, struggled Wednesday to measure the damage to their factories and to track down employees scattered across the country with other evacuees from Hurricane Katrina.

Northrop Grumman Corp., Textron Marine and Land Systems and Bollinger Shipyards Inc. all posted notices with media outlets asking workers to contact the companies.

"The challenge is getting the people there once we get power," said Brian Cullin, spokesman for Northrop, which operates a military shipyard in Avondale and a shipyard in Pascagoula, Miss.

Sporadic telephone outages and congested phone lines only intensified the challenge, said Textron spokeswoman Maureen Collis.

The Navy said it was still too early to know how shipyard shutdowns and repairs would affect delivery schedules.

Textron's plant in eastern New Orleans, which makes armored vehicles and speedy patrol boats, appeared to be facing some of the biggest challenges in terms of restarting operations.

The plant was surrounded by flood waters and was accessible only by helicopter, Collis said.

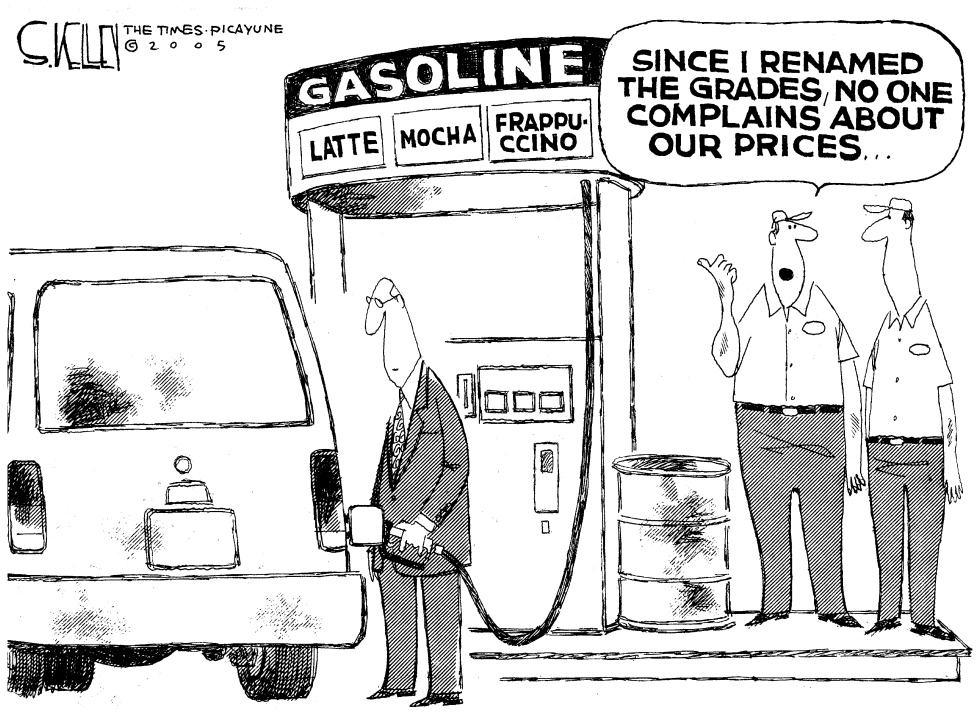
The company's newly opened plant in Slidell appeared to have weathered the storm better, she said. Managers plan to reopen the Slidell plant as soon as possible and shift armored vehicle production to that facility while repairs are made to the New Orleans site , she said.

The company has temporarily relocated its New Orleans business operations to another Textron plant in Shreveport, Collis said.

The region's big shipbuilders appear to be making quicker progress in their recovery.

Only one of six ships docked at Northrop's Avondale and Pascagoula yards sustained damage in the storm, Cullin said.

More than 3,000 people, mainly maintenance and security personnel, worked at the Pascagoula yard Wednesday, cleaning up after the factory was flooded by as much as 6 feet of water.



Fewer than 80 people worked at the Avondale yard, which remained isolated by restrictions on re-entry into Jefferson Parish. Even so, the Avondale yard was nearly ready to be reconnected to electricity generators, Cullin said.

Work levels at both factories will be ramped up in stages, he said.

Bollinger Shipyards Inc. said all of its ship-building and repair yards in southeastern New Orleans outside of metropolitan New Orleans were open as of Wednesday. The company's three factories in the metro area will remain closed until power is restored and evacuation orders are lifted, Bollinger said.

EDITORIALS

OUR OPINION

Rebuild our shock absorbers

Louisiana's leaders at home and in Washington, as well as this newspaper, have been sounding the alarm about our coastline for years, begging Congress and the Bush administration to provide the resources needed to address decades of erosion caused by human activity as well as natural forces.

We said the stripping away of our coastal marshland left our area naked to the onslaught of hurricanes. We said communities would be battered, oil and gas networks would be shut down, and lives would be lost.

Today, there is no comfort for us in the phrase, "We told you so.''

The price tag for protecting this region was $14 billion. Does anyone think that price is too high now? Just last month, however, the Bush administration was actively fighting even modest efforts to start the flow of money, $540 million over the next four years, provided in the energy bill. Despite White House opposition, Congress approved that start. Last month, that seemed like progress. This month, it seems like a cruel joke.

The needs of this region after Hurricane Katrina are legion. We have roads, bridges, levees, utilities and public buildings to rebuild, as well as homes, businesses and places of worship. Lives must be rebuilt, too, bit by bit. But we must not forget, in this maelstrom of reconstruction, that our coast needs to be rebuilt, too.

The fact that Gov. Kathleen Blanco's team already is talking about how coastal restoration fits into the larger picture is entirely on target. Our coastal marshes and barrier islands are Louisiana's shock absorbers. The fact that they are in pieces surely was a factor in the degree of damage Katrina did. True, this storm was a brutal monster, a strong Category 4, but scientists have been warning that even lesser events would be punishing, given the increasing vulnerability of our land to the Gulf of Mexico.

We need our bridges and buildings back, our livelihoods and our lives. But we also need our coastal wetlands back; we've been losing them for a long, long time. We shouldn't have to convince anyone of that now.

OTHER OPINIONS

The key to understanding the fate of cities lies in knowing that the greatest long-term damage comes not from nature or foreign attacks, but often from self-infliction. Cities are more than physical or natural constructs; they are essentially the products of human will, faith and determination.

A city whose residents have given up on their future or who lose interest in it are unlikely to respond to great challenges. Decaying cities throughout history -- Rome in the fifth century, Venice in the 18th -- both suffered from a decayed sense of civic purpose and prime. In this circumstance, even civic leaders tend to seek out their own comfortable perches within the city or choose to leave it entirely to its poorer, less mobile residents. This has been occurring for decades in the American Rust Belt -- think of Detroit, Cleveland and St. Louis -- and the depopulated cores in old industrial regions in the British Midlands, Germany and Russia.

Happily, urban history also contains examples of cities that have rebounded from natural and other devastation, sometimes far worse than that wrought on New Orleans. Carthage, purposely destroyed and planted with salt by its Roman conquerors, later re-emerged as a prominent urban center, becoming the home of St. Augustine, author of "City of God." Modern times, too, offer examples that can inspire New Orleans residents. Tokyo and London rose from near total devastation in 1945. Perhaps even more remarkable, albeit on a smaller scale, has been the successful rebuilding of Hiroshima into an industrial powerhouse and one of Japan's most pleasant seaside cities.

-- Joel Kotkin, in The Wall Street Journal

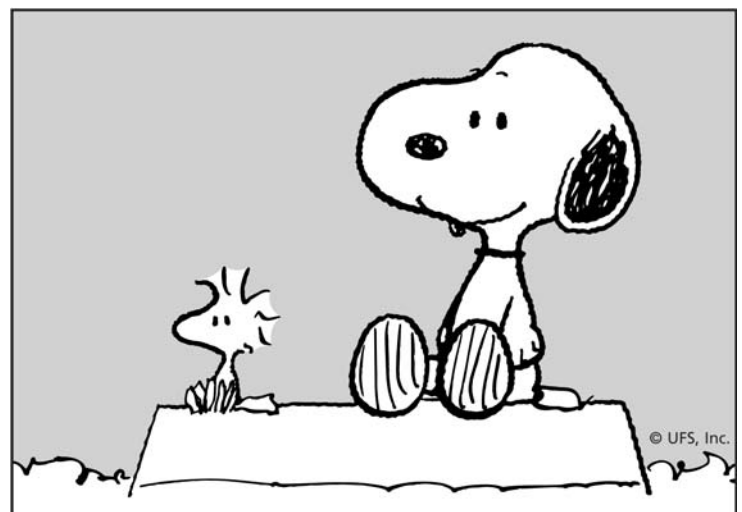
We rely on technology and the government's largess to protect us from our missteps, and usually that is enough. But sometimes nature outwits the best human efforts to contain it. Last week's hurricane was a horrifying case in point. The resulting flooding offered brutal evidence that the efforts we have made over the years to contain nature -- with channels and levees and other great feats of engineering -- can contribute to greater catastrophes.

Hurricanes of all sorts are a regular feature of coastal life, yet you would never know that from the nightly news. Early reports from New Orleans included descriptions of the Superdome's roof being ripped away, and a torrent of unleashed waters that covered 80 percent of the city, forcing the helpless residents to their rooftops and other refuges. All of this is awful, but none of it should come as a surprise. Nothing can stop a hurricane, of course, but humans can do much to worsen the impact of one. And humans have done plenty to set the course for this disaster.



Floods are part of the natural ebb and flow of life in lowland Louisiana, and, left to their own devices, floods can actually do good. They carry silt from the Mississippi River that replenishes the delta and keeps the coastland above the water line, creating a gradual buffer from the sea. But we have short-circuited this natural process by constructing hundreds of miles of levees along the river and channeling the rushing water into the Gulf of Mexico, where essential sediment is dumped. As a result, the lowlands are sinking into the Gulf at a rate of 25 square miles each year. And as illustrated so disastrously last week, levees are not indestructible. Indeed, the higher and more strongly built they are, the greater the dangers when they are breached.

Until now, Mother Nature, even at her angriest, has not managed to dislodge our abiding belief that technology will protect us from our clumsiest acts of hubris.

--Ellen Ruppel Shell, in The Washington Post

'05 40 ft. Travel Trailer
like new; 2 BR; wash/dry;
self contained;
will deliver in 48 hrs;
$28,500. 1-888-282-6191

Clerical / Medical Collector
Will Subsidize Commute
Send Resume to
1012 S. Acadian Thruway,
Baton Rouge 70806

We'll help you put your house back in order.

Whether there's damage to your house or your car, MetLife Auto & Home's Catastrophe Response Team is ready to help our customers. To file a claim or for information, call:

1-800-854-6011

For life insurance and all other product questions please call
1-800-METLIFE

All MetLife and New England Financial associates and agents please call 1-800-232-7000
to report your status

MetLife Auto & Home™ is a brand of Metropolitan Property and Casualty Insurance Company and its Affiliates, Warwick, RI

have you met life today?® MetLife®

JAZZES AND RAZZES

JAZZ

In the immediate aftermath of Hurricane Katrina, New Orleans needed outside help. The LOUISIANA DEPARTMENT OF WILDLIFE AND FISHERIES, which sent in trucks and boats, was on the scene early. It also helped that VOLUNTEER BOAT OWNERS from all around Louisiana came in and assisted with efforts to rescue people and transport them to safe places.

JAZZ

Officials in Texas say they're reaching the limits of their ability to accommodate Katrina evacuees. But Houston has been crucial to the relief effort. When the Louisiana Superdome became squalid and dangerous, Houston MAYOR BILL WHITE offered the Astrodome as a place of refuge. The nation's fourth-largest city has begun canceling conventions to make room for evacuees. Mr. White says the city wants to negotiate with the groups that were planning those meetings, but he thinks keeping human beings alive is the most important priority.

RAZZ

Instead of rolling up their sleeves and asking how to help, some groups are using the carnage in New Orleans to promote themselves and their own intolerant agendas. A group called REPENT AMERICA has maintained that Hurricane Katrina was God's way of stopping Southern Decadence, a popular gay festival scheduled for Labor Day weekend. "Although the loss of lives is deeply saddening, this act of God destroyed a wicked city," the group said. Similarly, the REV. BILL SHANKS, a New Orleans pastor, described the hurricane as an act of mercy that rid the city of "the sodomites, the witchcraft workers, false religion."

IMPORTANT NOTICE TO ST. PAUL TRAVELERS CUSTOMERS

WE'RE HERE TO HELP.

If you have suffered a loss, please call us as soon as your family and property are safe from further harm.

Our claim services representatives are standing by 24 hours a day, 7 days a week to take your claim.

For Travelers Home & Auto claims, please call
800.CLAIM33
(800.252.4633)

For Travelers Flood claims, please call
800.356.6663

For St. Paul Travelers and Travelers Business claims, please call 800.238.6225

For St. Paul Business claims, please call
800.STPAUL1
(800.787.2851)

St. Paul Travelers employees affected or displaced by the hurricane, please call the Employee Service Unit at 800.441.4378

TRAVELERS
travelers.com
The Travelers Indemnity Company
and its property casualty affiliates
One Tower Square, Hartford, CT 06183

ST PAUL TRAVELERS
stpaultravelers.com
St. Paul Fire and Marine Insurance Company
and its property casualty affiliates
385 Washington St., Saint Paul, MN 55102

CYAN MAGENTA YELLOW BLACK
HOUMA COURIER EXXON 9/8/05 PAGE 16

Notice to ExxonMobil and Chalmette Refining employees affected by Hurricane Katrina.

Our deepest sympathies are extended to our employees and to all those from the communities along the Gulf Coast who lost family and friends and whose lives have been severely disrupted as a result of Hurricane Katrina.

In the aftermath of the storm, we know that many of our employees in the affected areas have lost their homes and property. We are anxious to make contact to ensure that you and your families are safe and to discuss any Company assistance you may need.

We therefore request that all of our employees affected by Hurricane Katrina contact the Company as soon as they are able to do so. If you have not already done so, you should contact your supervisor or the Employee Assistance Line at 1-877-294-8617. For more information please go to exxonmobil.com.

ExxonMobil

Although the 17th Street Canal levee breach is repaired and some pumps are back on the job in New Orleans, much of the city remains underwater, forcing rescue workers and troops to slog their way through a smelly mix of waste, water and garbage to do their jobs.

CANAL STREETS

STAFF PHOTO BY MICHAEL DeMOCKER

Sgt. Jason Smith of New Orleans carries a waterlogged cat to safety during his patrol of the 2800 block of Calhoun Street on Wednesday.

STAFF PHOTO BY JENNIFER ZDON

A doctor, left, and a social worker, who did not want to be identified, make their way along Napoleon Avenue near St. Charles, a pirogue full of their belongings in tow, as they prepare to leave the city.

STAFF PHOTO BY BRETT DUKE

Kim Little douses his head with some cool water while taking a break from rescuing pets Uptown on Wednesday.

STAFF PHOTO BY MICHAEL DeMOCKER

Viewed from the Causeway Boulevard overpass, much of Airline Highway remains covered by floodwaters on Wednesday.

HURRICANE KATRINA AFTERMATH

N.O skies are abuzz with swarm of rescue aircraft

STAFF PHOTO BY TED JACKSON

A Blackhawk helicopter takes off from an aircraft carrier berthed at the Riverwalk in New Orleans, giving the city another base of operations.

As hub of recovery, Armstrong kept busy

By Matt Scallan
Kenner bureau

Low-flying aircraft elicited screams of protest in New Orleans area neighborhoods before Hurricane Katrina arrived, but these days the roar of helicopter engines is a welcome sound.

And there is a lot of roaring going on.

The number of aircraft taking off and landing at Louis Armstrong International Airport in Kenner jumped from about 700 per day before Katrina to 3,800 per day during the peak of the Katrina rescue operations, according to U.S. Transportation Department spokeswoman Laura Brown.

In normal times, most aircraft leave the New Orleans area quickly on specified routes designed to minimize noise over neighborhoods. In the past few days, however, squadrons of helicopters have crowded the skies at low altitudes to rescue storm victims and dump water on building fires.

These craft operate below the controlled airspace that commercial airliners fly. The helicopters are flying under visual flight rules, in which pilots watch out for each other, until they get close to the airport, Brown said.

In the control tower at Armstrong, air traffic controllers and technicians worked long shifts just after Katrina, clearing runways and helping to bring in the first "mercy flights" by several airlines, which brought in supplies and took out evacuees.

Within 24 hours of the storm, a Federal Aviation Administration truck loaded with radar and telecommunications gear rolled west from Jacksonville, Fla., stopping at airports along the Gulf Coast to get their radar and communications systems back online. At Armstrong, the technicians placed a radio repeater atop the 220-foot-tall control tower. The repeater replaced many that were lost in the storm.

"Not only did it enable our people to talk with each other, but it helped police and firefighters communicate in a 37-mile radius of the tower," Brown said.

By Sept. 1, three days after Katrina passed, the airport's primary radar site near Slidell was back in operation. With the help of E-3 Airborne Warning and Control System military aircraft, it began steering the fleet of rescue aircraft into Armstrong.

Controllers and technicians have been flocking to Armstrong from other airports, including the flooded Lakefront Airport in New Orleans. Many of them are alumni of the New Orleans tower, or TRACON, which handles flights within an 80-mile radius of New Orleans.

And in a stroke of good fortune, the airport's east-west runway, which had been under reconstruction for months, was completed and certified by the FAA on Aug. 26, three days before Katrina arrived.

"We're just thankful that we were able to finish the runway before the storm hit," Aviation Director Roy Williams said.

The runway wasn't due to be finished until November, but the contractor, Boh Bros. Construction Co., was given incentives to finish early.

"The rescue operation would have been severely hampered had that runway been half-complete," Williams said.

In all, 23,213 people were airlifted from Armstrong between Sept. 1 and Wednesday.

FEMA giving evacuees $2,000 debit cards

Staff reports

BATON ROUGE - For the first time in the history of the Federal Emergency Management Agency, the government has decided to dole out debit cards worth $2,000 each to help displaced hurricane evacuees get back on their feet.

"The concept is that this is cash in hand that allows them, empowers them, about what they need to do to start rebuilding their lives," FEMA Director Michael Brown said, announcing the program Wednesday at the state Office of Emergency Preparedness.

The cards were expected to be distributed first to evacuees that are currently staying in shelters. It was not clear whether they would be issued more widely than that.

The cards will allow people who are running low on cash after fleeing their homes and jobs to buy emergency supplies or make minor repairs to their properties, Brown said.

FEMA representatives at the state Office of Emergency Preparedness in Baton Rouge did not have much more information about exactly who would be receiving the cards.

Evacuees line up for food stamps

100,000 families get state aid

By Frank Donze
Staff writer

From a distance, the aroma of barbecued chicken over the sea of striped beach umbrellas might have signaled that a street party in full swing.

But up close, there was nothing festive going on Wednesday at the asphalt parking lot outside the state Department of Social Services offices on North Boulevard in downtown Baton Rouge.

Beneath an unforgiving sun, hundreds of Louisiana residents forced from their homes by Hurricane Katrina snaked through a maze of police barricades to collect food stamps -- a benefit most had never needed before.

Shirtless men mopped perspiration from their chests with towels, and women and children sought shade beneath newspapers and cardboard boxes discarded by relief workers after handing out bottled water.

"It's slow going," said Lee Turner, 47, a security guard whose eastern New Orleans home is under water.

Like many of those lined up outside the nondescript one-story brick building around 1 p.m., Turner had been waiting hours for a chance to be processed. And like many, he had mixed emotions about the ordeal.

"Look, I appreciate what they're doing," Turner sighed as he slumped against a wall. "But it just doesn't seem to be as organized as it's supposed to be. I guess they're doing the best they can."

Some families declined to talk about the ordeal, saying they were embarrassed to seek aid to buy food. But Blake Turner, 27, a medical billing specialist from Harvey, said there was nothing to be ashamed of.

"This is something that will help me hold on for now,'' said Turner, whose home was badly damaged by wind. "It's one thing to be uprooted temporarily. It's another thing entirely to be forced to move and start all over."

At any given time Wednesday, more than 500 people were waiting to be served by the state agency, which has been handing out food stamps to evacuees from 6 a.m. to midnight at locations in 45 parishes since last Friday. The operation never really shuts down, officials said, because the agency uses the six hours it's closed to electronically process the applications.

Since the emergency effort was launched, state officials said, more than 100,000 families have received benefits, which can provide up to $390 in food stamps for a family of three for one month, with an option to renew for another 30 days. The North Boulevard location alone had seen 11,000 applicants through Tuesday night, said Adren Wilson, DSS assistant secretary for the Office of Family Support.

"This dynamic is going on all across our state,'' Wilson said, fanning himself with an application form. Looking at all the tired, sun-burnt faces around him, he said applicants were being asked to stand in the elements because most of Baton Rouge's indoor government facilities are being used for shelters and other aspects of the recovery effort. "Besides, this is where we're set up,'' Wilson said.

Making sure that the operation runs smoothly are armed members of the Louisiana National Guard's 108th Cavalry, normally based in Natchitoches. But perhaps the most welcome sight for late-afternoon arrivals, who groaned as they spotted the long lines, was the smoking, barrel-shaped pit manned by Clyde Presty, owner of Baton Rouge's Port-A-Pit Barbecue. Presty and his staff showed up shortly after noon and began dishing up the first of 1,000 chicken dinners, featuring baked beans and fruit salad.

"The Red Cross invited me to feed their workers over at Cortana Mall, but for some reason we weren't cleared to do it,'' a visibly agitated Presty said. "So I said if they don't want it, we'll take it direct to the people."

Together with three local church groups, Presty has established a program called "I Am My Brother's Keeper." As long as the need is there, he is willing to spend one or two days a week grilling and serving food donated by others, he said.

"We can handle 1,000 hamburgers in an hour or 5,000 hot dogs in an hour," he said. "You bring it, and we'll cook it."

Archdiocese of New Orleans presents students with options

'Operative word for us is "hopeful" '

By Walt Philbin
Staff writer

Students at schools operated by the Archdiocese of New Orleans will be offered options ranging from attending schools in the communities to which they have evacuated to using satellite schools to performing online course work and homeschooling, said the Rev. William Maestri, the superintendent of archdiocesan schools.

Whichever option a student chooses, Maestri said, the archdiocese wants eventually to "bring every single child back to our schools."

Maestri said the goal is to enroll students in a safe and secure environment, regardless of where their new schools are or whether or not they are Catholic.

"The first (option) is enrollment in an existing, safe school. Of course, we'd like it to be a Catholic school, but whether it's a private school or public school, as long as children are being educated in a safe school environment, that's what's important to us. We are keeping track of where our students are, with the hopes of bringing them back to the archdiocese," Maestri said.

Maestri also said the archdiocese is looking into setting up a series of satellite classrooms. Setting up online courses through the state's already accredited online educational program and a system of teleconference classes are also in the works, he said.

"We also want to recognize parents' efforts at home-schooling," he said.

Maestri said he believes such an approach gives parents a "multiple-phase way of meeting their children's educational needs, some short-term and some quite long-term." He said the important thing is that the archdiocese will continue to be involved in "responding to the needs of our parents and children," he said.

"Wherever there are pockets of our students, we want to have an educational presence there for them," he said. "And as the schools come back in the archdiocese, we will be welcoming them back to our schools."

Though there are some schools that will not be available in the immediate future, many schools in the archdiocese "are able to function as schools right now," Maestri said. "And so we are going to be calling on them right now to make their resources available so we can provide a Catholic education available for more and more Catholic children."

He provided no details on how many schools can immediately be opened and how many were damaged by the hurricane.

The archdiocese was in the process Wednesday of opening a high school and an elementary school in the Baton Rouge area, and it has received offers to open satellite schools at other locations in the area, Maestri said.

He thanked people in the Baton Rouge and other areas for "the generosity and good will of so many people who have come forward to help us."

"We think we've made a lot of progress," he said. "Today is better than yesterday, and we hope tomorrow will be better than today."

"We're in uncharted waters, in that none of us has faced this kind of situation before," Maestri said. As if to underline that statement, an administrator of a Metairie Catholic school complained to Maestri during a media briefing that teachers have been guaranteed paychecks only through September. "We didn't want to over-promise," Maestri replied.

Maestri said "the operative word for us is the word 'hopeful' and 'committed.' " "Many people have been talking unfortunately about the demise of New Orleans, the lost city, never to return. We want no part of that message," he said.

"We are committed to Catholic education, and we are extremely hopeful that we will get our teachers and parents and families and students back. I think that is a very, very important thing," he said.

Teachers and administrators are urged to notify the archdiocese of their whereabouts by calling toll-free at 1(888)366-5024.

Broadcasters bunk in conference room

Radio rivals unite to serve listeners

By Dave Walker
TV columnist

Earl and water are mixing on Louisiana airwaves.

Entercom and Clear Channel, two national station groups with New Orleans clusters, normally would becutting figurative throats to compete for every advertising nickel.

But with the market's economy temporarily submerged -- and listeners' lives on the line -- they've combined tokeep an essential stream of news and informationflowing to hurricane survivors.

The joint signal has been carried in New Orleans on Entercom's WWL AM-870, WSMB AM-1350 and WLMG FM-101.9; and on Clear Channel's WYLD FM-98.5, WQUE FM-93.3 and KHEV FM-104.1. Segments have also aired on Clear Channel's Baton Rouge news-talk station WJBO AM-1150.

With power out and cellular and land-line phones largely disabled, imagine all the New Orleans stay-behinds whose only link to the outside world has been a battery-powered radio.

Inside Clear Channel's Baton Rouge headquarters, computer monitors, plywood sheets and unopened boxes crowd hallways. Deliveries of supplies and office furniture stream into and out of the reception area.

Beyond the anteroom, staffers from 18 different radio stations are jammed into the studios and cubicles that serviced just six people pre-Katrina. At night, the conference room becomes a bunkhouse. Off-duty staffers are also housed in RVs parked outside.

In such cramped quarters, no conversation goes uninterrupted for long.

The nonstop conversation in the United Radio Broadcasters of New Orleans studio, however, has made for moments of demographic incongruity among all the data dissemination.

Tuesday afternoon, for instance, WWL's Deke Bellavia, a likeable sports-talk colloquialist who'd never be confused with William F. Buckley, was paired with WYLD's A.J. Appleberry, a smooth-pipes urbanite.

The temporary melding of the assets of the two companies emerged from "a battlefield discussion" that resulted in the agreement that "we make friends and we make history," said Dick Lewis, Clear Channel's Baton Rouge market manager.

"This is why radio will never go away or be replaced by satellite," added Lewis. "It reinforces the value of local radio" informing an audience that might be listening "in an attic with nothing but their radio and a flashlight."

The duocast is costing both companies "hundreds and hundreds of thousands of dollars," said Lewis. "And that doesn't count the lost revenue" from stations knocked off the air or carrying a limited commercial load, he added.

WWL Program Director Diane Newman rode out Katrina in the station group's offices in the New Orleans Centre. With the wind knocking out windows, "It was like we were on the air during 'The Poseidon Adventure,'" she said.

After downtown became unsafe, Newman oversaw WWL's retreat to the Jefferson Parish Emergency Operations Center, then to Baton Rouge.

Throughout, lifeline coverage never lagged. No end date for the cooperative broadcast has been set.

"We have to stay connected," Newman said.

Radio has provided some of the most riveting media moments during the Katrina disaster, from host Garland Robinette's live play-by-play of Katrina's attack on New Orleans to Jefferson Parish President Aaron Broussard's desperate call for succession to New Orleans Mayor Ray Nagin's outrage-packed attack on state and federal relief efforts.

If anybody had suggested a partnership of any kind between Entercom and Clear Channel two weeks ago, said Newman, they would've been laughed out of the studio.

Now, she said, "I think magical things are happening on the air here."

TV columnist Dave Walker can be reached at davewala@yahoo.com.

St. Tammany evacuees might soon return

Parish president: 'Just give us a couple of more days'

By Charlie Chapple and Paul Bartels
St. Tammany bureau

St. Tammany Parish officials may soon give the official green light for thousands of evacuees to return.

"Please try to hold on, and just give us a couple of more days," Parish President Kevin Davis said Wednesday after meeting with local and federal officials at Louisiana Heart Hospital near Lacombe.

Davis said he wants to give evacuees the OK to return to St. Tammany, but fears that traffic congestion will slow down utility crews working to restore power.

Officials with Cleco and Washington-St. Tammany Electric Cooperative, which provide electricity in St. Tammany, both reported that about one-fourth of their customers in the parish have power.

Parish officials apparently want that number to be higher before telling evacuees it's safe to return.

Electricity is necessary for water and sewer services. Without electricity, lift stations that transport sewage to treatment plants cannot work.

Davis, along with other parish and municipal officials, urged residents to be patient and to stay away from their homes if possible until services are restored in most of the parish.

Unlike Jefferson Parish, St. Tammany residents were discouraged but not banned from returning to their homes. Many St. Tammany residents rode out Hurricane Katrina at home, and many who fled already have returned.

Davis estimated that about 60,000 residents have not returned to their homes, including almost 6,000 who are staying at more than a dozen shelters throughout the parish.

Meanwhile, St. Tammany public school classes still are scheduled to resume Oct. 3 for the thousands of students who, along with their parents, were forced to flee to higher ground as Hurricane Katrina approached.

"That's what we're shooting for," Superintendent Gayle Sloan said, adding that parents may want to consider temporarily enrolling their children in schools in unaffected areas of Louisiana or neighboring states.

"But each family has to evaluate their own circumstances," she said. "If they think they can manage to hold on, we will make up" the 20 lost days if parish schools reopen Oct. 3.

In St. Tammany's largest city, Slidell, officials said the situation is better at this point than they had expected, given the grim immediate aftermath of the storm.

With the exception of hard-hit south Slidell, which was swamped by floodwaters and crippled by snapped trees and downed power lines, most city streets were passable.

Still, even though all the water had drained away, city officials urged south Slidell residents either to stay elsewhere if possible or come back for brief periods for cleanup work.

"They can start ripping out carpets and everything," City Engineer Stan Polivick said. "They can get in, but I don't know if they would want to stay."

Chief of Staff Reinhard Dearing agreed. "There's too much traffic on the streets now," he said. "It's hampering cleanup and restoration operations."

Power has been restored to about one-third of the city, Dearing estimated, and some of the traffic signals on major streets such as Gause Boulevard and Front Street were working.

The water supply "is in good shape," he said. Only one of 12 water samples taken Tuesday tested positive for contamination, which gave city officials hope that the boil-water order issued by health officials could be lifted by today or Friday.

Thus far, the water supply in only Mandeville and Covington has been certified safe for drinking and cooking.

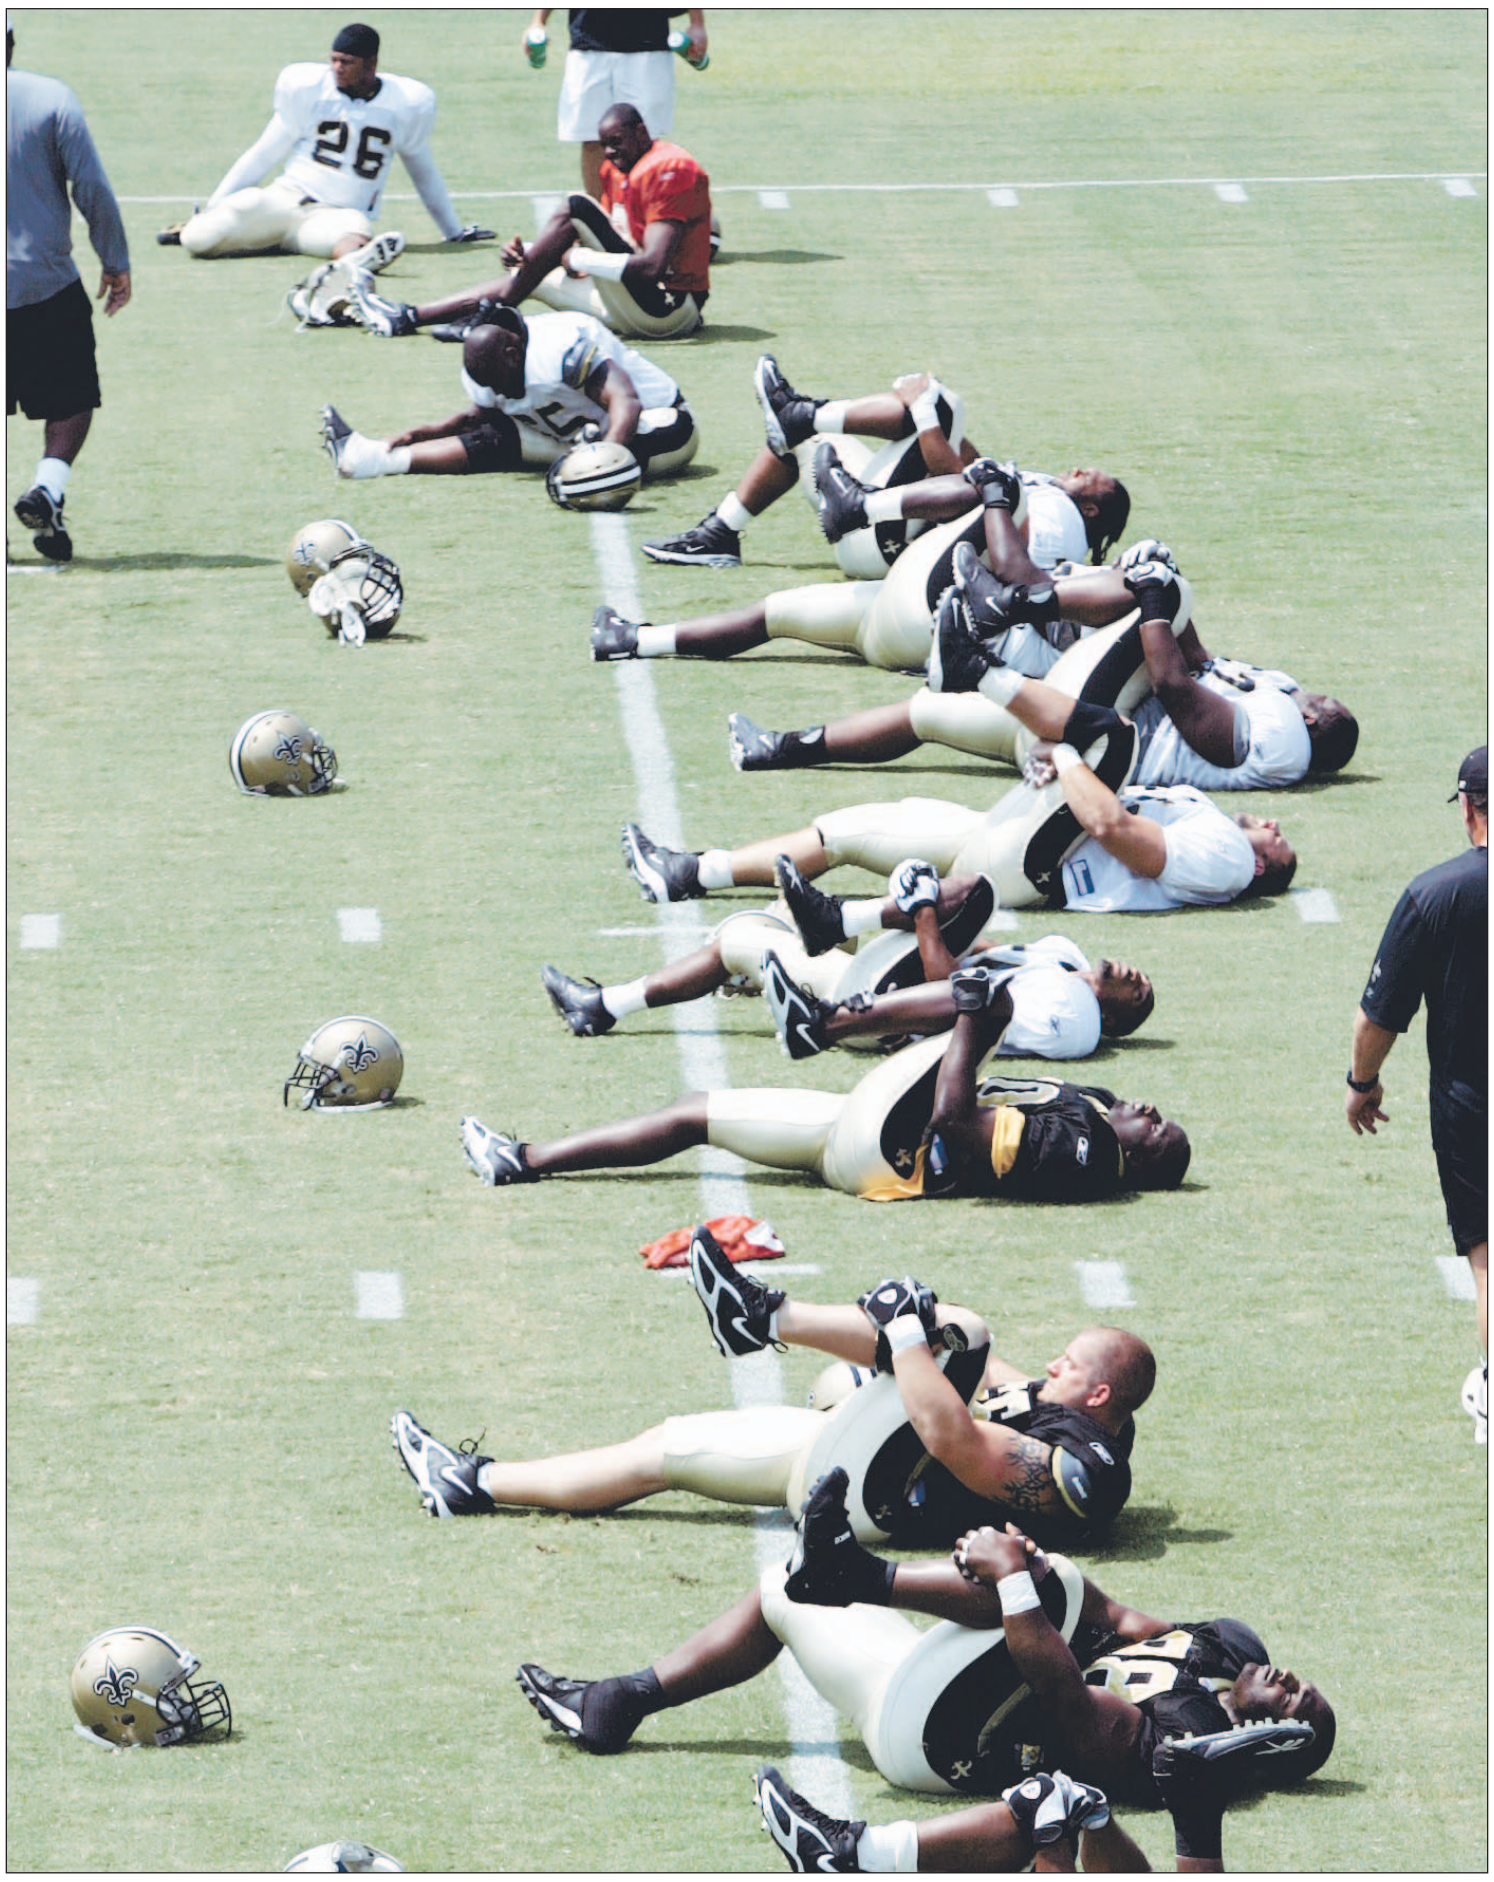
Sewer service should be fully restored for most of Slidell by week's end, officials said. Fifteen of the 90 stations that lift sewage to the plant for treatment, which is back online, were working Wednesday.

The pumps at three of the four drainage stations were working. The big Schneider Canal station was still down, Polivick said.

Meanwhile, the Federal Emergency Management Agency is bringing in 400 house trailers and similar mobile residences to a trailer park off Interstate 59 north of Slidell to house on-the-job city workers and residents displaced by the hurricane.

"At least 50 percent of our work force is homeless," Dearing said.

Just south of Slidell, closer to Lake Pontchartrain, authorities were requiring identification of residents trying to re-enter the flooded-out Oak Harbor and Eden Isles subdivisions and camps along the U.S. 11 Canal.



Read
The Times-Picayune
daily on nola.com

SPORTS

Saints home games still up for grabs as San Antonio officials make push

SITE UNSEEN

By Mike Triplett
Staff writer

Saints players say they would like to play as many home games as possible in San Antonio this season so they can spend more time near their families.

SAN ANTONIO - While the site of seven Saints home games is being discussed, the NFL did provide one certainty Wednesday - the Saints will not play any of their three divisional home games at the site of the visiting team - meaning they won't make two trips to Carolina, Atlanta or Tampa Bay this season.

But the league still has not ruled out the possibility that the Saints might play other games in the home stadium of the visiting team - as is the case with the Sept. 19 game at the New York Giants.

The Saints' next scheduled home game is against the Buffalo Bills on Oct. 2. A trip to Buffalo on that weekend would be particularly undesirable after consecutive trips to Oakland, Carolina, New York and Minnesota. A decision on that Oct. 2 game is expected soon.

The NFL's preference is to play the Saints' home games in Baton Rouge, and the league has been in contact with Louisiana officials to determine if and when the state will be able to accommodate an NFL game.

"It's just a question of, 'At what point is it feasible?'" NFL spokesman Greg Aiello said of playing in Tiger Stadium. "But we are certainly interested."

The truth be told, most of the Saints' players, coaches and management would prefer to play as many home games as possible in San Antonio this year, now that they are living and working in the Alamo City.

Most of them also see the importance of playing at least some games in Baton Rouge, where they could be more available to their displaced fan base and perhaps help boost morale in Southeast Louisiana.

But the most pressing concern for the Saints is that they get to play all of their home games in some combination of those two cities.

"I think this football team needs to play here. This is where we're practicing; we need to be here," Saints coach Jim Haslett said after Wednesday's practice. "Or Baton Rouge, one of the two. Besides that, to me, I think there should be no other decisions to make."

Haslett said he is not upset with the amount of time the league is taking to make the decision.

"I was on a conference call with the commissioner yesterday, and I understand what they're trying to get done," said Haslett, who explained that the main reason he and his players would prefer to play in San Antonio is to have a chance to be closer to their families without traveling every weekend. "They would like to be around their families one day a week, because you don't see them at all. So more than anything, I think that's the most important thing to them."

Saints receiver Joe Horn was one of several players who echoed the same sentiment, also adding that he would like to play at least some games at LSU's Tiger Stadium.

City leaders in San Antonio, meanwhile, have become even more vocal in their desire to host the Saints for as many games as possible.

Mayor Phil Hardberger has not actively or openly pursued the idea - stating that the city is focused on its hurricane relief efforts - but discussions between the Saints and city officials have been ongoing.

Alamodome director Mike Abington said the 65,000-seat stadium will be ready and available if the Saints and the NFL give the word.

"We have made a commitment to them that we will accommodate them should they need us in any way they can," Abington said.

Assistant city manager Roland Lozano also told the San Antonio Express-News that discussions are ongoing with the Saints.

San Antonio businessman Red McCombs - the former owner of the Minnesota Vikings - took things one step further, telling the Express-News that, "every effort needs to be made to tie the Saints up for this season - including having people stand in front of the dome singing, 'When the Saints Come Marching In.'"

City councilman Chip Haass has been one of the most vocal proponents for bringing Saints games to San Antonio. He said Wednesday he has gotten some negative feedback for seeming opportunistic, but he said the city council as a whole has made the city's relief efforts the No. 1 concern.

San Antonio is caring for roughly 25,000 evacuees in shelters, and an estimated 250,000 people have evacuated to Texas to stay with friends or relatives or in hotels.

Haass said he would be "all for" the Saints playing their home games in Baton Rouge if that can be worked out. But he said it would be "tough for me to swallow" if the Saints were forced to play all of their games on the road or in New York or Los Angeles because San Antonio couldn't step up.

Fellow councilman Richard Perez has not been active in efforts to lure the Saints. But he agreed, saying, "We are the eighth largest city in the country. We have a stadium that's ready to go and a population that's been clamoring for football for a long time."

Haass said the proposition of bringing Saints games to San Antonio is twofold.

"One, in a greedy way, it puts San Antonio in a primetime position to show the NFL what we can do. And two, it helps us aid in the relief effort," Haass said. "It gets dangerous because there are things for us to gain out of this. It gets tricky."

Haass said he believes that at least one game will be played in San Antonio as a reward for the city accommodating the Saints this season. Saints general manager Mickey Loomis has also said he believes the city deserves to host at least one game.

Haass has been drumming up support in the corporate community, but he said that "hasn't taken much effort on my part." He said a number of businesses are interested in attracting the Saints, and some of that support is charity-oriented.

He said one person offered to buy 10,000 tickets but wanted half of the proceeds to go to relief efforts.

Obviously, the underlying theme in all this is that San Antonio might attract the Saints permanently. Saints owner Tom Benson, a New Orleans native, has longstanding personal and professional ties to San Antonio, where he keeps a second home.

And rumors of Benson wanting to move his team here in 2006 were floating long before Hurricane Katrina hit.

But Haass, for one, said he has not had any conversations about a long-term situation with the Saints.

Even if Benson wants to move to San Antonio - as some reports have suggested - it would not be a simple procedure.

For one, San Antonio would need to decide it wants an NFL team and can afford one.

Although the Alamo City ranks eighth in the U.S. in population, the total metropolitan area ranks 30th - five spots ahead of New Orleans in the 2000 census. The town has done a terrific job of supporting the NBA's Spurs, but two professional teams would compete for corporate dollars.

San Antonio is home to four Fortune 500 companies.

"I think it would all depend on what the deal is for the city," Perez said of a potential NFL franchise. "If it's fair and if it's not a detriment to the city, I think they would embrace it. Certainly the corporate community would be very interested."

However, McCombs made an unsuccessful run at an expansion team in the early 1990s. And former mayor Ed Garza said earlier this year that he was told by Tagliabue back in 2003 that the NFL's interest in San Antonio was moderate at best.

The biggest hurdle of all for an NFL team in San Antonio would be that teams exist in Dallas and in Houston, which is just 200 miles away. For a team to move, it requires approval from 24 of the league's 32 owners.

But McCombs told the Express-News that he does not believe Dallas owner Jerry Jones or Houston owner Bob McNair would block Benson from moving to San Antonio.

"If Tom asks them, they will support that," McCombs said. "In fact, I see (the other league owners) making it happen. You have to remember Tom sits on the league's management council and has a lot of clout."

For fans' sake, Tagliabue needs to take control

By John DeShazier
Sports Columnist

Make it work.

That's the only plea Saints fans make to NFL commissioner Paul Tagliabue, who will determine where the Saints will play their home games this season. He already has fumbled by determining that the regular-season home opener for New Orleans will be played in East Rutherford, N.J., which probably isn't called home by very many Saints fans.

Make it work in Baton Rouge the best that it possibly can be made to work there, because Saints fans need access to their team, and because they need to be able to feel that they can wrap their arms around it. That can't happen with New Orleans playing in San Antonio, East Rutherford or anywhere else right now.

"I have expressed my desire to the NFL to play games in Baton Rouge, Louisiana, to the extent circumstances allow," Saints owner Tom Benson said in a statement Tuesday.

Circumstances are sticky, but it can happen if the parties work hard enough.

The terms, on LSU's behalf, are on the table. The university will allow the Saints to play at Tiger Stadium, but can't or won't produce the cash to make it happen, having already asked its base to loosen its purses to pay for several other, much-needed improvements to the school's athletic facilities.

"We'll do everything we can to be good Louisiana citizens, extend a great invitation," Athletic Director Skip Bertman said. "But we can't ask LSU fans □ to subsidize any Saints activity.

"We think it would be good if the Saints stayed here. We'll do whatever it takes, except spend money."

We can argue that in addition to offering use of the facility, LSU should go even further, or deduce that the school already has been more than helpful by simply offering use of its facility, no strings attached, no profit sought.

But that's wasted breath and time.

What isn't, is hoping that the league will find a way to make it work, will find a way to allow the Saints to play the majority of their seven remaining home games in front of people who can drive in and out on game day, who need to shower them with love in person instead of through a television.

There are 31 NFL owners not named Tom Benson, 31 other millionaires who also call Tagliabue their boss whether they mean it or not, which means there are 31 other revenue sources to tap into to help make it work.

Granted, those men didn't become millionaires by giving away money. But the Saints need their help like never before to pull this off, and if they're not sensitive to the needs of a fraternity brother, his franchise, its fans and a region that has been ravaged by Hurricane Katrina, then you have to wonder what crisis within their ranks can move them to action.

We hear, and understand, that Saints players want to play at least some games in San Antonio, which graciously has opened its doors to allow the Saints to operate from there, and that playing in Baton Rouge will be a logistical nightmare on Saints weekends. We should not, though, let those be overriding factors.

Yes, we want players to be happy and comfortable so they can better concentrate and play. And we don't want Baton Rouge to become a parking lot, or the lack of hotel space to put the area under too much stress. Its seams are already stretched to the point of tearing because of the New Orleanians who have relocated there, temporarily or permanently.

But the fact is these are extreme circumstances. Few have the luxury of being comfortable. As has been the case with citizens who escaped Katrina and currently are bunking at the homes of friends or relatives, we all have to squeeze together, pack in tighter, work together, learn to function without all the amenities we've grown accustomed to having on demand.

There's more space available in San Antonio, less of a headache trying to get game-day operations on track. But San Antonio and the Alamodome aren't home for the Saints, or as close to it as are Baton Rouge and Tiger Stadium.

Tagliabue is a smart man. He knows that.

Let's hope he also knows it'd be best for the franchise to be the Baton Rouge Saints rather than the San Antonio Saints. He's the man that can pull all the strings to make it work, and he should do it. Now.

SPORTS

Scelfo has team focused during trying time

Equal parts humor, prospective keep Wave working hard

By Benjamin Hochman
Staff writer

DALLAS - Tulane coach Chris Scelfo scampers around the Dallas Doubletree Hotel like one of his running backs in a seam, shaking hands with well-wishers so quickly that he doesn't look them in the eye.

He moves quickly to meetings and practice and more meetings, all while maybe sneaking in a snack or a hug from his daughter. Rest is irrelevant.

Since his evacuation from New Orleans, the only things that have slowed down Scelfo were the puppy-dog eyes of his 11-year-old son. Joseph Scelfo wanted to play pool Tuesday afternoon, so the coach bounced into the hotel's poolroom.

He smiled at his son, grabbed a stick and smacked the cue ball - which rolled a good 8 inches to the right of the racked triangle of balls.

"At least you know I'm not hanging out in bars," he deadpanned.

Even before Hurricane Katrina, life as Tulane's football coach was stressful. Scelfo spent numerous nights on his office couch instead of at his home in English Turn. Looming on the schedule were two tough games to start the season - at rival Southern Mississippi and playing host to the SEC's Mississippi State. And the returning Tulane player with the most catches was a running back. And three top defensive linemen came to camp out of shape. And his kicker hadn't kicked in practice, resting a nagging hip flexor.

All that doesn't matter now.

Every member of the Tulane football family had a home in New Orleans. Now, many don't. Even Scelfo doesn't know about his house, although he has heard about fires and looting.

"I have no idea and don't care," Scelfo said.

His team has united here, preparing for a move to Louisiana Tech on Monday, where Tulane will practice and attend classes this semester. The Southern Miss game was postponed; the Mississippi State game is in nine days.

"I'm going on one goal right now," Scelfo said. "As we do in athletics, you ask any coach in America from high school to the NFL, they want to be champions. Any coach - we want to win the Super Bowl, we want to win the conference, we want to win the district. That's not my individual goal. My team's goal is that - they want to be champions. My goal, as the leader of the whole thing, I want to be able to say when that final horn sound s, 'We persevered.'

"When we do it, everybody in the city of New Orleans and everybody that was affected by this, whether they lived there or not, if we affect one person by giving them hope to persevere, I'm the first one on the train to heaven."

In his third attempt, Scelfo finally broke the triangle of pool balls.

Scelfo is like any coach, a workaholic who loves his X's and O's. He worked for about a decade as an assistant, like so many other coaches, and finally got a head coaching job. He signed up to lead Tulane's football team at the end of the 1998 season.

But twice in three years, he has been thrust into unfathomable circumstances. Three years ago, a financial deficit almost forced Tulane football to drop to Division III. Scelfo spent the spring of 2003 keeping his program intact, uncertain if he would be playing Texas Christian or Carnegie Mellon come fall.

"Coach Scelfo never flinched," former Wave assistant Trooper Taylor said on June 10, 2003, the day Tulane announced the athletic program would remain in Division I-A. "He made us understand that family goes through tough times. What you do is you fight it head on, and do things that you can control. Everything was out of our hands. All we could do was believe and think that everything would turn out all right. And it did. He was absolutely right."

"I feel he did handle it perfectly," said Tulane receiver Damarcus Davis, now a junior.

So the coach got his chance to coach again.

But now, he's again in a situation in which no coaching clinic or coaching mentor could prepare him. But he signed up to lead Tulane's football team, so here he is in Dallas, a surrogate father, a therapist, a motivational speaker, a CEO, and, oh yeah, a coach.

"He's got a lot of people coming at him from a lot of different angles," said center Joe Traina, a senior who said his apartment is probably ruined from flooding. "He has to deal with the president of the university, the athletic director, all the media attention we're getting. Plus, they're trying to set up our meals, where we're going to sleep, where we're going to practice, and at the same time he's got to prepare for Mississippi State, put together a game plan and have meetings about football. And logistics.

"He and Dennis (Polian, director of football operations) have had a lot to deal with, and I think they've handled it really well and have tried to make the best of the situation. He's done a real good job of keeping the team together, trying to keep our spirits high and trying to help us use the team to get us through the situation."

Scelfo keeps the guys laughing. The other day, he turned a team meeting into a comedy show, asking players to tell their best jokes. And Scelfo himself is quite the jokester. His routine is always the same - he'll spot a player, put an arm around him, lean in like he's going to steal a kiss, whisper a joke, slap the kid on the back and unleash his signature boisterous chuckle. Laughter is the best medicine, and Chris Scelfo is a pharmacist.

Sometimes, the comedy is inadvertent. Tuesday, he and Joseph started a new pool game, and with his mind somewhere in New Orleans, Scelfo set up a shot, took a deep breath and pocketed the ball. Except, the ball was one of Joseph's. The son laughed uproariously, and the father smiled.

He also keeps the guys motivated. Getting a player's mind off his lost home and getting his mind on a cornerback blitz takes more than motivational lines found on a poster. Scelfo's words have to pierce players' hearts.

Before last Thursday's practice, which Scelfo called the best he's seen in decades, the coach addressed his players.

"He told us that it could be a lot worse. Just turn on the TV," said linebacker Anthony Cannon, who also said his apartment is probably flooded. "That's our motivation. We're not just representing ourselves and the university. We're representing the whole city. □ It got us going, and we had a great practice."

Said Davis: "If there were any skeptical players about Coach Scelfo, I think this situation has surely brought them around to let them see that he does care about them, and it's not all about the X's and O's. It's about your life first. □ I'm sure this is hard for him, but if there's any coach in America who can handle it, it's Coach Scelfo."

Scelfo has no idea how his team will do this season. Although the team probably will play its games at the Independence Bowl - a decision will be made today - even that isn't in stone.

"The only thing in stone right now, is I'm shooting pool right here with my boy," Scelfo said.

One shot later, Joseph sank the 8-ball. Scelfo congratulated his son and scampered back into the lobby, back into the uncertainty.

Hornets camp no slam dunk

Team still checking sites in Colorado as backup

By John Reid and Jimmy Smith
Staff writers

Hornets officials said Wednesday they have not finalized where they will hold next month's training camp, although a site has been reserved at the Air Force Academy in Colorado Springs, Colo.

Hornets president Paul Mott said his preference is for camp to be conducted in the city that will serve as the team's temporary home this season because of the devastation caused by Hurricane Katrina, which damaged New Orleans Arena.

General Manager Allan Bristow announced last week that the team would hold at least the first two weeks of training camp at the Air Force Academy.

"Allan did absolutely the right thing. He sought out to find a place based on his relationship when he was in Denver (as general manager),'' Mott said. "But the reality is we would use it as a fall-back option.''

The Hornets are exploring potential sites in Baton Rouge, Bossier City and Lafayette as their temporary home, but no decision has been made. Mott said Wednesday he wants to have a city selected at least 45 days before the regular season begins Nov. 2.

"If we're in Baton Rouge or some other location, then we'll have a chance to be able to get in the market and sell tickets, but 45 days is a very short time,'' Mott said.

Mott maintains the team's first priority is to select a Louisiana city, but if that's not possible, the Hornets would explore offers from other cities. Officials from Oklahoma City and Las Vegas have expressed an interest in hosting the Hornets temporarily.

"It is our goal to be back in New Orleans as soon as we can, and (owner) George Shinn has spoken very clearly about our desire to be back in New Orleans as soon as the city gets back on its feet and things are right,'' Mott said.

For the past week, chief marketing officer Tim McDougall, Mott and about 11 staff members have been working at the Toyota Center, home of the Houston Rockets.

Most of the Hornets' staff is working from a large conference room equipped with computers and phones. McDougall, who used to work for the Rockets, said he contacted the team last week and asked for use of some office space.

"They are gracious enough to put something together for us as a temporary space, so we can pull people together,'' McDougall said. "We have gathered some of our core personnel so we can establish some kind of base and get our next steps nailed down and kind of pull ourselves back together."

McDougall said they had seven members from the organization who evacuated to Houston before Hurricane Katrina struck the Gulf Coast area.

Hornets officials have not been able to check their offices at the Freeport McMoRan Building on Poydras, which is across the street from the Superdome. McDougall said they are working with city and state officials to get inside the building to retrieve some business files.

"Right now, we're trying to establish what are the critical-issue lists that we need to run through and the key tasks we need to address,'' McDougall said.

PMAC OPTION: Hornets officials met with LSU senior associate athletic director Dan Radakovich on Wednesday as the team began to explore the possibility of using the Pete Maravich Assembly Center for home games this season.

Radakovich chatted with Hornets executives Sam Russo and Steve Martin in what Radakovich termed "incredibly preliminary discussions."

"They stopped by, and we kind of gave them our schedule and gave them a copy of their schedule, which they didn't have with them," Radakovich said. "Basically, they were in town looking at some other things, and we left it that we would talk some more next week."

Radakovich said he could not give Russo and Martin a tour of the PMAC because it is still in use as a medical center for Hurricane Katrina evacuees.

A comparison on Tuesday of the Hornets' 41-game home schedule and the LSU men's and women's schedules and gymnastics meets revealed only 10 date conflicts between the entities.

Radakovich said there were a few other "soft" date conflicts that might be able to be resolved.

"We also went into a couple of issues as far as practices were concerned with our teams, just to see who's who and what's what," Radakovich said. "We'll be working a lot of this through LSED (the Superdome commission) which they have their (New Orleans Arena) contract with. But we just had a chance to say hello. We'll wait and see what the next step is."

Russo did not return telephone calls Wednesday.

Mott said that while he was encouraged by initial indications of few schedule conflicts, more logistical problems needed to be addressed such as travel into the city and lodging for visiting teams.

"No decision is just a matter of available dates," Mott said. "Obviously, that's the most crucial issue. We don't want to displace other games or events they might have scheduled.

"It's a complex decision involving a lot of moving parts. It all starts with knowing what conflicts you might have and whether you can work with those. It's all very complicated."

Toms an ace at raising relief

By Peter Finney
Sports Columnist

If the past 10 days proved anything, it proved world-class golfer David Toms doesn't have to swing a club to make money.

No sooner had Katrina struck, LSU's gift to the PGA Tour came out swinging - for cash, for clothes, for available living space, for jobs, for almost anything - all aimed at lightening the burden of an estimated 20,000 hurricane evacuees in the Shreveport area.

Still in its infancy, you might say the 2-year-old, Shreveport-based David Toms Foundation eagled the first hole, raising close to $400,000 from an initial e-mail response, suggesting it might be only the tip of the iceberg.

"David jumped in right away and has been hands-on from the start,'' said Adam Young, the Foundation's executive director. "He spent Labor Day touring the shelters, passing out Wal-Mart gift cards, asking people what they needed most - jobs, school for the children, contact with loved ones, whatever they had in mind. The feedback he received has been a tribute to the kind of person David is.''

The way Toms looks at it, hope is priority No. 1.

"These folks, young and old, have been uprooted by a catastrophe,'' Toms said. "Some are facing an uncertain future. If some of them are inclined to relocate to the Shreveport area, we're hoping to help in anyway we can - with jobs, with schools, with homes. If they want to relocate elsewhere, the same thing goes. We're here to assist in any way. We've helped some with gas cards. The ultimate aim is to get these folks out of the shelters somewhere down the line and help them start a new life.''

Another focus of the foundation is to make sure the money raised ends up in the right hands.

"We're working closely with charities in the Shreveport-Bossier area,'' Toms said. "We're working with churches. We are working with apartment complexes. We're constantly checking the job market to see what's available. We've had some early success in getting people employment. It's an ongoing step-by-step process.''

The PGA Tour has jumped in big-time. At last week's stop in Norton, Mass., Toms, speaking from his hometown, made a personal appeal that kept the hurricane-relief e-mails buzzing.

At public and private courses around the country, Labor Day events turned into fund-raisers. At Owl Creek Country Club in Louisville, where Toms gave a clinic in 2000, a year before he won the PGA Championship, members came up with $2,074.

Before the David Toms Foundation became a reality, Toms teamed with PGA Tour member and fellow Shreveport resident Hal Sutton in building a children's hospital.

At the foundation's dedication, Toms said, "If we can help get a family off the street, get a child away from an abusive home or help a child learn life skills, then we're creating hope and making a difference in the community."

Fitting words in the post-Katrina world.

Toms' wife, Sonya, is an active member of the Tour Wives Association involved in charities throughout the country.

On Saturday, Toms will take his first break from hurricane relief with a quick trip out west to watch his LSU Tigers open the season at Arizona State, a game he was planning to watch in Tiger Stadium.

But he won't be far from the phone.

He's been trying to locate Herb Tyler, Tigers quarterback from 1995-98.

"Someone told me Herb was in a shelter," Toms said. "If he is, I want to see what I can do.''

As for those wanting to help in the relief effort, David Toms says: "Just dial 318-798-KIDS.''

Fair Grounds employees dodge a bullet

They ride out hurricane, are air-lifted from waist-high water

By Bob Fortus
Staff writer

Having retired from the Jefferson Parish Sheriff's Office, Fair Grounds assistant director of security Jimmy Schanbien is familiar with the sounds of gunfire.

Echoes told Schanbien, who rode out Hurricane Katrina at the track with seven other Fair Grounds employees and several firemen, that gunshots were getting closer - and it was time to leave.

"The gunshots started Monday night (Aug. 29, the day the storm hit),'' Schanbien said Wednesday. "They got progressively worse Tuesday night. □ Each night, the gunfire got progressively worse.''

Last Thursday morning, the employees and several firemen left the Fair Grounds by helicopter. The Fair Grounds crew had painted a circle on the valet parking lot, which was dry, for a landing spot.

"We had a group of 15 or 16 of us who were never so happy to see the Marines with the helicopters to get us out,'' Schanbien said. "It looked like a scene from 'M*A*S*H.'''

Schanbien said the Fair Ground employees had stayed to help the firemen.

Before Churchill Downs purchased the track, the Fair Grounds had agreed to let firemen use the track as a staging area in case of emergencies, he said.

"I knew my family was out and would be safe,'' Schanbien said. "I just thought that it would be best that somebody from the Fair Grounds stay with them.''

After the hurricane blew through, Schanbien and some firemen had a chance to observe the damage.

"Most of the roof is gone,'' he said. "On the west side of the building, a lot of the outer stucco is gone. We kind of laughed, because none of the glass that faces the infield was lost. The only glass lost is on the west side.''

The group donned rain gear and went to the backstretch for a brief inspection on the afternoon of the storm, he said. That night, Schanbien and the others hunkered down on the first floor by the security office, where they were able to get power from a generator.

"We weathered the storm fine,'' he said. "We really weren't concerned Monday night. □ The biggest concern was Tuesday, when the water started rising.''

Because of the levee break, water on Gentilly Boulevard had risen to waist-deep, Schanbien said. The grandstand parking lot was covered with water, as was most of the dirt track and turf course, he said. Some people from the streets climbed the back fence and walked on the property in search of dry ground, but didn't cause trouble, he said.

"The gunshots started Monday night (Aug. 29, the day the storm hit). They got progressively worse Tuesday night. ... Each night, the gunfire got progressively worse."

JIMMY SCHANBIEN
Fair Grounds assistant director of security

Besides Schanbien, Fair Grounds employees at the track were security officers Nicole Ario, Randy James, Javahnie Jenkins and Lamont Thompson, housekeeping employees Frank Ben and Herbert Reaux and catering employee Ron Adams.

They slept in shifts. Someone would sleep for a while, be awakened, and someone else would get a turn to sleep.

"We actually had food,'' Schanbien said. "We were able to go into the coolers.''

The coolers were opened once a day, and people ate in the afternoon.

The generator was turned on twice a day, powering a telephone line and letting the group hear a radio. Staying in touch with Fair Grounds director of security Dave Martin, who was in Lafayette, and Churchill Downs director of human resources Shaun Collins in Louisville, Schanbien knew what was going on in the outside world.

"At no time did I feel our people were in any danger,'' Schanbien said, but it would have been foolish to delay the evacuation any longer. The firemen arranged it.

The evacuation went smoothly. The Fair Grounds people were flown to Interstate 10 and Causeway. A Kenner policeman, a friend of Schanbien's, arranged a ride to the airport, where two Fair Grounds-owned cars were parked. The firemen were shuttled to Gonzales, and the cars returned to take the Fair Grounds employees to Lafayette. On Wednesday, Schanbien was inspecting his Metairie home and said a nice breeze was blowing on the balcony.

Schanbien praised the dedication of the firemen and his co-workers. On the afternoon of the storm, firemen left the track to get boats - a wise decision in light of the levee break.

"I never saw a harder-working group of firemen,'' Schanbien said. "One guy got the gas out his truck to put in boats. The crew at the Fair Grounds, nothing would have been done if it wasn't for them.''

As of Wednesday, Churchill Downs had located 267 of the approximately 500 people who work at the Fair Grounds and its 10 off-track betting outlets or in the video-poker operation, Churchill spokesperson Julie Koenig said. Employees can contact the company via a toll-free number (877-244-5536) or the Internet (www.fairgroundsracecourse.com).

Also, Koenig said, Churchill is continuing to talk to representatives of the Louisiana Horsemen's Benevolent and Protective Association about plans to shift some New Orleans racing dates to Louisiana Downs for a short meeting, possibly in December. Details about the meet haven't been worked out, Koenig said.

FOOTBALL

Saints, Panthers bracing for another battle

Teams set to pick where last season's finale left off

By Mike Triplett
Staff writer

SAN ANTONIO - Despite all the uncertainty about their long-term future, the Saints won't have much trouble focusing on Sunday's opponent - perhaps their biggest NFL rival, the Carolina Panthers.

Six of the past eight games between the NFC South foes have been decided by less than a touchdown - including the Saints' 21-18 victory at Carolina in Week 17 of last season, which knocked the Panthers out of playoff contention.

"I don't expect on Sunday for the Carolina Panthers to feel sorry for us," Saints receiver Joe Horn said. "In their heart, I'm sure they will. But when that whistle blows, when that clock starts, I'm not going to run around and catch a football and not expect for Julius Peppers to knock my helmet off."

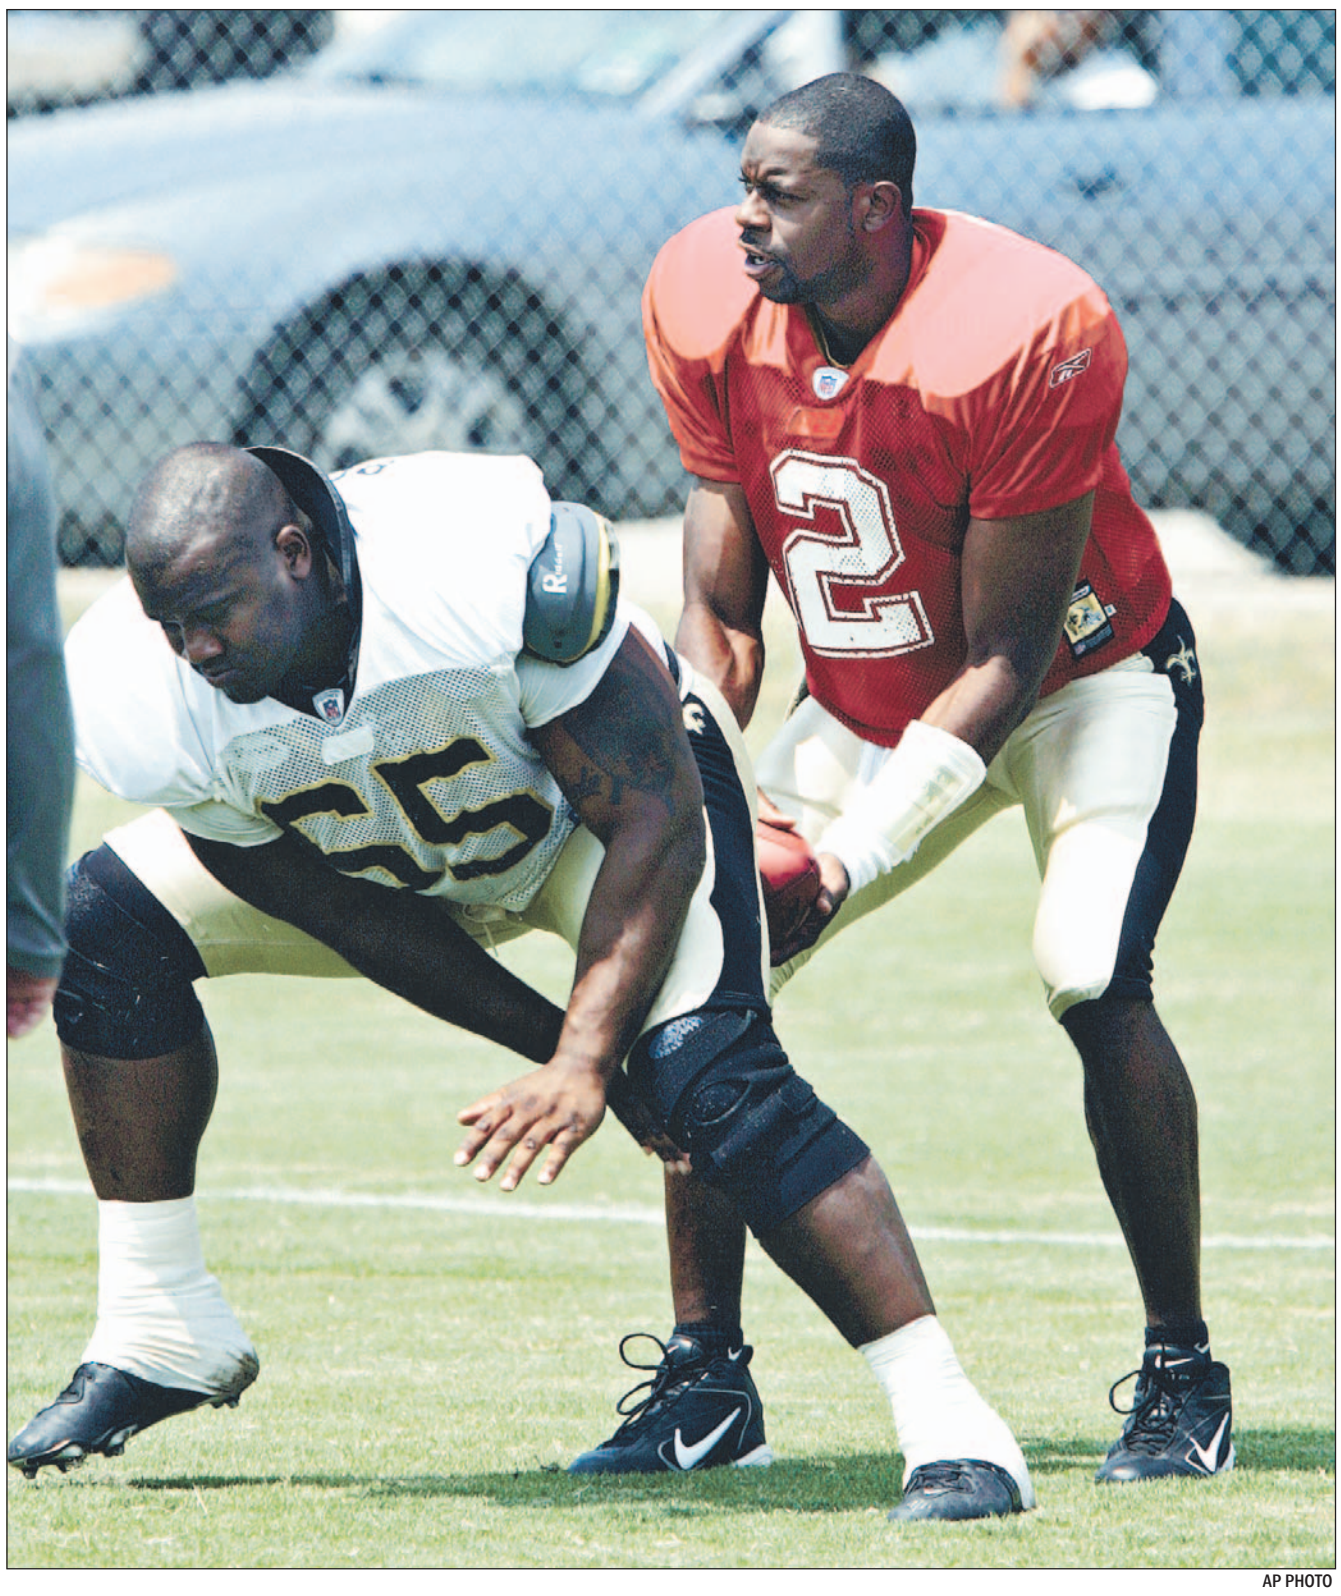
Panthers quarterback Jake Delhomme, in turn, said he certainly will not underestimate the Saints.

"We all know we play a child's game and this is a lot more than a game, but I know these guys are going to come to play. There's no doubt about that in my mind," Delhomme, a former Saints quarterback, said. "That's just the professionals they have on the team. There is no doubt No. 26 (Deuce McAllister) is going to suit up and be ready to run the football and 87 (Horn) is going to be ready to catch it, and then along that D-line, two guys I have the utmost respect for in Charles Grant and Darren Howard, they are going to be ready to play."

Saints coach Jim Haslett said practice was "excellent" Wednesday after a sloppy start to the week - which was expected, since the team was given a three-day weekend to get their lives in order.

"I think they got it out of their system and they're ready to go," Haslett said. "There was a lot more concentration. They're more focused on what they have to do. I'm proud of these guys."

The Panthers have gotten the best of the Saints in recent years, winning four consecutive games before last season's finale. But the Saints had won five in a row before that.



The all-time series between these two teams is 10-10.

Many forecasters are predicting a big season by the Panthers, who made an unexpected Super Bowl run in 2003 before injuries marred their 2004 season. Carolina started 1-7 last season before finishing 7-9.

The Saints are preparing for a physical battle. The Panthers have one of the league's best rushing attacks and defensive fronts.

"I'm going to say this: It's going to be a hell of a football game," Haslett said. "That's a good football team. You watch them on film, they're well-coached, they've got some great players. And even in preseason, I thought they were on fire. They were as good as anyone in the National Football League.

"Every year we play them, it comes down to the wire. I would expect nothing different. It's going to be a heck of a game. If you want to stay tuned, if you want a game of the week, this should be the game of the week. It's going to be a fun game to watch."

AP PHOTO

Saints quarterback Aaron Brooks takes a snap from center LeCharles Bentley at the San Antonio Independent School District's Spring Sports Complex on Wednesday in preparation for the team's season-opener Sunday at Carolina.

DELHOMME'S REACTION: Delhomme, who is from Breaux Bridge, said his family came out OK after Hurricane Katrina hit last week. He has an aunt and uncle who live in Metairie, but they were out of town.

Still, the quarterback said he was emotionally affected.

"You just start seeing these pictures over and over, and being down there for so long, you see these places, and it just kind of hits you in the heart," Delhomme said. "I know our preseason game last Thursday night, I was in the hotel room all day. All I watched was CNN all day. It gets you depressed. You just try to do what you can, money-wise or clothes-wise, you just try to help out in any way, because we just play a game. These people, this is their life."

SAINTS' EFFORTS: Ten more Saints players visited the KellyUSA shelter on Tuesday after a $7,000 shopping trip to Wal-Mart for things like clothing, diapers and toiletries. Tight end Ernie Conwell replaced a man's engagement ring for his wife.

The players in attendance were Conwell, Horn, Michael Lewis, Kendyl Jacox, Shad Meier, T.J. Slaughter, Mike Karney, John Carney, Willie Whitehead and Andy Akerstrom. Slaughter and Horn previously had visited shelters.

Receiver Donte Stallworth made his own trip to the shelter after Monday's practice after his own shopping spree at Wal-Mart. Offensive lineman Wayne Gandy is organizing a monetary collection in which Saints players will help create lasting "commissaries" for the evacuees.

Saints owner Tom Benson established the New Orleans Saints Hurricane Katrina Relief Fund, the details of which will be announced during Thursday's NFL season-opening broadcast on ESPN.

INJURY REPORT: Tight end Meier (knee) and linebacker Alfred Fincher (hand) will not play Sunday. Linebacker James Allen (knee), receiver Az-Zahir Hakim (hamstring), tight end Zachary Hilton (shoulder), defensive tackle Brian Young (knee) and linebacker Slaughter (knee) are listed as questionable, but all of them participated during Wednesday's practice.

Panthers defensive end Peppers (foot) and linebacker Brandon Short (foot) are both questionable, but both practiced Wednesday.

TICKET UPDATE: Although the Saints' Sept. 18 home game against the New York Giants was moved to Giants Stadium, Saints season-ticket holders and those people who previously purchased tickets to the Giants-Saints game will be allowed to purchase tickets beginning Thursday at 11 a.m. central time.

Those fans should call (201) 372-7928 at that time. Saints season-ticket holders must provide their account number.

Giants season-ticket holders will be allowed to purchase tickets beginning at 2 p.m. central time on Thursday. All tickets will be issued on a first-come, first-serve basis.

Next week, tickets will be made available to those on the Giants' season-ticket waiting list. Then on Tuesday, Sept. 13, at 9 a.m. central time, all remaining tickets will go on sale to the public.

The Giants will host a donation drive on behalf of the American Red Cross' hurricane relief efforts on the way into the stadium. The team will match all contributions collected at the gates.

As for the Saints' ticket-holders who choose not to purchase tickets to the Giants game, Saints owner Tom Benson announced Tuesday that they will be permitted to request refunds and that specifics of the refund policy will be available in the coming days.

NFL kickoff is welcome distraction

By Brian Allee-Walsh
NFL columnist

Another NFL season prepares to kick off tonight.

My first thought is - Who cares? As a city tries to keep its head above water in polluted Lake New Orleans, who truly gives a rat's rump about the New England Patriots and Oakland Raiders taking the first step along a road that ultimately leads to Super Bowl XL in Detroit?

Certainly not the elderly man waiting to be rescued from his rooftop some 10 days after Hurricane Katrina huffed and puffed and blew our region down. Or the countless folks squeezed into temporary shelters. Or the thousands of displaced citizens scattered around the country.

Hey Katrina, kiss my grits.

If we could put our hands on you, we'd ring your Category 4 neck.

You have made us angry and frustrated and scared not knowing what tomorrow will bring. You have forced us to take stock and rebuild our shattered lives, one baby step at a time.

This is where tonight's game at Gillette Stadium - and subsequent NFL games - comes into play.

If only for three hours, New England and Oakland can bring relief from this life-altering experience.

It'll be a pleasure to watch Tom Terrific under center for the Patriots. I'm curious how their offensive and defensive units will perform without former coordinators Charlie Weis and Romeo Crennel, who have moved on to become head coaches at Notre Dame and with the Cleveland Browns, respectively.

I wonder how Randy Moss will look in a Silver and Black uniform.

Even Al Davis will be a welcome sight for these sore eyes.

I can hear "Mr. Tunnel Vision,'' Bill Belichick, at his post-game press conference when asked if he had contributed to the Hurricane Katrina Relief Fund:

"Hurricane? What Hurricane? I've been bunkered in the past few weeks trying to win a football game.''

And win, he will.

Other projected winners in Week 1 (home team in caps):

Saints over CAROLINA - Please, smile kindly on these underdogs. A nation watches and prays.

Denver over MIAMI - Broncos spoil debut of Nick Saban.

WASHINGTON over Chicago - Redskins show no "Lovie'' for Bears.

BUFFALO over Houston - Quarterback J.P. Losman struggles in first NFL start, but Bills prevail.

PITTSBURGH over Tennessee - Super Bowl-bound Steelers get off on right foot.

KANSAS CITY over New York Jets - Chiefs win high-scoring affair.

JACKSONVILLE over Seattle - Jaguars defense rises to the occasion.

Cincinnati over CLEVELAND - Romeo, Romeo, where for art thou team, oh, Romeo.

MINNESOTA over Tampa Bay - Daunte Culpepper slices up the Buccaneers' defense.

DETROIT over Green Bay - Steve Mariucci's team is vastly improved.

SAN DIEGO over Dallas - Chargers "Brees'' past Cowboys.

Arizona over NEW YORK GIANTS - Cardinals could be the sleeper in the NFC.

St. Louis over SAN FRANCISCO - Rams have their way by the bay.

INDIANAPOLIS over Baltimore - Colts and Peyton Manning get by stern test.

ATLANTA over Philadelphia (Monday night) - Falcons win rematch of last year's NFC championship game.

As for tonight's game, before Katrina, I might conclude by saying bet the house on the Patriots. If only I had one to bet.

QB wait expected to extend to Saturday

By William Kalec
Staff writer

BATON ROUGE - Oh man, here it comes. Finally.

This six-month soap opera - occasionally overblown, but too titillating to completely ignore - appears on the cusp of having its curtain close as JaMarcus Russell politely fields an oft-asked inquiry (and no, it's not about Fats Domino).

Hey, JaMarcus, who is going to start at quarterback this Saturday at Arizona State?

Suspense has snowballed since February, when Ryan Perrilloux, sitting in his high school coach's office twirling a broken strand of Mardi Gras beads, signed a letter-of-intent to play football for the Tigers and made a couple of comments about the team's incumbent QBs. From there, the he-said, he-said, boiled for a couple of weeks. In May, Perrilloux said he and Russell were PlayStation buddies. In August, Miles said they're not exactly suitemates. Like all good soaps, a main character went through amnesia (Perrilloux transformed from gregarious to humble during Media Day). Besides not writing a role for Susan Lucci and adding a torrid love octagon, this saga has primarily stuck to the generic script.

And now the ending (cue suspenseful music).

"One of the three," Russell said, referring to himself, Matt Flynn and Perrilloux.

He swears he doesn't know, and since there's no bailiff around, we'll have to believe him. Ugh, so close to figuring out where this pipeline of media preseason filler ends. But wait, there's still Flynn. Perhaps he knows something Russell doesn't.

"Hadn't heard anything," Flynn said.

So the wait continues, with Miles hinting more than once he'll pick somebody Thursday. He said he likes Thursdays, through a satisfied smile. Of course, Miles is not scheduled to meet with the media Thursday so this extended hand of three-quarterback rummy might not be revealed until 8:15 p.m. Saturday, assuming LSU doesn't kickoff in the first half.

If the Tigers do win the coin toss and elect to defer, add-on about 10 to 20 minutes, depending on commercials.

And here's a quick timer-saver for the impatient: examining body language offers no clues, either. Russell has been rather jovial in recent conversations with the press, while Flynn is sporting some goofy mustache, making him look like Matt Damon with Tom Selleck's signature facial hair.

"It hasn't been difficult at all," Flynn said of the wait. "We've gone out there and known it's been a competition, and the uncertainty has not been a problem. We've been focused every day and just tried to make strides every day."

Inheriting a team loaded with talent, dealing with the quarterback issue is the only instance Miles really has mixed beakers this fall - an experiment so volatile it could have easily blown up in his face. Instead, this situation appears to be soluble. Miles kept his recruiting promise to Perrilloux, letting the hyped blue chip compete for the job while not letting Russell or Flynn get too comfortable.

"You never know," Russell said. "If he would have announced a starter too early, things could've gotten out of hand or a little shaky with that guy as far as him knowing he has the job. Waiting, it kept everybody on a level ground."

Playing the extended waiting game also allowed each quarterback not to overanalyze or lament every poor throw, knowing one exceptional or one terrible practice would not win or lose the prized position.

"You can't think like that," Russell said. "Because if you're worried about not doing wrong, then wrong is going to creep in on you," Russell said. "They say it's stepping on eggshells. You're playing light - you're trying to do good, but at the same time you're trying not to mess up."

The logical argument to Miles' belated announcement is that extending the verdict within days of kickoff prevents players, particularly receivers, from gaining confidence in the guy under center, to which the new coach said is only necessary if, "you pick the wrong guy."

"It made us work every day," Russell said. "Because you never know what (Miles) is going to say? So, it's still on you to do your job, get your work done, and still help the other guys at the same time."

Vols sweat start time

By Jim Kleinpeter
Staff writer

BATON ROUGE - The University of Tennessee has asked the SEC for an early kickoff for its game with LSU at Tiger Stadium on Sept 24, but it appears the decision will be left up to television networks.

Volunteers coach Philip Fulmer acknowledged that the school made the request for the benefit of Tennessee fans that might not be able to find hotel rooms in Baton Rouge because of the massive influx of people having fled Hurricane Katrina and its aftermath. Many hotels already have said they will not displace evacuees, even for people with reservations. An earlier kickoff would allow Tennessee fans to seek hotel rooms outside Baton Rouge on their way home.

"The issues with the hotels, perhaps an early game would benefit certainly our fans and probably all the fans," Fulmer said.

Kickoff time has not been officially set, but ESPN has first choice of SEC games that weekend and is likely to choose the No. 3-ranked Vols vs. the No. 5 Tigers, which would make the start around 6:45 p.m. That is pleasing for LSU fans who revere their tradition of night football.

"LSU's position is that the kickoff time for the Tennessee game will be determined by television," said LSU associate athletic director Herb Vincent. "LSU wants to play the game Saturday night."

CBS has second choice after ESPN and holds the 2:30 p.m. time slot. Other SEC games that day include Arkansas at Alabama, Florida at Kentucky and Georgia at Mississippi State. ESPN can make its selection as early as Monday, but also has the option of waiting six more days for a decision.

Charles Bloom, the SEC director of media relations, reiterated that the start time would be determined by TV but that the schools were in discussion about any possible adjustments because of the relief effort in Baton Rouge.

"As of now, the Tennessee-LSU game is scheduled to be played in Baton Rouge," Bloom said. "The time and television network of the game is still to be decided."

TICKET REFUND: LSU fans with tickets to the Arizona State game who can't attend can receive refunds of $36 per ticket. The game was moved to Tempe, Ariz., because of the ongoing relief efforts in Baton Rouge.

Fans have four refund choices:

- Refunds can be donated to the Hurricane Katrina Student Relief Fun to assist students affected by the storm.
- The money can be donated to the LSU athletic department to offset the loss of the home game.
- It can be applied toward the purchase of 2006 tickets.
- Ticket-holders can receive a check for the refund or credit card adjustment.

Tradition Fund Tiger Athletic Foundation donations and parking passes are not refundable.

Sports in three parishes likely out for year

Jefferson, St. Charles schools still clinging to hope, however

By Mike Strom
Staff writer

Louisiana High School Athletic Association assistant commissioner B.J. Guzzardo said most public schools in Orleans, St. Bernard and Plaquemines parishes are not expected to participate in athletics this school year because of severe flood and wind damage caused by Katrina.

Jefferson public schools are shooting for a January return. St. Charles public schools are tentatively scheduled to re-open next week, and St. Tammany public schools are gearing for an October return.

The playing future of Archdiocese of New Orleans schools also remains in question, Guzzardo said. Schools superintendent the Rev. William Maestri and archdiocese officials were scheduled to meet with all available principals, administrators and teachers Wednesday in Baton Rouge to address school issues.

Maestri appointed Hannan principal John Serio director of schools transition for the archdiocese.

Guzzardo said John Curtis coach J.T. Curtis told LHSAA officials he believed his River Ridge school could re-open within two weeks. Curtis could not be reached for comment.

Shaw coach Scott Bairnsfather also offered positive news in regard to Shaw's physical plant. He visited the campus in Marrero on Sunday and found the school dry and with electrical power.

"I went into my office and turned the lights on,'' Bairnsfather said.

"We took some damage now, but nothing that would keep us from re-opening. I have no idea if we'll play again this season, but it doesn't look good. Even if we could get up and running, I don't know who we'd play."

Guzzardo said Maestri and archdiocese officials were considering using Shaw as a site to platoon two Catholic high schools while other area archdiocese schools recover and rebuild.

Brother Martin is scheduled to hold afternoon and evening classes at Baton Rouge-Catholic but will not field teams in any major sports, Guzzardo said.

Season-opening football games in 20 parishes were canceled last weekend due to damage and complications from the hurricane. Many of those game cancellations came in parishes not directly affected by Katrina, Guzzardo said, but resulted from Gov. Kathleen Blanco's order to take school buses from those areas to use in hurricane relief.

School officials also were told they would have no security for their games.

Athletes leaving so they can play

Recruits trying to make most of senior years

By Mike Strom and Tammy Nunez
Staff writers

While the local high school football season appears to be all but canceled in Orleans, St. Bernard, Jefferson and Plaquemines parishes, many area student-athletes have elected to transfer to schools around the state and South and participate in athletics.

West Jefferson standout defensive lineman Clarence Fultz already has transferred to Lake Charles-Boston and actually played in the Cougars' season-opener last Friday against Washington-Marion, West Jeff coach Hank Tierney said.

Fultz registered for school and competed in a game as a defensive end all in the same day, Tierney said.

Fultz, 6 feet 3, 220 pounds, was being recruited by Ole Miss, LSU and several other SEC schools, Tierney said.

Additionally, West Jeff tight end Anthony Sparks is expected to transfer to Kingswood High School in the Houston area, said Tierney, who has evacuated to Benton, Ark., with his family. Sparks, 6-2, 220, is another Division I-A prospect.

Tierney is uncertain of the plans of two other Buccaneers senior prospects, cornerback Jeremy Ivory (6-1, 180) and tackle Larry Timmons (6-5, 355).

According to recent emergency legislation passed by the Louisiana High School Athletic Association executive committee, students from storm-affected parishes are able to transfer to new schools and begin athletic competition immediately.

"Some of our players are all over Louisiana and Texas and playing already,'' Tierney said. "We are encouraging them to play because they cannot play here. I've told all of our kids to go somewhere and play because, if some miracle happens, they can come back and play for us. I just feel sorry for the ones who had to stay because they have nothing.''

The LHSAA is requiring all schools that accept transfers from storm-affected parishes to contact the association in writing to make sure that those wishing to participate in athletics are registered with the state and eligible, LHSAA assistant commissioner B.J. Guzzardo said.

Ehret coach Billy North, like many area coaches, has had almost no contact with his players since Katrina's Aug. 29 assault. North and his wife evacuated to Lake Charles, where he has relatives and subsequently has rented a house. North said he has visited the Lake Charles-area evacuation shelters daily in hopes of finding some of his players.

All-Metro safety Tommy Connors from Shaw and his parents are contemplating a transfer to either St. Thomas More in Lafayette or Destrehan, Shaw coach Scott Bairnsfather said. Connors and his family evacuated to the Lafayette area, as did Bairnsfather, who is staying in Opelousas, where his wife's family resides.

"I don't know what Tommy's going to do,'' Bairnsfather said. "I told him that he should go to Destrehan. This is his senior year, and he needs to get some film of him for the colleges.''

Bairnsfather said he attended the Carencro-St. Thomas More game last Friday and saw that several Jesuit players had transferred to St. Thomas More.

O.Perry Walker coach Terry Wilson said he was in Grambling, where he and his family had evacuated to be with relatives. Wilson said his players are scattered across the south, but he had no definitive word on the whereabouts of any, including prospects Kendrick Lewis, a wide receiver/defensive back, and Eldric Cambrice, a defensive back.

Higgins coach Wayne Meyers was in Montgomery, which is near Natchitoches, with his family, but had no word on two of his top players, linebacker Arthur Green and defensive back Michael Roussel. Meyers lives in Belle Chasse and said his house was dry with only some possible wind damage.

At least two public West St. Tammany high school football coaches have found out their top players have transferred and are hoping they return if the parish's public schools re-open the first week of October.

Fontainebleau coach Larry Favre said the foundation of his squad - his two offensive tackles - have enrolled in other schools. Cameron Zipp, a returning All-Metro left tackle, enrolled in Neville High School, Favre said, and right tackle Kyle Plouhar is attending a school in Oregon.

"Those two are the pillars of my football team," Favre said.

Favre also said his returning defensive lineman, Todd Carson is attending a school in Texas, and the coach said he fears several of his other players will follow suit.

LHSAA commissioner Tommy Henry said Monday that even if a player in a hurricane-affected zone enrolls in another school, he will be granted a transfer back to his original school if he wants.

"In the first place, we're going to do these kids right," Henry said. "This is not going to put their homes back together or help put their lives back together but I'm not going to make things harder on them."

Mandeville coach Rodney Corkern said he is trying to reach many of his players.

"I have no idea what is going on," Corkern said. "I've tried to call people, and the phones just aren't working. I don't know what's going to happen."

Corkern and Favre said they hope to resume practice as soon as possible, but both are having trouble contacting their players and finding out who plans on remaining with their teams.

The next problem is regaining electricity at the high schools so practice can be safely held.

"The field is playable, but if we don't have ice, how can we keep the kids hydrated at practice?" Corkern asked. "Then if a kid gets hurt, we don't have reliable phones to call for help."

Favre said he has been frustrated by the delay in finalizing a starting date for school. He said he is trying to keep his players from transferring, but up until early this week, couldn't even guarantee there would be a 2005 Fontainebleau football game. Then he said he isn't sure all the teams in District 4-5A will be able to compete because of how hard the Slidell-area schools were hit by the storm.

"Are we going to have football and not Slidell?" he questioned. "Is that fair?"

St. Tammany Parish School Board Superintendent Gayle Sloan said Monday she hopes the school system can re-open the first week of October. Athletics would resume that week, too.

Houston ready to host Bayou Classic

Large number of available hotels could prove enticing

By Ted Lewis
Staff writer

Add the Bayou Classic to the list of events and businesses possibly relocating from New Orleans to Houston.

At least that's the desire of Shea Guinn, vice president and general manager of the city's Reliant Stadium.

"Houston would be an ideal location," Guinn said of the annual Thanksgiving Saturday game between Southern and Grambling State. "We are the nearest large city with all of the amenities and a stadium to play host to the event."

Guinn, who is holding the date open, said he has been in touch with representatives from both schools, who will be forced to move the game now that the Superdome has been deemed unplayable for this season.

"It's a little too early to make a call, but obviously now we have to," Southern athletic director Greg LaFleur said. "The Bayou Classic means so much to so many people, and it especially will this year."

Grambling spokesperson Peter Forrest said Shreveport officials also had expressed interest in hosting the game, but the preference would likely be Houston because of the larger number of available hotel rooms.

That also would make LSU's Tiger Stadium less attractive because of the lack of hotel space in Baton Rouge.

The Bayou Classic has been annually played in New Orleans since 1974, the year before the Superdome opened when it was held at Tulane Stadium.

Besides drawing a sellout crowd in excess of 70,000, the event features several related activities such as the Battle of the Bands on Friday-] night and draws thousands of fans of both teams who don't even attend the game.

Guinn added he thought the fact that almost 25,000 hurricane evacuees are living in Houston facilities managed by SMG, Reliant's parent company, would make Reliant the best venue.

"Our first concern is doing whatever we can to help the people living on our properties," Guinn said. "But we also know there are a lot of events that need to be rescheduled and relocated."

Nicholls State-Indiana game on for Saturday

Schools' officials work out travel, prevent cancellation

Staff reports

THIBODAUX - With a charter plane from Baton Rouge secured, Nicholls State's football game at Indiana on Saturday is on. School officials at Indiana helped arrange the flight after the team's original flight from New Orleans was canceled.

"I know our coaches and players are excited about the opportunity to finally play football," said Nicholls State coach Jay Thomas. "The game and trip to Bloomington will offer a nice change from the experiences of the past week."

The Colonels were to have opened the season last Saturday at Utah State, but the game was canceled because so many Nicholls State players are from the areas affected by Hurricane Katrina.

The Nicholls campus, while receiving only light damage from the storm, was without power much of last week, and the football team only partially reassembled Sunday. Classes resumed Wednesday.

"On behalf of Indiana athletics, our thoughts and prayers go out to everyone who has been impacted by Hurricane Katrina," Indiana athletic director Rick Greenspan said.

"We certainly respect Nicholls' situation. For the last five days, both schools have been working on the travel logistics, because the safety and well-being of the Nicholls' student-athletes, coaches, staff and fans is the top priority. Upon Nicholls' arrival and throughout their stay, we plan to show them the best in Hoosier hospitality."

LOYOLA CANCELS FALL SPORTS

Loyola has canceled its fall sports schedule - wiping out cross country, women's soccer and volleyball seasons - and the men's and women's basketball programs might not pick up until the spring semester, if at all, Athletic Director Mike Giorlando said.

"Even the status of basketball is unclear,'' Giorlando said. "Eighty percent of our kids are now in other schools. Do we pick up where the (basketball) schedule says when we're back in school? What are the eligibility issues? If we can't play a whole conference schedule, we're not going to do it.''

Giorlando said he has heard from several other schools around the Gulf Coast Athletic Conference offering support.

"Everyone from the GCAC, the NAIA, other schools around the country, have been so very compassionate, understanding. But everything is up in the air right now."

Read
The Times-Picayune
daily on
nola.com

KATRINA: THE STORM WE'VE ALWAYS FEARED

The Times-Picayune

50 CENTS 169TH YEAR NO. 232 FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 9, 2005 HURRICANE EDITION

After hell, high water holdouts pried loose

STAFF PHOTO BY MICHAEL DEMOCKER

Silas Walker, who left his home on Chef Menteur Highway, rides down Hayne Boulevard to shelter with members of the Oklahoma National Guard. There were no reports of what police and military authorities have promised since midweek: that soon, stern encouragement will shift to evacuation by force.

Appeals for troops unheeded for days

By Jan Moller and Robert Travis Scott
Capital Bureau

BATON ROUGE - As it became clear last week that the devastation caused by Hurricane Katrina required far more help than state and local authorities could provide, Gov. Kathleen Blanco and other state officials began pleading for more help from the federal government.

But substantial active-duty Army deployments didn't arrive until a week after the storm, a fact that might turn out to be one of the enduring controversies about the state and federal response to what likely will be one of the deadliest and most costly events in American history.

This week, Army Lt. Gen. Russel Honore, who commands Joint Task Force Katrina, said search and rescue is the top priority for the 7,000 active-duty soldiers ordered to Louisiana by

See DEPLOY, page A-4

STAFF PHOTO BY ELIOT KAMENITZ

Military personnel assemble in the Riverwalk parking lot before a whale mural, seemingly one of the few underwater scenes in the city that is fake.

Few souls remain in shell of a city

Water, fire start to abate

By Bruce Nolan
Staff writer

Troops continued to go door to door Thursday in New Orleans, urging the last of the stubborn, the skeptical and the eccentric to get out of a crippled, once magnificent city formerly filled with their kind.

As they did Wednesday, armed military and police pounded on doors and served notice that the last of an estimated 10,000 inhabitants now have to leave the wreckage of a city that two weeks ago contained 480,000 souls.

Some of those they encountered were tired, beaten and ready to come out. Many more apparently were self-selected survivalists: determined not to let go of what little was certain in their lives in exchange for so much uncertainty ahead.

"I got my own place," said a defiant Robert Thomas in the city's historic Treme neighborhood. "I ain't sharing it with no freaking body." If he agreed to leave the city, "where the hell I'm gonna be after that?"

"They are trying to get this neighborhood for the rich people," said a man calling himself Chief Al; he was sitting on a stoop at St. Claude Avenue and St. Philip Street.

Yet there were no reports of what police and military authorities have promised since midweek: that soon, stern encouragement will shift to evacuation by force.

Kansas National Guard Maj. Gen Ron Mason said the National Guard helped bring out more than 650 willing people between Wednesday and Thursday morning from neighborhoods ravaged by flooding from Hurricane Katrina since Aug. 29.

In many ways, Thursday seemed to be a day of small victories: Water continued to drain away. Some downtown hotels struggled toward life. A weak but discernible commercial pulse began to beat in the city's suburbs.

See KATRINA, page A-5

INSIDE • Nursing home at which 30 died turned away evacuation buses, A-2 • Looting suspects get one-way ticket to 'Camp Greyhound,' A-8 • Dillard University buildings go up in flames, A-10

Policyholders to help foot insurance tab

Premiums to jump 20 percent next year

Robert Travis Scott
Capital bureau

BATON ROUGE — Homeowners from Shreveport to Slidell will be hit with a 20 percent increase in insurance premiums next year thanks to new state legislation forcing property owners statewide to reimburse insurance companies for supporting the state's catastrophe insurance fund.

After next year, the special charge to policyholders statewide will continue at 10 percent, probably for several years, state insurance officials said. The increases are in addition to rate hikes that insurers are likely to seek from state regulators as a result of new risk assessments after Hurricane Katrina.

State legislation in 2003 created the Louisiana Citizens Property Insurance Corp., basically a state-sanctioned company providing homeowners insurance to people who cannot get it at reasonable prices on the open market. The corporation is especially geared toward storm-prone areas, but it also helps homeowners who can't get anyone else to write a policy for any number of reasons, such as credit problems.

Citizens Property has 135,000 policies statewide, with a total exposure of about $12 billion, Citizens Secretary Terry Lisotta said. About 60,000 of the policies are likely to result in claims as a result of Katrina, he said. The coverage does not include flood damage, which is handled by a federal insurance program.

Under the new program, started last year, Citizens started building a catastrophe fund to be used for claims following a disaster.

But the fund is so new that is has accumulated only about $100 million, well below the $750 million to $950 million state officials estimate will be needed to pay for claims under the plan.

The state had a similar insurance institution before Citizens, but its rules of operation were significantly different. Previously, in the event of a disaster, the insurance companies had to make payments into a catastrophe fund within 30 days and eat the costs, although they could attempt make it up indirectly in future years with increased premiums.

The new program still requires insurance companies to fill up the fund in 30 days to cover the total claims, but the companies now can borrow the money and charge residential policyholders statewide to pay off the loans.

State Insurance Commissioner Robert Wooley and the insurance industry pushed for the legislation, saying companies were reluctant to continue writing polices in the state under the old plan and that homebuyers were facing crisis in trying to find coverage on the commercial market.

At the time, the predecessor to Citizens was bulging with clients, causing industry analysts nationwide to warn about a potentially serious problem looming in Louisiana, which was becoming overly dependent on the state insurer. The sparse availability of household insurance, more than the price, was a major consumer and political issue in Baton Rouge in 2003.

Citizens will now embark on a four-step process that will reverberate for years throughout the state.

First it will draw money from its existing fund. Lisotta said that out of the $100 million in the fund, only about $50 million can legally be paid for claims, because of the fund's requirements to maintain a cash reserve and pay for operations.

Next, Citizens can take advantage of the fact it, too, is protected by insurance. Called re-insurance, it will provide a net of about $260 million to the fund to pay for claims.

In step three, the insurance companies will make a payment equal to 10 percent of the total home premium coverage in the state, which will put about $112 million more into the fund. The companies can pay cash or borrow the money and charge customers to pay it off. As a result, the insurers will begin charging all customers statewide next year a 10 percent increase over their regular premium.

The fourth step is when Citizens borrows money by issuing bonds with the permission of the state Bond Commission. The bonds are supposed to provide enough money for all remaining claims that can't be paid by Citizens. Lisotta said the bonds are likely to amount to several hundred million dollars and that they will be paid off by an emergency assessment on all homeowners policies statewide.

The emergency assessment can be up to 10 percent per year of a customer's premium, which means Citizens can rake in about $112 million a year and pay off the bonds over a multi-year period.

The figures assume that the homeowner policy base in Louisiana will be about the same it has been in the past, Lisotta said, but that could change with people leaving the state.

The end result is that homeowners next year will pay an extra 10 percent on their premiums for the insurance company assessment, plus another 10 percent for the emergency assessment to pay off the bonds. In subsequent years, policyholders will continue paying the emergency assessment until the bonds are paid off.

Jeff Albright, chief executive of the Independent Insurance Agents and Brokers of Louisiana, said the creation of Citizens was critical to the health of the insurance industry and to encourage companies to keep writing policies in the state.

"We have a systematic way to pay for this cataclysmic loss," Albright said. In the old system, the insurers would have received a bill for the whole loss.

"State Farm would be totally devastated" under the previous system, Albright said of Louisiana's largest insurance carrier.

STAFF PHOTOS BY CHRIS GRANGER

A federal agency that specializes in handling mass casualties continues the gruesome task of removing about 30 decomposing bodies from St. Rita's Nursing Home on Thursday near Poydras.

Doomed nursing home had offer of bus transport

Coroner says help was snubbed until too late

By Paul Rioux
Staff writer

Less than 24 hours before Hurricane Katrina began ravaging St. Bernard Parish with 140 mph winds and a 20-foot storm surge, Coroner Bryan Bertucci made an urgent call to the owner of St. Rita's Nursing Home near Poydras.

"I told her I had two buses and two drivers who could evacuate all 70 of her residents and take them anywhere she wanted to go," he said.

But Mabel Mangano refused the offer. "She told me, 'I have five nurses and a generator, and we're going to stay here,'" Bertucci said.

It turned out to be a tragic decision.

On Wednesday, nine days after the storm had passed, Bertucci watched as a dozen workers from a federal agency that specializes in handling mass casualties began the gruesome task of removing about 30 decomposing bodies from the still-flooded nursing home.

On Thursday, Attorney General Charles Foti Jr. announced he's launching an investigation into the deaths at the nursing home.

"I want answers. I want to know why those people were trapped and were not evacuated," Foti said.

The storm pounded through the parish's levees, unleashing raging floodwaters that knocked able-bodied men off their feet. At the single-story, privately owned nursing home, residents confined to their beds or wheelchairs were quickly overwhelmed by the rapidly rising water, Bertucci said.

As the storm raged, neighbors and firefighters in boats rescued about 40 nurses and residents, carrying some out on their mattresses. But rescuers could not save everyone.

The body of an elderly woman wearing a housedress was found on a concrete patio near the front door. An elderly man's body was slumped over the back of a chair, a recovery worker said.

Inside the home, a table was nailed over a window, and couches and dressers were shoved against doors in a futile attempt to keep out the rushing water, which rose to within inches of the ceiling.

When the water finally receded a week later, it left behind several inches of muck on the floors and the overwhelming stench of putrified flesh.

A vase of flowers lies along the St. Bernard Highway extension, near a flooded St. Rita's Nursing Home, on Thursday.

The tragedy at St. Rita's is one of the deadliest storm-related incidents reported so far in the New Orleans area as rescue efforts are gradually shifting to recovery. In Meraux, authorities found the bodies of about 20 people who tied themselves together in an apparent attempt to ride out the storm.

Bertucci's voice cracked as he talked about how 40 of the home's residents are his patients from a private practice.

"Out of all the devastation, this is the only time I've cried," said Bertucci, whose house and doctor's office were destroyed by flooding. "These people were like family to me."

He said he urged Mangano to accept the buses and evacuate when he called her about 2 p.m. on Aug. 28, the day before the Category 4 hurricane churned ashore. At the time, parish was under a mandatory evacuation order.

After she declined help, Mangano apparently changed her mind two hours later when she called another parish official to see if the buses were still available, the coroner said. But by then it was too late, he said.

"They all could have been stuck on a highway in buses in the middle of a hurricane," Bertucci said. "It might have been an even worse tragedy than this."

Mangano, who Bertucci said stayed at the nursing home during the hurricane, could not be reached for comment Wednesday.

Bertucci said he believes she survived the storm, but he has not spoken to her.

Foti said investigators with his office's Medicaid Fraud division are searching for information regarding the location of Mangano and Salvador Mangano.

Bertucci, who described Mangano as a friend, said she made a "terrible misjudgment."

"Is there talk of negligence? Yes," he said. "But I don't want to get into that because I'm a doctor, not a lawyer."

Officials with the St. Bernard Parish Sheriff's Office could not be reached Thursday to comment about the incident. Bertucci said the parish's other three nursing homes evacuated their residents without significant problems.

"All of our nursing homes have evacuation plans to begin getting their residents to safety 72 hours before a hurricane is expected to make landfall," he said. "There may have been some extenuating circumstances that kept St. Rita's from executing their plan."

He said Mangano was having trouble finding transportation for five special needs patients. He also said the storm's late shift toward southeastern Louisiana proved to be a challenge for even the best-laid evacuation plans.

St. Rita's, first certified in 1998, has an average safety record compared to other nursing homes in Louisiana, according to data on safety inspections dating back to 1999 and analyzed by The Times-Picayune.

Since 1999, federal officials have determined that no deaths inside the nursing home were related to substandard care. But the home was cited twice for violations that either caused harm or endangered residents, records show. St. Rita's was also denied federal funding for a total of 42 days for ailing to promptly correct problems discovered by inspectors. That number of days without funding is relatively high compared to other nursing homes,according to the newspaper's analysis.

A Sept. 2004 inspection identified six other "deficiencies" that had either caused "minimal" harm or the potential to cause harm, according to federal records. The problems included a failure to keep adequate medical records, and a failure to have a program to keep infection from spreading. All six deficiencies were corrected by Nov. 2004, the records show.

Workers with the Disaster Mortuary Operational Response Team used a pickup truck Wednesday to tow a flatboat back and forth through 2 feet of floodwater surrounding the nursing home off Louisiana 46 as they began removing the bodies.

Wearing masks and heavy protective jumpsuits with ice packs strapped inside, it took the workers a few hours to recover the first five bodies. The operation, which resumed Thursday, was slowed by displaced furniture that blocked the doors inside several of the residents' rooms, officials said.

The bodies were loaded onto a refrigerated truck. The ones that can be identified will be taken to the Jefferson Parish morgue. The others will go to a makeshift morgue in a St. Gabriel warehouse, where authorities will try to identify them using DNA and dental records, Bertucci said.

He said the last of the bodies were expected to be recovered from the nursing home by Thursday evening.

As he spoke grimly about the devastation in St.Bernard, where nearly all of the 26,700 homes flooded,Bertucci found some levity in the shipment of 8,000body bags he received from federal authorities.

"They're everywhere," he said. "What am I going to do with them?"

Pressed for an estimate on how many he might actually need, Bertucci grew somber and said, "Maybe 150. Maybe less, if we're lucky."

• • • • • • • • •

Staff writer Jeffrey Meitrodt contributed to this report.

OUR GOOD HANDS® ARE HERE TO HELP.

The people of Allstate would like to express their concern for those affected by Hurricane Katrina and let you know that their thoughts are with you.

The Allstate Catastrophe Team is working diligently to get our Mobile Response Units to the most heavily impacted areas as quickly and safely as we can.

Nothing is more important than your personal safety. So please follow the advice of local authorities and know that we are standing by ready to help.

ALLSTATE'S CATASTROPHE HOTLINE: 1-800-54-STORM

Allstate®
You're in good hands.

Allstate Insurance Company, Allstate Property and Casualty Insurance Company and Allstate Indemnity Company: Northbrook, IL. ©2005 Allstate Insurance Company.
The "Cupped Hands" logo is a registered service mark of Allstate Insurance Company.

Algiers to become foothold for reclaiming the city

Dry community offers base for cleanup, restoring services

By Rob Nelson
Staff writer

Having escaped the devastating flooding from Hurricane Katrina, Algiers will become the hub of city operations as the rest of New Orleans recovers and rebuilds, City Councilwoman Jacquelyn Brechtel Clarkson said Thursday.

Algiers, mainly a bedroom community of about 60,000 residents, will house several services and city employees from waterlogged New Orleans, Clarkson said. Algiers residents who rode out Hurricane Katrina in their homes will be allowed to stay, despite Mayor Ray Nagin's order that the rest of New Orleans' residents evacuate.

"We're going to run a lot of city government out of Algiers, absolutely," Clarkson said. "That's how we'll be able to restore the rest of the city so fast."

Hundreds of cleanup workers are based at the Behrman Sports Complex in Algiers, which was filled Thursday with bulldozers, trucks and trailers, where the workers sleep. The effort, run by Omni Pinnacle of Slidell, includes removing debris and trash citywide, worker Craig Flucke said, adding that the schedule called for crews to be finished in Algiers by Thursday night.

Floodwaters are hampering cleanup in other parts of the city, Flucke said. "If the water would go down, we'd be rolling," he said. At least one worker carried a gun at the site, and Flucke said a security force began monitoring the complex Thursday night. He said the crews would be in place for months.

Kathy Lynn Honaker, executive director of the Algiers Economic Development Foundation, said Algiers can easily accommodate the companies and city services that could be shifted to the area. Businesses might have to relocate to Algiers, and people involved in reconstruction will create a need for housing that could benefit the community, Honaker said in an interview from Pensacola, Fla., where she fled the hurricane.

"Out of this terrible tragedy, we have been given the opportunity to lead the way and help the rest of New Orleans get things going again," she said.

But first, Algiers must get back to the basics. Except for a handful of customers, power remained out in the area, and Clarkson said she hopes the community's electricity is fully restored within two weeks.

One grid in Algiers has power, which was turned on Wednesday night, because it includes the Little Sisters of the Poor's Mary Joseph Residence, which is housing local and out-of-state firefighters, police and emergency officials. That grid might also include some residential homes, Clarkson said.

Downed power lines tangled with trees are still a fire hazard, and water pressure in some neighborhoods might be too low to fight such blazes, she said, advising residents to return to Algiers only when they know electricity is back on at their homes.

"Lights will go on grid by grid, but everybody has to be patient," she said, predicting that thousands of residents remained in Algiers for the storm, including people who evacuated from St. Bernard and Plaquemines parishes.

Algiers also has clean drinking water and working sewer service, Clarkson said.

That won't be enough, though, to keep Jan Butterfield and her daughter, Shana Sanders, in their Algiers Point neighborhood. With a trailer and pickup truck loaded with a mattress perched on their front yard, the pair, Algiers residents for seven years who fled to Alexandria during the storm, said they returned Thursday to retrieve some of their belongings and are now headed for Houston.

They had planned to move to Texas in a few years, but Katrina changed that schedule. "Mother Nature decided for us," said Butterfield, who works for Tulane University, which has transferred its administrative offices to Houston.

Even though their house had little damage, both were certain of their decision to move. But they said they would miss the community. "It is ever so charming," Butterfield said.

Emily Harville and her husband, Chris Andrews, who also evacuated, never had time to enjoy the neighborhood. The storm struck just three weeks after the Chapel Hill, N.C., couple moved to Algiers Point. They came back to gather some of their belongings.

Caught minutes before starting to drive their packed car to Dallas, Harville said they hoped to return to the area. "All of our stuff is here, so we'll definitely be back," she said.

As confusion over evacuation rises, floodwaters go down

Slowly, city's streets emerging from muck

By James Varney
Staff writ er

Amid heightened confusion over whether New Orleans residents would be removed forcibly from their homes Thursday, the city welcomed a noticeable reduction in the increasingly vile floodwaters that have coated neighborhoods for 10 days.

Overnight, the waters receded in the Lower 9th Ward, in Mid City and even along the often-flooded dip where Interstate 10 crosses beneath the Southern Railroad overpass.

About a fifth of the city's 75 major drainage pumps are back in operation, according to officials with the Sewerage & Water Board. As one example of continuing progress, the water board's main purification plant, which was inundated with as much as 3 feet of water and still flooded Wednesday, was dry Thursday.

Over at Pumping Station No. 6, along the Jefferson Parish line on the west side of the 17th Street Canal, the impact of the three reactivated pumps was apparent. Debris ranging from garbage cans to flower pots piled up on the grates as the massive pumps sucked floodwaters toward Lake Pontchartrain. The current was strong, rippling in places.

Although there were still no indications of major disease outbreaks, the slop that has covered the city for days, a witch's brew of bloated corpses, human excrement, chemicals and debris, is leaving its mark.

Along St. Claude Avenue on the eastern side of the Industrial Canal, cars and low-slung homes that had been out of sight since the levees broke reappeared Thursday morning. The vehicles were uniformly brown, caked with layers of mud. On the curbsides and sidewalks of Esplanade Avenue, the recent high water mark could be traced in the film sheathing trash and downed trees, and the snagged flotsam, such as ripped garbage bags, clinging to them.

The mess remains a home to holdouts against evacuation. Army paratrooper teams, which run foot patrols in neighborhoods from the French Quarter to the Industrial Canal, played loudspeakers down still-flooded streets Thursday. The message to residents ended with a promise they would be rescued.

New Orleans Police Department teams pushed into uncharted territory, finding dry ground around Delgado Community College, for example, and in eastern New Orleans, where some pumps were again working. And with those new frontiers came gruesome evidence of Katrina's toll: a body floating face down in the muck against the Esplanade Avenue bridge over Bayou St. John, another covered by a blanket at the base of one of the two columns marking the City Park entrance to the New Orleans Museum of Art.

STAFF PHOTO BY MICHAEL DEMOCKER

After being turned back by high water from a search for evacuees, members of the Oklahoma National Guard try to navigate a still-flooded I-10 near the Chef Menteur exit.

"We just put it out over the air, and they make a list of them and they can get them," said 1st District NOPD Sgt. Danny Scanlan. Scanlan conceded he had no idea who "they" were, but he noted it wasn't on the NOPD's list of responsibilities to retrieve corpses.

At the intersection of City Park and Orleans avenues, in happier times the launch point for the Endymion parade, Scanlan's patrol found two men walking with a sleek new shotgun. The men, Chris Montero and J.T. Lanasa, were trying to get to Montero's house on South Scott Street to rescue two cats.

"I'm not real comfortable with you having that weapon," Scanlan told them. They named two ranking NOPD officers who they said had told them it was advisable to be armed.

Scanlan returned the shotgun to them but told them to "abort their mission for today" and try again later, when it should be drier.

The 1st District team said it had no orders to remove residents forcibly from their homes despite talk from Superintendent Eddie Compass and Mayor Ray Nagin that a mandatory evacuation was in effect for New Orleans and that the city must be cleared.

NOPD spokesman Capt. Marlon Defillo said such orders would be issued only as a last resort. "We're still rescuing people and helping those who want to evacuate voluntarily," he added.

During an interview early in the day, Lt. Gov. Mitch Landrieu said officials have yet to determine whether "mandatory evacuation really means mandatory evacuation," forcing people to leave their homes and hauling them out if they refuse.

It could also amount to strongly urging reluctant residents to leave, he said, and warning them of the health risks and the lack of assistance if they stay behind.

Terry Ebbert, the city's director of Homeland Security, said the decision ultimately lies with Compass. "The federal government and the 82nd Airborne Division operate in support of the New Orleans Police Department," Ebbert said.

The evacuation, which Compass insisted would be "strictly a law enforcement, not military" operation, may kick start this weekend, but not all NOPD officers are thrilled with the policy. Some of them said they were uncomfortable with the prospect of forcibly removing residents who have enough water and food to remain in their homes.

"I'm going to do what we're told, we will follow the order, but I'd like to have a meeting about it," said Capt. Jeff Winn, commander of the NOPD's tactical SWAT teams. "I must say that right now the concept is not acceptable to me and I'm worried about situations where SWAT teams are called to remove residents and someone could get hurt."

Working the 7th Ward up toward City Park, Scanlan's team yelled at pedestrians and residents gathered by windows, telling them they had to leave. The sentiments of one household were easy to read, printed as they were in big letters on boarded windows along Esplanade Avenue: "F—K BLANCO, F—K FEMA." The window next door declared, "We've gone to Texas," and a smaller sign on the porch said, "Please stop 'helping' us. Thanks."

The officers frisked some of the "zombies" — cop lingo for survivors the officers think are insane to stay in the city — and the residents said they did not mind the inconvenience.

"You know you got to get out, right?" officer Bryan Mulvey said to Robert Cummings, as Cummings climbed out of a tangle of downed trees on Esplanade Avenue. Scanlan was suspicious of the man's bulging pockets, and he ordered Mulvey to search him. When the search came up empty, Scanlan apologized.

"That's all right, I understand you've got a job to do," Cummings said, saying he was walking "for exercise."

One of those picked up Thursday, Johnny Dunn, said he tried to stay in his Uptown home as long as he could, until the city was simply too quiet and eerie to bear. "There wasn't no civilization," he said. "I got tired of walking around my house seeing nothing and nobody."

• • • • • • • • • •

Staff writers Jeff Duncan, Steve Ritea and Gordon Russell contributed to this story.

Blanco, Bush disagreed on authority over forces

DEPLOY, from A-1

President Bush on Saturday. But the vast majority of the rescue effort was conducted by state and local authorities, volunteers with flat-bottomed boats that could access the narrow streets where flood victims were stranded on roofs and attics, and by the Louisiana National Guard.

"We pulled out 250,000 people before the Army got here,"said Sam Jones, a former mayor of Franklin who serves as a senior adviser to Blanco and helped organize the boat rescue operation. "By Thursday (Sept. 1), we knew we'd turned a corner."

Despite the presence of 5,700 Guard troops and assistance from the Coast Guard, Navy helicopters and other military assets, which were deployed in advance of Katrina and in its immediate aftermath, state and local officials said there was a need throughout the week for more troops to aid in search and rescue operations, provide food and other assistance and restore order as New Orleans was beset by looting and violence.

Blanco spokeswoman Denise Bottcher said the situation was so dire that the need for Army support was obvious. New Orleans was like a dying man who needed CPR, she said, and shouldn't have had to ask for help.

State officials of both parties remained frustrated by the delays in getting federal forces. A review of records and interviews with state, White House and military officials revealed contentious negotiations and apparent miscommunication between the two sides as they tried to cope with a disaster that presented unexpected challenges each day.

Blanco administration officials said the governor spoke twice to Bush - once Sunday morning, in the hours before Katrina made landfall, and again Wednesday morning after the storm. In both telephone conversations, according to Blanco and her senior aides, the governor asked Bush for increased federal help.

"I asked him to send me everything he's got," Blanco said of their first conversation,. In their second conversation, Blanco was more specific, saying the state needed 40,000 troops to restore order and complete the search and rescue mission.

But state officials said the governor didn't ask directly for active-duty troops. Bottcher said the governor was prepared to accept any combination of Guards members and regular Army troops, as long as there were enough numbers to calm the city and complete the rescue effort.

The subject of active-duty troops did not come up until a face-to-face meeting on Air Force One on Sept. 2, when Blanco and Bush spent about 45 minutes meeting behind closed doors. But the president's order to deploy was not made until the following day, and in the meantime the White House and the Blanco administration tussled over who ultimately would be in charge of the rescue effort.

A Bush administration official, speaking on the condition of anonymity, said the delay in ordering active-duty forces occurred because the regular Army had to wait for Guard units to be in place before they could deploy.

But Lt. Col. Pete Schneider, a spokesman for the Louisiana National Guard, said, "I don't know how that has anything to do with it."

By law, federal troops are not allowed to engage in law enforcement, which makes the Guard the logical first responder in times of crisis.

The White House official said Bush's mobilization order Sept. 3 came at the appropriate time given the sequence of the various military mobilizations. The official said the prolonged dispute over lines of authority "obviously … caused some problems," but said the disagreement in no way affected the speed at which the Army forces were deployed.

A senior official with the U.S. military said that from the Army's point of view, the president's order is the only criteria for deploying soldiers, whether or not Guards members are in place.

Blanco said this week that she fears the conflict over lines of authority wasted valuable time that she and her staff could have better spent addressing other issues, possibly slowing the relief effort. "It's just a paper war, that's all it is," she said. "This is about the silliest argument that I can think of."

After the meeting on Air Force One, the White House sent Blanco a proposed memorandum of understanding late Friday night that she was urged to sign right away, according to the governor. The memo would have taken the rare step of putting Honore in charge of both the Guards and the active-duty military units while answering to both the president and Blanco, known in the military as dual reporting.

But Blanco, after meetings by her staff that consumed much of Friday night and Saturday morning, declined to sign the memo and opted to preserve her authority of the Guard forces, which by then numbered more than 13,000. Blanco said she did not want to undermine the authority of Maj. Gen. Bennett Landreneau, who leads the Louisiana National Guard and oversees the Guard troops who have arrived from other states.

"The problem with the offer (to federalize) was that when the question was asked, 'How does this make things better?' the question was never answered," said a state official who attended meetings about the issue but asked to remain anonymous because he does not have authority to speak for the governor.

Relief efforts have ramped up rapidly, with more than 18,000 Guard troops from 29 states in Louisiana and about 18,000 active-duty military spread across the Gulf Coast by Thursday, but the delay remained mystifying to some of the local rescue workers who struggled against impossible obstacles to keep people alive at makeshift shelters where conditions deteriorated with each passing hour.

Dr. Gregory Henderson, a pathologist at Ochsner Clinic Foundation who helped set up a makeshift medical clinic at the French Quarter Bar last week, said he will never understand why help didn't arrive sooner

In a brief interview outside the Ernest N. Morial Convention Center Wednesday, where he was tending to evacuees, Henderson said, "That's going to be, at the end of the day, the great mystery."

25,000 body bags on hand

KATRINA, from A-1

In Baton Rouge, officials closed the makeshift hospital that sprung up on the floor of the Pete Maravich Assembly Center at Louisiana State University. In 10 days, volunteer doctors and nurses treated 6,000 patients rushed by helicopter and ambulance from New Orleans area rooftops and other places.

Water levels continued to recede throughout the metropolitan area. Some drained through gaps deliberately punched in levees, sluicing back into surrounding waterways that have fallen back to pre-storm levels. In addition, the region's pumping system — still a feeble remnant of its original power — continued to suck at stagnant standing water.

St. Bernard Parish officials reported two feet of water remaining in the government center in Chalmette, which once was flooded up to the second floor.

However, fires continued to break out, although in fewer number. Fire Superintendent Charles Parent said three unidentified multistory buildings burned down at Dillard University on Wednesday.

Thursday saw 11 fires, six of which were inaccessible from the ground, Parent said.

Yet in the context of the horrors of the last week, 11 fires was a good day, he said. Firefighters were heartened by the fact that water pressure has begun to return for the first time, he said.

Still, there were intimations that the dreadful next phase, body recovery, is drawing nearer.

Bob Johannessen, a spokesman for the state Department of Health and Hospitals, said officials have 25,000 body bags on hand. "We don't know what to expect," he said.

Teams set up body recovery points in St. Bernard Parish and at the intersection of Interstate 10 and I-610. Bodies would be carefully logged in, personal effects catalogued and the precise global positioning coordinates of their places of recovery carefully recorded.

The bodies will be sent to a special federal emergency mortuary in St. Gabriel, where sophisticated techniques would be deployed to make an identification.

Authorities said the task promised to be daunting: Many bodies have decomposed. Many were too poor to have dental records useful in identification. Many belong to families who will have to be found after scattering across the country.

Jefferson Parish Emergency Operations Director Walter Maestri estimated that Hurricane Katrina may have killed 200 in that parish.

Many bodies may be trapped in the poor, blue-collar subdivisions of Lincolnshire and Westminster in Marrero. Water rose as high as four feet in those areas, where many residents did not have the means to evacuate, he said.

Crews may begin body retrieval today and Saturday in Marrero and in flooded neighborhoods around Airline Drive, he said.

In a nationally televised speech, President Bush promised to cut through red tape to rush relief to New Orleans and the Mississippi and Alabama Gulf Coasts.

"The government is going to be with you for the long haul," he said.

U.S. Rep. William Jefferson, D-New Orleans, told WWL-TV that rebuilding the city could cost more than $200 billion. "It's important to talk about the big number up front," he said.

The president asked that Sept. 16 be treated as a national day of prayer and remembrance.

Vice President Dick Cheney visited the area Thursday. He toured the flooded Lakeview neighborhood with Gov. Kathleen Blanco and Sen. David Vitter, R-La. Cheney said he was impressed with the Army Corps of Engineers' repair work at the breeched 17th Street Canal. He said new taxes are not the answer to paying for the billions of dollars in relief the region will require.

In Kenner, the New Orleans City Council granted Mayor Ray Nagin unprecedented emergency spending and borrowing power to deal with the crisis.

Five council members – all but Councilmen Jay Batt and Eddie Sapir – convened their first post-Katrina meeting at Louis Armstrong International Airport, a city-owned outpost in Kenner. Sapir was en route to the city from out of town, and Batt already had scheduled a conflicting caravan back to his partially flooded district.

The council suspended normal waiting periods and slashed at other procedural safeguards to give Nagin more executive power. Three council members disclosed that they had lost their homes. Councilwoman Cynthia Willard-Lewis said her brother, Elliot Willard Jr., is missing.

Council members made clear that they expect to see local businesses and residents drafted into the rebuilding effort facing the city – the better to rebuild its middle class.

"Don't pimp us," Council President Oliver Thomas warned. "Help us rebuild."

As he spoke, workers at major downtown hotels such as the Hilton New Orleans Riverside, the Windsor Court and the Sheraton New Orleans Hotel hustled to bring them back into commerce, perhaps as housing centers for relief crews and construction workers.

"We'll be up in a couple of weeks," said Kevin Ryan, regional vice president of operations for Starwood Hotels and Resorts Worldwide Inc., which owns the Sheraton. "We want to get people back to work and make sure we rebuild the city as fast as we can."

St. Tammany Parish President Kevin Davis said as many as 60,000 displaced residents are free to return beginning Friday, although many will have to show identification before being admitted to damaged neighborhoods.

Thousands of homes in flood-damaged Slidell are not yet fit for habitation, he said.

Davis said he has asked federal authorities for 20,000 housing units for homeless families.

But in general, conditions are improving rapidly, Davis said. Power has been restored to a third of the parish, and most roads are open. More businesses are coming back every day, he said.

In Jefferson Parish, isolated signs of life began to spread across the West Bank.

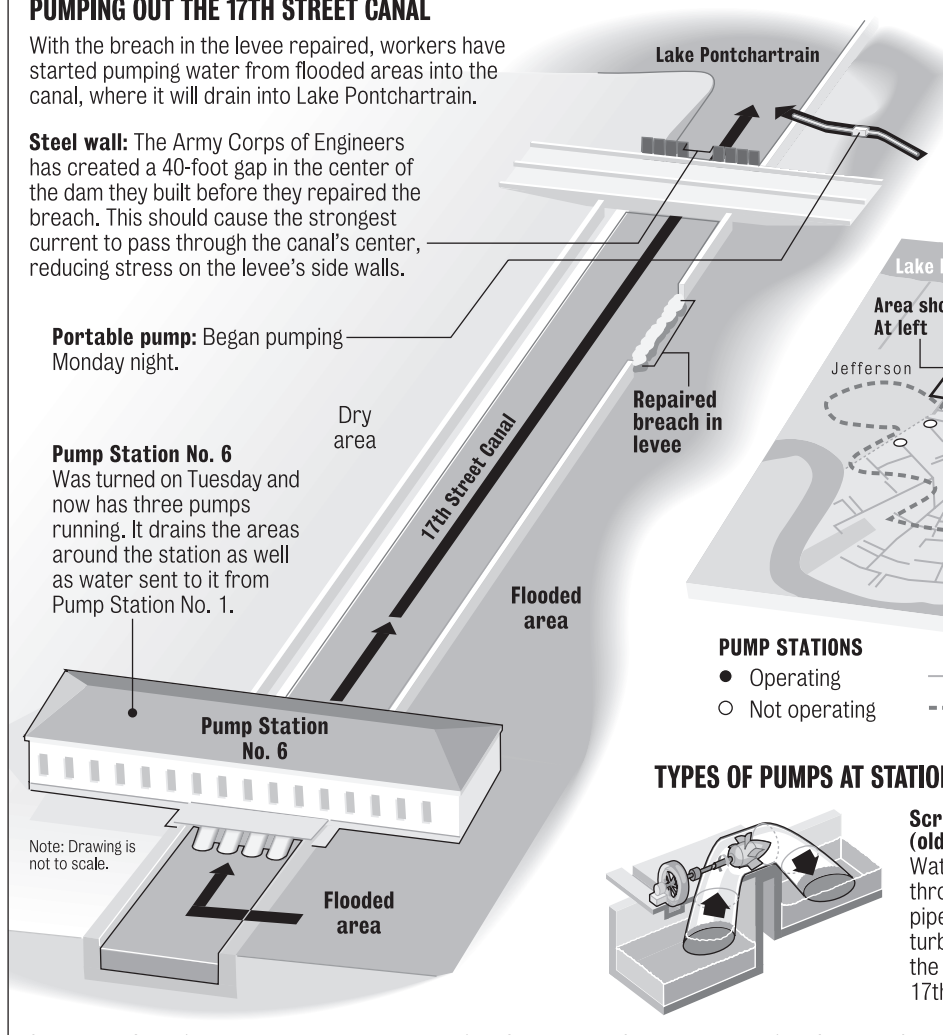
A few stores opened for business here and there west of the Harvey Canal. Three-fourths of Gretna reported it had electrical power. The sewerage treatment plant was working and the city had water, although a boil order was still in effect, Police Chief Arthur Lawson said.

Meantime, conditions are improving rapidly in Kenner and Harahan on the east bank, Maestri said.

Jefferson Parish President Aaron Broussard said officials hoped to open the parish by Sept. 30; he and other parish officials urged residents to stay out, if possible.

Jefferson residents were allowed into the parish on a look-see basis earlier in the week. But Broussard said those electing to stay would not be forced out – although they faced hardships with widespread power outages, water that still must be made safe by boiling, shortages of food and gasoline, and a generally shattered economy.

• • • • • •



With reporting by Jarvis deBerry, Michele Krupa, Becky Mowbray, John Pope, Manuel Torres and The Associated Press.

DRAINING THE CITY

By Thursday afternoon, a fifth of the city's major pumps and one portable pump were working to clear the floodwaters.

PUMPING OUT THE 17TH STREET CANAL

With the breach in the levee repaired, workers have started pumping water from flooded areas into the canal, where it will drain into Lake Pontchartrain.

HOW THE DRAINAGE SYSTEM WORKS

1. Storm runoff collects in drainage canals under the streets.
2. Water is pumped to stations that are next to large canals and the lake.
3. These stations lift both the runoff that is pumped to the station and water from surrounding areas over the levees.

TYPES OF PUMPS AT STATION NO. 6

Screw pumps (old design)
Water is pulled up through large intake pipes, where a rotating turbine pushes it over the levee and into the 17th Street Canal.

Vertical pumps (new design)
Water is sucked into the pump by the submerged end of the pipe and propelled.

Sources: Army Corps of Engineers; "National Register Evaluation of New Orleans Drainage System;" "The Pumps of New Orleans," by Sebastian Junger; Patterson Pump, New Orleans Sewerage & Water Board

NEW YORK TIMES GRAPHIC

Reaching Out to Shell and Motiva Employees

Our thoughts are with everyone hurt by Hurricane Katrina. Our greatest focus now is to assure the safety and welfare of our employees and their families in the devastated Gulf Coast communities.

If you are a Shell or Motiva employee affected by this natural disaster who has not already contacted your supervisor, we urge you to do so immediately. They can help as you try to manage both your personal and work-related needs.

Contact our emergency response lines at 1-866-745-5489 or 1-877-40-SHELL. They are open daily from 7 am to 10 pm Central Standard Time, including weekends. Or, if you can access the Web, send an email to katrinahelp@shell.com for Human Resources assistance.

These communication lines are dedicated to address your questions related to replacement or redirected payroll, disruptions in banking and mail services, loan assistance, prescription drugs, location-specific information and more. Also, go to www.shell.com/us to find other employee assistance information that could provide you some much-needed relief.

We are here to help.

The assistance applies to those who fled as a result of the storm, either renters or home owners, and are still living in a shelter, a hotel or with family. The money is designed to handle disaster needs, including transportation, clothing, housing and food.

FEMA offering $2,000 per household

Whether money is a grant or loan yet to be determined

Mary Judice
Business writer

Many Louisiana and Mississippi residents displaced by Hurricane Katrina and who still need emergency shelter may qualify for a one-time $2,000 payment per household from the Federal Emergency Management Agency.

The temporary housing program is an attempt to get immediate assistance to those stricken by the storm. However, they may not get their money for 10 days or so.

The assistance applies to those who fled as a result of the storm, either renters or home owners, and are still living in a shelter, a hotel or with family. The money is designed to handle disaster needs, including transportation, clothing, housing and food.

The payment effectively would be an early draw from the benefits that evacuees eventually could get from FEMA. The $2,000 will be deducted from the total package the evacuee would qualify to receive.

To qualify, evacuees must register with FEMA at www.fema.gov or by calling (800) 621-3362. FEMA has not established a center in Baton Rouge to take applications.

A call late Thursday to the hotline could not be completed because of the volume of calls.

So far, more than 400,000 people have registered for assistance by -phone and online. The call centers are open 24 hours a day.

To make an application, an individual needs to provide a social security number, insurance information and a bank account routing number. FEMA said its staff will work around missing information.

The assistance is available to the uninsured as well as to those who have homeowners or renters insurance and may have received a check for emergency expenses from their insurer, said Win Henderson, a spokesperson for FEMA.

He said policy holders with a policy rider for "additional living expenses" do not qualify for the benefit. Typically, such riders are on policies for homes in the $1 million range.

Whether the payment qualifies as a grant or a loan that must be repaid depends on the individual's financial circumstances and the federal package he qualifies for. That can't be determined until the applicant goes through the FEMA process.

Those who receive the money but later discover they don't qualify for it as a grant must repay it.

For those who do qualify for the money, Henderson said the $2,000 is not taxable by the Internal Revenue Service.

Evacuees in the Astrodome in Houston will receive a debit card from which they can withdraw the $2,000, David Passey of FEMA said in Baton Rouge on Thursday.

All other evacuees will receive their money by check, mailed to their current address, or by electronic deposit into their bank account.

Passey said those applying should expect to receive payment in 10 days to two weeks. Approximately 24 hours after applying, evacuees may check to see the status of their request.

• • • • • •

Sandy Barbier contributed to this story

STAFF PHOTO BY SUSAN POAG

Louisiana National Guard trucks, along with hundreds of yards of barbed wire, surround the Alario Center in Westwego, site of a FEMA supply station that was giving away water, food and ice to residents of Jefferson Parish. In addition to the supplies, FEMA is offering a one-time, $2,000 payment to qualifying households for those needing immediate assistance in the wake of Hurricane Katrina.

N.O. council grants Nagin free rein on spending

Somber tales shared at post-storm meeting

By Stephanie Grace and Frank Donze
Staff writers

As usual, the day started with a prayer and the Pledge of Allegiance.

But from that point on, New Orleans City Council members threw out the rule book, holding an extraordinary, emotional meeting – their first since the city they govern was ravaged by Hurricane Katrina.

With a crippled City Hall still off limits, five members of the council, including three who think they lost their homes to floodwaters, gathered in a conference room at Louis Armstrong International Airport to grant emergency spending powers to Mayor Ray Nagin's administration.

They also took the opportunity to bare their souls about the catastrophe that has rendered New Orleans a partially submerged, heavily fortified ghost town. And they began to plot a strategy to get their constituents and the businesses that employ them back home.

That won't happen any time soon. Nagin this week extended his mandatory evacuation order for the city's east bank through the first week of October, citing contaminated standing water and the lack of basic services. Even after the mayor gives the all-clear, residents likely will be able to return only a section at a time, Chief Administrative Officer Brenda Hatfield said.

Acutely aware that evacuees are anxious about their homes' security, Council President Oliver Thomas said he has been told that the military will stay for "as long as it takes," although he added that he has not seen that pledge in writing.

Business owners might not have to wait much longer to get a look at the damage. The council asked the administration to let local companies retrieve payroll records and other essentials as soon as possible so they can temporarily operate elsewhere. Council members also hope to let construction firms pick up their equipment so they can help with the massive rebuilding effort.

Driving home the point that quick action is needed, Councilwoman Renee

Gill Pratt said she has heard from funeral home owners who were forced to delay burials as the storm approached.

"The bodies need to come out," she said.

For much of the meeting, council members spoke somberly, recalling images of floating corpses, whole neighborhoods under water and rampant looting.

But there were also moments of gallows humor. Noting that he probably won't salvage much from his flooded Broadmoor home, the 6-foot-6 Thomas said: "It's a good thing I have tall friends. I have on their clothing."

The five members present – Thomas, Pratt, Jacquelyn Brechtel Clarkson, Cynthia Hedge Morrell and Cynthia Willard-Lewis, unanimously agreed to hand the administration unprecedented borrowing authority to keep the city afloat and to draw upon all cash reserves and accounts, regardless of how the money is earmarked. In a rare departure from normal checks and balances, the action allows Hatfield and finance director Reggie Zeno to choose lenders and set terms without returning to the council for final approval.

Council members also took the opportunity to bare their souls about the catastrophe that has rendered New Orleans a partially submerged, heavily fortified ghost town. And they began to plot a strategy to get their constituents and the businesses that employ them back home.

The council also waived the City Charter's requirement that such measures be introduced at one meeting for approval at later one.

Unable to recall the official numbering system for city laws, the deputy city attorney improvised and labeled the first ordinance K-1, for Katrina. With virtually no staff on hand, the council drafted deputy fiscal officer Barbara Avalos to step in as acting clerk, enabling her to sign the documents and forward them to the mayor.

Councilman Eddie Sapir did not attend the meeting because he was en route to the city, and Councilman Jay Batt had a scheduling conflict in the form of a previously arranged caravan back to his partially flooded district.

With official business taken care of, council members used the forum to demand that local businesses play a major role in the city's reconstruction and that contractors hire local people.

The goal, Thomas said, is to bring displaced New Orleanians back from places as far away as Utah and Minnesota and re-create a local middle class. His message to the business community: "Don't pimp us. Help us rebuild."

That's a particularly urgent need, several council members said, because a handful of other states are courting evacuees with the prospect of jobs, housing and schools.

With many families still searching for loved ones, Willard-Lewis called on Microsoft billionaire Bill Gates and his company to set up a comprehensive survivor notification database. She also asked President Bush to formulate an interim relocation strategy for survivors, to bring them closer to home, and asked FEMA to extend its benefits.

Much of the remainder of the meeting was spent recounting the horrors of the storm. Morrell listed the thriving neighborhoods in her district that have been lost, including Pontchartrain Park, the city's first middle class African-American subdivision, as well as Indian Village, Sugar Hill and Gentilly Woods.

Willard-Lewis described a flyover of her district: "The lake blended into the Industrial Canal, and the canal blended into the Mississippi River. New Orleans East was a body of water. There was no land."

Later in the meeting, Willard-Lewis trod even more personal ground. She revealed that one of her brothers, Elliot Willard Jr., namesake and son of the former Orleans Parish School Board member, is among the missing.

Thomas bemoaned the slow response by the federal government immediately after the storm passed and criticized people who blame local and state authorities for not doing enough. Calling New Orleans "this little place," he said "it's crazy to say that we should have taken the lead. Our job is to prepare. We don't have the ability to manage a disaster of this size."

"I call this 'ground below zero,'" Thomas said. "We were so far south that they almost forgot about us."

But the council president also had some harsh words for local thugs who terrorized the city during the first chaotic days after Katrina. Noting the widely broadcast images of looters hauling electronics out of stores, he struck an exasperated pose and asked why anyone would want a TV that they can't plug in.

"Whatever happens to you, you deserve," he said, referring to the looters.

The council also offered the highest possible praise to police and firefighters who left their families to protect the city, without radios and in some cases without ammunition; Sewerage & Water Board workers who struggled to keep the utilities from failing completely; Entergy officials who moved in quickly to begin restoring power, and Zeno, who has managed to keep paying city workers.

Although they supported the Nagin administration's efforts to fully evacuate the city, council members expressed sympathetic respect for people who refuse to leave.

Although she disagrees with the sentiment, Clarkson said, "The spirit of these people who won't leave their homes is the spirit that will rebuild this city."

Kleinpeter Farms Dairy

The recent hurricane has changed all of our lives.

One thing that hasn't changed is our family's commitment to the communities of New Orleans and Baton Rouge.
During the hurricane, we never missed a delivery on the routes that were still accessible.

We welcome you, our new neighbors from New Orleans, and if you haven't already done so,
we invite you to try our milk.
Baton Rouge has known us since our family started
Kleinpeter Farms Dairy in 1913, and we'd like to get to know you also.

Look for the heart on our label.
We're proud of our locally produced, great-tasting milk from Guernsey, Jersey and Holstein cows and hope that you will enjoy it, too.

You can depend on us.
Welcome to our family.

Kleinpeter®

www.KleinpeterDairy.com

Times-Picayune expanded Web edition available on nola.com

nola.com

Facing his own storm, Bush reassures evacuees

Congress OKs another $51.8 billion in aid

By Bill Walsh
Washington bureau

WASHINGTON — Under fire for his response to Hurricane Katrina, President Bush took to the airwaves Thursday to assure the tens of thousands of Gulf Coast evacuees that his administration was moving quickly to help them.

In an unusual midday address, a somber Bush also declared Sept. 16 a national day of prayer and remembrance for the dead and those who have been displaced by the storm.

"The people who have been hurt by this storm need to know that the government is going to be with you for the long haul," Bush said in an address from the Old Executive Office Building next to the White House.

Polls show that the American public is less than enthused with the president's response to the Aug. 29 storm and the resulting flooding. When CBS polled 725 adults Tuesday and Wednesday, it found that 38 percent approved of Bush's handling of the storm's aftermath. Nearly half, 49 percent, said they had little or no confidence in the federal government's ability to respond to natural disasters.

As the president was speaking, Congress was moving toward passage of a $51.8 billion aid package targeting relief and recovery efforts. The House passed the measure 410-11. One of those voting against was Rep. Thomas Tancredo, R-Colo., who urged Republican leaders to keep the money away from politicians in Louisiana.

"The question is not whether Congress should provide for those in need, but whether state and local officials who have been derelict in their duty should be trusted with the money," Tancredo wrote in a letter to House Speaker Dennis Hastert, R-Ill., Majority Leader Tom DeLay, R-Texas, and House appropriators. "Their record during Katrina and the long history of public corruption in Louisiana convinces me they should not."

The Senate unanimously approved the bill Thursday.

The assistance is in addition to $10.5 billion OK'd by Congress last week for a disaster whose price tag is still unknown. The administration said it planned to return to Congress in a few weeks with yet another financial assistance request.

Just to make sure the money — the bulk of which is directed to the Federal Emergency Management Agency — isn't misspent, Congress added $15 million for audits.

Despite the bipartisan good will surrounding efforts to help hurricane victims, a sharp divide has opened over investigating the Bush administration's response to it. Democrats said they would boycott a Republican-led committee proposed by Hastert and Senate Republican Leader Bill Frist. Democrats called for an independent probe such as the one that investigated the government's response to the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks.

In his speech, Bush urged people displaced by the storm to sign up for $2,000-per-household in emergency assistance that FMEA unveiled Wednesday. People can register over the phone at 1-800-621-FEMA or on the Internet at www.fema.gov.

Bush also said he was making it easier for displaced people to get public assistance by granting "evacuee status" to those from parishes declared disaster areas, including the entire metropolitan New Orleans area. The special designation will allow people to apply for and collect benefits through a host of public assistance programs without the paperwork normally required.

POSITIONS AVAILABLE

TraceSecurity, Inc.,
recently seen in The New York Times, and on CNN, has openings for the following positions in Baton Rouge HQ:

Inside Sales
3-5 years inside business sales

Security Engineers
unix/linux & networking exp, travel required

Project Scheduler
2-5 years project exp. I.T. exp a +

Executive Assistant
3-5 years experience supporting multiple executives

All require college degree and technology proficient.

Send resumes to jobs@tracesecurity.com or fax: 225-612-2269

Post-9/11 incentives could work for N.O.

By Bruce Alpert
Washington bureau

WASHINGTON — Four years ago, Sen. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., remembers the predictions that businesses and residents wouldn't return to downtown Manhattan after the World Trade Center towers were toppled in the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks.

But they did, along with a lot of new businesses and people, thanks to a series of tax credits and other inducements. Appearing with Rep. William Jefferson, D-New Orleans, at a news conference Thursday, Schumer predicted the same could be true for New Orleans, with the right mix of government aid and incentives.

"Everyone forgets there was a real view that downtown could just be hollowed out and nobody would want to be there ever again," Schumer said. "And we decided that we had to move quickly ... to give people hope so they don't get stuck in their head, 'I got to go somewhere else.'"

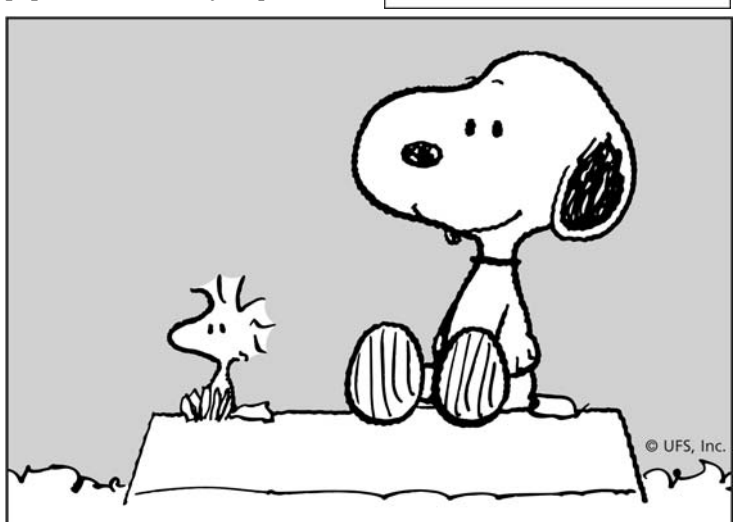
What worked, Schumer said, was $20 billion in federal aid, grants of as much as $12,000 to cover up to 30 percent of rental or mortgage costs over two years, as much as $1,500 for parents with children who made at least a one-year commitment to live in lower Manhattan, and tax-exempt financing that cost $1.2 billion but leveraged tens of billions of dollars in new construction.

The trick, Schumer said, was to do everything at once: the residential units, the shopping and businesses, and transportation facilities.

"People weren't going to move back unless they knew there were supermarkets and dry cleaners, but dry cleaners and supermarkets wouldn't be open unless they knew there were people," Schumer said.

Jefferson concedes that the obstacles facing New Orleans are greater than New York's after Sept. 11, 2001.

New York had part of its downtown evacuated, but all of New Orleans is under evacuation orders. New Orleans' airport, schools, many government offices and thousands of businesses aren't functioning, and that was never the case in New York.



But Jefferson said he thinks the incentives used to lure people and businesses back to lower Manhattan can do the same for those who until Hurricane Katrina called New Orleans home.

"At the end of the day, we want to see our people come back home, reunited with their culture, reunited with their families, reunited in a place they can identify as their home," Jefferson said.

Incentives, including job training and help with rent and mortgage payments, could bring people back to New Orleans, and tax incentives could convince businesses to return, as well, Jefferson said.

"If you know, 25 percent to 50 percent rental assistance worked in New York, you may need 50 percent to 75 percent or even 100 percent at certain times in New Orleans," Schumer added. He also said that incentive programs need to be put in place quickly.

Jefferson and Schumer said that Congress, while divided on party lines over how much blame to place on the Bush administration for the inadequate rescue efforts, generally agrees that New Orleans should be rebuilt. House Speaker Dennis Hastert, R-Ill., said last week that it isn't necessarily a good idea to rebuild New Orleans, but since then put out a modified statement that he only meant the city should be rebuilt so it isn't as vulnerable to hurricanes and flooding.

We'll help you put your house back in order.

Whether there's damage to your house or your car, MetLife Auto & Home's Catastrophe Response Team is ready to help our customers. To file a claim or for information, call:

1-800-854-6011

For life insurance and all other product questions please call 1-800-METLIFE

All MetLife and New England Financial associates and agents please call 1-800-232-7000 to report your status

MetLife Auto & Home™ is a brand of Metropolitan Property and Casualty Insurance Company and its Affiliates, Warwick, RI

have you met life today? MetLife®

Zurich claims reporting information

We're here to help

In the wake of the devastating damage of Hurricane Katrina, Zurich stands ready to serve the needs of our customers in New Orleans and the Gulf Coast area. We have mobilized teams of claims professionals and disaster recovery specialists in the region to help you through the recovery process.

To report property claims, Zurich customers can:

- Call our toll-free number at 1-800-987-3373, or call 847-240-8020
- Fax an initial report of loss to 1-877-962-2567
- E-mail an initial report of loss to usz_carecenter@zurichna.com
- Go to our Web site at www.zurichna.com

We, at Zurich, extend our heartfelt condolences for the many losses you have experienced. Our unwavering focus is to help restore your business.

ZURICH

www.zurichna.com

©2005 Zurich American Insurance Company. Coverages underwritten by member companies of Zurich North America, including Zurich American Insurance Company. Certain coverages not available in all states. Some coverages may be written on a nonadmitted basis through surplus lines brokers.

Looting suspects held at Greyhound terminal

STAFF PHOTO BY SCOTT THRELKELD

Billy Mahuron of the Kentucky Department of Corrections talks to a handcuffed Kenneth Corner at the Union Passenger Terminal in New Orleans. Corner was taken to the terminal Thursday after being arrested on charges of being drunk and disorderly. Of the more than 200 suspects who have passed through the temporary jail, an overwhelming majority, 178 as of Wednesday, were accused of looting.

After processing, they are moved to cells elsewhere

By Gwen Filosa
Staff writer

The first suspect locked up at Camp Greyhound, the temporary jail built in the New Orleans bus terminal to house people accused of looting and other crimes in the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina, unwittingly walked smack dab into the hands of the law, police say.

Louisiana prison officials love telling the story.

"He drove up in a stolen Enterprise rental car to buy a bus ticket," Louisiana State Penitentiary Warden Burl Cain said Thursday morning. "He got a ticket, all right."

Claude Mamone was arrested, fingerprinted, photographed and housed briefly in the bus terminal on Loyola Ave. that substitutes for flooded Orleans Parish Prison. On Saturday, he was shipped to the state prison at St. Gabriel, where he was awaiting trial Wednesday.

Mamone is one of 223 suspects who have passed through Union Passenger Terminal since the storm hit.

The overwhelming majority, 178 as of Wednesday, are accused of looting. Twenty were booked with resisting arrest; 26 with having stolen cars; 14 with theft; and nine with attempted murder. One was booked with not having a driver's license, and three people were accused of disturbing the peace, a misdemeanor.

The new lockup isn't far from the original parish prison, from which about 7,000 inmates were evacuated last week and dispersed across the state prison system.

Camp Greyhound has room for 700 suspects. In the past week, 155 came from the Jefferson Parish Sheriff's Office; 39 were nabbed by Kenner police. New Orleans police brought in 17, and the rest were hauled in by the state attorney general's office, the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives and the U.S. Marshals Service. Even the Army brought in one of its own, a deserter.

Take away the federal agents toting assault rifles and 12-gauge shotguns, and the interior of the terminal appeared frozen in time, a time before Katrina struck.

The only newspaper on sale in the coin machines was a USA Today from Aug. 26 to 28, with a giant photograph of Martha Stewart on the front page and a tiny picture of Katrina's first swipe at south Florida.

The suspects were caged outside. The group of about 50 awaiting transportation to prisons elsewhere were generally quiet Thursday. Some lay on the pavement of the station's parking lot; a few were barefoot. Several called out for help when visitors passed by.

Cain allowed reporters to talk to some detainees, but in the blunt language spoken by those who spend their work days dealing with the impoverished and disease-stricken inmate population, he cautioned against trying to communicate with others.

"They might spit on you," Cain cautioned. "They might have AIDS."

"I have rights," a long-haired and bearded wisp of a man called out from cell No. 8. "Please, sir."

Cain pronounced the young man mentally disturbed and said he believed he had been booked with looting. In his temporary cell, the long-haired man behaved strangely.

"He stuck his head in a bucket (of clean water) and then started drinking the filthy water," Cain said.

Another man who had come and gone was booked with looting a Walgreens pharmacy.

"He was in a stupor for eight hours until he came down," Cain said. "We were afraid he was going to overdose."

Cain said he brought a psychiatric nurse from Angola to treat other suspects.

A few of the detainees have been accused of violence: Lance Madison, 48, of New Orleans was booked with eight counts of attempted murder of a police officer after being nabbed by 7th District officers Sept. 4. Madison fired at an officer at the intersection of Chef Menteur Highway and Downman Road, and when reinforcements arrived, he shot at them, too, according to the police report of the incident. Madison finally fled and threw his handgun into the Industrial Canal before the cops caught up with him, police say.

Lance was transferred Sept. 4 to the Hunt Correctional Facility.

"Welcome to New Angola South," said a handwritten sign on the gate leading to the outdoor lockup at Camp Greyhound, a row of 16 cells made of chain-link fencing topped with razor wire.

The facility is the result of work by Louisiana Department of Corrections Secretary Richard Stalder and state Attorney General Charles Foti Jr., who for nearly 30 years was Orleans Parish criminal sheriff. Foti's successor, Marlin Gusman, isn't involved with the bus terminal facility, Cain said. Instead, Gusman is dealing with administrative issues, such as payroll and securing records at the prison.

The temporary jail was constructed by inmates from Angola and Dixon state prisons and was outfitted with everything a stranded law enforcer could want, including top-of-the-line recreational vehicles to live in and electrical power, courtesy of a yellow Amtrak locomotive. There are computers to check suspects' backgrounds and a mug shot station — complete with heights marked in black on the wall that serves as the backdrop.

Orleans Parish District Attorney Eddie Jordan's office has a designated work space, as does U.S. Attorney Jim Letten's. Two young state prosecutors worked at a table Thursday in the center of the station, casual clothes offsetting their courtroom faces as they screened cases.

On Thursday, one cell included three men from Syria who were said by police to have been carrying $14,000 in cash that no one with a badge believed they earned honestly.

Several of the men locked up Thursday said they did only what they had to do in the wake of the storm.

"My son wanted fruit punch," Melvin Jackson, 35, of Marrero told Cain through the chain-link fence. Jackson, who was arrested Sept. 4 in the 6600 block of the Westbank Expressway, was being held in lieu of $50,000 bond. The fruit punch was supplemented with booze stolen from Mike's Liquor Store, according to police.

In the eyes of its makers, the art deco Greyhound station is the sensible, practical and legally prudent place to house suspects, a place for police to process them swiftly and send them to a holding cell unless they can make their bail.

To the inmates, it's an added twist to the post-Katrina ordeal. Several of the new arrivals loudly insisted they were wrongly arrested Thursday.

Kenneth Corner of Uptown was picked up for public drunkenness. "If I don't leave my house, who is going to feed me?" said Corner, who was slouched in a plastic bus station seat with his wrists handcuffed behind him.

Billy Mahuron, a Kentucky prison guard working in New Orleans, replied, "It's for your own good." If you stay on in New Orleans, he said, "disease is going to get you."

Mahuron, 26, of Shelbyville, who works as a "safety specialist" at a women's prison in Pewee Valley, Ky., said the New Orleans trip was his first, though he had planned on attending Mardi Gras next year.

"I think it's a shame that citizens turned against the city like this," he said. "Where I'm from, this wouldn't have happened."

The fresh arrests are interviewed, photographed, fingerprinted and then tagged with wristbands: Pink for federal cases; red, yellow or blue for various felonies, green for misdemeanors, and blue for women, of which there have been 38, officials said Thursday.

"You hear stores about (police) letting people go," Cain said. "That's bull- - - -. We got a jail."

Cain, 63, a native of Vernon Parish who has run the state's maximum security prison at Angola for 10½ years, said he is proud of the operation.

"A looter to me is no different from a grave robber," he said.

get the most minutes ever
from Alltel – America's largest owned & operated wireless network

what's not to love?

A plan that's all 4 u
with nationwide calling*

1000 Anytime Minutes – $49.99/mo
Unlimited Mobile-to-Mobile Minutes
Unlimited Nights & Weekends
Limited time offer!

Additional charges apply. See below.

Get 2 Lines $75/mo
And start your nights at 7 p.m. for free

Audiovox CDM8910 Camera Phone

buy one camera phone ONLY $19.99

get one FREE
With 2-year service agreement on both lines. Limited time offer. While supplies last.

come and get your love™

alltel wireless

alltel.com 1-800-alltel9

Donate $5 to the Hurricane Katrina Wireless Relief Fund by texting "give" to 24357 (2HELP). All funds will be forwarded to the American Red Cross.

Alltel Retail Stores

Algiers 3869 General DeGaulle (504) 368-4300
Chalmette 3220 Paris Rd. (504) 277-7395
Covington 808 Hwy. 190, Ste. B (985) 893-7313
Harvey 1818 Manhattan Blvd., Bldg. B (504) 367-0897
Houma 1043 W. Tunnel Blvd. (985) 851-2355
Southland Mall 5953 W. Park Ave. (985) 804-2355
Kenner 1000 W. Esplanade Ave., Ste. 106 (504) 468-8334
Larose 115 W. 10th St. (985) 798-2323
Metairie 2701 N. Causeway Blvd. (504) 835-1105
New Orleans 211 Carondelet (504) 524-4194
Thibodaux 906 Canal Blvd. (985) 448-2600
Slidell 1302 Corporate Sq., Ste. 2016 (985) 847-0891

Shop at a Participating WAL★MART

Business Sales 1-877-BIZ-CNTR (249-2687)

Authorized Agents Equipment & promotional offers at these locations may vary.

Bobby April Wireless Meltairie (504) 835-9600
Nationwide Communications Covington, Mandeville and Slidell (985) 626-1272
Nationwide Communications Covington, Mandeville and Slidell (985) 626-1272
Superior Communications Laplace (985) 652-6659
TalkAbout Wireless Esplanade Mall (504) 712-1972
Oakwood Mall (504) 366-6272
Telecom Destrehan (985) 764-2021
The Wireless Center New Orleans 9850 Lakeforest Blvd., Ste. A

Official Wireless Provider of the New Orleans Saints

*Coverage may not be available in all areas. See Alltel for details.
Federal, state and local taxes apply. In addition, Alltel charges a Regulatory Cost Recovery Fee (currently 56¢), a Telecom Connectivity Fee (currently 59¢), federal & state Universal Service Fund fees (both vary by customer usage), and a 911 fee of up to $1.94 (where 911 service is available). These additional fees may not be taxes or government-required charges and are subject to change. Largest Network Claim: Based upon analysis by an independent research company in July 2005, which compared marketed coverage patterns at the time of their creation of each wireless carrier without allowance for variations due to electrical interference, customer equipment, topography and each carrier's translation & defined preferences of their own internal engineering data. Coverage: Promotional minutes apply within the National Freedom calling area. See coverage map at stores or alltel.com for details. Usage outside of your calling plan is subject to additional roaming, minute & long-distance charges. Plan Details: Mobile-to-Mobile Minutes apply to calls between Alltel wireless customers that begin & end in your plan's calling area. Call forwarding, 411 & voice mail calls excluded. Nights are Mon-Thurs 9:00pm-5:59am. Weekends are Fri 9:00pm-Mon 5:59am. 2 Lines for $75: 1000 anytime minutes shared between two lines. Extended night minutes begin at 7 p.m. and end at 5:59 a.m. Phone Promotions: Phones available at sale prices to new customers and eligible existing customers. Contact Alltel to determine if you are eligible. Hurricane Katrina Wireless Relief Fund: Your donation will appear on your monthly bill. Each text message sent may incur a charge as provided in your rate plan. Additional Information: Limited-time offer at participating locations. While supplies last. Credit approval & approved handset required. $20 non-refundable activation fee applies per line. $200 early termination fee may apply per line. Offers are subject to the Alltel Terms & Conditions for Communications Services available at any Alltel store or alltel.com. PAC-MAN® ©1980, 2005 Namco Ltd., All rights reserved. All other product & service marks referenced are the names, trade names, trademarks & logos of their respective owners.

Alltel has been awarded: Wireless Consumer Information Code Quality

Rosezana Gould and Richard London, a homeless couple, head for an evacuation bus outside the Ernest N. Morial Convention Center on Thursday. London said he and Gould are used to living on the streets of New Orleans and wanted to stay, but in the end they reluctantly left.

STAFF PHOTO BY SCOTT THRELKELD

STAFF PHOTO BY BRETT DUKE

New Orleans police officers gather on a small bridge in Mid-City after discovering a body in Bayou St. John on Thursday.

STAFF PHOTO BY MICHAEL DeMOCKER

Nicole Greenwood of Vancouver performs what she called a 'nerve assist' on Miami K-9 officer Brian Thompson in a tent run by Scientologists outside Harrah's on Thursday. The group also offered basic supplies and tetanus shots for relief workers.

RESCUE AND RECOVERY

While still working tirelessly to rescue and evacuate storm survivors, police and military troops are tackling the grim task of recovering the bodies of those who succumbed to Katrina's initial onslaught and those who perished in its aftermath.

STAFF PHOTO BY SCOTT THRELKELD

A medical helicopter lowers a soldier and two other people to a rooftop near the Union Passenger Terminal on Thursday.

Death toll in Jeff could reach 200

Parish feverishly works to recover dead, clean up

By Michelle Krupa
West Bank bureau

For the first time since Hurricane Katrina, Jefferson Parish authorities estimated Thursday that at least 200 residents perished in the storm, many of their bodies likely trapped in apartment buildings and in the flood-ravaged Lincolnshire and Westminster neighborhoods from which residents didn't have means to evacuate.

The grim task of recovering the dead in those Marrero subdivisions and swamped portions of Old Metairie and around Airline Highway could begin soon, while workers elsewhere continued to restore electricity, water and sewerage services so Jefferson can become a staging area for the recovery of Orleans and St. Bernard parishes, Emergency Management Director Walter Maestri said Thursday.

The process, however, has been hampered by communication problems across the region. Cell phone service is spotty, Parish President Aaron Broussard said, and there are too few radios and walkie-talkies to direct information quickly to thousands of police officers and armed military personnel manning the parish streets, and satellite phones don't work.

"We are having a tough time getting in touch with New Orleans," Maestri said. "There are very few officials still there."

Red Cross opened its regional warehouse at a Kmart store at Lapalco and Ames boulevards in Marrero, and the Federal Emergency Management Agency set up a base at nearby Belle Terre Playground, Maestri and agency officials said. From those sites, rescue workers with food and medical supplies were dispatched to Behrman Stadium in Algiers and to other New Orleans locations.

A FEMA spokeswoman said her agency on Thursday was considering moving its headquarters from Baton Rouge to Belle Terre or to another West Jefferson location.

As residents re-entered the parish Thursday morning, the last of four days they would be allowed to return to visit homes, electricity sparked on major roads. Tastee Donuts, Walgreens, Domino's Pizza and a few gasoline stations opened on the West Bank Expressway, west of the Harvey Canal. Parish leaders said businesses would be allowed to continue operating, despite a dusk-to-dawn curfew that went into effect at 6 p.m. Thursday, when the parish shut down to any more outside entrants until further notice.

But even with citizens mostly locked out, Parish Councilman Chris Roberts said he spoke Thursday with real estate agents who were swamped with requests for homes and offices to rent or buy in West Jefferson, the area of greater New Orleans expected to bounce back fastest from the hurricane.

"He can't even handle the number of phone calls coming from people asking for commercial property," Roberts said of one agent.

Though Broussard has set a goal of Sept. 30 to have critical infrastructure restored in Jefferson Parish, Maestri said allowing residents to return on that date could compromise efforts to relieve areas hardest-hit by Katrina.

"We know people want to come home, but that can interfere with the recovery process" in Orleans and St. Bernard, he said.

Jefferson residents who chose to stay in their homes after Thursday's re-entry deadline would not be forced to leave, officials said, though they warned that lack of critical services such as power, water and sewerage would make life uncomfortable. A boil-water order remained in effect.

For those who stayed, five public elementary schools opened Thursday as medical clinics and food distribution sites under an emergency parish program dubbed Operation Lifeline Depot.

At Ames Elementary School on Marrero's Pine Street, a steady stream of cars stopped in Thursday for ice, water, military-style meals and sometimes a stop into the ambulance for advice about a swollen ankle or itchy rash. Neighbor Milton Veazie, a retired cab driver, volunteered to dispatch provisions.

With sweat beading on his head even in the patch of shade he managed to find, Veazie said the amount of food and quality of medical service available after the storm was unprecedented.

"We didn't have anything like this during Betsy," he said. "People are being treated well this time."

The other locations are :

- St. Ville Elementary Library, 1121 Pailet Ave., Marrero
- Marrero-Estelle Fire Station, 3190 Destrehan Ave, Harvey
- Lincoln Elementary, 1429 Ames Blvd., Marrero
- Herb Wallace Fire Station, 4040 U.S. 90 West, Avondale

Across the parish, residents clearing their property were urged to get immunized against tetanus and Hepatitis A and B. Free shots were available at East Jefferson General Hospital in Metairie, Ochsner Foundation Clinic in Jefferson and West Jefferson Medical Center in Marrero.

STAFF PHOTOS BY SUSAN POAG

Bob Nolan of Westwego, left, fills out a form to receive a free tetanus shot Thursday afternoon in front of West Jefferson Medical Center in Marrero. Free shots for tetanus and hepatitis A and B were offered at West Jefferson, which is fully operational, as well as at East Jefferson General Hospital and the Ochsner Clinic Foundation through Wednesday.

Around noon, dozens lined up at a vaccination tent outside West Jefferson Medical Center. For some, it was just one of many stops they intended to make at a tent hospital set up in the facility's parking lot and lawn to augment the full services available inside. The facility, run in part by a pair of federal agencies that provide medical relief in disasters, had private exam rooms, an air-conditioned administration office and a pharmacy.

Stationed outside was Frank Torres, a Federal Protection Service police officer from the Bronx. He wore a black bulletproof vest, dark sunglasses and a P90 submachine gun. West Jefferson workers had nicknamed him "The Wall."

Torres said he was assigned to a 30-day stint to protect the hospital from looters. By Thursday morning, he had already heard automatic weapon fire in neighborhoods west of the medical center. But Torres said no one had bothered the clinic operation.

"I guess just looking at it is intimidating enough," he said, nodding toward his weapon.

Across town, about 50 cars lined up in Westwego to get ice, water and food at the Alario Center, its parking lot jammed with camouflage-painted military trucks and a temporary fence topped with barbed wire. Sitting at the side of the road inside the open trunk of their car, Sheila Attaway, Amanda Harris and 4-year-old Sky Benitez clocked the fourth hour of their wait for a friend to return with gasoline to refill the empty tank.

Amanda Harris, left, Sheila Attaway and her niece, Sky Benitez, 4, hang out in the trunk of their car Thursday, four hours after it ran out of gas while waiting in line for water, ice and food at the Alario Center in Westwego.

The group survived Katrina in the Westwood neighborhood of Marrero, but on the 10th day after the storm's landfall, even as some residents were starting to rebuild their homes, Attaway was thinking about pulling up stakes forever. She said she had not heard from her boss at Boomtown Casino and feared she might lose her job.

Without air conditioning, she was sleeping in stifling heat, and her son had invited her to move closer to him in North Dakota.

"Our landlord is ready to kick us out because we haven't paid the rent," Attaway said. "We're kind of stuck. We're aggravated, too. We're thinking of moving up North."

Cash urgently sought to sustain schools

Tearful Jeff chief fears mass exodus

By Bruce Alpert
Washington bureau

WASHINGTON - In an emotional appeal for immediate federal help, the superintendent of Jefferson Parish public schools said Thursday she feared that the longer it takes to reopen schools, the fewer people will come back from their far-flung shelters and temporary housing.

Superintendent Diane Roussel broke into tears as she spoke before the Senate Committee on Health, Education, Labor and Pensions. She said her district is trying to rebuild from Hurricane Katrina with its cash reserves nearly gone and its residents largely out of work and unable to pay the sales and property taxes that finance schools. And the community "more than ever" needs the stability schools provide.

"We must rebuild quickly. The longer it takes to rebuild, people will stay away, our teachers will not come back, our workers will not come back and an important part of the economy of our state and country will be gone, not to mention the culture and human resources," Roussel said before breaking into tears.

A few minutes later, Roussel drew a laugh when she described herself as the type of person who rarely cries, someone who "grew up with three brothers, was once a high school principal" and generally can take care of herself. It was her misfortune, she told Committee Chairman Sen. Mike Enzi, R-Wyo., and the panel's ranking Democrat, Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., that her tears were captured on national television.

School districts devastated by Hurricane Katrina, she said, are faced with almost unprecedented challenges at a time when their finances are in dire straits.

The normal reimbursement process of "spend, document and then be reimbursed," Roussel said, is no longer viable because of a lack of financial resources and the loss of financial records. She pleaded with the committee for allocations and more flexible financing formulas that would enable her district to repair its schools quickly and replace the broken computers and waterlogged books.

Roussel said one-third of the parish's 84 schools escaped major damage and probably could be operational soon after power and water are restored to the parish. About half the schools are damaged but probably could be partially used for instruction, and the remainder suffered so much damage that they probably won't be available until 2006 or 2007, assuming they can ever be repaired, she said.

It's her hope, Roussel said, that the schools could be a hub, which along with temporary housing, can allow families to return to Jefferson Parish so that they can fill the rebuilding jobs so important to the metro area's recovery.

Since her district's schools are in better shape than those in Orleans, St. Bernard and Plaquemines parishes, she said, it's likely that the district will have to absorb students from those school districts.

That task is made more difficult, she said, by the state's preliminary decision to reallocate about one-third of the formula assistance provided to districts not accepting students to help districts taking in the estimated 135,000 displaced public school students in the state.

Roussel likened that policy to "robbing one person to pay another." One solution, she said, would be for the federal government to let her use earmarked federal funds, such as Title I aid designed to aid economically disadvantaged students, and special education money for disabled students "to get the district back up and running."

Michael Casserly, head of the Great City Schools Association, said that in New Orleans only eight of the district's 128 schools escaped serious damage, and the district will need significant federal help to rebuild. He recommended that Congress allocate "dedicated funding" to help districts with damaged schools reopen and another account for districts taking in dislocated students.

Kennedy said if he has anything to say about it, the resources provided to Jefferson, Orleans and other communities will be substantial.

He said the hurricane and the damage it caused is of "biblical proportions" but praised the willingness of districts in Baton Rouge, Houston and other areas to pick up the slack.

"It's our turn in Congress to reach out and provide the resources needed for schools to take these students in, while also helping to rebuild educational institutions devastated by Katrina," Kennedy said.

Leonard Merrell, superintendent of Katy Independent Schools, just outside Houston, said his district has taken in 900 students displaced by the hurricane, and he anticipates many more. He asked the senators to help the district meet the demand.

But he assured them that the district's new students would get a quality education, in some cases taught by out-of-work teachers from Louisiana. The students, he added, are being warmly welcomed by their fellow classmates because of all they've been through.

Joseph Savoie, the Louisiana commissioner of higher education, said colleges in southern Louisiana have been seriously disrupted, and the state will need $1 billion in federal aid to finance repairs and reconstruction and to help pay tuition for displaced college students.

Dillard University scarred by Katrina

By Jarvis DeBerry
Staff writer

Though the rash of fires in New Orleans generally has abated, Dillard University got bad news Thursday as New Orleans Fire Superintendent Charles G. Parent announced that three "multi-story" buildings on the campus have burned.

Dillard has several dormitories that have multiple floors, but Parent didn't know which buildings burned, and he wouldn't speculate. Nor would he guess what started the fire. But he said he believed that the damage, inflicted Wednesday, was severe.

"From what I understand they were destroyed," he said. "It doesn't look like they are salvageable."

Speaking at a Thursday morning news conference at City Hall, Parent said the New Orleans Fire Department responded to 11 fires Wednesday. Six were inaccessible to tanker trucks, he said, and had to be contained by helicopters dropping water from above.

Parent declined to say whether he thought the fires were set by arsonists. "I'm not going to assume," he said. "You can't do an investigation by air."

When asked if a fire could conceivably start with nobody around, Parent said, "Anything's conceivable." Reactive chemicals could have gotten sloshed around together in a chemistry lab, he said, before cutting off the guessing game.

Even though the area is too watery to be reached, he expects that his investigators will find clues when they are able to make it to the Gentilly Boulevard campus.

He said the fires at Dillard hadn't been completely extinguished but that they had been contained.

The majority of Parent's comments Thursday revealed real progress in the city. The number of fires had fallen off precipitously, and water was once again flowing through the city's mains. Although the water's not safe to drink, it doesn't have to be clean to put out fires. The average water pressure in the city Thursday morning was 65 pounds per square inch, he said. On a good day, the average pressure in the Central Business District is 95 psi and 75 psi in the city's outlying areas, he said. Nevertheless, the fact that they had even a below-average water pressure boosted the morale of his firefighters, Parent said.

"Before, it was simply alien to us to fight an urban fire without any water," he said.

Third District Chief Gary Haydel said later Thursday that the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina had forced the department to become creative. Haydel has been fighting fires for 28 years, and "I've never been able to call on a water drop before," he said, referring to the helicopters that dangle huge buckets from long wires, scoop water out of the river or the lake and drop it onto burning buildings.

He said firefighters battled some blazes with water sucked up from floodwaters around them.

And reinforcements have been arriving from around the nation, he said. Thursday brought a blissfully slow morning at the Central Fire Station on Decatur Street, but visiting firefighters, many of them veterans of the terrorist attacks in New York on Sept. 11, 2001, were ready to go if needed.

New Yorker Peter Acton was one. He had come down from Engine 79 in the Bronx because he remembered what happened four years ago.

"We all wanted to do something to repay, and more importantly thank, Louisiana for all they did during 9/11," he said. Acton flew to New Orleans Monday and expected to stay two or three more weeks, he said.

He said there was a list of a thousand names of people who wanted to come to New Orleans to help.

Haydel said his department would have a ceremony Sunday – the fourth anniversary of the Sept. 11 attacks – to remember those firefighters who died when the World Trade Center twin towers collapsed.

He said he expects that New Orleans' current catastrophe will help the New York firefighters "deal with what they had to deal with." But the brotherhood between firefighters is such that he said he could have counted on help from New York even if the city had never been attacked.

To BP Employees Impacted by Hurricane Katrina

Thankfully, we have been in contact with all of you. Please stay in touch with us so that we may provide you with details about BP's Humanitarian Assistance Program.

A variety of help is available to you including the following:

- Supplies such as food, water and generators
- Interest-free loans for expenses
- Temporary lodging
- Daily per diem while in temporary living quarters
- Car rental or rental reimbursement
- Cash for basic family needs
- Expenses for child, elder or pet care

BP Employees, please call BP's toll-free 24-hour assistance hotline

1-866-850-7768

to access this network of available resources.

bp

STAFF PHOTOS BY AMANDA MCCOY

'Each one is a victory,' said Jennifer Riisness, salvaging family photos by washing them off in a container of water on the front porch of her Girod Street home in Mandeville. Riisness said she was not sure if she wants to continue to live so close to the lake, but also said she would miss the idea of leaving her old house.

Mandeville lakefront aims to retain charm

Katrina destroyed distinguished homes

The front steps of a home in the 1600 block of Lakeshore Drive in Mandeville lead to nowhere on Thursday, the result of Hurricane Katrina's tidal surge and winds. The area is home to many historic buildings, some more than 100 years old.

By Meghan Gordon
St. Tammany bureau

Amid the wreckage scattered up and down Mandeville's lakefront, small flourishes of the once-charming row of historic homes shine through the debris.

A wrought-iron fence topped with fleur-de-lis medallions frames a yard where very little of the destroyed house remains. Intricate woodwork lines the overhang of a porch, still standing despite its missing columns. Carved wooden finials adorn a front staircase that leads nowhere.

Hurricane Katrina's tidal surge and winds battered Lakeshore Drive, a stretch of Mandeville's most identifiable homes and businesses, some of which date back more than a century. One of the few familiar sights on the lakefront Thursday was a single brown pelican that perched on a pier in Lake Pontchartrain while homeowners picked through the shattered buildings nearby.

"My family's been here for 148 years and we never, ever, ever had something like this happen," said Londi Moore, 47, whose first floor was wiped out.

Though her house, at the east end of the lakefront, was raised, Moore lost the contents of the first-floor bedroom, bathroom and meditation area. Most precious to her were a wedding ring, a watch and other items left behind by her father, who died when she was 18.

Before the storm, Ron Stoessell, Moore's husband, could hardly drive through town without passing a landmark built by his grandfather, Ernest Prieto. Many of them lay shattered Thursday.

Two doors down, a house owned by Stoessell's sister stood in much worse shape than his. It was one of four houses Ernest Prieto built for his children. All Moore could pull out were 14 pieces of heirloom silverware.

Despite the extensive damage, owners of the lakefront homes could see their property values skyrocket, Moore predicted. She said a family whose New Orleans home and two Navarre Beach homes were destroyed offered her $48,000 cash to rent the undamaged second floor of her house for six months. She turned it down, but surmised that many families strapped for cash to repair will sell to newcomers attracted to the serene water views outside their front doors.

"Now what you're going to have is no multigenerational families on the lakefront," Moore said.

Greg Reardon, 47, said he had no doubt he would refurbish the home his parents bought in 1964.

Known as "Time Out," the house painted "Covington blue" was built by candy maker Joe Elmer within the past century, Reardon said. Though most of the original house withstood the storm, its porch columns and master bedroom addition were ripped off. Only a mirror hung on the wall that now faced outward.

"We think a tornado came through," Reardon said, pointing out that there was very little water damage in his house and no flooding in his neighbor's house, whose kitchen opened out to the yard with all of its contents sprayed everywhere.

A tiki head carved from an old stump kept watch on Reardon's front porch and bore the sign: "This building is not safe and its use or occupancy has been prohibited by the building inspector." Next to the smiling statue rested a once-soggy stuffed dog and a water bowl – a scene Reardon jokingly set up after at least three people asked him why he had left what they thought was a dead dog lying on his porch.

Less comical to Reardon on Thursday were the droves of sightseers who paused one after another to gaze at his and neighbors' houses. Reardon rolled down his window as he drove by one of them and tried to make clear why the drive-bys frustrated him.

"I said, 'Oh, you're stopping to help?'" he said. "And the woman's face just went blank. I was like, 'I got you.' "

A few houses down, Carolyn Smith, 55, checked on the pile that last week was her brother's home. A row of azaleas stood alone, where they once had framed the foundation. Behind them was a heap of debris, most of it unrecognizable except for a toppled rocking chair, a printer, a lamp and a filing cabinet.

Smith rushed to evacuate from her own home in Mandeville's Old Golden Shores when her 80-year-old mother started showing signs of congestive heart failure. She made it to a hospital in time, but now most of her family's memories lay in ruins on Lakeshore Drive.

"That's the history of our family, so that's all gone," Smith said. "We just didn't have enough time."

Mandeville Mayor Eddie Price spoke Thursday in more optimistic tones.

He said buildings that were more than 50 percent damaged will be required to be raised, but at least one landmark might escape that fate: Donz bar, a Civil War-era building at Girod and Lakeshore Drive. The tidal surge gutted it, taking out the bar and all the eclectic wind chimes hanging above it.

Price said new structures will have to be built within existing codes, so the lakefront strip has no chance of losing its charm.

"We're never going to look like a Navarre Beach," he said. "This is always a bedroom community. You're never going to see these high-rise condos. The flavor of Old Mandeville is not going to change."

• • • • • •

Meghan Gordon can be reached at meghangordon@hotmail.com.

THE NEW TOURO BEGINS HERE

A MESSAGE TO OUR COMMUNITY

Let us begin with a fervent wish that everyone within our Touro family is safe and well.
This has been an extraordinary moment in the history of the Touro Infirmary and the greater New Orleans region.

Your response was just as extraordinary.

Now we need to assure everyone's safety and security.
So if you haven't already registered,
please let us know where you are and if you need our help.
A special website has been created for patients and their families, employees, as well as our medical staff, displaced by hurricane Katrina.

www.tourohurricaneinfo.com

This website is the first step in bringing us together
to create a new and even better Touro Infirmary...for the next 150 years.

Let's let the healing–and the rebuilding– begin.

Leslie D. Hirsch FACHE
President and Chief Executive Officer

TOURO
INFIRMARY

LEADING HEALTHCARE IN NEW ORLEANS FOR OVER 150 YEARS

TOURO FOUNDATION • WOLDENBERG VILLAGE
CRESCENT CITY PHYSICIANS • METROLAB

IMPORTANT NOTICE TO
ST. PAUL TRAVELERS CUSTOMERS

WE'RE HERE TO HELP.

If you have suffered a loss, please call us as soon as your family and property are safe from further harm.

Our claim services representatives are standing by 24 hours a day, 7 days a week to take your claim.

For Travelers Home & Auto claims, please call
800.CLAIM33
(800.252.4633)

For Travelers Flood claims, please call
800.356.6663

For St. Paul Travelers and Travelers Business claims, please call 800.238.6225

For St. Paul Business claims, please call
800.STPAUL1
(800.787.2851)

St. Paul Travelers employees affected or displaced by the hurricane, please call the Employee Service Unit at 800.441.4378

TRAVELERS
travelers.com
The Travelers Indemnity Company
and its property casualty affiliates
One Tower Square, Hartford, CT 06183

ST PAUL TRAVELERS
stpaultravelers.com
St. Paul Fire and Marine Insurance Company
and its property casualty affiliates
385 Washington St., Saint Paul, MN 55102

The Times-Picayune

SPORTS

Tagliabue holds fate of Saints in New Orleans

By Peter Finney
Sports Columnist

I didn't know a vulture had four legs.

"This is a great opportunity for the city, and we need to seize the moment, jump into it with all four legs," said Red McCombs.

That's Red (The Vulture) McCombs, former owner of the Minnesota Vikings, speaking from his hometown, which happens to be San Antonio.

"Every effort needs to be made to tie up the Saints for this season, including having people stand in front of the Alamodome singing, 'When the Saints Come Marching In.' "

What class.

In a stricken, evacuated, underwater New Orleans, they've only begun to count the dead, and here you have a former NFL owner dancing on the coffin, telling the San Antonio Express-News he believes a permanent move of Tom Benson's franchise would be supported by league owners.

Red The Vulture. What a sleazeball.

There's a time for everything. This is not the time to talk about moving a franchise – permanently - from a city that has served as the host of nine Super Bowls.

This is a time to open your arms to those who have lost homes, lost loved ones, lost everything, which is exactly what the city of San Antonio has done.

It has been open arms to Tom Benson's football team, in the way of practice facilities, also to an estimated 12,000 of the displaced, in the way of shelters, rooms for the elderly, tons and tons of food and runaway charity.

In San Antonio, you have someone like Famous Washington, a pharmacist who grew up in New Orleans, sheltering 16 members of his extended family, from 9 months old to 77 years old.

In San Antonio, you also have Red (The Vulture) McCombs.

Millionaire McCombs, a longtime friend of Benson, bought the Vikings a few years ago and unloaded them after failing to get a new stadium.

Now he's saying, if Benson wants to make a permanent move to Alamo City, he'll get the green light from the owners because, as McCombs puts it, "Tom sits on the management council and has a lot of clout."

What do I think?

In the post-Katrina world, I have little doubt Benson would like to relocate to San Antonio.

Forever.

But what about Paul Tagliabue, commissioner of the NFL?

That's the billion-dollar question.

Because a vote of the owners would stop a move, because the commissioner owns the ultimate clout, Tagliabue sits in an emperor's chair.

A city that has been the crown jewel among Super Bowl hosts has suffered the greatest catastrophe in the history of this country, assuming you place what happened on 8/29 above 9/11.

All of which leaves the commissioner facing several questions:

How crucial, how fair to the future of the NFL, is keeping the Saints in Louisiana over the short term, in New Orleans over the long haul?

If it turns out Katrina KO'd the Superdome as the Saints' home, where can the team play on an interim basis while a new home is being built?

What part – financially – would the league play in a "new" Superdome?

Given the circumstances, what part might the federal government be willing to play in such a revival?

Looking down the road, waiting for a renovated Dome, or a new one, in New New Orleans, all sorts of options would face the gypsy Saints of, let's say, 2006 and 2007.

Perhaps playing all home games in Tiger Stadium?

Perhaps scattering them among Baton Rouge, Shreveport, Mobile, Jackson, Miss.?

And San Antonio?

Keep in mind, while the (North) Carolina Panthers, who the Saints play Sunday, were waiting to move into their new home in Charlotte, their interim home was across the state line, in Clemson, S.C.

Who knows what the future holds.

In a long-term manner of speaking, Katrina has made it a moment of truth.

For Tom Benson.

For Paul Tagliabue.

For the moment, my message to Red (The Vulture) McCombs is simple: Stop doing the boogie on a fleur de lis grave.

It's unbecoming.

Let's see how it all plays out.

New Orleans is down.

But not out.

How do I know?

Well, Paul Prudhomme is planning to show up Friday, leading a caravan of trucks to his offices in Elmwood.

"We've got generators, food and trailers, and we'll be in a parking lot cooking for anyone who needs it," he said. "We're going home, baby."

Saints, two cities remain on hold concerning home games

NFL's decision on playing site may come in a week

By Mike Triplett
Staff writer

SAN ANTONIO – Saints players have expressed a desire to play all the team's home games in San Antonio this season.

However, like the rest of the Saints organization and the cities of San Antonio and Baton Rouge, the players remain in a wait-and-see mode.

Although Saints players, coaches and management can give their input, the decision on where the team will play its home games is ultimately up to NFL commissioner Paul Tagliabue.

The league has expressed its desire to play games in Baton Rouge. But, with so many logistics still to be worked out in the city, which is consumed with relief efforts, a decision on the Saints' games may have to wait into next week, if not longer.

NFL spokesman Greg Aiello said the league hopes to make a decision as soon as possible, but he had no updates on the situation by late Thursday.

"I have no idea," Saints coach Jim Haslett said after being asked when he expects to hear a decision. "I know they expressed their concerns to (NFL Players Association executive director) Gene Upshaw, and we expressed our concerns to Commissioner Tagliabue. I don't think you have to be a brain surgeon to figure out that you'd like to play the games where you're practicing."

Asked if he is happy with how the league is handling the issue, he said, "I don't know yet."

Upshaw met with Saints players during their team meetings in San Antonio on Wednesday, and players said they were unified in their stance.

Receiver Donte' Stallworth said the players would like to have some kind of home-field advantage, as well as a place to call home every other weekend. He said playing in Baton Rouge is a nice idea, but he said there are plenty of displaced Saints fans scattered throughout Texas, which is another good reason to play in the Alamo City.

Saints and San Antonio officials also said they have not heard anything new from the league. But just in case, the Alamodome cleared the Oct. 2 date, when the Saints are scheduled to play host to the Buffalo Bills, by moving the city's Builder's Showcase to a later date.

The Alamodome director Mike Abington said not to read anything into that move, however, because he has not heard anything from the NFL or the Saints. He said he was just doing his "due diligence" so the Alamodome is ready and able if the Saints give the word.

"We know the Saints' schedule, and we know there's a possibility – some may say a probability – that the Saints will play games in the Alamodome," Abington said. "We're preparing our schedule just in case.

"If we don't, and they should call and we have not cleared the calendar, then we wouldn't be able to play the games here."

Abington said the last time he spoke with Saints officials was when team owner Tom Benson toured the facility last Thursday or Friday to "get his mind's eye refreshed." The Saints played a preseason game in the Alamodome against Minnesota in 2001.

The city of San Antonio has made every effort to accommodate the Saints, but Mayor Phil Hardberger has not vocally pursued the team while concentrating on the city's relief efforts.

Former mayor Henry Cisneros contacted the NFL on Wednesday to try to assure the league that the Saints would draw significant crowds in San Antonio. Reports have indicated that the NFL was concerned about low attendance in San Antonio, but Aiello said earlier this week that was not the case.

Some have speculated the league might not want the Saints to develop a fan base in San Antonio because of Benson's reported interested in moving his team here permanently. But no one has acknowledged that.

1995 KAT D 4 C SERIES 3 BULLDOZER
w/6 way blade, limb risers, rear cab screen, completely serviced and ready to go!
$38,500

2001 DODGE 3500 DIESEL DUALLY,
regular cab loaded with gooseneck hitch 72,000 miles.
$18,200

2003 CHEVROLET TRAIL BLAZER LT,
loaded w/leather, 59,000 miles.
$17,000

601-420-2764 OR 601-277-3644

LSU/Tennessee: Stay tuned

Once TV sets time, game won't change

By Jim Kleinpeter
Staff writer

BATON ROUGE – The LSU kickoff time for its scheduled game with Tennessee Sept. 24 in Tiger Stadium won't be changed once it is set by television, SEC commissioner Mike Slive indicated Thursday.

Slive, who visited the LSU campus with Georgia Chancellor Michael Adams to study the relief effort put forth by LSU for the victims of Hurrricane Katrina, acknowledged that Tennessee had asked for an early kickoff to allow fans time to find lodging after the game. The influx of storm refugees into Baton Rouge last week has made hotel accommodations scarce. The hotels have said they would not displace refugees even for people with prior reservations.

Tennessee sold its full visitors allotment of 8,000 tickets.

"The home team can play the game when it wants to play the game," Slive said. "I understand everyone's concerns. LSU needs to get back to a sense of normalcy."

Kickoff time has not been officially scheduled but it is highly-probable that ESPN, which has first choice of SEC games for that date, will choose it for the 6:45 p.m. time slot. CBS has the second choice for its 2:30 p.m. slot.

Miles hasn't named starter

By William Kalec
Staff writer

Even with an extra week to ponder the decision, LSU coach Les Miles apparently has no plans to announce which quarterback will start Saturday's game against Arizona State.

Miles was not scheduled to meet with the media on Thursday, and LSU sports information director Michael Bonnette said there would be no statement issued on the choice.

Originally, Miles pegged Thursday Sept. 1 as his announcement date, but that got pushed back a week because of the postponement of the North Texas opener. At his Monday press conference, Miles said more than once that he'd let his decision be known this Thursday.

OUR HEART GOES OUT TO THOSE AFFECTED BY HURRICANE KATRINA.

Policyholders of Encompass Insurance who have been affected by the recent hurricane, please call 1-800-588-7400 to report your loss, 24 hours a day, 7 days a week.

The people of Encompass would like to let you know that our thoughts are with you.

The Encompass Catastrophe Team is available for claims handling, information or other assistance at 1-800-340-3016. For more information, you can also call or visit your independent agent.

Rest assured, Encompass stands ready to help you during this difficult time.

ENCOMPASS® INSURANCE

STATE FARM
is here to help.

In the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina, State Farm® understands the devastating toll of this catastrophe.

And we're here to help.

Whether you're at home or have been displaced and can't reach your State Farm agent, if you're a State Farm customer who needs to file a claim, you can reach us.

- Contact any State Farm Agent near your current location.
- Call 1-800-SF-CLAIM (1-800-732-5246) to reach our catastrophe operators; or
- Visit statefarm.com® to initiate your claim online.

LIKE A GOOD NEIGHBOR STATE FARM IS THERE.®

Providing Insurance and Financial Services

State Farm Insurance Companies • Home Offices: Bloomington, IL

River Parishes schools ready to play

Lutcher, St. James to kick off weekend of football games

By Lori Lyons
River Parishes bureau

For students at Lutcher and St. James, life is as back to normal as it can be, with school resuming two days ago.

But, for the schools' football players, things just won't be the same until Friday night.

Both schools will start their 2005 football seasons at 7 p.m., a week later than scheduled because of Hurricane Katrina.

St. James will play host to Terrebonne, and Lutcher will travel to St. Amant.

Three other River Parish teams will begin their seasons this weekend, too. Riverside Academy will travel to Houma to play H.L. Bourgeois at Terrebonne High School, and West St. John will play at South Terrebonne on Friday at 7. On Sunday, Hahnville will travel to Central Lafourche for a 3 p.m. game.

Lutcher coach Tim Detillier and St. Amant coach David Swacker are planning a pregame ceremony to mark the occasion and acknowledge the suffering of their neighbors.

"No football game is as important as what's going on out there," Detillier said. "I want to emphasize that. But the big accomplishment for us is that we're playing a game. The big news is we're playing."

And it's not so much about football as it is about normalcy.

"It's what we do," St. James coach Rick Gaille said. "In the simplest terms, the players play and it's our profession as coaches to coach. That's normalcy for us. Just as people want to get back to their homes and their businesses to get them back to normal, that's what we want to do as well."

Of course, nearly all of the River Parishes coaches have been scrambling to rework their schedules in the wake of Katrina. Many had opponents from Orleans, Jefferson and St. Bernard parishes, which were decimated by the storm and probably won't play this season. It appears that Lutcher is the only team remaining in District 10-3A that will have a season.

Of the eight River Parishes schools, five are playing this week. Next week, St. Charles will join in by playing host to H.L. Bourgeois, and Destrehan will travel to Terrebonne. District 5-5A opponents Hahnville and East St. John will play at Hahnville in a non-district game. St. James will travel to South Lafourche, Lutcher will host Thibodaux, and Riverside will play St. Thomas Aquinas.

West St. John is the only school that will be playing its original schedule. Next week, the Rams will play host to Patterson.

Hahnville coach Lou Valdin said he was able to salvage this week's game against former district opponent Central Lafourche by moving it to Sunday.

"We're going to have a skeleton crew," Valdin said. "But (Central Lafourche coach) Ro Pitre was the only coach in the bayou that had the guts to play Hahnville High (this season). And, if I have to hire 11 kids riding their bikes on the street, I'm going to give him a game."

Valdin said there is a more important reason to play the game.

"These kids need to get back to some kind of normalcy,'' Valdin said. "And nothing galvanizes this community more than Hahnville football."

Curtis aims to kick off September

School spared major damage, sets tentative opening date of Sept.26

By Billy Turner
Staff writer

John Curtis officials have cleared the rooms of the school and anticipate returning to operation as early as Sept. 26. Football will quickly follow behind, football coach J.T. Curtis said Monday.

"God's been good to us," Curtis said. "Our school building took no damage at all. We could open school tomorrow. Our elementary school had one room that was damaged, and we shut it off.

"What we have told our parents is we are waiting for Jefferson Parish officials giving us clearance and as soon as they do, we're going to start school."

Curtis said he is looking at trying to fill the fifth playing date (Sept. 29 or 30). Curtis had open dates on the fifth weekend as well as the sixth.

"If we can practice a week, we will play the next week," Curtis said. "That would get us ready."

Curtis said he spoke with Louisiana High School Athletics Association commissioner Tommy Henry last week and was happy with Henry's ruling that kids would be allowed to play elsewhere.

"He also told me he would be passing a rule that when a student returns to school, they would be eligible if they were eligible when they left," Curtis said. "That's one of the things we had worried about, keeping continuity."

No Patriots players currently are playing at other schools, J.T. Curtis said.

"But we have kids in Houston, Galveston, Texas, and everywhere in the country," he said. "Until they can get direct news, they won't be coming back.

"But it's our feeling that it's important to get as many back in place as quickly as possible."

Curtis' Web site, eteamz.com/jcfootball, is instrumental in keeping the team and the remainder of the school members and officials informed, Curtis said.

"We pulled up to our elementary school. Saw the one building room that was bad; saw the big tree had fallen on the other building," he said.

Curtis said that when Patriots family members arrived at the elementary school to remove a fallen tree off the building, they were amazed at how little damage the structure sustained.

"We got chain saws, and got to work on it and when we got to the bottom of it, my brother (Leon) said, 'I don't' think we got any dents up here (on the roof).' We all said, 'How can that be?' As we got to the bottom, there was an old Crape Myrtle tree my dad (who died earlier this year) had planted," Curtis said. "It held that tree off that building.

"The way we tell it, he was up there saying, 'A little to the left. You can drop it on the Crape Myrtle.' He protected that building."

BOURQUE PRINTING, INC.
UPTON PRINTING
TRANSDATA SYSTEMS
FORMSCONTROL
DIEZ Office Supplies

NOTICE

Due to the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina,

CONSOLIDATED GRAPHICS

New Orleans Division

(formerly Bourque Printing, Inc., Diez Office Supplies, Forms Control, Transdata Systems and Upton Printing)

has been RELOCATED to our

Baton Rouge Division

10848 Airline Highway
225/291.9090 Fax 225/291.0900
1•800•552•4610

We will continue to warehouse, manufacture and provide all your printing and office supply needs from our Baton Rouge facility.

CONSOLIDATED GRAPHICS
A Division of Champion Industries, Inc.
Commercial Printing, Graphic Design & Office Supplies

Proximity of finalists to determine football championship game sites

LHSAA trying to identify title venues for other sports

By Tammy Nunez
Staff writer

For the first time in 25 years, the high school football state championships will not be played in the Superdome, Louisiana High School Athletic Association commissioner Tommy Henry said.

State championship games will be played at three venues, which could include LSU's Tiger Stadium and Independence Stadium in Shreveport. The state championship games are scheduled Dec. 9-10.

Henry said damage to the Superdome from Hurricane Katrina and the uncertainty as to when the facility can be repaired led to the change of venue.

The sites where certain classifications play will be determined by the proximity of schools in the state championship game to the venue. For example, if the Class 5A finalists are close to the Baton Rouge area, the game could be played at Tiger Stadium.

Henry met with LSU officials Thursday morning to discuss relocating five of the association's state sports championships that New Orleans was slated to host. The swimming state meet, originally scheduled to be held at UNO, will move to the LSU natatorium. The LSU swim team will be out of town Nov. 16-19, opening the door for the high school meet. No decision was made on relocating wrestling, soccer or volleyball, Henry said. State championships in those three sports were scheduled to be played in the New Orleans area.

"This year, we're going to have to do things differently than we've ever done them before," Henry said. "We've got to make some tough decisions."

One of the most difficult, he said, was deciding to keep the original state championship date for football. Many schools in storm-affected parishes will not play a full 10-game regular season.

Henry said the qualification process will be only slightly altered, and it is possible for a team to make the playoffs with a drastically shortened schedule. He said teams would still automatically qualify by winning their district championships and the remaining bracket slots would be filled based on power points divided by games played.

The problems don't end with football. The swim season is in a state of flux, according to New Orleans Metro Area Swim League director Jorge Blasini.

"I don't know what to do," Blasini said. "Really, what I'm trying to do is see when what schools are going back in session."

In addition to most of the south shore schools being closed for the season, many of the area's pools were damaged by the storm. So, even if schools go back into session, it's unclear where they can practice or compete.

UNO's Lakefront Arena pool, site of the state championships and at least half of the metro swim league dual meets, might not be ready for competition until December, pool director Janice Roth said.

"Things were flying off the roof like crazy (during the storm)," Roth said. "Now I don't know when we're going to be able to get back in. It's going to be a long time."

Roth said she expected the state meet to change, but said it might be possible for the metro meet to be contested in December, a month later than originally scheduled.

"We can still do a metro meet. The state (meet) has nothing to do with that," Roth said.

A decision will need to be made soon on the volleyball state tournament, scheduled for the Pontchartrain Center in Kenner Nov. 9-12. The question is where to move it.

"There are conflicts everywhere we look," Henry said.

Baton Rouge is a possible location, but hotel availability could be a problem. Lafayette is another city being looked at, Henry said. It's also undetermined where wrestling and soccer's state championships, scheduled for February, will be held. LSU has offered its venues on non-conflicting dates, but the university has a full athletic schedule and isn't able to accommodate those sports' dates right now.

OUR OPINIONS

Suffering and semantics

There may be no more ridiculous pairing of words than "voluntary evacuation." Letting people know they can leave if they want to leave does nothing more than remind them that they live in a free country. But looking back at the events leading up to Hurricane Katrina, it's clear that the phrase "mandatory evacuation" doesn't mean anything either. At least not in New Orleans.

The phrase is meaninglessness on two levels: According to a television interview Mayor Ray Nagin gave the Saturday night before the storm, he didn't think he had the legal authority to order a mandatory evacuation or the ability to enforce it. City attorneys were scrambling to find out whether he could order everybody out, he said, and if doing so would make him liable for the many thousands of people who had no means of escape. The next morning he issued New Orleans' first-ever order of evacuation. Next door, Jefferson Parish President Aaron Broussard maintained that despite his desire to do so, he didn't have the legal authority to require his residents to leave.

To Mayor Nagin's credit, he made it clear on that Saturday that everybody needed to get out and that citizens shouldn't wait around to hear the word "mandatory" before deciding to leave. They might never hear it. He urged those who could to check on their neighbors, especially the elderly and infirm, and to use every conveyance possible to escape the wrath of the approaching storm.

The mayor was a voice of calm when others around him were succumbing to hysteria. But when it came time to get pushy, he did that, too. Even so, Mayor Nagin should have had his legal questions answered long before a storm was in the Gulf of Mexico. A mandatory evacuation had never been ordered, but the question of its legality should have been asked and answered years ago. What a mayor can do as a hurricane approaches should have been institutional knowledge, passed like a baton from one administration to the next.

It ought to have been passed down from governor to governor, too. The mayor's powers may have been limited, but as the chief executive of the state, Gov. Kathleen Blanco had more muscle. State law allows her to not only "direct and compel the evacuation of all or part of the population from any stricken or threatened area within the state," but also to utilize "all available resources of the state government and of each political subdivision of the state as reasonably necessary to cope with the disaster or emergency."

The Friday before the storm Gov. Blanco declared a state of emergency, and that could have served as a prerequisite for more forceful action. Imagine every school bus in South Louisiana packed with evacuees and heading to higher ground. Imagine the vans, SUVs and cars owned by state and local agencies being devoted to the same purpose. In retrospect, the mayor should have used his bully pulpit to demand more action from the state. But he ultimately didn't have the authority to take control of all those vehicles. The governor did.

Elected officials assumed that when the big one hit New Orleans, it would catch thousands upon thousands of people still in the city. Some wouldn't be able to afford a way out. Others who could afford to do so wouldn't either. Not a whole lot could have been done for that second group. The fact that even now there are people vowing to stay in their flooded homes is proof that some deaths were inevitable.

Louisiana was never going to be able to handle a disaster of Katrina's scale without substantial outside help. If the federal response had not been so woefully inadequate, the storm would not have exacted such a horrific toll on New Orleans.

But that doesn't absolve anyone at any level of government from neglecting the poor. The assumption that poor people would be trapped was met with inaction, when it should have been met with a determination to save as many as possible. The words "mandatory evacuation" mean nothing when state and local officials won't or can't deploy the resources necessary to make the mandate stick. Not only could the mayor not order an evacuation, and not only could he not enforce it, but there were those who couldn't or wouldn't leave. The corpses floating in the water attest to that.

nola.com Expanded Hurricane Katrina coverage online at www.nola.com

'05 40 ft. Travel Trailer
like new; 2 BR; wash/dry;
self contained;
will deliver in 48 hrs;
$28,500. 1-888-282-6191

Clerical / Medical Collector
Will Subsidize Commute
Send Resume to
1012 S. Acadian Thruway,
Baton Rouge 70806

Office DEPOT
If you're an Office Depot Associate
who has been displaced by Hurricane Katrina, please call 1-888-954-4636 (option 3)
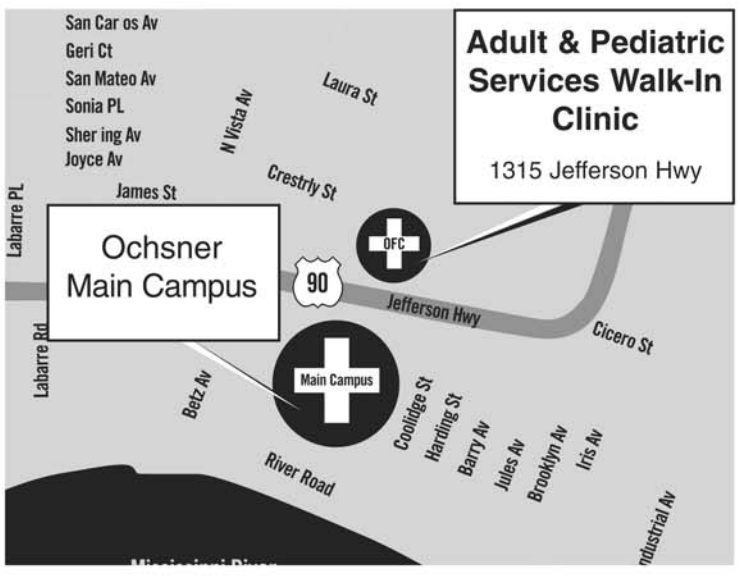
to receive information on how we can help.
Our thoughts are with you
in this difficult time.

Attention Louisiana Retired Teachers!
TRSL Teachers' Retirement System of Louisiana
If you are a TRSL retiree living in one of the ZIP CODES affected by Hurricane Katrina that begin with the numbers:
369, 393, 394, 395, 396, 700, 701, 704
Contact us for information about your benefit check!
Teachers' Retirement System of Louisiana
8401 United Plaza Boulevard, Suite 300
Baton Rouge, LA 70809-7017
Phone: 225-925-6446
or
1-877-ASK-TRSL (1-877-275-8775)
to leave a message for a return call.
We have extended office hours during this time to meet your needs.
www.trsl.org
We're here to help you!



Ochsner today:
Still open and operating

Ochsner's main campus hospital functioned effectively all through the hurricane providing essential care to our adult and pediatric patients. Now, as the recovery continues, Ochsner has intensified its efforts to ensure that your healthcare continues uninterrupted.

As an Ochsner patient, you should know that:
- Your medical records are accessible electronically from any Ochsner clinic
- Ochsner hospital is fully operational, including surgery and other major procedures
- The Emergency Department is open and accepting walk-ins
- A new adult and pediatric services primary care walk-in clinic for New Orleans residents has opened at the Ochsner for Children Ambulatory Care Center on Jefferson Highway
- Ochsner clinics in Baton Rouge and on the North Shore are open and adding doctors and more services to accommodate our patients
- Ochsner clinics in Kenner (2120 Driftwood Blvd.), Metairie (2005 Veterans Blvd.), and on the West Bank/Lapalco (4225 Lapalco Blvd.) will open on Monday, September 12

If you are not presently an Ochsner patient, Ochsner is open for you, too, with convenient neighborhood clinics and the advantage of Ochsner's expertise and exceptional capabilities in caring.

Adult & Pediatric Services Walk-In Clinic at Ochsner for Children Ambulatory Care Center
1315 Jefferson Highway
Across from the main campus

Offering pediatrics, internal medicine, obstetrics and cardiology services.
Monday - Friday, 10am - 5pm

If you or a family member needs medical assistance or an appointment, call 1-504-842-3155.

Ochsner
www.ochsner.org
1-504-842-3155

OCHSNER ACCEPTS ALL MAJOR HEALTH PLANS.

Notice to ExxonMobil and Chalmette Refining employees affected by Hurricane Katrina.

Our deepest sympathies are extended to our employees and to all those from the communities along the Gulf Coast who lost family and friends and whose lives have been severely disrupted as a result of Hurricane Katrina.

In the aftermath of the storm, we know that many of our employees in the affected areas have lost their homes and property. We are anxious to make contact to ensure that you and your families are safe and to discuss any Company assistance you may need.

We therefore request that all of our employees affected by Hurricane Katrina contact the Company as soon as they are able to do so. If you have not already done so, you should contact your supervisor or the Employee Assistance Line at 1-877-294-8617.

For more information please go to exxonmobil.com.

ExxonMobil

Green Wave to open in Shreveport

Other home-game sites still not determined

By Benjamin Hochman
Staff writer

DALLAS - Tulane's home stadium, at least for one weekend, will be Shreveport's Independence Stadium. The Sept. 17 game against Mississippi State, originally scheduled for the Superdome, will kickoff at 7 p.m.

"We're proud of the facility that we have and that we can mobilize and put on a event such as this in such short notice," said Ken Antee, chief administrative officer for the city of Shreveport. "We'll be ready to accommodate whatever crowds we need to."

Tulane still is looking at possible other locales for its remaining five home games, Athletic Director Rick Dickson said. A former coach, Dickson wasn't using coachspeak when he said, "We're going to take this one game at a time."

By this time next week, he said, he hopes to have a site for the Oct. 1 game against Southeastern Louisiana.

Tulane's football team evacuated to Dallas and will spend the season based at Louisiana Tech in Ruston. After the Mississippi State game, the Green Wave will return to Dallas to play Southern Methodist on Sept. 24.

Dickson said earlier this week the city of Mobile has offered Ladd-Pebbles Stadium. And he said Florida State athletic director Dave Hart called him about the possibility of Tulane playing some of its games on that campus.

Staff photo by Kathy Anderson

The field at Tad Gormley Stadium in City Park remained under several feet of water Thursday. Tulane officials are searching for a site for the Tulane-Southeastern Louisiana game, originally scheduled Oct. 1 at Tad Gormley. It was to be the Green Wave's homecoming game.

"We're wide open," Dickson said on Thursday.

Mississippi State, which has six players from areas hit by Katrina, has been understanding of Tulane's situation. It will waive its guaranteed fee of $200,000 and is encouraging fans who purchased tickets but cannot attend the game to forego a refund and donate the ticket cost to Tulane Athletics.

Tulane was offered Shreveport's stadium free of charge and will receive all proceeds from the game operations.

Also, the game will be televised nationally by College Sports Television, which has announced that all commercial proceeds are being donated to specially created funds focused on restoring the New Orleans area. Monies will be divided between Conference USA's Relief Fund and CSTV's Field & Dreams Rebuilding Fund.

Instead of spending Friday night in Shreveport, Mississippi State's football team will fly into town Saturday afternoon and fly out that night.

"We don't want to displace any person that's evacuated to a hotel," Athletic Director Larry Templeton said. "And the other issue is we will bring our pep band and not our full band. And we will keep the cheerleaders and the band in Vicksburg on Friday night and bus over there Saturday.

"We only send the band to a couple of road games a year, and New Orleans was one of the trips they were going to go on. But we decided it was best not to bring seven busses and take up hotel rooms for 175 kids."

Antee said his city's stadium is available for the other five games. And he is confident Shreveport will promote all the games to its local football fans.

"Our media is committed to put it out in the community that the community needs to step up and support Tulane, because the program's basically devastated," Antee said. "It's a way our community can take them under their wing."

Shreveport Mayor Keith Hightower said the city "is happy to be in a position to assist Tulane during this very trying time."

"We are encouraging our citizens to support the Green Wave by attending the game and are asking our corporate citizens to help offset the loss of home game revenues in New Orleans," Hightower said.

Tickets for the game are $35 for sideline general admission seats and $20 for end zone general admission. They will be sold via Ticketmaster at www.Ticketmaster.com, at Ticketmaster outlets in Louisiana and Mississippi, or can be bought by calling 800-488-5252. Tickets will go on sale Friday at noon.

Tulane season ticket-holders who have not received their tickets and will be attending the game should notify the Green Wave athletic department via e-mail at tulane7@c-usa.org.

Tigers' task is stopping Keller

QB's versatility poses threats to LSU's defense

By Jim Kleinpeter
Staff writer

BATON ROUGE – As debuts go, it's hard to beat what Arizona State quarterback Sam Keller did in his first start.

He stepped in for record-setting teammate Andrew Walter and won the Sun Bowl MVP award in leading Arizona State to a 27-23 victory over Purdue.

He picked up where he left off with 14 completions in 24 attempts for 208 yards and four touchdowns last week in a 63-16 victory over Temple in the season opener.

But Keller's thus far seamless transition will get a real test – as will the No. 15-ranked Sun Devils – when Arizona State hosts LSU on Saturday in Tempe.

Walter, who owns every major passing record at Arizona State and holds the Pac-10 touchdown record, was injured in the regular-season finale against Arizona. Keller finished that game completing eight of 13 passes for 94 yards and a touchdown, and then dissected Purdue, hitting 25 of 45 throws for 370 yards and three scores. He was savvy in driving the Sun Devils 80 yards for the winning touchdown late in the game.

He entered the 2005 season with a veteran offensive line and an improved running game, but also an important intangible.

"Those last two games did volumes for my confidence as a quarterback and strengthened the chemistry of our team," Keller said. "Everyone thought Andrew going down was going to be a really big deal and it wasn't because our offense was so well prepared because of the way our coaches put us in position to win. We didn't skip a beat. Those games, the game we just played was good we got the kinks out. Now we're going to be tested on a national level against a national powerhouse."

"Sam was always working hard behind Andrew and it's showing now," said Arizona State preseason All-American wide receiver Derek Hagan. "He's a great quarterback and it's showing now."

Keller knows he can further his development with a strong effort Saturday against a seasoned LSU defense, which has seven starters back from last season. He has the advantage of working at home instead of a raucous, deafening Tiger Stadium. The game was moved from Baton Rouge to Tempe so as not to interfere with Hurricane Katrina relief efforts.

"They're big and fast and probably the most athletic I'm going to see, or right up there, in college," he said. "They bring the blitzes. They'll try to smash us in the mouth early. That's what we're prepared for."

LSU is preparing for Keller, 6 feet 4 and 233 pounds, who is the son of former Michigan Wolverines linebacker Mike Keller. He's not a great threat to run, but is nimble enough to avoid the rush in the pocket, where he can deliver any manner of pass – the lob, the down-and-out, the deep out and the bomb. He has also shown good poise.

"He makes good decisions, he moves the ball around and he knows what he's supposed to do with the ball," LSU coach Les Miles said. "He's a good quarterback."

Said LSU safety Jessie Daniels: "On tape it looks like he can throw every kind of pass there is."

Keller rated himself a six out of 10 on his performance against Temple. Along with his four touchdown passes he threw two interceptions. Keller was also protected by a strong running game.

"Sam was not as sharp as he usually practices," Arizona State coach Dick Koetter said. "Some of the things that didn't look very good to you or to me were not Sam's fault. We had receivers guess on a couple of plays and they guessed wrong, which is disappointing to me. There is no need to guess against a team like Temple. I thought Sam made some great throws. The second touchdown pass to Hagan was a beautiful throw, his best pass of the night."

Said Keller: "I had a couple of forced throws because I was getting greedy out there. That's stuff that can easily be fixed. The running game was an excellent surprise."

Keller's play against LSU may be telling on the remainder of the Sun Devils' season. In their first four seasons under Koetter, the Sun Devils alternated winning and losing records, but are coming off a 9-3 record last year. That earned them a No. 20 preseason ranking.

Dickerson trying to get team settled in

Housed at Texas A&M, Tulane, head coach seeks to adjust, win

By Benjamin Hochman
Staff writer

DALLAS - Every day, his 4-year-old son asks him: "Dad, when are we going home?"

And every day, Dave Dickerson tiptoes around the truth without saying the only thing he knows: "I don't know."

Dickerson, the Tulane men's basketball coach hired April 1, took his family to his native South Carolina to escape Hurricane Katrina. Now, dad is in College Station, Texas, with his surrogate family. His immediate family will soon join him in this foreign city, just like they did five months ago when they moved to New Orleans.

"As far as our house and belongings (in New Orleans), we have no word on that, and there's no time in the perceivable future that we can get back and assess our damages," Dickerson said. "But we do have each other, and that's the most important thing."

Now Dickerson has united his basketball family at Texas A&M. These players, including one from New Orleans, will try to attain normalcy while attending classes, practicing basketball and living their college lives in an unfamiliar setting.

Dickerson has to do the same thing.

"Part of being a basketball coach is being a surrogate father, being a mentor and leader through the good times and the bad times," said Dickerson, previously an assistant at Maryland. "The thing I have to do is be myself and be the person that got me to this point – and don't change. Our players, more than ever, need someone that's going to be consistent, be honest and be there for them. As far as growing up, I think I've grown maybe 50 years the last four or five days, but it's going to be a situation 10 years from now that we can look back on and know that we grew as people.

"The emotions, that's what we're trying to deal with now. Quite frankly, I think everyone needs to take a self-check to take a realistic snapshot of where each other is. And I think I need to do that, also. In order for me to be an effective surrogate father, I have to make sure that I'm emotionally stable."

The women's basketball team is across the state in Lubbock, Texas. Like their male counterparts, they all arrived on campus Wednesday or Thursday, leaping into Texas Tech classrooms the same day they arrived.

"We were a little skeptical and worried at first," Wave junior Jami Montagnino said. "We didn't know what classes we were taking or when we were practicing … but everything has gotten a lot better since we have gotten here."

"They are a week behind in class, so they have a lot of catching up to do," Tulane women's coach Lisa Stockton said. "But I think just being in one spot and knowing where we are going to be is going to be a big relief for us. I think they will be able to relax. I hear there is a football game this weekend, so that sounds good."

The men's team is moving into University Apartments near Texas A&M's campus. The last player to arrive, Kory Castine, got to campus Thursday. Castine is from Marrero, and his mother, Desiree, is a registered nurse. She stayed in New Orleans during Hurricane Katrina. For 48 frightening hours, Castine didn't hear from his mother. He finally touched base with her – so did Dickerson – and Castine, a power forward, left for Texas.

Tulane men's basketball is expected to set up its offices in the available space at the Aggies' Koldus Building near its athletic complex.

The women's team has eight non-conference home games scheduled, including Nov. 28 against LSU. And the men's team is supposed to open its regular season Nov. 12 by hosting Loyola. It has seven non-conference home games scheduled before Conference USA play – including UNO on Nov. 22 and Texas Christian on Dec. 7 in an ESPN-televised game. Texas Tech and Texas A&M have offered their home facilities to the Green Wave, but a decision has not been made where Tulane will play home games.

"Right now, as a head basketball coach, I'm not worried about the basketball part of it," Dickerson said. "I'm worried about our guys getting into classes, getting into some kind of meal plan and our guys being able to cope with what they just went through – so we can move forward."

Dickerson said counseling is "imperative." He knows its benefits. When he was a freshman, he dealt with the death of Maryland teammate Len Bias, the college star drafted into the NBA who died because of drug use.

"It's important that we carry the torch and be a positive image for the university and the city of New Orleans," Dickerson said. "But it's so more important that we can get through it as people. The humanistic side is the most important part of it."

On Thursday, Dickerson took a deep breath when asked if the goal this season was "to survive." Tulane's basketball team, in its first year in a new system, will be transplanted for, at minimum, a semester, while sharing practice facilities with another team.

"But I don't see myself going into this basketball season just trying to survive," said Dickerson, who has never been on a staff of a losing team in 15 years. "That's just not my nature. There are some things that we have to get accomplished first before we think about the wins and losses, and I understand that.

"What I have to do as a head coach is step back a little bit and embrace my players, embrace my coaching staff, and make sure we're OK as people first. But I don't think I'll ever look at this as a survival thing. I don't think you can go into a game or a season just trying to survive. You got to think you can win every game, and you have got to sell your team on that."

• • • • • • •

Staff writer Fred Robinson contributed to this report.

UNO swim team training in Atlanta

By Tammy Nunez
Staff writer

The UNO swim team has relocated to Emory University in Atlanta, Coach Ashley Tappin said Thursday.

The team's home, the Lakefront Arena pool, won't be ready for competition for a "long time," according to pool director Janice Roth. But Tappin said 12 of her 14 swimmers moved to Atlanta temporarily and have resumed training. The swimmers are staying in homes of members of the Atlanta Rotary Club.

"It always takes something horrendous to pull out the resiliency and kindness in people," Tappin said. "We wouldn't survive without them."

Tappin said she was overwhelmed with calls from college programs around the country with offers for training and lodging following Hurricane Katrina. But Tappin said the Atlanta area was the best match for her team, and she is grateful for their help.

"I've had an unbelievable response," Tappin said.

NOTE: New Orleans Metro Area Swim League director Jorge Blasini said he is looking for member coaches to contact him and provide updates on the status of their schools and teams. He can be reached at jblasini@cox.net.

BASEBALL TEAM AT NMSU: New Mexico State University will house the UNO baseball program in Las Cruces, N.M., beginning immediately until the campus at UNO and Maestri Field are returned to an acceptable condition, the university announced in a release.

Hurricane Katrina damaged facilities at UNO and has rendered the metropolitan New Orleans area without power and services for an undetermined time.

In securing the partnership with New Mexico State, Privateers coach Tom Walter expressed his sincere gratitude.

"New Mexico State and UNO have been friendly rivals in the Sun Belt Conference for the past several years, and the hand of friendship extended by the Aggies in our hour of need is deeply appreciated," Walter said.

New Orleans athletics director Jim Miller is hopeful the Privateers will be able to play at Maestri Field in 2006.

"We remain adamant in our desire to play baseball at Maestri Field this season," Miller said. "We are thankful to (New Mexico State) Athletics Director McKinley Boston and Coach Rocky Ward for their generosity."

New Mexico State and the UNO were members of the Sun Belt Conference the past several years before the Aggies departed for the Western Athletic Conference following the 2005 baseball season.

"I pretty much have expressed to (Fair Grounds president) Randy Soth that the HBPA's official position is, we want to go for nothing less than a 40- to 50-day meet at $250,000 per day in purse giveaway. Louisiana Downs is very accommodating. Evangeline Downs is accommodating as well."

SEAN ALFORTISH, president of the Louisiana Horsemen's Benevolent and Protective Association

Horsemen pushing for 40-day meet

Alfortish calls Churchill's 20-day proposal 'dead issue'

By Bob Fortus
Staff writer

Louisiana horsemen are seeking at least 40 racing days at either Louisiana Downs or Evangeline Downs to make up for the cancellation of the Fair Grounds racing season, Sean Alfortish, president of the Louisiana Horsemen's Benevolent and Protective Association, said Thursday.

Last week, Churchill Downs officials told horsemen that a plan is under consideration to shift 19 or 20 New Orleans racing days to Louisiana Downs for an abbreviated season in December. The Fair Grounds was scheduled to run from Nov. 24 through March 26.

Alfortish said that a short December season would be "a total waste." Also, he said, Kentucky horsemen wouldn't bother to come to Louisiana for such a short season.

"As far as I'm concerned, 20 days is a dead issue," he said. "We're not going to back it. We're not going to go for it.

"I pretty much have expressed to (Fair Grounds president) Randy Soth that the HBPA's official position is, we want to go for nothing less than a 40- to 50-day meet at $250,000 per day in purse giveaway. Louisiana Downs is very accommodating. Evangeline Downs is accommodating as well."

Soth couldn't be reached for comment. He was at Churchill Downs on Thursday and met with company officials about the situation, said Churchill spokesperson Julie Koenig.

"I know that we're still working to find some common ground with the Louisiana horsemen," Koenig said. "That's really where we're at."

She also said that Soth, Fair Grounds director of racing Ben Huffman and Donnie Richardson, Churchill's senior vice president in charge of racing at all the company's tracks, "are trying to find a solution that works for both sides."

Alfortish said he's proposing a transferred season that would begin Thanksgiving Day, which is the traditional opening day, and run at least until the end of February. By law, the Fair Grounds must run 80 days in 20 consecutive weeks to keep its racing license, but Alfortish said that the LHBPA would support any waivers needed for the proposed season.

"If they give us what we're asking for, it is a viable solution," Alfortish said. "I will not accept racing at the Fair Grounds anywhere else than in the state of Louisiana."

The Fair Grounds has enough money in its purse account to cover purses for the proposed season, he said. The track has $1.8 million from underpayment of purses from the past Fair Grounds season, he said. Purse money generated from off-track betting and video poker during the offseason swells the available amount for purses to about $8 million, he said. Also, more money for purses would be raised from betting – on-track and from simulcasting.

A Thanksgiving opening is important to show the spirit of the Fair Grounds, Alfortish said.

"Our horsemen want to do it," he said. "They're ready to do it. More importantly, they need to do it."

Staff photo by Kathy Anderson

The Fair Grounds, which on Thursday still had water on the track, has proposed a 20-day meet in December, But Sean Alfortish, president of the Louisiana Horsemen's Benevolent and Protective Association, opposed the proposal Thursday, calling it a 'dead issue.' The horsemen are calling for at least a 40-day meet.

TPC officials form team to assess turf damage

Tree loss estimated at 1,000; 40 percent of course under water

By Brian Allee-Walsh
Staff writer

The PGA Tour plans to send a team of agronomists to assess the turf damage at TPC of Louisiana, the first step perhaps in rebuilding the golf course in time for the Zurich Classic of New Orleans in April.

That decision was made Thursday at a meeting attended by PGA Tour commissioner Tim Finchem and high-ranking officials from the PGA Tour, Zurich and the Fore!Kids Foundation in Ponte Vedra, Fla.

Approximately 40 percent of the TPC of Louisiana remains underwater from Hurricane Katrina, which struck southeast Louisiana and the Gulf Coast on Aug. 29. The Category 4 storm also uprooted an estimated 1,000 trees on the par-72, 7,400-yard layout designed by Pete Dye.

"It's our hope to get in there next week if we can," said Henry Hughes, chief of operations for the PGA Tour. "We assured them that we are working hand-in-glove to do the best we can for the event in New Orleans.

"We did not form any conclusions. We basically put together a path of action to find the information we need to determine what actions we can take."

Mike Rodrigue, chairman of the board for the Fore!Kids Foundation, said he remains hopeful that the TPC of Louisiana can be restored in time to host the tournament April 27-30.

"It's too early to say exactly what they're going to do until they can assess the damage to the golf course," Rodrigue said. "We know we have water on holes 4, 5 and 6. But we don't have any major damage at TPC.

"We're confident that the golf course is going to be there in the long term. If the course is so damaged that they can't do anything with it, they'll start regrowing new grass this year instead of waiting. If we have the tournament there, we'd throw rye on it and replant the Bermuda grass after the golf tournament. The Bermuda down there now has been under water for more than a week, so it's likely going to die."

Rodrigue, who attended the 2 ½-hour meeting along with Fore!Kids Foundation president John Subers and board member Bill Reinhardt, speculated that PGA Tour officials may consider several courses of action once the damage is assessed.

The tournament could be held as scheduled at the TPC of Louisiana. Or, it possibly could be held at a course within a close proximity to New Orleans, perhaps English Turn Golf & Country Club which played host to the PGA Tour event from 1989 through 2004, or the David Toms-designed Carter Plantation in Springfield.

"This is a multiple production between hotels, restaurants and the golf course," Rodrigue said. "One consideration is to house the players on cruise ships. The one thing we can say is we know this is going to be the best field we've ever had. It's just a shame that it takes something like this for us to get the best field.

"The tour is reaching out to their global and title sponsors. One possibility is to take a portion of the purse from every PGA Tour event, including ours, to give to the relief fund."

Rodrigue said the PGA Tour has pledged a minimum of $5 million to the hurricane relief fund.

"I know we're going to blow that number through the roof," Rodrigue said. "None of that money is going to the golf course. We told the PGA people that we need money basically to get this town rebuilt and back on its feet.

"The PGA emphasized to us how fully supportive they are. We were there to show them the energy that we still have. We're ready to do what we have to do to put this event on."

Bayou Oaks, Eastover suffer significant damage to courses

Damages at City Park estimated at $25 million; Audubon, ET fare well

By Brian Allee-Walsh
Staff writer

As expected, Hurricane Katrina wreaked havoc on several area golf courses, none worse than Bayou Oaks in City Park and the Golf Club of New Orleans at Eastover in eastern New Orleans, which also appeared to sustain substantial property damage.

Three courses at Bayou Oaks and two courses at Eastover remained under flood waters Thursday, 10 days after the Category 4 storm pounded southeast Louisiana and the Gulf Coast.

English Turn Golf & Country Club and Audubon Golf Club apparently fared much better, according to course officials. Each property suffered wind damage but did not flood.

"If we have to rebuild all three courses and the structures on the property, it could be upwards of $25 million in golf-related damages alone," Bayou Oaks general manager Gordon Digby said Thursday when reached in Chicago. "We couldn't have had a worse scenario.

"Then there's the wind damage. We might have a thousand trees down for all we know. I'm sure we'll re-open eventually. Right now, we just don't know. Hopefully, we'll get some help from FEMA."

The longer the courses at Bayou Oaks and Eastover remain under brackish water - a mixture of salt and fresh water - the less chance the turf has of surviving.

Eastover director of golf Jimmy Headrick said the window of opportunity might have closed already on the Teeth of the Gator and Rabbit's Foot courses.

"Eastover took it as bad as any golf course in New Orleans because of its eastern location," Headrick said when reached in St. Louis. "We're still under water; the cart barn, maintenance building, clubhouse, golf course, everything has been impacted. We have 130 golf carts under water.

"The next issue is going to be the Bermuda grass. It can't live under that water for much longer than 10 days and we're right there now. Eastover got it pretty rough."

English Turn, site of the PGA Tour event in New Orleans from 1989 through 2004, and Audubon managed to stay relatively dry and course officials hope to begin the cleanup process soon.

Audubon Park presently is serving as a staging area for the National Guard.

"We had quite a few trees get knocked down," Audubon director of golf Stan Stopa said when reached in Destin, Fla. "Many of them were defective trees - junk trees that had lived their life span - and should have been taken down quite a while ago.

"The golf course looks pretty good except for the fact that they're landing helicopters on greens and tees. At least it will be protected but there's no telling what they're going to do to the course. But we had no water damage whatsoever, and the cart barn and the clubhouse came through OK."

Under ideal conditions, Stopa said Audubon could be back in the golfing business by mid-October.

"That's not my decision," Stopa said. "If it was up to me, and the mayor said it was safe, I'd push to get the golf course back up and running ASAP. The city needs to get it back. People need a break from all this stress."

Rick Miller, director of golf at English Turn, visited the West Bank property for the first time Thursday and assessed the damage, which included 120-130 downed trees.

"There wasn't a whole lot of water damage on the course, mostly trees and stuff," Miller said. "Hopefully in the next 10 days we can start cleaning it up. I think we're going to be able to put it back together. I guess it depends on how fast we can get people in there to begin the cleanup."

Smitten last season, Panthers expected to rise again

Receiver Smith tops key injured players who have returned

By Mike Triplett
Staff writer

SAN ANTONIO – Two seasons ago, the Carolina Panthers were on top of the NFL world, reaching the Super Bowl before a narrow loss to the New England Patriots.

Then the injury-riddled team hit bottom last year, starting 1-7, before bouncing back up and finishing 7-9. The Panthers were making a playoff run until a crushing 21-18 loss to the Saints in Week 17.

No one knows what is in store for the tumultuous team this year, but for the record, many prognosticators are predicting an NFC South championship and perhaps another Super Bowl run.

The Panthers will get their first test Sunday against that same Saints team in that same Bank of America Stadium.

Carolina quarterback Jake Delhomme said last season's finish was a "huge motivation" in the offseason, but added, "You've got to understand, last year after losing in the Super Bowl, that had motivation, too."

"I think last year, too, we certainly had high expectations and people had high expectations for us. We had even higher," said Delhomme, who said this year is no different. "Next thing you know, we have injuries that start to pop up, but there was no doubt that we were going to go into every game and we were going to play well and win. I think that's just what you have to have. That's just one thing that I enjoyed so much about last year. We started 1-7, but guys didn't point fingers, coaches didn't point fingers.

"Nobody on offense looked at defense. Nobody on defense looked at offense. We just weren't getting it done collectively as a team. You just stick together and fight, and they see how you practice and prepare for one another, and it just kind of turns out that makes it rewarding in the end."

Panthers coach John Fox said he is neither pleased nor worried about the high expectations. He said the adage around his team is that "you're never as bad as they say you are, and you're never as good as they say you are."

But there is certainly reason for optimism in Carolina, which boasts one of the strongest rushing attacks and most physical defensive fronts in the NFL.

The Panthers return receiver Steve Smith, whose leg was broken in Week 1 last year, and have back defensive tackle Kris Jenkins and tailbacks Stephen Davis and Deshaun Foster, among others who were hurt last year.

"They've got a lot of things going for them," Saints coach Jim Haslett said of the Panthers. "They're a well-coached football team, first of all. They do a great job running the football; they've got good running backs, a good line. Steve Smith coming back gives them a big-play guy. I love (receiver Keary) Colbert; he's kind of a go-to guy. And their defense is solid. And they don't make a lot of mistakes.

"So I can see why people would pick them. But we feel we'll be in the mix with them, and it's going to be a heck of a game."

RELIEF EFFORTS: The Saints are now accepting contributions to their Hurricane Katrina Relief Fund, either through www.saintshurricanefund.org or by mail at Hurricane Katrina Relief Fund c/o New Orleans Saints, 9613 Interline, Baton Rouge, LA 70809.

Checks should be made payable to The New Orleans Saints Hurricane Katrina Relief Fund. An independent Board of Directors will be formed to allocate and administer these funds to the affected people.

Team owner Tom Benson opened the fund by making a $100,000 donation.

"As a native of New Orleans, my heart goes out to everyone in our city, state and region that was victimized by this horrific natural disaster," Benson said in a statement. "Our organization remains committed to being a leader in the rebuilding process and helping the people of the Gulf South. The establishment of this fund is a first step in that rebuilding process."

The NFL also announced that Sept. 18-19 will be designated "Hurricane Relief Weekend," culminating with the Saints-Giants game in New York on Monday night.

Every NFL game that weekend will include elements that will highlight and contribute to the national relief effort, with assistance from the NFL's television network partners. There also will be a fund-raising telethon from ABC's Times Square studio in New York that will be incorporated into the Monday-night broadcasts of the Saints game and the Redskins-Cowboys game.

The NFL announced that the league, its owners, teams and players have contributed nearly $8 million so far to Hurricane Katrina relief. The league also produced a national public service announcement to promote donations to the American Red Cross and the United Way, featuring Peyton Manning, Brett Favre and Steve McNair.

Haslett and players Joe Horn and Wayne Gandy also filmed a television message to promote the Saints' fund.

And this weekend, the Panthers announced they are giving 350 tickets to Hurricane Katrina evacuees who are registered with the Red Cross at the Charlotte Coliseum. The Panthers are also giving out $10 food vouchers for each person to use at the game.

The tickets came out of the players' allotments and the unused portion the Saints returned. About 800 evacuees are in Charlotte, with about 400 staying at the Coliseum.

NEW AGENT: Fourth-year receiver Donte' Stallworth recently signed with high-profile agent Drew Rosenhaus, but he isn't asking for a new contract from the Saints just yet. Rosenhaus, who was in San Antonio visiting clients Stallworth, Mike McKenzie and Dwight Smith, said he expects Stallworth to have a breakout season. Stallworth is signed through 2007, with a voidable option on the last year.

GRANT IS GONE: The Saints did not sign linebacker Cie Grant to the practice squad, as was originally planned. The former third-round draft choice played in only seven career games with the team because of chronic knee problems. In his place, the Saints added receiver Levon Thomas, an undrafted rookie from Georgia Tech, to the practice squad. Thomas spent training camp with the Indianapolis Colts.

Meanwhile, the Denver Broncos signed former Saints quarterback Kliff Kingsbury to their practice squad. That role was filled last year by former LSU quarterback Matt Mauck, who joined the Tennessee Titans' practice squad this year.

INJURY UPDATE – Saints linebacker James Allen (knee) will return to the field Sunday after missing all four preseason games, but he will not start. Defensive tackle Brian Young (knee) is expected to start after missing the last two preseason games. Willie Whitehead will be the other starting defensive tackle.

GOT IT DOWN PATS

AP photo

Randy Moss was one of the few bright spots for the Oakland Raiders in their 30-20 loss to the New England Patriots Thursday night in the first game of the NFL season. Moss had five catches for 130 yards and one touchown.

New England off to a good start with 30-20 win against Oakland

By Dave Goldberg
AP sports writer

FOXBOROUGH, MASS - New England's quest for an unprecedented three straight Super Bowl victories is in good hands with two stars the Patriots didn't lose: Tom Brady and Richard Seymour.

Brady threw for 306 yards and two touchdowns and Seymour made a game-turning defensive play as the Patriots beat Oakland 30-20 Thursday night, holding Randy Moss, the Raiders' new star, to one big play, a 73-yard touchdown catch.

"It's important, we wanted to get off to a good start," said Brady, who had 212 of his yards and both TD throws in the first half.

New England's 35th win in 39 games since the start of the 2003 season was an odd one - all offense at the start, mostly defense after intermission. One key early adjustment was made by the Patriots, switching from their traditional 3-4 defense to a 4-3 to help fill the gap caused by the loss of inside linebackers Tedy Bruschi and Ted Johnson.

The Patriots, who also lost coordinators Charlie Weis and Romeo Crennel to head coaching jobs, led 17-14 at halftime on touchdown passes by Brady of 29 yards to Super Bowl MVP Deion Branch and 5 yards to newcomer Tim Dwight. That offset a 2-yard TD pass by Kerry Collins to tight end Courtney Anderson on the game's first series and the bomb to Moss, who at 6-foot-4 simply went over 5-8 Tyrone Poole.

Anderson also caught a 5-yard touchdown pass with 3:04 left set up by Randal Williams' block of Josh Miller's punt. But Moss was called for offensive pass interference on the 2-point conversion play.

That wasn't Moss' only mistake. He also dropped a short first-down pass that could have gotten the Raiders out a hole early in the third quarter.

That eventually led to the game-turning play with just less than six minutes left in the quarter, the kind of play that has marked the Patriots' run to three titles in four seasons.

Seymour, who as usual made a half-dozen big plays on defense, was the catalyst, pushing Raiders center Jake Grove into Collins. Meanwhile, Jarvis Green, who became the fourth lineman when the Pats switched to the 4-3, came around from the right side and sandwiched Collins as he was throwing. The ball popped into the air and into the hands of 325-pound nose tackle Vince Wilfork at the Raiders 20.

"We know Richard is a pretty good force inside. He has been for four years," Patriots coach Bill Belichick said, adding that he'll decide from week to week whether to stay with the 4-3. "We thought we could get some force from the outside with Jarvis and Rosie (Rosevelt Colvin.)"

Three plays later, Corey Dillon ran 8 yards for a score that made it 23-14 after Adam Vinatieri's extra point attempt was blocked by Langston Walker as the Patriots thwarted Oakland's hope for a strong start.

Dillon scored the final touchdown on a 2-yard run in the fourth quarter set up by a 24-yard pass interference penalty on rookie Stanford Routt, as the Patriots won their 21st straight home game. That was one of 14 penalties for 139 yards by Oakland, traditionally one of the NFL's most flagged teams.

The Raiders, 9-23 the last two seasons, showed more improvement on defense than on offense, holding the Patriots to 73 yards on the ground. Dillon started with 11 yards on his first 11 carries before finishing with 69 yards on 23 carries.

Collins, who threw for 159 yards in the first half, finished 18 of 40 for 265 yards. Moss finished with five catches for 130 yards.

Northlake's varsity debut set Sept. 23

By Marty Mule
Staff writer

Northlake Christian, which has yet to kick off its first year of varsity competition because of Hurricane Katrina, may be the first St. Tammany Parish team to play football this season.

The Wolverines are scheduled to make their varsity debut at Gueydan on Sept. 23 - three days before the school is scheduled to resume classes. Northlake will compete in District 7-1A.

Coach Mark Robert has 33 players, nine of whom he has been able to contact directly.

"If I have 11, we're going to play," Robert said. "I owe it to these kids, who have played on a junior varsity level the last three years, kids who have practiced and sweat just as hard as any of the powerhouse teams. They deserve it."

The first practice is scheduled for 6 p.m. Monday.

The storm cost Northlake games against Lutheran, Ascension Catholic and Acadiana Prep.

Katrina may have added more problems for Wolverines, which were supposed to play their inaugural season at William Pitcher Junior High in Covington. Robert said he checked the field and it appears the lights may be out because of wind damage to the light poles.

"We could be a team without a home," Robert said Thursday while traveling to pick up his wife in Gatlinburg, Tenn.

nola.com

Click nola.com for the latest sportsnews from The Times-Picayune

Keep your mouse pointed to nola.com for the latest news from The Times-Picayune

nola.com

ST. BERNARD: A large dog wades into a marshy ditch to get a drink of water Thursday in eastern St. Bernard Parish, where floodwaters from Hurricane Katrina are finally starting to recede.

STAFF PHOTO BY CHRIS GRANGER

STAFF PHOTO BY CHRIS GRANGER

ST. BERNARD: A pig noses through a pile of trash as it searches for some scraps in eastern St. Bernard Parish on Thursday. Animals, both wild and domestic, are wandering the streets throughout the parish.

PET PROJECT

STAFF PHOTO BY CHRIS GRANGER

MERAUX: Shawn Spc. Johnson of the Colorado Army National Guard offers a thirsty kitten a sip from his bottled water cap after finding it in the rubble of a storm-damaged building in Meraux on Thursday. As they patrol neighborhoods, Johnson and his colleagues are helping some furry friends along the way. Fellow Guardsman Chelsey Tucker got so attached to a dog that followed her on her patrols, she's planning to pick it up from the animal shelter when she is finished with her post-storm duties.

STAFF PHOTO BY MICHAEL DeMOCKER

EASTERN NEW ORLEANS: Spc. Kaleb Wallace of the Oklahoma National Guard is surprised to see a pony in the street during a patrol of Hayne Boulevard on Thursday. Wallace was going through the neighborhood looking for residents to evacuate.

As they move from house to house, looking for residents to evacuate or bodies to recover, National Guardsmen and other rescue workers are finding an endless menagerie of lost, stranded or abandoned animals that need help as well.

KATRINA: THE STORM WE'VE ALWAYS FEARED

The Times-Picayune

50 CENTS 169TH YEAR NO. 233 SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 10, 2005 HURRICANE EDITION

DEATH TOLL MAY NOT BE AS HIGH AS FEARED

STAFF PHOTO BY KATHY ANDERSON

A woman is rescued by the Georgia National Guard from the roof of a flooded two-story house on Tulane Avenue near the Dixie Brewery on Friday.

'0-0' on house: No one inside, no one dead

By Bruce Nolan
Staff writer

Eleven days after Hurricane Katrina plunged New Orleans into agonies of flood, panic and chaotic evacuation, authorities finally began searching house-to-house in once-flooded neighborhoods Friday for those who did not escape.

Early results retrieved far fewer bodies than officials expected.

That led one key official to hope the death toll might be much less than 10,000, Mayor Ray Nagin's early estimate that quickly became an unchallenged benchmark.

That figure was based on the speed with which Hurricane Katrina flooded the Lower 9th Ward and other poor, densely populated neighborhoods as the storm roared past on Aug. 29 with winds of at least 105 mph.

The estimate became more credible as thousands of traumatized refugees slogged into the Ernest N. Morial Convention Center during the next two days, bearing nightmarish tales of pushing bloated bodies out of the way or passing them sprawled on rooftops.

But in the first day of organized searching, there seemed some reason for hope.

"I think there's some encouragement in what we found in the initial sweeps that some of the catastrophic death that some people predicted may not, in fact, have occurred," said Terry Ebbert, chief of homeland security for the city.

"The numbers so far are relatively minor as compared to the dire predictions of 10,000," he said.

At least in the Lower 9th Ward, federal, state and local teams along with officers from all over the country broke open doors and entered homes, calling out for survivors and looking for corpses.

Where they found neither, they scrawled "0-0" on the house and moved on.

As they worked, Katrina claimed a victim of a different sort: Federal Emergency Management Agency Director Michael Brown was relieved of his onsite command Friday.

Brown was the focus of scorching criticism from state and local officials, as well as evacuees who cursed his relief agency's ineffectiveness.

See KATRINA, page A-5

Before Katrina, there was Pam

Simulation intended as emergency training

By John McQuaid
Staff writer

The document's cover page reads, "Southeast Louisiana Catastrophic Hurricane Functional Plan."

It maps out detailed instructions for emergency managers responding to a deadly hurricane that floods New Orleans and kills more than 60,000, including how to rescue and evacuate hundreds of thousands of people stranded on rooftops or trapped by rising waters; how to quickly mobilize federal, state and local agencies; and how to drain water laced with toxic sludge and clean up a ruined city.

But officials never put the plan into action. It wasn't an official disaster playbook but an experiment, the product of a weeklong simulation conducted last year in which emergency managers confronted a fictional "Hurricane Pam."

The halting emergency response to Hurricane Katrina's aftermath left thousands of people stranded in New Orleans and adjacent areas for days without food and water, with many vulnerable to roaming gangs of outlaws. Flaws in communications and coordination between government agencies at the federal, state and local levels apparently slowed the response, though exactly what went wrong has yet to be determined.

The 109-page report on Pam, dated Sept. 20, 2004, and provided by a participant in the exercise, addresses many of these issues.

The simulation imagined a grim scenario even worse than Katrina: a slow-moving Category 3 hurricane that strikes the New Orleans area, topping levees and causing 10 to 12 feet of flooding in New Orleans and the entire east bank metro area.

Katrina's flood waters spared most of Jefferson Parish and parts of New Orleans.

In the simulation, 61,290 people die, including 24,250 in New Orleans. An additional 384,000 are injured or fall ill.

The exercise grew out of an initiative at the Federal Emergency Management Agency started early in the Bush presidency to develop plans for

See PAM, page A-4

HURRICANE KATRINA AFTERMATH

Compass gives force positive direction

Upbeat leadership uplifts department

By James Varney
Staff writer

STAFF PHOTO BY SCOTT THRELKELD

New Orleans Police Chief Eddie Compass heads to the Ernest N. Morial Convention Center in the back of a Texas National Guard truck Friday. Compass' high-profile role in securing the city has made him somewhat of a celebrity, and he said he now receives several job offers a day. But the native New Orleanian says he wants none of it. 'I want to be police chief here as long as I can,' he said.

For his 47th birthday, Aug. 29, New Orleans Police Chief Eddie Compass got a package of Oreos from his inner circle and the most vicious natural disaster in American history from his Creator.

Almost two weeks later, the chief who begins each morning with a prayer insists good will come to his hometown from Hurricane Katrina.

"There is no doubt about it," he said, when asked about the city's comeback potential.

"We had the worst schools in the United States, and now we can rebuild them. We had one of the highest murder rates in the United States, and now we have an opportunity to remake that culture."

Compass' rosy certitude is reassuring, and his seemingly bottomless energy, particularly in the past week, has buoyed the spirits of a police force rocked by the storm and the war it unleashed between cops and robbers. The chief acknowledges the terrible cost, and he has publicly broken down more than once, but he refuses to dwell on the disaster.

"I can't handle the grief right now," he said.

Proving police mettle

For a time, it appeared he wouldn't have time for any emotion. Barricaded inside the Hyatt Hotel, his communications system blown, and his top management team deliberately spread out around the city to avoid a catastrophic loss of leadership with one hit, Compass seemed invisible. In the dire three days after Katrina, as officers patrolled the streets with assault rifles and sniper scopes, they would say they didn't know whether they still had a chief.

Since then, however, Compass has become ubiquitous. He's at the NOPD's fluid command center outside the Harrah's Casino at least twice a day, throwing his arms around officers, calling out to captains by name, and telling the knots of reporters that flock around him about stories that must be told.

Compass has proved the department's mettle.

In the process, he has become a celebrity. He tells everyone he was "kidnapped" by Oprah Winfrey, and he has given extensive access to television news stars Ted Koppel and Ed Bradley. He does interviews for Mexican television, chats with European reporters and patiently answers questions from the U.S. media hoard.

Between meetings with his top staff, Compass has become a roving press conference. "Welcome to my world," he said, rolling his eyes as two more reporters chased him inside City Hall. "Pretty hectic, isn't it?"

The elevator works intermittently at City Hall, and when it's not working, Compass climbs the stairs to the ninth floor where he runs an Emergency Operations Center that also houses the New Orleans Fire Department, Federal Emergency Management Agency officials and rotating batches of soldiers. "This ain't nothing," he said, toiling up the stairs Friday afternoon. "At the Hyatt, we walked up twice a day to see the mayor, who was on the twenty-seventh floor."

He is not the only one climbing stairs. His wife, eight months' pregnant with the couple's second child, a boy, is living in the third floor of a house in Denham Springs, a situation the superintendent is none too pleased about. His first wife is in Texas with their two daughters, and their son, Eddie Compass IV, is enrolled at Texas A&M University.

So all are safe, and Katrina spared his Algiers neighborhood. That allows him to focus on the job at hand, Compass said, and for the most part the gregarious face he presents the press and troops is the same one seen by those working in or around the office where, each night, he sleeps on an army cot with air conditioning from a window unit.

Rejects job offers

An estimated 100 officers left their post in the city's darkest moments last week, when two took their own lives. In public, Compass and his top aides maintain a sympathetic air when talking about the bolted cops, instead steering conversations back to the many, many officers who stayed and performed heroically.

In private, though, the chief shares the department's widespread disgust for those who deserted in a conversation with federal sharpshooters at Harrah's.

Heavily armed teams such as those frequently ask the chief to pose for pictures, and everyone wants a handshake or a hug when Compass makes one of his high-energy appearances. Indeed, the chief said his sky-high profile has led to some unsolicited career opportunities. "Can you believe it? In the middle of this madness, I get two or three job offers a day."

The native New Orleanian, St. Augustine grad, and veteran NOPD cop said he will not leave.

"I'm going to be the last one out of this city," he said. "And you print this: Stop calling me, please, with other offers. I want to be police chief here as long as I can and as long as Mayor Nagin will have me."

Jefferson Parish lumbers to feet after Katrina

Northrop Grumman restarting operations

By Michelle Krupa
West Bank bureau

STAFF PHOTOS BY SUSAN POAG

Corey Lerille picks up roofing materials at Home Depot on Friday in Gretna. Lerille says he owns 10 fourplexes in Marrero and Algiers, and he was buying materials to begin repairs. Temporary passes will be given Monday to essential workers and homeowners who want to begin reconstruction.

As Jefferson Parish continued to dig out from Hurricane Katrina's wreckage, the area's largest private employer called back some of its workforce Friday, aiming to jumpstart its shipbuilding enterprise in Avondale as a sister facility in Pascagoula, Miss., recovered from far more severe storm damage, a spokesman said.

Northrop Grumman Corp. asked maintenance, scaffold and security shift personnel to report to the Avondale shipyard, if possible, Monday at 5:30 a.m. as the company worked to reopen its Mississippi shipyard, formerly known as Ingalls, spokesman Bill Glenn said.

"The New Orleans operation did not sustain as much damage as Pascagoula," he said, adding that he did not know whether workers from Mississippi might be shifted to work in suburban New Orleans. "We're still in recovery mode."

Supervisors in the production, QA, PC, industrial engineering and material supervision department are expected to report to a meeting today at 9 a.m. at Ormond Country Club in Destrehan.

New Orleans area employees should visit one of three locations on Sunday and Monday between 9 a.m. and 4 p.m. to check in at: Winn Dixie, 375 North Canal Blvd., Thibodeaux; Winn Dixie Shopping Center, 4560 Highway 1, Raceland; Wal-Mart, 2799 West Thomas St., Hammond.

The announcement came less than a month after Northrop unveiled plans to lay off 400 workers at the Avondale yard and 500 workers in Pascagoula by year's end. A hiring freeze already had slashed about 400 jobs and another 600 were expected to be eliminated but next summer through resignations, retirements and other departures.

Meanwhile, at least 60,000 Jefferson residents still were living in their homes Friday after being asked to leave Thursday evening so work crews could have free reign to restart electricity, water and drainage services, officials said. Many more were expected to return Monday, when temporary passes would be given to essential workers and homeowners who want to begin reconstruction.

Parish President Aaron Broussard said top officials in Kenner and Harahan have begged him to allow all residents back into those towns immediately to reopen businesses that already have regained water and power. A boil-water remained in effect in East Jefferson but was lifted Friday on the West Bank.

Jefferson Parish banks also were expected to open some branches across the parish Monday, he said.

But Emergency Management Director Water Maestri said that until sewerage services are fixed, parish officials will continue to bar "nonessential" workers from Jefferson and enforce a 6 p.m. to 6 a.m. curfew. "Sewerage can lead to another disaster, which is disease," he said.

However, Broussard said residents who need to enter Jefferson starting Monday to work for public entities, hospitals or other working businesses can get entry passes at Blue Bayou Waterpark, at Interstate 10 and Highland Road in Baton Rouge, with appropriate identification. Residents who want to get into the parish to work on their houses also will be issued passes, he said.

"We are encouraging businesses to begin the reconstruction right away," he said. "If restaurants want to open up, it might look like Casablanca with troops from everywhere, but they're customers.

"What we don't want is people meandering through the utility trucks, slowing things up," Broussard added. "The curfew is strict. You don't want to spend the night here. You'll be miserable."

Maestri said renovating the sewerage system has been hampered by delayed delivery of 400 generators to operate lift stations. Maestri said he asked the Federal Emergency Management Agency for the generators Aug. 28, but only half of them arrived Friday, he said.

"Nobody knows" where they are, Maestri said. "Ghosts stole them."

FEMA spokeswoman Lara Uselding said the agency has been delivering generators to parishes across southeast Louisiana based on assessments by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers of requests approved by the state.

"We are working around the clock to deploy generators," she said. "Right now, Jefferson Parish has received generators that would help them begin the process of making the environment livable."

Uselding said, however, said she did not know how Jefferson could have received dozens of generators or whether the parish might get more.

"They could not have gotten 200," she said. "I don't where they got that number."

OUR GOOD HANDS® ARE HERE TO HELP.

The people of Allstate would like to express our concern for those affected by Hurricane Katrina and let you know that our thoughts are with you.

The Allstate Catastrophe Team has Mobile Response Units in the impacted areas with teams of claims specialists ready to assist you.

Nothing is more important than your personal safety. So please follow the advice of local authorities and know that we are standing by ready to help.

ALLSTATE'S CATASTROPHE HOTLINE: 1-800-54-STORM

Allstate®
You're in good hands.

www.allstate.com

Allstate Insurance Company, Allstate Property and Casualty Insurance Company and Allstate Indemnity Company: Northbrook, IL. ©2005 Allstate Insurance Company.
The "Cupped Hands" logo is a registered service mark of Allstate Insurance Company.

Disaster plan went unused by city

PAM, from A-1

the worst possible disasters that could hit the United States.

The initiative was sidelined for a time after the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks but moved forward last year. According to a federal document outlining the Louisiana project released by congressional Democrats Friday, "FEMA and the Louisiana Office of Emergency Preparedness believe that the gravity of the situation calls for an extraordinary level of advance planning to improve government readiness to respond effectively to such an event."

The document says that once complete, the Louisiana plan was to be used as a model for plans for other extreme disasters, including terrorist strikes.

The Pam simulation was meticulously designed and run by a private contractor, Baton Rouge-based Innovative Emergency Management Inc.

"We were still fairly early in the process" of developing a formal response plan for New Orleans, IEM President Madhu Beriwal said. "This was part of FEMA's initiative for doing catastrophic disaster planning. New Orleans was picked as the first place to be studied."

The Pam exercise had more 270 participants from federal, regional and local agencies, Beriwal said. Officials gathered at Louisiana's Office of Emergency Preparedness in Baton Rouge and were presented with a hurricane scenario designed by Louisiana State University researchers.

"It was a slow-moving Category 3 storm, something that could quite easily happen, and designed so that it totally flooded the city, so that the participants could try to understand the full impacts of a flooded New Orleans," said Ivor Van Heerden, an LSU professor who used computer modeling to help create a realistic hurricane.

"In many affected parishes, a high percentage of the population remained in the parish at landfall, resulting in high numbers of fatalities and nonfatal injuries," the report says. "Transportation will be limited due to flooded roadways and a shortage of resources such as fuel. There is no medical treatment within the affected area. Local resources will be exhausted. … Communications networks are non-functioning."

The Pam scenario envisioned other problems now confronting New Orleans as well.

The report says local health services and schools would be out of commission, more than 600,000 local homes would be destroyed, and it describes a "HazMat gumbo" in the streets that would render the area unlivable for at least a year.

"An estimated 710,808 households in the affected area have released 236,936 cubic yards of household hazardous waste into the still-rising floodwaters. Floating coffins appear sporadically in flooded areas, totaling as many as 500. Some subsurface tanks, possibly containing fuel, have buckled or breached the pavement. Many water surfaces … have a visible sheen due to chemicals," the description reads.

The report was not perfectly on the mark.

The number of dead from Hurricane Katrina, though not yet counted, appears to be significantly lower than Pam's hypothetical death toll, for example. The report also does not contemplate the widespread looting and disorder that erupted in the days after Katrina. Beriwal said that subject was supposed to come up in a later meeting.

During the simulation, participants broke into groups and tried to devise responses as the disaster scenario unfolded. For example, one group of about 25 officials focused on debris removal as Pam's floodwaters dropped, coordinating requests for assistance from local governments the with the Army Corps of Engineers, said Art Jones, the chief of the disaster recovery division for the Louisiana Office of Homeland Security and Emergency Preparedness.

The final Pam report outlines in minute detail 15 subjects that emergency managers should address during and after a catastrophic storm hitting New Orleans. They range from the mundane, such as where to billet emergency responders, to core issues such as rescue operations, medical treatment, and housing for displaced people.

It assumes a high degree of coordination between federal, state, and local officials, something that has been a thorny issue in Katrina. But Jones said the Pam exercise was valuable simply because it drew everyone involved together to sit down face-to-face, something that is paying off now.

The report recommends a massive mobilization of transportation assets to evacuate the region after the hurricane has passed, another problem that plagued response last week. "A major limiting factor in executing this plan will be a shortage of transportation facilities," it says.

For example, it says 400 buses per day would be needed to transport an estimated half-million storm victims out of the affected area to temporary medical facilities set up some distance away. Katrina victims waited for days for buses or other transport out of the city.

• • • • • •

John McQuaid can be reached at john.mcquaid@newhouse.com or (202) 383-7889.

A MESSAGE TO THOSE AFFECTED BY HURRICANE KATRINA. WE'RE HERE WHEN YOU NEED US.

At times like these, even small things can make a big difference. As your neighbors and your bank, we'd like to lend a hand. If you've been affected by the recent disaster, the Washington Mutual team will be available to help you meet your financial needs during the difficult days ahead.

HERE ARE JUST A FEW WAYS TO EASE YOUR ROAD TO FINANCIAL RECOVERY

Ask about alternate plans for payment of your Washington Mutual loans.

Washington Mutual CDs may be eligible for early withdrawal without penalties.

Receive priority processing on a home equity loan application so you can get cash quickly and easily with a reduced interest rate.

Receive priority processing on a personal line of credit application.

You can help those affected by the disaster by joining Washington Mutual in donating to the American Red Cross disaster relief fund at your neighborhood Financial Center. If you need more information, please don't hesitate to contact us. In the meantime, we will get through this together.

CALL 1-800-788-7000 FOR GENERAL INFORMATION,
OR CALL 1-800-472-1254 (24 HOURS A DAY, 7 DAYS A WEEK)
TO DISCUSS LOAN PAYMENT PLANS.

EQUAL HOUSING LENDER

FDIC Insured

Washington Mutual
MORE HUMAN INTEREST™

Offer subject to approval. CD early withdrawal penalty waiver not available within seven days of your deposit or prior withdrawal. Washington Mutual has loan offices and financial centers and accepts loan applications and deposits in: Washington Mutual Bank – many states; Washington Mutual Bank, doing business as Washington Mutual Bank, FA – many states; and Washington Mutual Bank fsb – ID and UT; MT (loan offices and applications only).

"I think there's some encouragement in what we found in the initial sweeps that some of the catastrophic death that some people predicted may not, in fact, have occurred."

TERRY EBBERT, chief of homeland security for the city

STAFF PHOTO BY ELLIS LUCIA

Traveling North Claiborne Avenue, military personnel scour the area around the Iberville housing development and St. Louis Cemetery No. 2, looking for people to rescue.

Much-criticized FEMA chief is sent back to Washington

KATRINA, from A-1

They charged that his agency arrived too late with too little, as tens of thousands suffered on rooftops, highway overpasses and squalid evacuation centers in the first days after Katrina flooded the city.

Brown was replaced by Coast Guard Vice Adm. Thad W. Allen, who was overseeing New Orleans relief, recovery and rescue efforts, Homeland Security Secretary Michael Chertoff announced.

Chertoff said Brown will return to Washington and resume his duties as head of FEMA, where he will concentrate on making sure the agency is prepared to deal with other potential disasters.

Asked if he was being made a scapegoat for a federal relief effort that has drawn widespread and sharp criticism, Brown told The Associated Press after a long pause: "By the press, yes. By the president, no."

But a source close to Brown, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the FEMA director had been considering leaving after the hurricane season ended in November and that Friday's action virtually assures his departure.

While Brown prepares to return to Washington, Bush will make his third visit to Louisiana and Mississippi on Sunday, the White House announced.

While some searched for bodies Friday, other soldiers and police continued to urge holdout residents to leave the city. But after two days of warning they would judiciously employ force to move people, if necessary, officials appeared to be delaying that.

"At this time, force is not being used," said City Attorney Sherry Landry. "Rather, our offices and troops continue to strongly encourage those not assisting with the recovery effort to leave."

Landry said crews are working to clear glass from the streets of the Central Business District, where power should be restored by the end of next week.

Entergy New Orleans President and Chief Executive Officer Dan Packer said he hopes to have power restored to the French Quarter and Uptown neighborhoods within two weeks.

Entergy set up a huge tent city in Kenner to house, fuel and equip 1,500 utility workers setting out each day at first light. Company officials said it may soon grow to 4,000. Two smaller communities have sprouted on the West Bank.

Meanwhile, Ebbert said that close to one-third of the city's drainage pumps are working to remove water from the city.

In Kenner, authorities reported that two-thirds of the city remained without power, but the city was pumped dry and roads were open.

Elsewhere in Jefferson, at least 60,000 residents appeared to be in their homes, a condition that did not please authorities.

Parish President Aaron Broussard opened the parish so homeowners could make quick inspection trips Monday through Wednesday. But many have stayed, without power or a functioning sewerage system.

"Sewage can lead to another disaster, which is disease," said Emergency Operations Director Walter Maestri.

He said that until sewerage services are fixed, parish officials will continue to bar "nonessential" workers from Jefferson and enforce a 6 p.m. to 6 a.m. curfew. But bowing to pressure, parish officials asked residents wanting to enter the parish Monday to collect entry passes at Blue Bayou Water Park, at Interstate 10 and Highland Road in Baton Rouge.

Meanwhile, St. Tammany reported increasing signs of life.

"The majority of the parish should be back to normal, at some level, in two or three weeks," said Parish President Kevin Davis.

But in some devastated areas like the southern part of Slidell and communities like Oak Harbor and Eden Isles, "it's going to be months," he said.

By late Friday, Cleco, the dominant power supplier in the parish, and Washington-St. Tammany Electric Cooperative had restored electricity to about 40 percent of the parish.

Crews from Boh Brothers Construction Co. will begin making emergency repairs Monday to the I-10 twin spans linking New Orleans and Slidell, said Mark Lambert, communications director for the Department of Transportation and Development.

One of the two bridges should be open to one-lane, two-way traffic in about six weeks, Lambert said. Engineers are still assessing which of the two spans is the least damaged and can be brought into service.

The state probably will solicit bids early next year to rebuild both bridges entirely at a cost of $350 million to $500 million, Lambert said.

Police and fire officials reported a quiet night Thursday evening, with only three fires and no major incidents overnight.

• • • • • • • • •

With reporting by Ed Anderson, Paul Bartels, Gwen Filosa, Michelle Krupa, Jan Moller, Laura Ricks and Steve Ritea

STAFF PHOTO BY KATHY ANDERSON

An army UH-60 Blackhawk helicopter drops sand bags into the breech of the London Avenue Canal.

FEMA chief removed from Katrina duties

La. officials applaud leadership change

By Jan Moller and Bruce Alpert
Staff writers

In a tacit admission that Hurricane Katrina rescue efforts were mishandled, the Bush administration Friday replaced Federal Emergency Management Agency Director Michael Brown as the point man for the massive federal relief operation.

Homeland Security Secretary Michael Chertoff said Brown will return to Washington and resume his duties as head of FEMA, where he will focus on making sure the agency is prepared to deal with other potential disasters.

Brown is being replaced by Coast Guard Vice Adm. Thad Allen, 46, who had been leading the hurricane recovery effort in New Orleans and brings significant experience in dealing with disasters, including the 2001 terrorist attacks in New York. The replacement of Brown with Allen, who was informed of his promotion Friday at 10 a.m., was welcome news to Louisiana officials.

"Two problems have prevented FEMA from fulfilling its duty: a lack of leadership and a lack of resources," said U.S. Sen. Mary Landrieu, D-La. "The administration has fixed half of that equation today. Now we must find a way to fix the rest."

Michael Brown
FEMA director says media made him a scapegoat

Landrieu said Allen brings "serious credentials to the table," including direct experience saving people from hurricanes.

Gov. Kathleen Blanco said Allen "demonstrated a comprehensive understanding of the situation" when he briefed her and Vice President Dick Cheney about the status of the recovery efforts during Cheney's visit to Louisiana on Thursday. "I welcome him and know that we must have a long-term relationship in order to alleviate the suffering and frustration of our people," she said.

Allen, talking to reporters in Baton Rouge, quickly announced that he has two immediate priorities, in addition to the continued rescue of survivors and recovery of bodies. No. 1 is removal of the water from New Orleans, and that will be assisted greatly with the repair of the London Avenue levee, Allen said.

He said his second priority is to "reconstitute the emergency services" in New Orleans, mainly the fire and police departments.

"We need a place for these people to live, to be able to function," he said. "We have contracted with a company to bring two cruise ships into New Orleans to provide berthing and a base of operations to reestablish those basic services in the city."

Allen said he will have lunch today with metro area parish presidents to develop a strategy "to reconstitute communities and community capability to get on with life." That must start, he said, with helping the communities find out where their residents have relocated since the hurricane.

Chertoff portrayed Brown's departure as a necessary move so that he can oversee FEMA from Washington and help it prepare for other emergencies.

"Mike Brown has done everything he possibly could to coordinate the federal response to this unprecedented disaster," he said.

He refused to address questions about Brown's future at the agency or comment on reports in Time and Newsweek magazines that Brown had padded parts of his resume.

But University of Virginia Political analyst Larry Sabato said there is little doubt that Brown was being removed because of widespread dissatisfaction with the rescue effort.

"This is a case where the Bush administration doesn't need to spell out what they did and why they did it," Sabato said. "It's as plain as a wart on the nose of a Miss America. Any attempt by Bush's spokespeople to present this as anything other than an admission of error will be laughed out of the public square."

Brown, who stood alongside Chertoff, Allen and Lt. Gen. Russel Honore at the news conference, did not take questions. Asked later by the Associated Press if he was being made a scapegoat, Brown replied "by the press yes, by the president no."

He denied reports by Time and Newsweek that he had padded his resume, saying that he didn't know why a FEMA news release listed him as an assistant city manager in Edmond, Okla., rather than the correct title, assistant to the city manager. But he said that the job involved emergency planning and the city's mayor confirmed this for the AP.

U.S. Sen. David Vitter, R-La., said that the choice of Allen, the No. 3 official at the Coast Guard, is good news because he has a solid military background and hopefully will be able to expedite rescue and recovery efforts with the least amount of bureaucratic delay.

Vitter said the failures with the early rescue efforts were much more than the "fault of any one person," but revealed systematic problems with both FEMA and state agencies.

U.S. Rep. Charlie Melancon, D-Napoleonville, said he didn't as much fault Brown as he did the funding cuts at FEMA and its reduced clout and authority within the Bush administration.

"Obviously I wasn't the only one asking what you do when your disaster response is a disaster," said Melancon, whose district includes hard-hit St. Bernard and Plaquemines parishes.

But the jury is still out on whether a personnel change at the top will translate into results, he said. "You can cut the head off a chicken, but chances are it'll keep running around the barnyard."

Chertoff said the replacement of Brown with Allen comes as FEMA is entering a new phase in the recovery effort. Although search-and-rescue remains a top priority, Chertoff said the agency now is spearheading an effort to recover the bodies of storm victims.

"I want to have the people who are present here on the ground … able to focus their full attention on what needs to be done," Chertoff said.

He pledged that the body-recovery process will be handled with "dignity" and said it would be one of the agency's top priorities as the search-and-rescue effort winds down.

Lt. Gen. Russell Honore, the Katrina task force commander, said rescuers are finding fewer people to evacuate, but that efforts are still under way to locate residents who want to be brought to shelter.

State estimates seafood losses to hit $1.1 billion

By Ed Anderson
Capital bureau

BATON ROUGE – Hurricane Katrina's ravaging winds and tidal urges have dealt at least a $1.1 billion blow to the state's seafood industry, based on preliminary reports released Friday by the Department of Wildlife and Fisheries.

And U.S. Commerce Secretary Carlos Gutierrez later Friday announced a formal determination of a "fishery failure" in the Gulf of Mexico due to the devastation following Katrina. That declaration covers the Gulf from Pensacola, Fla., to the Texas border, and the Florida Keys, and it opens the way for more federal dollars to assess the impacts, restore the fisheries, and assist fishing communities' recovery efforts.

John Roussel, the department's assistant secretary of fisheries, said the losses would represent about a 40 percent drop in the value of the state's commercial and recreational retail harvest, based on 2003 sales levels of $2.85 billion.

Because it takes oysters two years to rejuvenate, that crop is expected to take a hit of about $300 million this year and next, he said. Most of the oyster production occurs in the waters off St. Bernard and Plaquemines parishes, which were devastated.

Roussel estimates other seafood crops will suffer the following financial losses for next year: shrimp, $539 million; crab, $81 million; saltwater fish, $79 million; menhaden, $93 million; freshwater fish, $1.2 million.

"These projections are subject to adjustments as air and water surveys are made over the next several months," Roussel said. The estimates are based on seafood production in Orleans, Jefferson, Plaquemines, St. Bernard, St. Tammany and lower Lafourche parishes.

As the nation's second largest producer of seafood – second to Alaska – Louisiana produces 35 percent of the nation's oysters and about 30 percent of its blue crabs.

The loss numbers are based on seafood production from Bayou Lafourche eastward to the Mississippi line. Mississippi and Alabama seafood industries were hit hard, but those numbers were unavailable, he said.

The only seafood being produced, Roussel said, is coming from the area west of Terrebonne Parish, mainly in the Atchafalaya area and off the coasts of Cameron and Vermillion parishes.

Additionally, Roussel said, the state recreational fishing industry took a $200 million hit from Katrina. He said about 63 percent of the licensed charter boats and guide vessels were registered in the areas most affected by the hurricane.

"A lot of the boats and infrastructure have been destroyed," he said, including processing plants, cold storage warehouses, boats, docks, ice plants, roads, marinas and bait-and-tackle shops.

Although the extent of the damage to Gulf fishing industries is not yet known, fishing in the region essentially has been halted. The National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration will work with the states to assess damage to the 15 major fishing ports and the 177 seafood processing facilities in Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana.

This insurance company did well

Editor:

Excellent insurance company:

We have heard some bad remarks about insurance companies since the hurricane, so I feel compelled to write about our insurance company, The Hartford.

Our agents have treated us with the greatest respect, always returning our calls, and always being good listeners, where do you find that service any longer?

We got estimates from roofers, tile, painters, gutter installers, new windows, (ours all blew into the house). This time we got high-impact windows, garage door and furniture. So this was not a small project. The first day our agent came to our home, he gave us a nice check to get us started. What a Godsend that was.

I'm sure our agent realized we were very honest. Some of the work we have done ourselves was painting the living room, dining room and foyer, plus the new garage door.

Our home is just about done and it is a real pleasure to see what we have accomplished.

Thank you Hartford, we never could have done this without you.

Shirley Baccarella
Punta Gorda

Appeared in the Sun newspaper of Charlotte Harbor, FL

We treat you with respect.
We return your calls and we always listen.

But don't take our word for it.

Call 1-800-243-5860 24 hours a day.

After the storm, you can be certain The Hartford will be there to help. Our claim professionals are ready to handle your claims fairly and efficiently. At The Hartford, it feels good to have nearly 200 years of keeping our promises and standing behind our customers anytime, anywhere.

© 2005 The Hartford Financial Services Group, Inc.

THE HARTFORD
thehartford.com

Algiers a command center for fire, police officials

3 buildings become a makeshift base

By Rob Nelson
Staff writer

The weather is steaming, the accommodations are makeshift, and the recovery will take months, but for Capt. James Hay of the New York City Fire Department, the mission remains clear.

"We learned after 9/11 that no one city can do it by themselves," he said Friday.

The 22-year veteran of the NYFD is one of about 1,100 military, fire and medical officials who have set up shop in a corner of Algiers to take the logistical and perhaps some of the emotional weight of Hurricane Katrina recovery efforts off New Orleans police and fire departments.

Three buildings in Algiers have been transformed into headquarters for the crews: the Little Sisters of the Poor's Mary Joseph Residence, which is housing fire officials from Maryland and many New Orleans firefighters and their displaced families; Our Lady of Holy Cross College, where military officials and New York firefighters have taken ground; and Our Lady Wisdom Health Care Center, which is serving as a command center for several agencies.

With the rest of New Orleans still devastated, Algiers is bustling with recovery efforts, including Army camps established at the Naval Support Activity as well as the Behrman Sports Complex, now the headquarters for citywide cleanup.

At the Mary Joseph Residence, three flags have been draped over the entrance: Maryland's state flag, the American flag and one featuring the New Orleans fleur de lis. The site is filled with firetrucks and other emergency vehicles packed with supplies, including bottled water, napkins and detergent. One room, called the Sacred Heart Center, has been converted into a bedroom.

A firefighter on Friday napped in a hallway on a thin foam mattress, while others smoked cigarettes or talked on cell phones outside. Some simply sat, perched on what seemed to be large seats removed from minivans.

At Holy Cross College, Army Capt. Dave Maxwell from Fort Hood, Texas, said he and several of his soldiers, many of whom returned from Iraq five months ago, volunteered for duty in New Orleans. "It gives us a chance to use our ability to directly help the American people," he said.

STAFF PHOTO BY SUSAN POAG

A soldier from the Army's 1st Cavalry Division, based in Fort Hood, Texas, patrols Newton Street in Algiers, where a handwritten message urged Hurricane Katrina to stay away.

Help has poured in from nearly 20 states, including California, Illinois, Texas, Iowa, Oklahoma, Montana, Idaho, Arkansas and Wyoming. Some of the soldiers are staying in a tent city at Holy Cross College, including Pfc. Richard Martinez, who kept post at the campus entrance, checking incoming traffic. "People here are really nice," said Martinez, a soldier in Maxwell's troop. "They appreciate us being here; we are here to help them."

Martinez, who had never been to New Orleans before, said he didn't mind the conditions inside his tent, which can sleep six to eight soldiers. "I don't care how long we'll be here," he said, feet away from where officials spray painted a large white circle on the college's front lawn for helicopter landings.

Hay said crews are not only repairing fire stations but also have helped firefighters check on their homes. Of the 350 New York firefighters in Algiers, about 30 are part of an emergency management team that has been trained to assist with disasters. Formed after the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks, the team is finally getting a chance to put its plans into action, Hay said.

"This is the first time we've had to implement it in a true disaster," he said.

Meanwhile, at the Behrman Sports Complex, work crews continued to fan out to clean streets citywide. Usually swamped with teenagers looking for basketball pickup games and children swimming in the public pool, the complex is stacked with trucks, equipment, portable bathrooms and trailers. Omni Pinnacle, which is based in Slidell, is leading the effort along with dozens of subcontractors.

Ricky Lyne, who lives in Bastrop and works for an Arkansas engineering company, has been on the job since Monday, cleaning streets and cutting trees along with 30 others from his company. Most of the men worked 12-hour days, including lunch and water breaks. A veteran of Hurricane Ivan cleanup efforts in Florida, Lyne said he has seen progress in New Orleans. "It's in bad shape, but it looks better every day."

La. seeks help compiling evacuee shelter database

By Jan Moller
Capital bureau

State officials are trying to develop a database of shelters in Louisiana and are urging churches and other nonprofit groups that are housing evacuees from Hurricane Katrina to register with the Department of Social Services.

Terri Ricks, undersecretary of social services, said any group hosting 25 or more people in a non-private home needs to contact their local emergency preparedness office. The local office then will ensure that the shelter gets registered with the state.

More than 54,000 Louisiana residents displaced by Hurricane Katrina are being housed at about 240 registered shelters around the state, Social Services Secretary Ann Williamson said. But officials think many more are living in other shelters that the state doesn't know about.

Ricks said shelters that register will receive a visit from the state in an attempt to make sure that they have enough resources and that evacuees are receiving proper care. The visits are designed to resolve any specific concerns and make sure they can stay up and running, Ricks said.

The state has set up a hotline for shelter operators to register: 1-866-310-7610.

On a different matter, Williamson announced that the deadline for evacuees to register for emergency food-stamp benefits has been extended by a week. More than 130,000 displaced Louisianians have registered for more than $55 million in food stamps since Sept. 2 under an emergency federal waiver. The registration period had been scheduled to expire Friday at 4:30 p.m., but it has been extended to Sept. 16.

Although there have been reports of long lines at the Office of Family Support centers where applications are being taken, Williamson said the waits are getting shorter. "With each day, the efficiency of our office operations has increased," she said.

People who were already signed up for food stamps before Katrina do not have to visit the offices to get assistance, as their benefits will be automatically credited to their EBT cards.

The emergency benefits are available to residents of the following parishes: Orleans, Jefferson, Plaquemines, St. Bernard, Washington, St. Tammany, St. Charles, St. John, West Feliciana, Lafourche, Terrebonne, Tangipahoa, Livingston and St. Helena.

Reaching Out to Shell and Motiva Employees

Our thoughts are with everyone hurt by Hurricane Katrina. Our greatest focus now is to assure the safety and welfare of our employees and their families in the devastated Gulf Coast communities.

If you are a Shell or Motiva employee affected by this natural disaster who has not already contacted your supervisor, we urge you to do so immediately. They can help as you try to manage both your personal and work-related needs.

Contact our emergency response lines at 1-866-745-5489 or 1-877-40-SHELL. They are open daily from 7 am to 10 pm Central Standard Time, including weekends. Or, if you can access the Web, send an email to katrinahelp@shell.com for Human Resources assistance.

These communication lines are dedicated to address your questions related to replacement or redirected payroll, disruptions in banking and mail services, loan assistance, prescription drugs, location-specific information and more. Also, go to www.shell.com/us to find other employee assistance information that could provide you some much-needed relief.

We are here to help.

JONES WALKER

Jones Walker has formed an interdisciplinary task force to assist clients with their efforts to recover from Hurricane Katrina. The Disaster Recovery Client Team offers assistance in insurance coverage, tax incentives and abatement, employment law, corporate reorganization and bankrutcy, FEMA and federal disaster assistance, SBA business claims, environmental and clean-up, real estate and construction.

Call our Baton Rouge office and ask for a Disaster Recovery Client Team member.

During the recovery from the devastating effects of Hurricane Katrina, the law firm of Jones Walker has relocated our New Orleans based attorneys to our other offices. Anyone wishing to reach an attorney may call or e-mail them at one of the following Jones Walker office locations.

BATON ROUGE 225.248.2000

| | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Acomb, Robert | bacomb@joneswalker.com | Gary, Leon | lgary@joneswalker.com | Murphy, Margaret | mmurphy@joneswalker.com |
| Adams, Mark | madams@joneswalker.com | Geary, Cove | cgeary@joneswalker.com | Najder, Ken | knajder@joneswalker.com |
| Algood, Davis | palgood@joneswalker.com | Glovinsky, Amy | aglovinsky@joneswalker.com | Nunes, Sonny | snunes@joneswalker.com |
| Anderson, Jennifer | janderson@joneswalker.com | Gomila, John | jgomila@joneswalker.com | Ourso, Justin | jourso@joneswalker.com |
| Anseman, Norman | nanseman@joneswalker.com | Goodier, Glenn | ggoodier@joneswalker.com | Parkey, Joe | jparkey@joneswalker.com |
| Backstrom, Bill | bbackstrom@joneswalker.com | Gottsegen, Rebecca | bgottsegen@joneswalker.com | Percy, James | jpercy@joneswalker.com |
| Ballay, Amanda | aballay@joneswalker.com | Gray, Jeff | jgray@joneswalker.com | Perry, Michael | mperry@joneswalker.com |
| Bayard, Alton | abayard@joneswalker.com | Grehan, Hughes | hgrehan@joneswalker.com | Poore, Shelley | spoore@joneswalker.com |
| Benjamin, Edward | ebenjamin@joneswalker.com | Gundlach, Virginia | ggundlach@joneswalker.com | Potter, Thomas | tpotter@joneswalker.com |
| Bergin, Edward | ebergin@joneswalker.com | Hamilton, Regina | rhamilton@joneswalker.com | Quinn, Louis | lquinn@joneswalker.com |
| Bertram, Richard | rbertram@joneswalker.com | Hartel, Genevieve | ghartel@joneswalker.com | Quirk, Aimee | aquirk@joneswalker.com |
| Bieck, Robert | rbieck@joneswalker.com | Hardin, Harry | hhardin@joneswalker.com | Radlauer, David | dradlauer@joneswalker.com |
| Black, Brandon | bblack@joneswalker.com | Heidingsfelder, Jane | jheidingsfelder@joneswalker.com | Reynolds, John | jreynolds@joneswalker.com |
| Blackman, John | jblackman@joneswalker.com | Hennen, Mark | mhennen@joneswalker.com | Rivers, Bob | brivers@joneswalker.com |
| Boyce, John | jboyce@joneswalker.com | Henry, Miriam | mhenry@joneswalker.com | Rousseau, Dionne | drousseau@joneswalker.com |
| Bryan, Boyd | bbryan@joneswalker.com | Heusel, Neil | nheusel@joneswalker.com | Scafidel, Amy | ascafidel@joneswalker.com |
| Brown, Matthew | mbrown@joneswalker.com | Hines, Bill | bhines@joneswalker.com | Scheffy, Rob | rscheffy@joneswalker.com |
| Casey, Robert | rcasey@joneswalker.com | Hubert, Thomas | thubert@joneswalker.com | Schroeder, Rick | rschroeder@joneswalker.com |
| Casey, Tom | tcaseyjr@joneswalker.com | Hufft, Corinne | chufft@joneswalker.com | Schuette, Bill | bschuette@joneswalker.com |
| Casey, Thomas Sr. | tcaseysr@joneswalker.com | Johnson, Ryan | rjohnson@joneswalker.com | Servat, Vanessa | vservat@joneswalker.com |
| Cenac, Monique | mcenac@joneswalker.com | Jordan, Mary Ellen | mjordan@joneswalker.com | Shannon, Jack | jshannon@joneswalker.com |
| Chabinska, Izabela | ichabinska@joneswalker.com | Joyce, Bill | bjoyce@joneswalker.com | Simoneaux, Kelly | ksimoneaux@joneswalker.com |
| Chambers, Susan | schambers@joneswalker.com | Kerth, David | dkerth@joneswalker.com | Smith, Amelia | asmith@joneswalker.com |
| Chenevert, Scott | schenevert@joneswalker.com | Koehl, Eddie | ekoehl@joneswalker.com | Stinson, Susannah | sstinson@joneswalker.com |
| Chevalier, Fred | fchevalier@joneswalker.com | LaGarde, Brandon | blagarde@joneswalker.com | St. Romain, Andy | astromain@joneswalker.com |
| Cloud, Trey | tcloud@joneswalker.com | Landry, Charles | clandry@joneswalker.com | Strayhan, Lee | lstrayhan@joneswalker.com |
| Collins, Donald | dcollins@joneswalker.com | Lane, Charles III | clane@joneswalker.com | Tillery, Jeff | jtillery@joneswalker.com |
| Cortizas, Richard | rcortizas@joneswalker.com | Latham, Gregory | glatham@joneswalker.com | Trauth, Jarred | jtrauth@joneswalker.com |
| Cowley, Amy | acrowley@joneswalker.com | Lavigne, Joseph | jlavigne@joneswalker.com | Trostorff, Alex | atrostorff@joneswalker.com |
| Crosby, Michele | mcrosby@joneswalker.com | Lee, Andy | alee@joneswalker.com | Tucker, Bob | btucker@joneswalker.com |
| Cunningham, Mark | mcunningham@joneswalker.com | Lewis, Josh | jlewis@joneswalker.com | Tyler, Rich | rtyler@joneswalker.com |
| Currault, Douglas | dcurrault@joneswalker.com | Lewis, Sidney | slewis@joneswalker.com | Vance, Patrick | pvance@joneswalker.com |
| Curran, Anita | acurran@joneswalker.com | Mann, Christopher | cmann@joneswalker.com | Vasquez, Rae | rvasquez@joneswalker.com |
| Davis, Daniel | ddavis@joneswalker.com | Marquez, Charlotte | cmarquez@joneswalker.com | Viso, Corrine | cviso@joneswalker.com |
| Duncan, Kelly | kduncan@joneswalker.com | Martin, Ted | tmartin@joneswalker.com | Walsh, Robby | rwalsh@joneswalker.com |
| Duvielh, John | jduvielh@joneswalker.com | McGaw, Katie | kmcgaw@joneswalker.com | Waltz, Jeff | jwaltz@joneswalker.com |
| Edwards, David | dedwards@joneswalker.com | Mauldin, Mick | mmauldin@joneswalker.com | Wegmann, Dirk | dwegmann@joneswalker.com |
| Eitel, Nan | neitel@joneswalker.com | Maxwell, Meredith | mmaxwell@joneswalker.com | Weldy, Todd | tweldy@joneswalker.com |
| Faroldi, Jennifer | jfaroldi@joneswalker.com | McHenry, Lewis | lmchenry@joneswalker.com | Windhorst, Judith | jwindhorst@joneswalker.com |
| Fischer, Madeleine | mfischer@joneswalker.com | McMains, Chuck | cmcmains@joneswalker.com | Wolfe, Richard | rwolfe@joneswalker.com |
| Fleet, Warren | wfleet@joneswalker.com | McMillan, Rick | rmcmillan@joneswalker.com | Worley, Robert | rworley@joneswalker.com |
| Foster, Janice | jfoster@joneswalker.com | Meroney, Ben | bmeroney@joneswalker.com | Wright, Jim | jwright@joneswalker.com |
| Foster, Lance | lfoster@joneswalker.com | Meyer, Conrad | cmeyer@joneswalker.com | Wynne, Bill | bwynne@joneswalker.com |
| Futrell, Elizabeth | lfutrell@joneswalker.com | Millan, Stan | smillan@joneswalker.com | Zander, Scott | szander@joneswalker.com |
| Gardner, Mary | mgardner@joneswalker.com | Mueller, George | gmueller@joneswalker.com | | |

HOUSTON 281.296.4400

| | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Balart, Etienne | ebalart@joneswalker.com | Hearn, Curt | chearn@joneswalker.com | Ridley, Coleman | cridley@joneswalker.com |
| Bell, Allison | abell@joneswalker.com | Hunter, David | dhunter@joneswalker.com | Roberson, Tom | troberson@joneswalker.com |
| Brechtel, Timothy | tbrechtel@joneswalker.com | Hurley, Grady | ghurley@joneswalker.com | Romanov, Jane | jromanov@joneswalker.com |
| Broders, John | jbroders@joneswalker.com | Jacob, Clyde | cjacob@joneswalker.com | Rosenblum, Carl | crosenblum@joneswalker.com |
| Buchanan, Lisa | lbuchanan@joneswalker.com | Jacobs, Ben | bjacob@joneswalker.com | Ruoff, Jim | jruoff@joneswalker.com |
| Chernekoff, Mike | mchernekoff@joneswalker.com | Kitchen, John | jkitchen@joneswalker.com | Schuster, Ruth | rschuster@joneswalker.com |
| Craig, Michelle | mcraig@joneswalker.com | Landry, Keith | klandry@joneswalker.com | Sullivan, Shelley | ssullivan@joneswalker.com |
| Donaldson, Kelly | kdonaldson@joneswalker.com | Lemon, Bob | blemon@joneswalker.com | Strait, William | bstrait@joneswalker.com |
| Frederic, Allen | afrederic@joneswalker.com | Lowenthal, Joe | jlowenthal@joneswalker.com | Veters, Pat | pveters@joneswalker.com |
| McBride, Jamie | jmcbride@joneswalker.com | Marian, Tom | tmarian@joneswalker.com | Whitaker, Eric | ewhitaker@joneswalker.com |
| Funkhouser, Cate | cfunkhouser@joneswalker.com | Masters, Bill | bmasters@joneswalker.com | White, John | jwhite@joneswalker.com |
| Guajardo, Debra | dguajardo@joneswalker.com | McLoughlin, Mike | mmcloughlin@joneswalker.com | Winters, Amy | awinters@joneswalker.com |
| Hainkel, Alida | ahainkel@joneswalker.com | Miller, Steve | smiller@joneswalker.com | Zeringue, Wayne | wzeringue@joneswalker.com |
| Hanemann, Carl | chanemann@joneswalker.com | Nichols, Jeff | jnichols@joneswalker.com | Zohur, Alia | azohur@joneswalker.com |
| Hardin, Pauline | phardin@joneswalker.com | Page, Marshall | mpage@joneswalker.com | | |
| Hawbaker, Don | dhawbaker@joneswalker.com | Ramelli, Rudolph | rramelli@joneswalker.com | | |

LAFAYETTE 337.406.5610

| | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Eagan, Emily | eeagan@joneswalker.com | Nosewicz, Tom | tnosewicz@joneswalker.com | Rosenquest, John | jrosenquest@joneswalker.com |
| Jenkins, Scott | sjenkins@joneswalker.com | Regard, Olivia | oregard@joneswalker.com | Sarpy, Henry | hsarpy@joneswalker.com |
| LeLong, Rivers | rlelong@joneswalker.com | Rice, Barrett | brice@joneswalker.com | Young, Meredith | myoung@joneswalker.com |
| McGuire, Robin | rmcguire@joneswalker.com | Richard, Tara | trichard@joneswalker.com | | |

MIAMI 305.679.5700

| | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Chess, Laurie | lchess@joneswalker.com | Morante, Tom | tmorante@joneswalker.com | Walker, John | jwalker@joneswalker.com |
| Friend, Asher | afriend@joneswalker.com | Belter, Sarah | sbelter@joneswalker.com | | |
| Grassie, Yvonne | ygrassie@joneswalker.com | Timmerman, Gita | gtimmerman@joneswalker.com | | |

WASHINGTON, D.C. 202.203.1000

| | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Cambon, Paul | pcambon@joneswalker.com | Doyle, John | jdoyle@joneswalker.com | King, Russell | rking@joneswalker.com |
| Churchill, James | jchurchill@joneswalker.com | Flynn, David | dflynn@joneswalker.com | Moran, John | jmoran@joneswalker.com |
| Collins, Lionel | lcollins@joneswalker.com | Jaskot, John | jjaskot@joneswalker.com | Rouzan, Don | drouzan@joneswalker.com |
| Crosland, Ed | ecrosland@joneswalker.com | Johnsen, Christian | cjohnsen@joneswalker.com | | |

JONES, WALKER, WAECHTER, POITEVENT, CARRÈRE & DENÈGRE L.L.P. www.joneswalker.com email: info@joneswalker.com

BATON ROUGE ■ HOUSTON ■ LAFAYETTE ■ MIAMI ■ NEW ORLEANS ■ WASHINGTON, D.C.

WATERY WASTELAND

Even though the floodwaters are receding – 11 days after Hurricane Katrina made landfall — much of New Orleans remains underwater. And most of what is high and dry is littered with trash and debris left behind by the storm and the survivors who were trapped in its aftermath.

STAFF PHOTO BY KATHY ANDERSON

NEW ORLEANS: The Lafitte public housing complex is surrounded by the polluted floodwaters left behind by Hurricane Katrina.

STAFF PHOTO BY CHRIS GRANGER

ST. BERNARD PARISH: Ray Brandhurst turns away in disgust after looking at his 47-foot trawler, half-submerged in Bayou Bienvenue on Friday. The toll Katrina took on Brandhurst includes the boat, his home and his livelihood. Even if he hadn't lost the boat, he said, there still is no wharf system or distributors to which he could sell his catch.

STAFF PHOTO BY SEAN GARDNER

NEW ORLEANS: Search-and-rescue crews make their way down Orleans Avenue on Friday as they continue to look for storm survivors to be evacuated.

NEW ORLEANS: A Mardi Gras mask lies among the debris scattered along St. Claude Avenue on Friday.

STAFF PHOTO BY BRETT DUKE

STAFF PHOTO BY KATHY ANDERSON

NEW ORLEANS: Three stray dogs make themselves at home atop the shattered remains of rooftop in the 9th Ward on Friday. The house was destroyed by the storm.

In city of melted clocks, scribes paint Dali scenes

CHRIS ROSE

You hear the word "surreal" in every report from this city now. There is no better word for it.

If Salvador Dali showed up here, he wouldn't be able to make heads or tails of it. Nobody could paint this.

He did that famous painting of the melting clock, and our clocks melted at 6:45 the morning of Aug. 29. That's what the clocks in the French Quarter still say. That's when time stood still.

The Quarter survived all this; you've probably heard that much. Most of what remains unscathed – and I'm using a very relative term here - is a swath of dry land from the Riverbend through Audubon Park, down St. Charles and Tchoupitoulas to the Quarter and into the Bywater.

It's like a land mass the size of Bermuda, maybe, but with not so many golf courses.

There are other dry outposts in the great beyond – little Key Wests across the city – but I haven't seen them.

The weather is beautiful, I don't mind telling you. But if I wrote you a post card, it wouldn't say, "Wish You Were Here."

There are still hearty rose bushes blooming on front porches, and there are still birds singing in the park. But the park is a huge National Guard encampment.

There are men and women from other towns living there in tents and who have left their families to come help us and they are in the park clearing out the fallen timber. My fellow Americans.

Every damn one of them tells you they're happy to be here (despite what you've heard, it still beats the hell out of Fallujah), and every time I try to thank them, on behalf of all of us, I just lose it. I absolutely melt down.

There is nothing quite as ignominious as weeping in front of a soldier.

This is no environment for a wuss like me. We reporters go to other places to cover wars and disasters and pestilence and famine. There's no manual to tell you how to do this when it's your own city.

And I'm telling you: It's hard.

It's hard not to get crispy around the edges. It's hard not to cry. It's hard not to be very, very afraid.

My colleagues who are down here are warriors. There are a half-dozen of us living in a small house on a side street Uptown. Everyone else has been cleared out.

We have a generator and water and military food rations and Doritos and smokes and booze. After deadline, the call goes out: "Anyone for some warm brown liquor?" And we sit on the porch in the very, very still of the night and we try to laugh.

Some of these guys lost their houses – everything in them. But they're here, telling our city's story.

And they stink. We all stink. We stink together.

We have a bunch of guns, but it's not clear to me if anyone in this "news bureau" knows how to use them.

The California National Guard came by and wanted an accounting of every weapon in the building and they wrote the serial numbers down and apparently our guns are pretty rad because they were all cooing over the .38s.

I guess that's good to know.

The Guard wanted to know exactly what we had so they would be able to identify, apparently by sound, what guns were in whose hands if anything "went down" after dark here at this house.

That's not so good to know.

They took all our information and bid us a good day and then sauntered off to retrieve a dead guy on a front porch down the street.

Then the California Highway Patrol – the CHiPs! – came and demanded we turn over our weapons.

What are you going to do? We were certainly outnumbered, so we turned over the guns. Then, an hour later, they brought them back. With no explanation.

Whatev. So here we are. Just another day at the office.

Maybe you've seen that Times-Picayune advertising slogan before: "News, Sports and More."

More indeed. You're getting your money's worth today.

Chris Rose can be reached at noroses@bellsouth.net.

Lawmakers give D.C. colleagues the scoop

Landrieu, Vitter give firsthand accounts

By Bruce Alpert
Washington bureau

WASHINGTON — When Louisiana members returned to Washington this week, they were almost immediately inundated by colleagues, asking them about what they saw on the front lines of communities devastated by Hurricane Katrina.

"I feel a little bit like a reporter," said Sen. Mary Landrieu, D-La. "I don't know if I'm filing my stories correctly or meeting the deadlines, but I feel like a reporter, trying to give people a sense of the magnitude of what we're facing."

Landrieu said she still gets the sense, despite the nonstop media coverage, that the public isn't really aware of the scope of the disaster — the fact that the communities devastated by the hurricane stretch for more than 90,000 square miles over three states -- larger than all of Great Brittan.

Upon Landrieu's return from Louisiana, Senate Democratic Leader Harry Reid, D-Nevada, arranged for almost the entire Democratic caucus to be in the chamber when Landrieu reported on her past two weeks on the ground in Southern Louisiana. Usually, the chamber is mostly empty, but Reid said it was important for senators to learn firsthand what is happening and how the rescue effort continues to fall short of the tremendous needs.

Landrieu told her colleagues that the suffering she has seen firsthand has been immense.

"If my heart is a little heavy today, it's because I've seen more in the last two weeks than I've seen in my entire life," she said.

Sen. David Vitter, R-La., said he's gotten a lot of questions, via his cell phone and e-mail, from Senate colleagues wanting his perspective on the disaster. Vitter said he was eager to provide his assessment because in some instances, he believes, the national media gave a distorted picture of what was happening on the ground.

"I feel a little bit like a reporter. I don't know if I'm filing my stories correctly or meeting the deadlines, but I feel like a reporter, trying to give people a sense of the magnitude of what we're facing."
SEN. MARY LANDRIEU

For example, he said, that some reports about the "toxic soup" of water in some areas in New Orleans implied that the pollution problem was all over Southern Louisiana, when, in fact, "it isn't the case" in downtown New Orleans and much of Jefferson Parish. It's important that this is known, Vitter said, because communities not facing significant pollution problems will be able to begin recovery efforts much sooner.

Vitter also said that reports last week from outside the New Orleans Convention Center and Superdome, which showed "horrible suffering," could have left the impression that only those areas had terrible problems, taking the spotlight off St. Bernard's substantial hurricane damage.

On the House side, Rep. William Jefferson, D-New Orleans, said his colleagues want firsthand reports on the damage, and the status of efforts to rescue those trapped by floodwater in his New Orleans district. But he said he doesn't feel like a reporter updating his readers or viewers.

"They treat me a little bit like someone at a funeral who just lost a loved one," Jefferson said. "They reach out and say how sorry they are. And that they want to help."

Rep. Bobby Jindal, R-Kenner, said he too has been overwhelmed by the offers of help from his congressional colleagues, some of whom traveled to the state to personally deliver relief supplies like water and ice.

But he's also been able to personally attest to the breakdowns of bureaucracy that delayed the resolution of urgent requests for help, he wrote this week for the Wall Street Journal. Among his examples:

Rep. Charlie Melancon, D-Napoleonville, said that he too has found that colleagues wanted to hear firsthand about reports of ineptitude with the federal rescue efforts and wanted to know if they were as bad as portrayed in the media. Melancon said he answers that they probably were "worse."

On Friday, he was complaining that a federal contract to provide air ambulance service in Louisiana was given to two out-of-state firms, rather than Acadian Ambulance of Louisiana, which has been providing the service "quite efficiently" in the aftermath of Katrina.

He said his House colleagues are offering to provide staff to help with constituents' requests for aid that already are flowing in and likely will increase as people look for the right federal agency to help with their personal recovery efforts.

Soldiers return to family, but not to their homes

Bittersweet homecoming for troops from Iraq

By John-John Williams III and Mary Swercyzk
Staff writers

ALEXANDRIA — Staff Sgt. Scott Andrus of New Orleans didn't know Friday how brutal Hurricane Katrina had been to his Uptown home.

After more than a year in Iraq, battling insurgents and trying to rebuild and restore order to the war-torn nation, Andrus surmised it couldn't be worse than what he saw overseas.

All he did know was that he wanted to be with his wife, Heather, and the rest of his family.

"For the last 18 months, I've had only pictures to look at. Even in hard times, knowing they're going to be here, it's not going to be as bad as what I went through," Andrus said.

Amid a backdrop of American flags, balloons, welcome-home banners proclaiming "Our Dad Is a Hero" and the family dogs, about 100 members of the Louisiana National Guard's 1st Battalion 141st Field Artillery returned to the waiting arms of family and friends. About 2,800 members of the group, including 450 soldiers in New Orleans, will return home over the next month.

But what they will find at home may be less than what they had in Iraq.

"He's coming here to no home, no clothes, no car – nothing," said Andrus's mother, Kathy Andrus, whose Boothville business was destroyed. "But he's coming home."

Katrina slammed into the battalion's home base in St. Bernard Parish, submerging Jackson Barracks, at the Orleans-St. Bernard parish line, under several feet of water.

Gov. Kathleen Blanco, who greeted the troops, described the homecoming as a bittersweet moment and pledged the state's assistance in helping the soldiers and their families rebuild their lives.

"I'd like to tell you that hope is here," she said.

"We're glad our soldiers are home," Blanco said to erupting applause. "They needed to be here. They need to help us to rebuild."

And some soldiers will find hefty rebuilding jobs.

Heather Andrus, for instance, thinks the family's home took on water. She hasn't returned to it since the storm, but a television report showed students paddling down the couple's street, she said.

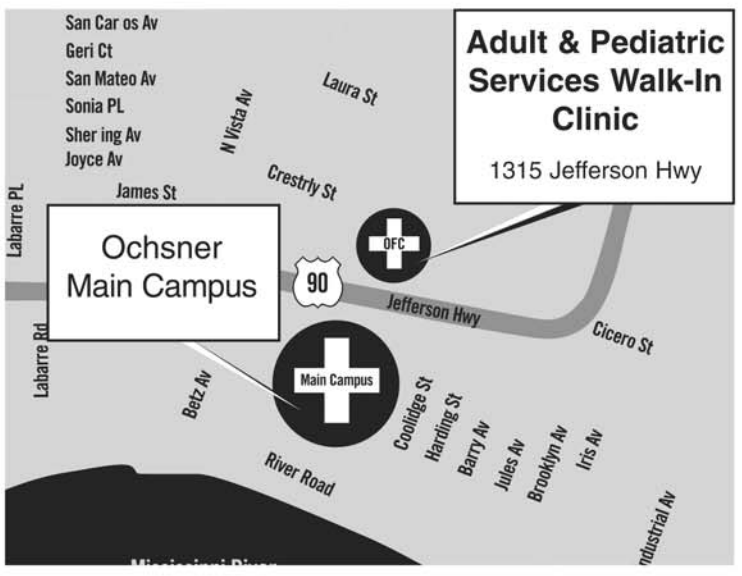
But the rebuilding will be that much easier to take with loved ones back at home.

Dale Standifer of Gentilly was in Alexandria to greet her son, Staff Sgt. Michael Green of Destrehan. His wife and four kids evacuated to Austin, Texas, and were en route to Alexandria.

Standifer said she believes her home is under water, but added she was in good spirits.

"This is just an answer to a prayer," she said. "Of all the time we needed our family, we need them now. My family has been so blessed. We've got each other."

The troops will receive a four-day pass to be with their loved ones. The soldiers will then return to Fort Polk and have the option to re-enlist or demobilize.



Ochsner today:
Still open and operating

Ochsner's main campus hospital functioned effectively all through the hurricane providing essential care to our adult and pediatric patients. Now, as the recovery continues, Ochsner has intensified its efforts to ensure that your healthcare continues uninterrupted.

As an Ochsner patient, you should know that:

- Your medical records are accessible electronically from any Ochsner clinic
- Ochsner hospital is fully operational, including surgery and other major procedures
- The Emergency Department is open and accepting walk-ins
- A new adult and pediatric services primary care walk-in clinic for New Orleans residents has opened at the Ochsner for Children Ambulatory Care Center on Jefferson Highway
- Ochsner clinics in Baton Rouge and on the North Shore are open and adding doctors and more services to accommodate our patients
- Ochsner clinics in Kenner (2120 Driftwood Blvd.), Metairie (2005 Veterans Blvd.), and on the West Bank/Lapalco (4225 Lapalco Blvd.) will open on Monday, September 12

If you are not presently an Ochsner patient, Ochsner is open for you, too, with convenient neighborhood clinics and the advantage of Ochsner's expertise and exceptional capabilities in caring.

Adult & Pediatric Services Walk-In Clinic at Ochsner for Children Ambulatory Care Center
1315 Jefferson Highway
Across from the main campus

Offering pediatrics, internal medicine, obstetrics and cardiology services.
Monday - Friday, 10am - 5pm

If you or a family member needs medical assistance or an appointment, call 1-504-842-3155.

Ochsner
www.ochsner.org
1-504-842-3155

OCHSNER ACCEPTS ALL MAJOR HEALTH PLANS.

Door-to-door searches turning up … not much

Empty homes hint at fewer deaths in Lower 9th Ward

By Gwen Filosa
Staff writer

Federal and local law enforcement agents were finding signs of neither life nor death Friday in house-by-house searches in one of the most traumatized parts of New Orleans: the Lower 9th Ward.

"There is some evidence from what we have found in initial sweeps that catastrophic death may not have occurred," Terry Ebbert, the city's director of homeland security, said Friday outside City Hall. "The numbers so far are relatively minor compared to the dire predictions."

Federal agents led at least five search parties Friday that started focusing on what the Federal Emergency Management Agency has dodged since Hurricane Katrina left Louisiana in agony: compiling a death toll.

Search parties were on the sludge-topped ground in the Lower 9th Ward, conducting house-by-house searches down Tricou Street, crossed by Burgundy, Congress and North Rampart streets off of St. Claude Avenue, for the first time since the water drained away.

"I want to believe most people made it out of here," said Detective Gregory Hamilton of the New Orleans Police Department as he sat for a moment on the front steps of a shotgun at 401 Tricou St.

With Drug Enforcement Administration agents from Miami, the search team padded over black muck and cautiously kicked the sludge off their boots. Most wore face masks to filter out the smell and possible toxins. People were warned to wash their feet.

Several blocks away, on St. Claude Avenue where New Orleans meets St. Bernard Parish, a fire department unit from Maryland said it was also coming up empty-handed when it came to finding people alive or dead.

STAFF PHOTO BY BRETT DUKE

Members of the military search a home Friday in the Lower 9th Ward. Officials estimated that as many as 10,000 people have remained in the city, despite most of it being deluged with murky water with a stench so strong that crews smell it 300 feet in the air.

The front of a shotgun double at 1005 and 1006 Tricou was marked with the orange spray paint that only the military or federal agents are allowed to use. The two orange zeros meant no one was found dead or alive Friday by the DEA.

Dozens of homes along Tricou were also marked with orange zeroes on Friday.

The home searches had protocol: After DEA agents broke in, a woman's voice announced: "Police, DEA." Then, a group of seven National Guard soldiers walked single file into the house to conduct a sweep.

In these few blocks, a dozen or so homes were empty. The only survivors found on Tricou over the course of a few hours Friday were pets, mostly dogs. One poodle gazed out the open front door from a couch. A DEA agent gave it some water, but he said all they could do was call the SPCA to remove the pooch.

We've got to get these dogs out, another DEA agent told him. "I'm a dog lover."

The search units were ordered to identify survivors, the dead or their pets. Had survivors been found, the agents were to ask whether they wanted to evacuate, but no one was instructed to use force.

Had a dead body been found, the agents were under orders to call the federal Disaster Mortuary Operation Rescue Teams, a volunteer effort of morticians, dentists, fingerprint experts and pathologists, among other specialists, who answer to the Department of Homeland Security. They will identify casualties, tag them and perform autopsies.

The only cases that will be reported back to the NOPD will be suspected incidents of foul play

"We want the living," said Capt. Marlon Defillo, the department's spokesman. "Even today, people are calling us" for rescues.

Defillo said it wasn't his place to predict a death toll for New Orleans. Days before, Mayor Ray Nagin said the body count could reach 10,000 for the region.

In the Lower 9th Ward, Hamilton marked the first day since the storm that any law enforcement was on the ground in search of people. "This is the first day we've been allowed here," he said on Tricou Street. "The water was very high."

Two days after the storm, 5th District NOPD officers were able to evacuate on boats from their flooded headquarters at 3900 Claiborne Ave., four blocks from the Industrial Canal, Hamilton said. They then helped evacuate about 2,000 people on Poland Avenue, a staging area for rescues. The survivors were taken to the Superdome.

On Friday, DEA-led teams of out-of-town police officers, National Guard troops and, in the Tricou Street group, Hamilton, banded together to go house by house.

Katrina left filthy cars, downed power lines and a coating of what firefighters and paramedics on the ground called toxic muck. Their boots left black footprints in the brown sludge, which the sun had baked into crust along some streets.

No residents were seen walking the neighborhood, Hamilton said.

Instead, DEA agents in vans, police from Dublin, Ohio, and the National Guard went door to door.

This is Hamilton's police district, where he once tracked down witnesses to murders. Hamilton, a 12-year NOPD veteran, has been a homicide detective for nine years. His Algiers house survived the storm. On Friday, his hope was that the neighborhood he once patrolled had done the same.

But at one house he checked, the door was wide open. A faint black water mark, as high as the air-conditioning unit installed in the home's first-floor living room window, was visible behind him.

• • • • • • • • •

Staff writer Brett Anderson contributed to this story.

Military trucks patrol 9th Ward for holdouts

Troops still search homes, streets

By Jarvis DeBerry
Staff writer

New Orleans Police Department Capt. Tim Bayard sent a group of military trucks into the lowest-lying parts of New Orleans on Friday, in the hopes that some of the most stubborn holdouts would be would be more likely to climb aboard the ground vehicles than boats.

The appearance of trucks seemed to make no difference to the woman sitting outside on Lizardi Street between Chartres and Royal streets. When the group of 5-ton military trucks rumbled through the Holy Cross neighborhood, she was talking to personnel from the Navy and the Coast Guard. Refusing to sway, she waved her hand to indicate she did not want assistance.

Throughout the city Friday, authorities continued to search homes and streets, trying to flush the last holdouts from hiding.

The Oklahoma National Guard's 45th Infantry Brigade 700th Support Battalion provided the trucks and drivers for Friday morning's trip. New Orleans police detective Kevin Imbraguglio sat in the front seat and provided directions.

If there were people to be rescued Friday morning, they weren't showing themselves. The trucks were noisy, and the driver of the lead vehicle honked her horn several times, but the woman on the Lizardi Street sidewalk was the only person to be seen between the Industrial Canal and the parish line.

In neighboring St. Bernard Parish, Lee Phillips was sitting on a brown folding chair outside his Arabi home. He said he had evacuated to Baton Rouge before Hurricane Katrina.

He believed his house had gotten up to 5 feet of water, but there was none there Friday. Phillips had come back to his house on Jannsen Street on Thursday to empty out freezers and refrigerators that were stuffed full with game, he said.

The river side of St. Claude Avenue had been mostly pumped dry Friday, but the opposite was true on the other side. On some streets, water still reached the tops of the big trucks' tires.

North Claiborne Avenue was heavily flooded. Near Martin Luther King Elementary School, a tricycle hung from a tree branch. Farther toward St. Bernard Parish, a propane tank hung from a wire.

Nearby, the rear tires of a sedan rested atop a chain-link fence. The nose of the car was on the ground.

The trucks rolled past, ignoring the wreckage of Hurricane Katrina, searching for people to flush from the city.

BOURQUE PRINTING, INC.
UPTON PRINTING
TRANSDATA SYSTEMS
FORMSCONTROL
DIEZ Office Supplies

NOTICE

Due to the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina,

CONSOLIDATED GRAPHICS

New Orleans Division

(formerly Bourque Printing, Inc., Diez Office Supplies, Forms Control, Transdata Systems and Upton Printing)

has been RELOCATED to our

Baton Rouge Division

10848 Airline Highway
225/291.9090 Fax 225/291.0900
1•800•552•4610

We will continue to warehouse, manufacture and provide all your printing and office supply needs from our Baton Rouge facility.

CONSOLIDATED GRAPHICS
A Division of Champion Industries, Inc.
Commercial Printing, Graphic Design & Office Supplies

Louisiana Farm Bureau Insurance here to HELP YOU RECOVER
After Hurricane Katrina

This is an important message for Louisiana Farm Bureau Insurance customers. Claims teams are located throughout the area affected by Hurricane Katrina and are eager to respond to any property damage loss you may have incurred. If you have not already reported your claim to our Claims Service Center, please call or your local Farm Bureau Insurance Agent.

1-866-275-7322

Promptly serving you is our most important concern.

FARM BUREAU INSURANCE®

Louisiana Farm Bureau Casualty Insurance Co.
Louisiana Farm Bureau Mutual Insurance Co.
Southern Farm Bureau Casualty Insurance Co.
Southern Farm Bureau Life Insurance Co., Jackson, MS

We'll help you put your house back in order.

Whether there's damage to your house or your car, MetLife Auto & Home's Catastrophe Response Team is ready to help our customers. To file a claim or for information, call:

1-800-854-6011

For life insurance and all other product questions please call 1-800-METLIFE

All MetLife and New England Financial associates and agents please call 1-800-232-7000 to report your status

MetLife Auto & Home™ is a brand of Metropolitan Property and Casualty Insurance Company and its Affiliates, Warwick, RI

have you met life today? MetLife®

A Message for...

Displaced State and School System Employees Covered by Louisiana OGB

The Louisiana Office of Group Benefits cares about our 73,000 plan members and families displaced by Hurricane Katrina.

Please check the OGB website for important health care information and coverage changes or call our toll free number.

www.groupbenefits.org

1-800-272-8451

THE LAW OFFICES OF SHER GARNER CAHILL RICHTER KLEIN & HILBERT, LLC

look forward to the recovery of the Gulf South and the New Orleans area after Hurricane Katrina.

The firm announces its temporary location at

5353 ESSEN LANE
SUITE 650
BATON ROUGE, LA
70809

PHONE (225) 757-2185
FAX (225) 757-7674

HURRICANE KATRINA AFTERMATH

Some overworked doctors at airport to head home

They faced sleeplessness and terrible conditions

By Matt Scallan
Kenner bureau

For days on end, they handled a never-ending flood of the sick and wounded streaming out of shattered New Orleans and into the terminal at Louis Armstrong International Airport.

Now, some of the small corps of exhausted doctors, nurses and medics - who treated about 10,000 people - are going home.

"Remember the scene in Atlanta in 'Gone With the Wind?' That's what it was like," said paramedic David Spence of Texas City, Texas, a member of a Disaster Medical Assistance Team organized by the Federal Emergency Management Agency.

D-MAT teams from Washington state, Alabama and Texas were among the first to arrive two days after the storm struck the city Aug. 29.

They set up curtained treatment areas in the ticket lobby near Concourse D, including a triage area in baggage claim nicknamed "the pit."

"When we got here, there were six patients waiting for us," said Dr. Mona Khanna, whose regular job is as a medical correspondent for a Dallas television station. "A day later, there were patients stretching out to the horizon in mud and blood and feces who needed help."

The evacuees came from overloaded staging areas such as the Superdome and the Ernest N. Morial Convention Center. Many were rescued from rooftops by helicopter and carried to the airport.

Somewhere between 50,000 and 75,000 evacuees have passed through the airport terminal between Aug. 30 and Wednesday, most of them on the Friday, Saturday and Sunday after the storm. At least 30,000 were evacuated from the area by military airlift. The rest left by bus.

They were hungry, dehydrated, wounded and chronically ill. Patients in hospices and nursing home residents also were dropped off at the airport. The floors were black with mud and the restroom toilets overflowed because of damage to the Jefferson Parish water system.

"You had day-old babies sitting in all of this," Khanna said.

The 150 members of Air Force and FEMA medical teams in place during those first few days had the daunting task of checking on each who came through and taking care of those who needed medical attention. The medical teams were short on people, supplies and space.

"This is a situation where you couldn't stop working on someone until they got what they needed. If you left them, you would never be able to get back to them," said Spence, who said he operated a manual ventilator bag on one person for three hours because there weren't enough oxygen regulators to go around.

Khanna and nurse Brent Boen of Denton, Texas, both went to New York to work in the aftermath of the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks. Khanna also went to areas in Indonesia damaged by the 2004 tsunami.

"As bad as those were, I've never seen anything like this," she said.

"You had to keep going because of the entreaties for help. I don't think anyone here got more than four hours sleep in that 72-hour period."

Boen said the major difference between Sept. 11 and Katrina is that most of the New York victims died in the attack. "This was more like war," he said.

By Thursday, an 85-member team from the Air Force's 357th Medical Group from Scott Air Force Base in Illinois also had arrived and helped to handle the flood.

"I picked up (stretchers) for 19 hours straight, and when I couldn't do that, I found something else to do," said Col. Larry Riddles, the unit's commander.

The flood of patients was so great that the medical teams had to set up triage areas to prioritize treatment.

"The fact that you had triage means that you didn't have the resources to get to everyone," Riddles said. "If I had to come in here tomorrow, I don't know if we would have done it any differently."

Because many of the patients were chronically ill, or taken from hospices, it was inevitable that some would die. But just how many died at the airport is unclear.

Aviation Director Roy Williams said he thinks the number is between 20 and 50, and that some of the deaths involved people who did not seek medical help.

Khanna's 35-member D-MAT TX4 team went home Friday, and she said she needs a few days to re-adjust to the pace of a normal life.

"It's a syndrome that everyone who has been in these fantastically stressful situations has to deal with," she said. FEMA spokesman Mike Reiger said each team has a choice of whether it goes home or not.

"If one person on the team says they can't stay on, the team goes home," he said. "Other members may be assigned to teams elsewhere, but everyone who stays is sent out of the area to be evaluated to make sure they're psychologically able to continue."

Spence said he wants to delay his return to his job as a British Petroleum oil refinery operator.

"I don't feel like I've done enough," he said.

Pet reunions lift spirits of humans and animals

Families reconnect at Gonzales shelter

By Mark Waller and Susan Finch
Staff writers

The water forced Roland White to live for three days on the roof of his Chalmette home, where he built a shelter from the sun out of boards and a blanket, drank rainwater and ate olives from a jar he found floating by.

He had only one companion and only one way to hold onto his wits during the ordeal. So he talked, all the time, to his daughter's golden retriever, Dusty.

"If you don't talk to Dusty," he told himself, "you'll go crazy."

It tore him up when getting out of heavily flooded St. Bernard Parish meant leaving Dusty behind on the Wednesday after Katrina. The 9-month-old Labrador had to stay in a fenced area at the St. Bernard Parish Prison, because the ferry across the Mississippi River to Algiers and the bus coming for evacuees wouldn't take pets.

But more than a week later, at the Lamar Dixon Expo

Center in Gonzales on Thursday, White caught an improbable, wonderful sight.

White, his wife, Linda, and his daughter, Lisa Faxon, had finished searching the stables for Dusty. They were about to travel back to a state park near Alexandria where they are staying when a new trailer full of panting, wagging, woofing dogs arrived. Right in the middle, standing up with his paws on the bars, was Dusty.

"Now we're complete," White said. "We've got the whole family. That's a miracle, the way that came about."

Working from the Lamar Dixon Expo Center, an army of animal welfare experts and volunteers from around the nation had managed by Friday to rescue more 1,300 dogs and cats, not to mention 100 exotic pets and 400 horses and mules, that New Orleans and St. Bernard Parish residents left at home when they fled from Hurricane Katrina.

But there are "tens of thousands" more animals still waiting to be brought to safety, many of them at the request of their worried owners and many strays, according to Louisiana Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals executive director Laura Maloney, whose organization is overseeing the huge effort that authorities green-lighted to begin earlier this week.

STAFF PHOTO BY JENNIFER ZDON

Lisa Faxon, left, and Linda White find their golden retriever Dusty on a truck carrying more than 50 dogs. Dusty was left behind after a harrowing three days on the roof of the St. Bernard Parish Prison in Chalmette.

Maloney said boat and truck rescue teams are breaking in, if need be, to houses where pet owners have reported their animals are trapped, but some animals are finding the rescuers, swimming to them at times. "They're trying to jump in the boats," she said.

"When you get done saving people, I think it's time to save these animals. All a dog wants to do is give you love, that's all he wants to do."
ROLAND WHITE

Some of the animals now at the shelter were rescued from 20 to 30 veterinary hospitals that Maloney said accepted them for boarding before the storm, then made no effort to evacuate them. "It's like my responsibility for my shelter," a frustrated Maloney said. "I have a responsibility to ensure their safety, even if they're not mine."

White said he stayed at his house on Jackson Boulevard in Chalmette while the rest of his family evacuated because he wanted to protect belongings from rising water, never expecting the water to rise so much. Dusty stayed with him because the dog had been sick.

So as water filled the house, White found himself neck-deep, awkwardly pushing the 60-pound puppy up the ladder to the attic.

He later chopped, pried and sawed his way out of the attic, taking care to make the hole big enough for Dusty.

People boated by but no rescuers came, so White eventually swam to an overturned flatboat and bailed it out with a bucket he found. He took Dusty in the boat, but couldn't take him past the jail.

White spent that Wednesday night sleeping on the concrete at the Chalmette ferry landing with a few hundred other people, he said. The ferry gathered them Thursday morning. A bus heading to Texas came Thursday night. But he got off at Lafayette, where he called his wife, who was in Baton Rouge and came to get him.

He said he didn't know how to break it to his three grandchildren that he couldn't save Dusty.

"You know how hard it was for me to tell them I had to leave Dusty back?" White said. "That broke my heart."

The animal shelter in Gonzales was the site of happy reunions for some pet owners on Thursday. Others left disappointed, thinking about dogs and cats left on second floors with extra food and water, wondering if animal rescuers found them.

As more and more rescued animals arrive in Gonzales to be cleaned, fed , exercised and given sleeping quarters, Maloney and scores of officials from the Humane Society of the United States and other groups are making plans to move them to quarters out of state for safekeeping, she said Friday.

Owners don't need to be concerned that they'll lose track of their pets if they're shipped outside Louisiana, she added, because every animals brought here is photographed and equipped with a microchip bearing information about where the animal was found. "If we know we took it from your house, we'll call you," she said.

And pet owners will soon have a place to see all the rescued animals: their pictures are being posted on the Internet at www.petfinder.com, Maloney said.

Jo Anne Roman of the Humane Society of Broward County, Fla., who is spending long days supervising the rescue shelter's operations, said that most of the animals that have come in seem to have been well cared for before Katrina. They're not starving, but they have been "terrorized" by the events that landed them here.

At the Jefferson Highway pet supply store that is the first stop for all the rescued pets, one of the new arrivals Thursday was a female Pekinese mix helicoptered in from the New Orleans Museum of Art by a New York-based organization of retired police officers volunteering to secure the museum and its $250 million worth of assets.

For her trip to Jefferson Feed and Seed, the dog was placed in an ice chest where members of the International Investigative Group had been keeping their drinks, said member Steve Dux. Colorado veterinarian Dr. James Gaynor, part of a federally funded animal rescue assistance corps, took a look at the pooch and gave Dux an upbeat assessment: "I think she actually looks worse than she is; she's covered in greasy muck," he said.

For many, like the White family, who lost everything, the reconciliation with their beloved pets brings hope.

White hugged Dusty and told him his family was back. Dusty excitedly ran in circles.

"When you get done saving people, I think it's time to save these animals," White said. "All a dog wants to do is give you love, that's all he wants to do."

OUR GOOD HANDS® ARE HERE TO HELP.

The people of Allstate would like to express our concern for those affected by Hurricane Katrina and let you know that our thoughts are with you.

The Allstate Catastrophe Team has Mobile Response Units in the impacted areas with teams of claims specialists ready to assist you.

Nothing is more important than your personal safety. So please follow the advice of local authorities and know that we are standing by ready to help.

ALLSTATE'S CATASTROPHE HOTLINE: 1-800-54-STORM

Allstate®
You're in good hands.

www.allstate.com

Allstate Insurance Company, Allstate Property and Casualty Insurance Company and Allstate Indemnity Company: Northbrook, IL. ©2005 Allstate Insurance Company.
The "Cupped Hands" logo is a registered service mark of Allstate Insurance Company.

The Times-Picayune

SPORTS

Tigers carrying emotions of state

LSU finally to open season, 'host' Sun Devils

By William Kalec
Staff writer

TEMPE, ARIZ. — Skyler Green makes a right.

Reflected in the shiny rims on his truck are the blurry images of two Military Police officers strolling the sidewalk on Skip Bertman Drive, near Alex Box Stadium. They are holding assault rifles. One is smoking a cigarette. Children are nearby. Tuesday practice is over.

Red light.

Eventually, the LSU senior receiver/spokesman makes a left onto Nicholson Drive. He passes the Pete Maravich Assembly Center, where the main arena is being used as a medical triage area and the auxiliary gym as a morgue, keeps going past the Bernie Moore Track Stadium, where the infield has been converted to a landing pad for Chinook helicopters, and finally the Carl Maddox Fieldhouse, now a shelter for Hurricane Katrina evacuees.

"We're always going to have Louisiana on the back of our minds," Green said.

Devastation and hopelessness intermingled with optimism and energy on this oak-lined, football-crazed campus last week as several LSU athletic facilities were rapidly converted to relief areas.

On Monday, school officials announced that the delayed season-opener for the fifth-ranked Tigers (the original season opener against North Texas State has been postponed) would be a "home" game at Arizona State, played three states to the West in triple-digit heat in front of 3,000 of their closest friends (that's how many season-ticket holders exchanged their seats). LSU "hosts" No. 15 Arizona State at 8:15 p.m. today at Sun Devil Stadium.

"There's no way that you get away from here," LSU coach Les Miles said. "We're so attached. It's such a heartfelt environment. Even if you travel, certainly, your waking thoughts move toward Louisiana. But I think our guys will enjoy playing football – whether it is home or away. They'll enjoy those three hours, or so, they are allowed to go out there and play."

Since the storm hit southeast Louisiana, several LSU players have housed family members and friends in their confined living quarters. Quarterback JaMarcus Russell had 23 people crammed into his apartment near Highland Road and spent hours making pharmacy runs for New Orleans legend Fats Domino.

Defensive tackle Kyle Williams welcomed several in-laws and watched with them as aerial shots scanned their flooded home near UNO. He didn't know what to say.

Even this week, as things begin to somewhat resemble pre-Katrina normalcy around Baton Rouge, practice has been the players main escape from the ever-present reminders of what happened less than two weeks ago.

"Visiting the shelters and what-not, everybody knows we're playing ball and every time we go in there they are asking 'When are you going to play' and stuff like that," running back Justin Vincent said. "I think they're looking forward to something like that - something to keep their mind off certain distractions going on in their life right now."

Miles choice at quarterback - big news in August reduced to a distant subplot come September - still hasn't been announced, this after he proclaimed throughout August that he'd gladly tell everyone of his decision the Thursday prior to opening kickoff.

Smart money is on Russell since he received most first-team reps in practices and scrimmages. Matt Flynn is available if Russell struggles, but it seems unrealistic that offensive coordinator Jimbo Fisher would play heralded freshman Ryan Perrilloux this soon, even though all three quarterbacks have several talented safety nets surrounding them.

"It is going to take much more than our front line to contain their run. It is going to take all 11 guys," Arizona State coach Dirk Koetter said. "But you can't totally focus on that. They have three great wide receivers and an excellent tight end as well. They have a talented offensive line. Taking away the run is going to be a challenge for our whole defense. Our linebackers and safeties are going to be very involved."

Forgotten in the recent swirl of events is that the Les Miles era begins. Gerry DiNardo was the last LSU coach to open outside of Tiger Stadium against a ranked opponent. LSU lost that game 33-17 to Texas A&M in 1995.

"I can tell you there is no excuse," Miles said. "At the end of the year, there will be a ledger. The ledger will read wins and losses. There's no asterisks."

NOTE: LSU got an assist from a couple of Louisiana schools in rescheduling its season opener with North Texas for Oct. 29.

Louisiana-Monroe and Louisiana-Lafayette adjusted their schedules so the Tigers and the Mean Green could play their game in Tiger Stadium.

"Our friends in the University of Louisiana System, particularly presidents Ray Authement of UL-Lafayette and Jim Cofer of ULM, as well as North Texas president Norval Pohl, have come to our aid in making this move possible," said LSU Chancellor Sean O'Keefe. "I am appreciative of the cooperation and the UL system's leadership in making this change possible."

"This game rounds out our schedule for 2005 and allows us to move forward with our season," said LSU athletics director Skip Bertman. "My thanks to everyone involved for their perseverance in making this happen. We now look forward to getting our home schedule underway on September 24 against Tennessee in Tiger Stadium."

ULM was scheduled to play North Texas on Oct. 29, but will play the Mean Green on Nov. 19, the day ULM was scheduled to play ULL. That game has been moved to Nov. 26. LSU has an open date next week (Sept. 17) and then will play 10 consecutive weeks.

• • • • • •

Jim Kleinpeter contributed to this report.

Shinn: Hornets won't bail on New Orleans

Says team committed to staying near home

By Jimmy Smith
Staff writer

Hornets owner George Shinn conceded Friday it might be difficult to play home games close to New Orleans this season, but he said he remains steadfast in his bond with the city.

"Our objective is not to abandon ship here or to get out of dodge," Shinn said from his summer home in Telford, Tenn. "Our plan is to hope and pray New Orleans rebuilds. And I think it will with everyone's support and the federal money that's coming in there. I think it will be stronger."

The city of Louisville, Ky., has offered Freedom Hall as a site for some of the Hornets' home games this season, according to a report Friday in the Courier-Journal.

Louisville was among the suitors when the Hornets relocated from Charlotte before the 2002-03 season, but there was no NBA-ready arena in place as there was in New Orleans. Louisville now joins Oklahoma City, Kansas City, Nashville and San Diego as cities that have extended invitations to the Hornets to play "home" games this year.

"I haven't heard from Louisville," Shinn said Friday, "Lots of cities have made contact through the league. I know we're taking a look and listening to a few. But we're trying to get something close to Louisiana."

Shinn, however, said hopes are dimming that Baton Rouge could be used as a possible home venue this season.

The Hornets cannot play in New Orleans Arena because of facility damage and hurricane-related infrastructure problems in the city.

Hornets representatives Sam Russo and Steve Martin have informed Shinn that the downtown Rivercenter and the LSU Assembly Center in Baton Rouge might be unavailable because of their current use as evacuation shelters and medical facilities.

Russo, Shinn said, traveled to Shreveport on Friday to scout possible locations there. The Hornets are scheduled to play a preseason game against the Miami Heat in Bossier City on Oct. 25.

"But we've got to remember the economics have to be there to support it," Shinn said. "We've still got a business to operate. We've got to keep that in mind.

"The thing everybody's got to remember is our goal is simple: We want to play in New Orleans. That's our home. But we can't. We can't come back even if the facility was clean because there's nobody else there. The city will come back. We don't know how long it will take, therefore we've got to find a temporary home."

Shinn is scheduled to tour the city Saturday morning, and several front-office personnel will attempt to retrieve the club's computer system and server from the corporate offices on Poydras Street.

He said he hopes to have a decision on where the Hornets could play home games perhaps early next week.

The Times-Picayune

MONEY

Flooding poses insurance puzzle

Canal breach likely coverage quandary

By Rebecca Mowbray
Business writer

Whether the flooding in New Orleans caused by the breach in the 17th Street Canal should be covered by flood or homeowners policies is likely to be the key insurance question emerging from Hurricane Katrina, and it may end up in court, participants in a meeting of the Joint Legislative Committee on Insurance said Friday.

National Flood Insurance policies by law are capped at $250,000. Some homes in the New Orleans area that were affected by the 17th Street Canal flooding don't have flood insurance because they're not in a flood plain, and many other homes that have flood insurance are worth more than $250,000.

Louisiana lawmakers would like for homeowners insurance policies, which are tied to the value of the house, to cover the damage. If not, some Louisiana lawmakers would like the federal government to create a special appropriation to cover the difference.

"Does the homeowners insurance cover it? That's going to be the big question down the road," Sen. James David Cain, R-Dry Creek, the committee chairman, said in opening remarks. "A lot of issues like the flooding are going to end up in court."

Kristina Simpson, an intergovernmental affairs specialist from the Federal Emergency Management Agency who came to the meeting to answer lawmakers' questions, said that in previous disasters, FEMA did not cover the gap if homeowners were underinsured.

Former state Rep. Chuck McMains Jr., who now represents the Property Casualty Insurers Association of America, a trade association for the insurance industry, had no answers on the flood insurance question.

"A lot of that is going to take more investigation of exactly what happened," McMains said. "I don't know the answer to that question."

McMains said that the insurance industry wants to set up a mediation process to handle those disputes individually. In Florida, mediation solved 83 percent of the disputes from the four hurricanes that struck the state last year, said Jim Donelon, chief deputy commissioner from the Louisiana Department of Insurance.

McMains also said he believes mold and mildew damage caused by the flooding would also fall under the flood insurance policy, not a homeowners insurance policy.

But some state lawmakers didn't accept those answers. Rep. Peppi Bruneau, R-New Orleans, said he has constituents whose homes never flooded during Hurricane Betsy or the May 1995 floods that now have water problems. Because the water came from one break in the levee suggests it's an engineering failure, he said, and people who have paid diligently on their homeowners policies for decades shouldn't be abandoned in their time of need.

"If all the water was coming over, why did it give in just one spot?" Bruneau asked. "We find it unusual that it was caused by a brand new levee collapsing."

Other insurance questions are likely to emerge. If areas such as eastern New Orleans are deemed unfit to be rebuilt, will the federal government reimburse homeowners for the value of their lots, which are separate from their homeowners' policies? What happens to tax bills that will be issued on homes that no longer exist? And how will the many people who lost jobs through Hurricane Katrina get health insurance?

The other major concern for New Orleans area lawmakers was how local residents can participate in the millions of dollars of local contracts that will be awarded to rebuild Louisiana. Enabling local residents to get work will help rebuild the economy and increase the chances that people will return to New Orleans.

"I'd like you to let FEMA know that we would like our people to participate in the rebuilding process," said Sen. Edwin Murray, D-New Orleans. "It's a good way to help bring the local economy back."

Rep. Karen Carter, D-New Orleans, chairwoman of the House Insurance Committee, said she has heard that several international engineering and construction firms already have handshake agreements for major contracts, and she is concerned the process is moving too fast for locals to grab on.

Simpson said FEMA recognizes the economic development importance of the rebuilding contracts, and he promised to give information to the Louisiana representatives about how the contract process works and what skills are typically needed for the work.

But Simpson emphasized that FEMA's role is one of helping the state as a last resort. Local and state governments need to try to solve problems first, he said.

"If you want to keep it in Louisiana, you need the state to keep it in Louisiana," Simpson said. "We are always in a support role. We do not have jurisdiction to take over."

State won't go under, treasurer promises

Kennedy reassures Wall Street analysts

By Rebecca Mowbray
Business writer

State Treasurer John Kennedy says rumors that Hurricane Katrina will bankrupt the state are false, and that he has been on conference calls all week trying to reassure Wall Street analysts that Louisiana will remain solvent.

"The state will meet all current and future obligations," Kennedy said. A bankruptcy filing "is not within the realm of possibility."

Two bond rating agencies — Moody's and Standard & Poor's — placed $9.4 billion in Louisiana debt on credit watch this week because of the storm, sparking the bankruptcy rumors.

"The states of Louisiana and Mississippi and their local governments and enterprises have experienced severe physical damage and economic disruption, but the full extent and duration of the disruption is unknown," the Moody's report says. "At this time, we do not anticipate any defaults, but the ultimate extent of credit deterioration, if any, remains unknown."

Kennedy said state tax revenue likely would take a hit from the storm. About $40 billion of the state's $125 billion in total personal income tax revenue comes from the metropolitan New Orleans area, and the state also will lose tax revenue on lost income and spending.

"We will have some cash flow disruption at the state and local level," Kennedy said.

But Kennedy said the state has about $400 million in its rainy day fund, and he has opened lines of credit to give the state flexibility in dealing with the crisis. Meanwhile, all nonessential spending by the state has been frozen.

Kennedy is also working with U.S. Sen. David Vitter, R-La., to set up a pool of money from which local governments can borrow to meet their debt obligations. The idea is to make sure state entities stay credit worthy for when it comes time to start rebuilding Southeastern Louisiana.

POSITIONS AVAILABLE
TraceSecurity, Inc.,
recently seen in The New York Times, and on CNN, has openings for the following positions in Baton Rouge HQ:
Inside Sales
3-5 years inside business sales
Security Engineers
unix/linux & networking exp, travel required
Project Scheduler
2-5 years project exp. I.T. exp a +
Executive Assistant
3-5 years experience supporting multiple executives
All require college degree and technology proficient.
Send resumes to jobs@tracesecurity.com or fax: 225-612-2269

FISH MARKET MANAGER
Experience necessary
$40,000/yr.
Benefits, moving expenses
Birmingham, Alabama
Call 205-532-3474

1995 KAT D 4 C SERIES 3 BULLDOZER
w/6 way blade, limb risers, rear cab screen, completely serviced and ready to go!
$38,500
2001 DODGE 3500 DIESEL DUALLY,
regular cab loaded with gooseneck hitch 72,000 miles.
$18,200
2003 CHEVROLET TRAIL BLAZER LT, loaded w/leather, 59,000 miles.
$17,000
601-420-2764 or 601-277-3644

Office DEPOT
If you're an Office Depot Associate who has been displaced by Hurricane Katrina, please call 1-888-954-4636 (option 3) to receive information on how we can help.
Our thoughts are with you in this difficult time.

State Project No. 700-92-0011
Federal Aid Project No. HP-9201 (501)
Route: US 90 (Future I-49 South)
From Raceland to Davis Pond Diversion
Section of Independent Utility (SIU) 1
Lafourche and St. Charles Parishes
NOTICE: CANCELLED PUBLIC HEARING
Due to Hurricane Katrina, the Louisiana Department of Transportation and Development has cancelled two upcoming Public Hearings for above captioned project. The Public Hearings were to be held September 13 and 15, 2005 in St. Charles and LaFourche Parishes respectively.
The public will be notified when the Hearings are rescheduled.
If you need additional information, please feel free to contact us at (225) 242-4513. Further info. on the project can be found on Web at http://www.i49south.org

OUR OPINIONS

Time to reconnect

New Orleans and the suburbs spreading out through the swampy land around it are populated with people who have an intense devotion to place.

People live around the corner from their mamas, and their mamas live not far from where their parents and grandparents lived. Or at least they did, before Hurricane Katrina smashed into the metro area and water filled up much of Plaquemines, St. Bernard and Orleans parishes and parts of East Jefferson.

Now, hundreds of thousands of South Louisianians are scattered across the region and far beyond. Many left under their own power and chose a place because of family or work ties. But tens of thousands of others were loaded onto buses and taken to shelters in far-flung places where they knew no virtually no one. These are people who have little left of their possessions.

Some of them will want to stay where they've landed. There are a growing number of exiled New Orleanians trying to find jobs and enroll their children in school in Houston, Dallas, Baton Rouge and the myriad other cities that have taken in evacuees.

But there are others who will want to return to the New Orleans metro area. At the moment, that is not possible for many of them. Power is being restored in St. Tammany Parish and parts of Jefferson Parish, and some residents are beginning to return and rebuild their lives. In Orleans, St. Bernard and Plaquemines, however, that is not yet possible. There, the vast majority of homes are still under water. There is no power or water or sewer service.

The kind people who are caring for their needs in the Astrodome in Houston, the Cajundome in Lafayette, the River Center in Baton Rouge and elsewhere deserve great thanks. Many of these displaced residents have been through unimaginable trauma. They were rescued from their rooftops. They were left to fend for themselves on Interstate 10 with no water, food or shelter. They were jammed into the Superdome or the Convention Center with few supplies and little protection.

They needed a lot of TLC by the time they reached safe shelters, and the response in cities across the nation has been a wonder to see. In the days and weeks ahead, though, the focus needs to be on helping people connect with their surviving family members and returning to their communities if they want to do so.

Some of these people surely have family members who would be willing to take them in temporarily if only they could get to them. There is no telling how many people are searching for relatives right now. Every effort should be made to connect those people with each other. The Red Cross and other agencies coordinating relief efforts ought to make that a top priority.

A computer database is being put together on evacuees at major shelters such as the Astrodome. That information ought to be used to help displaced residents connect with family members who lost each other in the chaos of evacuation.

Ours is an age of instant communication, but the devastation wrought by Katrina temporarily severed some of those links. Those who lost little or nothing need to make sure that those who lost everything are able to reconnect with home and family.

OTHER OPINIONS

Not a single Arabian horse has been reported killed by Katrina, so maybe FEMA Director Michael Brown's work experience came in handy after all.

That humans have been less fortunate is hardly surprising. Neither Brown nor any of his top aides knew beans about disaster relief when they were handed jobs after the 2000 election. Evidently, Brown has not learned much since, and by Friday not even the Bush administration could maintain the pretense that he was up to snuff.

— James Gill, Times-Picayune columnist. For full text, see www.nola.com/newslogs/opinion

President Bush still has a chance to improve the now-fading prospects for his second term. The first goal remains helping Katrina's victims; it's important that congressional inquiries not distract from recovery efforts. But soon enough the president will face another test: whether to demand the kind of accountability that has so far been lacking in his administration, including acknowledging his own miscalculations.

Another challenge will be to assess accurately the cost of federal disaster relief. This, too, would require a change in the administration's standard operating procedure, which has been to minimize costs (see, for example, military operations in Iraq) and refuse to acknowledge their consequences.

— Editorial in The Washington Post

"We're making it family-friendly."

MARY JUSTBIG, retired major with Salvation Army

Missouri shows its compassionate side

Vacant jail now home for evacuees

By Jeffrey Kuhn
Staff writer

CHESTERFIELD, MO. — Volunteers and workers from St. Louis County government were working energetically Thursday to prepare a long-vacant county jail for Katrina evacuees. Amid the smell of fresh paint, they were taking down barbed wire; preparing to hang wallboard to hide the bars; decorating walls, fences and furniture; and planting flowers to provide a warm welcome.

"We're making it family-friendly," said Mary Justbig, a retired major with the Salvation Army, which is managing the shelter.

And though the shelter is ready to take 150 evacuees, none had spent a night in it as of Thursday.

Only a few days ago, the jail complex sat empty in the bottomlands along the Missouri River once known as the Gumbo community. Built on truck-farming fields in the 1970s to house prisoners for the St. Louis area's largest suburban county, the jail was partially vacated after the river flooded it in 1993. It was completely emptied about four years later when officials decided it was too inconvenient to transport inmates to the county seat in Clayton.

When the magnitude of the Katrina catastrophe became apparent, St. Louis County offered to rehab the jail for use as a shelter and redubbed it the Regional Assistance Center. Officials in the St. Louis area are preparing to take several thousand evacuees, Justbig said.

County crews got the building's plumbing and wiring in working order, hung wallboard and installed privacy screens in the bathrooms. "Tons of volunteers" assisted with painting, Justbig said. A volunteer artist worked Thursday on a mural of Dr. Seuss and "Peanuts" characters, and teenagers pushed red and white plastic cups into chain-link fencing to spell out "Welcome."

Three large rooms, each with 50 beds, were ready in one building. Each bed had a teddy bear, fresh towels and a greeting penned by children. "We are glad to help," "You are so brave," "God loves you" and "You rock my sox," some said. Privacy screens separated each bed.

Two smaller rooms, one with a 32-inch screen television, are serving as lounges. The building is air-conditioned, showers and washing machines are available, and hot meals will be served. A closet filled with donated books will serve as a library.

"We have an endless supply of clothing," Justbig said, noting that one donor alone had enough to give each evacuee seven outfits.

There also will be phones and Internet connections available for evacuees. A nursing staff has prepared a small room as a clinic, and mental health counselors will be provided. The Humane Society has offered to care for each pet until families are ready to leave the shelter. Churches will be allowed to provide Sunday worship services and perhaps take evacuees to a local zoo or shopping areas.

The first evacuee arrived Wednesday night from New Orleans. After being flown into Lambert airport that day, he received medical care at a Veterans Affairs hospital and was taken to the shelter. But he refused to spend another night in an institutional setting, Justbig said. Staffers helped him find a brother in the St. Louis area, who took him in.

The shelter is waiting for more evacuees. Justbig doesn't know when they will arrive.

How long will they stay at the shelter? "It's anybody's guess," Justbig said. She expects the shelter to be open for months and said she hopes the outpouring of donations and volunteers will not flag.

"Just having their own roof over their heads will make quite a bit of difference," she said.

WE SHALL RETURN!

IRWIN FRITCHIE
URQUHART & MOORE LLC
COUNSELORS AT LAW

Announces the opening of its temporary Baton Rouge office:

5555 Hilton Avenue, Suite 620
Baton Rouge, Louisiana 70808
Phone: (225) 615-7150
Fax: (225) 615-7179

Our New Orleans office will re-open as soon as possible

We are ClientCentric

info@irwinllc.com www.irwinllc.com

STATE FARM
is here to help.

In the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina, State Farm® understands the devastating toll of this catastrophe.

And we're here to help.

Whether you're at home or have been displaced and can't reach your State Farm agent, if you're a State Farm customer who needs to file a claim, you can reach us.

- Contact any State Farm Agent near your current location.
- Call 1-800-SF-CLAIM (1-800-732-5246) to reach our catastrophe operators; or
- Visit statefarm.com® to initiate your claim online.

LIKE A GOOD NEIGHBOR STATE FARM IS THERE.®

STATE FARM INSURANCE

Providing Insurance and Financial Services

State Farm Insurance Companies • Home Offices: Bloomington, IL

Notice to ExxonMobil and Chalmette Refining employees affected by Hurricane Katrina.

Our deepest sympathies are extended to our employees and to all those from the communities along the Gulf Coast who lost family and friends and whose lives have been severely disrupted as a result of Hurricane Katrina.

In the aftermath of the storm, we know that many of our employees in the affected areas have lost their homes and property. We are anxious to make contact to ensure that you and your families are safe and to discuss any Company assistance you may need.

We therefore request that all of our employees affected by Hurricane Katrina contact the Company as soon as they are able to do so. If you have not already done so, you should contact your supervisor or the Employee Assistance Line at 1-877-294-8617.

For more information please go to exxonmobil.com.

ExxonMobil

The Times-Picayune

SPORTS

PAGE A-17
Saturday
September 10, 2005

Tonight LSU football begins a new chapter when Coach Les Miles leads his Tigers into sun Devil Stadium against Arizona State. His past has prepared him for this moment: carrying the weight of the Tiger Nation on his Ohio shoulders.

MILES TO GO

By William Kalec
Staff writer

AP PHOTO

LSU coach Les Miles will finally make his Tigers' debut tonight against Arizona State. The Tigers endured an offseason of turmoil and tragedy, culminated by the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina.

To prevent wrinkles, the suit coat is draped on a hanger, looped over a piece of office furniture.

Having it there reminds Les Miles he needs to hit the road by 6 p.m. Hopefully, Baton Rouge rush hour won't have much breath left by then.

Since being introduced as Nick Saban's successor Jan. 3, Miles has been whisked across this state, parts of Texas and Mississippi's Gulf Coast like a traveling art exhibit, eating meals hard to pronounce and meeting a fan base so excited and passionate about LSU football something insignificant like reality doesn't get in the way of their astronomical expectations, although the attention of Tigers' fans has been diverted by the aftermath of Hurricane Katina.

Though Miles doesn't divulge his evening plans, he'll likely shake a few hands before going to bed.

But that's later

The Miles Story

Willing to embrace and adapt to the uniqueness of Louisiana culture for the past nine months, Miles takes a moment to tell his tale. After a bit of prying, the stories are spilling out his mouth, as he holds two baseball bats slung over his shoulder, framing his square jaw, a spot-on-match to take cuts for the Mudville Nine.

"I love doing this," Miles said, his face brighter than an optometrist's light. "Because I get to remember, again."

He's laughing, midway through, reciting first and last names of people from his hometown, Elyria, Ohio, like the audience has a clue as to who the hell these people are, which the coach finally acknowledges. A gifted storyteller, Miles' tone gets excited near the climax and flat at the punch line, setting up the laugh - going on and on about walking to school in this goofy green winter jacket with a zipper hood that must have looked more like a matador's red cape to bullies. Then, he points the barrel of the baseball bat at the small crowd gathered and says, "OK, one more."

Act I

The curtain finally drops at 6:27 p.m.

Sifting through these colorful and humorous anecdotes Miles recites with tremendous showmanship, Hope Miles - his late father - is the common link throughout each retelling, the coach's admiration for the man apparent through the sincerity through which he speaks.

Standing 6 feet 5 and a few jumbo shrimp plates more than 300 pounds, Hope spoke with a thunderous, God-like voice. Without question he was literally and figuratively the most dominant presence in Miles' life; the standard Les strived to meet or surpass, the sole approval he ever sought or cared about, and the authority figure he always wanted to please.

Jack Sheldon, Miles' position coach in high school, described Hope as "a man who demanded discipline."

Cliché but true, Woody Hayes and John Wayne (he often called Les "Duke") were Hope Miles' idols. The only character missing from many Hope stories is a blue ox. The guy could crush a softball to the shores of Lake Erie, scare the heck out of you one minute and be your biggest best friend the next. To others, Hope was larger-than-life when you consider the average height and weight of the 1964 World Champion Cleveland Browns starting offensive line was 6-3, 263 pounds.

"When Bubba (Hope) said something," former Michigan quarterback John Wangler said. "Les jumped."

Blocking assignments were hollered from the sideline, hardly nconspicuous. Oh, and never mind that Hope technically wasn't a coach either. Whatever number Hope plucked out of the air was the kid Miles intended to crush on kickoff coverage.

"No. 44, DUKE," Miles said as an example. "If I didn't go and knock that guy over, something was wrong."

Though Miles never really needed ulterior motivation to excel at football or any other sport, Hope was known to reward good performances with perhaps 50 cents or a few dessert items (goodies, he called them). By high school, Hope upped the ante. Behind Curtain No. 1 was a brand-new winter coat that Hope dangled in front of Les like a juicy carrot inches from a horse's mouth in exchange for a stellar performance against Sandusky - a rival of Elyria – so this was a big deal already, without the jacket.

Two holding penalties later, Elyria's offensive drive stalls, to which Hopes groans within an ear shot of Les, "It's going to be a cold winter, Duke."

Soft-hearted Martha

In stark contrast to Hope's militaristic approach toward childrearing, Martha Miles encouraged Les' curious, almost inventive young mind. He asked a lot of questions. Martha didn't know the answer to all of them, so each week she'd check out a stack of books from the library.

"Why don't we fly like the birds?" Martha recalls Les asking one trip. "Why don't we just fly?"

"Well, what do you think the problem with that would be?" Martha asked, exploring the childish inquiry, not simply dismissing it.

"Our arms probably wouldn't hold, would they Mom?" Les said.

Martha was the arbitrator, the go-between, and the source of alternative solutions to problems Hope fixed with brut force. Try walking home from school using a different path, she told Les after a classmate from "the wrong side of the tracks" kept charging lunch money and a beating as toll to travel down certain roads.

It worked. So for a couple of days Les took the long, but cheaper and less terrifying route to and from school. Martha's plan backfired though when Hope learned of the situation. Oh no, Les wasn't going to loop around bullies. Hope made Les confront them head-on. Always did. Give him a cup, mouth guard, tape his knuckles if that's what it takes (all of which Hope equipped Les with at some point throughout various adolescent run-ins.) Hope watched in the distance but never intervened. When it was over, he'd drive by and tell Les to get in the car.

Though rigid and imposing at times, there was a softer side to Hope. Jack Sito, Miles' high school teammate and friend and current Elyria resident, says the guy was 90 percent teddy bear.

Like, when Michigan won the 1981 Rose Bowl in Les' first year as a graduate assistant under Bo Schembechler, he bought Les and his buddies commemorative jackets. On those football weekends, Miles and Wangler would turn their apartment into a mini-Vegas because they knew how much Hope loved to play cards after a big shrimp dinner topped off with cherry or apple pie served with a fistful of ice cream. They even purchased a felt table and had somebody dress up like a dealer. Man, Hope loved those nights.

"We grew the long hair and Les always had a Butch like his Dad," Sito said. "He didn't give a damn who you were or what you thought. And I remember one day in the lunchroom, we're sitting there, this and that, and Les looked over and his Dad was there - had to give him something or whatever - and Les just ran over in front of the whole lunchroom in high school. Now, my kid won't even come around me at home. But Lester hugged his Dad, gave him a kiss and said 'Hey, Pop, what's going on?' He didn't care. He loved his Dad."

Whenever Les landed a head coaching job, Hope and Martha figured they'd move, too, live in a college town, spoil their grandkids and spend Saturdays in the stadium. Hope Miles died in September 2000, months before Oklahoma State hired Miles as its new head coach.

"My husband cried," Martha said. "He taught his boys to be boys, but he taught them to cry. That hurts a man, if he's not able to cry. Hope taught Les never to hold anything inside. He was rugged, full of himself, but sentimental, too. Les saw him as the image of what a male should be.

"It's a shame he's not around. He'd be proud of Les. He always was."

Les the businessman

Despite earning two letters at Michigan, Miles received an honest critique from a valued source that his frame just wasn't suitable for professional football (or probably Big Ten football, for that matter, but he did it). No, not from a scout.

From Hope. You had your fun, now it's over, he said after Miles left college with a degree in economics.

"I remember Les saying, 'Coaches don't make money,'" Martha said. "I'm going into business."

Just for reference, LSU pays Miles more than $1.5 million a year to coach football.

"Isn't that something?" Schembechler said. "The lil' devil makes 10 times as much as I ever did. I'll tell ya, isn't that something?"

Miles found post-graduation sanctity in the comfort and familiarity of Elyria's proletarian pace, landing work in the trucking business, distribution mostly.

"I did enjoy the things that I was doing because I was doing some things differently," Miles said. "'This is my idea.' And I wanted to make that work and there was some of that going on and there was the enjoyment of work ethic."

That reminds Miles of a story.

"There was a big snowstorm that was coming in and I knew that we had to run trucks to clear out this warehouse because as soon as this storm hit, everybody was locked in," Miles said. "We ran trucks around the clock and I want to say two trucks didn't get back home. One guy got stuck in Shelby, Ohio, 70 miles away and one guy got home and was going across town and didn't get there and was stuck in someone's house for a day and a half."

"I mean, it was a monster storm," Miles continued. "I remember coming to work and having to go get this driver in Shelby when the roads opened. This was the kind of storm it was - an 18-wheeler, a truck-hauler had slid off the road and got covered by snow. The only way this guy lived - I wanna say he was there for six days - was getting water from melting snow and drinking it and eating whatever little snacks he had.

"He was 20 feet down the road from where I was to get my guy and they didn't know it. It was a low area and the snowdrift just buried it. I'm going by in a four-wheel (drive) truck and I'm looking right and left and I'm seeing snow."

Though not always a thrill-a-minute, the job at least wasn't mindless and paid incredibly well for the time.

Miles made $32,000 with a year-end bonus that boosted his income to more than 25 percent of his base salary.

He traveled in a company car.

"But I became disenchanted, I just felt my life could be used a better way and I always thought about coaching, and helping young men get their degree,"

Miles said. "The hardest thing I ever did was pursue my degree and play championship football. Toughest thing I ever had to do. And I so respected the endeavor that when I got out, I really didn't think anything I was doing was as rewarding."

Miles tapped his only coaching resource – Schembechler - repeatedly, receiving six months worth of polite brush-offs and horror stories about the profession that the legendary figure thought might scare his former guard back to a comfy chair behind a big desk.

Les didn't care, showing up at alumni talks and other functions to validate his sincerity.

"If he gave me a minute," Miles said. "I was in his office."

Finally, Schembechler offered a graduate assistant job that paid approximately $8,000 and relegated Miles to live in an unfinished basement apartment where the ceiling dripped when the upstairs toilet would run.

Miles tied a cloth around the pipe to minimize the water intrusion. He did menial jobs but began soaking up quirks from Schembechler he'd carry with him to stops as an assistant in Colorado, back to Michigan, Oklahoma State and the Dallas Cowboys.

Sometimes he speaks through gritted-teeth, like a second-rate ventriloquist, overemphasizes words like "tackling" and "blocking" and knows where to insert dramatic pauses - all Schembechler trademarks. Now, he doesn't recite years like they'd be spelled (for instance 1969 was "Nineteen hundred and sixty-nine" when Schembechler spoke) but traces of the old coach occasionally exude from his pupil.

"To us, Bo was just this lovable, great, hard-nosed tough coach," Pittsburgh athletic director Jeff Long said, a graduate assistant when Miles returned to Ann Arbor in Nineteen-hundre…err, 1987. "We imitated him.

We emulated him. We would copy his little phrases, copy the inflection in his voice and all of it was done with deep affection. Yeah, I can see Les like that."

Miles sold players on blocking techniques with the enthusiasm of a 12-year-old on a sugar binge, transforming August conditioning on the practice fields into the final drive of the Rose Bowl. Nobody would ever outcoach Miles, as he ran his front five through every possible defensive alignment fathomable.

Do something right, and it's bigger than landing on the moon.

"He'll just be coaching, coaching, coaching and then something will get him so fired up and he becomes animated," Michigan All-American guard Joe Cocozzo said. "I was not what you would call the stellar athlete and he was teaching this lead technique and physically I was having a tough time with it. For whatever reason, it finally clicked. The first time it worked for me he yelled, 'DO IT AGAIN! RIGHT NOW!' And I did, and he'd say it, again, 'DO IT AGAIN! RIGHT NOW!' like this was a miracle."

Sharing a dream

Thirty years, and the exact mile markers are just blank rectangular signs. Sito can't tell you what car his friend was driving that night, where they were coming from, and what prompted Miles to say what he said. That's all faded. But he remembers Miles squeezing some sort of tennis ball to strengthen his grip, and him saying:

"You know what, Jack? I want to be like Johnny Carson.

I want to have my own damn TV show. I'm gonna do it.

I'm not sure where. But that's what I'm looking for."

"It was a crazy-kid dream," Sito explained. "But I remember him saying that and looking at him as a truthful dream."

On Aug. 23, it finally happened. Live from Burbank, it's the Les Miles Show.

OK, OK, so it was Burbank Avenue (not Burbank, Calif.) at a sports bar (not a studio) and Miles was seated next to Jim Hawthorne (not Ed McMahon) for a radio (not television) show. But the place was packed; parking spots filled an hour before air. Those lucky enough to claim a booth saw the two sides of Miles that evening.

There's the reserved coach - the Hope in him – not known to go against the grain, who kept everything orderly and proper.

"The joke we had was Les was the only guy in Ann Arbor to send his T-shirts to the cleaners," Wangler said.

Then there's the kid in the back of the school bus - the Carson in him - performing his patented triple tripod, doing a handstand by grasping the top of two seats and sticking one leg up toward the ceiling until his foot laid flat against it.

"He was dumb enough to get up and do that, so we'd egged him on," Sito said. "And we'd just roll. When we weren't laughing at him, we'd applaud and cheer him on. He just couldn't be bored."

But now, none of this matters. Forget the Triple Tripod, leaky basement apartment, the scrappiness in which he played guard and later coached. Fans just want one thing from Les Miles – to win.

Like Elyria, Baton Rouge is a different town, too.

Five years of winning football have trumped the Tigers roller coaster past. Miles steps into a situation where the only items the spoiled Tiger Nation care about are December trips to Atlanta and crystal footballs.

"No question, he has a tough act to follow down there and he better do a good job," Schembechler said. "Nick was a heck of a coach. But let me tell you one thing about this guy - Les has a mind. He's a smart guy. I didn't give him anything as a favor. I brought him back knowing he was going to be a good coach and everywhere he's been he's won. That's not something that disappears overnight."

LSU/SAINTS

Tigers carrying emotions of entire state

LSU finally to open season, 'hosts' Sun Devils

By William Kalec
Staff writer

TEMPE, ARIZ. — Skyler Green makes a right.

Reflected in the shiny rims on his truck are the blurry images of two Military Police officers strolling the sidewalk on Skip Bertman Drive, near Alex Box Stadium. They are holding assault rifles. One is smoking a cigarette. Children are nearby. Tuesday practice is over.

Red light.

Eventually, the LSU senior receiver/spokesman makes a left onto Nicholson Drive. He passes the Pete Maravich Assembly Center, where the main arena is being used as a medical triage area and the auxiliary gym as a morgue, keeps going past the Bernie Moore Track Stadium, where the infield has been converted to a landing pad for Chinook helicopters, and finally the Carl Maddox Fieldhouse, now a shelter for Hurricane Katrina evacuees.

"We're always going to have Louisiana on the back of our minds," Green said.

Devastation and hopelessness intermingled with optimism and energy on this oak-lined, football-crazed campus last week as several LSU athletic facilities were rapidly converted to relief areas.

On Monday, school officials announced that the delayed season-opener for the fifth-ranked Tigers (the original season opener against North Texas State has been postponed) would be a "home" game at Arizona State, played three states to the West in triple-digit heat in front of 3,000 of their closest friends (that's how many season-ticket holders exchanged their seats). LSU "hosts" No. 15 Arizona State at 8:15 p.m. today at Sun Devil Stadium.

"There's no way that you get away from here," LSU coach Les Miles said. "We're so attached. It's such a heart-felt environment. Even if you travel, certainly, your waking thoughts move toward Louisiana. But I think our guys will enjoy playing football – whether it is home or away. They'll enjoy those three hours, or so, they are allowed to go out there and play."

Since the storm hit southeast Louisiana, several LSU players have housed family members and friends in their confined living quarters. Quarterback JaMarcus Russell had 23 people crammed into his apartment near Highland Road and spent hours making pharmacy runs for New Orleans legend Fats Domino.

Defensive tackle Kyle Williams welcomed several in-laws and watched with them as aerial shots scanned their flooded home near UNO. He didn't know what to say.

Even this week, as things begin to somewhat resemble pre-Katrina normalcy around Baton Rouge, practice has been the players main escape from the ever-present reminders of what happened less than two weeks ago.

"Visiting the shelters and what-not, everybody knows we're playing ball and every time we go in there they are asking 'When are you going to play' and stuff like that," running back Justin Vincent said. "I think they're looking forward to something like that - something to keep their mind off certain distractions going on in their life right now."

Miles choice at quarterback - big news in August reduced to a distant subplot come September - still hasn't been announced, this after he proclaimed throughout August that he'd gladly tell everyone of his decision the Thursday prior to opening kickoff.

Smart money is on Russell since he received most first-team reps in practices and scrimmages. Matt Flynn is available if Russell struggles, but it seems unrealistic that offensive coordinator Jimbo Fisher would play heralded freshman Ryan Perrilloux this soon, even though all three quarterbacks have several talented safety nets surrounding them.

"It is going to take much more than our front line to contain their run. It is going to take all 11 guys,"

Arizona State coach Dirk Koetter said. "But you can't totally focus on that. They have three great wide receivers and an excellent tight end as well. They have a talented offensive line. Taking away the run is going to be a challenge for our whole defense. Our linebackers and safeties are going to be very involved."

Forgotten in the recent swirl of events is that the Les Miles era begins. Gerry DiNardo was the last LSU coach to open outside of Tiger Stadium against a ranked opponent. LSU lost that game 33-17 to Texas A&M in 1995.

"I can tell you there is no excuse," Miles said. "At the end of the year, there will be a ledger. The ledger will read wins and losses. There's no asterisks."

NOTE: LSU got an assist from a couple of Louisiana schools in rescheduling its season opener with North Texas for Oct. 29.

Louisiana-Monroe and Louisiana-Lafayette adjusted their schedules so the Tigers and the Mean Green could play their game in Tiger Stadium.

"Our friends in the University of Louisiana System, particularly presidents Ray Authement of UL-Lafayette and Jim Cofer of ULM, as well as North Texas president Norval Pohl, have come to our aid in making this move possible," said LSU Chancellor Sean O'Keefe. "I am appreciative of the cooperation and the UL system's leadership in making this change possible."

"This game rounds out our schedule for 2005 and allows us to move forward with our season," said LSU athletics director Skip Bertman. "My thanks to everyone involved for their perseverance in making this happen. We now look forward to getting our home schedule underway on September 24 against Tennessee in Tiger Stadium."

ULM was scheduled to play North Texas on Oct. 29, but will play the Mean Green on Nov. 19, the day ULM was scheduled to play ULL. That game has been moved to Nov. 26. LSU has an open date next week (Sept. 17) and then will play 10 consecutive weeks.

• • • • • •

Jim Kleinpeter contributed to this report.

THE VITALS

LSU VS. ARIZONA STATE

KICKOFF: 8:15 p.m. at Sun Devil Stadium, Tempe, Ariz.
COACHES: LSU's Les Miles (28-21, fifth season, first at LSU); Arizona State's Dirk Koetter (53-33, eighth year, fifth at Arizona State).
TV/RADIO: ESPN, N/A

KEEP AN EYE ON

LSU RUNNING BACKS: With Alley Broussard out for the season, Joseph Addai, Justin Vincent and Shyrone Carey will take turns. All three have shown at times they are capable, but the question is how much will the Tigers miss Broussard's bruising style. Watch Vincent, in particular, to see if he shows signs of recovering from his sophomore jinx. Carey is in the best shape he's ever been and could provide some of the electrifying, change-of-direction runs he excelled at while at Shaw. Addai is Mr. Dependable and the best receiver of the three.

ARIZONA STATE'S PASSING GAME: Junior quarterback Sam Keller appears to be confident in the offense, and he has a preseason All-American receiver in Derek Hagan. They combined for two touchdown passes last week, but the story was that 10 different Sun Devils caught passes. Tight end Zach Miller set school freshman receiving records last year with 56 catches and 552 receiving yards and caught three for 26 yards last week. Keller doesn't move well, but he does have a veteran offensive line for protection. The Sun Devils need another strong rushing effort from freshman Keegan Herring to keep the heat off Keller. He had 134 yards last week in his first career start as the Sun Devils rushed for 300 yards.

GAMEPLAN

Don't look for last year's conservative style. The quarterbacks have matured enough to step in and be comfortable throwing or handing off. JaMarcus Russell is the likely starter, and, though he still has some of the issues that slowed him last season, he has plenty of weapons to prop him up for awhile. Across the line, Russell will be looking at a Sun Devils team with one starter returning in the secondary. Look for the Tigers to attack at all points. Expect the return of the bubble screen, a favorite play in 2001 and 2003, with Skyler Green and Shyrone Carey using their shiftiness in the open field. Defensively, the Tigers will have to defend the entire field. Arizona State showed a surprisingly good running game last week. Herring may not find as much room as he did against Temple, running into the strength of the LSU defense, the front line, led by tackles Kyle Williams and Claude Wroten. The Sun Devils may go after weakside linebacker Jason Spadoni, a converted running back making his first college start after changing positions in spring practice.

KEY MATCHUP

ARIZONA STATE WR DEREK HAGAN VS. LSU CORNERBACKS RONNIE PRUDE AND CHEVIS JACKSON: Hagan is a preseason All-American who caught 83 passes for 1,248 yards and 10 touchdowns last year. Prude and Jackson logged significant minutes last year, but each is starting for the first time. Prude is eager to make amends for his blown coverage on the final play of the Capital One Bowl, which cost LSU the game against Iowa. Jackson, a sophomore, is making his first career start, so he may get tested early and often. The Sun Devils would like nothing better than to get off to a big offensive start and get their crowd into the game. And the Tigers can't over concern themselves with Hagan. Tight end Zach Miller caught 56 passes last season as a freshman.

BY THE NUMBERS

LSU is 10-3 against Pac-10 teams and is facing one for the third consecutive season, having beaten Arizona (59-13) in 2003 and Oregon State (22-21) last year. ... This is the first meeting between LSU and Arizona State in football. ... Les Miles is the 32nd head coach in LSU history, and he is 1-3 in season openers. ... LSU OT Andrew Whitworth will start his 40th consecutive game, the longest active streak in the SEC. ... LSU has a streak of 37 games with at least one sack. ... LSU missed eight extra-point attempts last season, five by Chris Jackson and three by Ryan Gaudet.

ODDS AND ENDS

LSU will wear white jerseys and is the designated home team. ... RB Joseph Addai, DT Kyle Williams and deep snapper Gant Petty were chosen as game captains. LSU will choose captains each week and select permanent captains at the end of the season. ... Technically, Arizona State has never played an SEC team before. Arizona State lost to Arkansas in 1951 and 1985 when the Razorbacks were members of the Southwest Conference.

SOMBER SETTING

The sympathetic eyes of the nation will be on the Tigers. Talk of the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina and the ongoing relief effort in Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama will be mixed in with X's and O's. LSU players, who have spoken of wanting to give hurricane victims something to be happy about, will wear logos of the state flag, as well as the Fleur de Lis, on their helmets. The Fleur de Lis traditionally has been used to represent French royalty, but also signifies perfection, light and life, and is an often-used symbol in New Orleans. It is also on the Saints helmet. After deciding to move the game from Tiger Stadium to Tempe, the schools agreed that proceeds should be donated to the relief effort. "That's the best deal about this game," said Arizona State quarterback Sam Keller. "First and foremost, there's a tragedy going on down there. The game is secondary to people's lives and homes lost. The game has to be on the backburner."

FROM THE COACH'S MOUTH

"I see a team (LSU) that has a pretty solid workman-like approach to football. For them to put on the back burner the things that have happened around them, it speaks to older guys, guys with perspective." LSU coach LES MILES.

Tagliabue, Benson to meet with LSU

Tiger Stadium viability for Saints home games to be discussed

By Mike Triplett and Jim Kleinpeter
Staff Writers

NFL commissioner Paul Tagliabue and Saints owner Tom Benson will visit Baton Rouge on Monday to meet with LSU officials and try to determine how many Saints games can be played in Tiger Stadium.

"They officially want three games and are talking about a fourth and perhaps more, but that hasn't been resolved, yet," said Bernard Boudreaux, the chairman of LSU's Board of Supervisors, who has been one of the university's chief negotiators with the league and with the Saints.

Boudreaux said the three games that have been discussed so far are Oct. 30 against the Miami Dolphins, Dec. 4 against the Tampa Bay Buccaneers and Dec. 18 against the Carolina Panthers.

The Dolphins game in particular would be a marquee attraction in Baton Rouge, with Miami being led by former LSU coach Nick Saban.

Chances are, the Saints also will play at least some home games in San Antonio, as well, which is the desire of players and coaches striving for some sort of home-field advantage and a chance to spend more time with their families.

NFL Players Association president Gene Upshaw told the San Antonio Express-News that Tagliabue assured him the Saints will play at least one game in the Alamodome this year.

But NFL spokesman Greg Aiello did not confirm that Tagliabue had made such a decision. Aiello also chose not to respond to an Express-News report that said the Saints and San Antonio had reached an agreement on a four-game deal in the Alamodome that was pending league approval.

The NFL's stance all along has been that it wants to play as many games as logistically possible in Baton Rouge. And the decision on where the Saints will play is in the hands of Tagliabue, no matter what the Saints and San Antonio agree to.

"The Saints represent Louisiana and New Orleans, and we are continuing to keep a focus on the region's needs and the role of the Saints in the recovery," said Aiello, who said no decisions will be made before Monday's meeting in Baton Rouge.

Saints officials had no comments on the discussions other than that they are waiting to hear a decision from the league.

The Saints' first "home" game will be played Sept. 19 at Giants Stadium in New Jersey. The next scheduled home games after that are Oct. 2 against Buffalo, Oct. 16 against Atlanta and Oct. 30 against Miami.

Presumably, those early-October games would be best suited for the Alamodome, both because the Saints will be plenty road-weary by then and because Baton Rouge might not yet be prepared to host the Saints.

But that is what is expected to be determined during Monday's face-to-face meeting.

"All we knew about was three games. If they are going to expand that, we'll find out about that Monday," said Boudreaux, who said he has been in contact with the NFL's executive vice president and chief operating officer, Roger Goodell, as well as Saints board member and Benson's attorney, Stanley Rosenberg.

The Saints also have been in contact with LSU chancellor Sean O'Keefe, athletic director Skip Bertman, senior associate athletic director Dan Radakovich and athletic department attorney Mike Pharis.

Bertman said Friday that LSU wants to cooperate in any way it can, as long as the university does not operate at a financial loss. He pointed out that LSU's athletic department does not use state money.

"Our position is we want to cooperate with the Saints and the state in an effort to keep the Saints in the state, both now and in the future," Boudreaux said. "Particularly in view of this tragedy, we're going to do everything we can to cooperate. We have had no disagreement about how that should be, except logistics."

Boudreaux said he does not anticipate that arranging security would be a problem. He said it would be "very difficult, but manageable" if the Saints played in Tiger Stadium the day after an LSU home game.

But one of the biggest logistical hurdles of hosting the Saints is hotel rooms, Boudreaux said.

He said the NFL indicated to him that it would need around 270 rooms to accommodate teams, supports staff, television crews and other personnel. Baton Rouge didn't have an abundance of hotel rooms even before they became packed with New Orleans evacuees.

"If you drew a circle around Baton Rouge, you'd have to go pretty far out to find any venue that had available hotel rooms to handle an event of this magnitude," Boudreaux said. "There just aren't enough rooms, even as far as Shreveport and Lake Charles, and you can't come in from too far."

Saints players and Coach Jim Haslett continue to hope for as many games in San Antonio as possible and seemed disappointed to hear that three games might be played in Baton Rouge, with four being played in San Antonio, where they have set up their practice operations.

"Four games at home and 12 on the road? That's what it is," offensive lineman Kendyl Jacox said. "I want to sleep in my bed, get to wake up and drive to the stadium."

Said Haslett: "I know our players would like to play them all here. But if we have to play some in Baton Rouge, that's a good alternative because of our fan base and our people there. But we still have to travel."

With reports reaching Miami that Saban might be coaching again in Tiger Stadium again this year, he told the media he "wouldn't really have any feeling one way or the other."

"My only feeling is that the situation and the circumstance that created this whole thing is unfortunate for a lot of people," Saban said. "I think that it is unfortunate for the Saints that they have to go through a lot of changes to do what they have to do, but probably, more importantly, the fans and all of the people affected by this tragedy."

Saints players, coaches adjusting to San Antonio

Sacrifices made but team about to get some normalcy

By Mike Triplett
Staff writer

SAN ANTONIO – Life in the Alamo City is far from home. And yet, it has a certain familiar feel to it.

"In a nutshell, it feels like training camp hasn't stopped," Saints offensive tackle Wayne Gandy said, with a resounding agreement from Kendyl Jacox at the next locker over. "Some of the guys talk all the time that the strangest thing is there is no point where you actually get away from football. And I'm just hoping that doesn't burn us out.

"From the day we got on that bus about two weeks ago, it's been hotels, buses, media. There's never been that day where you just, you know, go in your kitchen, open your refrigerator, get something to eat, go back to your bed and go to sleep.

"You have no break, no space. You're stuck here with Jacox."

For now, players can laugh about it, especially with the excitement of an actual regular-season game just around the corner Sunday in Carolina.

And things should get a little better next week. Players, coaches and staff have been spending much of their free time this week finding apartments and homes to rent for the next four months or so.

Others haven't had a chance to start home shopping. But that should be an easier process once their vehicles arrive from Metairie this weekend.

Also next week, the team is expected to get its weightlifting equipment here, and possibly the hot and cold tubs.

And soon the team is hoping to move many of its practices, team meetings and weight-room facilities into the Alamodome, where the locker room is.

"They want their automobiles, and they want a place to live," Saints coach Jim Haslett said. "Once you get that as a player or a coach, you have a place where you can drive over to work and go home and lay down, that is all you really need in this business."

In fact, Haslett said, some of his coaches don't even need homes. He said four of his assistants are planning to set up beds in their Alamodome offices and just sleep there.

Not a bad idea, he added, and he might be inclined to do it himself if his family weren't moving to San Antonio with him. His three children are enrolling in school here for the semester.

Players, coaches and staff members are split about 50-50 between having their families stay with them and spending the fall alone.

Receiver Joe Horn was heading to close a deal on a house Friday afternoon, where his wife and six children will join him. Veteran kicker John Carney's family is in San Diego – the first time in his 16-year career he's been away from them, he said.

"That'll be tough," Carney said, shrugging.

During this first week here, players have woken up at their team hotel, walked two blocks to meeting rooms, walked back to the hotel for lunch, bused to the Alamodome to change, bused to their high school practice facility, bused back to change, bused to Gold's Gym to lift weights, back to the Alamodome and back to the hotel.

"Our guys are really resilient to things that go on. And they adapt to things very well, and there's not a lot of complaining," Haslett said. "They just kind of do it, and they're on time, and they do everything right. That's all you can ask from a football team."

Players have been told they need to start looking around for a place to live, but they haven't been given a deadline to leave the team hotel just yet.

That massive hotel bill is just one of many financial undertakings the team has to deal with. Neither the team nor the NFL had specifics on what financial assistance would be available for the team.

ETC. – The Saints and Entercom announced that Sunday's game will be carried live on WLMG 101.9-FM radio in New Orleans, as well as on regional affiliates across Louisiana and the Gulf South. ... Before Sunday's game, the Saints administrative staff will visit with Hurricane Katrina evacuees that are being sheltered at the Charlotte Coliseum.

Local arenas dark, but lights will return

Cheers of the crowd won't reverberate in N.O. for awhile

By John DeShazier
Sports columnist

In the grand scheme it will amount to a shade above nothing, so trivial it won't even merit mention in most corners.

Tragedy, like one the Gulf Coast has experienced and now is trying to rebuild in the wake of Hurricane Katrina, has a way of humbling us, of placing exclamation points behind the things that really matter and shrinking to virtually invisibility the things that don't rise to the level of absolute necessity.

Still, though, it will be hard not to notice, at some point during the fall and winter, and perhaps even during spring and summer, the hole we'll have in our local sports world.

New Orleans likely will be in the dark for quite a while, the games that might have been played and the events that might have been hosted canceled or moved.

The single-minded goal of the community simply is to clean up and rebuild, to make the city and Gulf Coast inhabitable again, to make both desirable destinations not for tourists, but for thousands of displaced residents who might need to be convinced to come back home.

So we will forge ahead, with no Saints at the Superdome.

No Hornets at New Orleans Arena.

No races at the Fairgrounds.

No Tulane at Fogelman Arena.

No UNO at Lakefront Arena.

No Xavier, SUNO or Dillard engaging in a cross-townrivalry at Xavier's Barn, Dillard's A.W. Dent Hall or The Castle at SUNO.

No Friday night football - or Thursday night, or Saturday afternoon or night - at Tad Gormley Stadium or Pan American Stadium.

No prep hoops at Carver, Kennedy, St. Augustine or Brother Martin.

No nothing.

Again, that's not a major concern for the family that was left with nothing. When your home has flooded, relatives have been displaced, friends and family have died waiting to be evacuated and you've spent days, weeks or months in a shelter, going from independence to total dependence, a high school football game or pro basketball game isn't a priority.

It can't be, when you don't have a job and don't have an idea how you will provide for your family long-term, and don't know whether your employer who was wiped out in New Orleans plans to rebuild.

But it still feels hollow when a city that has hosted some of the most magnificent sporting events in history might not be fit to host even one over the next 12 months. It seems odd that no visiting football fans will make their way to the French Quarter to partake of the scene, that no television station will show the obligatory, horse-drawn carriage shot as it returns from commercial, that a Dome that can be deafening will be silent.

The Saints, the Dome's primary tenant, have set up shop in San Antonio. The Hornets are looking to play their home games in Baton Rouge. Xavier, Dillard and SUNO students and athletes have dispersed to other schools to, hopefully, continue their educations with minimal interruption.

The prep players who shine on Fridays, some of them standouts with scholarships in hand and others hopeful of earning a free ride to college, are enrolled in other high schools, maybe in Texas or Alabama, perhaps in Georgia or Mississippi.

The city in which they made names, enhanced reputations or tried like heck to do one or both, isn't even inhabitable right now. All of the dead haven't been recovered. All of the water hasn't been pumped out. Power hasn't been restored. The mixture of sewage and chemicals and who knows what else that contaminates the water might linger for years.

But in time, it'll be habitable again. The lights in New Orleans will be turned back on.

So, too, will the games, and the sports hole we have, minuscule as it is, will be patched.

Colonels set to meet Indiana

By Ted Lewis
Staff writer

For Nicholls State senior wide receiver Henry Johnson, football these days is an escape.

"You're out there practicing for a couple of hours and not thinking about anything else," he said. "Then you come back off the field, and you're back in the real world."

Johnson is speaking not just for himself but for a great many peers around the state.

Seven of Louisiana's 11 college football teams saw their season-openers postponed or canceled last weekend.

And all of the teams have several members whose lives have been altered forever by Hurricane Katrina.

"So many of us played with each other or against each other in high school," said Johnson, who prepped at Shaw. "And we keep on competing in college.

"But now that's all out the window. We're all hurting together."

Johnson is among those. He does not know the condition of his family's home in Harvey, but he knows that his immediate family is safe. Many others, especially those who lived in the 9th Ward, have relatives from whom they haven't heard.

"We've got guys who practice and then get away real fast to see what they can do back home," Johnson said. "You deal with the adversity off the field and then concentrate on taking care of business on it."

Doing that Saturday is a major challenge for Johnson and his Nicholls teammates.

The Colonels play at Indiana, which may be the doormat of the Big Ten but is the biggest "name" opponent Nicholls State has ever faced.

"It's a chance to put our talent on the line against a Big Ten team and see where we stand in relationship to them," Johnson said.

The Colonels were to have opened against another Division I-A school, Utah State, but that game was canceled.

That, Johnson said, was just as well.

"We had people who hadn't found their families, yet," he said. "I don't know how we could have gotten on a plane for Utah and played a football game.

"It would have been a tough choice."

Nicholls State's new uniforms were being readied in Gulfport, Miss., and presumably were destroyed.

However, Nike is having a fresh set, minus the names on the back, delivered to Bloomington, Ind., for the Colonels to wear.

"These kids are so resilient," said Nicholls coach Jay Thomas. "They lost a week of practice, but we've kept everything positive because they've been through so much.

"At first, it was just baby steps. But they came out of it more every day, and now we're ready to play a football game."

So is Southern, even if conditions aren't optimal.

The Jaguars' opener at McNeese was canceled, and now they find themselves beginning the season with a SWAC game on the road at Mississippi Valley State. It's the first time Southern has played in Itta Bena, Miss., in 10 years.

The Delta Devils opened their season last week with a 17-13 victory against Arkansas-Pine Bluff.

"None of our kids have ever been to their place, and they've played a game and we haven't," said Southern coach Pete Richardson. "That's a pretty big challenge as it is.

"And we've had a lot of kids trying to keep their focus, with all that's been going on. But we're finally getting back close to what I would call normal."

Richardson said the extra week has had one benefit – giving additional practice time to younger players on the team.

"We're going to need a lot of help on defense," Richardson said. "We lost a lot of guys there, and I'm not comfortable with where we are, yet."

Other games taking place this Saturday are:

Louisiana-Lafayette (0-1) at Eastern Michigan (0-1) at 5 p.m. The Ragin' Cajuns were flattened by Texas in their opener, 60-3. The Longhorns outgained ULL 554 yards to 205. Eastern Michigan fell to Cincinnati in its opener, 28-26. This is the first meeting between the two schools.

Louisiana Tech (0-0) at Florida (1-0), 5 p.m. Matt Kubik, who took over as quarterback for the Bulldogs when starter Donald Allen was injured in the fourth game of last season, continues as the starter. Tenth-ranked Florida opened with a 32-14 victory against Wyoming.

Louisiana-Monroe (0-1) at Wyoming (0-1), 2 p.m. ULM quarterback Steven Jyles became the Indians' career leader in total offense (7,897 yards) and pass completions (611) in his team's 27-23 loss to Northwestern State last week. ULM had 411 yards despite a starting offensive line of three sophomores and two freshmen. Wyoming opened with a 32-14 loss at Florida.

Northwestern State (1-0) vs. North Dakota State (1-0), 7 p.m. The Demons are ranked No. 9 in I-AA this week after their 27-23 victory against Louisiana-Monroe. NSU quarterback Davon Vinson was selected Division I-AA national Player of the Week after accounting for 311 yards total offense and throwing for three second-half touchdowns as the Demons rallied from a 23-0 deficit. Demons defensive tackle Tory Collins, who prepped at Fortier, was chosen Southland Conference Defensive Player of the Week. Collins, a transfer from LSU, had nine tackles, two for losses. He learned earlier in the week that his family home in New Orleans had been severely damaged by Hurricane Katrina. North Dakota State is ranked No. 20 this week after its 59-7 victory against Arkansas-Monticello.

Grambling State (0-0) vs. Alabama A&M (1-0), 6:30 p.m. The Tigers' opener against Alcorn State was postponed due to Katrina. Sixth-year senior quarterback Bruce Eugene from Cohen has regained his starting spot with the Tigers. Eugene is another local player whose home has been lost. Alabama A&M opened with a 27-14 victory against Tennessee State. Bulldogs quarterback Harold Dorman was selected SWAC Offensive Player of the Week for his performance in the game.

McNeese State (0-0) at Georgia Southern (1-0), 5p.m. After last week's cancellation of the Southern game, the Cowboys draw a tough opening opponent. The Eagles, winners of six Division I-AA championships, opened with a 41-38 overtime victory against Northeastern.

Tailgating: Play of Yellow Jackets from N.O. gains Gailey's admiration

By Ted Lewis
Staff writer

It was just one of hundreds of missing-persons messages that had been flashed by various networks.

The odds that somebody watching the Georgia Tech-Auburn game on ESPN would have the information Yellow Jackets senior defensive end Eric Henderson desired seemed infinitesimal.

But, thanks to whatever forces guide our destinies, a cousin of Henderson was watching and did know that the Erica Henderson, the younger sister of the former Karr standout, was safe and sound in Hammond.

The message was received in the Auburn press box by Georgia Tech sports information director Allison George, who relayed it to Henderson at halftime.

That the Yellow Jackets went on to upset the Tigers, 23-14, with Henderson getting two sacks and a forced fumble, was just lagniappe.

"I knew in my heart she was probably OK," Henderson said. "But it was just such a relief.

"I've still got cousins missing though, and they've all got kids. To me, this was just fitting in one piece of a puzzle."

Henderson is one of four players from the New Orleans area on the Georgia Tech team. Strong safety Dawan Landry from Hahnville was the Jackets' leading tackler in the Auburn game, with 10, and also had a key interception. Ike Eziemefe, like Henderson a Karr graduate, saw duty as backup fullback. Defensive tackle Darryl Richard from Destrehan is out for the year with a knee injury suffered in spring practice.

All four have spent the time since Hurricane Katrina comparing notes from back home.

Henderson doesn't know if he has a home to return to.

In reality, he didn't have one before Aug. 29.

He said he has never had contact with his father. His mother died when he was 10.

His grandmother, Delicious Henderson, was his legal guardian, but she died when Eric was a senior at Karr.

When Eric does go back to New Orleans, he stays with aunts or cousins.

For all he has experienced in his life, Henderson won the 2004 Wilma Rudolph Student-Athlete Achievement Award, which recognizes those who overcome great personal odds to achieve academic and athletic success.

That was after Henderson's All-ACC 2003 sophomore season in which he led the league in sacks with 11, three of them against Auburn.

Last year, Henderson missed three games with a knee injury but still earned second-team All-ACC.

All of Henderson's life experiences made him better able to handle the trials of the past two weeks.

But it hasn't been easy.

"It's hard to watch it on TV," he said. "You think about all of those people who are dead and you know that, out of 10,000, there have to be some that you know.

"It's hurtful, especially if you can't do anything about it."

So what Henderson has done is focus his efforts on football, supported by teammates and coaches.

His play, plus that of Landry and Eziemefe in the Auburn game, gained the admiration of Georgia Tech coach Chan Gailey.

"I don't know how they did it," Gailey said. "It's hard enough for guys to get ready for a big game with no distractions, especially when it's the first game of their senior years.

"My hat's off to them. It really is."

Beating Auburn earned Georgia Tech a No. 17 ranking this week. It's the first time the Yellow Jackets have been in the Top 25 since the end of the 2001 season.

But Henderson said he and his teammates are not resting on their laurels.

The Jackets play their ACC opener today at North Carolina, a team that beat them last year, 34-13, rolling up 284 rushing yards. That was one of the games that Henderson missed.

"Beating Auburn was great, but it's behind us now," Henderson said. "We're concentrating on winning our division and playing for the ACC championship.

"That's the kind of swagger we're playing with."

But Henderson has other things on his mind as well.

"My cousins - Sedrick Jackson, Katrina Jackson, David Johnson and Cedric Johnson," he said. "They all have kids, too.

"We don't know where they are."

If anybody does, call (404)894-6283.

They'll make sure Eric gets the message, even if he's tackling somebody at the time.

Quick Picks

• LSU at Arizona State, 7:45 p.m., ESPN

No LSU coach has ever made his debut under more unusual circumstances than Les Miles. Here's thinking the Tigers will adjust to the dry heat of the desert and give the folks in Louisiana something to cheer about.

Spread: Arizona State by 1 ½; Pick: LSU, 27-18

• Texas at Ohio State, 7 p.m., WGNO-26

They don't make non-conference matchups like this anymore. Two of the Top 10 winningest programs meeting for the first time should make for an exciting night in the Horseshoe.

Spread: Ohio State by 1; Pick: Ohio State, 24-22

• Notre Dame at Michigan, 11 a.m., WGNO-26

After foolishly giving Bob Davie a contract extension and then having to fire him, fumbling the hiring of George O'Leary, having to serve as an uncomfortable point man in the firing of Tyrone Willingham, and whiffing on Urban Meyer, Notre Dame athletic director

Kevin White looks to have stumbled onto a the perfect fit in Charlie Weis.

Spread: Michigan by 7; Pick: Michigan, 30-27

• South Carolina at Georgia, 4:30 p.m., ESPN

Steve Spurrier was 11-1 against the Bulldogs while at Florida, including a 52-17 victory in 1995. That was the highest total ever posted by a visiting team in Sanford Stadium. But the Gamecocks aren't the Gators.

Spread: Georgia by 18; Pick: Georgia 35-13

• Southern Miss at Alabama, 6:45 p.m., ESPN2

After spending two weeks training in Memphis, the Golden Eagles probably aren't in the best of shape to face a resurgent Crimson Tide.

Spread: Alabama by 11 ½; Pick: Alabama, 24-3

• Vanderbilt at Arkansas, 6 p.m.

How often do you get to use the phrase "undefeated Vanderbilt?" Just this once.

Spread: Arkansas by 10 ½; Pick: Arkansas, 17-10.

• Clemson at Maryland, ESPN, 11 a.m.

Tommy Bowden got a much-needed victory against Texas A&M last week. Beating the Terps on their turf would get him off the hot seat - for a while at least Spread: Maryland by 2; Pick: Clemson, 35-30

• Iowa at Iowa State, 2:30 p.m.

This one doesn't get much attention outside the state border, but it's as intense as its gets.

Spread: Iowa by 9; Pick: Iowa 31-17

• Mississippi State at Auburn, 11:30 a.m., WUPL-54

Well, at least we won't have to hear Auburn fans complaining about being unfairly denied their shot at the national championship this year.

Spread: Auburn by 15 ½; Pick: Auburn 20-13

• North Texas at Middle Tennessee, 6 p.m.

Mean Green coach Darryl Dickey's teams have been outscored 231-37 in his seven season openers. Not having to start out against LSU as schedule lets him break that streak.

Spread: Middle Tennessee by 4; Pick: North Texas, 28-25

Last week: 8-2, 5-2 vs. spread

Replay? What replay?

For all of the attention it got leading up to the season, college football's first weekend of using replay to review plays went almost unnoticed.

The SEC, in fact, didn't even keep stats on how many times games were stopped for review.

About the only place where the officials went overboard was the Nebraska-Maine game. There were five stoppages. Apparently the refs were dumbfounded by the Black Bears holding the once-mighty Cornhuskers to a 25-7 victory.

In the Mountain West Conference, the only league to allow coaches' challenges, only one of the five made was successfully.

About the only gripe was from Florida State coach Bobby Bowden on the length it took to review a fumble in his team's victory against Miami.

"They need to change the name from instant to long time," Bowden said. "They took three or four dadgum minutes to get that done.

"Our offense was on the field ready to go, and we were just standing around. This happens with something new, but they need to speed it up or they will be making a lot of people mad."

Extra Points

The New Orleans-based Sun Belt Conference has relocated its headquarters to Tuscaloosa, Ala.

Commissioner Wright Waters is indicating that the league will take over the New Orleans Bowl from the Sports Foundation for this year at least and that the game likely will be played at the campus of the Sun Belt champion. ... Brandon Harris, Notre Dame's former walk-on from Ben Franklin had one kickoff return for 11 yards in the Fighting Irish's victory against Pittsburgh. Harris, a cornerback, also was credited with two tackles. ... ESPN analyst and BCS basher Trev Alberts has been fired after failing to show up to work last Sunday. Alberts, who teamed with Rece Davis and Mark May on the studio show, was reportedly unhappy with what he considered a "second fiddle" role on the telecasts. ... Because of the TV-imposed 9:30 a.m. start, Kansas State players have been working out at 6 a.m. all week to prepare themselves for today's game at Marshall. ... Former Colorado State quarterback Bradlee Van Pelt, now with the Denver Broncos, has apologized for showing up at last week's game against Colorado with an obscenity scrawled on his shirt and getting into arguments with Buffs' fans. . The Harris Poll lineup keeps changing. Former Marshall coach Bob Pruett, himself a late replacement for the poll which will debut on Sept. 26, dropped out this week and was replaced by former SMU player Bobby Leach.

Coach's Corner

"In retrospect, we certainly didn't make the right decision. There was a lot of time left, and we were moving the ball well. We felt there were more points to score and we ended up running just three more plays." - Texas A&M coach Dennis Franchione on his decision to kick an extra point with 9:22 left, giving the Aggies a 24-22 lead over Clemson. Clemson eventually kicked a field goal with two seconds left to win, 25-24.

Best News of the Week

You know it's an unusual time when you're writing a column while sitting in a Red Cross office in Jackson, Tenn., waiting to sign up for aid.

But on Friday, while I was doing precisely this, Walter Beachem, a man I met at a shelter last week who solicited my help in finding his daughters, walked in.

Turns out, he heard from their mother the next day and they were safe in Atlanta. Apparently, somebody had seen Beachem's plea in The Times-Picayune.

"I was losing faith," said Beachem, who is in Tennessee with eight other family members. "I don't know how much longer I could have kept going."

"Finding them was a miracle from heaven."

Amen.

Shinn:Hornets won't bail out on New Orleans

By Jimmy Smith
Staff writer

Hornets owner George Shinn conceded Friday it might be difficult to play home games close to New Orleans this season, but he said he remains steadfast in his bond with the city.

"Our objective is not to abandon ship here or to get out of dodge," Shinn said from his summer home in Telford, Tenn. "Our plan is to hope and pray New Orleans rebuilds. And I think it will with everyone's support and the federal money that's coming in there. I think it will be stronger."

The city of Louisville, Ky., has offered Freedom Hall as a site for some of the Hornets' home games this season, according to a report Friday in the Courier-Journal.

Louisville was among the suitors when the Hornets relocated from Charlotte before the 2002-03 season, but there was no NBA-ready arena in place as there was in New Orleans. Louisville now joins Oklahoma City, Kansas City, Nashville and San Diego as cities that have extended invitations to the Hornets to play "home" games this year.

"I haven't heard from Louisville," Shinn said Friday, "Lots of cities have made contact through the league. I know we're taking a look and listening to a few. But we're trying to get something close to Louisiana."

Shinn, however, said hopes are dimming that Baton Rouge could be used as a possible home venue this season.

The Hornets cannot play in New Orleans Arena because of facility damage and hurricane-related infrastructure problems in the city.

Hornets representatives Sam Russo and Steve Martin have informed Shinn that the downtown Rivercenter and the LSU Assembly Center in Baton Rouge might be unavailable because of their current use as evacuation shelters and medical facilities.

Russo, Shinn said, traveled to Shreveport on Friday to scout possible locations there. The Hornets are scheduled to play a preseason game against the Miami Heat in Bossier City on Oct. 25.

"But we've got to remember the economics have to be there to support it," Shinn said. "We've still got a business to operate. We've got to keep that in mind.

"The thing everybody's got to remember is our goal is simple: We want to play in New Orleans. That's our home. But we can't. We can't come back even if the facility was clean because there's nobody else there. The city will come back. We don't know how long it will take, therefore we've got to find a temporary home."

Shinn is scheduled to tour the city Saturday morning, and several front-office personnel will attempt to retrieve the club's computer system and server from the corporate offices on Poydras Street.

He said he hopes to have a decision on where the Hornets could play home games perhaps early next week.

Privateers' Jeremie Davis might return to the fold

Ted Lewis
Staff writer

Davis, along with fellow newcomer Wayne Williams, rode out Hurricane Katrina at their Privateer Place apartment, and afterward were rescued by helicopter – only to be placed on an overpass on Interstate 10.

It was two days before they were picked up by buses,

UNO basketball coach Monte Towe considers himselfold-school when it comes to disciplinary matters, but Hurricane Katrina is forcing a change of attitude.

Towe said Friday he is leaving open the door for signee Jeremie Davis to join the team in Tyler, Texas, after Davis' reportedly had said he wanted nothing more to do with New Orleans because of a harrowing experience during the Category 4 storm.

Davis, along with fellow newcomer Wayne Williams, rode out Hurricane Katrina at their Privateer Place apartment, and afterward were rescued by helicopter - only to be placed on an overpass on Interstate 10.

It was two days before they were picked up by buses, Towe said.

"Jeremie told my coaches there's no way he's coming back to New Orleans," Towe said. "I haven't talked to him myself, but I understand how he feels.

"That's why I understand that if he needs a little more time to think over what he's going to do, it's fine.

We'd love to have him with us here."

Williams, a 6-foot-5 forward from Arcadia, averaged 16.5 points-per-game last season at Spoon River (Ill.) Junior College and was considered a contender for a starting role for the Privateers this season.

Towe said all of the other team members, with the exception of senior forward Shawn Malloy, were at the University of Texas-Tyler, where the Privateers will attend school and practice until they can return to New Orleans. Malloy is expected this weekend.

Towe also said he would petition the NCAA to allow him to sign an additional player, Joe Barnett, a transfer from Loyola who sat out last season, because he now is one under the scholarship limit of 13.

As for reports that some of his players, most notably junior guard Bo McCalebb, had been contacted and encouraged to transfer to other schools, Towe said he does plan to report anyone to the NCAA.

"I've never done that," he said. "It's the kind of thing that's best handled between schools.

"I think the message is out there."

As for where the Privateers will play home games this season, Towe said things are very much in doubt.

UNO athletic director Jim Miller said Friday that Lakefront Arena has a hole in the roof, making playing any home games there this season doubtful. The Pontchartrain Center in Kenner is a likely alternative, Miller added.

One additional road game for UNO was scheduled. The Privateers will play at Kansas on Dec. 29, replacing a home game against Norfolk State.

WOMEN'S TEAM UPDATE:

UNO basketball coach Amy Champion has all of her 12 eligible players on campus in Tyler. The only player who chose not to make the move was Caryn Robinson, a transfer from the University of Alabama-Birmingham, who would have had to sit out this season.

"Our kids have been wonderful," Champion said. "It would have been very easy for them to jump ship, but they chose to stick with us and be part of what we're building at UNO."

Zephyrs hope to play at home in seven months

Field takes on new purpose these days, but baseball to return

By Bob Fortus
Staff writer

FEMA is operating out of Zephyr Field, National Guard troops are gathering there and helicopters are taking off and landing in the parking lot.

But rest assured, team officials promise, in seven months, baseball will be back at the park.

"The damage to Zephyr Field was minimal to what other areas received," said Pete Fisch, director of operations for Beaver Sports, the company that manages the holdings of Zephyrs owner Don Beaver. "We honestly feel that area will rebuild.

"Things will never be the same again. But, in the same sense, we can't say our plan is X, Y and Z.

Said Zephyrs general manager Mike Schline: "Our plan is to play baseball in April. A lot of people might need to see a baseball game. That's the way we're looking at it."

Because of Hurricane Katrina, the Zephyrs canceled the last three games of their home schedule.

"Our first concern when everything happened was to our employees and the players," Fisch said.

The Zephyrs left New Orleans on Aug. 27 by bus for Oklahoma City, the site of their second-to-last road series. The team completed its season at Iowa on Labor Day. After the last game, players and coaches dispersed to their homes. The Washington Nationals, the Zephyrs' parent team, made the travel arrangements.

"They've been very supportive," Schline said of the Nationals. "They've been wonderful to work with."

Said Adam Wogan, the Nationals' director of player development: "Since this happened, in our communication with Mike and our staff of the Zephyrs, we just want to support them as much as we can and help them as much as we can. This is an issue bigger than baseball."

Concerning the Zephyrs' intention to play next season in New Orleans, Wogan said: "If that's something that will help the community, we're absolutely for it."

The Zephyrs have 20 to 22 full-time employees in New Orleans, Fisch said. He said that Beaver Sports wants to keep them working. The company also manages a Triple-A team in Charlotte, N.C., a Class A team in Hickory, N.C., and a Champions Tour golf tournament.

Some employees might be placed temporarily in positions with those teams, Fisch said.

Meanwhile, Zephyr Field "is being used for a better cause than baseball," Schline said.

Said Fisch: "They're utilizing every inch of the property."

The bases won't be needed for a while.

"The game's not very important," Zephyrs manager Tim Foli said. "If having a team there helps the city because they need the entertainment, that's good. If they just need a place to play, that's not good.

"It's the people. It's not a matter of the Nationals' Triple-A team. It's the people."

Hornets piecing things together

By John Reid
Staff writer

If things were normal, Hornets general manager Allan Bristow would be making final roster additions in preparation for next month's training camp.

Coach Byron Scott would be meeting regularly with his assistants, going over plans for the season. And most of the Hornets players would be working out at the Alario Center, trying to get a jump on things before camp begins.

But these are not normal times in the wake of Hurricane Katrina, which devastated the New Orleans area.

Bristow said the Alario Center on the West Bank is being used as a command center for the Louisiana National Guard and for Jefferson Parish officials.

Instead of the team making a final push to increase its season-ticket base, Hornets executives are hustling to find a temporary home for the season.

"I don't know if the word normal is going to be used this season," Bristow said by telephone Friday from his offseason home in Marco Island, Fla.

"Right now, we sort of have everybody scattered (from the basketball operations department)."

Director of player personnel Jeff Bower is living in a cabin with his family in upstate New York and was on vacation when Katrina struck.

Vice president of basketball operations Willis Reed evacuated to Ruston and remains there with family members.

Scott has been unavailable for comment this week, but team officials said he is safe with his family.

Bristow said they have been working from their homes, corresponding with each other through e-mails. They have stayed in contact with most of the players by telephone.

The league also is assisting the team with all matters.

"We're trying to help them get back on their feet," league spokesman Tim Frank said Friday. "Obviously, they have staff all over the place, and we're trying to help them select a place for training camp."

Bristow said players contracts are being maintained by the league's legal department until things are more stable.

"Just a lot of things are frozen, but I'm talking with the league, our players," Bristow said.

"But we're not under normal circumstances, and it's very difficult because things are very slow. We're just waiting to see where we are going to play our games."

Team president Paul Mott said this week they are considering Baton Rouge, Lafayette and Bossier City as possible temporary homes.

City officials from Louisville, Las Vegas, Oklahoma City, Nashville and now San Diego have made offers to become the team's temporary home.

But team officials said they would consider those cities only if they can't get anything worked out with a Louisiana city.

"Our first option is always to see if there is a place in Louisiana where we can feasibly pull this off," said Tim McDougall, the Hornets' chief marketing officer. "We've had people on the ground looking in Baton Rouge and looking at other facilities in the state, and we're trying to get a read on that."

Meantime, several Hornets' staff members are trying to cope with the Katrina disaster as best they can, like all residents from the metro area.

"Our chimney was blown off and part of our roof was damaged, and we had some water damage," said Bower, who owns a house in Harvey. "But there have been many more people shaken than we are, of course."

Bower said he has been unable to catch a flight to New Orleans to personally inspect the damage on his home.

P.J. Brown and Chris Andersen were the only two Hornets players directly affected by the storm. Andersen evacuated to Denver, and Brown had some flood damage to one of his homes in Slidell. Brown has enrolled his children in schools in Houston, Bristow said.

"Once training camp starts, we are going to proceed as normal," Bower said. "But there are going to be some challenges."

Lutcher gets chance to play

Team grateful despite setback

ST. AMANT 17 • LUTCHER 7

By Jim Derry
Staff writer

ST. AMANT – For nearly two weeks, life was nothing but a chaotic storm for the entire metro area.

On Friday night at The Pit, one area football team was able to enjoy some sense of what life was supposed to be for a group of teenagers who want nothing more than to play.

The record will show that Lutcher lost to St. Amant 17-7 on a warm, humid night 50 miles from New Orleans. But much more important, it also will be documented that football again was played in southern Louisiana after Hurricane Katrina ravaged the area.

For Bulldogs coach Tim Detillier, that's a fact that meant the most.

"Tonight's game was not about winning and losing," he said. "The story was that we played, and that a community can find some sense of normalcy. (The past two weeks) have been a learning experience for our young kids. It's been eye-opening.

"Maybe sometimes, you take things for granted like you turn on a light switch sometimes. I think maybe we appreciate things a little bit more."

Once the game began, it was like any other Friday night in September. There were running plays, there were passes and there were punts and penalties.

But before the contest began, there was an unprecedented show of unity.

Instead of a visiting team being announced to jeers and a home team running out of a tunnel through a banner to a host of screaming fans, the teams came out as one and stood together as the national anthem played.

"It's really a little bit unusual. You're fixing to go to war," St. Amant coach David Swacker said. "But this is all part of the learning process for kids. ... I just want to make sure our kids understand what we are doing here and what this thing is all about and how fortunate they are.

"They have a lot of kids who a'int playing no damn football."

But the Bulldogs and Gators did play, and Lutcher showed signs that it had missed more than a week of practice, fumbling twice in the first half and jumping offside five times.

St. Amant took the opening kickoff and scored in eight plays - culminated by a 30-yard run by Brady Miles that gave the Gators a 7-0 lead.

Lutcher looked poised to tie the score at 7 on its ensuing drive, but on the 12th play at the Gators' four, quarterback Cade Fontenot was driven back to the 22 and fumbled.

Two possessions later with the score tied at 7, Lutcher had a chance to take the lead, but it again fumbled inside St. Amant territory to thwart a drive.

Miles then put the Gators in front to stay, running 29 yards, again around the right side.

A positive for the Bulldogs was their rushing attack. Rashad Webster ran 20 times for 125 yards, and Wayne Albert had 18 carries for 106 yards and a touchdown.

Even though the Bulldogs were down because they lost the game, the players and coaches were satisfied to get their minds off of the destruction of Hurricane Katrina, albeit for just a short time.

"We're just so happy, and we thank God that we have a second opportunity to play because a lot of teams don't have that opportunity," Webster said. "We're lucky because we have a brand new schedule and another chance to get after it and show the world what the Dogs are all about."

Lutcher must now go on knowing that it likely will not even play a district schedule, as there is a strong possibility the other seven teams – Hannan, Clark, De La Salle, Karr, Landry, Lawless and St. Bernard – in 10-3A won't have a football season.

The Bulldogs have tried to fill their open weeks as best they can, and they have done it mostly with Class 5A schools.

"Again, the story is that not whether we won or lost, it's that we played the game," Detillier said. "In two weeks, that's going to be my message to the team, because in two weeks we would have started our district schedule.

"We are, rather we were, in the largest district in the state, and in two weeks, that's what we're going to be talking about – that we can represent our district in some kind of way. It changes daily, but I really think we're the only team left in the district. I hope not, but it sure looks that way."

Keep your mouse pointed to nola.com for the latest news from The Times-Picayune

nola.com

SPORTS

Jefferson school officials optimistic for football

Restoration, return of families seen as keys to season

By Mike Strom
Staff writer

Jefferson Parish may have Friday-night football this fall after all.

With the parish public school system scheduled to re-open on Oct. 3, two Jefferson school board members said they would like to see the high-school athletic programs revived at that time as well. School Board president Ray St. Pierre said he and fellow board member Mark Morgan are in favor of resuming athletics, particularly football, as soon as possible.

Jefferson and its schools, St. Pierre said, were not as severely damaged by Hurricane Katrina nor inundated by flooding brought on by the storm as neighboring parishes Orleans, Plaquemines and St. Bernard.

Jefferson schools thusly could serve as an educational hub for the students of all four parishes as the metro area is rebuilt. Jefferson Public Schools superintendent Dr. Diane Roussel spoke before a Congressional committee Wednesday in Washington, D.C., to seek funding for such a plan, St. Pierre said.

Louisiana High School Athletic Association rules require school systems that employ platooning must retain the separate autonomy of their individual schools in order to compete for district and state championship honors in the LHSAA, LHSAA commissioner Tommy Henry said.

Any exception or rule change permiting exceptions would require approval by the LHSAA Executive Committee, Henry said.

If, however, two schools are merged into one by a school system (such as Ehret combining with West Jefferson) the surviving flagship school then could compete for district and state championship honors, Henry said.

"Two (separate) schools can't combine to have one team,'' Henry said.

"But if a school is operating say not as West Jefferson but as Ehret, then that's not two schools."

"It looks like Jefferson Parish is going to be the hub on the rebuilding process,'' St. Pierre said. "We think it's got to come through us."

While the No. 1 priority of Jefferson school officials is to have education available for those returning, restoring athletics is viewed as a positive supplement and point of attraction in that process.

"There is an effort to try to ascertain how many kids that we have out there and when we get back to school to see if we have enough kids to put some programs together,'' said St. Pierre, a long-time coach in Jefferson. "If we have the kids, we will do so. It probably will be a little difficult, but it's not out of the realm of possibility."

The Oct. 3 target date for reopening Jefferson schools announced

Wednesday at a special school board meeting in Baton Rouge was based on assurances from Parish president Aaron Broussard,

St. Pierre said. Broussard and his staff believe the parish infrastructure should be restored sufficiently in two to three weeks to allow residents to return.

"If it's done in two weeks, we'll be in good shape,'' St. Pierre said.

At Wednesday's school board meeting, Morgan said he wanted to see

"Friday-night football being played in Jefferson Parish in the month of October."

The viability of such a scenario depends largely on how many students and teachers return, St. Pierre said. There are other significant logistical hurdles to be cleared that involve what kind of employment and housing will be available for displaced residents and teachers.

"We feel like it's really, really possible," St. Pierre said of the Oct. 3 re-opening of schools. "Aaron says three weeks (maximum). If we can get in in two weeks, then it's definitely feasible."

Details of the Jefferson school plan are being worked on this week, St. \Pierre said, in anticipation of a second board meeting Wednesday in Baton Rouge.

Jefferson campuses and athletic facilities, including Joe Yenni and Hoss Memtsas stadiums, are being examined this week and next to see which are most viable. Jefferson athletic director Manny Barocco is coordinating the inspection of athletic facilities, St. Pierre said.

Ehret and West Jefferson, Jefferson's two largest schools, were scheduled to open District 5-5A football play on Oct. 7, which is the Friday following the targeted re-opening. Ehret plays at Destrehan, and West Jefferson plays at Assumption.

Destrehan, Assumption, East St. John and Hahnville are the other members of 5-5A and have resumed football practice.

"We absolutely want to play, and it would be a great thing for our kids,'' said West Jefferson coach Hank Tierney, who evacuated to Benton, Ark. "There are some big ifs involved in this, but we certainly would want to play."

Teams would need at least one week of practice, but ideally two weeks,

Tierney said, given that players will have missed an entire month of work by the end of September. Physical conditioning is another consideration, given that their district opponents will have been working out and playing during the final three weeks of September.

"If the powers (that) be have schools up and running on Oct. 3, it would seem that there should be every possible attempt to have football back, provided we can get our players and coaches back," Tierney said. "Me, I'm all for that. Now can it logistically happen? I would have my oubts. But I would like to see our kids get to play."

Ehret coach Billy North traveled from Lake Charles, where he is staying, to Baton Rouge to attend Wednesday's school board meeting,

"When I first heard Mark Morgan say that he would like to see Friday-night football played in October, I thought he was crazy,'' North said. "But the more

I thought about it, the more I thought what a good idea it was.

"Realistically, I think LHSAA competition is over for our parish for this year. But when we get back we could have a general call out for football, like a playground, and then let coaches pick teams and play some games. Then we'll begin the process of bringing some normalcy back to our parish."

West Jefferson and Ehret players and coaches are scattered throughout

Louisiana and bordering states as are those at Jefferson's other high schools, Higgins, Bonnabel, King, East Jefferson, Cox and Fisher.

Tierney said families, particularly those whose children had established themselves with other programs, would need assurances that Jefferson's re-opening and resumption of athletics is definite.

"We told all of our kids that they needed to go somewhere and play,"

Tierney said. "If they're established and they're doing good, what do you tell them?"

St. Pierre said coaches must be open-minded and reminded that rosters likely will be bolstered from displaced student athletes from the surrounding parishes.

Platooning two schools at one campus is a possibility depending on enrollment demands and the availability of facilities, St. Pierre said.

"I think we have to look at what schools are returning and what schools are going to be open and where those kids that return are going to be transported to," said North, who said he turned down a teaching position at Lake Charles-Barbe on Friday. "Nobody knows the answers to those questions right now. I'm being conservative because I don't have enough information right now. Let's see what hand we're dealt and then play that hand."

NOTE:

The St. Charles Catholic football team won't be idle this week after all. The Comets will play host to Jackson at 11 a.m. Saturday in their season-opener.

"It was very spur of the moment," St. Charles coach Frank Monica said.

East St. John and Destrehan are the only River Parishes football teams not playing this weekend.

Lutcher's volleyball team returned to action Thursday with a 25-16, 25-17 victory against Family Christian Academy. Katie Duhe led Lutcher with nine kills. Traci Martin had 15 assists, and Nekedra Nicholas had 10 digs. Ricki LeBlanc and Victoria Nassar had three aces apiece.

• • • • • •

Lori Lyons contributed to this report.

Back on the field, Wildcats turn back Tigers

STAFF PHOTO BY AMANDA McCOY

St. James fans are back in the stands after a harrowing week in the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina.

ST.JAMES 28 • TERREBONNE 7

By Lori Lyons
River Parishes bureau

There were no trains roaring through the south end zone, and there were no ladies tossing confetti after each touchdown. But there was football in St. James on Friday night, just 11 days after Hurricane Katrina hit the metro area. And after a sluggish first half, probably caused by the week layoff from school in the aftermath of the storm, the Wildcats rallied for a 28-7 victory over Terrebonne.

After spotting the Tigers a 7-0 lead in the second quarter, St. James scored all of its points in the second half. Luther Ambrose caught a 20-yard pass from quarterback Antonio Phillips in the third quarter and ran for a six-yard touchdown in the fourth. Tremaine Dapremont and Javon Keller also ran for scores. In all, St. James rushed for 187 yards and finished with 241 yards on offense. The Wildcats defense also did its part, with Jared Byers and Jerome Lewis each nabbing interceptions.

Just two Fridays ago, the Wildcats were riding high after knocking off Class 5A powerhouse Hahnville in the River Parishes Jamboree. But when they walked off the field that night, they had no idea that it would be two weeks before they played again. The hurricane canceled school and last week's highly anticipated game against River Parishes rival West St. John. But once school resumed on Tuesday, the Wildcats started thinking about this week's opponent – Terrebonne, another Class 5A opponent.

"During the storm, we were thinking about West St. John," said Wildcats senior offensive lineman Demond Jackson. "We really wanted that game. But we were ready to play anybody. We couldn't wait to get back on the field. We need all the experience we can get."

Both teams seemed to show the effects of the disruption to their routines with sputtering drives in the first half. After a scoreless first quarter, Terrebonne took a lead.

After St. James turned the ball over on downs at its 22-yard line, the Tigers started driving. On third-and-five at the 40, Tigers quarterback Mark Hebert connected with Tirin Neville for a 59-yard pass. Neville made a fingertip grab of the ball and ran toward the end zone, but he fumbled out of bounds at the 1. On the next play, Hebert sneaked in for the score, and Michael Crone kicked the extra point.

Hebert and Tirin would connect a total of six times for 107 yards, accounting for the bulk of the Tigers' offense, but those were the only points Terrebonne would score.

St. James dominated the second half. On its first possession following halftime, the Wildcats drove 67 yards on five plays. After a Terrebonne personal foul penalty put St. James at the Terrebonne 20, Phillips connected with Ambrose for the Wildcats' first touchdown. The extra-point kick failed, leaving St. James trailing by one.

But on their next possession the Wildcats got a break. Stalled at the Terrebonne 39-yard line, Terry Isom's punt hit a Tiger player, and Wayne Mitchell recovered at the 16 for the Wildcats. From there, they took three plays to score, with Dapremont running in from the 2. Zenon ran for the two-point conversion to give the Wildcats a 14-7 lead.

In the fourth quarter the Wilcats got another break. Terrebonne was at the St. James 41, when a high snap sailed over Hebert's head and St. James' Juarelle Narcisse recovered. After Phillips passed to Jordan Landry for a 32-yard gain, Javon Keller ran to the 18. A Terrebonne personal foul penalty moved the ball to the 6, and Ambrose ran it in from there. Keller added a 15-yard touchdown run in the final minute of the game.

St. James coach Rick Gaille said his team's first-half play was most certainly a result of the team's unexpected vacation.

"It was a team effort of errors in the first half," Gaille said. "I think the layoff affected us. It didn't affect us any in our conditioning, which I was pleased with. It was our execution. It took a while to get our attention.

"But, in the end, Gaille and his team were just happy to be back on the field at all.

"We're glad to be able to play a game at all," he said. "Everybody is, on both sides. I think everybody in the stadium is happy just to be here. Like I said earlier this week, it's what we do."

SUNDAY SURVIVING KATRINA, REMEMBERING 9/11 EDITORIAL, A-13

The Times-Picayune

$1.50 169th year No. 234 SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 11, 2005 HURRICANE EDITION

KATRINA: THE STORM WE'VE ALWAYS FEARED

Glimmers of hope emerge as water slowly recedes

STAFF PHOTO BY CHRIS GRANGER

South Carolina emergency response team members Gene Yates, left, and Matt Sutherland begin the plodding, vile-smelling task of recovering the dead Saturday in a Meraux home, which shows a water line where floodwaters reached the second story. Search-and-rescue missions have shifted from saving the living to recovering the dead. See story, A-2

STAFF PHOTO BY RUSTY COSTANZA

The live oaks along Northline Drive in Old Metairie stand in 3 to 4 feet of flood water. Oaks can withstand standing water, but arborists are concerned about the effect of the toxic water on the trees.

Rooting for recovery: Live oaks largely weathered the storm

Katrina can teach lessons, arborists say

By Sheila Grissett
Staff writer

Despite the horrific blow dealt to southeast Louisiana's urban forest by Hurricane Katrina and its filthy, watery aftermath, local landscape professionals say many of the area's rugged, beloved live oaks are doing what they do best: soldiering on and surviving.

But, they say, there was massive loss of other types of trees throughout the metro area, and recovery will take years.

Of the 720 live oaks that edge stately St. Charles Avenue in soft shadow and shade, only four fell to Katrina's winds, said arborist John Benton, who regularly surveys trees

See TREES, page A-12

Drained but not defeated, pump crews offer optimism

Water is going down faster than expected

By Gordon Russell
Staff writer

First the good news: The city is draining faster than expected, and much of it could be largely dry in weeks, not months, the Sewerage & Water Board now dares to hope. The problem is that water service, a precondition for safe resettlement, may be months away, due to the extensive damage to S&WB mains and piping.

The challenge of "dewatering" the city, to use the fashionable term for pumping it dry, is being met by a group of about 300 water board engineers and pump operators who stayed on the job in Hurricane Katrina's aftermath at sometimes harrowing risks.

They briefly abandoned their posts when the waters got so deep that pumps' motors fried and the possibility of drowning was real. But once rescued, most went back to work anywhere they could be useful, and they have continued

See PUMPS, page A-9

STAFF PHOTO BY BRETT DUKE

Nagin: Mistakes were made at all levels

HIS BIGGEST FRUSTRATION WAS SLOW PACE OF RELIEF

By Gordon Russell
Staff writer

In a stark reminder of how drastically Hurricane Katrina has affected the lives of New Orleanians, Mayor Ray Nagin has purchased a home in Dallas and enrolled his young daughter in school there.

Nagin, who spoke with The Times-Picayune by telephone from Dallas, where he has been since Wednesday, said he plans to return to New Orleans on Saturday. He said he will remain in the Crescent City while his family lives for the next six months in Dallas, making occasional visits to his family when possible.

It's not clear where Nagin will be living: His home on Bayou St. John suffered massive flooding, the mayor said, although

See NAGIN, page A-15

INSIDE • Jefferson allowing some businesses to return, A-2 • Foundations of fishing industry destroyed, A-4 • Resilient city already on rebound, TP's David Meeks says, A-7 • Admiral takes helm of recovery effort, A-8

Businesses can return to rebuild Jefferson

Parish to allow owners back in

By Trymaine D. Lee
Staff writer

As the region stumbles to its knees following its crippling bout with Hurricane Katrina, a silver lining has emerged out of Jefferson Parish: as of Monday morning, some businesses will be allowed to return.

"We've been knocked down, but you can't keep us down," said Jefferson Parish President Aaron Broussard.

At a news conference Saturday – strategically held in a lot across from Lakeside Mall at Veterans Memorial and North Causeway boulevards — parish officials outlined the blueprint of the plan they've dubbed Operation Jumpstart Jefferson.

According to the plan, essential businesses will be allowed to re-enter the parish as early as Monday morning after applying for a Jumpstart Jefferson certificate, which can be filled out on the parish Web site or picked up at one of several satellite locations. The certificate will allow businesses, their owners and employees the chance to return to their shops to make repairs, restock and lay the groundwork for normal business operations. Officials believe the plan will make for a smooth transition to normalcy once Broussard gives the green light for residents to return.

Also, commercial air traffic will resume at Louis Armstrong International Airport on Tuesday, Aviation Director Roy Williams said.

Commercial cargo flights already have begun. "We've had a lot of demand from our carriers to begin service again, and we're ready to do that," Williams said. He said both Jefferson Parish and Kenner have agreed to allow the airport opening in order to serve areas not under closure orders.Passenger service will initially begin on concourses A and B. The airport has been open since Aug. 30, the day after Hurricane Katrina struck the Gulf Coast, and has served as a major hub for rescue efforts.

For Operation Jumpstart Jefferson, the list of parish-approved essential businesses range from accounting and attorney practices to grocers, garbage collectors and veterinarians. Businesses not on the list of essentials can apply anyway, and will be able to petition the council for certification.

Business owners can download an Operation Jumpstart Jefferson application at www.jeffparish.net, or pick up a copy in East Jefferson at the fire station at 3525 Jefferson Highway, on the West Bank at the fire station at 2248 Barataria Blvd., or at two locations in Baton Rouge, the corner of Highland Road and Interstate 10 or 2525 Quail Drive.

The tone of Saturday's news conference was confident.

"Through the annals of history we've always asked, 'What if the big one comes?' " said Thomas Capella, chairman of the Jefferson Parish council. "Well, it did, and now two weeks later we're getting back up."

Pointing toward Lakeside Shopping Center and calling it the "economic engine" and "backbone of commerce" in the parish, 5th District Councilwoman Jennifer Sneed said the resilient people of Jefferson Parish need businesses open so they can return and put their lives back together.

"The revitalization of Jefferson Parish will be great for everyone," said Jefferson Parish Councilman Louis Congemi. Congemi said the growth of Jefferson businesses ultimately will help the entire metropolitan area, including Orleans Parish.

"Through this entire ordeal, we've depended on friendships, not bureaucracy," said Gretna Mayor Ronnie Harris.

In many sections of some of the larger communities within the parish, including Westwego, Gretna, Harahan and Kenner, electricity and running water have been restored. Where water is running, officials said, it is safe to bathe and wash clothes in but should be boiled for consumption. Officials said residents should not flush toilets since the pumping system still is not fully operational.

The court system will remain shut down until further notice. Jefferson Parish schools are on schedule to open Oct. 3. School board officials announced a Sept. 14 school board meeting to be held at noon on the first floor of the state Department of Education building in Baton Rouge.

Garbage pickup in the unincorporated sections of the parish will begin Monday, but it may take a few days for some residential trash pickups, officials said.

STAFF PHOTO BY CHRIS GRANGER

Matt Sutherland of the South Carolina emergency response team climbs out a window near Joseph Davies Elementary School in Meraux.

GUARD'S MISSION: MORBID 'RECOVERY'

Search for bodies becomes gruesome, door-to-door slog

By Matthew Brown
West Bank bureau

In the days after Hurricane Katrina, the search for the living unfolded at a frenetic pace, an adrenaline-charged scramble by swarms of boats and helicopters desperately seeking victims imperiled by starvation or high water.

The hunt for the dead, however, is emerging as a more tedious task, a door-to-door slog through hip-deep, foul-smelling muck that is falling on people such as Jerry Apodaca, 42, a prison guard from Las Cruces, N.M.

Apodaca was deployed in Plaquemines Parish as part of a 400-strong contingent from his state's National Guard. He knows the chance to be a hero, to rescue people trapped in their attics or on rooftops, has largely passed. His job now is called "recovery" – the oft-heard euphemism for tracking down and tallying up those killed by the storm or in its chaotic aftermath.

He is among hundreds of people in the New Orleans area who for weeks will wade through practically sub-human conditions to look for bloated bodies, a task for which their civilian jobs gave them little or no preparation.

"Mold, sewage, oil, feces floating around – it's just nasty out there," Apodaca said recently as his squad rummaged through the ruins of Port Sulphur, a fishing community in southern Plaquemines Parish that was virtually flattened by Katrina's 130 mile per hour winds and a storm surge estimated to have topped 20 feet.

"They told us we would be doing security. And now we're doing this," said Staff Sgt. Manuel Almanza, a heavy equipment operator from Deming, N.M.

Their contingent, along with similar teams made up of professional rescuers and civilian volunteers, is charged with inspecting every house in Plaquemines and St. Bernard parishes, two of the area's hardest-hit communities.

It's an ugly assignment. If a home's front door is locked, they must break it down and then go room to room sniffing for the tell-tale stench of the decomposing dead. Where the wreckage from another house blocks the door, they have to climb in a window.

They pry their way into vehicles and boats, sift through the wreckage of businesses.

The task comes with plenty of health hazards. Entire communities in the area remain under 3 feet or more of putrid water, and much of the rest is covered in a toxic slush of mud, oil and raw sewage.

"You can't see to the bottom of the water, so you're taking little baby steps," Apodaca said. "All the debris in the water, it's like an obstacle course."

For his unit, none of those obstacles thus far has been a human body. The place is pervaded by the stench of rotten flesh, but so far they have discovered only the carcasses of about 24 dogs.

Officials hope it stays that way. In Plaquemines, only three people have been found dead. In St. Bernard, 62 bodies have been found but officials estimate the final tally will be less than initially expected.

But though the dead have proved elusive, some expect that to change when neighborhoods still underwater begin to dry up – a process that may take weeks. Scott Polk, an investigator with the Plaquemines Parish Coroner's Office, offered this dire outlook: "Down there in the lower end of the parish" – in fishing communities such as Buras, Empire and Venice, where access remains limited – "a lot of people don't leave … We're going to get them (bodies) all over the place."

William Seither, a Plaquemines Parish pump operator who rode out the storm on the second story of a brick building in Port Sulphur, said it's unclear how many people in those lower areas remained in their homes.

"Damn, if there were some, they've got to be dead," he said.

The scenes of destruction have made their mark on some of the New Mexico National Guard soldiers. Several said they still could not believe the scale of Katrina's fury.

Spc. Juan Alvarado, 24, said he tried to describe the scene to his family back in Deming, N.M., but knows he could not do the scene justice.

"You just can't explain it over the phone," he said.

The squad's assistant staff sergeant, Patrick Lucero, 34, a retail industrial supplies salesman from Las Cruces, said it does not even compare to his recent one-year tour of Iraq, where he said he was stationed in the bombed-out town of Taji near Baghdad.

"Iraq's a dump. It's a Third-World country," Lucero said. "It looks worse here."

Lucero said he still holds out hope his group will happen upon an improbable survivor, someone who stored up enough food and water to last until help finally arrived in the form of a volunteer military unit tasked with keeping score of deaths caused by Katrina.

But over in St. Bernard Parish, Derek Franks, of South Carolina, had already seen similar hopes dashed. On Thursday, his search and recovery team responded to a 911 call from an out-of-town evacuee who said an elderly family member back in Meraux still might be alive.

They rushed to the house, only to find the woman dead in her living room.

"You could tell she tried to ride the storm out, but it didn't work out," Franks said. "It's a gruesome task, but that's what we're here for."

WHITNEY BANK ANNOUNCES

HURRICANE ASSISTANCE LOAN AND PAYMENT RELIEF PROGRAMS

Helping our communities is a Whitney tradition. In order to assist victims of Hurricane Katrina in affected areas in Alabama, Louisiana and Mississippi, The Whitney is offering a special Hurricane Assistance Loan, as well as a Payment Relief Program for victims of the storm:

HURRICANE ASSISTANCE LOAN

Whitney is offering individuals a 90-day single payment loan at 7% Annual Percentage Rate with no fees. No repayment is required for 90-days, during which time most insurance claims should be processed. At that time, the insurance proceeds can be used to repay the loans. Visit any Whitney Bank or apply online at whitneybank.com. Subject to credit underwriting criteria.

CONSUMER LOAN CUSTOMERS

- All payments will automatically be deferred for 90 days.*
- Automatic payments from checking accounts related to these loans will be suspended during the deferment period.
- Individual hardship cases not addressed by the policy will be handled on an individual basis.
- No late fees will be assessed during this period.
- No credit reporting will occur during this period.

MORTGAGE CUSTOMERS

- Whitney Bank mortgage customers impacted by Hurricane Katrina may request a suspension of first mortgage loan payments up to three months for mortgages held by Whitney Bank. There will be no credit reporting on these accounts and no late charges will be assessed during this period. Customers should contact Whitney Bank at 1-800-436-1022 for details.

SMALL BUSINESS CUSTOMERS

- Updated hurricane relief details may be viewed at whitneybank.com.

ALL WHITNEY CUSTOMERS

- Evacuated clients can conduct business at any operating Whitney branch. See whitneybank.com for a complete list of open branches.
- Clients may call Whitney's toll-free customer service line at 1-877-611-9448 to speak with a Whitney Banker.
- Whitney's BillPay service is operational at whitneybank.com. Consumer clients not currently using our online bill payment service can sign up by clicking the Personal BillPay link on whitneybank.com.
- Whitney's fees for using non-Whitney ATMs have been waived.
- Checks, deposits, and other transactions, including Automated Clearing House (ACH) files used by some business clients to pay their employees, are being processed through our Houston processing center.

Please visit whitneybank.com for updated information and other ways Whitney Bankers are assisting our clients and communities to recover from the storm.

It takes a Whitney Banker.

WHITNEY®

MEMBER FDIC

EQUAL HOUSING LENDER

Hurricane Loan Assistance Program offer is valid in Alabama, Louisiana and Mississippi only. Principal and interest due at maturity. For example, your payment due in 90 days would be $1,017.26 per $1,000 borrowed. Other restrictions apply. Limited time offer. Consumer purpose only. Must provide copy of insurance claim. Maximum loan amount $10,000.

* Payment Relief Program applies to Whitney Bank consumer borrowers in Alabama, Louisiana and Mississippi with zip codes beginning with 700, 701, 703, 704, 365, 366, 394, 395, and 396. Individual cases not addressed by this policy will be handled on an individual basis. Clients wishing to make payments may continue to do so.

Oil spills darken waters

St. Bernard, Plaquemines have dozens of leaks

By Mark Schleifstein
Staff writer

At least eight major oil spills and possibly dozens of smaller ones dotted St. Bernard and Plaquemines parishes Friday morning, as water pumped from Jefferson, New Orleans and St. Bernard parishes was making ugly black stains in the waters of Lake Pontchartrain, Lake Borgne and the Gulf of Mexico.

An aerial survey by Dwight Bradshaw, a state Department of Environmental Quality surveillance officer, accompanied by two reporters, showed that much of the area within levees in Venice and Empire was stained with a combination of mud and crude oil, the result of breached oil storage tanks at a variety of facilities.

"We're going to work first on the big ones with the most potential for a human impact, and then work on smaller and smaller ones," Bradshaw said.

But he doesn't know how long it will take to clean the spills.

"It's really hard to say because you're looking at so many big ones simultaneously," he said. "It's frustrating, I tell you, it's frustrating. We just can't get the resources to do it." Repair crews were attempting to contain oil that had leaked from a 20-inch Shell Pipeline Co. pipeline near Venice that was ruptured by Hurricane Katrina.

"They estimated 250 barrels at first, but I estimate there's 2,000 barrels that has been released," Bradshaw said.

Among the spills seen from the air were:

▶ Chevron's Empire storage facility: an unknown amount of oil.

▶ Bass Enterprises Production Co. facilities in Cox Bay and Pointe a la Hache: a large amount of oil was visible near both facilities. A tanker barge could be seen trying to offload any remaining oil in one of the tanks.

▶ Sundown Energy's East Potash Field storage facility south of East Pointe a la Hache: between 1,000 and 2,000 barrels of oil have leaked and oil is visible around the facility.

▶ An unidentified facility at the north end of Port Sulphur, where oil was visible on the ground and water.

▶ Tenneco's natural gas compression station near Port Sulphur.

▶ A spill of what could be as much as 5,000 gallons of diesel fuel at a menhaden processing facility in Empire left red stains across nearby wetlands.

▶ A large pool of oil was visible within the fence line of the Murphy Oil Co. facility in Chalmette and in adjacent neighborhoods. Bradshaw said the company's estimate of only 10,000 barrels of oil spilled was "an educated guess that's probably optimistic on their part."

Dark pools of floodwater were seen spreading into Lake Pontchartrain from pumping stations in New Orleans and Jefferson Parish. Floodwaters in St. Bernard Parish were being pumped into adjacent wetlands that drain into the Mississippi River-Gulf Outlet.

Bradshaw said the individual oil pipeline and production companies are responsible for stopping leaks in their facilities and cleaning the spilled oil. But he said that process is being delayed by an inability to quickly reach the spills. Some roads are still flooded or are blocked by huge menhaden fishing boats.

To get crews and equipment to the scene will take days or weeks, Bradshaw said, because the workers will require living space on barges to be able to overnight in the area. And all locally available portable living quarters already have been rented by the Federal Emergency Management Agency to be used by emergency workers responding to the storm, he said.

The result is that living quarters will have to be shipped by barge from Texas to the mouth of the Mississippi River, he said, a process that could take a week.

To fight the spills, he said, the workers will need a variety of skimmers, pumps, booms, several boats to maneuver around the soiled area and barges to collect the recovered oil.

Bradshaw said the transportation problems also make recovery of oiled birds and other wildlife nearly impossible. It was possible to recognize the odor being produced by the floodwaters from a plane 1,300 feet above the city.

Wetlands south of the city that were overtopped by saltwater and have died and begun to decompose produced a different odor.

Also visible from the air in eastern New Orleans were cargo containers knocked off rail cars and several tank cars on their sides.

Bradshaw said the federal Environmental Protection Agency already has taken air samples above the cars and determined that there were no chemicals present. But he said additional tests will be done in coming days.

Wastes from the Sewerage & Water Board's East Bank Sewage Treatment Plant also stained a large area around that facility in eastern New Orleans. And at the Murphy Oil facility in Chalmette, Bradshaw said, it looked as if something had punctured one of about 10 large storage tanks. "The refinery shut down before the storm, but something hit that tank during the storm," he said. Several barges in the Mississippi River were either atop or shoved on the side of levees, or were sinking. Bradshaw said his role is to keep an eye on known environmental leaks, while other DEQ employees are conducting a grid-like search of the coastline to identify new leaks.

"It's going to take months to clean up and remediate these spills," Bradshaw said.

"I don't know how you recover from something like this. You can't single out one place to begin, because it's all gone. Gone."

VINCE GUILLORY,
state fisheries biologist

STAFF PHOTO BY BOB MARSHALL

Two giant menhaden boats that had been stationed at the processing plant in Empire rest across Louisiana 23, where Hurricane Katrina deposited them. Most of the storied fishing village was destroyed by the storm, which spread boats, camps and houses across Plaquemines Parish.

Foundations of fishing industry obliterated

Southeast La. marinas, wildlife, towns in ruins

By Bob Marshall
Outdoors editor

From 300 feet in the air the scenes and smells of what had once been one of the world's most prolific and storied fisheries carried one message: Gone.

Legendary fishing villages intricately woven into the unique culture of the region lay in ruins, flattened into mounds of debris, much of it floating in black, fetid water. Places that had provided priceless memories to generations of metro area residents are now graveyards for homes, camps, boats, marinas, fish houses, processing plants, human lives. Shell Beach and Delacroix Island, Buras and Venice, Port Sulphur and Hopedale: Gone.

Every acre of solid land that had served fishers and the fishing businesses before Aug. 29 has felt Katrina's wrath.

State fisheries biologist Vince Guillory winced at the sights. His assessment was grim.

"The infrastructure for the fishing industries — recreational as well as commercial — are just gone," he said. "This is beyond anything I expected.

"Even if you were a fisherman with a boat, where would you launch? Where would you get gas? Where would you bring your catch? Where would you live?

"We're talking about assessments of the damage? It's complete, total. If there's any good news, it may be that the marsh doesn't look too torn up."

Fisheries and environmental officials have long known that a frontal assault by a Category 3 or stronger hurricane could deal a devastating blow to their precious and valuable resource. The marshes that surround New Orleans are the engines that power the most dynamic seafood machine in North America, producing fully 35 percent of the oysters, 46 percent of the shrimp and 28 percent of the blue crabs consumed in the nation. The combined value of the recreational and commercial fisheries is almost $2 billion per year, state Department of Wildlife and Fisheries officials said.

STAFF PHOTO BY KATHY ANDERSON

The Buras water tower lies amid the ruins of the town. Towns that served the outdoor industries were devastated by the hurricane; many are just islands of debris in black, pungent water.

But the forces of coastal erosion had consumed roughly half of the marshes that existed in the early 1900s, and those that were left in the southeastern corner of the coast were among the most fragile, resting barely above sea level on average tides, disappearing at the rate of 25 square miles per year.

So as Katrina grew in fury, the greatest concern was the future of the foundation on which the entire fishing culture was built. Although fishing infrastructure — from tackle shops to marinas — can be rebuilt, the marsh cannot.

Though first looks revealed the damage to habitat does not appear to be as great as feared, fish and wildlife officials caution the early fly-over assessments may vanish once scientific measurements are made. Although Barataria Bay and southern Plaquemines Parish lost portions of what little marsh was left before Katrina, St. Bernard Parish appeared to suffer much less.

"It almost looks as if the marsh didn't suffer as much damage because it was under so much water," said Scott Durham, wildlife biologist for the DWF. "Maybe it didn't get the pounding it would have gotten from a lesser storm or lower tides."

That doesn't mean fish and wildlife were not affected. The DWF said oyster mortality in the affected areas was expected to be nearly 100 percent due to thick layers of silt that cover the beds after such a storm. Crabs that survived the storm may die as oxygen levels in local waters decline because of the decaying vegetation and other organic matter washed in by the storm.

Wildlife habitat appeared to be most heavily impacted on the delta of the Mississippi River and in the basin of the Pearl River. The vast fresh and brackish wetlands at the mouth of the huge river are normally as lush and green as the Amazon this time of the year. On Friday, they had been made a dull khaki by the influx of salty Gulf water on the storm tide, estimated at up to 30 feet. The giant lagoons normally choked with aquatic plants that attract and hold as many as two million migrating waterfowl each winter were open water bordered by lines of brown roseau cane. Alligators swam freely in some of the passes, but few birds of any species were seen.

In some section of the vast Pearl River basin, many of the hardwood trees lay toppled in the swamp as if brushed by a giant hand.

"We've lost up to 50 percent of our trees in some of these areas," Durham said. "This is unbelievable. It's just opened the swamp in many areas."

But as severe as those losses were, the biologists' most shocking views came over the towns that serve the outdoors industries, where the devastation appeared almost total. The communities of Port Sulphur, Buras, Empire and Venice were little more than islands of debris floating in black, pungent water trapped between the Mississippi River to the east and the hurricane protection levee on the west. Clearly those levees were not up to Katrina's challenge. River barges came into the towns from that side; shrimp and oyster boats came in from the marsh side. Boats and camps sat on the levees, or on what remained of Louisiana 23.

Some marinas and hoists could not be found; others were flattened. Joshua's Marina in Buras and the Buras Boat Harbor showed rows of pilings where docks once were, and scraps of aluminum where the shops and stores had stood. Venice Marina was almost totally destroyed - yachts sat on high ground, most condos were battered to the ground, and the marina store was flattened. Cypress Cove seemed to fare better, but only just. What buildings were still standing had extensive damage. Expensive fishing yachts had been tossed around like toy boats; barges and houseboats were on land.

St. Bernard fishing spots were in even more dire straits. Blackie Campo's Marina, the iconic location for marsh anglers for several generations, doesn't exist. Rising above the mud covered road are the steel beams of the hoist, the marina's only structure. The rest — boat sheds, Campo's house, boats, landmarks — are gone.

"I don't know how you recover from something like this," Guillory said. "You can't single out one place to begin, because it's all gone. Gone."

FEMA's new shepherd hopes to unite flock

Coordinated recovery stressed as Allen meets with parish presidents

By Ron Thibodeaux
Staff writer

The federal government's stumbling relief effort for the storm-ravaged New Orleans area finally got legs Saturday as FEMA's new man-in-charge arrived in the city with a can-do attitude and an overdue but meaningful approach to coordinating a regional recovery plan.

Local officials welcomed the involvement of Vice Adm. Thad Allen as the on-site replacement for the Federal Emergency Management Agency's embattled boss, Michael Brown, who was called back to Washington on Friday in the face of widespread criticism of the agency's initial response to Hurricane Katrina.

The feds' more visible role in the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina rippled across Louisiana and the rest of the country Saturday, as displaced evacuees began finding FEMA disaster relief payments in their bank accounts.

As the area approached the two-week mark since Katrina's deadly landfall, though, it still was not possible to look ahead to recovery without simultaneously looking back to continue assessing the extent of devastation.

A horrifying aerial inspection of St. Bernard and Plaquemines parishes by a state environmental official revealed at least eight major oil spills, with indications of numerous smaller ones. Meanwhile, a separate float-plane tour of the area by a state fisheries expert uncovered an almost incomprehensible blow to the region's vital fishing habitat and resources.

"The infrastructure for the fishing industries, recreational as well as commercial, are just gone," state fisheries biologist Vince Guillory said glumly from 300 feet above the wreckage. "Even if you were a fisherman with a boat, where would you launch? Where would you get gas? Where would you bring your catch? Where would you live?"

While the official death toll from the hurricane rose Saturday to 154, law enforcement officers in New Orleans continued to make dramatic rescues of homebound storm victims.

Authorities recovered and began reviewing the recordings of 911 phone calls made as Katrina approached the city – and before the police communications system was disabled – and then launched a house-by-house search where each of those emergency calls had originated.

U.S. Customs Service agents rescued more than a dozen such residents Friday, and officers of the federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms took over the effort Saturday.

Allen met with the eight parish presidents in the metro region Saturday, describing it as a "very, very fruitful meeting." Allen also said the recovery process will need unity among everyone to "deliver the goods" to people.

Jefferson Parish President Aaron Broussard also characterized the meeting as productive.

"The right FEMA team is now on the ground in New Orleans," he said.

Allen spent 3½ hours being briefed by state officials on the recovery process and the death toll, but he couldn't say where crews were in that process.

He called for an organizational mechanism "so that we don't have three people working in different parts of the same parish doing things that are not the priority of that parish."

Allen said the presidents told him the biggest need is temporary housing for people who are in shelters, even though it was unclear where that housing would be.

Allen did not have a timetable for the recovery and rebuilding of the city, saying it is "related to the unwatering" of New Orleans, adding that most pumps still are not working.

STAFF PHOTO BY DAVID GRUNFELD

Oil covers the ground Saturday near the Murphy Oil Co. plant in Chalmette. An aerial inspection of St. Bernard and Plaquemines parishes has revealed at least eight major oil spills, with signs of many other smaller spills.

The level of the nasty, smelly floodwaters inundating the city for most of the past two weeks continued its gradual but steady decline, leaving behind an equally nasty, smelly sludge. Some employees of the Sewerage & Water Board dared to give voice to a hope that the city will be dry within two or three weeks.

New address for Nagins

As if to demonstrate the scope of the Katrina disaster – not that anyone needs to do that by now – New Orleans Mayor Ray Nagin said he bought a house in Dallas last week and relocated his family there, and officials at the American Red Cross said they are seeking 40,000 new volunteers from around the country to help with hurricane relief efforts throughout the country.

About 36,000 Red Cross volunteers are providing food, shelter and other emergency help to about 160,000 people at 675 shelters in 23 states, an agency spokesman said. But many of the volunteers, who typically serve three-week stints in the field, will be going home soon and replacements are needed.

"We're not going away in a few weeks or even a few months," said Red Cross spokesman John Dengan, who described the recruitment drive as the largest ever for the relief agency.

Relief workers of a different sort will be needed to contain the oil spills across St. Bernard and Plaquemines parishes, but that effort will be hampered by the sites' isolation and the dearth of facilities available to quarter the workers.

"We're going to work first on the big ones with the most potential for a human impact" – estimated in the thousands of gallons in several locations – "and then work on smaller and smaller ones," said Dwight Bradshaw, surveillance officer for the state Department of Environmental Quality.

As for a repair timetable, "it's really hard to say because you're looking at so many big ones simultaneously," Bradshaw said.

State officials confirmed that 154 people died as a result of Hurricane Katrina, according to an update provided Saturday by the Department of Health and Hospitals.

State and local officials had earlier predicted that the loss of life would be catastrophic, as high as 10,000 people. But in New Orleans, officials are now cautiously optimistic that the number was a vast overestimation.

Flights to begin Tuesday

There were encouraging signs on two transportation fronts Saturday.

Aviation Director Roy Williams announced that passenger flights into and out of Louis Armstrong International Airport in Kenner will resume Tuesday after a 16-day hiatus.

And between St. Tammany Parish and eastern New Orleans, work will begin Monday to repair the extensive damage to the Interstate 10 twin spans.

The state Department of Development and Transportation said Saturday it has awarded Boh Bros. Construction Co. of New Orleans a $30.9 million contract to restore the 5-mile link across the eastern end of Lake Pontchartrain.

"This will have a significant impact on travel as Interstate 10 connects traffic in New Orleans with the rest of the country," said Gordon Nelson, assistant secretary of DOTD.

Plaquemines Parish is allowing residents to return to their homes starting today from Belle Chasse to Port Sulphur, Parish President Benny Rousselle announced.

He warned that services, particularly utilities such as water and sewer, are limited. A boil water order is in effect. In addition, the parish imposed a mandatory curfew from 6 p.m. to 7 a.m., and no vehicle will be allowed south of the Alliance Refinery.

Returning residents must have identification showing that they live in Plaquemines and should enter the parish via U.S. 90 to Lapalco Boulevard to Louisiana 23. Rousselle also said that residents should bring their own supplies, including gas, food and medicine, because stores are not open and 911 emergency services are unavailable.

Mail resumes in Tammany

In adjacent Jefferson Parish, where residents are still restricted from their homes, some businesses will be allowed to crank up again Monday.

"We've been knocked down, but you can't keep us down," Broussard said.

Parish officials called a press conference near Lakeside Shopping Center on Saturday to outline the plan they have dubbed Operation Jumpstart Jefferson.

Signs of progress continued to emerge from St. Tammany Parish. Six of the parish's eight Catholic schools announced they would resume classes on Sept. 19, two weeks ahead of the Oct. 3 target date set by the public school system.

Mail delivery resumed Saturday in St. Tammany, and the Postal Service reported it had reopened all post offices except in the rural communities of Sun and Talisheek.

• • • • • •

Ron Thibodeaux can be reached at rthibodeaux@charter.net.
Staff writers Michelle Krupa, Bob Marshall, Gordon Russell and Mark Schleifstein contributed to this story.

Reaching Out to Shell and Motiva Employees

Our thoughts are with everyone hurt by Hurricane Katrina. Our greatest focus now is to assure the safety and welfare of our employees and their families in the devastated Gulf Coast communities.

If you are a Shell or Motiva employee affected by this natural disaster who has not already contacted your supervisor, we urge you to do so immediately. They can help as you try to manage both your personal and work-related needs.

Contact our emergency response lines at 1-866-745-5489 or 1-877-40-SHELL. They are open daily from 7 am to 10 pm Central Standard Time, including weekends. Or, if you can access the Web, send an email to katrinahelp@shell.com for Human Resources assistance.

These communication lines are dedicated to address your questions related to replacement or redirected payroll, disruptions in banking and mail services, loan assistance, prescription drugs, location-specific information and more. Also, go to www.shell.com/us to find other employee assistance information that could provide you some much-needed relief.

We are here to help.

Evacuees receive $670 million in FEMA grants

Agency issues funds to 335,000 households

Mary Judice
Business writer

The Federal Emergency Management Agency has distributed $670 million to evacuees from Hurricane Katrina for emergency living expenses under a new program, a spokesman said Saturday.

In the past three days the federal grant program has provided $2,000 payments to 335,000 households, said Win Henderson, a Hurricane Katrina recovery spokesman in Baton Rouge.

The program marks the first time FEMA has made such expedited grants available. FEMA says the grants can take 7 to 10 days to arrive, but many who have applied report receiving the grants much quicker than that.

To qualify, a consumer must apply to FEMA, be displaced from their primary residence and be living in a shelter, a hotel or motel or with family or friends.

The assistance applies to those who fled as a result of the storm, either renters or homeowners, and can be used for disaster needs, including transportation, clothing, housing and food.

Henderson said the expedited assistance program is a "100 percent federally funded grant," which means no recipient will have to repay the money.

The program is not income-based, and the grants will not be taxed by the Internal Revenue Service. Henderson said even evacuees who have received funds for living expenses from insurance companies are eligible for this program.

The grant is part of an overall package of benefits from FEMA that evacuees and others suffering damages may qualify for.

"This is the first time in FEMA existence an expedited assistance program has been put into place due to the widespread devastation caused by Hurricane Katrina and mass displacement of evacuees to points around the country," Henderson said.

Because this is a new program there has been confusion about how it is administered.

Earlier, FEMA officials said the benefit might be considered a loan for some insurance holders and that debit cards would be issued to evacuees in Houston. On Friday, the agency said it had distributed cards to evacuees in shelters in Houston, Dallas and San Antonio and had no plans to issue cards to other evacuees.

Evacuees can register online at www.fema.gov or by calling 800-621-3362. FEMA has not established a center in Baton Rouge to take applications.

Evacuees will receive their money by check, mailed to their current address or by electronic deposit into their bank account.

But applying takes time and patience. On Saturday afternoon, it was difficult to make an application by telephone or to complete online registration because of heavy traffic.

1995 Kat D 4 C Series 3 Bulldozer
w/6 way blade, limb risers, rear cab screen, completely serviced and ready to go!
$38,500

2001 Dodge 3500 Diesel Dually,
regular cab loaded with gooseneck hitch 72,000 miles.
$18,200

2003 Chevrolet Trail Blazer LT,
loaded w/leather, 59,000 miles.
$17,000

601-420-2764 or 601-277-3644

FEMA sending cash to bolster local governments

Money to help pay police overtime

By Jan Moller
Capital Bureau

An additional $300 million to $500 million is expected to be paid out next week, as soon as state and parish governments can document their storm-related costs.

BATON ROUGE — Cash-strapped local governments will receive the first installment of what is expected to be billions of dollars in federal reimbursements for costs they incurred because of Hurricane Katrina, state and federal officials said Saturday.

The governments of Orleans, St. Bernard, Plaquemines and Lafourche parishes will get about $200 million "in the immediate future" from the federal government to help offset the costs of responding to the storm, said Art Jones, who heads up recovery operations for the state Office of Homeland Security and Emergency Preparedness.

Jones would not divulge how the money from the Federal Emergency Management Agency is being split among the parishes except to say that more than half, or at least $100 million, is going to the city of New Orleans to pay overtime costs for police, fire and other emergency workers who worked long hours in the wake of Katrina.

St. Bernard officials last week said FEMA had told them it would make an initial allocation of $31 million. Officials said they planned to spend the money on cleanup contracts and temporary buildings for government services, among other uses.

An additional $300 million to $500 million is expected to be paid out next week, as soon as state and parish governments can document their storm-related costs. "This is a process that will be going on for years," Jones said.

FEMA's public assistance program pays local and state governments, as well as nonprofit groups such as churches and charities that shelter evacuees, for unbudgeted emergency expenses. The money can used for everything from debris removal and road repairs to overtime costs for rescue workers and emergency generators that keep public services running in times of crisis.

The check-writing process was slowed somewhat in the wake of Katrina, Jones said, because the computers that handled such matters were housed at Jackson Barracks in New Orleans and were destroyed by the storm.

Historically, about two-thirds of the money that FEMA spends in responding to emergencies flows through state and local government in the form of public assistance, agency spokesman David Passey said.

The rest of the money goes to individuals and families as emergency cash assistance and to federal agencies and contractors that provide services such as emergency housing.

Passey said the agency has received 403,303 requests for emergency cash and so far has provided more than $537 million to individuals.

As the government begins to move evacuees from emergency shelters into more permanent housing, FEMA has begun issuing hundreds of millions of dollars in contracts to build such facilities. A prime beneficiary of that spending has been Baton Rouge-based Shaw Group, which last week received a $100 million contract to build and oversee temporary housing for people displaced by Katrina.

Other companies that have received government contracts for emergency housing are California-based Flour Corp. and Bechtel National Inc., Colorado-based CH2M Hill and Dewberry Technologies of Virginia.

• • • • • •

Jan Moller can be reached at tpicbr@aol.com

STATE FARM
is here to help.

In the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina, State Farm® understands the devastating toll of this catastrophe.

And we're here to help.

Whether you're at home or have been displaced and can't reach your State Farm agent, if you're a State Farm customer who needs to file a claim, you can reach us.

- Contact any State Farm Agent near your current location.
- Call 1-800-SF-CLAIM (1-800-732-5246) to reach our catastrophe operators; or
- Visit statefarm.com® to initiate your claim online.

LIKE A GOOD NEIGHBOR STATE FARM IS THERE.®

Providing Insurance and Financial Services

State Farm Insurance Companies • Home Offices: Bloomington, IL

At Hibernia, we understand, because we live and work here, too.

Over the years, we've learned there's nothing more important than the businesses and the people we serve, our employees, and their communities. Therefore, Hibernia is devoted to helping anyone whose life or business has been affected by Hurricane Katrina. We understand that rebuilding is a top priority, and we want to prevent natural disasters from turning into economic ones. Hibernia is dedicated to giving you and your business the financial support necessary for getting on with life.

A note to our employees:
If you haven't yet contacted your manager, please do so as soon as possible. If you need further information, please call the employee emergency hotline.

HIBERNIA
Where service matters.℠

Click
Log on to Hibernia.com

Visit
Any Hibernia banking office

EQUAL HOUSING LENDER
©2005 Hibernia National Bank, Member FDIC. Normal credit qualifications apply.

DAVID MEEKS

Residents will rebuild their city

New Orleans is still beautiful. In the pitch black night of an unlit Magazine Street, it's beautiful. In the eerie, abandoned Uptown neighborhoods, its allure endures. Dominated by floodwaters, its water system unusable and power lines shredded from the river to the lake, the soul of the city is still there, as it has been for almost 300 years.

In the resilient eyes of the people still in the streets, working to get the residents out and the recovery started, there is a look that says New Orleans already is coming back from its greatest disaster.

It's always been that way in this town. New Orleans has seemed perched on the edge of destruction at many points in its history, seemingly vulnerable to a final, catastrophic punch. But through several bouts of yellow fever, the Civil War and the economic collapse of the 1980s, New Orleans has been a symbol for America in its remarkable ability to persevere.

Hurricane Katrina may be unprecedented in its level of destruction, but it will not make any difference to the most steadfast New Orleanians who, with help from around the world, are determined to keep this special place alive.

New Orleans may have been knocked unconscious, but it's not dead. It still has a pulse, and it's waiting for us to come back, get it to its feet and help it take its first steps.

And although most of the people who love New Orleans must now do so at a distance, the perspective I bring is not from Baton Rouge or Houston or Birmingham. It's from being on the ground – from the day the storm hit, through the looting, chaos, violence and massive troop deployment – covering a story we hoped we'd never have to cover.

In one fateful week, we saw a city pushed to the edge and pulled back. We saw terror and we saw teamwork. We saw fellow citizens hit with more desperation than any human being deserves, but they hung in there. For most in our small group of journalists, we were armed for the first time in our lives, but we didn't want to fire a shot and never had to. We were on our own and yet we weren't – there were thousands of good New Orleanians, sticking together, helping each other out, sharing clothes, food and water. Getting the job done.

When we had extra food or water, we gave it away. When a convoy of ambulances got lost and needed to get to the Convention Center, we led them there. When we could help refugees, we helped. There's no doubt about it: We were not only on this story, we were in it, and there was nothing to do but get to work – as journalists, and as residents, too. Get to work for New Orleans. It's what we all have to do.

Reporting in the city the week after the hurricane was like reporting from a hole, sending your stories out to someone and never seeing what happened to them. We saw only snippets of national coverage, with breaking news leading inevitably to the endless expert opinions of people who don't know a damn thing except how to look into a camera and listen to themselves talk.

I remember a blabbering woman going on about how we shouldn't give too much money to New Orleans to rebuild because the city's so corrupt it will just get wasted. I remember a guy weighing the value of the city in economic terms, as if it's only worth saving if it can keep the oil and gas coming so he can drive around in his big fat SUV.

To see fellow Americans so casually disregard our own history saddens me.

Here is historic New Orleans, a truly European city in the United States, a place that was a major urban center under two foreign nations before it became American, a city that was one of the first to donate firetrucks and dispatch volunteers to New York after the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks, and people talk about throwing it away because a hurricane hit.

Well, I'll give the opposing view: This is a better country than that. We're better people than that. We can do better than that.

Perhaps it is true that people shouldn't live here. But then, they shouldn't live in San Francisco, waiting for the next earthquake. And they shouldn't live on the side of a hill in Southern California, fearing the next wave of wildfires and mudslides. There sure are a lot of tornadoes in Texas. And how many hurricanes have hit Florida? Should we all get out?

Seems to me we can either make a list of all the places we shouldn't live or learn our lessons and try to live as smartly as we can in the places we love. In Lakeview, where my house is under 8 feet of water, should we rebuild the houses higher? Yes, we should. Should we fix design flaws in the levees and make them stronger? Definitely. Should we take this opportunity to redevelop the city in a way that makes it a better place to work and live? We all want that.

We've got issues, and believe me, New Orleanians aren't blind. Anyone who lives here knows what it's like to curse this town in a loving embrace. Sweeping changes need to be made, but now is not the time to talk about that.

We learned a few things in trying to keep a news operation running on streets where, if something goes wrong, all the help you're getting is the help you have with you. You've got to be resourceful, and you've got to focus only on the task right in front of you. We learned the latter from law enforcement personnel and rescue workers, who have an amazing ability to do just that.

I remember a scene that gave us a laugh, just because it's something you can't imagine really happening. A colleague and I were in a canoe on Canal Boulevard, headed to rescue some pets in Lakeview. A boat was coming the other way, passing us just like it was still a highway - except the road was 8 feet underwater.

An officer from out of town looked over and asked simply, "Is this the way to Esplanade?"

"Yep," I said.

Neither of us said anything more. We just kept going.

We got our job done. Whatever job he was going to do, I can tell you by the look in his eyes that it got done.

And that, my friends, is how we're going to get this done.

Office DEPOT

If you're an Office Depot Associate
who has been displaced by Hurricane Katrina,
please call 1-888-954-4636 (option 3)
to receive information on how we can help.
Our thoughts are with you
in this difficult time.

BEAR WITNESS TO ONE OF NATURE'S GREATEST FORCES.

The power of hope.

Volunteer worker gives comfort and hope.

Our hearts go out to them. Our thoughts are with them. But what they really need, is our donations. That's why Entergy has established a fund to help those who were impacted by Hurricane Katrina. The fund, called the Power of Hope, will be used to help disaster victims rebuild their lives in the aftermath of the storm. Entergy Corporation has started the fund with a corporate contribution of $1 million.

As Entergy continues the largest power restoration in our company's history, we are equally concerned about reaching out to help our neighbors restore their lives. Together, we can rebuild and put this storm behind us. Because the power of Katrina is no match for the power of hope.

POWER of HOPE FUND
Katrina Disaster Aid

Entergy
THE POWER OF PEOPLE™

Tax-deductible contributions can be sent to:

The Power of Hope Fund
Foundation for the Mid South
134 East Amite Street
Jackson, MS 39201

Contributions will also be accepted at www.powerofhope.com

www.entergy.com • 1-800-ENTERGY • ©2005 Entergy Corporation

Coast Guard official takes helm in N.O.

Allen calls cooperation key to relief effort

By Michelle Krupa
Staff writer

The new chief of federal efforts to help victims of Hurricane Katrina spent his first full day on the job in New Orleans on Saturday learning about plans to recover bodies from flooded areas and meeting with local leaders to reassess priorities in light of stinging criticism of the Federal Emergency Management Agency's handling of the catastrophe.

Thad Allen
FEMA's new point man talks of communication, distribution problems

Coast Guard Vice Adm. Thad Allen, who has been leading the local recovery effort since Katrina struck Aug. 29, said authorities soon will begin planning to move evacuees from shelters to temporary housing, though he did not say where facilities might be set up. Allen also said a timeline cannot be set for rebuilding New Orleans, parts of which still were mired in as much as 8 feet of filthy water Saturday, until the city dries out.

Speaking to reporters in a parking lot at the Ernest N. Morial Convention Center, Allen tacitly addressed problems with communication and distribution of resources that have outraged local leaders since military personnel and federal workers arrived to help with relief efforts.

"We need an organizational mechanism so we don't have three people working in different parts of the same parish doing things that are not the priorities in that parish," he said, standing against a backdrop of dirty mattresses, broken chairs, crushed plastic bottles and smashed cars that littered Convention Center Boulevard a week after thousands of people fled there to escape damage caused by the storm.

Allen, who was assigned Friday to replace FEMA Director Michael Brown as head of Katrina relief, said regional cooperation and organization will be key to ramping up relief efforts, and he called for a "single coordinating mechanism" to rescue holdouts from their flooded homes, deliver food, house evacuees, rebuild infrastructure and plan for residents' return to storm-ravaged areas.

Allen's luncheon session with officials from eight parishes aboard the USS Iwo Jima, docked at the end of Poydras Street, followed a 3½-hour briefing on the effort to recover bodies from storm-ravaged areas. Allen said he did not know the number of bodies found so far and could not estimate the total number of dead. He said FEMA was working with the Defense Department to locate and document the human remains.

Allen said the Mississippi River is a potential lifeline that the Navy and Coast Guard could use to provide services to strapped governments in Orleans, Jefferson, St. Bernard, Plaquemines and other hard-hit parishes. Military personnel could use river vessels to fight fires and to suck water out of flooded areas, he said.

Jefferson Parish President Aaron Broussard, who was among local leaders at the Saturday meeting, called Allen's promotion to the helm of Katrina relief a "great decision."

"I knew once they put a military man in charge this was going to be instantly better," he said. "Without this, we would be far behind schedule."

A FEMA spokesman said Allen will direct relief activities from the Iwo Jima or from a joint field office in Baton Rouge. He did not respond to inquiries Saturday afternoon about which other local officials attended the noon meeting.

Read the complete Times-Picayune at
nola.com
nola.com

It's time to stay connected.

In the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina, we are working hard to restore services and provide communication resources to evacuees and relief workers.

Each day, we deploy hundreds of technicians who are maintaining dozens of temporary generators and mobile cell towers from Lafayette to Gulfport. To help evacuees contact loved ones, we have donated thousands of cell phones to area shelters. And to help support relief efforts, we're providing BroadbandAccess capable laptop computers to public and private agencies across the region.

You can support the relief efforts of the American Red Cross with your cell phone. To make a $5 donation, simply send the word "HELP" as a text message to the address 24357 (2HELP). For more information, call 1.800.HELP.NOW or visit www.redcross.org.

At times like these, it's important that we help any way we can. And stay connected to the things that matter most. One another.

verizon wireless

HK2

Important reminder: Text messaging is a reliable way to keep in touch.

When you need to connect with family and friends, text messaging can be the perfect solution. It's fast, easy and your message will be received by any text capable phone from the National Enhanced Services Coverage Area. If you are unfamiliar with text messaging and would like to learn more, please visit our website at verizonwireless.com.

Drive responsibly. Call with care.®

Network Enabled By Lucent Technologies

VERIZON WIRELESS COMMUNICATIONS STORES
Open Sundays

HAMMOND
702 S.W. Railroad Ave.
985-419-2086

HOUMA
Southland Mall Kiosk
Dillards wing
985-873-9030

THE VERIZON WIRELESS STORE AT the city! "Just what I needed."
Covington
Houma
Slidell

BUSINESS CUSTOMERS, PLEASE CALL
1-800-899-4249

AUTHORIZED RETAILERS Equipment prices and return policy vary by location.
Authorized Retailers may impose additional equipment-related charges, including cancellation fees.

CHALMETTE
Beeper World
1200 E. Judge Perez
504-277-4977

COVINGTON
Northshore Pagers
360 Emerald Forest Blvd.,
Ste. D
985-871-9797

HAMMOND
Fast Link Communication
14605 W. University Ave.
985-542-2102

KENNER
Dreams
3226 Williams Blvd.,
Ste. 1E
504-443-5789

Wireless City
4041 Williams Blvd.,
Ste. B-7
504-466-8488

METAIRIE
Ferro Communications
Clearview Mall
504-456-7891

MORGAN CITY
Acadian Smart Phones
909 7th St.
985-702-9111

NEW ORLEANS
Wireless City
4511 Magazine St.
504-309-7805

SLIDELL
The Connection Store
861 Brownswitch Rd.
985-781-3550

Beeper World
Northshore Square Mall
504-259-5586

RadioShack. You've got questions. We've got answers.®

BEST BUY

Standard text messaging rates apply, and will be donated by Verizon Wireless to the American Red Cross when the program is completed. ©2005 Verizon Wireless

Pace of drainage is rare bright spot

See PUMPS, page A-1

nonstop ever since, sleeping on the floors where they work. Despite the ordeal, many were optimistic this week about getting pumps on line and starting the arduous task of removing an inland sea of contaminated water from the city.

Amid visible evidence that the water levels are dropping in various parts of town, some agency employees expressed optimism that much of the city will be dry in two or three weeks, although they cautioned it could be longer.

The Army Corps of Engineers offered more specific predictions Saturday. Current projections are that the "primary flooded areas" of Orleans Parish will be dry by Oct. 2, said Dan Hitchings, a director in the corps' Mississippi Valley division. More heavily flooded eastern New Orleans and St. Bernard Parish are expected to be dry by Oct. 8, and Plaquemines Parish by Oct. 18, or about 40 days sooner than initial projections.

Among the signs of progress: Near City Hall, Poydras Street — which had been under about 3 feet of water — is dry. Uptown, the water along Carrollton Avenue has receded almost to the Interstate 10 overpass, a drop of at least 3 feet. Parts of the Lower 9th Ward near the river, including blocks of Tricou Street, are drained almost completely, with as much as 5 feet of water receded in some places, leaving behind a crusted, brown sludge.

"Pumps are constantly coming on line," said Marcia St. Martin, the water board's executive director.

By early Saturday, more than 16 of the city's 75 major pumps were working. She was unable to say how much of the city was still under water. Eighty percent of the city was under water at the height of the flooding.

The areas near major pumping stations are expected to dry first. Some said the Lower 9th Ward – though the site of the greatest reduction in water depths so far, thanks to drainage through levee breaches – may be the last to be dry because of likely damage to pumps that drain the neighborhood. To a large extent, what dries out first will depend on which pumps are restored fastest.

Even if the city dries out relatively soon, however, agency officials warned that getting the water out will be just the beginning. The storm's floodwaters caused massive pipe breaks in both the sewerage and water systems, they said. That means it could be more than three months before city tap water is safe to drink. Meanwhile, sewerage and foul floodwaters, for the time being, will be pumped directly into the Mississippi River and Lake Pontchartrain.

Bullet dodged?

The force of Katrina's catastrophic winds was awesome even to water board veterans of numerous hurricanes. At one point, a massive set of ancient wooden doors was ripped off its hinges, nearly flattening a group of employees, said one of the chief operators at the Melpomene Pumping Station No. 1, at Martin Luther King Jr. Boulevard and South Broad Street. It took six men to hoist the doors back up and brace them with scrap lumber, said the operator, who did not want his name published, in deference to civil service policy that forbids employees to talk to the media.

But a few hours after the storm passed, there was cause for optimism. New Orleans seemed to have dodged a bullet. The operator was getting ready to shut off his pumps because the area was dry. "Everyone thought, 'OK, it's over with,'" he said. "Nobody knew about the breach. Then I saw water running down Broad Street. I ain't ever seen that."

STAFF PHOTO BY RUSTY COSTANZA

Victor Anderson of Statesboro, Ga., left, and David Fulton of Wilmington, N.C., clean and dry transformers Friday at Trans Pumping Station No. 6, which pumps into the 17th Street Canal.

Within 48 hours, the group had to be rescued and brought to another pumping station that was still dry: Pumping Station No. 6 on Metairie Road, which dumps directly into the 17th Street Canal, the now-repaired waterway that fed the cataclysmic flooding in the western parts of the city.

On Thursday, a week and a half after Katrina's passage, they were restoring more pumps.

"It was traumatic, but God is good," the operator said of his ordeal. "He got us out. And when it was time to pump this water out, he got us back here."

Jason Higginbotham, the water board's emergency director, told similarly frightening stories about other workers trapped by rising waters.

One group of operators at Pumping Station No. 5 had to swim to safety across the roiling water of the Florida Canal in eastern New Orleans. Another group of 12 men got trapped at Pumping Station No. 4 on the London Avenue Canal in Gentilly, where levees were twice breached.

"These guys got flooded, and they made a makeshift boat out of a fence," said Higginbotham, who coordinated the rescue of trapped workers. "They tried to float to UNO, and on the way, they rescued a bunch of people from their rooftops."

Eventually, the group made its way to safety at the Interstate 10 pumping station near the Southern Railroad underpass, close to the Jefferson/Orleans parish line. Higginbotham said one man had a cell phone that worked, and members of the group were able to call their families.

Then it was back to work.

Three hundred of the agency's 1,200 workers were called to work during the storm, while most of the rest — whose jobs do not involve drainage — evacuated. While some workers were stranded for days, St. Martin said she thought that by Saturday all of those who were working during the storm had been accounted for. As far as she knew, there were no deserters, St. Martin said.

The dedication shown by workers is particularly impressive given that many are paid only about $20,000 annually and were coping with emotional trauma.

Some lost their homes, and many more have been unable to contact their families. St. Martin, for one, said she thinks her Gentilly home is gone, but she hasn't had a chance to look.

"These people are clearly dedicated to the citizens of our city, and I personally feel they should be recognized for it," St. Martin said. "These guys risked their lives."

The heroics were supported by stubborn pride among many agency workers. At least one retired employee showed up for work after the storm and pitched in: General Superintendent Joseph Sullivan, who is well past retirement age, worked around the clock until late this week.

A number of employees said that they thought their pumps could have done the job had the levees done theirs.

"We had this hurricane beat, man," said Bob Moeinian, superintendent of pumping, shaking his head in frustration. "If the levee had not broken, we'd be just like the West Bank: street cleanup and power outages.

"And all that $500 million we spent on the sewer system, we don't know where that is," he added, referring to the massive infrastructure replacement the board has been working on for several years under a federal consent decree.

The floodwaters that consumed many pumping stations eventually made their way to the main water purification plant on South Claiborne Avenue in Hollygrove, knocking out the agency's power supply late Aug. 31, two and a half days after the storm.

That was a devastating blow. It meant no more sewerage service for the tens of thousands of people still in the city, including emergency workers and the unfortunate people waiting to be evacuated at the Superdome and the Convention Center. It also crippled ground-level firefighting, although helicopters pulling water from the Mississippi River helped stop the burning that broke out on both sides of the river.

Drying out

The first sign of major progress for the water board came Tuesday, when water board workers were able to revive the first of four turbines that juice the agency's power plant. The plant, now dry, had been inundated by about 3 feet of water, a first in the annals of New Orleans storm disasters. Since then, a second turbine has been restored.

The return of power meant the water could be turned back on, though at only about half its usual pressure, and not at all in the system's far eastern extremities. Though some of the few residents left on the east bank have been showering and cooking with boiled water, St. Martin said Saturday she still couldn't guarantee water safety.

"We're providing water for fire protection only," she said.

The restoration of power also means some of the agency's massive drainage pumps, once repaired, can be reactivated. About two-thirds of the pumps are powered by the S&WB's plant, and the rest use power from Entergy and are still off line.

Before the plant was re-energized, the only water leaving the swamped city was either flowing back out through levee breaches or being pumped out by small, portable pumps brought in by the Army Corps of Engineers.

Though they say they appreciate the corps' help, water board employees said portable pumps are too small to make an

See PUMPS, page A-10

To the Employees of Textron Marine & Land.

Dear Colleagues,

Though Hurricane Katrina has come and gone, its effects will be felt for years to come. During this difficult time, I want you to know that your safety and well being, and that of your families, remain our single greatest concern.

We have been working around-the-clock in an attempt to locate each employee. If you have not already done so, please call our toll-free employee information line at 1-800-313-3703 and let us know whether or not you are in the region and when you will be able to return to work. Your pay and your medical coverage will continue until further notice.

Textron is doing everything it can to help you and others impacted by the hurricane. We have created an enterprise-wide employee fund to help you get back on your feet and have also made sizable contributions to major charities involved in the relief effort.

We are working relentlessly to get TM&L facilities operational as quickly as possible... clearing debris, cleaning, and replacing damaged equipment. The TM&L leadership team has already moved back into the area. Computer systems are in operation and communications are working, though not yet at prior levels. We are also looking at options for helping employees return to the area. During the past week employees have been making their way to our Slidell facility. Putting aside their personal concerns and tasks, they have come ready to work.

We are proud of the mission-critical products that we design and build in support of our nation's service men and women. And, we are grateful to all the men and women working for relief agencies, local and Federal government personnel, and to our armed forces for helping you and other hurricane victims in the face of such unprecedented challenge.

Working together, we will rebuild.

Sincerely,

Dick

Dick Millman
President, Textron Systems

Textron Marine & Land
TEXTRON Systems

For continuous updates: textronsystems.com

COX COMMUNICATIONS

New Orleans employees of Cox Communications are asked to call 1-800-637-3545 to check-in to let us know you're safe and receive important updates.

We'll get through this together.

Check-in
1-800-637-3545
(option 7)

Updates
1-866-217-7363

20 percent of major pumps on line

See PUMPS, page A-9

appreciable difference in the water level in flooded neighborhoods.

"They secured the levee, and without them, we wouldn't be playing ball," Higginbotham said. "The corps is using the biggest sump pumps you can get. It's aiding us, and they deserve credit for that. But the Sewerage & Water Board's pumps are the ones that are going to pump the city dry."

Higginbotham said the portable pumps have two problems. One, their capacity is about a tenth of that of an S&WB monster. And two, the small pumps are prone to clogging, whereas the water board's pumps are protected by a huge rakes that collect debris and then periodically dump it onto a shelf above the intake.

Those rakes, which were still inoperable Thursday at Pumping Station No. 6 on Metairie Road by the 17th Street Canal, have scarfed up all manner of flotsam, including tree branches, garbage cans, flowerpots and other household items. For all that, the pumps are strong enough to push a rippling current of water toward the lake — indeed, so strong a current that officials must be careful not to stress the plugged breach in the 17th Street Canal. But for that concern, the Melpomene Pumping Station No. 1 on South Broad Street would be up and running. For the time being it is being held in abeyance because it dumps into the 17th Street Canal and might overwhelm it, St. Martin said.

Once the rakes at the pumping stations begin working, officials expect to find grim evidence of the storm's toll. "After a normal storm, we sometimes pick up bodies here," one employee said. This time, there could be dozens, workers predicted.

A slow slog

Though about a fifth of the 75 major drainage pumps are back on line, restoring the rest will take time, officials said.

Flooded pumping stations first have to be drained. Then the equipment, which has been fouled with grit, debris and mud from the storm waters, must be pressure-washed and dried with a special heater. Then it can be tested.

In many cases, the equipment will have to be repaired. Workers from General Electric are helping, and the company has promised to rush delivery of necessary parts, which in normal times can take up to a year.

According to John Huerkamp, director of operations for drainage, GE had promised to deliver a new switch gear for one of the broken turbines at the power plant.

Hundreds of workers from other public utilities around the country also are on the way. The hope is to give the water board's employees a break, although many so far have refused to take one.

"They offered us some R and R," Moeinian said. "But folks decided to stay around because there was no one else to operate the equipment."

Along with exhaustion, water board workers are facing technical obstacles, among them the challenge of getting diesel fuel into pumping stations still inaccessible by road. Drums have had to be brought by helicopter and boat. Soon, high-riding trucks will be able to make it to most or all of the stations, officials hope.

There also are other, more practical, considerations. St. Martin said the agency is trying to account for the 900 workers thought to have evacuated and is asking them to call (877)863-9405 to report their whereabouts. An employee Web site is in the works.

Meanwhile, the board is trying to find housing for the workers it will need in the months ahead. Higginbotham said he has requested that a cruise ship be made available. Mobile homes and tents are another option; St. Martin said FEMA has begun procuring them for the agency.

Water breaks

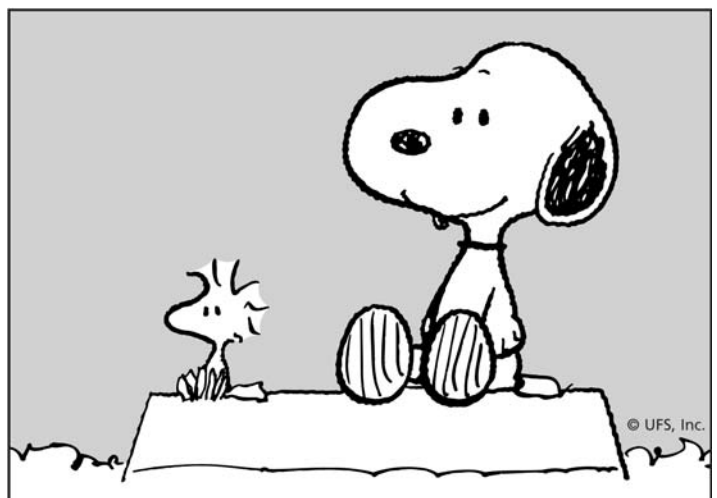
Water board employees have not been able to assess damage to the agency's water and sewer operations, in part because of lingering high water and in part because the priority is on pumping out the city, but it's clear the system suffered massive damage.

In Algiers, which was relatively unscathed by the storm, pipes usually deliver about 8 million to 10 million gallons of water a day. After the storm, the number was up to 27 million gallons, Huerkamp said.

The reason is that the water is leaking massively underground, probably because uprooted trees have broken water mains.

The damage is expected to be worse on the east bank because of the flooding, which causes the ground to shift, breaking pipes.



The same pattern of destruction applies to the sewer system. For now, the agency is shooting its wastewater directly into the Mississippi River, as is permitted in emergencies under its permit from the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, St. Martin said.

The situation presents troubling long-term problems: Untreated sewage, even after the plant is fixed, will continue to seep from broken pipes for months, until the agency can find all the leaks with smoke tests and closed-circuit cameras. Once the problems are identified, it will take months or even years to repair all the leaks, work that will likely involve tearing up streets.

The water repairs will be similar in scope. And until most of the water leaks are fixed, tap water may be unsafe to drink, because of infiltration by groundwater.

Huerkamp said officials from the federal Centers for Disease Control and Prevention asked him this week when he thought the water might again be potable. "I told them maybe 90-days plus," he said. "The problem is, how do you know if the water is clean if it's mixing with groundwater?"

St. Martin was more optimistic. "We got a new shipment of filters, and we're going to start changing them," she said. "I think it will be sooner than that."

We'll help you put your house back in order.

Whether there's damage to your house or your car, MetLife Auto & Home's Catastrophe Response Team is ready to help our customers. To file a claim or for information, call:

1-800-854-6011

For life insurance and all other product questions please call 1-800-METLIFE

All MetLife and New England Financial associates and agents please call 1-800-232-7000 to report your status

MetLife Auto & Home™ is a brand of Metropolitan Property and Casualty Insurance Company and its Affiliates, Warwick, RI

have you met life today?® MetLife®

Bush administration also hard hit by storm

Effect on agenda unclear for now

By Bill Walsh
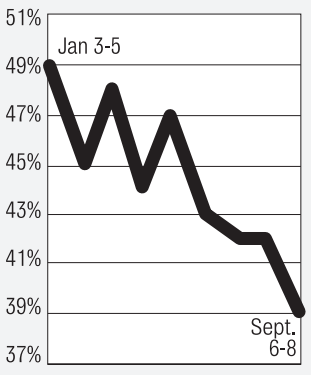
Washington bureau

WASHINGTON — The destruction wrought by Hurricane Katrina is still being assessed, but President Bush is already busy trying to repairing the political damage to his administration left in the wake of the storm.

The removal of maligned Federal Emergency Management Agency Director Michael Brown on Friday as the man in charge of the recovery, the unblinking willingness to spend $62.3 billion on relief and the president's visits to the disaster zone are widely viewed as attempts to reverse the tide of public opinion that turned against Bush almost as soon as the levees broke in New Orleans.

Bush's poll numbers have been on the slide since early summer, largely driven by the public's fatigue with the war in Iraq and rising gasoline prices. The government's perceived foot-dragging as the water rose around metropolitan New Orleans pushed Bush's approval ratings to a new low.

A survey of 1,000 people Sept. 6 and 7 by the nonpartisan Pew Research Center found that only 38 percent approved of the job Bush and the federal government were doing in response to what may be the nation's worst natural disaster.



Katrina has turned into a political disaster for the Bush administration that has already upset the president's legislative agenda and may derail portions of it in the future. Still, political experts question the long-term impact of Katrina on the Bush presidency.

"It takes a really horrible summer and extends it into September and October," said Charlie Cook, editor of the Cook Political Report. "But I don't think it is a defining moment."

As the enormity of the damage caused by Katrina became known, Democrats were quick to declare that two core items of Bush's agenda — tax cuts and reversing the growth in Medicaid — were all but dead. Those predictions seemed to be buttressed by fiscally conservative Republicans, who worried that tax cuts could explode the deficit to unmanageable levels under the weight of Katrina-related expenses.

AP POLL

"Overall, do you approve about the way George W. Bush is handling his job as president?"

Source: Associated Press/Ipsos poll conducted by Ipsos-Public Affairs. Margin of error +- 3%

Rep. Jim McCrery, R-Shreveport, acknowledged that the pre-Katrina push to eliminate the estate tax probably will have to be shelved. McCrery said the tax cut would do little to stimulate the economy.

But Republican leaders have vowed to press on with the rest of the agenda. In a certain sense, they say, Katrina may give it a boost.

The strategy, according to discussions with Republican members of Congress and Capitol Hill aides, will be to portray the extension of cuts in capital gains taxes and the lowering of marginal income tax rates as economic stimulus — just the shot in the arm the U.S. economy needs following a major disaster. As for the Medicaid reductions, they will be packaged as government belt-tightening in the face of rapid spending related to the storm.

McCrery was also confident that Katrina hadn't decimated Bush's push to create private investment accounts in Social Security. He said legislation would be delayed, but that a bill could to the floor by the end of the year.

But Democrats said Katrina sounded the death knell for Bush's controversial plan. Cook agreed. He said that with so many hurricane-related bills now in the offing, Republicans won't be in the mood to wade into such messy political territory.

Fireman's Fund.
We're here to help our customers recover from Hurricane Katrina.

If you are a Fireman's Fund policyholder and suffered damage from Hurricane Katrina, we want to speak to you as soon as possible. Fireman's Fund is deeply concerned about your safety and welfare. Responding to your needs is our top priority.

To assist us in responding to your needs, please call your independent insurance agent or contact us at:

1-888-FIREHAT
(1-888-347-3428)

Fireman's Fund®

A company of Allianz

©2005 Fireman's Fund Insurance Company, Novato, CA

OUR GOOD HANDS® ARE HERE TO HELP.

The people of Allstate would like to express our concern for those affected by Hurricane Katrina and let you know that our thoughts are with you.

The Allstate Catastrophe Team has Mobile Response Units in the impacted areas with teams of claims specialists ready to assist you.

Nothing is more important than your personal safety. So please follow the advice of local authorities and know that we are standing by ready to help.

ALLSTATE'S CATASTROPHE HOTLINE: 1-800-54-STORM

Allstate®
You're in good hands.

www.allstate.com

Allstate Insurance Company, Allstate Property and Casualty Insurance Company and Allstate Indemnity Company: Northbrook, IL. ©2005 Allstate Insurance Company.
The "Cupped Hands" logo is a registered service mark of Allstate Insurance Company.

Replanting part of rebuilding effort

See TREES, page A-1

on the avenue and tends live oaks on public and private property throughout the metropolitan New Orleans area.

Ditto the live oaks in Audubon Park and the ancient stand along City Park Avenue, areas that escaped the salt-tinged floodwaters that are still submerging the root systems of trees on lower ground to the north and east.

"I haven't been able to do a close inspection yet, but from what I've seen and what I know of those trees, I doubt that there's a single live oak down in Audubon," Benton said.

"Live oaks evolved here on the coastal zone," he said. "They're designed for this geography and this weather. They're tough."

The healthiest among them may even be tough enough to survive the filthy soup that has swamped much of New Orleans and parts of heavily canopied Old Metairie from the breach of the 17th Street Canal, as long as the roots aren't submerged more than a few weeks.

"Live oaks have the ability to recover from a period of standing water, where most other trees don't," said Benton, owner of Bayou Trees, which is removing trees from utility lines for BellSouth and helping clean Jefferson Parish streets for the Federal Emergency Management Agency. "But the saltier the water, and the longer they stand in it, the less chance they'll have of recovery," he said.

Benton said salty water will dry out tree roots much like table salt shrivels a garden slug and that standing water kills a tree by cutting off oxygen to the roots.

"There are so many variables at this point that it's impossible to know how this will turn out for the live oaks now under water. What has happened here, as far as I know, is unprecedented," Benton said. "There's no model to compare this to. Only time will tell."

Survival of the fittest

State Department of Forestry and Agriculture personnel haven't yet begun to examine tree damage or urban reforestation, focusing instead on its continuing role in the search for Katrina's human victims. And the department won't send urban foresters in into the New Orleans area until environmental testing indicates it is safe to return, said Paul Orr, a department spokesman.

But Orr said he has seen enough from satellite imagery to agree with Benton's assessment that the oldest live oaks on high, dry ground along City Park Avenue should be safe, while those growing in more northerly sections of the park, flooded Old Metairie and the New Orleans lakefront are in peril.

"It looks like we could lose the trees from Storyland to Robert E. Lee Boulevard because of standing water, although there are some cypress trees in there that could survive," Orr said.

Orr said he hopes to begin assessing widespread tree damage on the north shore this week.

"There's more tree damage there because there are more trees there," he said. "And we had significant downing, especially pines."

Indeed, north and south of Lake Pontchartrain, trees smashed homes, businesses, vehicles and utility lines, damaging vital infrastructure and complicating the expensive task of restoring electricity and other public services.

Tropical Storm Cindy in July "took out the weakest trees, and Katrina took out the unstable trees that Cindy left, as well as the technically healthy trees that were planted in the wrong environment," Benton said.

Katrina's victims included a behemoth live oak that went down in Old Metairie on Dorrington Avenue just off Metairie Road.

"It's probably 90 years old, but look at this," Benton said, examining the upended tree, which sheared limbs from a neighbor's live oak in its fall. "You can see that years ago, these roots were cut here at the street, meaning the tree wasn't anchored well enough to stand.

"You show me a healthy live oak in a yard that hasn't suffered that kind of mechanical damage, and I'll show you a tree that's not moving," Benton said.

A stronger future

In the rebuilding to come, Orr and Benton said they hope the communities affected by Katrina learn to redevelop a safer urban tree landscape by planting the right trees in the right spots and properly maintaining them, so that the ghastly lessons of Katrina aren't repeated.

"We'll be watching from the sidelines and looking for opportunities to have input," Orr said. "The way to minimize tree damage in future storms is not to exclude trees from the landscape, but to use wind-resistant varieties to protect structures.

"It's easy to look around now and see tree-related damage, but if you hadn't had those trees, you'd have had direct wind damage because there would have been nothing to deflect the wind," Orr said. "The canopy of a city like Baton Rouge, for example, where you have 50 percent coverage, actually deflects hurricane-force winds and keeps them from getting down to the rooftops. Remove those, and you'd have wholesale wind damage to all the rooftops instead of having tree damage to some of them."

But not all canopies are created equal.

Water birch and Bradford pear trees split. Pine and pecan trees crack. Pines and water oaks also blow over. And even the revered bald cypress, which shares top billing with live oaks as a super wind-resistant tree, can topple if it's not growing in wet soil, which is its natural environment.

"You can't say enough about how important it is to plant the right tree in the right place," said Benton, who said a 20-year-old cypress fell on his mother's Metairie home during Katrina because it was growing at a higher-than-ideal elevation. "It didn't act in its characteristic way because it wasn't well anchored, and it wasn't well anchored because it was growing too fast as a result of not growing in wet soil."

Benton reported "unbelievable" tree loss throughout what he calls "new Metairie" north of West Metairie Avenue.

"The live oaks and palms, which also evolved along the beach and are adapted to the area, did very well," he said. "But those other tall trees, especially the water oaks, which did most of the damage south of the lake, were down everywhere."

Trees can come back

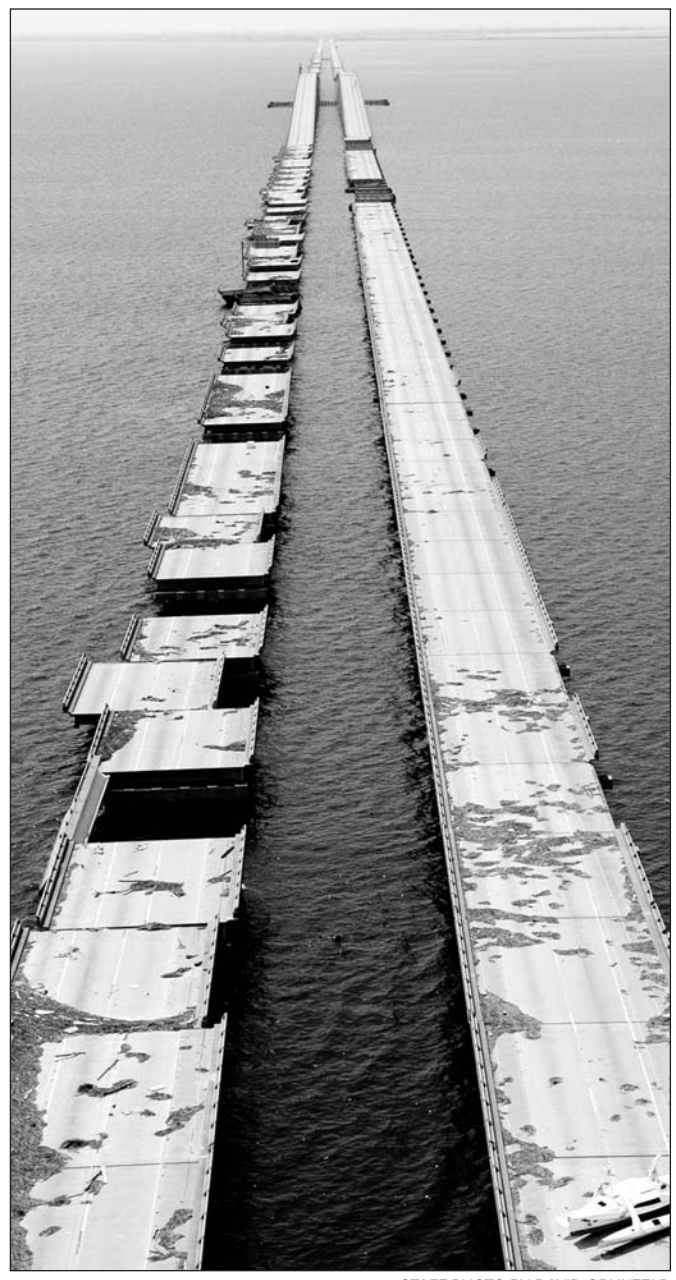
Professionals say people shouldn't jump to conclusions about the status of their trees. Although many live oaks lost limbs, that's not a fatal blow if the tree is generally healthy, arborists said.

"The live oaks of the Mississippi Gulf Coast were torn down to nubs during Hurricane Camille, but most of them came back," Orr said.



And live oaks that lost their leaves during Katrina did so in order to decrease wind resistance, nature's way of helping them survive. Releafing should begin in a month, Benton said.

On the other hand, brown leaves could simply be the result of salt spray, or they could indicate that the tree is dying. Only time will tell, arborists said.

"Human beings are impatient," Orr said. "The urban forest isn't some sort of 1,000-year-old forest. It's a dynamic and growing thing. It grows back … but not overnight. We're going to be dealing with this damage probably for years."

BRIDGING THE GAP

Repairs are expected to begin Monday on the 8-mile Interstate 10 twin spans linking Irish Bayou with Slidell. Plans are also in the works to later completely reconstruct the bridge over Lake Pontchartrain. The plan so far:

STAFF PHOTO BY DAVID GRUNFELD

Interstate 10 twin spans after Katrina, looking toward N.O.

1. Over the next 45 days, workers will take pieces from the most damaged span — the eastbound span — and use them to repair the westbound span. Two-way traffic will then get under way on the one good span.

2. When the repairs of that span are finished, new grate-like sections will be built to allow the eastbound span to be reopened. That work should be done by late January. Both spans will then be opened to traffic.

3. After the temporary repairs on both spans are finished, a plan for a completely new bridge will be finalized and bid. Cost of the new bridge is expected to be $350 million to $500 million.

Special Hurricane Katrina update for Humana customers, members, providers, agents and brokers.

The damage sustained by the communities and residents of the Gulf Coast is beyond a disaster - it is a terrible human tragedy. Humana is committed to helping our customers and partners in the affected areas recover as quickly as possible.

Effective August 28, 2005, for all individuals or businesses from the affected areas that have Commercial or Medicare plans, Humana will provide a one-month grace period for the payment of premiums.

For affected Humana members, we are implementing the following policies:

- To guide you in finding a provider for necessary medical care, you can call 1-866-427-7478 or 920-337-5090 to reach one of our customer service associates, or use our Physician Finder Plus at www.humana.com.
- If your prescription medication was lost or damaged, you can get necessary refills at the nearest pharmacy. If possible, you should continue to use the pharmacy or pharmacy chain you have used in the past. If your normal pharmacy or pharmacy chain is not available near you, we encourage you to use Wal-Mart, CVS, Rite-Aid, H-E-B or Walgreens if such stores are operating in your area.

The affected areas include:

Louisiana parishes:
Assumption
Jefferson
Lafourche
Livingston
Orleans
Plaquemines
St. Bernard
St. Charles
St. Helena
St. James
St. John the Baptist
St. Mary
St. Tammany
Tangipahoa
Terrebonne
Washington

Mississippi counties:
Amite
Forrest
George
Greene
Hancock
Harrison
Jackson
Lamar
Marion
Pearl River
Perry
Pike
Stone
Walthall
Wilkinson

Alabama counties:
Mobile
Washington
Baldwin

We are committed to providing uninterrupted coverage and service to our members at this critical time, and we will continue to review these policies and update them as necessary.

HUMANA®
Guidance when you need it most

OUR OPINIONS

From sorrow to sorrow

Four years ago today, 19 terrorists armed with simple weapons commandeered four passenger jets and turned the world on end. Two of the planes crashed into New York's World Trade Center and brought those iconic towers down. One hit the Pentagon. The last crashed in a Pennsylvania field. In all, 3,000 lives were lost.

The differences between the terrorist attacks of Sept. 11, 2001, and Hurricane Katrina are obvious and too numerous to mention. But in the past two weeks, people across the New Orleans area have come to know the panic that gripped lower Manhattan that awful Tuesday morning. Even those New Orleanians who weren't stuck in attics or on rooftops saw friends, neighbors and fellow citizens in desperate need. We felt a sudden, disorienting rootlessness. We learned that the power, transportation and communication networks that we use to organize our lives had somehow failed us utterly. And we agonized: Where is he? How did I get separated from her? Will I ever see them again?

Not even the wealthiest, most sophisticated society in the world can stop every last catastrophe before it happens. But the government response to Hurricane Katrina — the sluggish federal response in particular — bodes ill for the nation as a whole.

Four years after the terrorist attacks, and billions of dollars in homeland security spending later, the nation's ability to cope with major emergencies on American soil does not appear to have improved.

Congress' efforts to beef up state and local governments' ability to respond to terrorism should also have improved their ability to cope with natural disasters. But homeland security money has been parceled out on a political basis. Cornfields in Nebraska and cattle in Wyoming are now safe from al-Qaida saboteurs, but the federal government has spent far less per capita in areas at much higher risk.

Meanwhile, crucial organizations such as the Coast Guard and the Federal Emergency Management Agency have been gobbled up by the unwieldy new Department of Homeland Security. The Coast Guard, at least, has provided crucial assistance during the Katrina crisis, but FEMA's reputation for effectiveness is no more.

At first, Homeland Security officials didn't seem to realize that disasters that aren't terrorism-related are disasters nonetheless. In airports across the country, thousands of well-compensated Homeland Security employees uselessly tell people to take their shoes off as they walk through metal detectors. Meanwhile, as New Orleanians waded last week through toxic floodwaters that kept rising, we kept our shoes on to avoid cutting ourselves on roofing nails and broken glass.

New Orleans is more vulnerable to hurricanes than any other U.S. city, but most of the nation's major cities are at risk of some kind of disaster — earthquakes, wildfires, tornadoes, droughts, ice storms and so on. If the federal government blunders or bungles when local and state authorities are overwhelmed by a disaster, the direct cost will be counted in human lives.

There are indirect consequences, too. When New Orleanians are wandering half-dead on the interstates, it represents a failure of American power. The entire world saw these images. In places such as Afghanistan and Sri Lanka, people could not fathom that such a situation could develop in America and go on for days.

Now they know.

In the years since the terrorist attacks, the reconstruction process at the World Trade Center site has stalled because of squabbling over money and aesthetics. But Americans' desire to rebuild there has never wavered, and New Orleanians need to see the same resolve.

New Orleans must rise again. And President Bush and Congress need to make sure that no other metropolitan area suffers after a natural disaster as this one did after Hurricane Katrina.

OTHER OPINIONS

Will it be enough?

Behind the good-times image lurked a city with staggering problems. The people who made beds and scooped jambalaya for tourists barely eked by.

Some city employees made poverty wages. Thousands upon thousands of children were trapped in failing schools. The police force was stressed by a skyrocketing murder rate, and the very same people who were terrorized at the Superdome and Convention Center in the days after the hurricane have been terrorized for years in their neighborhoods.

So many of New Orleans residents were poor. Can all the money that will be flowing to rebuild New Orleans finally make a dent in the city's entrenched poverty?

— Stephanie Grace, Times-Picayune columnist
For the full version see nola.com/newslogs/opinion

EXPANDED WEB EDITION OF THE TIMES-PICAYUNE AVAILABLE ON NOLA.COM

nola.com

Zurich claims reporting information

We're here to help

In the wake of the devastating damage of Hurricane Katrina, Zurich stands ready to serve the needs of our customers in New Orleans and the Gulf Coast area. We have mobilized teams of claims professionals and disaster recovery specialists in the region to help you through the recovery process.

To report property claims, Zurich customers can:

- Call our toll-free number at 1-800-987-3373, or call 847-240-8020
- Fax an initial report of loss to 1-877-962-2567
- E-mail an initial report of loss to usz_carecenter@zurichna.com
- Go to our Web site at www.zurichna.com

We, at Zurich, extend our heartfelt condolences for the many losses you have experienced. Our unwavering focus is to help restore your business.

ZURICH

www.zurichna.com

Tiger fans set the tempo in Tempe, Ariz.

LSU faithful seek momentary escape through season opener

By William Kalec
Staff writer

TEMPE, ARIZ. - It took a five-hour drive, a five-hour flight, a lengthy layover in Denver, and a pricey parking spot, but Jacque Courville of Baton Rouge finally found his desert oasis, dang it.

Bulldozers couldn't move him from this spot. Only kickoff.

Twelve-pack of Coors Light on the ground, kept cool under the shade of a sprawling palm tree, plenty of friends nearby, a little girl (cute as can be) yelling, "TIGER BAIT" at the top of her tiny lungs as Arizona State fans stroll past the makeshift LSU ticket will-call. Courville takes a sip.

"The traffic back home has been horrendous," Courville said. "It takes 45 minutes to go 10 miles. Hey, and that's just us. People got it much worse and the whole state is affected. I'm glad we were able to afford to come. We're having a good time. It's worth it to get back to normal."

Tigers fans hardly invaded the Valley of the Sun, but did their best to make a presence. At 10:30 a.m., in Lot 4 - roughly three scoring drives away from the south entrance, a group of locals bet the security guards and set up a tailgate tent - modern day Magellans sticking their flag where they pleased. No one else was around.

Three hours prior to kickoff, the tent was shifted 50 feet to the left. Apparently you can't set up your spread across six parking spaces out here.

"We've met a lot of Tiger fans out here," said Gabe Pray of Amite, who was without power for eight days after Hurricane Katrina. "It's just time to get away. That's one of the reasons we came. You've got to get your football fix."

Given the short notice and two time zone distance between home sites (technically, LSU was the home team Saturday night and wore its traditional white), LSU fans' resourcefulness was tested. After examining the outrageous flight prices out of Baton Rouge, Courville decided to fly out of Houston. Must have been 10 or so passengers dressed in purple and gold on the flight.

When the 11:45 a.m. Continental flight from Houston to Phoenix landed, the flight attendant earned some favor when she thanked passengers for flying and then entered an ad-lib "Geaux Tigers!"

At 2 p.m. LSU set up a will-call ticket location outside the Carson Student-Athlete Center, and received a consistent flow until kickoff. LSU ticket manager Brian Broussard said there were a few exchangers from the New Orleans area, specifically St. Tammany, but that the majority of fans who made the trip were from other areas of the state less directly affected.

AP photo

Fans line up to give money to victims of Hurricane Katrina before the kickoff of LSU's game at Arizona State in Tempe, Ariz. Saturday night.

"Considering the numbers we usually have travel on a road tip and then considering what happened in five days, this is amazing," Broussard said. "We've got about 3,000 but I'm sure we have more than that with the online sale (through Arizona State). It's been crazy, it's been busy, but it's been great."

THE NEW TOURO BEGINS HERE

A MESSAGE TO OUR COMMUNITY

Let us begin with a fervent wish that everyone within our Touro family is safe and well.
This has been an extraordinary moment in the history of the Touro Infirmary
and the greater New Orleans region.

Your response was just as extraordinary.

Now we need to assure everyone's safety and security.
So if you haven't already registered,
please let us know where you are and if you need our help.
A special website has been created for patients and their families, employees,
as well as our medical staff, displaced by hurricane Katrina.

www.tourohurricaneinfo.com

This website is the first step in bringing us together
to create a new and even better Touro Infirmary...for the next 150 years.

Let's let the healing–and the rebuilding– begin.

Leslie D. Hirsch FACHE
President and Chief Executive Officer

TOURO
INFIRMARY

LEADING HEALTHCARE IN NEW ORLEANS FOR OVER 150 YEARS

TOURO FOUNDATION • WOLDENBERG VILLAGE
CRESCENT CITY PHYSICIANS • METROLAB

A SPECIAL MESSAGE for Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Louisiana Members affected by Hurricane Katrina

At Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Louisiana, we know our customers affected by Hurricane Katrina are facing many challenges right now. But getting the health care you need when you need it shouldn't be one of them. That's why we're working with doctors, hospitals, pharmacies and providers everywhere to assist you during this difficult time.

Here are some other ways we're trying to help:

- Granting grace periods for premium payments through November 1
- Providing access to all doctors and hospitals for covered medical services
- Making it easy to get prescriptions filled wherever you are

This applies to members from the following parishes:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Assumption | Orleans | St. John the Baptist | Terrebonne |
| Jefferson | St. Bernard | St. Mary | Washington |
| Lafourche | St. Charles | St. Tammany | |
| Plaquemines | St. James | Tangipahoa | |

To help find a doctor or hospital, get a new ID card, or ask any other questions about your health coverage, call us at 1-800-599-BLUE (2583).

Hurricane Katrina information is also available online at www.bcbsla.com.

If you have questions on prescription coverage, please call 1-866-781-7533 (24 hours a day, seven days a week) or visit www.express-scripts.com.

Providers can call 1-800-392-4076 with any questions. Agents and brokers can contact our Broker Service Center at 1-800-222-0524.

Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Louisiana has deep roots in Louisiana, dating back to 1934 in New Orleans. Many of our own employees have been affected by this tragedy. We want to assure our customers that we're here to help you and your loved ones as you rebuild your lives and as we all rebuild this great state we call home.

BlueCross BlueShield of Louisiana
An independent licensee of the Blue Cross and Blue Shield Association.

01MK2436 9/05 Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Louisiana incorporated as Louisiana Health Service & Indemnity Company

The whims of Hurricane Katrina blew buildings, boats and possessions all over, and many objects on Saturday still were lying far from where they belonged. One woman's refrigerator was found a quarter-mile from her house.

OUT OF PLACE

STAFF PHOTO BY CHRIS GRANGER

CHALMETTE: A cemetery crypt lies shoved against a street sign Saturday on Paris Road in Chalmette.

STAFF PHOTO BY KATHY ANDERSON

BURAS: Wind-blown boats leave a tangled mess Saturday at a boat harbor in Buras.

STAFF PHOTO BY SCOTT THRELKELD

SLIDELL AREA: Kathy Wood of Lakeview Drive near Slidell discovers family pictures still attached to her refrigerator Saturday. The newly renovated appliance turned up a quarter-mile from her townhome, which was destroyed in the hurricane, and had been on a second floor.

Rebuilt N.O. will be better, Nagin says

NAGIN, from A-1

he has not inspected it.

In a brief but wide-ranging interview, the mayor reflected on the tragedies of the past two weeks. Acknowledging that he may have made some mistakes, he said he hopes others in positions of authority – including President Bush and Gov. Kathleen Blanco — are scrutinized as closely as he and his staff have been.

"I'm not pointing any fingers at anyone," Nagin said. "But I was in the fire. I was down there. Where were they? I'm confident the truth is going to come out. But I want everybody's record analyzed just as hard as mine.

"Listen, this was unprecedented. Nothing has ever happened like this. For people to sit back and say, 'You should have done this, you should have done that' it's Monday morning quarterbacking. They can shoot if they want, but I was there, and I will have the facts."

Nagin's biggest frustration, and his biggest source of puzzlement, is the slow pace of the relief efforts. He said state and federal officials made repeated promises that weren't kept.

"This is ridiculous," he said. "I mean, this is America. How can we have a state with an $18 billion budget and a federal government with an I-don't-know-how-many trillion dollar budget, and they can't get a few thousand people onto buses? I don't get that.

"All I saw was a huge two-step, if you will, between the federal government and the state as far as who had the final authority. Promises made that weren't really kept. It was frustrating. We'd analyze things, double-check them, and then, later in the afternoon, we'd find out that someone was changing the plan, moving resources around."

Where were the resources?

Some officials at the state and federal level have suggested that part of the reason for the slow response was a lack of awareness about the level of devastation the city had suffered. They have faulted city officials for not sending out a stronger SOS.

While Nagin has said he didn't think the slow response was related to the demographic of the overwhelmingly poor, African-American residents that needed rescuing, his thinking has evolved.

"Definitely class and, the more I think about it, definitely race played into this," he said. "How do you treat people that just want to walk across the bridge and get out, and they're turned away, because you can't come to a certain parish? How do resources get stacked up outside the city of New Orleans and they don't make their way in? How do you not bring one piece of ice?

"If it's race, fine, let's call a spade a spade, a diamond a diamond. We can never let this happen again. Even if you hate black people and you are in a leadership position, this did not help anybody."

As hearings on the Katrina response start to crank up in Washington, Nagin said, those questions, among others, need to be asked.

"I think the government ought to be asking itself, 'What happened to the resources?'

"Why were people promised resources and they didn't show up? Where were the military resources? Where was the National Guard? Why were we left with a city on the verge of collapse, fighting for the soul of the city, with 200 National Guardsmen and 1,200 police?

"It was a serious breakdown," the mayor continued. "Make sure that whether it's Ray Nagin or the governor or the president, we take a serious look at this and make the changes that need to be made. I'm afraid some of this was a tug-of-war about who gets to spend the money at the end of the day. And I don't appreciate that.

"I saw too many people die, and a lot of people didn't see any of that. They had a press conference and left. I'm looking up, fighting this incredible battle, and they're doing press conferences and lying to the people. They're telling them 40,000 troops are in New Orleans. It was all bull."

Communications shut down

"Analyze my ass, analyze everyone's ass, man. Let's put the facts on the table and talk turkey. Why was there a breakdown at the federal and state level only in Louisiana? This didn't happen in Mississippi. That's the question. That's the question of the day."

Nagin said the city's communications essentially shut down, but said that state and federal officials were likewise at a loss. Within a few days, city officials, including Chief Technology Officer Greg Meffert aided by a crew from Unisys and other outside volunteers, were able to patch together a rough network.

"All communications broke down," Nagin said. "I got cell phones from as high up as the White House that didn't work. My Blackberry pin-to-pin was the only thing that worked. I saw the military struggle with this, too. No one had communications worth a damn."

Even if communications were challenging, Nagin noted that FEMA officials were up in helicopters inspecting the damage from the storm within about 24 hours after it passed. So the message should have been clear, he said: Send in the cavalry.

"I think they realized the magnitude of what was happening," he said.

The best-laid plans

Federal officials have faulted Nagin's administration for not marshaling its Regional Transit Authority buses and those of the School Board to start ferrying the tens of thousands of evacuees stranded at the Superdome and the Convention Center out of town.

Nagin said perhaps some of the criticism is fair. But he said there were various logistical hurdles that made it hard to use that equipment, and the buses would have hardly created a dent in the size of the crowds anyway.

"It's up for analysis," he said. "But we didn't have enough buses. I don't control the school buses, and the RTA buses as far as I know were positioned high and dry. But 80 percent of the city was not high and dry. Where would we have staged them? And who was going to drive them even if we commandeered them? If I'd have marshaled 50 RTA buses, and a few school buses, it still wouldn't have been nearly enough. We didn't get food, water and ice in this place, and that's way above the local level.

"Our plan was always to use the buses to evacuate to the Dome as a shelter of last resort, and from there, rely on state and federal resources."

Those resources took way too long to arrive, Nagin said – in fact, much of the help didn't arrive until after the mass evacuations from the Dome and the Convention Center had occurred. As a result, people suffered and died needlessly, a truth that has been weighing heavily on his mind.

"I saw stuff that I never thought I would see in my lifetime," he said. "People wanting to die. People trying to give me babies and things. It was a helpless, helpless feeling.

"There was a lady waiting in line for bus who had a miscarriage. She was cleaning herself off so she wouldn't lose her place in line. There were old people saying, 'Just let me lie down and die.' It's bulls—-, absolutely bulls—-. It's unbelievable that this would happen in America."

Answering criticism

While a number of people in the sea of refugees that packed the Dome and Convention Center complained that Nagin had not come to address them, Nagin said he did visit both facilities and speak with people.

"I went there," he said. "I went through the crowds and talked to people, and they were not happy. They were panicked. After the shootings and the looting got out of control, I did not go back in there. My security people advised me not to go back" after Wednesday, he said.

By Thursday, crowds had gotten increasingly restless. At one point, a crowd surged dangerously around Police Superintendent Eddie Compass, and a knot of police officers had to help him to safety.

Part of the discomfort in the Dome and Convention Center was due to the lack of toilet facilities after the city's water system went down late Wednesday. The city's hurricane plan calls for portable toilets at shelters, but none ever arrived. Nagin said his understanding was that the National Guard was in charge of providing them.

Also, he added, "Our plan never assumed people being in the Dome more than two or three days."

Nagin said he saw a few bright spots amid the rubble of the city. He said the New Orleans Police Department – at least, the majority of it, given that there were a number of desertions – should be hailed for fighting an almost impossible fight, handling search-and-rescue missions while trying to keep an increasingly lawless city in check.

"They were absolutely heroic," he said. "The stuff they were dealing with, man. They spent the first two or three days pulling people out of the water. When the looting started to get to the point that it was a real concern, they had to get involved in serious firefights. I mean, we had radio chatter where police were pinned down in firefights and ran out of ammunition. That's never happened."

'A better city'

Nagin also expressed cautious optimism about the city's future.

"I think we'll be a better city," he said. "I think we're going to see an unprecedented construction boom, and some better-paying jobs. Small businesses will start thriving, and I think the tourist industry will bounce back stronger than ever."

Many people who were stranded for days at the Dome and Convention Center told reporters they were never coming back to their devastated city. The mayor acknowledged that some of them probably meant it, including some of the displaced New Orleanians he's met since arriving in Dallas.

"I think some people will probably not come back," he said. "You know, Texas is treating people very well, probably much better than we treated people.

"But I think once people start to see the rebuilding, and that the culture of the city will not be materially affected, they'll be back."

How things progress will depend largely on the level of federal aid, the mayor said. And it's still unclear whether entire neighborhoods will have to be razed – and whether some areas should be abandoned because of their propensity to flood.

"The longer those neighborhoods stay under water, the harder it's going to be to rebuild them," he said.

Meanwhile, there are going to have to be serious conversations about changes to the housing codes and improvements to the levee system, whose inadequacies were laid bare by Katrina.

"I've been talking to some people in Texas, and I think maybe some better designs for housing that can handle some of this," Nagin said. "And the levee system is designed only to withstand a Category 3 storm. Obviously, we have to do better than that."

get the most minutes ever

from Alltel – America's largest owned & operated wireless network

what's not to love?

A plan that's all 4 u
with nationwide calling*

1000 Anytime Minutes – $49.99/mo

Unlimited Mobile-to-Mobile Minutes

Unlimited Nights & Weekends

Limited time offer!

Additional charges apply. See below.

Get 2 Lines $75/mo

And start your nights at 7 p.m. for free

buy one camera phone ONLY $19.99

Fujifilm Mobile Postcards
Send a photo postcard via the U.S. mail from your phone. Download it today from the Axcess Shop on your phone.

Audiovox CDM8910 Camera Phone

get one FREE

With 2-year service agreement on both lines. Limited time offer. While supplies last.

Play PAC-MAN® by Namco
Get retro and get chompin'. Download it today from the Axcess Shop on your phone.

come and get your love℠

alltel wireless

alltel.com 1-800-alltel9

Donate $5 to the Hurricane Katrina Wireless Relief Fund by texting "give" to 24357 (2HELP). All funds will be forwarded to the American Red Cross.

Alltel Retail Stores

Algiers
3869 General DeGaulle
(504) 368-4300

Chalmette
3220 Paris Rd.
(504) 277-7395

Covington
808 Hwy. 190, Ste. B
(985) 893-7313

Harvey
1818 Manhattan Blvd., Bldg. B
(504) 367-0897

Houma
1043 W. Tunnel Blvd.
(985) 851-2355

Southland Mall
5953 W. Park Ave.
(985) 804-2355

Kenner
1000 W. Esplanade Ave., Ste. 106
(504) 468-8334

Larose
115 W. 10th St.
(985) 798-2323

Metairie
2701 N. Causeway Blvd.
(504) 835-1105

New Orleans
211 Carondelet
(504) 524-4194

Thibodaux
906 Canal Blvd.
(985) 448-2600

Slidell
1302 Corporate Sq., Ste. 2016
(985) 847-0891

Shop at a Participating WAL★MART

Business Sales
1-877-BIZ-CNTR
(249-2687)

Authorized Agents Equipment & promotional offers at these locations may vary.

Bobby April Wireless
Meltairie
(504) 835-9600

Nationwide Communications
Covington, Mandeville and Slidell
(985) 626-1272

Nationwide Communications
Covington, Mandeville and Slidell
(985) 626-1272

Superior Communications
Laplace
(985) 652-6659

TalkAbout Wireless
Esplanade Mall
(504) 712-1972

Oakwood Mall
(504) 366-6272

Telecom
Destrehan
(985) 764-2021

The Wireless Center
New Orleans
9850 Lakeforest Blvd., Ste. A

Official Wireless Provider of the New Orleans Saints

*Coverage may not be available in all areas. See Alltel for details.
Federal, state and local taxes apply. In addition, Alltel charges a Regulatory Cost Recovery Fee (currently 56¢), a Telecom Connectivity Fee (currently 59¢), federal & state Universal Service Fund fees (both vary by customer usage), and a 911 fee of up to $1.94 (where 911 service is available). These additional fees may not be taxes or government-required charges and are subject to change. Largest Network Claim: Based upon analysis by an independent research company in July 2005, which compared marketed coverage patterns at the time of their creation of each wireless carrier without allowance for variations due to electrical interference, customer equipment, topography and each carrier's translation & defined preferences of their own internal engineering data. Coverage: Promotional minutes apply within the National Freedom calling area. See coverage map at stores or alltel.com for details. Usage outside of your calling plan is subject to additional roaming, minute & long-distance charges. Plan Details: Mobile-to-Mobile Minutes apply to calls between Alltel wireless customers that begin & end in your plan's calling area. Call forwarding, 411 & voice mail calls excluded. Nights are Mon-Thurs 9:00pm-5:59am. Weekends are Fri 9:00pm-Mon 5:59am. 2 Lines for $75: 1000 anytime minutes shared between two lines. Extended night minutes begin at 7 p.m. and end at 5:59 a.m. Phone Promotions: Phones available at sale prices to new customers and eligible existing customers. Contact Alltel to determine if you are eligible. Axcess Apps (Fujifilm/PAC-MAN): Axcess features are only available in Alltel digital wireless and roaming partner markets. Airtime and download charges may apply to applications available from the Axcess Shop. By using certain Axcess downloadable applications, such as graphics or games, Customer agrees to the Axcess Shop End User License Agreement. For download questions or problems, call Alltel customer service at 1-866-alltel7. Complete Axcess terms and conditions, as well as product details, can be found on our Web site at alltel.com. Hurricane Katrina Wireless Relief Fund: Your donation will appear on your monthly bill. Each text message sent may incur a charge as provided in your rate plan. Additional Information: Limited-time offer at participating locations. While supplies last. Credit approval & approved handset required. $20 non-refundable activation fee applies per line. $200 early termination fee may apply per line. Offers are subject to the Alltel Terms & Conditions for Communications Services available at any Alltel store or alltel.com. PAC-MAN® ©1980, 2005 Namco Ltd., All rights reserved. All other product & service marks referenced are the names, trade names, trademarks & logos of their respective owners.

Alltel has been awarded: Wireless Consumer Information Code Quality

A6458NFFP.11.5x21.4C.LANO1.indd 1 9/6/05 3:42:21 PM

Although water levels are slowly receding in the New Orleans area, flooding continues to muddy the road toward recovery. Streets like New Orleans' Tulane Avenue still looked like rivers Saturday, and buildings and cars remain waterlogged. In St. Bernard Parish, spilled oil has created another headache.

DRYING TIMES

STAFF PHOTO BY ELLIS LUCIA

NEW ORLEANS: Although draining little by little every day, water still clings to the area near St. Bernard and North Claiborne avenues.

NEW ORLEANS: Pet carriers are ferried in a boat along South Carrollton Avenue while the neutral ground remains a partially submerged parking lot.

STAFF PHOTO BY MICHAEL DeMOCKER

NEW ORLEANS: Police officers make their way through the flooded intersection of Tulane and South Carrollton avenues on Saturday afternoon.

STAFF PHOTO BY MICHAEL DeMOCKER

STAFF PHOTO BY ELLIS LUCIA

NEW ORLEANS: Traffic lights and utility poles sprout from the sunken street Saturday at Tulane and North Claiborne avenues.

STAFF PHOTO BY CHRIS GRANGER

MERAUX: A garfish tries to navigate the oil and mud covering a Meraux street Saturday in St. Bernard Parish.

CHRIS ROSE

Stop, in the name of normalcy

Amid the devastation, you have to look for hope. Forward progress of any kind.

Even the smallest incidents of routine and normalcy become reassuring. For instance, I was driving down Prytania, and at the corner of Felicity, the light turned red.

Out of nowhere, in total desolation, there was a working stoplight. I would have been less surprised to find a Blockbuster Video on Mars.

And the funny thing is, I stopped. I waited for it to turn green, then I drove slowly on my way, even though there were no other cars anywhere and the likelihood of getting a ticket for running the only traffic signal in town seems very unlikely right now.

Considering.

Also on Prytania, there was a gardener watering the plants on the porch of Nicolas Cage's mansion, and I guess that's a good sign. Life goes on. In small ways.

The toilets flush now, and I never thought that would be a sound of reassurance. An even better sound was finding out that WWOZ is broadcasting on the Web - radio in exile - laying out their great New Orleans music.

That's important. I have no idea from where they're operating or which disc jockeys are spinning the discs, but I can tell you this: The first time I hear Billy Dell's "Records from the Crypt" on the radio again, I will kiss the dirty ground beneath my feet.

On Friday, you started to see guys with brooms cleaning Canal Street and Convention Center Boulevard. Up until then, any tidying up required either a backhoe, a crane or a Bobcat.

God only knows where they're going to put all this garbage, all these trees, but they're gathering it up all the same.

The streets of the French Quarter, absent the rubble of the CBD, basically look and smell the same as they do the day after Mardi Gras, except with no broken strands of beads in the gutter.

OK, maybe it was a real windy Mardi Gras, but you get the point.

It just needs a face-lift, a little sweeping up and a good hard rain to wash away … all the bad stuff.

A counterpoint to that scene would be Uptown on Broadway – Fraternity Row – where the street is actually cleaner than usual, and that's because the fine young men and women of our universities had not yet settled into their early-semester routines of dragging living room furniture out onto their front yards and drinking Red Bull and vodka to while away their youth.

I wonder where all of them are? When this is over, who will go there and who will teach there?

What will happen to us?

One thing's for sure, our story is being told.

The satellite trucks stretch for blocks on Canal Street and call to mind an event like the Super Bowl or the Republican Convention.

It's a strange place. Then again, anywhere that more than 10 news reporters gather becomes a strange place by default.

I saw Anderson Cooper interviewing Dr. Phil. And while Cooper's CNN camera crew filmed Dr. Phil, Dr. Phil's camera crew filmed Cooper, and about five or six other camera crews from other shows and networks stood to the side and filmed all of that.

By reporting this scene, I have become the media covering the media covering the media.

It all has the surrealistic air of a Big Event, what with Koppel and Geraldo and all those guys wandering around in their Eddie Bauer hunting vests, and impossibly tall and thin anchorwomen from around the region powdering their faces and teasing their hair so they look good when they file their latest report from hell.

Today in New Orleans, a traffic light worked. Someone watered flowers. And anyone with the means to get online could have heard Dr. John's voice wafting in the dry wind, a sound of grace, comfort and familiarity here in the saddest and loneliest place in the world.

It's a start.

"There's no model for us to study. There's no one we can call and ask, 'Hey, your city grew 40 percent overnight. How'd you handle it?'"

SGT. DON KELLY, spokesman for the Baton Rouge Police Department.

Officials seek to fix B.R. bottlenecks

Solutions proposed to ease gridlock

By Jenny Hurwitz
River Parishes bureau

STAFF PHOTO BY AMANDA McCOY

Siegen Lane near Interstate 10 has a line of vehicles as far as the eye can see on Saturday. Baton Rouge traffic has increased with its population in the past two weeks.

BATON ROUGE — The noon traffic jam at the corner of Brightside and Nicholson drives looks more like evening rush hour: Lines of cars are backed up in all four directions, and motorists are creeping toward the stoplights.

For many Baton Rouge residents coping with the influx of evacuees and emergency workers who have overrun the city since Hurricane Katrina struck, these bottlenecks have become an everyday occurrence.

"You have to completely rethink your life," said Kate Burns, who owns a women's clothing store along Nicholson Drive, near Louisiana State University. "I've never seen so many people at all hours. Rush hour is all day long."

For now, gridlock appears to be the norm in a city where the roads were overtaxed before Katrina hit the Gulf Coast.

William Daniel, acting director of the Baton Rouge Department of Public Works, said the latest traffic count from earlier in the week showed a 40 to 50 percent increase in traffic in the Baton Rouge area.

And there's no easy fix. Authorities emphasize it's an unprecedented situation, one they are struggling to contain.

"There's no model for us to study," said Sgt. Don Kelly, spokesman for the Baton Rouge Police Department. "There's no one we can call and ask, 'Hey, your city grew 40 percent overnight. How'd you handle it?'"

Although police have not been tracking number of accidents that have occurred in the past two weeks – because they are primarily tracking crime - Kelly said rates have most likely risen, judging from the number of accidents and near-misses he has seen while driving in the city.

Short-term solutions, which have provided some immediate relief, include restricting traffic in some areas and prohibiting left-hand turns along certain roads, Daniel said.

Other proposed changes include removing signals to improve the traffic flow, installing surveillance cameras along roads so drivers can check the status of their routes via the Internet and implementing a traffic advisory telephone number. Officials also are considering encouraging businesses to adopt flexible time schedules for their employees to ease the rush-hour crunch, Daniel said.

Lawmakers already are looking ahead to longer-term initiatives, such as building new roads. The mayor of Baton Rouge has said he plans to outline specific requests from the federal government in a formal announcement next week, Daniel said.

Daniel remains optimistic about easing the traffic crunch in the coming days and months.

"Absolutely there's a light at the end of the tunnel," he said. "The mayor and the state are working; this is their top priority. I think they're going to see a gradual improvement every day."

But others aren't quite so sure.

Sgt. Kelly said he hopes that, as parishes such as Jefferson and St. Tammany regain power and running water, some of the evacuees will leave Baton Rouge permanently.

But he worries plenty will stay in the area, particularly those that lost their jobs or homes.

"There's no quick fix. There's nothing we can do," he said. "No matter how much money the federal government hands over to us, we can't just make new bridges and roads appear."

For now, Baton Rouge residents such as Pat Travasos will have to continue coping with the frequent jams and increased travel time indefinitely.

"It takes an extra long time to get across the river," said Travasos, who lives on the West Bank, in Brusly. "But hey, I'm fortunate. We have a house. We have all of our families. We can take the wait."

Insurers begin storm claim debate

At issue: Who will pay, and how much

By Mary Judice and Jaquetta White
Business writers

"It is not a black and white answer because each claim is different."

BILL MELLANDER, member of Allstate Natural Catastrophe team in Northbrook, Ill.

Was it water or wind that damaged your home, and will it be declared a total loss?

These are the questions on the minds of several hundred thousand policyholders trying to figure out how to pay for property damage from Hurricane Katrina. A key part of the debate is whether claims should be filed under homeowners or flood insurance policies.

"It is not a black and white answer because each claim is different," said Bill Mellander of the Allstate Natural Catastrophe team in Northbrook, Ill.

Homeowners policies provide compensation for damage resulting from high winds, but do not cover flood damage. The only water losses covered under a homeowners policy are those that occur after a windstorm has damaged a building, such as when water pours into the structure because a fallen tree created a hole in the roof.

Flood damage is covered by federal flood insurance, which is a type of coverage held by a fraction of homeowners. Flood insurance, however, only covers damages up to $250,000.

As a result, many homeowners would prefer to see their claims handled through homeowners insurance. And many policyholders are arguing that wind from the storm caused the levee breach that flooded the city and that any water damage should be covered under a traditional storm policy.

Jeff Albright, chief executive of the Independent Insurance Agents and Brokers of Louisiana, said Katrina was an unusual storm because flooding occurred after the hurricane had passed through the area.

"Any claim from rising waters, whether from rain, a tidal surge or a levee breaking, comes under the flood insurance policy," Albright said.

The issue of which policy to file Katrina claims under was a crucial topic when Insurance Commissioner Robert Wooley met with almost 300 insurance company representatives at a hastily called meeting in Atlanta on Wednesday.

"Obviously there are several kinds of potential problems," said Bob Hunter, director of insurance for the Consumer Federation of America. "In this event, the big problem will be: What's wind and what's water?"

Hunter said it will be hard to make a case that wind lead to the flooding. "I think that argument may have a class-action lawsuit to follow it," he said.

Carolyn Gorman, vice president of the Insurance Information Institute, said only about half of New Orleans residents have flood insurance, which far exceeds the national average of about 20 percent.

She said the residents without insurance and the circumstances surrounding the rising water in New Orleans will no doubt lead to disputes.

The debate over which policies to make claims under isn't the only issue consumers are debating. Also at issue is when a damaged home is considered a total loss, or beyond repair.

"There is no cut and dry line or blanket that determines what creates a total loss," Mellander said.

Nor are there state rules that dictate when a structure must be declared a total loss, Wooley said.

"There are no rules because every policy, even with the same company, is different," he said. "It takes an adjuster to look at each property and each policy to determine what people are entitled to."

Gorman said the term "total loss" is usually reserved to car insurance settlements. "I have never heard of houses routinely described as totaled," she said.

But there are practical rules that apply.

"If it costs more to repair a home than to replace a home, we would pay

The full amount of the policy,'' said Dick Luedke, spokesman for State Farm Insurance, the largest home insurer in the state. He added that State Farm homeowners do not cover damage from floodwaters.

And consumers have protection from a law that applies to fire and homeowners policies, Albright said.

In short, the "valued policy" law protects consumers when they have a significant loss. The law provides that if an insurer declares a total loss on a property, it must pay out the full value of the policy limit.

"If the building is beyond repair, they can't write a check for less than the policy limit," Albright said.

For lesser damages, the insurance policy will pay the lesser of the repair or replacement cost or the policy limit.

If a property is insured for $200,000 and the repairs total $150,000, the insurer would pay $150,000, Albright said.

If a policyholder carries $100,000 coverage on a property valued at $200,000 and the damages amount to $150,000, the insurer would pay $100,000.

Those without flood insurance will have to rely on the Federal Emergency Management Agency for a loan, grant or other financial assistance to pay for repairs.

Hotel renovations under way in N.O.

By Rebecca Mowbray
Business writer

Just a few days after all remaining guests were evacuated from downtown New Orleans hotels, some of the city's most important lodging properties already have started work on reopening.

At the Hilton New Orleans Riverside, the city's largest hotel, a forklift plowed the twisted metal pieces that had fallen from the roof of the port cochere into a big pile Wednesday, while cars marked "Hilton Recovery" moved from hotel to hotel investigating damage.

At the Windsor Court Hotel, another forklift carrying 2-by-4 inch lumber zipped across the luxury hotel's round brick driveway. At the Sheraton New Orleans Hotel, a crane parked on Canal Street knocked broken glass out of window frames.

"We'll be up in a couple of weeks," said Kevin Ryan, regional vice president of operations for Starwood Hotels and Resorts Worldwide Inc. "We want to get people back to work and make sure we rebuild the city as fast as we can."

Starwood, which operates the Sheraton and two W hotels in New Orleans, already has about 75 staff members on hand to open its hotels.

While no one expects the tourism business to restart soon, those hotels that reopen soon can assist in the recovery by housing relief workers and construction crews, while employing workers and keeping a small piece of the local economy functioning.

The quick moves also are partly defensive: the longer the hotels sit damp and exposed to the elements, the greater the chances that toxic mold will ruin the buildings.

"The big concern right now is moisture and mildew — the environmental issues," said Bill Langkopp, executive vice president of the Greater New Orleans Hotel and Lodging Association. "If it sets in behind the vinyl and in the walls, then the walls have to come down."

At a few hotels badly damaged by water, Langkopp said, "it's 'Can we save our building?' "

Toward that end, the hotel association and the New Orleans Metropolitan Convention and Visitors Bureau have been working with Entergy Corp. on getting the power turned back on at hotels. Electricity and water service will enable hotels to run their air-conditioning systems and help dry out the buildings.

The hotel association is trying to take an inventory of problems at local hotels to get an idea of how soon they can get rooms up and running. Once that inventory is completed, the hotel association will be able to help Entergy determine which buildings to power up first.

Conditions at downtown hotels vary widely. Some, such as properties in the French Quarter, are in good shape. Others, such as the Hyatt Regency New Orleans and the W New Orleans hotels on Poydras Street, saw a significant number of windows blown out and those hotels may be closed for a while.

Even within hotel companies with large holdings in New Orleans, situations varied significantly.

At Marriott International Inc., for example, which operates about 4,000 hotel rooms in the metropolitan area, the Covington Courtyard is already open. But the Ritz-Carlton New Orleans and Renaissance Pere Marquette hotels suffered significant damage and will be closed for a while.

What happens to employees is another universal concern, Langkopp said.

"Our employees are scattered all over the country," Langkopp said. "We are urging any hotel employee who hasn't already done so, to please contact their employer or their employer hotel chain."

The other major challenge is sanitation. With all the germs floating around New Orleans, hotels need to disinfect from top to bottom before they can reopen.

LSU

Tigers dedicate win to Louisiana 'family'

Miles experiences range of emotions in opening game

By John Davis
Contributing writer

TEMPE, ARIZ. — Les Miles expected coaching at LSU to be a challenge, an adventure and a rewarding experience.

He just didn't expect all of it to happen by the time his first game ended.

"Here's what's happened," he said after a 35-31 season-opening victory over Arizona State on Saturday night. "We have been through the longest training camp in the history of training camps, surrounded by a real life trauma, not a movie that was made for TV.

"They are treating people who are injured and disabled in our stadium, and our team has done its part and showed its heart. But when they stepped between the white lines they were able to keep their focus and do what they needed to do."

Miles and his team rode an emotional roller coaster for two weeks, only to find another one - the football variety - ready to sweep them up in Sun Devil Stadium as the teams slugged it out like a pair of heavyweights.

The fifth-ranked Tigers and No. 15 Sun Devils traded leads on five consecutive touchdowns until LSU pulled ahead for good on a 39-yard pass from JaMarcus Russell to Early Doucet on fourth-and-10 with 2:54 remaining.

"The LSU Tigers just would not be denied," Miles said. "They were going to find a way to win. They wanted this game for the people back home."

The Tigers paid tribute to victims of Hurricane Katrina by wearing decals on their helmets of the American flag, the three states that incurred the wrath of the storm and the Fleur-de-Lis, symbolic of the New Orleans city flag.

"We knew we weren't just playing this game for ourselves," Doucet said. "It has been such an emotional time for everyone, but we stayed together as a family.

"That's what we have done as a team, and that's what people the people of Louisiana and the entire region have done. When you stand as a family, you become stronger in all walks of life."

LSU became stronger as the game wore on after trailing 17-7 late in the third quarter. A blocked field-goal attempt and a blocked punt went for touchdowns in the space of one minute, 20 seconds early in the fourth quarter, putting the Tigers ahead - and each time the Sun Devils regained the lead, LSU fought back.

It was the kind of spirit Miles has seen in his team throughout the ordeal that forced the Tigers' first game against North Texas to be cancelled and Saturday's game to be moved to Arizona on short notice.

Hurricane evacuees staying at Veterans Memorial Coliseum were given free tickets, adding to the support for the "home" team from Baton Rouge.

"We had some jitters and made a lot of first-game mistakes," Miles said. "But our team has grown closer through this time and through this game.

"I have a feeling there were a lot of people in Louisiana staying up late to watch this game. We really look forward to coming home and playing in Tiger Stadium again."

AP PHOTO

Arizona State receiver Matt Miller, left, is able to elude LSU cornerback Ronnie Prude and score on a touchdown reception in the second quarter Saturday night.

Doucet doesn't let big one get away

Tigers WR grabs 39-yard touchdown pass to win game

John Davis
Correspondent

TEMPE, ARIZ. — Early got going late, but it was just in time for LSU in its season-opening 35-31 victory over Arizona State.

On a night when the Tiger receivers dropped more than their share of passes, Early Doucet let three slip through his fingers, but he was sure-handed when it counted on a 39-yard winning touchdown.

Doucet caught the pass from JaMarcus Russell on fourth down with 2:54 to play in Coach Les Miles' debut.

"My teammates just told me to shake it off and keep your head up," Doucet said. "They stood behind me and stayed confident and that gave me the confidence to keep battling.

"That's why you don't give up. You keep playing hard and good things will happen."

BRAZELL'S GRAB: Miles knows the breakaway ability of senior wide receiver and world-class hurdler Bennie Brazell, but getting the ball in his hands has been a challenge.

Brazell had one catch last season for 20 yards and four receptions for his career before Saturday. But he showed his potential on his first catch of the season with a diving grab at Arizona State's one-yard line with four minutes left in the first half. The 28-yard completion set up a touchdown run by Joseph Addai on the next play to tie the score at 7.

GAME AIDS VICTIMS: The Bush-Clinton Hurricane Relief Fund is expected to raise more than $1 million as a result of Saturday's game as all proceeds (after the cost of staging the game) were donated.

To help defer those costs and increase the donation, the Phoenix Thunderbirds civic organization donated $100,000 and the Tostitos Fiesta Bowl picked up the tab for LSU's meal and hotel expenses.

Also, a group of Arizona State donors underwrote the cost of remaining tickets Friday.

EVACUEES GET SEATS: Among the "local" LSU fans at the game were about 200 evacuees of Hurricane Katrina, who are currently housed at Veterans Memorial Coliseum in Phoenix. Arizona State, in conjunction with Arizona Gov. Janet Napolitano, extended the invitation to the evacuees, who sat in a portion of Sun Devil Stadium known as "Koetter's Corner."

Arizona State coach Dirk Koetter purchased tickets for the game for 55 displaced Tulane students who are enrolled at Arizona State for the fall semester.

AP photo

LSU coach Les Miles won his 'home' debut as the Tigers defeated Arizona State 35-31 on Saturday night in Tempe, Ariz.

AP PHOTOS

LSU wide reciever Craig Davis catches a pass for a first down on a fake punt against Arizona State in the first quarter on Saturday night in Tempe, Ariz.

Arizona State and LSU fans donate to the Hurrican Katrina Relief Fund as they enter Sun Devil stadium prior to their game Saturday night.

Fourth quarter rally lifts Tigers over Sun Devils

See LSU, page A-19

loose ball and return it 29 yards for LSU's first lead.

"It was crazy," Steltz said. "When Claude came in and blocked the field goal, we were all going crazy. Then, something happened again and changed momentum and it was crazy."

Even more maddening, the two teams then traded the advantage four more times until Arizona State's last gasp fluttered incomplete after moving deep into LSU territory.

"Let me tell you something," Miles said. "Our team has had the longest training camp in the history of training camps. And it's been surrounded by a real-life trauma. Not a made-for-TV. They wanted this game for the people back home. We're thrilled."

In the third quarter, LSU failed to capitalize on help from above. The Pac-10 replay crew wiped out an apparent 19-yard touchdown run by Sun Devils tailback Rudy Burgess. The Tigers pushed Arizona State to the eight-yard line thanks to two stuffed runs and a false start penalty. But on third-and-goal, Keller floated a screen pass over the rush, permitting Burgess to gain back that touchdown and put the Sun Devils ahead 17-7.

One of the more forgotten moments in a game loaded with key plays came in the first quarter.

Ronnie Prude failed to follow his defender as Arizona State lined up 10 at the line, allowing punter Chris Jackson to loft a 12-yard pass for a first down. It was a gutsy move for the new coach, but it eventually gave LSU only extra room to punt, as the drive stalled on the next series of downs.

For every rabbit Miles pulled out of his hat, LSU matched it with typical first-game behavior: Xavier Carter dropped a potential touchdown in the second quarter, two first downs were erased because of penalties early, and most notably Russell squandered a chance for points in the first quarter when the ball slipped out of his hands while in the passing motion.

The turnover, recovered by Sun Devils defensive tackle Jordan Hill, capped a marathon 19-play, 11-minute drive that originated at the LSU 1-inch line. Miles blew the dust off Nick Saban castaway Shyrone Carey, who carried seven times for 31 yards on that drive.

But as school officials yelled for the players to hurry up and get on buses, headed for the airport, those multiple mistakes were excused for the ride home.

"We need to milk this one," Skyler Green pleaded to those in rush. "Let me milk this one."

SLU ends trying week with victory

By Tammy Nunez
Staff writer

HAMMOND – There were a lot of reasons why Southeastern Louisiana didn't look solid heading into its season opener against Alcorn State.

The team had a new coach, Dennis Roland, who was diagnosed with cancer in May. Then the best passer in school history, Martin Hankins, surprisingly left the team after spring practice. Then, Hurricane Katrina wiped out 15 of the Lions' homes, a week of practice, and the original opening date nearly two weeks ago.

But they overcame those adversities in a 48-21 victory in front of 7,823 in Strawberry Stadium on Saturday. The Lions (1-0) outscored Alcorn State (0-1) 27-0 in the third quarter, building on their 14-7 halftime lead.

Lions quarterback Trey Willie rushed for 68 yards on 10 carries and completed 16 of 30 passes for 236 yards and three touchdowns in his starting debut.

In his first game starting, Willie surpassed his career high of 173 passing yards. Willie threw one interception in the first half, but played better in the second.

The test came when Willie ran 61 yards on a busted play on a third-and-12 that carried to Alcorn State's 17-yard line.

"(The called play) was a crossing pass, and I kind of saw the guy on (receiver) Felton Huggins," Willie said. "I kind of felt the pressure, and moved up ... and ran.

I was just trying to get the first down."

Two plays later, Willie threw his second touchdown pass of the game to Hutch Gonzales for a seven-yard score. Jim Hall's extra point extended the Lions lead to 21-7.

"(Willie) ran well," Roland said. "He had a lot of composure out there. I never felt like he panicked. That (Willie run) pretty much set the tempo of the game."

Roland said that opening drive of the second half charged up the defense. The Lions defense collected four interceptions and one fumble and forced two changes at quarterback.

"That (drive) allowed our defense to get more aggressive with the turnovers," Roland said.

The improved defense and the presence of the running game marked the biggest differences between former Coach Hal Mumme's program and Roland's.

The Lions, never known in the past two seasons for balance, rushed for 223 yards (5.4 average per carry) and passed for 236. Instead of using the short passing game to set up the long pass, Roland's offense used the run to avert the constant blitz.

Mario Gilbert, who ran for 95 yards on 15 carries, and Jerald Watson, who rushed 10 times for 68 yards and two touchdowns, highlighted the rushing attack.

"I think they really hadn't seen us run the ball much," Willie said. "I got tired of seeing (Gilbert) spinning. I got a little dizzy."

Hall kicked two field goals in the third quarter and by the time the fourth began, Southeastern led 41-7.

"Coach Roland said, 'Play for somebody today,' - I played for my teammates," Gilbert said. "We just wanted to win."

Alcorn State scored on the opening drive - a 10-play, 77-yard effort that Jeremy McCoy capped with a three-yard run. Alcorn State did not score again until the fourth quarter. The Braves, who have won the past two meetings, weren't able to produce at quarterback. Starter Oliver Bozeman was yanked in the third quarter when he failed to get a first down on the team's first drive of the second half. He was replaced by Tony Hobson.

Hobson threw an interception to David Daniels on his first pass. Hall converted the turnover by kicking a 31-yard field goal to give the Lions a 27-7 lead.

"With all these kids have been through this season - all the adversity ... the good thing is getting a game under our belts," Roland said.

Roland had a trying week. He missed a chemotherapy treatment on Monday when the clinic ran out of medication.

But Roland walked out of Strawberry Stadium with a game full of highlights to smile about. The back-breaker for Alcorn State was on the Braves first serious drive of the second half. Jeremy McCoy ran to Southeastern's 42 before Jay Skidmore stripped him of the ball. Rudy Johnson recovered it and ran 40 yards, setting up Sam Savoy's one-yard touchdown run that gave the Lions a 41-7 lead. The game ball went to Roland.

"Coach Roland, he done brought us a long way," Johnson said.

COLLEGE FOOBALL

Young's late scoring pass lifts Texas past Buckeyes

Longhorns' QB launches Heisman campaign by throwing for two scores

By Ralph Russo
AP sports writer

COLUMBUS, OHIO – Vince Young connected in the clutch and won it for Texas with his arm, more than his legs.

Young, best known for his highlight-reel runs, threw a 24-yard go-ahead touchdown to Limas Sweed with 2:37 left and No. 2 Texas defeated No. 4 Ohio State 25-22 Saturday night in the much-anticipated first meeting between two of college football's most storied programs.

Young's pass capped a 72-yard drive during which his biggest plays were through the air, including a third-and-six completion of nine yards to Jamaal Charles. His second scoring pass of the game made the score 23-22 and the defense did the rest.

The Longhorns defense, which time and time again toughened after turnovers and special teams gave Ohio State good field position, had the biggest takeaway of the game when Drew Kelson stripped a scrambling Justin Zwick and Brian Robison recovered and returned it inside the 20.

Ohio State held the Longhorns out of the end zone, but Larry Dibbles sacked Troy Smith for a safety and Texas coach Mack Brown had his second consecutive huge victory over a Big Ten team.

The Longhorns defeated Michigan in the Rose Bowl, when Young launched his 2005 Heisman Trophy campaign with 192 yards rushing.

Young proved against the Buckeyes he can pass it when he needs to as well.

One Ohio State player had said the Buckeyes' goal was to put an end to Young's Heisman campaign. And while Bobby Carpenter and Ohio State's swift linebacking crew hemmed in Young after some good runs early, they couldn't keep him from passing for 270 yards.

Young also had made a couple of those poor decisions and was intercepted.

But he finished 18-for-29 and ran 20 times for 76 yards.

Ohio State coach Jim Tressel was true to his promise, playing both Zwick and Troy Smith at quarterback. Neither distinguished himself, and it looks like the quarterback competition will resume for the Buckeyes.

Smith ran for 27 yards, threw a touchdown pass to Santonio Holmes and led Ohio State on five scoring drives.

Zwick was 9-for-15 for 66 yards and led Ohio State to one of John Huston's school-record tying five field goals.

Ohio State came up with three turnovers in Texas territory, but the Buckeyes could only manage three field goals against defensive end Tim Crowder and the Texas defense.

And when Ted Ginn Jr.'s 46-yard kickoff return got the Buckeyes to around midfield in the third quarter, they again drove inside the 20, only to stall when Ryan Hamby let a potential touchdown pass pop off his chest.

Huston knocked his final field goal of the game through to tie a school record last accomplished by Mike Nugent, the All-American he replaced this season, and give Ohio State a 22-16 lead with 5:12 left in the third.

Ginn, Ohio State's big play specialist, was only a factor on special teams. He caught two passes for nine yards.

Notre Dame upsets No. 3 Michigan

Iowa State routs No. 8 Iowa 23-3

From wire reports

A mere two games into his Notre Dame tenure, Charlie Weis has joined Knute Rockne in the record books.

And even though he isn't interested in any comparisons to the famed Fighting Irish coach, if Weis keeps winning games like he did Saturday at No. 3 Michigan he might not have a choice. Brady Quinn threw two touchdown passes in the first half and 20th-ranked Notre Dame held on to beat the Wolverines 17-10, making Weis the first Fighting Irish coach to win his first two games on the road since Rockne in 1918.

"If I answered by dignifying that, (Bill) Parcells and (Bill) Belichick would humiliate me," Weis said about his coaching mentors when asked about his connection to Rockne. "I've just coached two games and they've played two games. Let's come back and revisit that in about 10 years."

Notre Dame (2-0), which won at then-No. 23 Pittsburgh last week, snapped the Wolverines 16-game winning streak at Michigan Stadium and handed them their first loss against a nonconference team at home since 1998. The Irish -- two years removed from losing 38-0 in Ann Arbor -- also won at Michigan for the first time since 1993.

"I'm happy for the team, but I worry about their heads," Weis said. "I told them to enjoy this tonight, but not too much. You don't want to have a big win like this, then lay an egg at home the next week."

Notre Dame hosts Michigan State next Saturday.

The Wolverines (1-1) squandered several chances in the fourth quarter to pull within a touchdown before finally capitalizing on their third opportunity.

"We just made too many mistakes in the red zone," Michigan coach Lloyd Carr said. "You can't get the football down there and give it away like we did and expect to win a game like this."

NO. 7 VIRGINIA TECH 45 vs. DUKE 0: Marcus Vick threw three touchdown passes and the Hokies turned in a dominating defensive performance.

Roland Minor returned an interception for a touchdown for Virginia Tech (2-0, 2-0 Atlantic Coast Conference), which remained unbeaten on the road in the league since joining last season.

Duke finished with 35 total yards on 53 plays.

IOWA STATE 23 vs. NO. 8 IOWA 3: LaMarcus Hicks returned an interception 28 yards for a touchdown and the Cyclones capitalized on turnovers for all its points to stun the Hawkeyes.

The Hawkeyes got 140 yards rushing on 18 carries from Albert Young but had little else going. Their lone score was a 44-yard field goal by Kyle Schlicher in the third quarter.

Iowa also lost quarterback Drew Tate with an apparent concussion midway through the second quarter. His availability for next Saturday's game with Northern Iowa was uncertain.

NO. 13 PURDUE 49 vs. AKRON 24: Jerod Void ran for 101 yards and a score, and Dustin Keller caught two touchdown passes to lead the Boilermakers.

New starter Brandon Kirsch completed 22 of 34 passes for 252 yards and two touchdowns for Purdue (1-0), which had 267 yards passing and rushed for 211.

Luke Getsy, getting his first start for the Zips (0-1) after the departure of four-year starter Charlie Frye to the NFL, was 25-for-44 for 283 yards and two touchdowns.

NO. 16 CALIFORNIA 56 at WASHINGTON 17: Joe Ayoob overcame a shaky start, picking apart Washington's secondary for four first-half touchdown passes to lead the Bears.

Coming off an 0-for-10 debut against Sacramento State, Ayoob was intercepted by Darin Harris on the opening play and missed on his first three attempts.

Once the junior found Robert Jordan on an 11-yard completion with 9:47 left in the first, Ayoob settled into a rhythm, and finished 17-of-27 for 271 yards. Jordan caught eight passes in the first half, three for touchdowns. He finished with 11 catches for 192 yards.

It was Cal's fourth consecutive win over Washington, the first time that's happened since 1973-76 and only the fourth time since the teams began playing regularly in 1915.

NO. 17 GEORGIA TECH 27 vs. NORTH CAROLINA 21: The Yellow Jackets' Reggie Ball threw for two touchdowns and a career-high 320 yards, including eight passes for 131 yards to Damarius Bilbo.

After North Carolina pulled to within six points late in the fourth quarter, the Tar Heels stopped Tech (2-0, 1-0 ACC) on three plays and took possession at its 41 with 2:51 left to play. Tech's Dennis Davis intercepted a long pass from Matt Baker near the goal line to end the threat.

The Tar Heels (0-1, 0-1) got the ball again at their 19 with 44 seconds left, but Baker's third interception ended the comeback hopes.

No. 18 OKLAHOMA 31 vs. TULSA 15: Adrian Peterson ran for 220 yards and three touchdowns and made the Sooners' passing game unnecessary as Oklahoma avoided a second stunning loss.

With new starter Rhett Bomar struggling at quarterback, Oklahoma (1-1) didn't attempt a pass in the second half.

After Tulsa (0-2) pulled ahead 9-7 in the third quarter on Brad DeVault's third field goal, Peterson amassed 58 yards as the Sooners marched downfield to regain the lead.

Peterson started Oklahoma's next drive with a 23-yard run. He even rescued Bomar by diving on his fumble to keep the Sooners in position for a 29-yard field goal by Garrett Hartley.

Tulsa pulled within 17-15 on quarterback Paul Smith's one-yard sneak with 9:10 left, but Peterson had an answer for that, too.

On fourth-and-one, ran 41 yards for a score.

Clint Ingram intercepted Smith's pass and returned it for a touchdown with 3 seconds left to clinch the win for Bomar in his debut.

NO. 19 BOSTON COLLEGE 44 vs. ARMY 7: Will Blackmon ran across the field and turned the corner for a 41-yard touchdown in the second quarter and Boston College remained unbeaten heading into its Atlantic Coast Conference opener.

BC (2-0) hosts No. 11 Florida State next Saturday in the Eagles' first league game since defecting from the Big East to help make the ACC a 12-team superconference. They'll bring a Top 20 ranking into the game thanks to an easy victory over Army (0-1) that pleased Coach Tom O'Brien, who went to Navy and coached there, too.

Quinton Porter was 15-for-20 for 206 yards and two touchdowns, and backup Matthew Ryan was 7-for-8 for 83 yards after coming off the bench with five minutes left in the third quarter.

Zac Dahman was 17-for-32 for 154 yards and two interceptions, giving Army a 7-0 lead on a 6-yard pass to Jeremy Trimble on the opening drive. BC scored 44 unanswered points.

No. 25 CLEMSON 28 at MARYLAND 24: Reggie Merriweather scored his second touchdown on a 38-yard run with 2:58 remaining, capping a furious fourth-quarter rally that carried the Tigers.

Clemson (2-0, 1-0 Atlantic Coast Conference) trailed 24-14 before Charlie Whitehurst's second touchdown pass to Curtis Baham cut the deficit to three points with 7:35 remaining.

After a punt by Maryland, Whitehurst directed a 61-yard drive that concluded on Merriweather's winning carry around right end.

SEC

NO. 9 GEORGIA 17 vs. SOUTH CAROLINA 15: Thomas Brown scored on a five-yard run with more than 11 minutes remaining, South Carolina failed to convert a two-point conversion and the Bulldogs held on.

Clinging to a 10-9 lead, Georgia finally wore down the Gamecocks with its running game. Quarterback D.J. Shockley scampered 14 yards, Danny Ware broke off a 16-yard gain and Thomas Brown did the rest. The sophomore carried five times for 33 yards on the drive, capped by his touchdown with 11:24 left.

Brown finished with 144 yards on 20 carries, leading Georgia's 238-yard effort on the ground.

But the Gamecocks weren't done.

On third-and-18, Blake Mitchell spotted a safety blitz and connected with Syvelle Newton over the middle for a 34-yard pass. Going down the middle again, Mitchell threw a 24-yard pass to Sidney Rice. Finally, Mitchell found Rice on a 4-yard touchdown play with 6:52 remaining.

A missed extra point earlier in the game was crucial, forcing the Gamecocks to go for two. Mitchell overthrew Rice, preserving Georgia's narrow lead.

South Carolina got the ball once more with just over a minute to go, but went four-and-out deep in Georgia's territory.

AUBURN 28 vs. MISSISSIPPI STATE 0: Brandon Cox passed for 202 yards and two first-half touchdowns and Will Herring recovered a fumble for a touchdown to lead the Tigers.

Auburn (1-1, 1-0) rebounded from a season-opening loss to Georgia Tech with its first league shutout since a 9-0 win over Alabama in 2000.

The Bulldogs (1-1, 0-1) have lost 16 consecutive games against SEC West opponents.

Conference USA

KANSAS STATE 21 at MARSHALL 19: Allen Webb threw two touchdown passes and Thomas Clayton scored twice for Kansas State, which preserved a win with an interception in the closing seconds.

Kansas State (2-0) handed Marshall (1-1) its eighth loss since its stadium opened in 1991.

Late touchdown lifts Indiana past Nicholls State

From wire reports

Blake Powers threw a seven-yard touchdown pass to tight end James Hardy with 47 seconds remaining to give Indiana a 35-31 victory over Division I-AA Nicholls State on Saturday in Bloomington, Ind.

Powers passed for 307 yards and four touchdowns to help the Hoosiers (2-0), members of the Big Ten Conference, hold off the Colonels (0-1). Nicholls State was playing its first game of the season after their scheduled season-opener against Utah State was canceled because of Hurricane Katrina. The game was in doubt until Wednesday, when the Indiana athletic department arranged a charter flight from Baton Rouge.

A 40-yard touchdown run by Anthony Harris gave Nicholls State its first lead, 31-28 late in the third quarter. The Colonels drove to Indiana's 11 with less than four minutes remaining in the game, but Harris fumbled, and the ball was recovered by the Hoosiers' Tracy Porter.

Powers then started the winning drive with passes of 39 and 14 yards to Hardy, 6-feet-7.

Hardy, a redshirt freshman, had four catches for 64 yards on the drive and finished with eight catches for 122 yards.

The Colonels still had a chance to pull off a dramatic victory, but quarterback Sean Comeaux's pass in the end zone late in the game was knocked away.

Nicholls State rushed for 409 yards, led by Broderick Coles' 99 and 95 each by Harris and Joe Tobias. The Colonels rushed for 219 yards in the first half, when they didn't complete a pass.

Indiana led 21-7 midway of the second quarter when Tobias, a junior-college transfer, ran 50 yards for a touchdown. The Colonels later added a 26-yard field goal, cutting the deficit to 21-17 at halftime.

Trailing 28-17 in the third quarter, Nicholls State came to 28-25 on a two-yard touchdown run by Tobias and a two-point conversion.

WYOMING 38 vs. LOUISIANA-MONROE 0: Wynel Seldon ran for two touchdowns and 121 yards to lead the Cowboys past Louisiana-Monroe (0-2).

Wyoming (1-1) held Indians quarterback Steven Jyles to 13 completions in 32 attempts and 106 yards. Louisiana-Monroe's best drive was to Wyoming's 23 in the third quarter. It ended in a missed 46-yard field-goal attempt.

SAINTS

IMPROBABLE JOURNEY

Saints open against a familiar foe under circumstances that are anything but familiar

By Mike Triplett
Staff writer

CHARLOTTE, N.C. – It has been two weeks since the Saints flew out of New Orleans and began a journey that no other NFL team has experienced.

But today, when the team buses roll into Carolina's Bank of America Stadium, there will be a familiar feeling, a sense of normalcy, a jolt of excitement.

"Any game opener, for any season, your away game opener and your home opener is always something you look forward to regardless," guard Kendyl Jacox said. "But this whole season will have a special meaning to all of us."

The Saints begin their extraordinary season against a familiar opponent today, the division rival Carolina Panthers, in the same stadium where they ended last season with a 21-18 victory.

A lot has happened since then. The Saints - stationed in San Antonio, representing New Orleans and playing on the road in one form or another every week this season - have been labeled as a more literal version of "America's Team."

But most of the players say they know exactly whom they are playing for. And they would like to think that is something that will lift this team.

"Every week, we'll be playing with New Orleans on our back. If that doesn't mean something to you, there's obviously something wrong with you," said Jacox, who knows the whole country could get behind the team if this becomes one of those impossible-to-believe seasons. "For the story writers, it would make a great story. But even bigger than that, it's going to mean a lot to some little boy, some little girl in some shelter right about now, some adult sitting there taking their medicine, on dialysis, or just someone who really just doesn't have anything to their name right now. I think it's bigger to them more than anything."

The Saints' players and coaches have been vocal in their desire to play all of their "home" games in San Antonio this year, rather than in Baton Rouge - a decision that will be made by the NFL sometime after Commissioner Paul Tagliabue and Saints owner Tom Benson visit Baton Rouge on Monday.

But the Saints reason for wanting to play in San Antonio is because they believe it gives them the best chance to win - to be the most refreshed and relaxed, to have some sort of home-field advantage.

The players appear sincere in their desire to perform the best that they can, and possibly inspire a fan base that is looking for anything to lift its spirits.

Players who have visited evacuee shelters this past week said one of the main things they came away with was the realization that their fans are still pulling for them.

"That's something we all took to heart. And we're going to do our damndest this year," said receiver Donte' Stallworth, who said teams would be wrong to underestimate the Saints. "It's going to be nuts, man. I'm sure all 16 teams we're playing are marking us a win for them because of everything that's been happening to us and everything we've been affected by. But it's definitely not going to be that way.

"We're not going to lay down just because of the natural disaster. If anything, it's going to even pull us closer together, and we're going to make things happen."

Added receiver Joe Horn: "I want to play football. And I'm sure our fans want us to play football."

After some initial rustiness early in the week, Saints coach Jim Haslett said his team had terrific practices Wednesday, Thursday and Friday before traveling to Charlotte.

He said things like practices and team meetings have served as a distraction for players and coaches with so much else unsettled in their lives. And he said the team's scouting and preparation have not suffered.

As to how exactly that will translate today, though, Haslett said, "I don't know."

"I know this team will play hard," he said. "Hopefully they'll play smart and take care of what they're supposed to. If we play like we've practiced, we'll be just fine."

Haslett and offensive tackle Wayne Gandy said they are glad the schedule starts off with a familiar opponent - although a game at Carolina might wind up being the most difficult test of the season.

The Saints know exactly what to expect from this team - against whom six of the past eight games have been decided by less than a touchdown.

The Panthers feature a terrific running game, led by tailbacks Stephen Davis and DeShaun Foster, a solid passing game with former Saints quarterback Jake Delhomme and receivers Steve Smith and Keary Colbert, and one of the best defensive lines in the NFL, featuring Julius Peppers, Kris Jenkins and Brentson Buckner.

Carolina would like to enact a little revenge after being knocked out of the playoffs by the Saints in Week 17 last year. The Saints' defensive ends combined for six sacks in that game and tailback Deuce McAllister ran for 140 yards.

"It means a lot, because we know they're coming at our heads, and we're going to be coming at their heads. We know we can't play around with this team," Saints defensive end Charles Grant said. "The game's going to be a war in the trenches. They've got a good offensive line, and we've got a good offensive line. They've got a good defensive line, and we've got a good defensive line. It will come down to who's ready to play."

Grant then assured that his team will indeed be ready to play.

"We've got a lot of stuff to play for. We've got to step our game up, show the world we aren't going to fold," Grant said. "The world's going to be expecting us to go out there lopsided due to all that's happened. We have to go out there and get our jobs done.

"This football team needs to rise to the occasion."

Saints' road to Carolina takes a drastic detour

PETER FINNEY

CHARLOTTE, N.C. – It's such an eerie script.

When Jim Haslett circled his calendar back in the spring - 9/ll - he had no idea it was the fourth anniversary of a terrorist attack, certainly no idea he'd be coaching the Saints in their season opener with another national disaster a mere 13 days old.

"All I was thinking about," said Haslett, "was having to play Carolina on the road, hoping we'd do as well as we did the last time."

That was Jan. 2, when Haslett's football team went into Ericsson Stadium and upset the Panthers 21-18, saving his job by closing the season with four consecutive victories, and, in the process, knocking the fast-closing Panthers, who had won six of their previous seven games, out of the playoffs.

The planet kept spinning.

Then, up popped Hurricane Katrina, a life-changing force of nature.

The Saints did not fly in from New Orleans for this one.

They arrived Saturday from San Antonio, having held team meetings in the city's Convention Center, dressing in the Alamodome, and practicing on a high school field, a daily routine requiring four bus rides.

Oh, for football life in the old days, with everything under one roof out on Airline Drive, with kids nearby in school, with moms at home cooking for the gladiators of the NFL.

This was life before Katrina sent the Saints west and turned the team's headquarters into a home for search-and-rescue teams still battling to keep the death toll from rising as the water did Aug. 29.

When you listened to those involved, mixing tragedy with fun and games triggered the usual reaction.

"I'm glad all the Saints and their families are safe," said Carolina coach John Fox, who once served with Haslett on the staff of the Oakland Raiders. "For the team, it's like going through another training camp."

That was the charitable Coach Fox talking. The business-like Coach Fox added: "This game is a cause for the Saints. In football, you need an edge and you've got to match that edge. I'm sure they're coming in here with the idea they have the whole Gulf region watching them and rooting for them."

Joe Horn, who said he was thinking only of the Panthers throughout an unimpressive preseason, wasn't looking for pity, not after "looking at all those people lying on cots, not knowing where their next meal was coming from."

Return specialist Michael Lewis talked about "playing for the whole state of Louisiana, giving it all we got, week after week."

The Saints did that Jan. 2, coming up with their best effort of the season, when the last-ranked defense in the league got to Jake Delhomme five times, when Aaron Brooks hit some key passes in clutch situations to keep drives alive, to end an 8-8 year, missing the playoffs in a tiebreaker.

A healed Carolina club goes into today's game not only a seven-point Morning Line favorite, but with a team given a chance to do what the Panthers came close to doing two years ago: Win the Super Bowl.

All of the key injury victims are ready and waiting, running backs Stephen Davis and DeShaun Foster, receiver Steve Smith, All-Pro defensive tackle Kris Jenkins.

Also in uniform is defensive end Julius Peppers, who has been a force against the Saints since arriving as a No. 1 pick three years ago. Peppers is a 6-foot-6, 285-pounder with 4.5 speed, good enough as a power forward to help North Carolina reach the 2000 Final Four, quick enough in high school to chase down a ball carrier on the 10-yard-line, steal the ball, turn around, and run 90 yards for a touchdown. In four games against the Saints, Peppers has been a nightmare for Deuce McAllister.

A nightmare on the field, but nothing like Katrina.

All Haslett and his vagabond Saints can do is play the hand they've been dealt.

If Haslett has one thing going for him, it's his five-year record as head coach: 18-22 at a Superdome the Saints may not see again, and 24-16 on the road.

Whatever happens, in a very large way, everyone knows come January they'll be putting a large asterisk, with an even larger "K," alongside the 2005 record of the New Orleans Saints.

Let the games begin.

HORNETS

Shinn's scheduled visit to N.O. postponed

Hornets working on plan for home games

By Jimmy Smith
Staff writer

A planned visit to New Orleans by Hornets owner George Shinn on Saturday was postponed because of logistical problems, a club spokesman said.

Shinn was attempting to fly into either Baton Rouge or New Orleans to survey damage around New Orleans Arena and to attempt to get into the club's corporate headquarters on Poydras Street to retrieve the team's computer server and other equipment.

There's a possibility the visit will take place later this week.

The team also hopes to soon have a plan in place as to where home games will be played this season, as well as where the team will prepare for this season.

Training camp is scheduled to begin for the Hornets on Oct. 4.

The original plan was to hold the first three weeks of training camp at the Air Force Academy in Colorado Springs, Colo., but team president Paul Mott said this week it might be preferable if the club trained nearer to the city in which they will play the bulk of its home schedule.

Saints don't have it so bad

Tim Dahlberg
AP sports columnist

SAN ANTONIO - Their own dome is trashed, and so is their city. Their fans are scattered here and there, and so are their families.

They take buses to the gym to lift weights, and buses from the gym to the Alamodome to get dressed. They take buses to a high school to practice, and buses back to the hotel where they now live.

On Sunday they're supposed to try and win a game for a place that in some ways doesn't exist anymore.

Life has never been tougher for the citizens of New Orleans. Football has never been tougher for their Saints.

"Our situation is uncomfortable," Saints tackle Wayne Gandy said. "But for the people in New Orleans it's catastrophic."

Gandy reminded his teammates of that a few days ago when some began grumbling about the vagabond life of a team with no home. He stood before the offense and told them they were lucky men, no matter where they played.

Most still had homes, and they all still had their family. They still had jobs, no matter where they end up working at them.

A lot of the people who used to pay to watch them play don't have any of that.

"I was a little disgusted about people making at least six-figure incomes worrying about anything," Gandy said. "Sometimes you forget to think of the lesser man. Sometimes you forget to put things in perspective."

The Saints go to Carolina on Sunday to begin a season on the road. Their first "home" game will be in front of rabid New York Giants fans at the Meadowlands, courtesy of a bizarre decision by the NFL. It's anyone's guess whether they end up playing most of their home schedule at the Alamodome, in Houston or in Baton Rouge, La.

Their mission this season isn't to win a Super Bowl. It's to give a bit of comfort to the displaced citizens of New Orleans, who desperately need something to hang onto that serves as a link to the city that Hurricane Katrina nearly destroyed.

Some of them tried to do just that earlier this week, going to visit some of the displaced people living in shelters in San Antonio.

"You saw the gleam in their eyes that they were happy to see us," wide receiver Donte Stallworth said. "All they talked about was how the Saints would do. They told us, `We need you guys.'"

The players want to do their part. They've visited shelters, and they talk of making donations, doing benefits and helping New Orleans recover.

Their owner, meanwhile, does nothing.

Long before Katrina hit, Tom Benson was looking for a way to move the team he bought in 1985 out of New Orleans, where it's been since 1967. What better chance than use the disaster to move the Saints to either San Antonio or Los Angeles?

That may sound a bit cold-hearted but, hey, business is business. This is a guy whose team is worth up to $1 billion, but still had the gall to make the state of Louisiana pay him some $2 million for each home game to help his profit margins.

Earlier this year, he tried to extort even more from the cash-strapped state to renovate the Superdome. And, when he had a chance to reassure the team's fans that the club was still theirs, Benson waited more than a week to say anything - then issued a tepid statement that said nothing.

One thing is for sure: The team won't be playing in the Superdome this season, and the odds aren't good the Saints will ever return to the building.

I was in the Superdome on Tuesday, along with three police officers who spent five days there with some 25,000 hurricane refugees. The stench of human waste, stagnant water, discarded personal items and moldy carpets is so bad you almost gag, and light shines through the top from large holes opened up by powerful winds.

The field is littered with debris and there is vomit and feces on the darkened escalators. Even Benson's luxury suite above the 50-yard line was trashed, with fine liquor bottles scattered about and a toilet jammed full of waste.

The mess can be cleaned up and, for a price, the dome repaired. But the question remains whether there will be enough of a city left to make it worthwhile.

"People don't really understand that a lot of those people are not going back to New Orleans," Gandy said. "You don't rebuild ghettos."

For the immediate future, the players and coach Jim Haslett would like the team to play its home games in San Antonio, where players have already begun searches for apartments and houses.

There are more than 20,000 evacuees in San Antonio already and they could be given tickets for the game so the team has a local fan base. The Alamodome is available and former Mayor Henry Cisneros assured the NFL earlier this week that San Antonio residents will buy tickets.

"I don't think you have to be a brain surgeon to know you want to play your games where you practice," Haslett said. "We're really not going to play a home game anywhere but this would be the closest thing."

Haslett isn't making excuses for his team. He believes they will band together and play hard no matter where they play.

Besides, in the end it's just a game. The Saints know that better than anyone.

"You look at the people and what they've gone through the last two weeks," Haslett said, "and the last thing you can do is feel sorry for us."

SAINTS @ PANTHERS

Kickoff: noon at Bank of America Stadium, Charlotte, N.C.
Coaches: Saints Jim Haslett (42-38 sixth season, all with Saints); Carolina John Fox (25-23, fourth season, all with Panthers).
TV: Fox
Radio: 101.9-FM

KEEP AN EYE ON

BROOKS AND DELHOMME: Heading into his fifth full season as the Saints' starting quarterback, Aaron Brooks still is an exceptionally talented quarterback with something to prove. He puts up big numbers every season and occasionally wins games single-handedly, but consistency has been a problem. Critics constantly compare Brooks to the less dynamic but seemingly steadier Carolina quarterback Jake Delhomme, a Louisiana native and former Saints backup who couldn't beat out Brooks for the starting job in New Orleans. When these two are playing each other, comparisons are inevitable, and though he doesn't say it, there is a little more personal meaning for Brooks.

THE ROOKIES: The Saints, who had the lowest-ranked defense in the NFL last year, moved up three spots in the first round of this year's draft to select ... offensive tackle Jammal Brown. They passed on the linebacker they most coveted, Thomas Davis, who fell to Carolina. Both players are expected to have a significant impact on this game – and they may even clash head-to-head once or twice. Brown will mostly have his hands full with the Panthers' sensational defensive end, Julius Peppers. The Saints worked Brown to the bone this preseason to get him ready for his first NFL season – and for this Week 1 test in particular. So far, Brown has done everything asked of him. Davis is a roving playmaker who will play some linebacker and some safety for s superb Carolina defense.

GAMEPLAN

The Saints spent the offseason fortifying their offensive line and preparing to feature the power running game. They won't face a much better test all season than a Carolina defense that boasts one of the best defensive tackle duos in the game – Kris Jenkins and Brentson Buckner – as well as standout defenders like Peppers and middle linebacker Dan Morgan. Saints tailback Deuce McAllister is healthy and looked as strong as ever in the offseason. In two games against Carolina last season, McAllister ran for 22 yards on Dec. 5, then 140 yards and a touchdown Jan. 2. Not surprisingly, the Saints lost that first game and won the second.

KEY MATCHUP

SAINTS DEFENSIVE ENDS vs. PANTHERS OFFENSE: The entire Carolina offense will be charged with trying to stop the most dynamic aspect of the Saints' team – New Orleans' quartet of defensive ends Charles Grant, Darren Howard, Will Smith and Tony Bryant. In their last meeting last season, the four ends sacked Delhomme six times. The Saints are excited about using all four of them on the field at the same time in obvious passing situations. But first, they must stop Carolina on first and second downs, which means shutting down talented tailbacks Stephen Davis and DeShaun Foster.

BY THE NUMBERS

McAllister needs 73 yards to become the Saints' all-time leading rusher. George Rogers holds the mark of 4,267 yards from 1981-84. ... Receiver Joe Horn needs three touchdown catches to tie Eric Martin for the all-time Saints record in that category with 48. He needs nine touchdowns this season to pass Dalton Hilliard for the most total touchdowns (53) in team history. And Horn needs 95 more receptions to pass Martin's career record. ... The Saints will play their first three games on the road this year and every game away from the Superdome, but that's not entirely a bad thing. Under Coach Jim Haslett, the Saints are 24-16 on the road in the past five seasons. ... The Saints are 10-10 lifetime against the Panthers – although Carolina won five straight games prior to last season's finale. Four of the last five games between these teams and six of the last eight have been decided by less than a touchdown.

FROM THE COACH'S MOUTH

"If you want to stay tuned, if you want a game of the week, this should be the game of the week. It's going to be a fun game to watch." – Haslett.

Compiled by Mike Triplett

SAINTS ROSTER

| No. | Name | Pos. | Exp. | School |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| 2 | Aaron Brooks | QB | 7 | Virginia |
| 3 | John Carney | K | 16 | Notre Dame |
| 4 | Todd Bouman | QB | 8 | St. Cloud State |
| 5 | Adrian McPherson | QB | R | Florida State |
| 17 | Mitch Berger | P | 11 | Colorado |
| 19 | Devery Henderson | WR | 2 | LSU |
| 20 | Jay Bellamy | S | 12 | Rutgers |
| 21 | Jason Craft | CB | 7 | Colorado State |
| 22 | Fred Thomas | CB | 10 | Tenn.-Martin |
| 24 | Dwight Smith | S | 5 | Akron |
| 25 | Fred McAfee | RB | 14 | Miss. College |
| 26 | Deuce McAllister | RB | 5 | Ole Miss |
| 27 | Aaron Stecker | RB | 6 | Western Illinois |
| 29 | Josh Bullocks | S | R | Nebraska |
| 32 | Antowain Smith | RB | 9 | Houston |
| 34 | Mike McKenzie | CB | 7 | Memphis |
| 35 | Fakhir Brown | CB | 6 | Grambling |
| 37 | Steve Gleason | S | 5 | Wash. State |
| 40 | Mel Mitchell | S | 4 | W. Kentucky |
| 44 | Mike Karney | FB | 2 | Arizona State |
| 47 | Kevin Houser | LS | 6 | Ohio State |
| 50 | James Allen | LB | 4 | Oregon State |
| 51 | Terrence Melton | LB | 2 | Rice |
| 52 | Sedrick Hodge | LB | 5 | North Carolina |
| 53 | T.J. Slaughter | LB | 6 | Southern Miss |
| 55 | Courtney Watson | LB | 2 | Notre Dame |
| 56 | Alfred Fincher | LB | R | Connecticut |
| 57 | Colby Bockwoldt | LB | 2 | BYU |
| 59 | Ronald McKinnon | LB | 10 | North Alabama |
| 60 | Ben Archibald | T | 1 | BYU |
| 61 | Montrae Holland | G | 3 | Florida State |
| 64 | Kendyl Jacox | C | 8 | Kansas State |
| 65 | LeCharles Bentley | G | 4 | Ohio State |
| 66 | Brian Young | DT | 6 | Texas-El Paso |
| 67 | Jamar Nesbit | G | 7 | South Carolina |
| 70 | Jammal Brown | T | R | Oklahoma |
| 72 | Wayne Gandy | T | 12 | Auburn |
| 75 | Jermaine Mayberry | T | 10 | Texas A&M-Kingsville |
| 77 | Rodney Leisle | DT | 2 | UCLA |
| 80 | Shad Meier | TE | 5 | Kansas State |
| 81 | Az-Zahir Hakim | WR | 8 | San Diego State |
| 83 | Donte Stallworth | WR | 4 | Tennessee |
| 84 | Michael Lewis | WR | 5 | None |
| 85 | Ernie Conwell | TE | 10 | Washington |
| 86 | Jack Hilton | TE | 2 | North Carolina |
| 87 | Joe Horn | WR | 10 | Itawamba (Miss.) JC |
| 89 | Lamont Hall | TE | 6 | Clemson |
| 91 | Will Smith | DE | 2 | Ohio State |
| 92 | Tony Bryant | DE | 6 | Florida State |
| 93 | Darren Howard | DE | 6 | Kansas State |
| 94 | Charles Grant | DE | 4 | Georgia |
| 97 | Johnathan Sullivan | DT | 3 | Georgia |
| 98 | Willie Whitehead | DE | 7 | Auburn |

PANTHERS ROSTER

| No. | Name | Pos. | Exp. | School |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| 3 | Stefan LeFors | QB | R | Louisville |
| 4 | John Kasay | K | 15 | Georgia |
| 7 | Jason Baker | P | 5 | Iowa |
| 16 | Chris Weinke | QB | 5 | Florida State |
| 17 | Jake Delhomme | QB | 7 | ULL |
| 18 | Drew Carter | WR | 2 | Ohio State |
| 20 | Chris Gamble | CB | 2 | Ohio State |
| 21 | Dante Wesley | CB | 4 | Ark.-Pine Bluff |
| 22 | Jamal Robertson | RB | 4 | Ohio Northern |
| 23 | Ken Lucas | CB | 5 | Ole Miss |
| 24 | Ricky Manning | CB | 3 | UCLA |
| 26 | DeShaun Foster | RB | 4 | UCLA |
| 27 | Marlon McCree | S | 5 | Kentucky |
| 30 | Mike Minter | S | 9 | Nebraska |
| 32 | Rod Smart | RB | 5 | W. Kentucky |
| 33 | Idrees Bashir | S | 5 | Memphis |
| 37 | Nick Goings | RB | 5 | Pittsburgh |
| 45 | Brad Hoover | FB | 6 | W. Carolina |
| 47 | Thomas Davis | S | R | Georgia |
| 48 | Stephen Davis | RB | 10 | Auburn |
| 50 | Vinny Ciurciu | LB | 3 | Boston College |
| 52 | Chris Draft | LB | 7 | Stanford |
| 53 | Brandon Short | LB | 6 | Penn State |
| 54 | Will Witherspoon | LB | 4 | Georgia |
| 55 | Dan Morgan | LB | 5 | Miami |
| 56 | Jason Kyle | LB | 11 | Arizona State |
| 59 | Adam Seward | LB | R | UNLV |
| 60 | Jeff Mitchell | C | 9 | Florida |
| 61 | Dave Kadela | T | 4 | Virginia Tech |
| 63 | Geoff Hangartner | C | R | Texas A&M |
| 67 | Jordan Carstens | DT | 2 | Iowa State |
| 68 | Mike Wahle | G | 8 | Navy |
| 69 | Jordan Gross | T | 3 | Utah |
| 70 | Travelle Wharton | OL | 2 | South Carolina |
| 71 | Evan Mathis | G | R | Alabama |
| 76 | Tutan Reyes | OL | 6 | Ole Miss |
| 77 | Kris Jenkins | DT | 5 | Maryland |
| 78 | Todd Fordham | OL | 9 | Florida State |
| 81 | Ricky Proehl | WR | 16 | Wake Forest |
| 82 | Mike Seidman | TE | 3 | UCLA |
| 83 | Keary Colbert | WR | 2 | Southern Cal |
| 84 | Michael Gaines | TE | 2 | Central Florida |
| 86 | Kris Mangum | TE | 8 | Ole Miss |
| 87 | Rod Gardner | WR | 5 | Clemson |
| 88 | Karl Hankton | WR | 7 | Trinity (Ill.) |
| 89 | Steve Smith | WR | 5 | Utah |
| 90 | Julius Peppers | DE | 4 | North Carolina |
| 92/Jovan Haye | | DE | R | Vanderbilt |
| 93 | Mike Rucker | DE | 7 | Nebraska |
| 94 | Kindal Moorehead | DT | 3 | Alabama |
| 96 | Al Wallace | DE | 6 | Maryland |
| 97 | Kemp Rasmussen | DE | 4 | Indiana |
| 99 | Brentson Buckner | DT | 12 | Clemson |

GAZING INTO THE FUTURE

Can the Saints be playoff bound?

BRIAN ALLEE-WALSH

With no crystal ball handy, thanks to Hurricane Katrina, I gazed into an empty box of wine and found the truth about the playoff-bound New Orleans/San Antonio/Baton Rouge Saints. That's right. The 2005 Saints will make the postseason but not before some anxious moments. Read on.

TODAY AT CAROLINA

NFL schedule makers bring the Saints back to the scene of their season-ending victory in 2004, a 21-18 thriller that evened their record at 8-8. The Saints will make it five consecutive wins dating to last season on the strength of Deuce McAllister's first 100-yard game in '05. Jake Delhomme contributes to the hurricane relief fund with three picks and gets sacked five times. Saints rookie RT Jammal Brown shuts down Panthers DE Julius Peppers.
Record: 1-0.

SEPT. 19 AT N.Y. GIANTS (Monday night)

With Archie, Olivia, Peyton and Cooper Manning splitting time in the suites of Giants officials and Saints owner Tom Benson at Giants Stadium, the Saints' defense makes life miserable for second-year quarterback Eli Manning. Oddly enough, the game starts on ABC and concludes on ESPN for much of the country. First 2-0 start for the Saints since 2002.
Record: 2-0.

SEPT. 25 AT MINNESOTA

The road warriors end the month on a losing note as Vikings quarterback Daunte Culpepper shreds the defense with 376 yards passing and five touchdowns to Randy Moss' replacement, Nate Burleson. For good measure, Culpepper accounts for a sixth touchdown on a quarterback sneak from midfield. The Saints are 2-6 in regular-season games at the Metrodome, last winning there in 1993. Make that 2-7 after Culpepper's outstanding performance.
Record: 2-1.

OCT. 2 VS. BUFFALO

Unhappy with the play of his linebackers against the Vikings, Saints coach Jim Haslett ends his retirement and opens the game at middle linebacker against his former team. "That's how you do it," Haslett tells his team at halftime after twice sacking former Tulane quarterback J.P. Losman. In the second half, Haslett returns to the sideline and watches as Aaron Brooks and Donte' Stallworth combine on an 83-yard "Hail Mary" with five seconds remaining for a 21-20 win.
Record: 3-1.

OCT. 9 AT GREEN BAY

Days after Packers quarterback Brett Favre announces that this will be his last season; he looks like a spry kid again, combining with wide receiver Jevon Walker on three touchdowns. It marks only the Saints' second trip to storied Lambeau Field and first since 1989. Buoyed by his performance against the Saints, a suddenly rejuvenated Favre tells reporters afterward "I still got it" and signs a three-year contract extension.
Record: 3-2.

OCT. 16 VS. ATLANTA

A sellout crowd comes to watch the "Michael Vick experience" and purchase Benson bobblehead dolls with all the proceeds going to the "Build Me A Stadium Anywhere" fund. But the day belongs to Aaron Brooks who outplays his second cousin with three touchdown passes and a rare 50-yard touchdown run on a quarterback sneak. Stealing a page from his dad's playbook, Falcons coach Jim L. Mora goes off on reporters during his post-game press conference.
Record: 4-2.

OCT. 23 AT ST. LOUIS

This twice-a-year matchup was one of the NFL best rivalries before realignment broke up the old NFC West in 2002. Suffice to say, there is no love lost between the teams, and Haslett and Rams coach Mike Martz do not exchange Christmas cards. Last year, the Saints won 28-25 in dramatic fashion, scoring on a 31-yard field goal by John Carney with 7:56 remaining in overtime. This time, Martz and the Rams exact revenge, scoring late on a Marc Bulger touchdown pass to Torry Holt.
Record: 4-3.

OCT. 30 VS. MIAMI

Former LSU coach Nick Saban returns to Tiger Stadium with his first Dolphins team that features former Saints running back Ricky Williams, who will miss the first four games due to a drug suspension. It will be Williams' first regular-season game against the Saints since being traded in 2002. Inquiring minds want to know? Will Ricky still look like a caveman? McAllister will have the last say the day before Halloween. Saints by two touchdowns.
Record: 5-3.

NOV. 6 VS. CHICAGO

Coach Lovie Smith is in the second year of a rebuilding program in the Windy City. On paper, the Bears are no match for the Saints. But with the bye week coming up and a trip to New England the following week, this game could be an ambush if the Saints aren't focused. The Saints enter the break on a high note and push their home record to 5-0.
Record: 6-3.

NOV. 20 AT NEW ENGLAND

This game should be markedly different than the exhibition season when Haslett stuck with his starters through three quarters. By this point of the season, the defending Super Bowl champion Patriots will have adjusted to life after starting linebackers Tedy Bruschi and Ted Johnson and coordinators Charlie Weis and Romeo Crennel. It's tough to win at Gillette Stadium where the Patriots have won their last 21 games.
Record: 6-4.

NOV. 27 AT NEW YORK JETS

The Saints play their second straight game on the East Coast, this time on ESPN, against an improved Jets team that made the playoffs in 2004 under Herman Edwards. The Saints have blanked the J-E-T-S in their last two meetings at Giants Stadium. The home team will score this time but not enough to beat the Saints.
Record: 7-4.

DEC. 4 VS. TAMPA BAY

The Saints begin a pivotal five-game stretch that features four against NFC South foes, including two against Jon Gruden's Buccaneers. Saints fans will be revved up and raring to go, having last seen their heroes in person Oct. 30. All five games are winnable. But the Bucs post the upset in a close, physical game.
Record: 7-5.

DEC. 12 AT ATLANTA (Monday night)

Playing on "Monday Night Football," the Saints find themselves in a must-win situation against their biggest rival. The Saints are hoping to snap a five-game losing streak on MNF, with their last victory coming in 1992 against the Washington Redskins, 20-3. Doesn't happen. Michael Vick wows the prime-time audience, rushing for 105 yards and one touchdown and throwing for two more scores.
Record: 7-6.

DEC. 18 VS. CAROLINA

In the throes of a two-game losing streak, these are desperate times for Saints fans. They see their playoff chances slipping away. Jake Delhomme buys up the remaining 10,000 seats at the Alamodome for his family, friends and adoring fans from Cajun land and sticks a dagger into the back of his old team. Once 7-4, the Saints seem incapable of handling prosperity.
Record: 7-7.

DEC. 24 VS. DETROIT

On the day before Christmas, the vastly improved Lions catch the Saints at a desperate time. Haslett & company remain mathematically alive in the playoff hunt and need a victory to keep their chances intact. The defense stiffens, and Deuce McAllister, Joe Horn and Aaron Brooks take the offensive and contribute mightily in victory.
Record: 8-7.

JAN. 1 AT TAMPA BAY

The road-weary Saints eclipse the one million mark in skymiles. A win sends them to the playoffs for the first time since 2000. A loss leaves them on the outside looking in and another non-descript 8-8 record. Special teams pave the way, with Michael Lewis returning the opening kickoff 103 yards for a touchdown and kicker John Carney making four field goals. McAllister adds a short touchdown run and the Saints head to the postseason for just the sixth time in franchise history. Happy New Year!
Record: 9-7.

STATUS OF LOCAL TEAMS/EVENTS

NEW ORLEANS SAINTS

Moved football operations to San Antonio for the season. Moved Sept. 18 home game against the New York Giants to Sept. 19 at Giants Stadium. Alamodome reportedly to ost four games; Saints in negotiations with LSU to host remaining three. Team's long-term future in New Orleans uncertain.

NEW ORLEANS HORNETS

Team will hold at least first two weeks of training camp at Air Force Academy in Colorado Springs, Colo. Basketball operations have moved to Houston Rockets' facility. Team in discussion with LSU to host home games at the Pete Maravich Assembly Center. Oklahoma City and Las Vegas also are interested in hosting the team as a season-long temporary location.

ZURICH CLASSIC OF NEW ORLEANS

PGA officials are mum on returning to hurricane-ravaged TPC of Louisiana. The tournament is scheduled for April 27-30, but don't expect a decision for at least two months. Course officials estimate there are about 1,000 uprooted trees, and holes 4, 5, and 6 are waterlogged.

NEW ORLEANS ZEPHYRS

Canceled last three home games against Oklahoma City. Team was able to complete regular-season, four-game series at Iowa. Officials say baseball will resume in April. Zephyr Field is being used as a FEMA base.

NEW ORLEANS VOODOO

Team operations weren't affected by Hurricane Katrina.

LSU

The football team's season-opener against North Texas was pushed back from Sept. 3 to Oct. 29. The Tigers also moved their second home game, Saturday night against Arizona State, to Tempe, Ariz.

TULANE

The school will spread its student-athletes across five campuses in Louisiana and Texas. The men's basketball, women's swimming and diving, women's volleyball and women's soccer are at Texas A&M. The Green Wave baseball and women's basketball teams will attend Texas Tech. Conference USA school Rice will admit the Tulane men's and women's tennis teams, and C-USA school SMU will host the men's and women's golf programs.
Tulane's cross country teams will not run this fall. The football team enrolled at Louisiana Tech. The Green Wave will make its season debut Sept. 17 at Independence Stadium in Shreveport against Mississippi State. Tulane's season-opener against Southern Miss was postponed because of the hurricane.

STAFF PHOTO BY KATHY ANDERSON

Flooding from Hurricane Katrina has canceled the entire season of horse racing season at the Fair Grounds.

UNO

The Privateers' men's and women's basketball teams will train at the University of Texas at Tyler. The Pontchartrain Center in Kenner is a likely alternative. One additional road game for UNO was scheduled. The Privateers will play at Kansas on Dec. 29, replacing a home game against Norfolk State. UNO's student-athletes will be enrolled and attend classes at UT Tyler as transient/visiting students. If the UNO teams can't return to Lakefront Arena by November, the Privateers can play home games at Tyler. UNO's baseball team will be housed by New Mexico State.

LOYOLA

Canceled all fall sports.

XAVIER

Canceled all fall sports.

DILLARD

Canceled all fall sports.

SUPERDOME EVENTS

BAYOU CLASSIC: With the Superdome unplayable for the foreseeable future, teams are looking at options. Reliant Stadium in Houston has offered to host the game. Playing at Grambling State or Southern also is being considered.
NEW ORLEANS BOWL: Game, scheduled for Dec. 20, will be played at Sun Belt champion's stadium.
LHSAA STATE CHAMPIONSHIP FOOTBALL GAMES: State championships will be moved to three venues, which could include LSU's Tiger Stadium, UL-Lafayette's Cajun Field and Independence Stadium in Shreveport. The state championship games are scheduled for Dec. 9 and 10.

PREP

ORLEANS PARISH: Louisiana High School Athletic Association commissioner Tommy Henry's estimates schools are unlikely to play football thisseason. An additional 19 schools were listed as questionable by Henry.
ST. TAMMANY: School is tentatively scheduled to resume Oct. 3, which could lead to football games being played Oct. 7. Volleyball games could start that week, as well.
RIVER PARISHES: Lutcher and St. James resumed football this pastFriday. St. Charles played Saturday. Volleyball returned to action Thursday.
JEFFERSON PARISH: John Curtis will play Sept. 29 against a yet-to-be determined opponent.
ST. BERNARD: No sports are scheduled for the school year, as this area was the hardest hit by Katrina.
WEST BANK: Higgins and Ehret potentially could play football.

FAIR GROUNDS

Horse racing season canceled.

PREP REPORT

St. Charles Catholic routs Jackson

By Lori Lyons
Staff writer

St. Charles Catholic running back Chase Fletcher ran for 155 yards and four touchdowns as the Comets defeated Jackson 42-0 Saturday afternoon in LaPlace.

St. Charles was scheduled to play Clark, located in Orleans Parish, this week. The Comets and Jackson agreed late Thursday to play.

St. Charles scored on its first four possessions, all in the first quarter, before giving way to the second and third strings. Fletcher, who rushed for 142 yards and three touchdowns in the first quarter, scored on runs of 17, one and eight yards. Jonathan Cancienne scored on a 12-yard run. In the second quarter St. Charles quarterback Vincent Rollo threw a seven-yard touchdown pass to Matt Eriksen.

The first team returned to open the second half - played with running time - and Fletcher scored his fourth touchdown. Quarterback Philip Sutton completed four of five passes for 109 yards and Casey Robottom caught three passes for 80 yards.

Jackson did not gain a first down and finished with eight yards of offense. Running back Donovan Carter had 20 carries and finished with 10 yards.

RIVERSIDE 23, H.L. BOURGEOIS 20: Special-teams play helped the Rebels leave Houma with a victory Friday night. The Rebels blocked a 35-yard field-goal attempt with 20 seconds remaining to preserve their victory. Jarid Caesar helped give the Rebels a short field by amassing 95 kickoff return yards and Jordan Poirrier kicked a 23-yard field goal. Quarterback A.J. Delaneuville completed five of 10 passes for 64 yards with touchdowns to Donny Terrio and Chase Emerson. Caesar rushed for 117 yards and one touchdown.

SOUTH TERREBONE 31, WEST ST. JOHN 28: Rams quarterback Olajuwon Hall completed 15 of 19 passes for 267 yards and three touchdowns. But with 2:35 remaining he was intercepted by the Gators' Phillip Livas, thwarting West St. John's comeback try. Livas rushed for 128 yards and two touchdowns, returned a kickoff 95 yards for a touchdown and nabbed the game-saving interception.

Two River Parishes teams will play today. Hahnville will travel to Central Lafourche for a 3 p.m. game and Destrehan will play at Thibodaux at 5 p.m.

Meeting set to address LHSAA issues

By Mike Strom
Staff writer

The Louisiana High School Athletic Association, like most public and private agencies, has more questions than answers because of the plethora of uncertainty created by the devastation wreaked by Hurricane Katrina.

To address those issues, LHSAA commissioner Tommy Henry has scheduled a special meeting of the association's Executive Committee for 10 a.m. Thursday at LHSAA headquarters in Baton Rouge.

"This year is a different year," Henry said. "We have a lot to talk about. It's mainly going to be about the storm situation."

One of the top orders of business is determining which route the association will take in determining venues for the five state football championship games of the Nokia Sugar Bowl Prep Classic, originally scheduled for Dec. 9 and 10 at the Superdome. The Superdome is inoperable due to storm damage.

The LHSAA options are to move the games en masse to another site such as Tiger Stadium in Baton Rouge or Independence Stadium in Shreveport, or possibly play them at another of the state universities. The games also could be split among multiple college stadium sites.

Also under consideration is the possibility of playing the Class 5A, 4A, 3A, 2A and 1A games at regional sites located near the competing schools.

Henry said he is delivering bid forms to all state universities and would like to reach a decision no later than Oct. 15. The Executive Committee's next regularly-scheduled meeting is Oct. 8 for hardship hearings.

"(LSU athletic director) Skip Bertman has been just so helpful to us," Henry said. "He's been so involved and empathetic with what we're trying to do. He has offered us the use of Tiger Stadium. He's used to dealing with (complicated) things. He has helped us look at a lot of things that we might not have."

If the state championships are played at one site, the five games are likely to be spread over three days, Henry said. The first championship game would be played at 7 p.m. Thursday, Dec. 8, followed by Friday and Saturday doubleheaders. Friday and Saturday games likely would be played at 1 p.m. and 7 p.m. with the stadium being cleared between each game, Henry said.

"Certainly, LSU and Independence Stadium need to be strong considerations," Henry said. "No matter where we go, we're only going to have two dressing rooms (for participating teams). I can't see asking fans to sit outside in a stadium for eight hours (for a Saturday triple-header)."

The Louisiana High School Coaches Association has agreed to cancel its clinic normally held in conjunction with the Nokia Sugar Bowl Prep Classic if necessary, Henry said.

"It's not going to be vanilla with chocolate fudge poured on it," Henry said of the championships. "No matter where we go, there are not going to be practice sessions. This is going to be like a Friday night football game (where teams travel in and play the game on the same day). The easy thing is to go to one site. I kind of like the idea of returning the games to the fans (via regional sites).

"One thing that's a fact is that we don't have a lot of schools in north Louisiana, so if they're in the championship game, they're probably going to be playing a team from south Louisiana. We would have to decide how we're going to determine who the home team is. That's why it might be easier to go to one site."

Playing five games in three days at LSU or at Independence Stadium should not be a problem even with the possibility of inclement weather, Henry said. LSU's regular season would be concluded, so there would be months to rehabilitate the field. Independence Stadium has artificial turf.

The LHSAA will not consider extending the regular season and delaying the start of the state playoffs, and the power rating system for determining playoff teams will remain as is, Henry said.

The LHSAA has received complaints from some schools noting that some storm-affected schools may advance to the playoffs despite having played three games or less, Henry said. A team's power rating is based strictly on the number of games it plays and is not affected by not playing a full 10-game schedule.

Lutcher, for example, will advance to the state playoffs as the District 10-3A football champion without playing a league game. None of the school's district opponents — Clark, De La Salle, Hannan, Karr, Landry, Lawless and St. Bernard — are expected to field teams, so the Bulldogs will be left with a 7-0 district record via forfeits.

Such a scenario applies to any school whose district is reduced to one participating team, Henry said.

Fisher in District 11-2A is in a similar situation. The Gators are the only school in their district expected to field a team. Buras, Gregory, Newman, Redeemer-Seton and St. Martin's are not expected to field teams this season, Henry said.

"I've gotten some flack about (maintaining the power rating system as is)," Henry said. "But this is a bad situation (with the storm). You can't change rules in the middle of the season. We never counted on something like this happening. We're going to have to be really flexible and empathetic and sensitive. No school would want to be in the position some of them are in."

The Executive Committee also will address whether the association should hire a third assistant commissioner this school year as planned, Henry said. There also have been concerns expressed about the recruiting of evacuated players and the lengths some coaches may have taken to hold onto their players in light of the LHSAA's decision to declare all storm-displaced student athletes immediately eligible at the first school in which they enrolled after relocating.

"I am concerned about the rumors of coaches doing this and doing that," Henry said. "But, again, this is minor, this is a pimple compared to what is going on in south Louisiana. We cannot go into every house. We're not equipped to do that. I know we did the right thing when we ruled those kids eligible."

The LHSAA also is fortunate that this is not a reclassification year, Henry said.

Henry said he declined an offer from ESPN to fly him to the cable sports network's Bristol, Conn., headquarters for a live interview covering Katrina's effects on the state's high school athletic programs.

"They could have flown us up there and I could have told our story," Henry said. "But I don't know enough about everything that happened."

SAINTS RALLY TO BEAT PANTHERS SPORTS, A-16

'GATEMOUTH' BROWN DIES A-11

The Times-Picayune

50 CENTS 169TH YEAR NO. 235 MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 12, 2005 HURRICANE EDITION

KATRINA: THE STORM WE'VE ALWAYS FEARED

Some return to Plaquemines; death toll in Louisiana at 197

KATRINA EVENTS

- ▶ Nearly half of Plaquemines Parish's 27,000 residents allowed to return home.
- ▶ The official death toll climbs to 197.
- ▶ State Homeland Security director says FEMA too slow in finding temporary housing for 500,000 displaced storm victims.
- ▶ President Bush makes his third visit to the storm-ravaged Gulf Coast, sleeping aboard the USS Iwo Jima docked in New Orleans.
- ▶ New Orleans Mayor Ray Nagin grilled for failing to order mandatory evacuation before the storm.
- ▶ Louis Armstrong New Orleans International Airport reopens to cargo flights.
- ▶ New York City firefighters and hundred of others from across the country take a break from hurricane relief to hold 9-11 commemoration.

STAFF PHOTO BY TED JACKSON

New York firefighters Kevin Bourke and Steve Marley, surrounded by their brethren from New York and New Orleans, hug after a Mass at Our Lady of Holy Cross in Algiers. On the fourth anniversary of the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks, the service honored both cities and the losses they have endured. See story, A-2

Superdome laid waste by those it sheltered

By Jeff Duncan
Staff writer

The concrete and steel titan on Poydras Street still dominates the New Orleans skyline. But the Superdome, like everything else in the brutalized city, looks much different now.

Hurricane Katrina's 100 mph-plus winds relentlessly strafed the world-renowned stadium's roof, peeled back its white weather-protective shell like a coconut husk. The force was so powerful it stripped off sheets of 2-inch foam and thick rubber and blew them all over the Central Business District. Three huge smoke dampers were blown from the roof. Seven other gaping holes were opened.

Once compared to a sleek futuristic spaceship, the Dome now looks like a

See SUPERDOME, page A-5

STAFF PHOTO BY MICHAEL DeMOCKER

Clad in anti-contamination suits, crews examine the sewage and garbage in a women's restroom in the Superdome.

Nagin criticized over evacuation

By Ron Thibodeaux
Staff writer

For those who gauge the still-unfolding drama of Hurricane Katrina's aftermath in sound bites and photo ops, Sunday did not disappoint as President Bush returned to the region and New Orleans Mayor Ray Nagin caught flak before a national television audience for the city's performance in the face of the storm.

In Plaquemines Parish, the reality of what Katrina wrought played out far from the spotlight but with no less poignancy. Sunday was the first day that almost half of the parish's 27,000 residents could return to their homes after a two-week evacuation.

While officials in some other hard-hit parishes want their people to stay away until public services are fully restored, Plaquemines Parish President Benny Rousselle invited residents to return where they could.

Many got right to work assessing the damage, making repairs and starting to upright their overturned lives, and the sounds of traffic on Belle Chasse Highway and the whine of saws and the pounding of hammers on rooftops in neighbor-

See KATRINA, page A-4

Faith, not power, restored to Saints fans

By Steve Ritea
Staff writer

The battered portable radio sat on the bar, its antenna resting on a Bud Light tap and Sunday's Saints game crackling over a steady undercurrent of static as the crowd at Johnny White's Sports Bar swatted away flies and beat back beads of sweat forming on their foreheads with cold longnecks.

Steve Bartley refused to get his hopes up, seeking to minimize the pain if New Orleans' NFL team lost its season opener to the rival Carolina Panthers at a time when the suffering city so badly needed a win.

"Typical Saints," he grimaced after a goofed play, nursing his beer as a military helicopter chopped through the skies over the French Quarter.

Whatever it was Sunday — luck, extra determination by the team, or a higher power offering the Big Easy a ray of hope at its darkest hour — the Saints had Bartley on his feet, cheering and high-fiving when the team pulled out a 47-yard field goal in the final seconds to

See FAITH, page A-3

nola.com CONTINUOUS UPDATES • COMPLETE HURRICANE KATRINA COVERAGE
Expanded edition of The Times-Picayune available at www.nola.com

PLENTY OF SUNSHINE
HIGH 92 | LOW 73

7 12393 11111 8

STAFF PHOTO BY ALEX BRANDON

It's hugs all around as New Orleans police officers exchange the sign of peace during a Mass with the Rev. Joseph Benson from Blessed Francis Seelos Parish in the entryway of the Wal-Mart on Tchoupitoulas Street.

FIREFIGHTERS UNITE BEHIND LOCAL EFFORT

On anniversary of 9/11, tragedy surrounds them

By Doug MacCash
Staff writer

New York City firefighter Regina Wilson sang a capella hymns on the lawn of Our Lady of Holy Cross College in Algiers early Sunday, and the mournful sound of a single bagpipe soared into the brilliant morning sky.

Several hundred firefighters from across the country, including 350 from New York City, had taken a short break from their fire-fighting duties to gather for a ceremony commemorating the fourth anniversary of the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks.

Fire department officials from New York and New Orleans addressed the hushed crowd, some hoarse with emotion as they spoke.

New Orleans Fire Department chaplain, the Rev. Peter Weiss, a native of Brooklyn, celebrated Mass.

The memorial tribute to the still-vivid previous tragedy took on particular resonance as it echoed in the landscape of the current, in some ways similar, tragedy that surrounded it.

The small, pristine campus, ordinarily an enclave of 1,400 students, faculty and Marianite nuns had become, beginning last week, the bivouac of an army of firefighters from across the country.

Men and women in deep-blue uniform T-shirts printed with insignia from Illinois, Oregon, Arizona, North Carolina and elsewhere, as well as Louisiana and New York were sheltered in the college's classrooms and chapel as well a tent city that mushroomed onto along Gen. DeGaulle Drive.

A fleet of scarlet and hazard-green fire trucks lined the campus roads, and elements of the Texas and Puerto Rico National Guards monitored the entrances.

School staff and alumni, on hand to help with the ceremony, eagerly pointed out the irony that the school's emblem was a hurricane.

The out-of-town firefighters, who'd volunteered to come to New Orleans, arranged themselves in teams, with New Orleans firefighters riding in many vehicles to guide them through the inscrutable city streets.

Despite the gravity of the moment, one New York firefighter comically described the combined efforts as "the same circus, just with different acts."

Another, asked to typify the joint effort, said he was impressed with the "unbelievable professionalism."

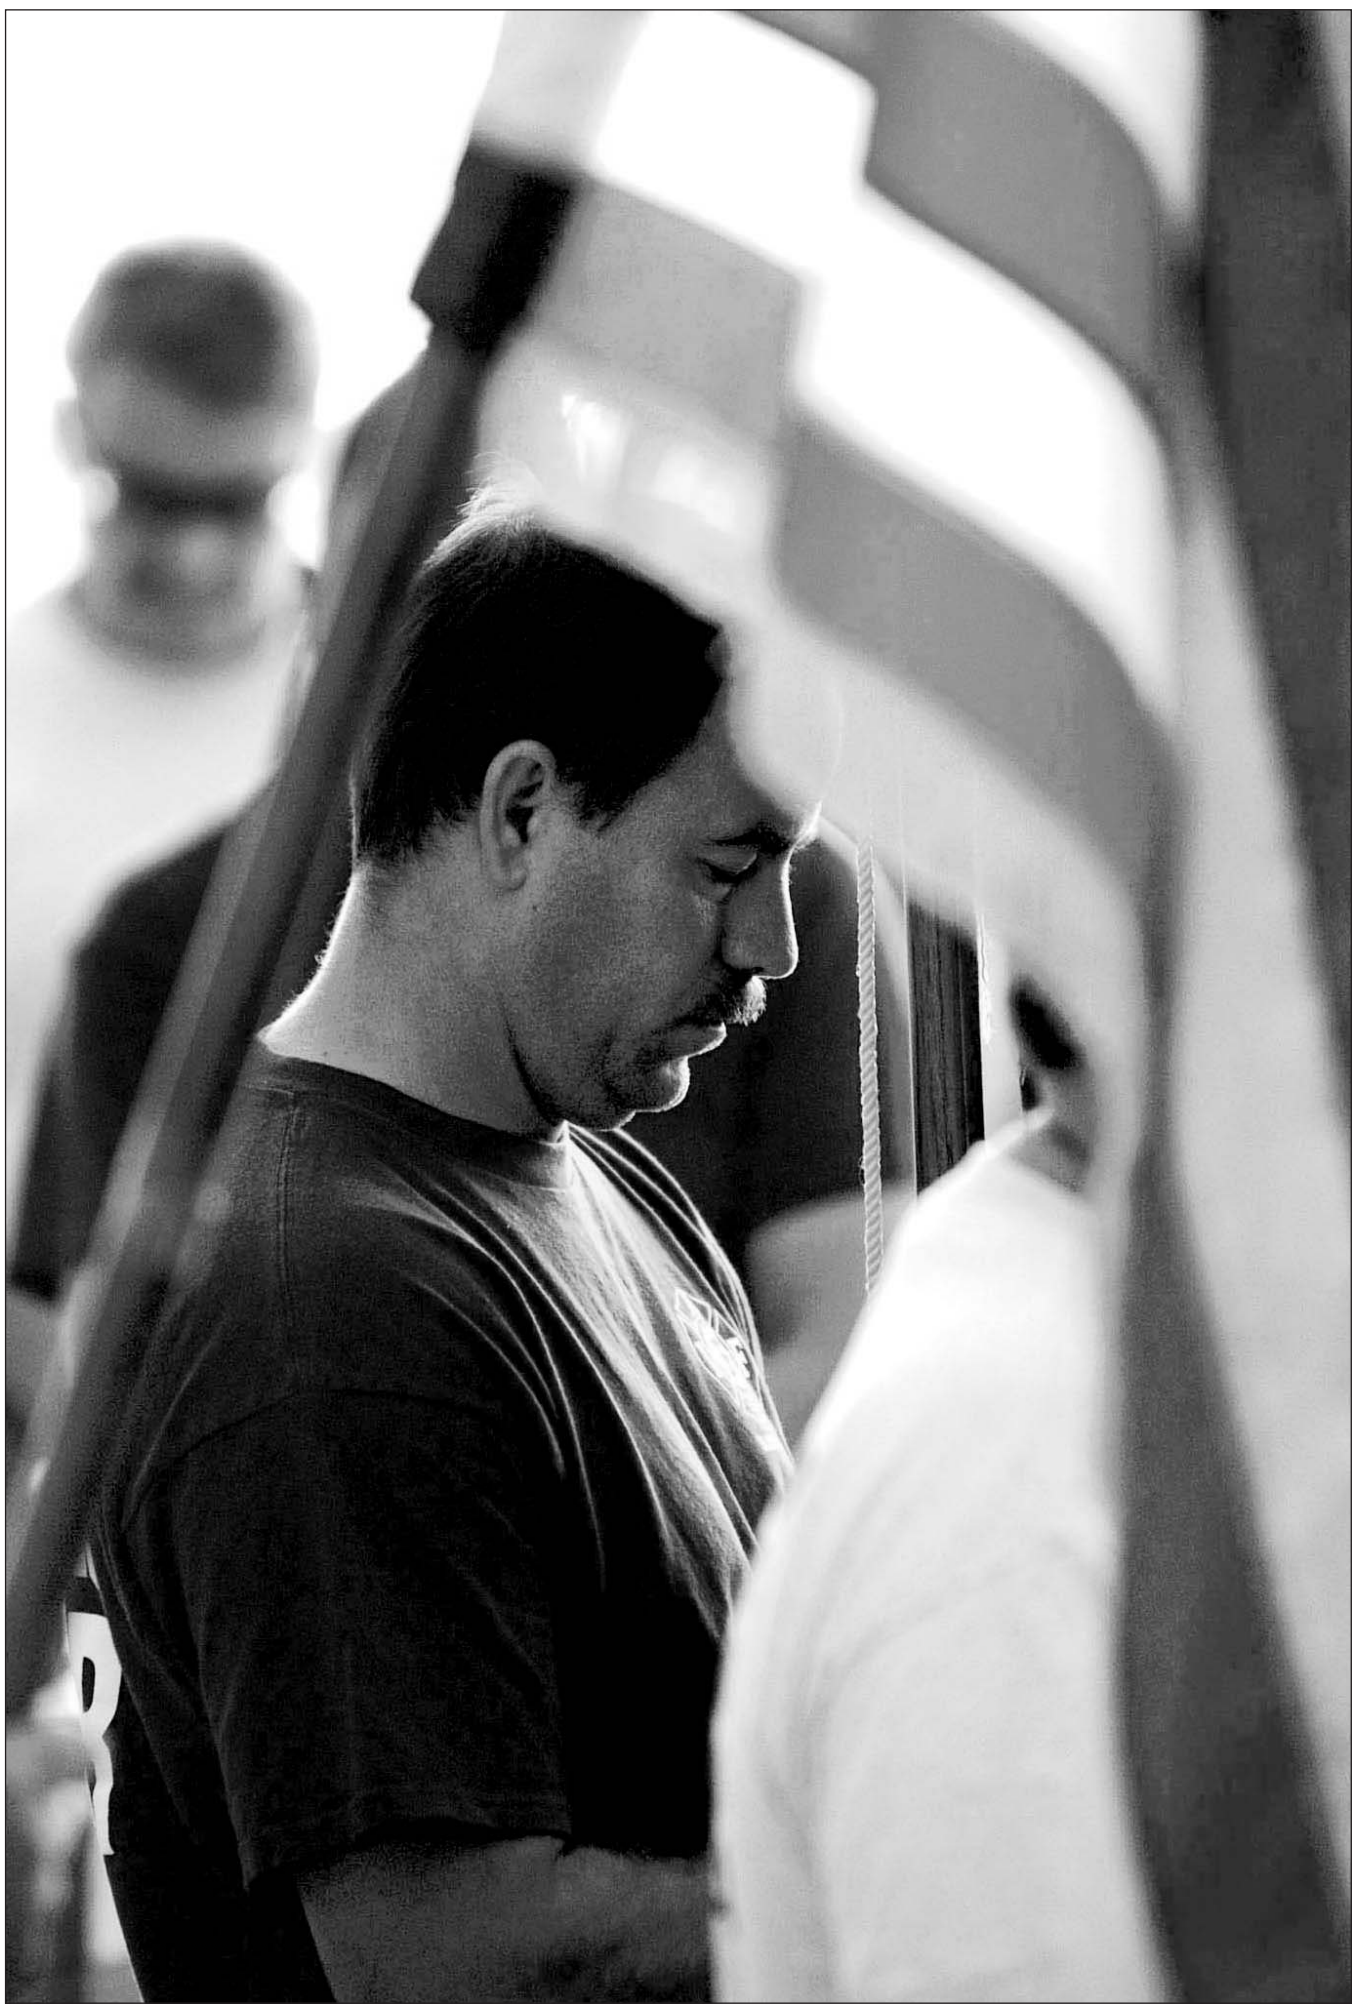
Asked how the rescue and recovery efforts after the terrorist attacks and the fury of a Category 4 hurricane compared, New York City firefighter Donald Halikias's comments were typical: "There will be different emotions: one being an act of war, one being Mother Nature.

"Emotions will always be part of every experience," he continued. "It's something that stays with you. Nine-eleven is written in heavy black ink. It's an exclamation point.

"The people are going to feel it more as time goes by. Nine-eleven was a stressful, troubling time. You're going to experience strong emotions.

"People here lost their homes. This is a different ballgame. We lost a lot of firefighters, good friends, but we had our homes to go back to. A lot of these firemen have no homes to go to.

"In this situation there's no one to get angry at. There are no terrorists, so I guess people will direct their anger at the government. In my opinion, the thing to do is to remain focused on the rebuilding, to fight will be counter productive," Halikias said.



One symbolic gesture followed another on the firefighter-built dais during Sunday's ceremony.

A bell from a toppled church tower stood to one side, a signed flag that one flew over the Pentagon was presented to the New York volunteers and "The Spirit of Louisiana," a fire engine given to New York City by the people of the Bayou State after 9-11, was parked nearby, having been returned to the Crescent City in its time of need.

New Orleans Fire Department superintendent Charles Parent was among the last to speak.

During the 9-11 tragedy, the New York fire department "showed the world what it meant to be the bravest," he said.

"Now they're showing what it means to be the most compassionate. There are no words I can express to show our gratitude. I'd like to tell all my brothers out there that I love you."

STAFF PHOTO BY SCOTT THRELKELD

Firefighter Larry Martin of the St. Tammany Fire Department's 1st District prays during a ceremony to honor firefighters who died in the Sept. 11 attacks four years ago. In another symbol of solidarity, 50 firefighters from the Chicago area are in Slidell to help firefighters whose homes were destroyed by Hurricane Katrina.

New Orleans to begin spraying insecticide today

Six-week program to span 3 states

By Robert Travis Scott
Capital bureau

BATON ROUGE — Aerial insecticide spraying over New Orleans will begin this afternoon to combat a profusion of mosquitoes and flies liable to carry the West Nile virus and other diseases, federal health officials said Sunday.

A C-130 aircraft, flown by a reserve unit of the U.S. Air Force, will spray naled, also known by the trade name Dibrom, an insecticide that kills adult insects, including mosquitoes, flies and bees, according to officials with the U.S. Public Health Service and the Federal Emergency Management Agency.

The federally assisted spraying will cover the three-state Gulf Coast area affected by Hurricane Katrina and will continue for at least six weeks, starting on the east bank of Orleans Parish and moving to other surrounding parishes. Officials will then decide whether the previous state and local spraying programs will take over.

