As the guests entered they were met with an old-fashioned curtsy at the door by C. R. Brooks, Jr., and Mary Charles Clements, as George and Martha Washington, dressed in full colonial costume, including Master George's knee breeches, white gaiters and powdered wig. After a program consisting of appropriate readings, recitations and songs, the visitors were invited to inspect an exhibit of work of the fifth grade pupils. These included a number of excellently modeled relief maps and a review of the most important facts about each country engaged in the recent war. Delicious lemonade and cakes were served by three fifth grade girls dressed in the national credit for the enterprise and histrionic talent displayed. A large number of parents and visitors were present and enjoyed the program immensely.
