Picture Goes On Wrong Track, But Strand Keeps On

Anyhow, the Strand wasn't 'dark' Sunday.

But it came near being, and for the first time in its career since the formal opening, October 16, 1915.

It all happened like this. Manager Jack Frost has booked the feature 'Under the Red Rose,' starring Robert Mantell, to open Sunday. It should have arrived Saturday from the booking offices in Atlanta. But it didn't come, There was no other picture of feature quality in town. Frost was wild. Then he bogan telephoning.

St. Petersburg said nothing doing. As did Plant City, and Bradentown. Then he located a Lakeland theatro man. But he was in church. A Western Union messenger pulled him from under the shadow of the pulpit to a long distance phone. Frost explained the plight of the Strand. Sure, he had a picture, the Lakeland man said.

Frost despaiched a fast automobile for the film. It arrived and the show opened at 2 o'clock presenting "The Rendezvous" Marshall Nellan's success.

CYTHEREA. By Joseph Herges-hemier. With Lewis Stone, Alma Rubens and Irene Rich. A First National picture. At the Victory.

"Cytherea" is one of the names the Goddess of Love, otherwise known as Venus, Aphrodite, et. al. The novel spread on rather thickly the danger of wives being too dulful and domestic, driving husbands from the humdrum of home to seek their diversion in forbidden fields. The picture, made from the Horgeshelmer novel, does the same sort of spreading and, in some spots, even more thickly.

novel, does the same sort of spreading and, in some spots, even more thickly.

Let me say at the outset that no better selection for the part of Lee Randon, the husband in the case, could have been made than the usually impeccable Lewis Stone. Mr. Stone is just the type for the bored "hubby" and he plays to perfection the progressive scenes from the ennul of home to the charm of a modern Cytherea; and beyond, to the disillusionment, the awakening, the prodigal's return. And Irone Rich does some wonderful acting as the over-domestic and over-suspicious wife, especially when she storms at her husband and drives him from the house. Candidly, as the situation is presented by the picture, I have little consure for Randon. If ever a man was dogged, nagged and house-wifed to his undoing, Randon was that man. And the stately Alma Rubens presents just the sort of woman to lure a man in that state of mind. It must be said that this picture is not an advertisement of Cuba. The fiecing couple go there, anticipating semi-tropical romance, the charm of waving paims and quaint inns, the glamour of an isle of love and beatty. Cuba, as the picture shows it, is a land of bugs, dirty natives, paralyzing heat and death. The picture is grossly overdrawn, of course— but the author had to make Cuba that way to bring out his point, which is that these guilty romances are nover as delightful as their anticipation. Suffice it to say, this picture will not be popular in Cuba, if it is ever shown there. I am surprised that these guilty romances are not include a formal protest against its exhibition.

"Cytherea" includes some unusually interesting scenes and incidents. There is a clever dancing diversion in a golf club, with a new game, "Cocktail Checkert.." furnishing an idea, for those inclined to devise new means of showing contempt for the constitution; a well-acted incident in the conservatory; occasion for wiping wet eyes in the rather harrowing death scene; and two delightful children. Constance Bennett, who has the part of the gay and gliddy young heart-breaker, does it with exceeding cleverness.

"THE NINETY AND NINE"

In selecting the cast for "The Minety and Nine" a David Smith Production, the Vitagraph big special picture at the Franlin teday and temorrow, Colleen Moore was chosen for the heroine from a score of screen stars. Miss Moore was selected because she fitted the role to perfection. She is naturally the demure little country girl who would be willing to sacrifice herself to save others. It was with some difficulty that Vitagraph secured Miss Moore for the role, as she was actively engaged in two other pictures at the time the production was started. Within a month she completed four pictures in which she was starred and then came to Vitagraph to work in an all-sincast with Gertrude Astor and Warner Baxter.

Mr. Conners came here to make sure that plans for the big celebration and official opening of his first road across the Everslades were going forward properly and on a scale big enough to suit him. He expects to go over the situation and must return to New York soon, as he is a delegate from New York to the democratic convention.

The jolly old millionaire's arrival brought a flock of big new annoucements about the Okeechobee demonstration, which, when carried out would crown fully his efforts to make it the state's greatest celebration, and a "red letter day."

The governor of New York and the railroad president were the only ones specifically named whom Mr. Conners intends to travel to Okeechogee with him in a special car, but it has been announced that his intended group
